¶ 744. In a suit on a promissory note plaintiff testified that he gave the note sued on to his Chicago attorney to prepare proof of his claim to be filed in bankruptcy against one of the signers thereof. Said attorney testified to receiving said note; that he attached it to the proof of claim in bankruptcy and withdrew it after leaving a copy that he could not find the original; that plaintiff had insistently demanded same of him; and that after a careful investigation and diligent search he and his brother signed a bond for the lost note in question. Plaintiff testified to having made repeated diligent search and inquiry in every place where the note had been or was most likely to be found, among his papers and among the papers of his Chicago attorney. Said testimony was undisputed. Two copies of said note were offered in evidence, one of which plaintiff testified he made, with the original before him, at the time proofs were prepared for the bankruptcy court, and one made by said Chicago attorney in the bankruptcy proceedings. Said attorney testified that his copies were made either from the original or from the copy attached to the proof of claim, which copy plaintiff made. Held, said copies were properly admitted as secondary evidence.—Gelder v. Welsh, 169 Mich. 490.

¶ 745. A sufficient reason must be given for failure to produce receipts relied on as proof of payment before secondary evidence can be produced.—Van Ness v. Hadsell, 54 Mich. 560.

¶ 746. It is error to permit plaintiff in an action to enforce a lien upon logs to testify to the contents of a paper which he claims is a copy of his time book, and shows each day that he worked, and what he worked at, without proof of the loss of the paper.—Dillon v. Howe, 98 Mich. 168.

Admissibility of copy without foundation where it rather than the original is the object of proof, see ante § 111.

¶ 747. A witness may not testify as to the contents of a letter received by him from a party to an action without laying a foundation to make parol proof of the contents admissible.—Underwood v. Town, 201 Mich. 55.

¶ 748. Where a party seeks, by means of a letter-press copy, to prove a letter by him to the other party, he should give evidence of the existence of the original production, and that it went into the possession of the person to whom it was addressed; and then, on such person's failure to produce it on request, its contents may be proved by the copy.—Sun Ins. Co. v. Earle, 29 Mich. 406.

¶ 749. Where the only evidence of the existence of a letter purporting to have been written by plaintiff to a third person was defendant's testimony that he knew plaintiff's handwriting, and that he had had such a letter in his possession but was satisfied it was lost, and that he had searched for it, not having stated where, a copy of such letter was inadmissible to contradict plaintiff's testimony.—Angell v. Loomis, 97 Mich. 5.

¶ 750. Before the contents of a letter can be given in evidence something more than proof that it was written (where the party to whom it was written denies having received it) must be shown.—Gage v. Meyers, 59 Mich. 300.

¶ 751. Where it is attempted to show notice by letter of additional insurance, proof that a letter was left, in the absence of the insurance agent, at his office with a person not identified, is not sufficient to warrant the reception of proof of its contents, in the face of a denial by the agent and the company of any knowledge of the letter or that it was ever received.—Sun Ins. Co. v. Earle, 29 Mich. 406.

¶ 752. Where there is prima facie proof of the loss of a letter, and there is no cross-examination as to the thoroughness of the search for it, there is no error in admitting secondary evidence of its contents against the objection that its loss has not been sufficiently shown.—Bottomley v. Goldsmith, 36 Mich. 27.

¶ 753. Testimony by the addressee of a letter that he received it and has since lost it, suffices to admit a letter-press copy.—Nowlen v. Lyon, 73 Mich. 434.

¶ 754. A sufficient foundation for the introduction of parol proof of the contents of a letter claimed to have been lost is laid by the testimony of the party to whom the letter was written that he is not in the habit of keeping his letters, and that he looked in the wastebasket for the letter, but was too late, as it, with other letters, had been destroyed.—Shrimpton & Sons v. Netzorg, 104 Mich. 225.

¶ 755. Where a witness testifies that he has not seen a certain letter since its receipt by him some twelve years previous, that his papers were afterwards destroyed by fire, except a few that he kept in a specified place, that he has searched for papers among those last mentioned, and that the one in question was not there, a sufficient foundation is laid for the introduction of parol evidence of the contents of the letter, although the witness further states that he has not made a search for that particular paper.—Burt v. Long, 106 Mich. 210.

¶ 756. A witness may testify as to the contents of a lost letter without proof that he had knowledge of the handwriting of the party claimed to have written it, where the letter has been sufficiently identified by another witness, and proof of its loss made, to allow parol proof of its contents.—Painter v. Ledyard, 109 Mich. 568.

¶ 757. Parol evidence of the contents of lost letters is admissible, where pursuant to notice to produce all letters written to plaintiff by defendant between certain dates, some letters were produced and defendant testified to other letters written by her and also that she had, at the request of plaintiff, destroyed most of the letters received from plaintiff.—June v. Labadie, 132 Mich. 135.

¶ 758. There is no error in receiving secondary evidence of the contents of a letter where an employee of the adverse party testifies that all mail for such adverse party came into her hands for filing; that she made an examination of the files of the office and was unable to find the original, and that she had never received the latter, and another employee of the adverse party also testifies that he searched the files of the office and was unable to find the original.—Holmes Realty Co. v. Silcox, 194 Mich. 59.

¶ 759. If the files have been lost, the calendar entries may be given in evidence to show the steps taken in the cause before judgment.—Norvell v. McHenry, 1 Mich. 227.

¶ 760. An objection to the introduction of a copy of a lost instrument, because at the close of the attestation clause it purports to be executed in duplicate, is of no force where it does not appear that any duplicate was ever intended to be made, and the party objecting never required it.—Dykes v. Wyman, 67 Mich. 236.

¶ 761. In an action by building contractors to recover for labor performed by their workmen, a time bill transcribed from the book of original entry which was made up every Saturday night from the foreman's report was offered in evidence. The foreman was dead and the book could not be found. Held, that the bill was admissible in the absence of anything tending to impeach its correctness.—McDonnell v. Ford, 87 Mich. 198.

¶ 762. A draft proved to be in the handwriting of the testator prepared for the scrivener who drew the alleged lost will and agreeing in contents with the oral testimony as to the contents of the lost will, which draft was found in the evening of the day when the will was executed on the floor of the room and near the table on which the will was executed and is in the same condition as when found, is admissible as secondary evidence of its contents.—Ewing v. McIntyre, 141 Mich. 506.

¶ 763. It is not necessary to call a subscribing witness to prove the execution and contents of a lost deed.—Eslow v. Mitchell, 26 Mich. 500; Raynor v. Norton, 31 Mich. 210.

¶ 764. In an action against a benevolent society parol testimony of a local secretary concerning the contents of an application is inadmissible as secondary evidence where it is testified that the application was received and forwarded to Canada and there is no showing that the secretary had even read the application.—Phillips v. United States Benevolent Society, 125 Mich. 186.

¶ 765. In a suit to recover outlays for building, the estimates of witnesses, who had some means of knowledge, are admissible in the absence of primary written evidence, to show what the outlays amount to.—Hillebrands v. Nibbelink, 40 Mich. 646.

¶ 766. A copy of what is said to be a copy of an original, with which it was never compared, and from which it is not shown to have been taken, has no claim of itself to be admitted as secondary evidence; but when a witness testifies from recollection that it is a copy, it should be received, the weight of evidence on that point being left to the jury.—Fowler v. Hoffman, 31 Mich. 215.

¶ 767. Notice to produce a letter written by plaintiff's physician to defendant, does not justify the latter in calling the physician to testify as to privileged communications between plaintiff and himself, over objections thereto.—Phillips v. U. S. Benevolent Society, 120 Mich. 142.

Proper evidence or witnesses for secondary proof, see ante §§ 152, 153.

Probative force and effect of certified and sworn copies of records and documents, see post § 566.

Weight and sufficiency of secondary evidence, see post § 584.

¶ 768. There are no degrees in secondary evidence. Where an original paper is lost, and no counterpart is presumed or required to exist, its tenor may be proved by parol as well as by copy; but the failure to produce a copy, when possible, bears on the credit to be given to the parol testimony.—Eslow v. Mitchell, 26 Mich. 500.

¶ 770. In proceedings for trespass under Pub. Acts 1903, No. 210, where the defendant claimed he wrote the land commissioner asking what claim the state had to the land, and he got a reply stating there was none, but the letter was lost it was error to reject his testimony on the ground that letter-press copies of official letters existed and were procurable, because there are no degrees in secondary evidence.—People v. Christian, 144 Mich. 247.

V. PAROL OR EXTRINSIC EVIDENCE TO VARY OR EXPLAIN WRITINGS.

A. IN GENERAL; PARTICULAR INSTRUMENTS AND RECITALS.

[Note. The "parol evidence rule," as treated in this division, is that rule or rules by which testimony or evidence extraneous to the writing in evidence is excluded when offered to vary or contradict the terms of the writing, but admitted to invalidate or wholly defeat it or to explain or apply it when incomplete or ambiguous. The rule excluding parol evidence when primary evidence of a higher and better degree is available is the "best and secondary rule," which see ante, IV. It must also be remembered that in very many cases and in the paragraphs, which necessarily have regard to the language of the opinions, the expression "parol evidence" occurs as a description of the kind of evidence adduced without any reference to either of the rules excluding parol or extrinsic evidence.]

Admissibility where offered to wholly defeat instrument by showing invalidity, want of execution, or falsification of real terms, see post §§ 156-158.

Admissibility where evidence does not reach contents but relates to circumstances of making, execution, date, or consideration, see post §§ 159-163.

Admissibility to explain or complete instrument, see post §§ 164-168.

Admissibility to supply portions of agreement, see post § 169.

Admissibility of contemporaneous or prior negotiations and understandings, see post §§ 170, 171.

Admissibility of evidence as to intent or understanding of parties, see post § 172.

Particular matters and elements of obligation, agreement or condition, or warranties and defeasances sought to be changed or added, see post §§ 174-180.

Explaining terms of trade, science and art, see post § 173.

Weight and sufficiency of the parol evidence when admitted, see specific topics in those portions treating of "evidence."

Charging on conclusiveness of written contract when none is in evidence, see Contracts ¶ 1530.

¶ 771. Parol evidence cannot, as a general rule, be received to add to or vary the terms of a written instrument.—Sutherland v. Crane, W. 523.

¶ 772. When parties have deliberately and understandingly executed an instrument in writing they cannot afterwards be permitted to insist that it does not express their real intentions, but that a different thing was designed. It is conclusively presumed that their whole engagement, and the extent and manner of their undertaking, were reduced to writing; and no evidence is permitted tending to vary or contradict the terms of the contract, or to substitute a new and different contract for it.—Adair v. Adair, 5 Mich. 204.

¶ 774. Parol evidence to vary or change the terms of a written agreement is inadmissible.—Goebel v. Look, 153 Mich. 204.

¶ 775. Oral testimony is inadmissible to vary or explain a written instrument, where there was enough upon the face of the papers to dispose of the question involved.—Wisconsin Fire & M. Ins. Co. Bank v. Filer, 80 Mich. 67.

¶ 776. In the absence of fraud and ambiguity, the terms of a written contract are binding on the parties and cannot be varied by parol.—Walker v. Mack, 129 Mich. 527.

¶ 777. A complainant in a bill for specific performance of a written contract could not by parol testimony establish a different contract than the written one sought to be enforced.—Meshew v. Southworth, 133 Mich. 335.

¶ 778. In the absence of fraud, a written contract which is unambiguous, certain in its terms, and full and complete in itself, is the only contract which the court, in a suit for specific performance, can consider, and its terms cannot be varied or changed by parol evidence.—Kerwin Mach. Co. v. Baker, 199 Mich. 122.

¶ 779. It is not competent to contradict or vary by parol testimony the plain language of a written instrument like a chattel mortgage or lease.—Wade v. Strachan, 71 Mich. 459; Walsh v. Martin, 69 Mich. 29.

¶ 780. A promissory note deliberately given and taken with full knowledge of its contents and not tainted with fraud cannot be varied by parol evidence.—Hutchinson v. Hutchinson, 102 Mich. 635.

¶ 781. Parol testimony is inadmissible to vary the terms of a written contract for the sale of land.—Hutchinson v. Westbrook, 191 Mich. 484.

¶ 782. In an action on covenant for breach of warranty against incumbrances, oral evidence that grantee had assumed unpaid taxes for special improvements was inadmissible.—In re Johnson's Estate, 177 Mich. 500; Williams v. Kniskern, Id.

¶ 784. A written contract is not to be varied by the parol admission of the party.—Hunt v. Thorn, 2 Mich. 213.

¶ 785. In an action on a written contract parol evidence of stipulations not in it is inadmissible.—Baker v. Morehouse, 48 Mich. 334.

§ 156. Admissibility to annul, invalidate or disprove factum of instrument.

To show that instrument was executed on unfulfilled condition, see post § 157.

To show what was true contract or that offered one was genuine, see post § 158.

Elements and proofs of fraud, duress, mistake, or other cause invalidating instrument, see Duress, Fraud; Mistake; Infants; Insane Persons, etc.

¶ 786. Parol misrepresentations are not so merged in written ones as to be excluded from evidence in an action for fraud.—Match v. Hunt, 38 Mich. 1.

¶ 787. Parol evidence may be introduced in chancery for the purpose of showing fraud, or a mistake in drawing the instrument, when the fraud or mistake is set forth in the bill, and the relief asked is based upon it; but not otherwise.—Sutherland v. Crane, W. 523.

¶ 788. Parol evidence is admissible to show that either by fraud or mistake a written contract does not express the real agreement of the parties.—Chambers v. Livermore, 15 Mich. 381.

¶ 789. Testimony that a written contract was obtained by fraud was not a violation of the rule against varying the terms of a written contract by parol.—Rambo v. Patterson, 133 Mich. 655.

¶ 790. Where the victim of a railroad accident, after settling her claim for damages and giving a receipt in full, repudiated and rescinded the settlement for fraud and brought suit for the original injury, evidence of the representations and promises under which the receipt was obtained ought not to be excluded on the ground that it tended to vary a written contract by parol evidence.—Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Dunham, 30 Mich. 128.

¶ 791. Parol evidence is admissible to show that in a contract of sale of a piano the style and number of a different piano that was delivered to vendee until the one purchased could be delivered were fraudulently inserted by vendor's agent.—Kranich v. Sherwood, 92 Mich. 397.

¶ 792. When the question is not what the terms of a written contract are, but whether the contract as written was entered into, or whether it was obtained by fraud, or is founded in surprise, accident or mistake, these subjects of inquiry are open to parol testimony irrespective of what the writing contains.—Bush v. Merriman, 87 Mich. 260.

¶ 793. The validity of a sealed instrument may be attacked for fraud, mistake, surprise or duress even though the seal imports a consideration.—Hobbs v. Brush Electric Light Co., 75 Mich. 550.

¶ 794. A member of a bankrupt partnership having executed a written acknowledgment to one of the creditors of a debt discharged by the bankruptcy, it was held competent to show, when suit was brought for the demand, that the acknowledgment was avowedly obtained by the plaintiff and executed to him to facilitate proof of the demand against the estate in bankruptcy, and not with a view to revive the demand. Such evidence would show that the paper was never delivered to have effect as a contract.—Atwood v. Gillett, 2 D. 206.

¶ 795. Testimony that an order for a machine, which the vendee agrees not to countermand, and which provides that all oral agreements not embodied therein are waived, was given in reliance upon the statement of the vendor as to material facts which he knew to be false, and of which the vendee was ignorant, is not open to the objection that it changes the terms of the written contract, and is therefore inadmissible.—Peck v. Jenison, 99 Mich. 326.

¶ 796. Where the fact of the giving of an order for goods is not disputed, but the giver defends upon the ground that he bargained for a quantity of goods less than that inserted in the order, which was signed upon the understanding that it was for the lesser quantity, it is competent for the giver to testify to the conversation had with the agent when the order was taken, for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not the agent deceitfully inserted in the order a larger quantity of goods than that agreed upon.—Shrimpton & Sons v. Netzorg, 104 Mich. 225.

¶ 799. Notwithstanding the rule that negotiations preliminary to the execution of a written contract may not be received to change or vary its terms, if misrepresentations of material facts are made to induce the contract, and do induce it, evidence of such misrepresentations may be given for the purpose of establishing fraud.—Boston Piano & Music Co. v. Pontiac Clothing Co., 199 Mich. 141.

¶ 800. The rule that parol evidence cannot be admitted to vary the terms of a written contract does not apply to a case where the defendant denies that he signed the note sued upon, that it had been altered, and that there was no consideration given for the note, and therefore the defendant was properly allowed to testify as to what occurred when the purported note was executed.—Acme Food Co. v. Tousey, 148 Mich. 697.

¶ 801. Evidence to show that an assignment of a contract was procured for the purpose of doing away with a competitor and is unlawful is inadmissible, in an action by the assignee on such contract, where there is nothing on the face of the contract or the assignment to indicate its unlawful purpose.—C. H. Little Co. v. Cadwell Transit Co., 197 Mich. 481.

Inadmissibility of evidence that one signed note on condition that he should not be held liable, see post §§ 174, 175.

¶ 802. Evidence, tending to show that for want of a concurrence in a condition attached to an order it never became a binding contract, is not objectionable as tending to vary a contract.—Aldine Press v. Estes, 75 Mich. 100.

¶ 803. Parol evidence that a written order for the purchase of goods was given with the understanding that it was to be obligatory only in case the purchaser should be allowed to cancel a similar order previously given to another person is not inadmissible as varying the terms of a written contract.—Cleveland Refining Co. v. Dunning, 115 Mich. 238.

¶ 804. Parol testimony that a stock subscription was made with the understanding that it should not be binding until the defendant had verified certain representations made to him, and that as such verification was not obtained he withdrew his subscription, is not a variance of a written agreement by parol, but rather a showing that no contract existed, and it is therefore admissible.—Ada Dairy Ass'n v. Mears, 123 Mich. 470.

¶ 805. Parol evidence is admissible to show that a promissory note unconditional in terms, was placed in the hands of the payee with the distinct understanding that it was not to be operative or to become a binding obligation until the happening of some event.—Central Savings Bank v. O'Connor, 132 Mich. 578.

¶ 806. In an action on a bond, the testimony of the sureties as to conversations at the time of signing the bond, to the effect that the bond was not to be used unless a third party signed it, was competent not only as part of the res gestæ, but as defining the obligation which by the delivery of the incomplete instrument the sureties were willing to undertake; where it appeared that the city council whose duty it was to accept the bond, had constructive notice of the principal's agreement by the insertion of the name of such third party as a cosurety.—People v. Sharp, 133 Mich. 378.

¶ 807. In assumpsit against a village on municipal bonds, testimony is inadmissible to show the understanding of the aldermen in regard to the effect of the instructions as to the conditions of delivery of the bonds.—Schmid v. Village of Frankfort, 134 Mich. 619.

¶ 808. One who is sued on a contract to sell land to be paid for in part by the conveyance of other land to plaintiff may show by parol that the papers were put in a third person's hands to be delivered when defendant's wife should sign, and when his attorney should approve them.—Dikeman v. Arnold, 71 Mich. 656.

¶ 809. Parol evidence that a note was signed by defendant comaker at the payee's request after refusing the other maker's unsecured note on the payee's promise that defendant should not be held, is not admissible to show fraud (which it does not tend to prove), nor that the note was delivered conditionally or for a specified purpose only. —Kulenkamp v. Groff, 71 Mich. 675.

¶ 810. An indorser before utterance of a promissory note, who is thereby in law a joint maker, cannot, when sued upon it, vary the terms thereof by showing that he was induced to sign it by the payee's promise that he would not be held liable theron.—Gumz v. Giegling, 108 Mich. 295.

To show true consideration, see post § 161.

¶ 811. When the genuineness of a paper—as an application for insurance—is contested, the genuine paper having been drawn by the agent of the company and the statements to be embodied in it having been communicated by the applicant to the agent, the conversation between them at the time of putting it in writing is inadmissible as bearing on the question of the actual contents of the paper. —North American Fire Ins. Co. v. Throop, 22 Mich. 146.

¶ 812. In order to show mistake in the description of lots, parol evidence that the grantee's husband, he being the real purchaser, inspected the lots and estimated the frontage to a certain fence, whereas they extended beyond, is admissible although such deed is made out in the name of the purchaser's wife.—Conlin v. Masecar, 80 Mich. 139.

¶ 813. Parol evidence is admissible on the part of the defense in a bill for specific performance, to show that by fraud, mistake or surprise, the written agreement does not contain the real terms.—Lemon v. Randall, 124 Mich. 687.

¶ 814. Where in an action on a note for the purchase price of a gasoline engine defendant claimed the engine was purchased under an oral agreement with a warranty of horse power, with which warranty the engine did not comply, and defendant claimed the sale was based upon a subsequent written order, containing no such warranty, proof of the oral agreement is not excluded by the parol evidence rule.—Farmers' Supply Co. v. Inglewright, 179 Mich. 504.

¶ 815. It may be shown by parol that the date of an executor's oath on the report of a sale of real estate was a clerical error, and that the oath was taken and subscribed before the sale.—Norman v. Olney, 64 Mich. 553.

§ 159. Purpose or circumstances of contract or writing.

Evidence as to why certain words were inserted, see post ¶ 882.

Res gestæ of formation and execution of contracts and writings, see post § 457.

¶ 816. In an action between the original parties to a note the circumstances of its issue are open to explanation.—Smith v. Van Blarcom, 45 Mich. 371.

¶ 817. In an action between original parties upon a non-negotiable note defendant may show the circumstances under which he had indorsed it to plaintiff if the evidence does not vary any positive legal agreement made by him.—Lamb v. Story, 45 Mich. 488.

¶ 818. Oral evidence is sometimes admissible to show special circumstances known to the parties to a written contract at the time it was made, in order to lay a foundation for damages.—Hopkins v. Sanford, 41 Mich. 243.

¶ 819. In an action upon a written agreement to contribute as jointly liable on a note signed by the plaintiff only, parol evidence of the purpose of giving the note is inadmissible where the purpose is stated in precise language in the body of the agreement. —Crane v. Bayley, 126 Mich. 323.

¶ 820. Where heirs have conveyed lands of an estate to the administrator so that he may sell for the benefit of the estate and account to the heirs for the proceeds, parol evidence is admissible to show the purposes for which the deed was executed, and to show what sales were made and what sums realized.—Bitely v. Bitely, 85 Mich. 227.

¶ 821. Parol evidence is admissible to show that a second mortgage was intended to be applied as a payment upon a prior one.—Blair v. Carpenter, 75 Mich. 167.

¶ 822. Parol evidence is admissible to show that a mortgage, purporting to have been given for the purchase price of land, was in fact for over twice its value, was made without consideration, for the purpose of satisfying or placating grantor's (mortgagee's) relatives and of protecting the interests of the mortgagor, and that it was agreed that it should never be enforced.—Church v. Case, 110 Mich. 621.

¶ 823. A power of attorney—"For me, in my place and stead, to do and transact all my business of every name and nature; * * * to borrow money in my name, and to make and execute all papers, notes, conveyances, and other instruments necessary to carry into effect the powers hereby granted"—is not varied by testimony that it was given at the request of a bank lending money for a mercantile business conducted in the name of the maker of the power by her husband, the terms being broad enough to include the particular business so specified.—Coldwater National Bank v. Buggie, 117 Mich. 416.

¶ 824. Where a married woman is sought to be charged for money lent to carry on a business claimed to be solely hers, but in the name of her husband, testimony of statements by her as to her understanding of the effect of a very general power of attorney executed by her to her husband is admissible as having some tendency to show that the business is in fact her business.—Coldwater Nat. Bank v. Buggie, 117 Mich. 416.

¶ 825. On a bill by a Roman Catholic bishop to enforce the specific performance of a declaration of trust in a parcel of land, a part of the funds for which had been contributed by a voluntary club of men parishioners, parol evidence that the land was purchased by the trustee and others for the purpose of providing a site for a new church building is competent and admissible for the purpose of determining the legal effect of the action of the club, and for that purpose is not objectionable as varying the terms of the trust.—Eis v. Croze, 149 Mich. 62.

Parol proof of conditions of escrow or delivery, see ante § 119.

Admissibility of parol to impeach execution or genuineness of writing, see ante §§ 156, 157.

¶ 826. Parol evidence is admissible to show the true date of the delivery of a deed.—Cook v. Knowles, 38 Mich. 316.

¶ 827. It may be shown by parol that the date of an executor's oath in the report on sale of real estate was a clerical error, and that the oath was taken and subscribed before the sale.—Norman v. Olney, 64 Mich. 553.

§ 161. Explaining or showing true consideration.

Limitation of rule as to showing true consideration where effect would be to vary the contract, see post § 162.

To show failure or absence of consideration, see post § 163.

Inconclusiveness of stated consideration, see Contracts § 143.

Relevancy and sufficiency of evidence of consideration, see Contracts §§ 141, 142.

¶ 828. The consideration of a contract, as a general rule, to which there are some exceptions on the ground of public policy, may always be inquired into.—Colman v. Post, 10 Mich. 422.

¶ 829. Parol evidence is admissible to explain the true consideration for a contract and apply the instrument to the subject-matter.—Hyler v. Nolan, 45 Mich. 357.

¶ 830. Where in trover by the buyer of a piano for its conversion by the seller, plaintiff claims to have signed the purchase contract under a mistake of fact and that no interest on deferred payments was to be paid, and both parties concede that there was a different price than that stated in the contract, oral evidence is admissible to show what the agreed price was.—Hautala v. Dover, 176 Mich. 366.

¶ 831. Where an original building contract was modified by a memorandum of the parties indorsed on the original, stating that for fear that the original contract price was insufficient to compensate the plaintiff the owner agreed to pay more, parol evidence was admissible to show that before making the modified contract the plaintiff had refused to complete the original contract, under the rule permitting the consideration of a written agreement to be proved by parol testimony.—Scanlon v. Northwood, 147 Mich. 139.

¶ 832. Parol evidence is inadmissible to vary a note so as to show a different consideration from that shown on its face.—Johnson v. Sutherland, 39 Mich. 579.

¶ 833. In an action on a promissory note, parol evidence that the note was given upon the representation that the payee had obtained a job of work from a third person for the maker is not incompetent.—Sebring v. Hazard, 128 Mich. 330.

¶ 834. It is competent to show by parol evidence that notes and a bond of indemnity given upon a purchase of property were based upon an agreement that the debts to be paid under the bond did not exceed a certain sum, and that any excess paid beyond that should be allowed by way of reduction of the notes. Such evidence is relevant to show the real consideration of the transaction, and to confine the recovery to the amount the payee is entitled to demand.—Bowker v. Johnson, 17 Mich. 42.

¶ 836. The words "for value received" in a guaranty cannot exclude extraneous proof of the real consideration. Such proof does not contradict or vary the import of these words in the instrument.—Jones v. Palmer, 1 D. 379.

¶ 837. In trover by a mortgagor for goods taken and sold under the insecurity clause in a purchase-money mortgage, it appeared that plaintiff conveyed land to defendant in payment for one of the mortgage notes, which was then surrendered. Defendant then indorsed upon another of the notes an agreement that on payment of $100 within twenty days upon a third note not yet due, the indorsed note should be considered paid and should be returned; and such sum was so paid and the note returned. Held, that plaintiff might show that as an inducement to make the transfer of land and the advance payment he was assured by defendant that he would not be molested in his possession of the goods.—Woods v. Gaar, Scott & Co., 93 Mich. 143.

¶ 838. In an action to recover the balance due on a land contract which contains the purchaser's unqualified promise to pay a given amount, it is error to admit testimony that the actual agreed price of the lot was smaller and that the amount to be paid was increased for the purpose of giving the lots an inflated value.—McLeod v. Hunt, 128 Mich. 124.

¶ 840. Parol evidence is, under the established rule in this state, competent to show the actual consideration for deeds of land where the rights of innocent purchasers for a valuable consideration are not involved.—Ruch v. Ruch, 159 Mich. 231.

¶ 841. The recital of a consideration in a deed is merely to give it effect as a conveyance; and for any other purpose parol evidence is admissible to show that it was actually more or less than the amount stated.—Strohauer v. Voltz, 42 Mich. 444.

¶ 842. The consideration to be recovered in an action for breach of warranty is the sum received by the defendant for the land, and the recital in the deed is not conclusive, but he may show that he in fact received a less sum.—Cook v. Curtis, 68 Mich. 611.

¶ 843. The recitals of the receipt of an adequate consideration in a deed are subject to denial in a suit to set aside.—Eckler v. Alden, 125 Mich. 215.

¶ 844. The expression in a deed of one consideration does not exclude proof of another, and the real, consideration.—Ruch v. Ruch, 159 Mich. 231.

¶ 845. The real consideration of a life lease, the consideration of which is expressed as being one dollar, may be shown when material.—Stotts v. Stotts, 198 Mich. 605.

¶ 849. Parol evidence that a bargain for an exchange of lands contemplated the payment by one party of interest on mortgages on the property conveyed by him, and the assumption of the principal only by the other party, is admissible as showing the consideration of the conveyance by the latter, although the deed to him excepted the mortgages from the covenant of warranty, without any qualification in regard to interest.—Ford v. Savage, 111 Mich. 144.

¶ 850. A grantee under a deed by which he assumes, as a part of the consideration, the payment of one-third of the indebtedness of a certain business, may show by parol, in an action by him against his grantor to recover an excess of moneys so paid, that the debts which he assumed were agreed to amount to a certain sum, while in fact they exceeded it.—Clark v. Lowe, 113 Mich. 352.

¶ 851. Parol evidence is admissible to show that the grantee in a deed agreed to pay a mortgage on the property.—Mowry v. Mowry, 137 Mich. 277.

¶ 852. It may be shown by parol that the actual consideration for a deed of property to a religious corporation for church purposes, which expressed a consideration of "one dollar and other consideration hereinafter stated," was a trust declared therein in favor of certain other denominations than that of the grantee.—White v. Rice, 112 Mich. 403.

¶ 853. Where a strip of land is deeded to a city to be used as a boulevard, oral testimony may be introduced by the representatives of the grantors to show that the consideration of the grant was that the city should not tax the abutting property for improvements.—Scovel v. City of Detroit, 159 Mich. 95.

¶ 854. Parol testimony which is not limited to showing the consideration of a written contract, but which seeks to change the scope and effect of the contract and to cast upon a party an obligation which the contract does not require of him, is properly rejected.—Foley v. Grand Rapids & I. Ry. Co., 168 Mich. 496.

¶ 855. As the effect of a conveyance of land upon which a crop of wheat is growing is to pass to the grantee title to the wheat, such effect cannot be varied by evidence of a contemporaneous parol agreement that as a further consideration for the conveyance the grantee should harvest and market the wheat and pay the grantor one-third of the proceeds; since that would be creating a parol reservation in the deed.—Adams v. Watkins, 103 Mich. 431.

¶ 856. Parol evidence is admissible to establish an agreement by a grantee to allow the grantor, as part consideration for the deed, the privilege of sowing and raising for his own use a crop of grain upon the land conveyed; there being no parol reservation involved.—Breitenwischer v. Clough, 111 Mich. 6.

§ 163. Failure, illegality or nonexistence of consideration.

To show true consideration, see ante §§ 161, 162.

To show real object or purpose of writing, see ante § 159.

¶ 857. Parol evidence is always admissible to show that a contract apparently valid has no consideration to support it.—Jennison v. Stone, 33 Mich. 99.

¶ 858. Evidence is admissible in an action on a contract to show the nonexistence of its subject-matter, to wit, a judgment assigned but legally nonexistent.—Gibson v. Pelkie, 37 Mich. 380.

¶ 865. Parol evidence showing failure of consideration for a note does not vary the written contract evidenced by the note.—Brown v. Smedley, 136 Mich. 65.

¶ 866. As against the payee of a promissory note parol evidence is admissible to show failure of consideration and is not objectionable as tending to vary the written contract evidenced by the note.—Blanchard v. Ridgeway, 179 Mich. 491.

¶ 867. In an action on an agreement to pay plaintiffs the unpaid balance on notes given to them by a third party and indorsed by the defendant, parol evidence is admissible to show that the consideration was an executory promise of plaintiffs as yet unperformed.—DeCamp v. Scofield, 75 Mich. 449.

¶ 868. In an action by the original payee of a note, parol evidence that it was signed by defendant at payee's request, after refusing the maker, on the payee's promise that defendant should not be held, is admissible to show want of consideration.—Kulenkamp v. Groff, 71 Mich. 675.

¶ 869. Parol evidence is admissible to show that part of the consideration of a note given on the purchase, by the holder of the equity of redemption, of a mortgagee's bid on statutory foreclosure, consisted of illegal attorney's fees which were included as expenses.—Macomb v. Wilkinson, 83 Mich. 486.

Showing what real and true terms were, see ante § 158.

Parol proof of surrounding circumstances for other purposes than explaining or construing language of the instrument, see ante § 159.

What ambiguity warrants resort to parol, see post § 165.

What is admissible to explain or complete, see post §§ 166, 167.

Restriction of extrinsic evidence to matters in doubt or ambiguity, see post § 168.

Parol evidence of subsequent or contemporaneous acts amounting to practical construction, see post § 205.

The doctrine that a contract deed or will is to be construed in the light of surrounding and contemporaneous circumstances is treated in Contracts, VI, A; Deeds, III, A; Wills, VI, A.

Possibility of removing ambiguity in deed by parol as making ejectment a proper remedy and barring reformation suit, see Reformation, I.

¶ 870. Where there was a want of certainty in a written instrument, and it was not clear from its terms whether the undertaking of defendants contained in it was to the plaintiffs or to third persons named, parol evidence of the circumstances attending it was held admissible, not to contradict the writing, but to aid the court in giving a true construction to it.—Facey v. Otis, 11 Mich. 213.

¶ 871. An unambiguous contract cannot be varied in its legal effect by the understanding of the parties at or before its execution; and where the only question is as to its legal meaning, its construction cannot be aided by oral evidence of conversations between the parties.—Johnson v. Cranage, 45 Mich. 14.

¶ 872. In suit on a written contract evidence in explanation of the circumstances of its execution, or of the sense in which certain words were used in it, is only admissible when ambiguous or equivocal words have been employed.—North American Fire Ins. Co. v. Throop, 22 Mich. 146.

¶ 873. Parol evidence is inadmissible to vary the construction of a promissory note complete in itself.—Kelsey v. Chamberlain, 47 Mich. 241.

¶ 874. Evidence outside a written instrument to explain its meaning and to arrive at the intention of the parties is only admissible when the same cannot be gleaned from the instrument itself.—Williams v. Walsh Mfg. Co., 169 Mich. 676.

¶ 875. Parol testimony is always admissible of the circumstances of the making of a written contract so far as these are necessary to enable the court to construe it properly.—Peabody v. Bement, 79 Mich. 47.

¶ 876. Parol testimony is admissible to show the circumstances under which the instrument was executed.—Fire Ins. Assoc. v. Wickham, 141 U. S. 564, 35 L. ed. 860, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 84.

¶ 877. Where writings show plainly all the essentials of a contract for the sale of land, parol evidence of the circumstances under which they were executed is inadmissible in aid of their construction.—Mull v. Smith, 132 Mich. 618.

¶ 878. Where there is an ambiguity in a contract of guaranty rendering it uncertain whether the guaranty was a continuing one or whether it covered only one item, parol evidence is admissible to explain the ambiguity.—R. L. Polk Printing Co. v. Smedley, 155 Mich. 249.

¶ 879. It cannot be shown by parol that it was the understanding of a guarantor that a plain and unambiguous contract of guarantee was to apply to future indebtedness only.—State Nat. Bank of Albuquerque v. Wernicke, 185 Mich. 281. (Ostrander, Kuhn and Stone, JJ., dissenting.)

¶ 880. Where a contract is in writing, is very voluminous, and expressly states that it contains all the terms of the agreement between the parties, evidence is inadmissible to aid in determining what the original contract was.—John D. Gruber Co. v. Smith, 195 Mich. 336.

¶ 881. Where an agreement to execute a land contract is complete in itself and unambiguous, it is error, in a suit for specific performance, to receive evidence contradicting its provisions, or tending to show that it did not embody all the agreement of the parties.—Ogooshevitz v. Arnold, 197 Mich. 203.

¶ 882. How certain words came to be inserted in a contract cannot be shown by parol where the writing is plain and not ambiguous.—Northwestern Cooperage & Lumber Co. v. Rubinsky, 180 Mich. 413.

Ambiguity as one of grounds for admission of parol, see ante § 164.

¶ 883. Latent ambiguity, being raised by extrinsic evidence, may be removed in like manner.—Ives v. Kimball, 1 Mich. 308.

¶ 884. An instrument in the following form: "J. G. W. bought of C. G. R., 1862, March 24th, one frame building," etc., "Received payment, $419, C. G. R.," is not conclusive evidence of the terms and conditions of the sale, and does not exclude parol evidence to show that the property mentioned was not to be delivered till paid for in the manner orally agreed upon at the time of sale.—Rowe v. Wright, 12 Mich. 289.

¶ 885. A power of attorney authorized the sale of "three certain lots of land in" a certain village, "belonging to" the person who gave the power. Held, that any ambiguity that might arise from the previous platting of one of the tracts into smaller lots would be latent merely, and might be removed by parol evidence.—Vaughn v. Sheridan, 50 Mich. 155.

¶ 886. Where an engine is sold with a guaranty that the saving of fuel shall "be equal to that claimed for the Corliss," a latent ambiguity exists which may be explained by parol evidence, as to whose claim and what claim was meant.—Wickes Bros. v. Swift Electric Light Co., 70 Mich. 322.

¶ 887. Where in proving chain of title the question in dispute is whether a quitclaim deed conveyed the fee in the land described, or a leasehold interest only, it may be proper to show that the value of the land was several times greater than the consideration stated in the deed, where the other evidence left in doubt the character of the claim conveyed.—Gilman v. Riopelle, 18 Mich. 145.

¶ 888. A., for whom B. was building a house under a contract to finish it by September 15, 1885, agreed to become responsible for lumber furnished B. by C. to a certain amount, payable when the house should be completed, and B.'s draft payable on September 15, 1885, to C., was accepted by A., with this qualification: "It is understood that the dwelling shall be completed before this draft is paid." B. failed to complete the house at all, and A. was put to expense to finish it. A. was sued on the draft. Held, that it was competent for him to show the understanding that the house was to be completed under the building contract. That contract had to be read to explain the completion covered by the condition, which without it would be meaningless.—Ferguson v. Davis, 65 Mich. 677.

¶ 889. Where a trust mortgage is conditioned for the payment to the mortgagee, first, of three notes indorsed by the mortgagee and specifically described, and of any renewals or extensions of said notes, and of any other notes upon which the mortgagee is indorser, and, second, of three notes, amounting to a stated sum, held by a specified bank, and of a fourth note held by another bank, and of any other liabilities of the mortgagor to the mortgagee, then or thereafter incurred, for the indorsement or otherwise of said mortgagee, the intention to create two classes of creditors, and to prefer those mentioned in the first class, is entirely clear upon the face of the mortgage, and the meaning of the language used cannot be changed by parol evidence.—Dunham v. Steele Packing & Provision Co., 100 Mich. 75.

¶ 890. Parol evidence is admissible to aid in arriving at the intention of parties where equivocal words are used in a contract.—Borden v. Fletcher's Estate, 131 Mich. 220.

¶ 891. In an action for the balance due on the purchase price of beans, testimony as to the meaning, in defendant's business, of the words "he to have advance for two weeks," contained in the contract in question, was properly excluded as explanatory of an unambiguous phrase, in the absence of any showing or offer to show that the expression had any definite trade meaning.—Chase v. Ainsworth, 135 Mich. 119.

¶ 893. There was no such ambiguity in a written contract for advertising as to require parol testimony to explain when the publication of the advertisement should begin, or to explain an alleged oral agreement that the contract was not to become obligatory until the goods advertised were distributed to certain retailers; where, in assumpsit thereon, it appears that such contract was a written order to plaintiff from defendant for the insertion of an advertisement on certain days of the week during one year, in a certain space, for which defendant agreed to furnish copy, and to pay plaintiff at a certain rate per line monthly.—Mali & Express Co. v. Wood, 140 Mich. 505.

¶ 894. A receipt for $50 signed by vendors, who were the owners as heirs of an undivided interest in land, reciting that it was first payment of $11,000, the purchase price of such land, the balance to be paid as soon as vendors perfected title, and containing an agreement to perfect title and to give vendee a warranty deed thereto as soon as the purchase price was tendered, was a clear and unambiguous agreement for the sale of real estate, and, in an action for a breach thereof, oral evidence was not admissible to vary the same by showing that the contract was conditioned upon procuring the transfers from the other heirs.—Miller v. Smith, 140 Mich. 524.

¶ 895. It is apparent that a written contract does not contain all the agreement, where such contract established an agency for the sale of wagons, names the terms of payment therefor, and contains an order for "complete" wagons, and refers to them as to be shipped, and where, under such contract, action was brought for the price of wagons shipped a long time before the contract was made to a prior agent in the buyer's town, and claimed to be turned over under the contract to such buyer, and where such buyer offers in defense that such wagons were not "complete," and therefore, seller had not performed; and accordingly parol testimony is admissible to explain what was intended by the contracting parties, even though such contract stipulates that it and the accompanying order constitute the only agreement made in relation thereto, "verbal statements contrary notwithstanding."—Harrison Wagon Co. v. Brown, 145 Mich. 621.

¶ 896. A written farming contract referring to certain necessary buildings on the premises, when in fact none such were there is so incomplete that parol evidence is admissible to show that an oral promise was made to erect them.—Beld v. Darst, 146 Mich. 143.

¶ 897. A guaranty attached to a bill of goods which is insufficient in itself to constitute an agreement will not be regarded as the entire contract between the parties so as to exclude oral evidence of the original agreement.—Richey v. Daemicke, 86 Mich. 647.

¶ 899. Contract of enrollment and for a course of correspondence instruction examined, and held to be a complete memorial of the agreement of the parties, precluding parol evidence as to what defendant's agent said concerning its legal effect and as to the liability of defendant to continue the correspondence course.—International Text-Book Co. v. Marvin, 166 Mich. 660.

¶ 900. Where a person contracts for an agreed compensation to bore a test well for oil and minerals a certain diameter and a certain depth, to provide the necessary casing and equipment and to use methods in casing such as are usually employed in oil fields, and the owner agrees to pay an additional sum if it is necessary to withdraw the casing, the contract is unambiguous and all the work necessary in putting in the casing is included therein, and evidence is inadmissible as to a usage and custom in oil fields as to the price charged for "rimming out" a bore to make it large enough to receive a casing.—Hanna v. Smith, 173 Mich. 483.

Inadmissibility of contemporaneous oral or written agreements, see post § 170.
Inadmissibility of prior contemporaneous negotiations, letters or statements, see post § 171.
Inadmissibility of parties' intent or understanding, see post § 172.
Admissibility for particular purposes, see post §§ 169, 172-186.
Validity, requisites and effect of customs and usages, see Customs.
Inadmissibility of custom against law, see Customs §§ 3, 4.
Effect of customs in construing contracts, see Customs § 11.
Implication that known and established customs and usages are part of contract terms, see Contracts § 165.
Admissibility of plat in aid of description in deed which is in evidence, see also Deeds § 58.

¶ 901. Where the language used in an instrument is of doubtful meaning, evidence of the surrounding circumstances, and of what was said by the parties interested, is competent to determine its real meaning, but the secret intention of either party cannot be shown.—Dunham v. Steele Packing & Provision Co., 100 Mich. 75.

¶ 902. Parol to show that an illiterate order for "Two square feeting schafts 4 ten hoe drills" was meant to order two shafts for ten-hoe drills, is admissible, in a suit against the purchaser, to rebut the effect that said order might otherwise have upon his contention that drills of the same kind previously purchased were defective.—Stoddard Mfg. Co. v. Miller, 107 Mich. 51.

¶ 904. Where a letter evidencing employment as a broker, contains the expression "you may have ten days from this date in which to place the stock," evidence as to what was meant by such words is inadmissible, such not being within the rule rendering admissible evidence of usage.—Obenauer v. Solomon, 151 Mich. 570.

¶ 905. A general custom of the hay trade known to both parties to a contract for the purchase of hay, with reference to which they contracted, as to whose duty it was to pay for the baling, may be shown, where the terms of the written contract are ambiguous.—Saginaw Milling Co. v. Schram, 186 Mich. 52.

¶ 906. Where a contract for the purchase of hay is ambiguous as to who was to pay for the baling, the seller may show under a notice of recoupment that the plaintiff failed to comply with a well-known trade usage to provide for the baling.—Saginaw Milling Co. v. Schram, 186 Mich. 52.

¶ 907. It is not a presumption of law, applying to the interpretation of a distinct contract apart from others, that the same parties will always make the same terms for their contracts. Each contract must stand by itself unless they are actually connected or referred to in the course of dealing. Therefore the exclusion of evidence showing the time of performance of previous contracts between the same parties, as a criterion to determine what would have been a reasonable time for delivery, was not error.—Hinman v. Eakins, 26 Mich. 80.

¶ 909. The terms of a former contract are admissible in a suit on a later one when the parties contracted the second time in the light of the former contract and a knowledge of it is essential to understand the later contract.—Welling v. Strickland, 161 Mich. 235.

¶ 910. Where a contractor for the performance of certain work at a fixed price sublets a portion of the work, evidence of the cost of doing the work retained by the contractor is admissible as bearing upon the question of what contract was in fact made between the contractor and his subcontractor as to the compensation of the subcontractor.—Carpenter v. Lennane, 166 Mich. 610.

§ 168. ——Restriction of parol to matters in doubt or incomplete.

Admissibility of parol evidence to prove matters supplementary or complementary of agreement but not part of it, see post § 169.

Inefficacy of custom against terms of contract, see Customs § 12.

¶ 911. Where a written contract contains an uncertain clause capable of being made certain by parol evidence, evidence of subsequent conversations between the parties is admissible to explain its intended bearing upon the contract, but not to vary the terms of such contract.—Jenkinson v. Monroe Bros. & Co., 61 Mich. 454.

¶ 912. Imperfect writings and such as do not embrace the whole agreement between the parties may be supplemented by parol evidence so long as the portion not contained in the written part of the contract does not conflict with that which is written, or materially add to or vary its terms.—National Cash Register Co. v. Blumenthal, 85 Mich. 464.

¶ 913. The rule that where a writing does not embody all the terms of a contract between the parties an additional agreement may be shown by parol, does not permit contradicting the terms of so much of the contract as is reduced to writing.—Hutchison Mfg. Co. v. Pinch, 107 Mich. 12.

¶ 914. Where an order for the purchase of machinery for a mill provided merely that it was to be paid for "when the mill was fixed and gave good results," parol evidence was admissible to show an agreement by the vendor to set up the machinery and repair the mill within a specified time, but not to show that he represented such machinery would not require more power to operate it than machinery then in use by the vendee would.—Hutchison Mfg. Co. v. Pinch, 107 Mich. 12.

¶ 915. The circumstances attending the execution of a deed may be shown by parol for the purpose of ascertaining the intent of the parties, where the deed is ambiguous, but not for the purpose of varying the terms of the grant by adding thereto or taking therefrom.—Powers v. Hibbard, 114 Mich. 533.

¶ 916. When a chattel mortgage is certain in all respects except the time of payment, parol evidence admitted to show date of maturity is limited in its effect to the one question.—Crowley v. Langdon, 127 Mich. 51.

¶ 917. Evidence of a usage is admissible in connection with an informal contract void of details, in order to explain doubtful provisions of the writing, but not for the purpose of varying or contradicting the well-expressed intention of the parties.—Saginaw Milling Co. v. Schram, 186 Mich. 52.

¶ 918. In an action for the value of land which defendant agreed to convey to plaintiff in exchange for land to be conveyed to defendant testimony as to negotiations between the parties is properly admitted to give a history of the transaction, and cannot be given for other purposes.—Dikeman v. Arnold, 83 Mich. 218.

What regarded as incomplete, see ante § 165.

Language purporting to be complete and exclusive of other agreements, see ante § 165.

Restriction of evidence to purpose of completing or supplying lack, see ante § 168.

Parol proof of other contracts and agreements between parties but independent of one in suit, see post § 202.

Best evidence where contract is partly written and partly oral, see ante § 128.

¶ 919. Where only part of a transaction appears from the written documents the circumstances are admissible to show the whole transaction.—Wisconsin M. & F. Ins. Co. Bank v. Manistee Salt & Lumber Co., 77 Mich. 76.

¶ 920. Where, pursuant to an oral agreement, a will and contract not containing all the arrangements of the parties have been executed, the whole agreement may be put in evidence, and the parties are not confined to the writings which form only a part of it.—Bird v. Pope, 73 Mich. 483.

¶ 921. A building contract referred to plans and specifications to be thereafter signed. They were not in fact signed, although agreed upon. Held, that in an action on the contract the unsigned specifications were admissible, as well as testimony showing "what kind of a front the building was to have," and other evidence of what had been agreed on. It was in explanation of the contract and not in contradiction of it.—Maxted v. Seymour, 56 Mich. 129.

¶ 922. Where letters composing the contract in question for compensation to be paid in obtaining subscriptions, did not contain a stipulation that the company in question should be organized to take over the brewery which was the subject of the transaction, or that its owners should transfer it to the company, it was competent to supply the omission by oral testimony.—Locke v. Wilson, 135 Mich. 593.

¶ 923. Where a written agreement clearly does not contain the entire contract of the parties, oral testimony may be introduced to prove what the whole contract was.—Beld v. Darst, 146 Mich. 143.

¶ 924. Where, in a written contract for the installation of a heating plant in a residence, the degrees of temperature to which the plant is guaranteed to heat the rooms is inadvertently omitted from the schedule provided therein, such omission may be supplied by parol evidence.—Sparks v. Lord, 198 Mich. 415.

§ 170. Contemporaneous oral or written agreements.

Contemporaneous negotiations, letters and statements, see post § 171.
Particulars of other contracts as evidence to explain one in question, see ante § 167.
Merger of prior warranties in written one, see also post § 179.
Independent contemporaneous agreements, see post § 202.
Subsequent modifying agreements, see post § 204.

¶ 925. Prior or contemporaneous parol agreements cannot be shown to contradict or vary the terms of a written agreement.—Kulenkamp v. Groff, 71 Mich. 675; Nichols v. Crandall, 77 Mich. 401; Hoag v. Graves, 81 Mich. 628; Fire Ins. Assoc. v. Wickham, 141 U. S. 564.

¶ 926. The parol agreements which preceded a contract, being merged in it, cannot be shown to vary its terms or effect.—Savercool v. Farwell, 17 Mich. 308; Martin v. Hamlin, 18 Mich. 354.

¶ 927. A written contract is presumed to contain the whole of the agreement of the parties, and all parol contemporaneous agreements are merged therein.—M. Rumely & Co. v. Emmons, 85 Mich. 511.

¶ 928. A prior parol agreement is inadmissible when the writing expressly declares that there are no oral arrangements that apply thereto.—Carney v. Hotchkiss, 48 Mich. 276.

¶ 929. An indorser cannot defend on evidence of an oral agreement made at the same time as the indorsement, introduced to change its legal import and convert it into an undertaking resting on outside conditions.—Ortmann v. Canadian Bank of Commerce, 39 Mich. 518.

¶ 930. One cannot defend against his promissory note by showing an oral contemporaneous agreement to reduce the note from an absolute and specific undertaking, according to its terms and legal import, to a defeasible engagement. Such a defense is an offer to prove that the consideration of the note was the delivery of two policies of insurance, and the payment, with interest and without delay, litigation or expense, of a loss upon another policy, which policy was only paid at the end of a year, and without interest, and to show that the note was delivered for this purpose only and not as an absolute unconditional promissory note.—Hyde v. Tenwinkel, 26 Mich. 93.

¶ 930a. Parol evidence of what was said when a guaranty was executed is admissible to show whether it was limited or continuing, that being doubtful and the evidence being in aid and not in contradiction of the writing.—Columbus Sewer Pipe Co. v. Ganser, 58 Mich. 385.

¶ 931. The terms of a written lease may not be varied by parol testimony of a prior or contemporaneous verbal agreement as to the making of repairs.—Grashaw v. Wilson, 123 Mich. 364.

¶ 932. Any parol understanding of the parties prior to a written agreement even though it may have induced the making of the contract cannot be permitted to vary the plain terms of the written agreement.—Gates v. Detroit & M. R. Co., 147 Mich. 523.

¶ 933. Where defendant has contracted to convey a right of way to complainant, a railway company, and the contract contains a provision that complainants shall have three crossings over a belt line road to be built by defendant, but contains no provision that defendant shall have crossings over complainant's road, evidence is inadmissible, in a suit by the railway company to enforce the performance of the contract, to show that there was a prior parol agreement that defendant should also have such rights.—Chicago, K. & S. Ry. Co. v. Lane, 150 Mich. 162.

¶ 934. Written contracts defining the rights of the parties thereto cannot be varied, modified or contradicted by any contemporaneous oral agreement on the same subject.—Skeels v. Starrett, 57 Mich. 350.

¶ 935. Evidence of contemporaneous understandings is inadmissible to vary a written contract.—Cline v. Hubbard, 31 Mich. 237.

¶ 936. The rule applies in equity as well as at law that evidence of a contemporaneous understanding cannot be received to vary a written contract.—Martin v. Hamlin, 18 Mich. 354; Gram v. Wasey, 45 Mich. 223.

¶ 937. Evidence of a parol agreement alleged to have accompanied the delivery of a deed, stipulating that, upon certain conditions, the deed should be redelivered to the grantor, was held incompetent, there being no proof of fraud or any other circumstance which could prevent the operation of the deed as an absolute conveyance.—Beers v. Beers, 22 Mich. 42.

¶ 938. Where a contract for the performance of work in finishing articles to be manufactured for a building contained no time of performance, evidence that the parties contemporaneously agreed by parol that they should be furnished at a certain time is not admissible, as it would be varying the terms of the written contract.—Stange v. Wilson, 17 Mich. 342.

¶ 939. The grantee of a deed cannot show that, previous to its execution, it was agreed that the land should be surveyed, and, if it fell short of a certain quantity, the value of the deficiency should be indorsed on the purchase-money mortgage.—Martin v. Hamlin, 18 Mich. 354.

¶ 941. After the execution and delivery of a contract for the sale of logs, and a subsequent discovery that an agreement for the retention of title in vendors until the logs were paid for had been omitted through a mistake, it was orally agreed that the contract should be treated the same as if it contained said agreement. Thereupon the vendees, before the separation of the parties, and pursuant to the conditions of the contract, executed and delivered their notes for the purchase-price of the logs. The logs were delivered to the vendees, and after manufacturing a portion into lumber they sold the same to a third party, from whom it was replevied by the original vendors, who on the trial of the replevin suit sought to show said oral agreement. Held, that the giving of the notes was a part of the contract, and necessary to its completion; and that the whole proceeding must be regarded as a part of one and the same transaction, and as falling within the rule that written instruments are not to be changed or varied by contemporaneous parol agreements.—Cook v. First National Bank, 90 Mich. 214.

¶ 942. Where a written proposal which was accepted in writing covered the whole ground of pleadings between the parties, parol evidence of the arrangement is inadmissible.—Simonds Mfg. Co. v. Riddle, 73 Mich. 497.

¶ 943. A specific order for certain goods providing that they should be paid for in ten days and guaranteed by a third party cannot be varied by another contemporaneous agreement by which the purchaser becomes the general agent for the goods of the seller which provides that payment shall be made on all goods within thirty days.—Toombs v. Stockwell, 127 Mich. 379.

¶ 944. Under a contract for the sale of fruit containing only the terms, "sight draft, with bill of lading attached," it was not only competent, but proper, for the parties to determine by an oral agreement upon whom such drafts should be drawn, and where they should be presented; and parol testimony to that effect did not tend to vary the contract.—Town v. Jepson, 133 Mich. 673.

¶ 945. A written contract whereby the complainant is to convey patent rights to the defendant to belong to them exclusively and in return to be employed by defendant for five years at a stated salary and at the expiration of five years to receive one-half interest in increased capitalization based on the increased earnings of the corporation, is construed to give absolute title in the patent to the defendant corporation and to preclude evidence of a contemporaneous oral agreement that the right of property is to terminate in five years.—Church v. Anti-Kalsomine Co., 138 Mich. 211.

¶ 946. Parol evidence as to another contemporaneous agreement that the dwelling house and certain fields were not included in a written lease of a farm on shares, was incompetent in an action for the breach of such lease.—Thayer v. Gibbs, 140 Mich. 60.

¶ 947. Where a written building contract makes no requirement of the contractor to put asbestos on pipes, evidence is inadmissible to show that prior to signing of the contract the parties had an oral understanding that the contractor was so to do.—Wenzel v. Kieruj, 168 Mich. 92.

¶ 949. Where logs are sold by written contract, and there is a controversy respecting the quantity delivered, and it appears that the logs were scaled by a certain third person as they were delivered, held to be competent for the vendor to show that at the time of the sale it was orally agreed between himself and the vendee that such third person should scale the logs.—Mason v. Phelps, 48 Mich. 126.

¶ 950. An oral agreement upon a scaler for logs sold is not an amendment or alteration of the written contract; it merely designates a person as the mutual agent or servant of the parties to see to the performance.—Mason v. Phelps, 48 Mich. 126.

was is not then excluded.—Doty v. Martin, 32 Mich. 462.

§ 171. Prior or contemporaneous negotiations, letters or statements.

To affect instrument with mistake or fraud, see ante § 156.

Parol to identify partner fraudulently concealed and protected, see post ¶ 1097.

Subsequent agreements and negotiations, see post, V, C.

Prior oral warranties on sale with written warranty, see also post § 179, ¶ 1039.

Prior negotiations and agreements as secondary evidence, see ante § 127.

Merger and extinction of earlier agreements and understandings in written agreement, see Contract § 265.

Nonmerger of fraudulent statements in resultant contract, admissibility to defeat instrument, see ante § 156.

Admissibility of evidence of negotiations and conversations to prove terms of oral contract, see Contracts § 315.

¶ 952. All prior talk between the parties is merged in a written contract entered into by them.—Brigham v. Martin, 103 Mich. 150.

¶ 953. Negotiations preliminary to the execution of a written instrument may not be received to change or vary its terms.—Boston Piano & Music Co. v. Pontiac Clothing Co., 199 Mich. 141.

¶ 954. Correspondence preliminary to a contract cannot be put in evidence in an action thereon if the contract covers the same ground as the correspondence and is complete in itself.—Wonderly v. Holmes Lumber Co., 56 Mich. 412.

¶ 955. Where a written agreement is made in express terms for the satisfaction of certain claims held by one party against the other, a letter previously written by the former to the latter, and containing a statement of the amount paid out by the former for the benefit of the latter, is not admissible to vary the express terms of the agreement.—Fraser v. Fraser's Estate, 42 Mich. 275.

¶ 956. In an action to recover for extra services claimed to have been performed in carrying out a written contract, a letter written prior to the date on which contract was entered into is not admissible to vary the terms of the contract by showing that the items claimed as extras were intended to be within the terms of the agreement.—Hapke v. Davidson, 180 Mich. 138.

¶ 957. Letters antedating and leading up to the making of a contract are inadmissible to vary the terms of the written contract.—Haas v. Malto-Grapo Co., 148 Mich. 358.

¶ 958. A written contract consisting of a proposal and acceptance, to furnish a heating plant to warm the building in question to a fixed temperature, could not be varied by parol evidence that the proposal was based upon the defendant's statement and understanding that he should build a stone wall under the building.—Mouat v. Montague, 122 Mich. 334.

¶ 959. In the absence of fraud, mistake or ambiguity in a contract, parol evidence of conversations and negotiations prior to its executions are inadmissible.—Sax v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co., 129 Mich. 502.

¶ 960. Testimony respecting an oral conversation before a written contract was made is incompetent and inadmissible to vary the terms of the written contract.—Wallace v. Kelly, 148 Mich. 336.

¶ 961. In an action for extra services claimed to have been rendered in the performance of a written contract, prior conversations between the parties are inadmissible for the purpose of varying the written instrument.—Hapke v. Davidson, 180 Mich. 138.

¶ 963. A resolution of the governor and judges that a certain lot be assigned to a person named, their parol declarations that it had been conveyed, and parol proof that their records had been inaccurately kept, and many grants had been made and deeds given which did not appear thereon, were all held incompetent evidence in opposition to a subsequent conveyance by them.—Scott v. Detroit Young Men's Society's Lessee, 1 D. 119, writ of error dismissed, 5 How. (U. S.) 343, 12 L. ed. 181; and see Ready v. Kearsley, 14 Mich. 215.

¶ 964. Discussion in a board of directors preliminary to an appointment by them, and for the sole purpose of reaching a determination, cannot be put in evidence to fix the terms of agreement with the person appointed.—Kalamazoo Novelty Mfg. Works v. Macalister, 40 Mich. 84.

¶ 965. Where in a letter that is part of correspondence making a contract of sale of land it is stated that the deed "would contain our usual mineral reservations, which included all stone," which can only be explained by previous oral conversations in reference to the form of deed, evidence of such conversations is admissible to ascertain what the contract was intended to contain.—Butler v. Iron Cliffs Co., 96 Mich. 70.

¶ 966. Conversations and negotiations preliminary to an agreement, though merged in it, may still be admissible, not for the purpose of explaining its terms but to throw light upon the question of its execution and upon other questions connected therewith.—Wilbur v. Stoepel, 82 Mich. 344.

¶ 967. Contemporaneous conversations are admissible to add to a contract for sale and delivery of axles the particular specifications to be met of which the written agreement is silent.—Liggett Spring & Axle Co. v. Michigan Buggy Co., 106 Mich. 445.

¶ 968. Where a certified check is turned over to the payee with a letter referring to a previous arrangement and specifying the conditions upon which it may be cashed, and said payee replies by letter taking note of said conditions, oral testimony sufficient to show to what said writings referred, and precisely what the parties contemplated, is properly admitted in a suit to enjoin the payment of said check.—Preston v. National Bank of Ionia, 169 Mich. 571.

¶ 969. Where a written order for purchase signed by the vendees only does not contain all the material representations made by vendor's agents to induce vendees to buy, parol evidence to show such representations, not conflicting with the order as written, is admissible.—Palmer v. Roath, 86 Mich. 602.

§ 172. Intent or understanding of parties.

See also ante ¶¶ 871, 947.

Language admitting of proof of understanding, see ante § 165.

To show meaning of terms of trade, science and art, see post § 173.

Expressed intent as test in construction, see Contracts § 146.

¶ 970. Where there is no ambiguity on the face of an instrument, extrinsic evidence is not admissible to show an intent other than that expressed.—Wisconsin Fire & M. Ins. Co. Bank v. Filer, 80 Mich. 67; Forbes v. Darling, 94 Mich. 621.

¶ 971. Parol testimony is admissible to show that a written instrument does not express the real intent of the parties.—Burns v. Caskey, 100 Mich. 94.

¶ 972. Where in summary proceedings for possession written notice to quit is served on defendant by complainants' agent, parol evidence that the agent stated to defendant that he need pay no attention to the notice is inadmissible.—Pittsburgh & L. S. Iron Co. v. Kirkpatrick, 92 Mich. 252.

¶ 973. In an action for a breach of covenant parol proof is inadmissible to show that an existing incumbrance was agreed to by the parties to be regarded as in fact no incumbrance.—Edwards v. Clark, 83 Mich. 246.

¶ 974. In an action for a breach of covenant, where the premises in the lessee's possession had been conveyed with covenants against incumbrance, it cannot be proved by parol that it had been agreed by the parties that the lease should not be regarded as an incumbrance.—Edwards v. Clark, 83 Mich. 246.

¶ 975. Where a building contract is unambiguous in its terms, and specifies the kind of materials to be used, and that the work is to be done in a good and substantial manner, letters and conversations between the parties, prior to the time that the contract was reduced to writing, are not admissible in evidence to show that the building was to be a cheaply constructed one.—Eaton v. Gladwell, 108 Mich. 678.

¶ 977. In an action between the parties to a lease for slander of title based on defendant landlord's statement that lessee had no right to sublet for a saloon, parol evidence is inadmissible to show that contemporaneously with the execution of the lease, providing in terms that the lessee might sublet for "business purposes," there was an oral agreement that he should not sublet for a saloon.—Harrison v. Howe, 109 Mich. 476.

¶ 978. Parol evidence is admissible to show, in an action upon a promissory note, the understanding upon which an indorsement was made reciting the receipt of money "to be indorsed on interest."—Rawlings v. Fisher, 110 Mich. 19.

¶ 979. The doctrine of the inadmissibility of evidence to vary and contradict the terms of a written contract is inapplicable to a contract of agency to sell land containing a provision for the furnishing by the owner of an abstract and tax history showing "clear title" to the premises, so as to render admissible evidence that the owners at the time of the execution of the agency agreement told the agent of a reservation of mineral rights in a deed conveying the land to such owners and also evidence that such agent stated at such time that the title was all right and that it was not necessary to make any reference to the reservation in the contract.—Appleby v. Sperling, 194 Mich. 681.

¶ 980. A witness may explain what he meant by a certain statement made by him in a letter which is in evidence.—Steele v. Kellogg, 163 Mich. 132.

§ 173. Terms and words of trade, science and art.

To explain "reasonable amount," see ante ¶ 976.
To explain "business purposes," see ante ¶ 977.
To explain "to be indorsed on interest," see ante ¶ 978.
To explain "clear title," see ante ¶ 979.
Usage as to measuring "figure work" in printing, see post ¶ 1020.
As to meaning of "mill tally," see also post ¶ 1021.
To explain illiterate or ungrammatical words, see ante ¶ 902.
Inadmissibility to restrict or narrow inclusive terms, see also post ¶¶ 1099, 1101, 1106.
Parol to show normal or usual under terms of contract extending beyond normal trade limits, see also Contracts ¶ 722.

¶ 981. Where, as security, an assignment is made of $150,000 of good and collectible accounts, now existing or hereafter to be acquired, parol evidence is admissible to show in what sense the parties used the word "accounts," and what they understood to be included therein; and to such evidence and the surrounding circumstances a court of chancery will look in determining said questions.—Preston Nat. Bank v. Smith Middlings Purifier Co., 102 Mich. 462.

¶ 982. In an action to recover the balance due upon a contract for the sale of chemical retorts, parol evidence was admissible to show that the contract did not necessarily call for a gas-tight retort, where it appeared that the term "retort" as used in chemistry and the arts, was susceptible of different constructions.—MacKinnon Boiler & Machine Co. v. Central Michigan Land Co., 156 Mich. 11.

¶ 983. Where upon a bill of lading to the order of the consignee, the shipper has indorsed the words, "B. L. attached to draft," the bill is ambiguous so as to make the introduction of parol evidence admissible to explain its meaning.—Sturges v. Detroit, G. H. & M. Ry. Co., 166 Mich. 231.

¶ 984. A steam road roller in crossing an electric railway track in the country on a highway crossing was struck by a car going at a high rate of speed. In a resulting action for damages a rule of the company as to the speed of cars entering curves was in evidence, and the superintendent testified that a slight curve shown upon a diagram of the scene was not called a curve within the meaning of railroad curves and within the meaning of the rule. Held, he was testifying to a fact as to the application of the defendant's rules to a certain condition and was not erroneously attempting to give the meaning of the word "curve" in the rules.—Good Roads Const. Co. v. Port Huron, St. C. & M. C. Ry. Co., 173 Mich. 1.

Changing character of instrument or parties, see post §§ 181, 182.
Showing obligation or condition of mortgage, see post § 185.
Evidence to extend or modify contract to adopt, see also Adoption ¶ 7.

¶ 986. Parol evidence is inadmissible to change the terms of a promissory note deliberately given and taken by the parties with full knowledge of its contents and not tainted with fraud by showing that it was taken as a mere memorandum.—Hutchinson v. Hutchinson, 102 Mich. 635.

¶ 987. A contemporaneous oral agreement is inadmissible to change the legal effect of an indorsement.—Ortmann v. Canadian Bank of Commerce, 39 Mich. 518.

¶ 988. Thirteen defendants signed a subscription paper for the purchase of a stallion for $2,600, each to have a share of $200, and stated in the paper that they would jointly sign notes for the purchase price. The notes were subsequently signed. Held, in a suit on the notes, parol evidence was not admissible to show that the defendants were only severally liable, and each to the extent only of $200.—Rumsey v. Fox, 158 Mich. 248.

¶ 989. Where a note provides for interest it is implied that it shall bear interest from date, and to dispute it would be to vary the terms of the instrument by parol.—Webber v. Webber, 146 Mich. 31.

§ 175. ——Showing suretyship or secondary liability.

Making absolute obligation defeasible or conditional, see ante § 174.
Right of parties among themselves and collateral to the paper to show mutual relations and rights, see post § 201.

¶ 990. Parol evidence is inadmissible to change the character of a bond by making the principal obligors stand as sureties; since in the case of bonds the relations of the obligors between themselves is not collateral to the bond.—Coots v. Farnsworth, 61 Mich. 497.

¶ 991. Parol proof is admissible that a signer of a joint and several note is a surety only.—Stevens v. Oaks, 58 Mich. 343.

¶ 992. The form of a note in being several as well as joint does not exclude proof that one of the signers is a surety only, who is bound by the obligation in the form he adopted.—Stevens v. Oaks, 58 Mich. 343.

¶ 993. In action by the payee a joint maker of a promissory note cannot limit his liability to that of an indorser by parol testimony that he signed as a surety, and that by an agreement of the agent of the payee who took the note he was to be released unless notified of its nonpayment.—Aultman & Taylor Co. v. Gorham, 87 Mich. 233.

¶ 994. In an action against one who indorsed a note before utterance, thereby becoming a joint maker, evidence that he was induced to sign the note by the promise of the payee that he should not be held liable thereon is inadmissible, as tending to vary the terms of a written contract by parol evidence.—Gumz v. Giegling, 108 Mich. 295.

¶ 995. Parol evidence is admissible in an action by the payee upon a promissory note to show that the defendant who indorsed the note before delivery was, as between the maker and himself a surety, and that the payee knew it.—Hitchcock v. Frackelton, 116 Mich. 487.

§ 176. Time, place or manner of performance, payment or discharge.

As to time of payment when none is specified, see also post ¶ 1121.
Parol proof of execution on condition that comaker should not be held liable, see ante § 157.

¶ 996. Where a written agreement to furnish merchandise does not state when it is to be furnished, evidence of a contemporaneous parol agreement fixing the time is inadmissible.—Coon v. Spaulding, 47 Mich. 162.

¶ 997. Oral evidence is inadmissible to show that a mortgage stating no time of payment, and therefore in legal contemplation due at once, is really payable at a future time.—Bearss v. Preston, 66 Mich. 11.

¶ 998. A note payable on demand cannot be changed by evidence aliunde that it was not intended to become due until some time in the future.—Citizens' Sav. Bank v. Vaughan, 115 Mich. 156.

¶ 999. The plain terms of a note payable on demand cannot be varied by evidence aliunde that the note was not intended to become due until some future time.—Citizens' Sav. Bank v. Vaughan, 115 Mich. 156.

¶ 1000. Parol evidence is inadmissible to introduce conditions or modifications of the terms of a promissory note for a certain amount, payable at a certain time, which has been delivered into the hands of the payee to take effect presently as the obligation of the maker.—Central Savings Bank v. O'Connor, 132 Mich. 578.

¶ 1001. Where a draft had been accepted with the qualification, "It is understood the dwelling shall be completed before this draft is paid," it was proper in suit thereon to show the understanding that the house was to be completed under a certain building contract.—Ferguson v. Davis, 65 Mich. 677.

¶ 1002. Parol evidence is admissible to show an agreement that the chattel mortgage debt in which no due date is specified becomes due in three, six and nine months where the words of the mortgage clearly imply an extension of a term of credit.—Crowley v. Langdon, 127 Mich. 51.

¶ 1005. Oral testimony to show the agreement upon terms of payment not specified in a written option, is incompetent, where such written option is unambiguous.—Kibler v. Caplis, 140 Mich. 28.

¶ 1007. A deed expressly stipulated that the grantee should pay off a certain mortgage on the premises. Held, that an oral agreement between the parties that the grantor should advance the moneys to pay it would be inconsistent with the terms of the deed, and that the grantee could not recover upon it against the grantor.—Unger v. Smith, 44 Mich. 22.

¶ 1008. Where, in a written agreement for the sale of an interest in, and for the operation of, a hotel, payment in a certain time for such interest is unambiguously provided for, it cannot be shown by parol that payment was to be made out of the profits, or in any other way or time than as specified in the writing.—Smith v. Kemp, 92 Mich. 357.

¶ 1009. Where a mortgagee has sold two of three mortgage notes and, as recited in the assignment, has assigned a corresponding interest in the mortgage, the assignee cannot show by parol that his notes were intended to have priority.—Jennings v. Moore, 83 Mich. 231.

¶ 1010. Note for purchase price of stock cannot be varied by showing payee's contemporaneous parol agreement to credit on note damages sustained by maker if other stock previously sold to him for breeding purposes should prove to be barren.—Phelps v. Abbott, 114 Mich. 88.

¶ 1011. In an action on a promissory note given by the indorser of another note upon which a judgment had been rendered and execution levied on the indorser's property, and signed by other persons for the alleged accommodation of the maker, evidence that the attorney for the payee had agreed for a stipulated percentage to collect the amount of the second note from the maker of the first note if the defendants would sign the second note, and that the second note was merely for accommodation was incompetent as an attempt to reduce a written agreement from an unqualified undertaking to a conditional, defeasible agreement by proof of a contemporaneous oral contract.—Holland City State Bank v. Meeuwsen, 192 Mich. 326.

¶ 1012. A written contract for the purchase of a musical machine, containing definite terms of payment, signed by the defendant without reading it, cannot be varied by parol testimony that he was to have had the machine on commissions.—Price v. Marthen, 122 Mich. 655.

¶ 1013. Parol evidence is admissible to show that a contract between a logger and a sawyer contemplated that notes were to be received in payment of a saw bill, the written contract being silent as to some of the terms of the agreement to such extent that a casual inspection indicated that it did not contain the whole contract of the parties.—Germain v. Central Lumber Co., 120 Mich. 61.

¶ 1014. The contract of agency between plaintiff and defendant provided that plaintiff, the principal, would accept farmers' notes which defendant should take in payment for plaintiff's goods sold by him. Defendant was allowed to testify that when signing the contract he asked why this provision was inserted in the contract, and that plaintiff company's agent answered that the company would always take notes for their goods, that he would be present personally to make settlement, and would take notes for other drills rated good if taken on their blanks. Held, that such testimony, being an attempt to vary by parol the terms of a written contract, is inadmissible.—Superior Drill Co. v. Carpenter, 150 Mich. 262.

¶ 1015. In an action upon a promissory note given for a chattel mortgage and note, parol testimony is inadmissible to show an agreement that the note should become void if the maker of the chattel mortgage and note should be forced into bankruptcy.—Central Savings Bank v. O'Connor, 132 Mich. 578.

¶ 1016. A written contract to deliver timber at certain rates is not varied by parol testimony of an understanding between the parties that it was to be measured at the ports of destination.—Gillett v. Bowman, 43 Mich. 477.

¶ 1017. Where a contract for the sale of goods is not ambiguous, a party thereto may not testify that the place of delivery was to be the place designated by the purchaser, where such testimony is not based on any usage of trade.—Althouse v. McMillan, 132 Mich. 145.

¶ 1018. Where an employment of a broker for the sale of lumber states that the terms of shipment are to be the "removal of the lumber as fast as five hundred thousand feet is cut and piled on the dock," parol evidence is permissible to show what dock was intended.—Obenauer v. Solomon, 151 Mich. 570.

¶ 1019. Where a contract employing a broker is silent as to the place at which the broker should notify the principal of the finding of a purchaser, evidence as to the place at which notice was to be given is not inadmissible as tending to vary the terms of the writing.—Obenauer v. Solomon, 151 Mich. 570.

§ 177. Compensation or rate of payment.

To show true consideration, see ante § 161.

¶ 1020. In an action involving a contract with a municipal corporation to do its printing at a certain per cent, below the statutory rates for legal notices, it being further provided that no constructive charges should be allowed, evidence of a printer's usage allowing double measure in paying for "figure-work," such as advertisements of tax sales, was held to be inadmissible.—Advertiser & Tribune Co. v. City of Detroit, 43 Mich. 116.

¶ 1021. Where a contract provided that plaintiff should be paid for cutting and delivering logs at a certain rate "per thousand feet, board measure, according to the mill-tally thereof," it was proper to admit testimony showing that "mill-tally" included mill-culls as well as merchantable lumber.—Corneil v. New Era Lumber Co., 71 Mich. 350.

§ 178. Attaching or discharging conditions.

Making absolute obligation conditional or defeasible, see also ante § 174.
Reducing absolute to conditional note, see also ante ¶ 930.
Adding or qualifying warranties, see post § 179.
Showing real condition of mortgage, see post § 185.

¶ 1022. Conceding the delivery of a contract or obligation and that it was at one time effective evidence is not admissible to the effect that it is to have a different effect from that stated therein or to modify or nullify the character of the obligation itself upon certain conditions.—Smith v. Mathis, 174 Mich. 262.

¶ 1023. Parol evidence is inadmissible to show a contemporaneous agreement reducing a note from an absolute specific undertaking to a defeasible engagement.—Sheffler v. Sherman, 167 Mich. 42.

¶ 1024. Parol evidence is inadmissible to vary the construction of a promissory note payable out of the maker's estate so as to be payable only on a condition that a payee would survive.—Kelsey v. Chamberlain, 47 Mich. 241.

¶ 1025. An agreement relating to the sale and exchange of lands cannot be varied or modified by parol testimony showing that it is conditional on obtaining the signature of the wife of a party, or the approval of his attorney.—Dikeman v. Arnold, 71 Mich. 656.

¶ 1026. Parol evidence is inadmissible to change the terms of a written lease made by indorsement on an expiring lease, but not embodying all the old lease's provisions, as claimed.—Walsh v. Martin, 69 Mich. 29.

¶ 1027. Parol evidence was admissible to show an agreement with an insurance agent in regard to incumbrances made at the time of application, where the application is by reference made part of the policy, and which agreement estopped company from claiming forfeiture.—Copeland v. Dwelling-House Ins. Co., 77 Mich. 554.

¶ 1028. Where certain of the creditors under a trust mortgage are sued upon their note given for part of the debtor's mortgaged goods sold by the trustee, they cannot vary the note by showing an oral contemporaneous understanding with the trustee for its total or partial nonenforcement on the expectation, if realized, that the remaining goods would pay the other creditors.—Atkinson v. Weidner, 79 Mich. 575.

¶ 1030. An order by a merchant for the shipment to him of a cash register, to be paid for as stated in the order, which provided for the retention of title by vendor until such payment was made, was a complete contract, and is not subject to modification by evidence of a contemporaneous oral agreement to the effect that vendee should receive the machine on five days' trial, and, if not satisfactory to him at the end of that time, that he might return the machine.—National Cash Register Co. v. Blumenthal, 85 Mich. 464.

¶ 1031. Where a contract to furnish goods requires them to be manufactured and shipped within a reasonable time after the vendor is informed as to the goods required, it is incompetent to show by parol that the vendor agreed to keep goods on hand ready for immediate shipment.—Harrow Spring Co. v. Whipple Harrow Co., 90 Mich. 147.

¶ 1032. A written agreement between the manufacturer and the buyer of a machine which is held to supplant and supersede a previous agreement between the seller and the buyer of the machine, whereby the buyer was given seven months' time in which to test the machine and return, if unsatisfactory, cannot be varied by parol evidence to the effect that the agent of the manufacturer stated at the time of the second agreement that whatever agreement was entered into between the manufacturer and the buyer should in no way affect the rights of the buyer against the seller.—James Leffel & Co. v. Platt, 126 Mich. 443.

¶ 1033. In an action for the price of one seed drill and for breach of a contract to purchase drills from the plaintiff only, which contract is in writing and contains a provision that it shall not be varied except by writing signed by the plaintiff, it is error to admit testimony that the plaintiff's agent agreed to furnish an agent to set up the machine and assist in selling.—Dowagiac Mfg. Co. v. Corbit, 127 Mich. 473.

parol that the contractor was to heat the building during the cold weather.—Johnson v. O'Neill, 181 Mich. 326.

¶ 1035. A chattel mortgage and accompanying note, when absolute in form, cannot be varied by parol so as to show that the chattels for which they were given could be returned by the mortgagor if they did not comply with the representations of the seller. —Solomon v. Stewart, 184 Mich. 506.

¶ 1036. Testimony that the defendant in trover for selling mortgaged chattels, in excess of the amount required to satisfy the indebtedness secured, bought the property outright and in good faith, was properly excluded as constituting a variance of a written instrument plain and unambiguous in its terms.—Haynes v. Hobbs, 136 Mich. 117.

¶ 1038. In an action for the price bid for lands sold at an administrator's sale the probate proceedings and arrangements preliminary to the sale were pertinent in explaining the true state of facts and were admissible in evidence therefor, where the notice of sale called for a clear title but the land was mortgaged, and it was claimed that bids were made on an agreement to allow deduction of the amount of incumbrance.—Stebbins v. Field, 43 Mich. 333.

§ 179. Adding or qualifying warranties.

See also ante ¶ 782.

Language admitting of or calling for parol, see ante § 165.

Attaching or discharging conditions, see ante § 178.

To show that incumbrance was not to be considered as such, see ante ¶¶ 973, 974.

¶ 1040. Parol evidence of a warranty not contained in a written contract is inadmissible.—Hallett v. Gordon, 122 Mich. 567.

¶ 1041. Parol evidence is not admissible to add to an unambiguous writing facts which may aid the implication of a warranty.—McCray Refrigerator & C. S. Co. v. Woods, 99 Mich. 269; Detroit Shipbuilding Co. v. Comstock, 144 Mich. 516.

¶ 1042. Parol evidence is not admissible to show an express warranty beyond that contained in the formal written contract of sale.—Hall v. Duplex-Power Car Co., 168 Mich. 634.

¶ 1045. Where a contract of sale is in writing and appears to be a complete and certain agreement and contains no warranty, an express warranty cannot be added by parol; and if it contains a warranty, parol evidence is not admissible to vary what the writing specifies.—Potter v. Shields, 174 Mich. 121.

¶ 1048. Where a windmill is sold by written contract warranting that it shall be erected in a good and substantial manner, and that all repairs caused by defective manufacture shall be furnished free of charge for one year, evidence of conversations between vendee and vendor's agent tending to show prior oral warranties is inadmissible, as is also a circular issued by vendor in regard to its windmills.—Zimmerman Mfg. Co. v. Dolph, 104 Mich. 281.

¶ 1049. In an action for the purchase price of a cash register on a written order, parol evidence is not admissible to show a warranty by the salesman that the machine could not be manipulated by a dishonest clerk and no such warranty can be implied.—Hallwood Cash-Register Co. v. Millard, 127 Mich. 316.

¶ 1050. A warranty that seed drills were as good as certain other named drills cannot be added by parol to a sale of drills, which is in writing and provides that it shall not be varied except by a writing signed by the seller.—Dowagiac Mfg. Co. v. Corbit, 127 Mich. 473.

¶ 1051. In an action on a promissory note given for the price of a steam boiler, purchased under a written contract, evidence of the claim of the purchaser that he was induced to make the purchase by the false and fraudulent representations of plaintiff that it would have a greater capacity, furnish more steam, and be more economical than the boiler which it replaced, amounts at most to evidence of a parol warranty, and is properly excluded where no warranty is found in the written contract.—Detroit Shipbuilding Co. v. Comstock, 144 Mich. 516.

¶ 1052. A vendor's agent made an oral agreement to sell a hoist to defendant vendee. The hoist was examined by the vendee's agent. Vendor's agent then reported the sale to his principal, who wrote a letter confirming the sale, and stating that the agreement was to sell the hoist "as it now stands on the river front." The vendee replied that vendor's understanding of the agreement was correct. In a suit for the purchase price, held, the vendee could not introduce evidence of an oral warranty of the hoist made by the vendor's agent.—Union Trust Co. v. Detroit River Transit Co., 162 Mich. 670.

¶ 1053. In a suit in trover for seizing plaintiff's threshing machine, where plaintiff under a special count claims damages for loss of prospective threshing profits, it is error to admit evidence as to the statements made by defendant vendor's agent as to the profits plaintiff would make from said machine, where the contract of sale and mortgage between plaintiff and defendant is in writing and contains no warranty as to profits.—Truman v. J. I. Case Threshing Mach. Co., 169 Mich. 153.

¶ 1054. Evidence as to representations that a tractor engine had sufficient power to haul six gang plows with breaker bottoms, a packer and a drill, that it would haul the same at a specified rate, and that it would plow a specified amount of ground per hour at not exceeding a certain cost, held inadmissible to vary a written contract of sale.—John D. Gruber Co. v. Smith, 195 Mich. 336.

¶ 1058. Defendant wrote to plaintiff asking if it wished to purchase a load of rye. Plaintiff called defendant by telephone and a sale was agreed upon. Plaintiff then sent defendant a confirmation of sale agreement, which specified fully the terms of the sale and stated that defendant guaranteed the grade of the rye. Thereafter, defendant shipped the rye. In a suit for breach of the warranty of quality, held, the defendant could not put in evidence the oral conversations of the parties to vary or explain the guaranty clause contained in the written confirmation agreement.—Stockbridge Elevator Co. v. Booth, 165 Mich. 212.

¶ 1060. Where a contract for the sale of automobiles provides that they are "to stand sold as they are, that such contract shall constitute the entire agreement between the parties and that it shall not be modified by any verbal agreement or in any way except in writing by the parties attached or indorsed hereon," parol evidence to vary the terms of the contract or to prove any implied warranty is inadmissible.—Detroit Trust Co. v. Engel, 192 Mich. 62.

¶ 1061. In ejectment, a warranty deed cannot be varied by a parol agreement by which the plaintiffs are attempting to show tnat the warranty did not apply to a one-fourth interest held by another heir believed to be dead at the time of the deed.—Dye v. Thompson, 126 Mich. 597.

¶ 1063. That a lease for a term of years was subject to a decision adverse to the lessor in a pending action affecting his title, cannot be shown by parol in an action by the lessee against the former for breach of the covenant for quiet enjoyment.—Wolf v. Megantz, 184 Mich. 452.

§ 180. Attaching defeasance or condition to absolute transfer.

Reducing absolute obligation to conditional or defeasible one, see also ante § 174.

To show true character of instrument, see post § 181.
To impress deed absolute with character of mortgage, see Mortgages, II, B.
To show that absolute transfer of goods is chattel mortgage, see Chattel Mortgages § 5.

¶ 1064. A promissory note containing, immediately after the statement of the sum agreed to be paid, the words "being balance due on one span of horses bought of him [the payee], said horses to be holden to him as security for payment of this note," is not so certain and unambiguous as to import a mortgage rather than a conditional sale; and parol evidence that the title to the team was not to pass until they were paid for is admissible as explanatory of the doubtful language.—Kendrick v. Beard, 81 Mich. 182.

¶ 1065. A bill of sale absolute on its face may be shown by parol evidence to have been given as a security.—Seligman v. Ten Eyck's Estate, 74 Mich. 525; Pinch v. Willard, 108 Mich. 204.

¶ 1066. Where the real agreement was a parol trust for the payment of debts, and only a formal assignment was reduced to writing, it, being merely an incident of the contract, is open to parol evidence that it was made upon an oral understanding that the assignee should collect them and hold their proceeds in trust for assignor's creditors.—Matthews v. Forslund, 112 Mich. 591.

¶ 1067. An assignment absolute in form but for security may be shown to be such.—May v. Genesee County Savings Bank, 120 Mich. 330.

¶ 1068. In an action to recover money, collected on a mortgage that had been assigned by plaintiff to defendant, evidence is admissible tending to show whether the assignment was absolute or not, and on what consideration it rested.—Hill v. Goodrich, 39 Mich. 439.

¶ 1069. One who has given a written assignment, absolute in form, of a particular payment described in a mortgage, and has also given the accompanying note, can nevertheless show by parol that the transfer was not unqualified, but was made as security for repayment of money borrowed from the transferee.—Hyler v. Nolan, 45 Mich. 357.

¶ 1070. In proceeding against an estate to recover money realized from a judgment which had been assigned by plaintiffs to decedent, parol evidence is admissible to show that it was actually collected for the benefit of the assignors.—In re Elder's Appeal, 39 Mich. 474.

¶ 1071. Parol evidence is admissible in a court of law to show that a bill of sale, absolute on its face, was intended as a mortgage.—Fuller v. Parrish, 3 Mich. 211.

Parol to show bill of sale or other transfer to be chattel mortgage, see Chattel Mortgages § 5.

¶ 1072. Parol evidence is admissible to show the true character of a mortgage, and for what purpose and consideration it was given.—Cutler v. Steele, 93 Mich. 204.

¶ 1073. It is not admissible to show that an agent of the principal told the defendant that a contract was one of agency, the issue being that it was also a sale agreement and the contract being unambiguous in that respect.—Aspinwall Mfg. Co. v. Johnson, 97 Mich. 531.

¶ 1074. A quitclaim deed cannot by parol agreement be converted into a warranty deed.—Cartier v. Douville, 98 Mich. 22.

¶ 1075. Where the testator executed two deeds and a will at the same time, and the deeds were undelivered, but instructions were given to one of his sons with whom he lived, to take the key to the drawer where the deeds were deposited after his death and have them recorded and have the will probated, extrinsic evidence was not admissible to show that it was the testator's intention to have the deeds operate as a will.—Dodson v. Dodson, 142 Mich. 586.

¶ 1076. Where the question involved is whether a contract between a piano dealer and defendant was a chattel mortgage or a consignment for sale, defendant not being a manufacturer or dealer in pianos, evidence as to a prior question of the parties as to how defendant was to secure the pianos to be consigned is admissible as illustrating the meaning of contract, and in no way contradicting it.—Wasey v. Whitcomb, 167 Mich. 58.

¶ 1077. An unambiguous written contract of joint purchase renders inadmissible evidence as against the vendor as to an oral arrangement and agreement with each of the vendees.—Pettyplace v. Groton Bridge Mfg. Co., 103 Mich. 155.

¶ 1078. Parol evidence is admissible to determine the nature of the contract of irregular indorsers.—Barger v. Farnham, 130 Mich. 487.

¶ 1079. In replevin to recover goods taken possession of under a chattel mortgage, plaintiff is not entitled to show by parol that the notes secured by mortgage were executed simply as a guaranty.—Sheffler v. Sherman, 167 Mich. 42.

¶ 1080. Parol evidence is inadmissible to change the character of a bond, or the relations of its signers as principals and sureties.—Coots v. Farnsworth, 61 Mich. 497.

¶ 1081. Where the owner of logs sent to a sawyer two letters, one offering to sell the logs for a certain sum per 1,000, payments to be made in advance in negotiable paper, the other, dated a day later, offering to buy back the lumber cut from the logs at the price per 1,000 that was paid for them, to pay a specified sum for the sawing, and to take care of the sawyer's paper whether or not the logs were delivered as agreed, and where both offers were accepted in writing, held, that it was competent for the sawyer to show by parol that the transaction was not a purchase and a resale, but a mere security for advances.—Germain v. Central Lumber Co., 116 Mich. 245.

Admissibility of parol evidence to identify corporation with irregular or variant name used in instrument, see also Corporations ¶ 78.

Parol evidence to identify corporation with name comprising initials, see Corporations ¶ 79.

¶ 1082. The rights and liabilities of parties to commercial paper appear on its face: and where there is nothing to show that it was signed by an agent, or for whom the agent acted, parol proof to that effect is inadmissible.—Finan v. Babcock, 58 Mich. 301.

¶ 1083. Parol evidence is admissible to show that the payee of a promissory note who has received the money upon it was trustee simply for another, and that the money so received by him was in that capacity.—Catlin v. Birchard, 13 Mich. 110.

¶ 1084. One who executes a contract of purchase, and gives back a purchase-money mortgage expressly making himself personally liable, and containing no reference to representative capacity, cannot show by parol evidence, to avoid liability for a deficiency on foreclosure of the mortgage, that he was acting, to the knowledge of the mortgagee, as agent of others interested with him, with the intention of conveying to them the property purchased.—Lewis v. Weidenfeld, 114 Mich. 581.

¶ 1085. Parol evidence is admissible, as between the original parties to a note, to show that the maker, who, in signing the note, added "Agt." to his name, executed the note in a representative capacity, and that the payee so understood.—Keidan v. Winegar, 95 Mich. 430.

¶ 1086. In an action in a firm's name by a general agent of the firm, for the amount of a written order for goods, it is admissible to show that the agent, not the firm, is the real party in interest.—Bronson v. Herbert, 95 Mich. 478.

¶ 1087. A lease to B. with S. and C. as sureties cannot, by parol evidence that the lessor knew that the three had formed or were about to form a partnership to carry on business in the leased premises, be so varied in its terms as to permit the firm to sue for a breach.—Burwitz v. Jeffers, 103 Mich. 512.

¶ 1088. Parol evidence is admissible to show whether a corporation or an individual is liable on an accepted order for paving addressed to and guaranteed by the corporation, but signed by the individual without any designation of agency, and containing a marginal provision in which the individual agrees to pay for all material furnished by the party giving the order.—Armstrong v. Andrews, 109 Mich. 537.

¶ 1090. Where a note is unambiguous, being in form that of a corporation, evidence to explain away or modify its terms, so as to render the officer who signed it liable, is inadmissible.—Falk v. Moebs, 127 U. S. 597, 32 L. ed. 266, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1319.

¶ 1091. Where a note is signed "Peninsular Cigar Co. [a corporation], Geo. Moebs, Sec. and Treas.," and is payable to and indorsed by "Geo. Moebs, Sec. and Treas.," the note and indorsement are the corporation's, there is no individual liability on the indorsement, and the indorsement, being unambiguous, cannot be explained by parol.—Falk v. Moebs, 127 U. S. 597, 32 L. ed. 266, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1319.

¶ 1092. Oral evidence is inadmissible to vary a written contract by showing that what purports to be a bank president's individual guaranty was in fact the contract of the bank.—First Nat. Bank of Sturgis v. Bennett, 33 Mich. 520.

¶ 1093. When a chattel mortgage is given by one member of a partnership in his own name, and there is nothing on its face to indicate that it was intended to secure a partnership debt on partnership property, parol evidence is inadmissible to show that it was the partnership mortgage and not that of the person executing it.—Jones v. Phelps, 5 Mich. 218.

¶ 1094. Parol proof that commercial paper was signed by an agent, or for whom the agent acted, is inadmissible where nothing of the kind appears on the face of the paper.—Finan v. Babcock, 58 Mich. 301.

¶ 1095. Where a patent has been issued to one as the person to whom lands were reserved in a treaty with a tribe of Indians, it is competent for another claimant to show that the patentee is not the person intended and that such claimant is.—Stockton v. Williams, W. 120; Stockton v. Williams, 1 D. 546; Campau v. Dewey, 9 Mich. 381.

¶ 1096. The firm of Nelson Morris & Co. of Chicago was discontinued, and its business taken over by plaintiff, Morris & Co., a New Jersey corporation. The new company in using certain printed surety blanks of the old company was accustomed to blot out the word "Nelson." Defendant signed one of the blanks as surety, and upon being sued offered to prove that the word "Nelson" was in his blank when signed, and was afterwards blotted out by plaintiff. Court permitted plaintiff to prove by parol that Morris & Co. was the one intended by the parties, and directed a verdict for plaintiff. Held, the admission of such evidence and the direction were reversible error.—Morris & Co. v. Lucker, 158 Mich. 518.

¶ 1097. Where, in an action against a partnership, fraud in attempting to conceal the name of the real partner and to screen him from liability is charged, evidence of conversations had with either party in interest, before the partnership agreement, which throws light upon the actual nature of the transaction, is admissible; and the rule as to merger of prior negotiations does not apply.—Webb v. Johnson, 95 Mich. 325.

§ 183. Identification of subject or object or debt.

See also ante ¶ 829.

Ambiguities calling for parol, see ante § 165.

Identification of parties, see ante § 182.

¶ 1098. It is always competent to show by any relevant testimony what items enter into a settlement when an item sued for is claimed to be barred by such settlement.—Hicks v. Leaton, 67 Mich. 371.

¶ 1099. A contract of settlement unambiguous and complete in itself, and clearly importing that the parties intend thereby to settle all their differences "of whatever name or nature," cannot, no fraud or mistake being claimed, be varied by parol testimony restricting the matters covered.—Freeman v. Freeman, 68 Mich. 28.

¶ 1100. Parol evidence is not admissible to vary the terms of a separation contract purporting to make a complete division of property between husband and wife by showing that it was not a complete division.—Carpenter v. Carpenter, 154 Mich. 100.

¶ 1101. An assignment of a certificate of enlistment and the City of Detroit bounty "and all other local bounties" to be paid thereon was held not to be conclusive between the parties, but to be open to oral explanation that at the time of enlistment and assigning the amount of the city bounty was paid without intent to pass a later bounty.—Roberts v. Field, 27 Mich. 337.

¶ 1102. Testimony as to what interest was supposed to be conveyed in a sale is proper to identify the subject of the sale if it does not contradict the writings.—Harrison v. Ingersoll, 56 Mich. 36.

¶ 1103. Parol evidence may be resorted to for the purpose of identifying the subject-matter of a contract, but it must not contradict or vary the plain terms of the writing.—Lawrence v. Comstock, 124 Mich. 120.

¶ 1104. An unambiguous description of logs in a chattel mortgage cannot be extended by the parol testimony of the mortgagor or mortgagee, in a contest with third persons, so as to cover logs not mentioned in such description.—Whitney v. Hall, 82 Mich. 580.

¶ 1106. Parol testimony is not admissible to show that certain lumber cut to required lengths, in a dry kiln in the basement of a building and designed for the completion thereof, was not included in a chattel mortgage on "all lumber" or building material in or about such building, and did not pass by an assignment by the mortgagor of all her interest and title to all of the lumber mentioned and an assignment by the owner of his equity in said lumber.—Lawrence v. Comstock, 124 Mich. 120.

¶ 1107. It is competent to show by parol that a mortgage given to secure the payment of a specified sum of money was in fact given to protect the mortgagee as a surety for the mortgagor upon a promissory note for the same sum, and made at the same time the mortgage was given. The effect of such proof is not to contradict or vary the mortgage, but to identify the demand to which it refers.—Kimball v. Myers, 21 Mich. 276.

¶ 1108. Where a contract for the sale of carriage axles provides that specifications are to be furnished, and that the axles shall be, interchangeable with samples sent, but does not describe the axles, evidence of the conversation between the parties at the time of the execution of the contract is admissible for the purpose of ascertaining their intention.—Liggett Spring & Axle Co. v. Michigan Buggy Co., 106 Mich. 445.

§ 184. Situs and boundaries of land.

Best evidence of identity and location of described lands, see ante § 105.

Parol evidence in aid of writing in locating boundary, see also Boundaries § 17.

Admissibility of declarations as to boundary over objection that document is varied by parol, see also Boundaries ¶ 98.

Evidence relevant or sufficient to establish boundaries, see Boundaries.

Construction and effect of descriptions, calls, courses and distances, see Deeds, III; Boundaries.

¶ 1109. In ejectment, parol evidence may be resorted to to aid the court in applying the deed to its proper subject-matter, where there is ambiguity.—Tuthill v. Katz, 163 Mich. 618.

¶ 1110. The title to property claimed under a recorded plat cannot be unsettled by the testimony of a surveyor who had scaled the plat that the scale was incorrect.—Twogood v. Hoyt, 42 Mich. 609.

¶ 1111. Where lots have been conveyed by reference to a plat which states that they are of a certain width, the testimony of the surveyor who originally scaled the plat is inadmissible to show that some of the lots are of less width on the plat.—Twogood v. Hoyt, 42 Mich. 609.

¶ 1112. Where the boundary of the land was described by course and distance terminating at a post, and neither any mark indicating such boundary, nor any post indicating its termination, can be found on the land, and no evidence was introduced showing where the post was originally placed, parol evidence that a line found marked upon trees variant from the call in the patent was the actual line surveyed, run and marked as such boundary by the government surveyor, is inadmissible.—Bruckner's Lessee v. Lawrence, 1 D. 19.

¶ 1114. Parol evidence of the circumstances surrounding the giving of a deed, and collateral facts, may be received to show which of the two sections coming within the terms of a grant was intended by the grantor.—Ives v. Kimball, 1 Mich. 308.

¶ 1115. Land was described as the east half of the northwest quarter of section twenty-one, in the township of Logan, being township twenty-six south of range three. There was no township twenty-six south in Logan, and there were two sections twenty-one—one in township six south, and the other in township seven south. It was held that parol evidence might be received to show on which of these two sections land was intended to be conveyed by the deed.—Ives v. Kimball, 1 Mich. 308.

¶ 1116. Where a mortgage describes the land as all of block B., parol testimony of the understanding of the parties as to what was to be included is inadmissible; e. g., it cannot be shown that the mortgagor pointed out to the mortgagee the boundaries of the lands to be included, and informed him that certain lands were not to be included in the mortgage.—Thompson v. Smith, 96 Mich. 258.

¶ 1117. A description of land contained in a contract for commissions between the owner and a real estate dealer may be shown by said dealer to be erroneous, and the land in question may be identified by parol evidence in a suit for damages brought by said dealer for the owner's refusal to accept a buyer secured by said dealer, where the description employed is an improbable one, indicating a probable mistake.—Brittson v. Smith, 165 Mich. 222.

§ 185. Obligation and condition of mortgage.

Parol to identify from among several the particular debt secured, see also ante ¶ 1107.

Admissibility of the notes to show amount secured by chattel mortgage, see Chattel Mortgages § 22.

¶ 1118. In defense to a bill to foreclose a mortgage of lands purporting to secure a sum of money, the mortgage cannot be shown by parol to have been given to secure, not the payment of money, but the performance of a parol agreement for the payment of certain debts of the mortgagee and to aid in his support.—Adair v. Adair, 5 Mich. 204.

¶ 1118a. Where a bill is filed to foreclose a mortgage conditioned for the payment of a certain sum of money, it is competent to show in defense, by parol evidence, that the mortgage was given to indemnify sureties in a recognizance of bail, and that the liability of the sureties had been discharged without their being damnified.—Colman v. Post, 10 Mich. 422.

¶ 1119. The recital in a bond of defeasance that the obligor will reconvey such interest as he has now acquired cannot be contradicted by parol.—Jeffery v. Hursh, 58 Mich. 246.

¶ 1120. Where a mortgage was given to secure a debt that was payable in Canada, and the parties made an agreement in writing whereby the debt was made payable in fixed sums in American currency, it could not be shown in defense to a demand for payment according to the terms of the agreement that there was a parol understanding that the debtor was to have the benefit of any future decline in gold.—Oliver v. Shoemaker, 35 Mich. 464.

¶ 1121. A chattel mortgage stating no time of payment, in legal contemplation is due at once, and hence cannot be orally shown to be due at a later time.—Bearss v. Preston, 66 Mich. 11.

¶ 1122. In a suit to foreclose a mortgage executed by defendant and his wife to complainant and expressed as being for security of a note bearing even date executed by defendant to complainant, it may be shown by parol that the note was really executed to a third person, and that complainant took the mortgage to secure his indorsement of it.—Cutler v. Steele, 93 Mich. 204.

¶ 1123. An understanding of the parties that a chattel mortgage was to be security for the amount named as the consideration will not control a plain intent that it should also secure future advances. Citizens' Sav. Bank v. Kock, 117 Mich. 225.

¶ 1124. Though a mortgage, on its face, is for the payment of a specific sum of money to an individual, to wit, a sum evidenced by a promissory note to the mortgagee, parol evidence is admissible to show that it was really intended to secure a debt for merchandise and advances to be made from time to time by a firm of which the mortgagee was a member, and that payments by the mortgagor were to be credited on his general indebtedness, and not on the mortgage note.—Johnson v. Bratton, 112 Mich. 319.

¶ 1125. One of four mortgages for equal sums given by the four children respectively to their widowed mother in return for the conveyance of all her interest in the estate of the deceased father and husband cannot be varied by parol evidence to show that it was agreed that each mortgagee should pay equally whatever demands for money their mother should make.—Holmes v. Holmes, 129 Mich. 412.

To raise quitclaim to warranty deed or the reverse, see ante § 181.

To show patent rights transferred by writing, see also ante ¶ 945.

¶ 1126. The terms of a deed must be given their legal effect, which the parties or their privies cannot contradict by parol evidence in any collateral matter. This applies to the grantee's name, which is part of the deed, and to the interest conveyed, which, in a deed to several persons, is the same to each if not otherwise designated.—Jacobs v. Miller, 50 Mich. 119.

¶ 1127. Where a conveyance is to two persons without stating their respective interests, their true interests may, as between themselves, be shown.—Harrison v. Ingersoll, 56 Mich. 36.

¶ 1128. Where a conveyance or deed to two or more persons does not state the interest of each, the presumption that their estates are to be equal may be overcome by parol evidence.—Hill v. Reiner, 167 Mich. 400.

¶ 1130. The estate conveyed by a deed describing the grantees as husband and wife cannot be shown by oral evidence to be an estate in common.—Jacobs v. Miller, 50 Mich. 119.

¶ 1131. One who claims by deed from a survivor of two grantees in a deed may show by parol that the grantees are husband and wife, though the deed to them does not so state.—Dowling v. Salliotte, 83 Mich. 131.

¶ 1131b. That a man and woman named in a deed as grantees, were in fact husband and wife may be shown by parol in order to establish an estate by the entirety.—Hawley v. Dibble, 184 Mich. 298.

¶ 1132. Parol evidence is inadmissible to vary or contradict the unambiguous terms of a written lease of a cellar by showing that a "consent" to use of adjoining sidewalk space was part of the lease rather than a mere license incident to it.—Brown v. Schiappacasse, 115 Mich. 47.

¶ 1133. Declarations by the lessor that the lands should belong to sons of the life tenant after the latter's death, have no effect to change the unambiguous terms of the life lease, since such declarations would mean only that he intended to convey, by will or otherwise, the remainder to them.—Hamilton v. Wickson, 131 Mich. 71.

§ 187. Writings and written provisions within the rule.

Applications of the rules to contracts in general, see ante §§ 155-186.
Application of rule to sealed agreements, see also ante ¶ 793.
Admissibility of parol evidence that sealed instrument or note had no actual consideration, see ante § 163.
Contemporaneous independent and collateral agreements, see post §§ 201-203.
Written contract carried into new agreement by parol, see post § 203.
Subsequent parol agreement modifying or changing written one, see post § 204.
Orders and bills of sale not amounting to complete contracts, see post § 188.
Letters and noncontractual writings passing between parties, see post § 189.
Receipts for payment and receipts embodying contracts, see post §§ 190, 191.
Bills of lading and shipping papers, see post § 192.
Wills and codicils, see post § 193.
Legislative and judicial records and instruments, see post §§ 194-198.
Entries on books of account, see also post ¶ 2036.
Parol proof of contract of carriage where tickets were subsequently issued, see ante ¶ 648.
Limits of admissibility where contract is partly in writing, see also ante § 169.
Parol evidence to explain plats, see also Dedication ¶ 93.

¶ 1134. Until a written contract becomes complete by the signatures of both parties agreeing to the same thing no one is bound, and the negotiations are open to proof.—Aldine Press v. Estes, 75 Mich. 100.

¶ 1135. Business correspondence from which the terms of a contract are gathered is the best evidence as to any guaranty implied therein, and if such guaranty is implied parol evidence denying it is inadmissible.—Philadelphia Whiting Co. v. Detroit White Lead Works, 58 Mich. 29.

¶ 1136. Where a vendor of a chattel takes a non-negotiable note for the purchase price in which he reserves the right to retake the chattel on default and retain what has been paid, or collect the note, his assignment of the note by delivery and indorsement does not of itself assign this right, and in an action brought against him on the note by the indorsee he can show all the facts connected with the indorsement to fix and determine its character and extent, whether absolute or merely for collection.—Lamb v. Story, 45 Mich. 488.

See also ante ¶ 647.
Parol to add warranty to sale by written offer and oral acceptance, see ante ¶ 1044.

¶ 1137. The rule against parol evidence to modify written agreements does not apply to a mere order, withdrawn before acceptance, and accompanied by oral agreements varying from its terms.—Weiden v. Woodruff, 38 Mich. 130.

¶ 1138. A simple bill of sale does not embody the preliminaries nor the essential terms of a contract in such a way as to exclude parol evidence. It is designed merely to show the transfer of title.—Picard v. McCormick, 11 Mich. 68.

¶ 1139. A written order for a windmill, containing certain stipulations, was given upon the strength of representations made by the agent of the manufacturers and contained in a printed circular. Held, in an action for the price of the mill, that the order did not constitute such a contract as would exclude evidence of these oral and printed representations, and not only were these admissible in evidence, but also the representations and declarations of the plaintiffs' agents when afterwards sent to remedy defects in the mill.—Phelps v. Whitaker, 37 Mich. 72.

¶ 1140. A written order for the insertion in a designated paper, published by the person to whom the order is given, of an advertisement for a given time, at a stated price, which the person ordering agrees to pay at a specified date, contains all the indicia of a contract, except that it is not executed by both parties, and parol evidence of a contemporaneous agreement that, if the advertisement did not suit, it could be discontinued at any time, is inadmissible to vary the terms of the order.—Cohen v. Jackoboice, 101 Mich. 409.

¶ 1141. A proposal to furnish all of the scrap iron "which we may receive for the period of 60 days" at designated prices signed by the offerer and accepted by the offeree constitutes a complete contract and cannot be varied by evidence that the real contract was oral or testimony limiting the quantity of iron to the amount furnished during the preceding 60 days.—Helper v. MacKinnon Mfg. Co., 138 Mich. 593.

Letters amounting collectively to contract, see ante § 187.

¶ 1142. A firm of attorneys, suing for their fees, sought to prove a contract for their services by correspondence, and showed that defendant or his attorney had authorized them to see what could be done in effecting a compromise with creditors and to notify him by letter; that they had written to him accordingly, and had received a reply. Held, that defendant could not show that he was influenced to write the reply by some undisclosed purpose, or that expressions in it were used in a foreign or hidden sense, or that it was meant to convey any other meaning than that to be naturally ascribed to it by the recipients under the circumstances.—Trowbridge v. Dean, 40 Mich. 687.

¶ 1143. A written communication from one establishment of a firm to another, requesting the latter to carry out certain directions, which in fact embodied the substance of an arrangement made by the writers with a third party for chartering his vessel, cannot be considered such a written agreement as will exclude parol evidence of additional oral stipulations not contained in it, in an action upon the agreement for the charter.—Loud v. Campbell, 26 Mich. 239.

Receipts embodying contract, see post § 191.

Shipping receipts and bills of lading, see post § 192.

Receipts as admissions against interest, see post § 380.

¶ 1144. A mere receipt is not conclusive, but may be explained by oral evidence.—Rowe v. Wright, 12 Mich. 289; Roberts v. Field, 27 Mich. 337; Hart v. Gould, 62 Mich. 262; and see Lawrence v. Griswold, 30 Mich. 410.

¶ 1145. Passing receipts in full does not conclude the parties from disputing a pretended settlement.—Vyne v. Glenn, 41 Mich. 112.

¶ 1147. A receipt is always subject to parol explanation.—People v. West, 146 Mich. 537.

¶ 1148. The circumstances attending the execution of a receipt in full of all demands may be given in evidence to show that by mistake it was made to express more than was intended, and that the creditor had in fact claims that were not included.—Fire Ins. Assoc. v. Wickham, 141 U. S. 564, 35 L. ed. 860, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 84.

¶ 1149. While a receipt, unexplained, may be evidence of the amount received, it is mere evidence and can be contradicted or explained by parol testimony.—Title Guaranty & Surety Co. v. Aetna Indemnity Co., 167 Mich. 535.

¶ 1150. A receipt by a ward for property held by his guardian is no more conclusive than any other receipt.—Powell v. Powell, 52 Mich. 432.

¶ 1151. A receipt or acknowledgment of payment is not conclusive so as to shut out evidence of a protest under which it was given.—McAllister v. Engle, 52 Mich. 56.

¶ 1152. In an action by a borrower to recover from a loan agent the amount of commissions which the latter had withheld on delivering the money, the plaintiff is entitled to show how defendant obtained the receipt which he gave for the money, and that he gave it under protest.—McAllister v. Engle, 52 Mich. 56.

¶ 1153. Pending divorce proceedings it was agreed that, in case an absolute decree were granted, the husband should pay the wife a certain sum as permanent alimony, and after the decree she signed a receipt for such sum as in full satisfaction of all claims "whatsoever" against him. Held, that in an action by her upon a certain demand against him she had a right to explain the receipt, and to show that she did not understand she was receipting for anything but her alimony. —Letts v. Letts, 73 Mich. 138.

¶ 1154. A receipt for a payment made recited "as per B. L., to be furnished by me." Held, that it was competent to show that this conclusion was added after the receipt was signed, and that no agreement was made to furnish a bill of lading.—Cullen v. Detroit Tug & Wrecking Co., 99 Mich. 23.

¶ 1155. In a suit upon a promissory note bearing date May 31, 1894, parol evidence was admissible to show the understanding upon which an indorsement was made June 28th, reciting the receipt of money "to be indorsed on interest from January 1, 1894, until June 1, as far as interest calls."—Rawlings v. Fisher, 110 Mich. 19.

¶ 1156. In a suit for the purchase price of a printing press, the plaintiff vendor testified that the contract of sale was unconditional while the vendee testified that he was to keep the press only if it proved satisfactory. The press was installed in defendant's plant, and at the request of plaintiff for payment defendant paid seventy-five dollars of the five hundred dollars purchase price and took a receipt, which plaintiff signed and which stated that the seventy-five dollars was to apply on the purchase price provided the press proved satisfactory. Plaintiff testified that he signed the receipt hurriedly without noting its contents. Held, plaintiff might introduce evidence to contradict said receipt and show that the sale was unconditional.—Paddock v. Hatch, 169 Mich. 95.

Shipping papers and bills of lading, see post § 192.

¶ 1157. When a receipt also embodies a contract, parol evidence is inadmissible to vary or contradict it.—Fire Ins. Assoc. v. Wickham, 141 U. S. 564, 35 L. ed. 860, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 84.

¶ 1158. A mere receipt for part payment of the purchase price of land orally sold, stating such price, describing the land, and adding "the balance to be paid in fifteen days from date, provided the title is proved good and on the delivery of good and sufficient warranty deed, possession of said premises this day surrendered" to the vendee, is not a written agreement of sale excluding oral proof of the bargain, and it may be shown that the vendee agreed that a mortgage on the premises should be paid out of the purchase money.—Bailey v. Cornell, 66 Mich. 107.

¶ 1159. Logs in the possession of a boom company were sold so that title vested in the vendee, who subsequently obtained from the vendor a paper in the form of a receipted bill of parcels, reciting payment, guaranteeing title, and directing the boom company to deliver up the logs. Held, that without a new consideration the paper could have no independent force, but must be considered as intended merely to aid the vendee in obtaining the logs; and that parol evidence was admissible to show that there was no new consideration or agreement.—Bell v. Utley, 17 Mich. 508.

¶ 1160. Mutual receipts evincive of a complete settlement between the parties signing them are within the rule excluding parol evidence to show that items covered by their language were not to be included. —Pratt v. Castle, 91 Mich. 484.

§ 192. Bills of lading and shipping receipts.

Evidence to explain abbreviation "B. L. attached to draft," see ante § 173.

Evidence to explain bill of lading, see also Bills of Lading ¶ 3.

¶ 1161. A bill of lading, so far as it is an undertaking to transport and deliver the goods as therein stipulated, cannot, in the absence of fraud or mistake, be varied or altered in its terms by parol, where it forms the basis or subject-matter of an action between the parties.—Gibbons v. Robinson, 63 Mich. 146.

¶ 1162. Although a bill of lading specifies the amount of property received, it is, like other receipts, open to explanation, and the carrier is at liberty to show that the actual amount which came to his hands is different from that stated.—Strong v. Grand Trunk R. Co., 15 Mich. 206.

¶ 1163. A bill of lading in writing, in so far as it is a contract of shipment and not a mere receipt for the goods, cannot be varied by prior or contemporaneous oral agreements between the parties.—Sturges v. Detroit, G. H. & M. Ry. Co., 166 Mich. 231.

¶ 1164. Where a bill of lading is, as to any element of the contract, ambiguous, parol evidence is admissible to show what the agreement was in that respect.—Sturges v. Detroit, G. H. & M. Ry. Co., 166 Mich. 231.

¶ 1165. Where a bill of lading is on its face ambiguous, it is competent to receive evidence of the circumstances surrounding the making of the contract, including the position of the parties and the things said and done by them.—Sturges v. Detroit, G. H. & M. Ry. Co., 166 Mich. 231.

¶ 1166. In the absence of fraud, the printed matter in an express receipt governs and cannot be varied by a parol agreement. —Sloman v. National Exp. Co., 134 Mich. 16.

§ 193. Wills and codicils.

Necessity that will be in writing, see Wills, IV, A.

Admissibility of parol evidence extraneous to will in interpretation of same, see Wills, VI, A.

§ 194. Private corporation's or association's records and papers.

Applicability of best evidence rule to corporate transactions, see ante § 125.

Resort to minutes of illegal corporate meeting in construction of minutes of later meeting, see Corporations ¶ 677.

¶ 1167. The rule excluding oral evidence to affect a written contract does not apply to a corporate resolution appointing an officer, so as to exclude evidence to show the actual establishment of contract relations under it.—Kalamazoo Novelty Mfg. Works v. Macalister, 40 Mich. 84.

§ 195. Legislative and official records and writings.

Official certificates, records and writings as documentary evidence, see post, VIII, C.

Verity imputed to public records, see Records.

Going behind statute rolls to interpret or invalidate acts, see Statutes, I, V.

Conclusiveness of legislative journals against parol evidence, see Statutes, I.

¶ 1168. Parol evidence is inadmissible to contradict a record, but may be introduced to show facts not in the record; and the rights of creditors or third persons cannot be prejudiced by the neglect of an official clerk to do his duty in properly recording actual proceedings.—Taymouth Township v. Koehler, 35 Mich. 22.

¶ 1170. The township record of a tax levy cannot be contradicted by parol.—Michigan Land & Iron Co., Ltd. v. Township of Republic, 65 Mich. 628.

¶ 1171. Where the record of an annual school district meeting is manifestly incomplete and is not signed, it is competent to show in aid thereof that the meeting was adjourned to a particular day.—Buckeye Township School Dist. No. 2 v. Clark, 90 Mich. 435.

¶ 1172. In an action by a school-teacher on a contract purporting to be signed by two members of the board, the record of the meeting of the board, kept by the director, cannot be contradicted by parol proof.—Cowley v. School District No. 3, 130 Mich. 634.

¶ 1173. Where the law requires the municipal action of a city council to be recorded, such records are the only lawful evidence of the action, and cannot be contradicted or supplemented by parol testimony.—Stevenson v. Bay City, 26 Mich. 44.

¶ 1174. While parol evidence is not admissible to contradict the record of the proceedings of the common council, it is admissible to show facts omitted from such record; since the failure of the clerk to properly enter such proceedings cannot affect the rights of individuals who have acted upon the faith of the action of the council, in fact duly taken, but not recorded.—Wheat v. Van Tine, 149 Mich. 314.

¶ 1175. Where a municipal board is required by statute to keep a record of its proceedings, parol evidence of an oral order given by the board to a city officer is inadmissible.—Davis v. City of Jackson, 61 Mich. 530.

¶ 1176. An oral proposition was made to a common council and acted on. Held, that its recital in the council records would not preclude oral testimony as to what it really was, nor of subsequent conversations in regard to it between the man who made it and members of the council.—Long v. City of Battle Creek, 39 Mich. 323.

¶ 1177. The rule that the records of a municipality are not impeachable by parol does not prevent proof that there was a purpose of using public money for private purposes when raised by a bond issue, though the record showed a regular proceeding to issue the bonds; since the fact to be proved to wit, the purpose, is not one required to be of record, the rule does not apply.—Bates v. City of Hastings, 145 Mich. 574.

¶ 1178. Parol evidence is admissible by way of explanation to show that certain bills, approved by a village council with full knowledge of their contents, included the expense of a certain street improvement for the making of which no record authority appears, since what the council could authorize it could ratify, and the allowance of such bills was a sufficient ratification.—Wheat v. Van Tine, 149 Mich. 314.

¶ 1180. The intention of the voter must be ascertained from the ballot; and if that fails to express the intention, extraneous evidence cannot be allowed to explain it.—People ex rel. Attorney General v. Tisdale, 1 D. 59; People ex rel. Lake v. Higgins, 3 Mich. 233; People ex rel. Williams v. Cicott, 16 Mich. 283; People ex rel. Keeler v. Robertson, 27 Mich. 116, 129; People ex rel. Tobey v. McNeal, 63 Mich. 294.

¶ 1181. Parol evidence is admissible to show what a ballot was as cast, but not to show a different intent than it expresses: so held where a slip containing the name of one candidate and pasted over another name was unintentionally detached by the inspectors in counting the vote.—People ex rel. Tobey v. McNeal, 63 Mich. 294.

¶ 1182. The board of supervisors acted on a local option petition and submitted the issue to the people at an election. The record of the proceedings of the board was fair on its face, but parol testimony was at hand to show that the clerk did not, as required by section 2502, 1 Comp. Laws 1897, sign the record before final adjournment of the board, but signed it in a subsequent term of office. Held, this parol testimony was not admissible to contradict the record so as to invalidate the election.—Derosia v. Loree, 158 Mich. 64.

¶ 1183. It is admissible in rebuttal of fraud to show by parol that title was not in a certain person as appeared from the deed records because the deed, recorded later than its date, had really passed direct from a vendor to the purchaser's grantee in pursuance of a resale made by the purchaser and an agreed substitution of the name of the second purchaser for that of the first purchaser as the grantee.—Musselman Grocer Co. v. Casler, 138 Mich. 24.

§ 198. Judgments and judicial records and writings.

Verity imputed to judgments, see Judgments, VII; Former Adjudication.

Verity imputable to returns to writs, see Judgments, VII; Process, II; Attachment § 75; Executions, IX.

Evidence to show what matters were decided or involved in a former adjudication, see Former Adjudication, VII.

Impeachment of judgments collaterally by evidence to disprove or contradict jurisdiction, see also Judgments, VII; Foreign Judgments.

To show that judgment assignor, not judgment assignee was real person entitled to proceeds, see ante ¶ 1070.

As to mistake in report of executor's sale, see also ante ¶ 815.

Conclusiveness of guardianship letters against contradiction by parol, see Guardianship, II.

¶ 1184. Under court rules requiring the clerk to indorse on every paper filed the date of the filing, such filing mark becomes a part of the record of the court and cannot be contradicted by parol.—Sweet v. Gibson, 123 Mich. 699.

B. AS TO STRANGERS OR WHEN ISSUES ARE COLLATERAL.

§ 199. As to strangers to the writing.

Best evidence rule where contract is collaterally in question, see also ante § 127.

¶ 1185. A stranger to an instrument is not estopped from contradicting it by parol testimony, even of a party thereto, in order to prevent a fraudulent operation of it upon his interests.—Highstone v. Burdette, 61 Mich. 54.

¶ 1186. Where a father made an oral agreement with his son-in-law for his support, and afterwards his son made a written contract with the son-in-law for such support, in the absence of his father, which contract the father claims not to have authorized, and that it was not in accordance with the terms of the oral agreement, the father, in a suit with a third person involving the validity of the written contract and its binding effect upon the father, may show what the agreement was as he made it, and that it has not been fulfilled by the son-in-law.—Doyle v. Dobson, 74 Mich. 562.

¶ 1187. In an action by the owner of property against a broker, who had sold property under a contract wherein it was agreed that the property should not be sold for less than $35,000, on the issue of consideration of a sale made by the broker, evidence of the value of certain property taken in part exchange was admissible even though there were recitals in the deed that the consideration amounted to $35,000, such recital not being conclusive as between the owner and broker.—Yore v. Meshew, 146 Mich. 80.

¶ 1188. Evidence tending to show that the sale of a saloon was bona fide and not the creation of an agency, is admissible in an action against a saloon keeper and his bondsmen for an unlawful sale made by the ostensible buyer, where it is claimed that the saloon was sold and the power of attorney given to the buyer to facilitate conducting the business under the seller's license; though such evidence tends to contradict the power of attorney.—Hilliker v. Farr, 149 Mich. 444.

[Note. In numerous cases objection that evidence was obnoxious to the rule against parol was avoided by the fact that the evidence did not tend to affect the contents of the writing or its legal effect, but tended to prove some external facts, like execution or consideration, or some collateral facts supplementary of or destructive of the writing. See generally ante §§ 156-186.]

Parol proof of surrounding circumstances when offered for other purposes than to explain or construe language of the writing, see ante §§ 159-163.

To show relative interests and estates of co-parties, see ante § 185.

Relation of parties to commercial paper among themselves, see post § 201.

Parol evidence of other contracts between parties, see post § 202.

Right to retake chattel and collateral assignment of note for price, see also ante ¶ 1136.

Showing want of consideration to rebut plaintiff's claim of ownership under deed, see ante ¶ 398a.

¶ 1189. In an action for breach of the covenant of seizin, in a warranty deed, evidence is admissible to show that grantor's attention was called to the fact that certain fences did not seem to be on the line, and that he represented that as soon as the grain was cut, he would have them moved onto the line, since, though this occurred before the deed was executed, it does not tend to dispute the deed.—Dubay v. Kelly, 137 Mich. 345.

¶ 1190. In a suit for commissions for effecting an agreement for an exchange of real estate, plaintiff introduced in evidence the written contract of sale between defendant and the buyer. Defendant did not claim that said written agreement was not a completed instrument and duly delivered. Held, it was error to permit defendant to state the meaning and effect of said agreement for the purpose of showing that the minds of the parties had not met.—Crane v. Ross, 168 Mich. 623.

As to adverse party in interest claiming under the paper, see ante §§ 174, 175.

To show true character of instrument or signature thereon, see ante §§ 181, 182.

¶ 1191. The relations and liabilities of the parties to accommodation paper may be shown by parol evidence, and it may be shown that a person who is apparently liable only secondarily on the instrument is in fact the principal debtor.—Lamberson v. Love, 165 Mich. 460.

¶ 1192. Although the legal effect of successive indorsements upon a note is to make the indorsers liable to each other in the order of time in which they sign their names, parol evidence is admissible to show that all the indorsers were accommodation indorsers, and were, by agreement among themselves, cosureties, and so liable to contribution.—Farwell v. Ensign, 66 Mich. 600.

¶ 1193. Successive indorsers of a note payable to a corporation of which they were members may be shown by parol agreement between themselves to have been cosureties.—Farwell v. Ensign, 66 Mich. 600.

¶ 1194. In an action upon a note plaintiff may show why earlier notes—out of which the one in suit arose—for the alleged balance due him from defendant were, for purposes of discount, made nominally by plaintiff to defendant's order. As between each other it was competent to show who was principal and who surety.—Eastman v. Cleaver, 72 Mich. 167.

¶ 1195. In an action by the payee upon a promissory note parol evidence is admissible to show that the defendant, who indorsed the note before delivery, was, as between the maker and himself, a surety, and that the payee had knowledge of the fact.—Hitchcock v. Frackelton, 116 Mich. 487.

¶ 1196. Where a person's signature appears on a note with that of the maker he may show by parol proof that he did not sign as comaker but as surety when suit is brought thereon by the payee.—Clare County Sav. Bank v. Featherly, 173 Mich. 292.

¶ 1198. Where suit is brought by the payee against the makers and surety of a note to recover thereon, evidence to the effect that the payee agreed to keep insured certain goods covered by a chattel mortgage held by him as security for the note in consideration of the surety's signature, is admissible as establishing a parol collateral agreement.—Clare County Sav. Bank v. Featherly, 173 Mich. 292.

§ 202. Other contracts or writings between the parties.

Parol evidence of matters collateral to the contract, see ante §§ 200, 201.

Prior agreements tending to prove authority or power to contract, see also Contracts ¶ 1259.

¶ 1199. Parties to contracts may come to an independent agreement upon details as to the execution thereof at the time of contracting as well as afterwards.—Gillett v. Bowman, 43 Mich. 477.

¶ 1200. A written contract does not preclude proof of any distinct parol agreement made at the same time that does not vary the written contract, and is not inconsistent with it.—Blackwood v. Brown, 34 Mich. 4.

Electrical Appliance Co. v. Standard Elec. Co., 151 Mich. 662.

¶ 1202. Where a vendee has orally assumed certain obligations relating to property, not included in his deed or bill of sale, they may be shown orally in a suit based in part upon these obligations and in part upon obligations set forth in the deed. The rule excluding parol evidence modifying a written instrument does not apply in such a case.—Trevidick v. Mumford, 31 Mich. 467.

¶ 1203. A verbal agreement was made, in performance of which a written contract was assigned in writing. The contract and assignment were put in evidence, but did not purport to set up the agreement. Held, not to be a case for the exclusion of parol evidence as to what the agreement was.—Richards v. Fuller, 37 Mich. 161.

¶ 1204. Where the consideration both for land and for timber previously cut therefrom was that expressed in a deed of the land, which deed made no reference to the timber, testimony of a parol agreement between the parties as to the timber is admissible, as the latter, being personalty, did not pass by the deed.—Fitzpatrick v. Hoffman, 104 Mich. 228.

¶ 1205. Evidence that at the time of the execution of a contract for the cutting of the timber upon certain lands the owners of the land said one of them would look after the business for both, is not open to the objection that it tends to vary the written contract by parol testimony.—Saxton v. Pells, 98 Mich. 340.

¶ 1206. A stipulation discontinuing a pending suit "without costs to either party," but not purporting to embody the terms of the settlement between the parties, does not preclude the introduction of parol evidence to show that, as a condition to the discontinuance, one of the parties was to pay the counsel fees of the other.—Patek v. Waples, 114 Mich. 669.

¶ 1208. Verbal testimony of the contents of a lost letter of countermand to the effect that goods in question were not to have been shipped later than one week after the order was given, was not subject to objection on the ground that the order on which suit was brought, was a written one, expressing no time for shipment and not subject to countermand.—Conkling v. Nicholas, 133 Mich. 651.

¶ 1209. One Warren was indebted to plaintiff. He gave to plaintiff a notice to his employer, the defendant, to pay his wages to plaintiff "until further notice." Later Warren served defendant with notice to pay his wages to plaintiff no longer. Plaintiff then served notice upon defendant that Warren had at the time of giving the first notice orally agreed to assign all his future wages to plaintiff until plaintiff's entire claim against Warren was paid. Defendant, after Warren's second notice, paid the wages to Warren. Held, it was error for the court to refuse plaintiff permission to show by oral evidence the terms of Warren's agreement of assignment on objection that it varied the original order.—Weinberg v. Stratton, 163 Mich. 408. (Stone and Blair, JJ., dissenting.)

¶ 1211. An oral contract made on an oral understanding that it shall conform to the terms of a written paper does not differ from any other oral contract, and may be shown to agree with or differ from the writing according to the facts.—Arbuckle v. Smith, 74 Mich. 568.

¶ 1212. Where one who has taken a written lease for five years of a hotel and of certain rooms in the basement subsequently agrees orally with his lessor to fit up another room in the basement in consideration of being allowed to occupy it until his written lease expires, and does so fit it up, he may, in summary proceedings taken by the lessor on the ground that such parol agreement is void, testify, as bearing upon said agreement, to conversation between the lessor and himself in regard to such room prior to the execution of the written lease.—Brant v. Vincent, 100 Mich. 426.

C. AS TO SUBSEQUENT FACTS AND TRANSACTIONS.

§ 204. In general; subsequent acts and modifications.

Parol to prove oral contracts agreed to have same terms as written one, see ante § 203.

Subsequent parol modification of discharge of written contract, see Contracts § 264.
Merger and extinction of earlier agreements and understandings in written agreement, see Contracts § 265.
General rule as to modification of contracts in writing by subsequent oral agreement, see Contracts, VIII; Frauds, Statute of; Releases.

¶ 1213. The admission of evidence of a parol arrangement of a character not required to be in writing is not objectionable on the ground that it varies a prior written contract on the same subject; the written contract and the subsequent oral contract may both be valid so far as they are not inconsistent, and so far as they are inconsistent the one latest in time will control.—Seaman v. O'Hara, 29 Mich. 66.

¶ 1214. Evidence of a later parol agreement altering disposition of articles sold by written contract, held admissible.—Summers v. Wagner, 87 Mich. 272.

¶ 1215. Where a written lease provides for the division of grain grown upon shares by a certain method, which is not followed, it is competent for the tenant to show, in a suit to recover an alleged excess of grain received by the landlord, that the landlord assented to the division as made.—Freese v. Arnold, 99 Mich. 13.

¶ 1216. Where the question was whether the writing sued upon was a binding contract or was conditioned in part on the closing of a collateral contract, evidence relating to subsequent negotiations between the collateral parties was properly admitted to aid in determining such question.—Ortmann v. Fletcher, 117 Mich. 501.

¶ 1217. Where under an arrangement between the heirs of a deceased mother, who held a chattel mortgage on the stock of goods of one of her sons as security for her indorsements of his notes, which are held by another son, who has been appointed special administrator of her estate, the goods are turned over to the administrator, and the mortgagor assumes the care of his aged father, and the administrator agrees with the owner of the store in which the business was being carried on to pay the balance due for rent, plaintiff may, in an action upon said agreement, testify to statements made to him by the mortgagor relative to the family understanding, which were afterwards confirmed in detail by defendant in a conversation with plaintiff, such testimony being competent as tending to show the release of the original debtor from liability for the rent.—Grieb v. Comstock, 99 Mich. 520.

¶ 1219. An oral agreement by the mortgagor and a trustee and preferred creditor under a trust mortgage, with another trustee that if the latter would accept the trust, the bank of which he was president should share equally with the preferred creditor, is not void as varying a written instrument where it was made after the preferred creditor had accepted the trust.—Wolff v. Alpena Nat. Bank, 131 Mich. 634.

¶ 1220. Under a contract for the delivery of fruit, it was competent to prove that, after the contract was entered into, the method of shipment was altered by verbal agreement.—Town v. Jepson, 133 Mich. 673.

¶ 1221. Where a mortgage on a stock of goods provided that the mortgagor should keep the interest of the mortgagee in the goods insured against loss by fire and that in default, within a specified time, it would be lawful for the mortgagee to effect such insurance and the premium paid should be a lien added to the amount secured, held that an oral contract for the taking out of a policy of insurance to protect the mortgagor's interest, as well as that of the mortgagee, was not void as changing the terms of the mortgage by oral testimony.—Seaman v. Rindge, Kalmbach, Logie & Co., 195 Mich. 417.

¶ 1222. Plaintiff sold goods for a period of years to defendant. In making shipments the invoices of the plaintiff stated that no discounts were allowed other than those specified therein. Defendant's clerk testified that he called up the plaintiff by telephone and asked why the prices in the invoices were higher than those made, including discounts, by one Berger, plaintiff's salesman, and that the plaintiff told him to go ahead and arrange it with Berger, and that would be all right. Held, such parol evidence was not open to the objection that it modified the terms of a written contract.—Marx v. King, 162 Mich. 258.

¶ 1223. In a proceeding to cancel a deed on failure of grantees to comply with a written agreement, which was the consideration of the deed, to support grantors and to make certain payments, proof of a subsequent oral agreement by grantors as to constructing a house on the land cannot be admitted in evidence and used.—Ebling v. Ebling, 176 Mich. 602.

General rule as to practical construction of contract or deed by parties thereto, see Contracts §§ 161, 162; Deeds § 15.

¶ 1224. Where, after the execution of a written contract by one party, the other interlined an additional agreement to be performed by the party so signing, held, in a suit involving the rights of the parties under the contract, that evidence of subsequent conversations and agreements between them regarding such disputed clause was admissible so far as tending to show a final settlement and interpretation of an open and disputed question not settled by the contract as originally executed; the question of the authority to make the change and of its subsequent ratification being in issue.—Jenkinson v. Monroe Bros. & Co., 61 Mich. 454.

¶ 1225. Parol evidence to show the interpretation by the parties, the circumstances under which made and the subsequent acts of the parties relative thereto, is admissible in aid of the construction of a contract by which a village agreed to take water from a spring owned by a private party, the terms of which were of doubtful meaning.—Gregory v. Village of Lake Linden, 130 Mich. 368.

¶ 1226. Evidence as to the construction placed on the terms of an ambiguous contract by the parties thereto, held admissible under a notice of recoupment.—Saginaw Milling Co. v. Schram, 186 Mich. 52.

Relevancy and sufficiency of evidence of waiver, election, estoppel, and acceptance, see Election and Waiver § 18; Estoppel, III, C; Contracts §§ 319, 320, 330; Agency § 68. See also specific topics referred to in places mentioned and other topics treating of waiver, estoppel or acceptance in respect to particular things.

Parol evidence of promise tolling limitations, see Limitations, VII.

¶ 1227. Parol evidence is admissible to prove the exercise by a party of his option to waive a written stipulation or condition in his own favor.—Cobbs v. Fire Ass'n of Philadelphia, 68 Mich. 463.

VI. OPINIONS AND CONCLUSIONS.

A. CONCLUSIONS OR FACTS AND NONEXPERT OPINIONS.

§ 207. General rule as to admissibility.

[Note. When the question is not as to the competency or propriety of opinion evidence as such but as to its probative tendency or relevancy to the issues, the matter has been treated in the specific topic dealing with the issue. For example the relevancy or sufficiency of opinion evidence of damages or values has been treated in Damages, XI, B; and in Values, but the competency of opinions and the qualifications of the witness have been treated in this topic, post §§ 224, 250, 263, 286-291, 296.]

Opinions on ultimate question at issue to the jury, see also post § 211.

Conclusions of law, see post § 212 et seq.

Admissibility because of other evidence, see post § 208.

Exclusion because of available direct evidence, see post § 209.

Probativeness on question of skill or care of fact that advice or opinion was previously given as to proper mode of operation, see Negligence, V.

Admission of improper conclusion or opinion as harmless error, see Harmless Error.

Rules as to conclusions and nonexpert opinions in trials for crime, see Indictment, VIII, B.

¶ 1228. A question calling for the conclusion of the witness upon matters of fact should be excluded.—Anderson v. Thunder Bay River Boom Co., 61 Mich. 489.

¶ 1229. A question calling for a conclusion of the witness upon facts not the subject of expert testimony, and concerning which it is the jury's province to draw inferences, is improper.—Lemon v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co., 59 Mich. 618.

¶ 1230. It is error to permit a witness to testify to his conclusion based upon facts in evidence before the jury from which they are as competent to draw a conclusion as is the witness.—Jones v. Village of Portland, 88 Mich. 598; Tice v. Bay City, 78 Mich. 209; Dundas v. City of Lansing, 75 Mich. 499.

¶ 1231. Where facts are presented from which the jury may draw a conclusion, it is not error to exclude the answer of a witness giving his conclusion or opinion based on such facts.—Jackson v. Detroit & M. Ry. Co., 161 Mich. 163.

¶ 1232. The answer of a witness to a question, which would be only a conclusion about which she could not know, and as to which she had already testified concerning her belief, is properly excluded.—Ketchell v. Keene, 171 Mich. 108.

¶ 1233. Opinion evidence is admissible as a rule only in the examination of experts.—Grand Rapids & I. Ry. Co. v. L. Starks Co., 172 Mich. 270.

¶ 1234. Where the opinion of a witness would be admissible in support of an action, it would be equally admissible against it if it were the other way.—Marcott v. Marquette, H. & O. R. Co., 49 Mich. 99.

¶ 1235. The opinion of a surveyor that an application for a drain is a fair appearing paper is not admissible, the question in issue being whether certain alterations therein had been made before or after it was signed.—Brown v. Kennedy, 132 Mich. 464.

§ 208. Opinions made admissible by other testimony.

Admissibility of expert testimony to rebut other opinions, see post § 255.

¶ 1236. In a suit by plaintiff carrier for negligently setting fire to its car, defendant's agent, an experienced potato loader who had placed a stove therein to keep the potatoes from freezing, testified as to the manner in which the stove had been set up and then over objection was permitted to express his opinion that he did not see how it was possible for the car to catch fire from the stove. Plaintiff's witness had already been allowed to state his opinion that the fire could not have resulted if the stove had been properly set up. Held, since the plaintiff had opened the field of opinion testimony, the admission of the testimony of defendant's agent did not constitute reversible error.—Grand Rapids & I. Ry. Co. v. L. Starks Co., 172 Mich. 270.

See also post ¶ 1338.

Inadmissibility of opinion as to road location where better evidence is available, see ante ¶ 625.

Exclusion of opinions on obvious facts, see post § 211.

¶ 1237. Actual average daily receipts do not measure the value of scientific or professional services, to the extent of excluding competent opinions as to what they are worth.—Thomas v. Caulkett, 57 Mich. 392.

¶ 1238. In trover for the conversion of timber, testimony of defendant's agent as to the amount actually purchased from an alleged licensee was not conclusive, in view of testimony that all of the timber taken under such license was sold to defendant; and therefore the testimony of estimators as to the amount of timber taken off was proper.—Snyder v. East Bay Lumber Co., 135 Mich. 31.

¶ 1240. A witness who has simply observed a phenomenon unattended by any indications as to the circumstances of its appearance cannot be asked his opinion as to what those circumstances were likely to be; if, however, there are such indications, it is proper to admit his opinion as to the action of the circumstances, after the indications themselves have been proved, and the witness is shown to have had some basis of observation on which to found his opinion. But the opinion should be strictly confined to the particular facts.—Underwood v. Waldron, 33 Mich. 232.

¶ 1241. Testimony that a witness thinks that a certain fact exists cannot be regarded as conclusively establishing the fact, unless no reasonable conclusion other than that stated by the witness can be drawn from the facts given as the basis for his belief.—Myers v. Hinds, 110 Mich. 300.

¶ 1243. In an action against an attorney upon his alleged agreement to prosecute plaintiff's suit and pay the costs, receiving half the recovery if successful, the attorney testified that after he had obtained judgment for plaintiff in the circuit court, and after the defendant in that case had announced its intention to remove the case to the supreme court, he and his client agreed that if he failed in the higher court he was to have no fees but was not to be liable for costs; also, that when the case was removed he declined to prosecute it if he was to be liable for costs in case of failure, and that he told his client he could then discontinue without paying costs. Held, that it was competent for him to prove by the officers of the defendant in that case that defendant would have allowed such discontinuance.—Wildey v. Crane, 69 Mich. 17.

¶ 1244. In an action for slander it is proper to prove the defendant's admission that she "supposed she had repeated the story." It is an admission and not a mere supposition.—Burt v. McBain, 29 Mich. 260.

Proof of declarations or statements by substance without exact words, see post § 345.

¶ 1245. In an action for assault and battery consisting in unwarranted and excessive force, whether the force used to remove plaintiff was or was not excessive, being a question for the jury, cannot be proved by an opinion on that direct question.—Zube v. Weber, 67 Mich. 52.

¶ 1246. The opinion of a witness as to the truth of an alleged libelous charge that plaintiff's father and mother were starving in a certain attic is inadmissible, that being a question for the jury to determine from the facts given in evidence.—McDuff v. Detroit Evening Journal Co., 84 Mich. 1.

¶ 1247. In an action by an assignee in bankruptcy to recover assets fraudulently received from a bankrupt and used by defendants in their business, while it is competent to show the efforts made by the sheriff by virtue of writs to find property of the bankrupt, where he had testified that he had levied upon all the property of the bankrupt he could find, it was error to permit him to testify that he became satisfied that the bankrupt had no further property upon which he could levy and he decided he had none, inasmuch as it virtually was his opinion and conclusion.—Arnold v. Harris, 142 Mich. 275.

¶ 1248. In an action for damages for personal injuries sustained by the giving way of a handhold on defendant's car when plaintiff was leaving the car which was stopping on signal, it is not error for the court to refuse to receive testimony offered by the defendant as to the purpose the handhold was intended to serve, the use of the appliance being absolutely obvious.—Gerlach v. Detroit United Ry., 171 Mich. 474.

¶ 1249. In an action for the purchase-price of a machine, where the defense is a breach of warranty that the machine would do as good work as a certain other one, it is proper to ask a witness whether it did as good work as said other; the comparison being one which any one familiar with the use of such machines and had seen the two work could make, and it being unquestioned that the witness was qualified in this respect.—McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co. v. Cochran, 64 Mich. 636.

¶ 1250. Where a mining company was sued for a fatal injury to the employee of one who had entered into a mining contract with the company, and the terms of the contract, usage and the understanding of the parties were shown, held, that the contractor could not be asked whether it was not his business to be on the lookout for danger, as this was not a question of fact.—Lake Superior Iron Co. v. Erickson, 39 Mich. 492.

¶ 1251. In seeking to hold a bank president for moneys lent by him as such to an irresponsible person, and on his own representations to the cashier that he was himself interested with the borrower and would see the money repaid, the bank president's own opinion as to his own liability is immaterial and inadmissible as evidence.—First Nat. Bank of Sturgis v. Reed, 36 Mich. 263.

¶ 1252. Quære, whether witnesses can be allowed to state their views as to the materiality of facts withheld from insurers at the time of the execution of the policy.—Hill v. Lafayette Ins. Co., 2 Mich. 476.

¶ 1253. One who, when sued on a note, claims it was obtained by fraud, may be asked on cross-examination to point out the circumstances that constituted the alleged fraud, since this does not ask him to draw a conclusion from the facts, but to state what facts operated on his mind and produced the fraud complained of.—Mace v. Kennedy, 68 Mich. 389.

¶ 1254. In an action against a bank for not presenting promptly a draft drawn by plaintiffs upon their debtor in favor of a collection agency, testimony by one of the plaintiffs that the draft was not to be collected by the collection agency unless it was impossible to collect it through the bank is not objectionable as involving a conclusion of law.—Finch v. Karste, 97 Mich. 20.

Instrument as best evidence of what it contains, see ante § 120.

Defining word "curve" as used in railroad rule book, objection that it varied meaning by parol, see ante ¶ 984.

Testimony of party as to who was other party, whether corporation or individuals, see also Corporations ¶ 404.

¶ 1255. Where the fact of a sale of goods is not disputed, but the controversy is as to its terms, the testimony of the agent who made the sale that he sold the goods to the defendant for a price named is not incompetent as stating a conclusion of law.—Dennis v. Leaton, 72 Mich. 586.

¶ 1258. In an action involving the genuineness of a note alleged to have been executed by a mother, since deceased, in favor of her daughter, testimony of a witness that deceased had no opportunity to sign the note upon the day of its date is inadmissible though witness might testify to facts which would show that there was no such opportunity.—Mack v. Cole's Estate, 130 Mich. 84.

¶ 1259. When the facts are not disclosed, testimony that a person purchased an article, is a conclusion.—Ensign v. Dunn, 181 Mich. 456.

¶ 1260. After suit had been begun by a firm in justice's court and before judgment, one of the firm assigned to the firm's attorneys all his "right, title, and interest in or to the claim" sued upon. Execution having issued, and the constable having neglected to pay over the moneys collected, the assignees brought suit on the constable's bond, and the assignor, testifying in the latter suit, was asked whether at the time the former suit was brought the money belonged to him or to the partnership. This was objected to as calling for a conclusion of law. Held, that it should have been excluded.—Montgomery v. Martin, 104 Mich. 390.

¶ 1261. In assumpsit for gravel sold and delivered, answers by an agent of plaintiff as to whether defendant agreed to pay a certain price therefor should not be rejected as conclusions where the facts were fully gone into by both parties relating to their conversations and agreement.—Detroit River Transit Co. v. Aldrich, 176 Mich. 357.

¶ 1263. In an action on an undertaking for costs in a chancery cause a question to the register whether he ever accepted the bond as a compliance with the order requiring security for costs, was properly excluded as asking for an opinion or intention, it not being disputed that the register did actually receive the undertaking.—Skinner v. Lucas, 68 Mich. 424.

¶ 1264. In so far as witnesses undertake to testify that a verbal order for a car lot of coal ordered delivered by the seller to the purchaser by an order of the former to the railroad company to deliver was a delivery and acceptance by the buyer under an existing custom, they assume to testify to legal conclusions.—Calvert v. Schultz, 143 Mich. 441.

¶ 1265. The question what money a foreign certificate of deposit payable in "currency" is to be satisfied with is one of law, and it is not competent for a witness, without referring to any local custom or usage, to testify concerning it as an expert.—Phelps v. Town, 14 Mich. 374.

¶ 1266. A party to a writing cannot testify as a witness what he understood as its meaning where the suit is not one to correct the instrument, since it would be testimony to a conclusion of law.—Crane v. Ross, 168 Mich. 623.

§ 214. Ownership or title.

See also ante ¶ 1260.

That one "bought" or "purchased" property as conclusion, see ante § 213.

¶ 1267. In a suit for rent defendant was asked how he claimed the land, and replied, "I considered it mine." Held incompetent.—Hogsett v. Ellis, 17 Mich. 351.

¶ 1268. A party owning property consisting of chattels and choses in action may testify to the fact of ownership where it is material.—Cilley v. Van Patten, 68 Mich. 80.

¶ 1269. A question that only raises a question of law—such as whether estimates of timber belong to the man who had them made and who paid for them, or to the landlookers—is properly excluded, even though asked upon the subject of custom.—Webster v. Sibley, 72 Mich. 630.

¶ 1269a. A witness, who has testified to conversations with one in possession of logs during the handling and scaling of them, which conversations tended to show that witness was acting under directions of D., as owner of the logs, may be asked if he ever heard the possessor "say anything about owning the logs"; since this would tend to show that the possessor did not dispute D.'s ownership, although ordinarily a witness could not so testify because ownership was the very question at issue.—Stanton v. Estey Mfg. Co., 90 Mich. 12.

¶ 1270. A witness who has been shown a lease of a hotel from a father to his son cannot testify as a conclusion based wholly thereon, in a suit in which the question in issue is who is proprietor of such hotel, that they told him that the son ran the hotel.—Marquet v. LaDuke, 96 Mich. 596.

¶ 1271. It is not a conclusion of law to testify that one's husband gave certain chattels to the witness as a gift.—Davis v. Zimmerman, 40 Mich. 24.

¶ 1273. Where the testimony of a notary was taken on commission to show the presentment and dishonor of a note, and notice by him to the parties, and he only stated in reply to the interrogatories that from entries in his register it appeared that the note was dishonored and notice given, but did not say who presented the note for payment, or who served the notice, it was held that this reply was not admissible in evidence.—Bliss v. Paine, 11 Mich. 92.

¶ 1274. In trover for conversion it was proper that the answer "Yes, sir," to the question "Did you then demand the box?" should go to the jury, if not objected to at the time, as evidence of a demand, without detailing the conversation.—Bissell v. Starr, 32 Mich. 297.

¶ 1275. In replevin against a sheriff who had attached mortgaged goods a question whether or not a demand was made at a stated time for the joint possession of mortgaged goods is not objectionable as calling for a conclusion of the witness.—Rosenfield v. Case, 87 Mich. 295.

§ 217. Partnership, agency or authority.

Authority and duty as conclusion of law, see also ante ¶ 1254.

¶ 1276. In an action to charge defendants as partners it is error to include testimony by one defendant as to the nature of the relationship on the ground that it involves a conclusion of law.—Scholtz v. Freud, 128 Mich. 72.

¶ 1277. In an action to recover for commission as real estate agent, where defendant denied that plaintiff had acted for him, it was not error to refuse to permit plaintiff to answer a question as to whom he was acting for in the sale, as a real estate agent; as under the circumstances the question called for a statement of plaintiff's undisclosed purpose, and not for a statement of fact.—Downing v. Buck, 135 Mich. 636.

¶ 1278. Where, in an action against a firm on a note issued by one of the partners in the firm name, as payment for goods received by him before the other partner was taken in, the former was asked by the plaintiff, on direct examination, whether he had authority from the firm to sign checks and notes, an answer was properly excluded as involving a conclusion of fact and law.—Michigan Shoe Co. v. Paul, 149 Mich. 695.

¶ 1279. In an action against joint defendants upon an implied warranty it is admissible to allow one of the defendants to testify as to his authority to bind the other, though he must state facts and not conclusions.—De Witt v. Prescott, 51 Mich. 298.

¶ 1280. Upon the question whether an employee of defendant foreign corporation was such an agent thereof as to make a service of summons upon him binding on the company, it is not error to refuse to allow the witnesses of defendant to state whether or not the said employee was an agent of the company, where they are allowed to state in detail what he did and what he was authorized to do.—Arnold v. Huber Mfg. Co., 166 Mich. 190.

¶ 1281. In an action for commissions as an insurance agent, where the question as to whether certain managers of a branch office had authority to bind the company by a contract was in dispute, it was error to permit plaintiff to testify to the statements of one of such agents that he and another had such authority; as thereby plaintiff was permitted to testify to a conclusion upon the main controversy in the case.—Gore v. Canada Life Assur. Co., 119 Mich. 136.

¶ 1282. The effect that a conversation testified to had or ought to have had in inducing a party to form an opinion that a certain person was another party's agent is for the jury to determine, not for the witness.—Thompson v. Clay, 60 Mich. 627.

¶ 1283. In an action by a carpenter against an officer of a company to recover for services alleged to have been rendered to such officer, in which the defense was that plaintiff was hired to work for the company, held that an answer to a question asked the defendant as to whether when he made the bargain with plaintiff, and said he would do so and so, he was speaking as an individual or as an officer of the company, was properly excluded, as such fact should be shown by the conversation of the parties and the surrounding circumstances.—Harmon v. Parker, 193 Mich. 542.

¶ 1285. The county clerk may testify from examination of the journals that what appeared to be a record was not signed by the chairman and clerk of the board and that they were the only entries on the subject.—Hoffman v. Pack, Woods & Co., 114 Mich. 1.

¶ 1286. In an action on a beneficial certificate defended on the ground that the deceased was not a member, a question asked of the clerk of the supreme secretary as to what he had to say so far as his duties were concerned and so far as he had come in contact with the association's records as to whether or not the deceased was ever a member of the defendant organization does not come within the rule permitting a witness who has examined the record to testify as to the absence of entries thereon.—Wagner v. Supreme Lodge Knights and Ladies of Honor, 128 Mich. 660.

Opinion evidence as to necessity of bridge over a stream, see also Bridges ¶ 90.

¶ 1287. A witness of the neighborhood of a proposed street opening cannot testify, basing it on the situation existing, whether the opening would give a direct route into a city as soon as possible and whether it was necessary.—City of Detroit v. John Brennan & Co., 93 Mich. 338.

¶ 1288. Opinions of witnesses as to the necessity of taking property for a proposed improvement in a highway, are inadmissible.—City of Grand Rapids v. Coit, 149 Mich. 668.

¶ 1289. In proceedings to condemn land for the opening of a street, the opinion of a witness as to the necessity for the proposed improvement is inadmissible.—City of Grand Rapids v. Bennett, 106 Mich. 528.

Cause or effect of personal or property injuries, see post § 221.

Mental influences and conditions and consequences, see post § 231 et seq.

Subjects for lay and expert testimony respectively, see post § 242.

¶ 1290. In an action for injuries to horses caused by negligent overdriving, where the evidence shows that the top of the carriage was covered with mud, a witness accustomed to driving may state that in ordinary driving mud would not fly on the top; the testimony tends to show the rate of speed.—Laird v. Snyder, 59 Mich. 404.

¶ 1291. A person driving a team across a railway track may be a competent witness as to what frightened the team while crossing.—Geveke v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co., 57 Mich. 589.

¶ 1292. Testimony that "I know there must have been wood in the engine by the sparks," should be stricken out, as it is not for a witness, but for the jury to draw inferences from facts.—Ireland v. Cincinnati, W. & M. R. Co., 79 Mich. 163.

¶ 1293. In an action to recover damages for personal injuries sustained in an automobile collision, where the defendant was called by plaintiff for cross-examination, the question "Your car came around there with such force that the rear wheel hit the Fountain street curb, didn't it?", held properly admitted, over objection that it called for a conclusion.—Snyder v. Mathison, 196 Mich. 378.

¶ 1294. The question whether a dam would have gone out had it not been for the high state of the water is properly excluded as calling for a conclusion of fact within the jury's province.—Darling v. Thompson, 108 Mich. 215.

¶ 1296. In an action on an insurance policy where the issue was whether insured committed suicide or was murdered, it is error to permit witnesses to give their opinion, based on the position of the body and the conditions surrounding it, as to whether the body had fallen there or had been placed there by other parties, or whether a man shot in a cutter could have fallen out of it and been in the position in which the body was found, since these were conclusions to be drawn by the jury.—Furbush v. Maryland Casualty Co., 131 Mich. 234.

§ 221. ——Injuries to person and property.

Subjects for expert testimony, see post § 257.
Medical testimony as to how given condition or injury might have occurred, see post § 257.
Inspection of injury by jury as improper evidence, see post § 575.

¶ 1297. The cause of an accident is not a subject for opinion evidence, where all the surrounding circumstances are before the jury, from which they are to draw such legitimate conclusions as the proof warrants.—Riffel v. Union Truck Co., 180 Mich. 673.

¶ 1300. In an action against physicians for malpractice where the claim was that by the use of unnecessary force they wrenched the knee and injured it by breaking or partially rupturing a ligament, the plaintiff may testify to her symptoms and feelings, and may testify as to where her pains were but could not testify as to what caused the pains, and could not therefore say that the pain was caused by the rupture of the ligament.—Spaulding v. Bliss, 83 Mich. 311.

¶ 1301. A witness cannot give his opinion that the fire by which plaintiff's property was destroyed came from fires set on defendant's land.—Smaltz v. Boyce, 109 Mich. 382.

¶ 1302. Testimony by the plaintiff that he had no use of his injured foot is admissible, even though it is followed by a statement with a full description of its condition, whereby it appears conclusively that he could use it; the question being as to the credibility and not its competency.—McDonald v. City Elec. Ry. Co., 144 Mich. 379.

§ 222. Identity or resemblance of things or persons.

Person or corporation as contracting party, see also ante ¶ 1283.
Testimony of printer of original blank as to printed additions on note, see Alteration of Instruments ¶ 39.

¶ 1303. Identification of a lot as the one referred to in a lost document states only a conclusion, if the witness cannot give the description, and it is insufficient to show the contents of the paper.—Taylor v. Adams, 58 Mich. 187.

¶ 1304. In an action for false imprisonment against an officer who sought to justify an arrest by the resemblance between plaintiff and a photograph of the person alleged to have committed the offense, the opinions of third persons given after the arrest as to such resemblance are inadmissible, where both plaintiff and photograph are in court.—Filer v. Smith, 96 Mich. 347.

Relative field for lay and expert opinions, see post § 245.
Conclusion that boundary was agreed to, see post ¶ 1359.
Relevancy and sufficiency of evidence as to boundaries, see Boundaries.

¶ 1305. What a witness supposes as to the location of a disputed division line, or what he supposes the general understanding to be as to such location, is inadmissible, especially where it appears from his testimony that he knows nothing about the line.—Beecher v. Galvin, 71 Mich. 391.

¶ 1306. After a surveyor had testified that he could not and did not find an original quarter post when making a survey, the question whether in his judgment the quarter post had ever been located and established under the original government survey was held inadmissible as calling for an opinion, and not for any fact within the witness' knowledge. Boundary lines cannot be established or disturbed by the mere opinions of surveyors.—Burt v. Busch, 82 Mich. 506.

¶ 1307. In testifying surveyors should be confined to statements of facts, and not be permitted to express conclusions or presumptions.—Clarke v. Case, 144 Mich. 148.

¶ 1308. The opinion of a surveyor as to a certain supposed monument found by him is a conclusion of the witness and inadmissible as evidence.—Clarke v. Case, 144 Mich. 148.

§ 224. Estimates of quantity, value, cost, or damages.

Best evidence of lumber scale or tally, see ante § 107.
Admissibility of estimates as secondary evidence of amounts originally shown by writing, see ante § 153 ¶ 765.
Proofs of direct nature sufficient to exclude opinions, see ante § 209.
Estimates of speed, see post § 225.
Comparisons of differing systems of scaling, see ante ¶ 437.
Sufficiency of knowledge to support estimate, see post § 250.

Questions for experts, see post § 263.
Admissibility of computations of present worth of money, see also Damages § 331.

¶ 1309. Testimony as to the quantity of logs taken from a mill pond to the effect that the witness went to the pond and made a careful estimate of the logs which was from 50,000 to 60,000 feet, is not objectionable as a mere guess.—Clink v. Gunn, 90 Mich. 135.

¶ 1310. In trover for hay which had not been weighed at the time of conversion, but which had been cut from a given acreage, a witness who has shown himself competent to testify may be asked to state the average crop per acre for that season upon the premises in question.—Isaacs v. McLean, 106 Mich. 79.

¶ 1311. A witness who had not counted the broken bolts of a boiler, but who showed sufficient knowledge to enable him to estimate the number, was properly permitted to give such estimate.—Woods v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co., 108 Mich. 396.

¶ 1312. Complainant sued defendant for causing the ice in a river to back up so as to interfere with complainant's water power and to recover as damages the extra amount of coal and labor which complainant was compelled to employ to make up for the loss of its water power. Complainant's witness testified in detail as to the amount of coal used under the conditions complained of as compared with other times. He did not keep an exact account of just the amount of coal and labor expended solely in making up for the deficit caused by defendant's wrongful act, but gave figures calculated to afford a basis of estimate. Held, it was not improper to permit plaintiff to give his opinion as to the proportion of the coal and labor employed in overcoming the situation created by defendant's wrongful act.—Eesley Light & Power Co. v. Commonwealth Power Co., 172 Mich. 78.

¶ 1313. Where machinists, testifying to the reduced value of an engine after an injury, speak from experience and examination, and give reasons for their opinions, it cannot be objected that their testimony is speculative and incompetent.—Moore v. Township of Kenockee, 75 Mich. 332.

¶ 1314. In an action of deceit over the sale of stock, a witness may give his opinion as to the value of the stock where it has no market value.—Steele v. Kellogg, 163 Mich. 132.

¶ 1315. Testimony as to the value of a vessel before and after sustaining the injury in suit, by one who knew her condition well enough to speak upon the subject was competent; but speculation by one who made no inspection was not proper.—Michaud v. Grace Harbor Lumber Co., 122 Mich. 305.

¶ 1316. In an action by a husband for negligence causing his wife's death, the opinion of witnesses as to the value of her services is admissible.—Nelson v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 104 Mich. 582.

¶ 1317. In an action for wrongful death of a boy 11 years old thrown from a wagon which he was driving alone, testimony of the value of the boy's services by witnesses acquainted with him is properly admitted.—Miller v. Township of Meade, 128 Mich. 98.

¶ 1318. Where a contract for grading a roadbed leaves the engineer of the railroad discretion to change the line at will, and the change has been made, a contractor suing for work done, etc., may ask a witness what in his opinion would have been the cost of constructing the road on the original line in the face of an objection that it was impossible for any man to go there three years after the work was done and tell what it was worth.—Bush v. Brooks, 70 Mich. 446.

¶ 1320. It was not error for the owners of property examined by them in a damaged condition, it being wearing apparel and the like comprised in baggage, to state in money the amount of the damage; lay witnesses are competent to state a conclusion on observed facts when by the words and gestures of the witness the jury cannot be put into a position of equal vantage with the witness for drawing it.—Withey v. Pere Marquette R. Co., 141 Mich. 412.

Admissibility of testimony from experiment or comparison, see post §§ 249, 253.
Question as one for experts or lay witnesses, see post § 247.
Qualifications of experts, see post § 282.

¶ 1321. Passengers in an electric car may testify as to how fast the car was going when the accident occurred.—Goodes v. Lansing & S. Traction Co., 150 Mich. 494.

¶ 1323. The driver of a horse and light wagon who is endeavoring to pull a horse, which has been frightened by an automobile, off a street car track, is competent to testify that a car coming from the direction she was facing did not slacken its speed from the point at which she first saw it until it struck the horse.—Walter v. Detroit, J. & C. Ry. Co., 101 Mich. 181.

§ 226. Structural and physical conditions and mechanics.

As to what caused dam to give way, see ante ¶ 1294.

Interference, hindrance and obstruction as conclusions, see post § 227.

Field and respective limits of lay and expert opinions, see post § 246.

Subjects for experts, see post § 265.

¶ 1324. In an action for injury from nonrepair of bridge, testimony by one witness that "it was a very poor, shackly bridge," and by another that from his "personal knowledge the bridge was in good repair," was admissible.—Merkle v. Township of Bennington, 68 Mich. 133.

¶ 1325. A witness acquainted with the facts may express an opinion whether a drain is too small to carry the water conveyed into it by an artificial cut, and whether it was large enough before the cut was made to convey the water naturally coming to it.—Osten v. Jerome, 93 Mich. 196.

¶ 1327. In an action for personal injury caused by a chip flying from a hammer which plaintiff was using, opinion testimony as to the length of time the hammer had been in the process of chipping is a matter of opinion.—Dompier v. Lewis, 131 Mich. 144.

As to wheel striking curb, see ante ¶ 1293.

¶ 1329. In an action against a railway company for the negligent killing of a person on the track, it appeared that strangers were in the cab of the engine with the engineer. Held, that when the place has been described to the jury, and the situation of the several persons, it cannot be said that the engineer might not be permitted to testify that their presence did not interfere with the performance of his duties; the jury could not judge of this fact as well as the witness.—Marcott v. Marquette, H. & O. R. Co., 49 Mich. 99.

¶ 1330. An answer of a witness is not open to the objection that it is opinion evidence where, in an action to recover damages for a collision between vehicles, he states: "There was no object that would have detained or kept the vehicles from passing. Of course, it was not a good road. If the location of the buggy was as pointed out to me, there would have been ample room, nine feet of good road."—Buxton v. Ainsworth, 153 Mich. 315.

As to safety or danger, see post § 229.

Subjects for lay and expert opinions respectively, see post § 241.

¶ 1331. A witness cannot give his opinion whether an accident happened by reason of defendant's negligence or of plaintiff's inattention; so, one who has testified that he saw plaintiff step from the steps of a car upon a box placed there for that purpose, and fall, cannot be asked on cross-examination whether it occurred to him at the time that the accident happened by reason of the darkness or of plaintiff's inattention to the step's being there.—Kelley v. Detroit, L. & N. R. Co., 80 Mich. 237.

¶ 1332. In an action by a bicycle rider against the driver of an automobile to recover damages for personal injuries sustained in a collision at a street intersection, a question put to a witness as to whether defendant appeared to have his car under control is not objectionable as calling for a conclusion.—Vezina v. Shermer, 198 Mich. 757.

¶ 1333. Contributory negligence cannot be shown by the statement of one who had no personal knowledge of it.—Hitchcock v. Burgett, 38 Mich. 501.

¶ 1334. In an action by a tile setter against one selling and delivering plaster to a plaster contractor for damages for personal injuries sustained as the result of collapse of the porch on which plaintiff was working, due to placing heavy bags of plaster upon a bay window sill and on the floor inside the building, evidence of plaintiff that the presence of the plaster caused him no concern was a fact and not a conclusion and admissible as bearing upon his contributory negligence.—Schneider v. C. H. Little Co., 200 Mich. 361.

Safety or viciousness of animals, see post § 230.

Questions for experts, see post § 269.

¶ 1335. A witness cannot be allowed to state whether a road is safe or not when that is an ultimate question in the case.—Harris v. Township of Clinton, 64 Mich. 447.

¶ 1336. In an action against a street railway company whose duty it was to see that a street crossing was in safe condition, it seems it is error to refuse to allow persons familiar with driving to give their opinion as eyewitnesses concerning the safety of the crossing, it being incapable of precise description.—Laughlin v. Grand Rapids St. R. Co., 62 Mich. 220.

¶ 1337. Where, in an action for injury from a defective sidewalk, there is no difficulty in laying before the jury all the facts relating to the condition of the walk, it is proper to exclude the opinion of witnesses as to whether the walk was in a condition of reasonable repair and was reasonably safe for public travel.—Girard v. City of Kalamazoo, 92 Mich. 610.

¶ 1339. In an action for injuries sustained upon a defective sidewalk, a witness, who had attempted to repair the walk several days before the accident, was asked the following questions: "What can you say, after you had got through your work on that walk, whether or not it was in good repair?" and "What can you say as to whether or not it was in a reasonable safe condition for public travel?" The witness had already testified fully as to the condition of the walk, and what he did in its repair. Held, that the questions calling for his conclusions were properly excluded.—Atherton v. Bancroft, 114 Mich. 241.

¶ 1340. A witness in an action against a township for damages for personal injuries sustained as the result of being kicked by one of the horses of a team upon falling from the wagon due to an unseen rut in an approach to a bridge, after describing the rut, may not give his opinion as to whether it was more than an ordinary rut which would be found on an approach to a bridge of such character, as it is a question for the jury to determine, having heard the testimony, whether the road was reasonably fit and safe for public travel.—Pool v. Township of Montague, 194 Mich. 476.

¶ 1341. Where a plaintiff is injured by choosing to walk on the narrow and dangerous side of a trestle instead of on the broad and safe side, it is error to permit witnesses to testify that in their opinion the other side was as dangerous as where plaintiff was injured.—Dolstrom v. Newport Min. Co., 165 Mich. 309.

¶ 1342. In an action for personal injury caused by an engine falling through an alleged defective bridge, witnesses may not testify that the bridge was "reasonably safe for public travel," this being a question for the jury.—Comstock v. Township of Georgetown, 137 Mich. 541.

¶ 1343. A witness cannot state in an action for negligence at a crossing that in his opinion it was careless for the defendant to leave cars at the crossing projecting so as to obstruct vision.—Close v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 73 Mich. 647.

¶ 1345. The opinion of a witness in an action against a city for personal injuries caused by a defective sidewalk, that the walk was in a dangerous condition, is incompetent.—Lindley v. City of Detroit, 131 Mich. 8.

¶ 1346. Where a witness has testified to the dangers incident to operating a machine, which are obvious and apparent, the jury is as competent as the witness to judge of the danger to which an inexperienced man would be subjected if set to perform such work, and it is not error to reject the opinion of the witness on that subject.—Melzer v. Peninsular Car Co., 76 Mich. 94.

Questions for lay or expert witnesses, see post § 241, ¶ 1392.

Subjects for experts respecting animals, see post § 268.

¶ 1347. A witness who has driven a span of horses on a street railway both before and after an accident caused, as claimed, by the vicious character of the horses, may give his opinion as to whether they were safe for that kind of work.—Noble v. St. Joseph & B. H. St. R. Co., 98 Mich. 249.

¶ 1348. In an action for damages for personal injuries sustained by being struck by a runaway horse, held that evidence as to whether or not the horse was quiet was admissible as being a statement of fact and not a conclusion of the witness, especially as the witness stated in detail the conduct of the horse.—Dyer v. Peoples Ice Co., 188 Mich. 203.

Motives and reasons, see post § 232.

Knowledge, understanding, intent, and assent, see post § 233.

State of one's own mind, see post § 235.

Belief that one had contract, see also ante ¶ 1257.

Subjects for experts, see post §§ 244, 259.

¶ 1349. In a suit for alienation of affections, questions asked of the husband as to his wife's feelings with reference to a divorce suit instituted by the husband are not proper where the husband and plaintiff both testify in detail as to what each of them did and did not do.—Gornetzky v. Gornetzky, 174 Mich. 492.

¶ 1350. In an action for libel the answer to a question put to a witness for plaintiff "How did these seem to make him feel," held properly excluded as calling for the opinion of the witness.—Van Lonkhuyzen v. Daily News Co., 195 Mich. 283.

¶ 1351. Conclusions of a witness that the defendant in an action for malicious prosecution appeared to be displeased when the plaintiff had been allowed to go on his own recognizance, are inadmissible as going beyond evidence giving the appearance of the defendant, which is permissible to show a mental state of pleasure, ill-will, anger, or the like.—Fleckinger v. Taffee, 149 Mich. 678.

§ 232. Motives and reasons for actions.

As to displeasure, affection or hostility, see ante § 231.

Competency of one to state what he would have done in given state of facts, see also post § 235.

Opinion as what another would have done in given case, see also ante ¶ 1243.

¶ 1352. A witness cannot be asked why another party wished a certain act done which he directed, unless some statement of his purpose or motive accompanied the direction.—Gilman v. Riopelle, 18 Mich. 145.

¶ 1355. Upon an issue as to whether or not a purchase of logs was made under an option held by a third person, so as to entitle him to commissions, the seller's testimony that it was so made is not a mere conclusion from the facts, although the better practice would, perhaps, require that the testimony be confined to what was said and done at the time of sale.—Burrell v. Gates, 112 Mich. 307.

¶ 1356. In an action against a buyer for commissions on a purchase alleged to have been made under an option, the buyer having been permitted to show all the sources of his information in regard to the logs, and to state that he did not purchase under the option, the court correctly refused to allow him further to state upon whose judgment and what information he in fact relied in making the purchase.—Burrell v. Gates, 112 Mich. 307.

¶ 1357. A statement by the plaintiff in an action for damages for assault and battery of the reason why she did not work for a week after the assault held to be a statement of fact and not a conclusion of the witness.—Gungrich v. Anderson, 189 Mich. 144.

¶ 1358. A tunnel contractor, having in course of work carrying the tunnel excavations beneath a large city water main, made known its reasons for objecting to payment of what it deemed an unnecessarily large number of watchmen to guard against the breaking of the main, it was not opinion evidence for the plaintiff board to show by one of its members what was the reason that so large a number was put to watch, and to state what would be the probable dire results if a break occurred.—Board of Water Com'rs of City of Detroit v. Butler Bros. Const. Co., 168 Mich. 137.

§ 233. Knowledge, understanding, intent, and assent.

Competency of one to testify of his own state of mind or intent, see post § 235.

One's own act as an acceptance, see also ante ¶ 1263.

Mental state or feelings and motives and reasons, see ante §§ 231, 232.

¶ 1359. The conclusion of a witness that the location of a dividing line between lands was acquiesced in by the parties in interest is inadmissible.—Beecher v. Galvin, 71 Mich. 391.

¶ 1360. A statement by a witness that all the creditors at a creditors' meeting seemed to be satisfied with an arrangement for an extension of time to the debtor is properly stricken out as calling for an opinion and as not being a statement of fact in the absence of proof that words were actually spoken which would form a basis for such statement.—People v. Traves, 188 Mich. 345.

agreed to pay in consideration of plaintiff not holding defendant's property, held that the answer of a witness, that what plaintiff's general manager meant by protecting himself, stated in his conversation with defendant and witness, was "by a lien," was inadmissible as being the conclusion of the witness as to the intention of a third party, which intention, even if expressed in the absence of the defendant, and without her knowledge, and not acted upon her would be incompetent, and hearsay.—Monroe Lumber Co. v. Bezeau, 192 Mich. 307.

¶ 1362. It was error for the court to permit the defendant to testify that he had stated to the prosecuting attorney all the facts about the case that he knew, without actually testifying to such facts, in an action for false imprisonment and malicious prosecution.—Lansky v. Prettyman, 140 Mich. 40.

§ 234. Imposition, fraud or undue influence.

See also ante ¶ 1253.
Surmises of fraud, see also ante ¶ 1242.
Competency of one to testify to his own fair intent, see post § 235.

¶ 1363. The opinion of the scrivener who drew a will subsequently contested as to whether or not undue influence was exercised, is incompetent.—McHugh v. Fitzgerald, 103 Mich. 21.

§ 235. One's own intent, reasons or thoughts.

As to one's own physical and perceptive faculties, see post §§ 237, 238.

¶ 1364. Where intent or motive is involved in the issue in a suit for breach of contract, the person to whom such intent or motive is imputed is a competent witness to testify thereto.—Isbell v. Anderson Carriage Co., 170 Mich. 304; Spalding v. Lowe, 56 Mich. 366; Watkins v. Wallace, 19 Mich. 57.

¶ 1365. One may testify to his own intent or motive involved in the issue unless his testimony would be excluded by statute or by some principle of evidence.—Spalding v. Lowe, 56 Mich. 366.

¶ 1366. The testimony of the assignor as to his intent in making the assignment is admissible where fraud is charged.—Watkins v. Wallace, 19 Mich. 57.

¶ 1367. A witness may state what his motive and intent were in canceling a contract, which was to be done and performed to his "satisfaction," it being contended that he was not dissatisfied but wished to make a better contract in lieu of it.—Isbell v. Anderson Carriage Co., 170 Mich. 304.

¶ 1368. In order to prove reliance upon false representations whereby a loan was procured upon land not owned by the mortgagors, it is proper to ask plaintiff's agent (who made the loan) whether he would have made it if he had known that the land was adversely occupied and that one of the mortgagors had only a tax-title.—Stubly v. Beachboard, 68 Mich. 401.

¶ 1369. Where fraud is charged the party may testify as to his intent.—Hyde v. Nelson, 11 Mich. 353; Brown v. Blanchard, 39 Mich. 790; Bedford v. Penny, 58 Mich. 424; Angell v. Pickard, 61 Mich. 561.

¶ 1370. A plaintiff who claims that his sale to defendant was because of fraudulent representations by the latter as to his financial condition may testify that he made such sale in reliance upon those statements.—Arnstine Brothers & Mier v. Treat, 71 Mich. 561.

¶ 1371. In an action on an insurance policy plaintiff sought to meet the defense that the premium note had never been paid by showing that the agent of the insurance company had told him the company had given him, the agent, credit for the note. The plaintiff's further offer to show that he understood this to mean that the agent had paid the note was properly excluded as mere inference.—McIntyre v. Michigan State Ins. Co., 52 Mich. 188.

Admissibility of evidence of symptoms to lay foundation, see also ante ¶ 536.
Limits and extent of lay opinions admissible, see post § 243.
Subjects for experts, see post §§ 243, 257.

¶ 1373. In an action for personal injuries a physician who has known plaintiff for some years cannot be allowed to testify that in his opinion plaintiff was "shamming before the jury"; the physician being no better qualified to give such an opinion than the jurors are.—Cole v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 95 Mich. 77.

¶ 1374. A witness who attended the injured person may testify to a numbness of the patient's limb as a fact within his observation. It is not excluded as testimony of sensation felt by another.—Will v. Village of Mendon, 108 Mich. 251.

¶ 1375. A statement that one who had been injured in an accident had difficulty in breathing for some time after the injury does not amount to a conclusion, but simply a statement of fact.—Loose v. Township of Deerfield, 187 Mich. 206.

¶ 1376. In an action for damages for assault and battery, a lay witness who testifies that he has known plaintiff for a period of four years, that he has seen him work, and has worked with him before and after the altercation, may properly testify that after the accident plaintiff was unable to do his work and that witness had to help him.—Foster v. Krause, 187 Mich. 630.

¶ 1377. In an action for personal injury, an answer to a question asking whether plaintiff made any exclamations of pain, or statements as to her suffering, "I think she did," was a conclusion of the witness, and improperly admitted.—Haney v. Village of Pinckney, 155 Mich. 656.

¶ 1378. A witness cannot testify that the plaintiff groaned involuntarily, as such statement is a conclusion beyond his knowledge. —Pierson v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 159 Mich. 110.

¶ 1379. In an action for personal injury, an answer by plaintiff that "I attribute the headaches to the injury in my back. It runs right up my back and up the back of my head," is admissible since it was competent for witness to describe the pain, and the fact that she gave her conclusion as to the connection between the injury and the pain in her head cannot be said to be injurious in the light of the remainder of the answer.—Lindley v. City of Detroit, 131 Mich. 8.

¶ 1380. A question to a lay witness whether plaintiff has had other sicknesses which might have caused the injury as well as the accident sued for is one calling for the conclusions of the witness, and is properly excluded.—Barker v. City of Kalamazoo, 146 Mich. 257.

¶ 1381. Persons other than physicians may testify that certain relatives of an insured person had died of a certain disease, the weight of such testimony being for the jury. —Krapp v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 143 Mich. 369.

§ 237. Personal ability and faculties.

Ability to work, see ante ¶ 1376.
Ability to see and hear, see post § 238.
Medical testimony as to possibilities under given state, see post § 257.
Observation as basis for opinion, see post ¶ 1425.
Admissible lay opinions, limits and extent, see post § 243.

¶ 1382. In an action for the wrongful ejection of plaintiff from defendant's train, a statement by plaintiff after having testified that as he was sitting in his seat he was seized by the conductor, who proceeded to drag him out, to the effect that "I was in no position to meet any such assault, for that reason I resisted as long as I could," is not objectionable as a conclusion.—Pierson v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 149 Mich. 167.

§ 238. Ability to see or hear.

Physical ability and faculties, see ante § 237.
Medical testimony as to impairment from injury, see post § 257.

¶ 1383. A witness who swore to having been in the garden of her house, which was by the side of a railway track, for several minutes before a train passed, and that she did not hear any whistle blown, was asked whether the whistle could have been blown anywhere near the neighboring station without her hearing it. Held, that this question was properly ruled out; it related to a matter of opinion and common observation and experience upon which the jury could have judged as well as the witness, when she had stated the facts as to distance and the existence of any obstacle.—Marcott v. Marquette, H. & O. R. Co., 49 Mich. 99.

¶ 1385. A witness who had testified that he was watching the approach of a train from a certain point, may be asked whether he could have heard a signal if it had been given; the question being merely equivalent to an inquiry whether he was within hearing distance.—Crane v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 107 Mich. 511.

¶ 1386. In action for injuries at a crossing the plaintiff may be allowed to testify whether he could see the approaching train "coming down from where you stopped to listen" at a certain point.—Close v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 73 Mich. 647.

Sufficiency of witness' knowledge or observation to sustain opinion, see post § 251.
Subjects for experts, see post §§ 244, 259.

¶ 1387. In a will contest a witness may testify to the intelligence of the testator to comprehend a given instrument and to the sufficiency or lack of his mind and memory to comprehend his property and the objects of his bounty, but it is improper to allow testimony of the legal capacity or his competence to make a will.—Page v. Beach, 134 Mich. 51.

Effect to incapacitate, question for lay or expert witnesses, see post ¶ 1398.

¶ 1388. A witness may state whether or not a person had the appearance of being intoxicated at certain times; such statement of appearance is not mere opinion.—Cook v. Standard Life & Accident Ins. Co., 84 Mich. 12.

Testimony regarded as conclusions and inadmissible as such, see ante §§ 211-240.
Particular questions, whether for experts of lay witnesses, see post §§ 242-247.
Inapplicability of best evidence rule to exclude lay witness' conclusions because expert might have testified, see ante § 107.
Limits and restrictions on expert testimony, see post §§ 254-269.
Questions of value for experts, see post § 263.
Subjects for and qualifications of experts to testify, see post, VI, B.

¶ 1389. The proper subjects and occasions for nonexpert opinions, discussed and considered.—Beaubien v. Cicotte, 12 Mich. 459.

¶ 1390. Conclusions from every-day appearances that are open to the judgment of any intelligent observer, e. g., determining whether leaves that had been detached and were fastened in a small book belong to it or not, do not require expert testimony.—Passmore v. Passmore's Estate, 60 Mich. 463.

¶ 1392. A witness cannot be asked his opinion as to the tendency of a hole in a bridge to frighten horses of ordinary gentleness; that is not a matter for expert testimony.—Smith v. Township of Sherwood, 62 Mich. 159.

¶ 1394. The testimony of a witness who is not shown to be an expert, as to what is covered by telephone patents, is inadmissible.—American Cushman Telephone Co. v. Noble, 98 Mich. 67.

Subjects for expert opinions, see post § 254 et seq.

¶ 1396. The opinions of police officers or detectives, as such, as to the cause of a fire, are wholly inadmissible to show probable cause of guilt, or to furnish grounds of action.—Fowler v. Gilbert, 38 Mich. 292.

¶ 1398. The effect of intoxication upon testamentary capacity is not a question for experts, but depends on common observation and the facts of the particular case.—Pierce v. Pierce, 38 Mich. 412.

¶ 1399. The effect of water in disintegrating the mortar of a wall is no more a matter of scientific knowledge than is the effect of a running stream in excavating its banks at its angles; and other persons who have had occasion to observe it, as well as masons, may be competent to express opinions upon it.—Underwood v. Waldron, 33 Mich. 232.

¶ 1400. On a claim that four or five dry seasons had caused the diminution of a stream, a supervisor of the township may testify what effect such seasons as the preceding four or five would have on such a stream.—Pettibone v. Smith, 37 Mich. 579.

Conclusions and admissible opinions, see ante § 236.
Competency of lay witnesses to exclamations of pain, see also post ¶ 2409.
Subjects for experts, see post § 257.

¶ 1401. Whether any sickness whatever exists in a particular locality is not a question requiring the testimony of experts.—Evans v. People, 12 Mich. 27.

¶ 1402. An inquiry of a lay witness without medical knowledge "whether there was any case of disease of a certain type, at a certain time, in a certain neighborhood," the question of the type of the disease being material to the issue, was held to be inadmissible.—Evans v. People, 12 Mich. 27.

¶ 1403. Unskilled witnesses may testify to facts that came within their own observation relating to ordinary injuries or sickness of those with whom they have consorted, not involving medical knowledge beyond that of ordinary unprofessional persons.—Elliott v. Van Buren, 33 Mich. 49.

¶ 1404. Declaration of a party suffering from an assault, as to existing sensations, need not be testified to by a physician.—Elliott v. Van Buren, 33 Mich. 49.

¶ 1405. The testimony of unskilled persons as to the permanent nature of physical injuries, not recent, is not necessarily inadmissible; such facts are not exclusively for experts; the observation of others may be taken for what it is worth.—Kuney v. Dutcher, 56 Mich. 308.

¶ 1406. In an action for damages for personal injuries nonmedical witnesses who had observed the facts were properly permitted to answer whether they could form a judgment as to plaintiff's having full use of her arm, whether she was able to work during a specified time, and whether she has the full use of her left arm.—Harris v. Detroit City R. Co., 76 Mich. 227.

¶ 1407. Expert testimony is required to show the expectancy of life of a person suffering from hernia and internal injuries.—Denman v. Johnston, 85 Mich. 387.

¶ 1408. A woman's testimony in her own behalf of her diminished capacity for work after as compared with that before a personal injury, offered as bearing on extent of damages, is not objectionable as being a matter for expert testimony. It is within her own knowledge.—Young v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co., 56 Mich. 430.

¶ 1409. There is nothing in the nature of inquiries concerning mental capacity which requires juries to be informed, of necessity, by other than ordinary witnesses.—Beaubien v. Cicotte, 12 Mich. 459.

¶ 1410. In an inquiry concerning mental capacity to perform a certain act, witnesses who are not experts may testify to their opinions upon the question in controversy, based upon their own observations.—Beaubien v. Cicotte, 12 Mich. 459.

Admissible conclusions and opinions, see ante § 223.

¶ 1411. Surveyors cannot on the basis of an ex parte survey or from parol evidence, when better is available, state where points and boundaries are located except when other ordinary witnesses might do so.—O'Brien v. Cavanaugh, 61 Mich. 368; Fisher v. Dowling, 66 Mich. 370.

¶ 1412. The question of the location of a section line or a starting point is one of fact for the jury, and should not be left to the opinions of surveyors as experts; a tangible and established boundary cannot be disturbed on such evidence as a surveyor's opinion, based, not on any data made known by testimony in the case, but on his examination of records, deeds, abstracts and other documents from which he protracted his maps and plans.—Stewart v. Carleton, 31 Mich. 270.

¶ 1413. Testimony as to boundaries need not be that of a surveyor or expert; the witness' want of accurate knowledge would only affect the weight of his testimony.—Hoffman v. Harrington, 44 Mich. 183.

Subjects for experts, see post §§ 265, 266.

¶ 1414. Passenger traffic on river steamers is not so exclusively a maritime business that sailors alone are qualified to testify as to its methods and duties, but usage may sometimes be shown as bearing thereon.—Clinton v. Root, 58 Mich. 182.

¶ 1415. Expert testimony is inadmissible (though its reception was held harmless error) to show how a light on a drawbridge should have been placed so as to prevent injury when the draw was open.—Goodale v. Portage Lake Bridge Co., 55 Mich. 413.

¶ 1416. The question whether, from appearances, a certain engine had capacity to draw a certain train of cars, is one which no one but an expert is competent to answer.—Sisson v. Cleveland & T. R. Co., 14 Mich. 489.

¶ 1417. Whether the structure of a railroad is such as to warrant fast travel is not usually a question for ordinary witnesses.—Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Huntley, 38 Mich. 537.

¶ 1418. A bystander may testify that there was room enough on a railroad siding to hold a train without the car's projecting into the roadway at a crossing, such not being a question for an expert.—Young v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co., 56 Mich. 430.

¶ 1419. The question of the construction and condition of a country road is a subject which does not require expert testimony to enable a jury to decide as to whether it was reasonably safe for the passage of vehicles.—Loose v. Township of Deerfield, 187 Mich. 206.

§ 247. ——Speed of trains or vehicles.

Admissible opinions and conclusions, see ante § 225.

Qualifications of experts, see post § 282.

Sufficiency of witness' knowledge or observation, see post § 249.

¶ 1420. The question of the speed of a passing train is not one of science but of observation, and testimony upon it may be given by any one possessing a knowledge of time and distance.—Detroit & M. R. Co. v. Van Steinburg, 17 Mich. 99.

¶ 1421. It is not error to allow witnesses of ordinary intelligence to compare the speed of a railroad train at the time of an accident with the speed of the same train on other days before the injury occurred.—Guggenheim v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 66 Mich. 150.

§ 248. Knowledge or observation as basis for nonexpert opinions.

Hypothetical and speculative opinions not based on facts, see also ante § 210.
Want of personal knowledge, see also ante ¶ 1333.
As to what frightened horse on given occasion, see ante ¶ 1291.
Purpose or motive as basis for opinion as to person's reasons for action, see ante §§ 232, 235.
Relative field and limits of lay and expert testimony, see ante §§ 241-247.
As to particular matters, see post § 250-252.
Proof of knowledge, data or observation, see post § 249.
Basis for identification, see also ante ¶ 1303.
Basis or predicate for expert's opinion, see post §§ 292-297.
Restriction of expert opinions to predicated facts, see post § 293.
Experience and knowledge sufficient to qualify witness as an expert, see post §§ 270-291.
Observed mutual behavior as basis for conclusion as to existence of promise of marriage, see Breach of Promise to Marry § 5.
Want of knowledge as rendering witness incompetent, see also Witnesses, II.
Knowledge of reputation or character sufficient to qualify witness to truth and veracity of other witness, see Witnesses, VI.

¶ 1422. Only experts can be allowed to testify to their opinions, based upon the testimony they may have heard in a cause, and then only upon a matter of skill.—Daniels v. Mosher, 2 Mich. 183.

¶ 1423. A seller of merchandise cannot give his opinion that he has been the victim of short weighing over a period of years and thereupon state the estimated average weight of the articles sold and thus arrive at the supposed shortage.—Reid v. Ladue, 66 Mich. 22.

¶ 1424. In an action upon a note given for a particular machine, testimony by witnesses who have never seen the machine work, that other machines of the same kind made by the same vendors work satisfactorily, is inadmissible.—Second Nat. Bank v. Wheeler, 75 Mich. 546.

¶ 1425. In an action for negligent injury nonmedical witnesses who had worked with plaintiff in the hayfield and at other kinds of labor before and after the injury may testify as to his ability to do as good a day's work after he was hurt as before.—Langworthy v. Township of Green, 88 Mich. 207.

¶ 1426. It is not error to exclude a question to a witness as to what was the cause of a dock's failing to stand, where he was not an expert and no knowledge of the facts on his part was shown.—Munroe v. Godkin, 111 Mich. 183.

¶ 1427. Plaintiff's opinion not based upon any knowledge of facts testified to by himself or any one else, as to the cause of a saw's failing to operate in the usual manner, whereby an injury is claimed to have been received, is not admissible as evidence of the cause sought to be proved, or as tending in any degree to establish it.—Johnson v. Hovey, 98 Mich. 343.

Experiments to give data for opinion, see post § 253.

¶ 1428. The answer "no" of a witness to the question whether a certain association had any financial responsibility or property, imports knowledge, and it need not appear how he acquired such knowledge.—Harrison Granite Co. v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 145 Mich. 712.

¶ 1429. Without some preliminary showing of his means of knowledge a witness cannot testify as to the reason that induced another person to flee the country.—Tanner v. Page, 106 Mich. 155.

¶ 1430. Ordinary railway travelers are not presumed to form, while riding, such habits of observation as will make their opinion as to the speed of trains reliable.—Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Huntley, 38 Mich. 537.

¶ 1431. Opinion testimony as to the speed of trains should not be merely relative without some standard of rapidity, but should, at least approximately, show the real rate and show that it was unsafe, before the question whether it was negligent can be left to the jury.—Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Huntley, 38 Mich. 537.

¶ 1432. The speed of trains is not a matter for scientific testimony, but it cannot be shown from the opinions of passengers observing only from the inside, unless their experience and observation is such as to make their judgment reliable.—Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Huntley, 38 Mich. 537.

¶ 1433. In a personal injury case caused by a collision with an automobile, a witness who was an occupant of the carriage run down by the automobile who testified that the automobile was but 20 feet from the horse's head when first discovered, and that the auto made no noise heard by him when approaching, and that when running at a high rate of speed it makes but little noise, and when running at low speed it makes much more noise, is not competent to testify as to the rate of speed of the auto on the occasion in question, having no reasonable opportunity to judge it.—Wright v. Crane, 142 Mich. 508.

¶ 1434. The testimony of a witness that two men voted who were not registered voters, that he saw their ballots as they were handed by the voters to the inspector, and that he is confident they were straight democratic tickets, is not objectionable as testifying from the appearance of a folded ticket, when it does not appear that was his sole source of information.—Harbaugh v. People ex rel. Cicott, 33 Mich. 241.

¶ 1435. An estimate of the number of printed labels requisite to supply various match factories, based on hearsay, and without furnishing any data on which it is founded, is not proper testimony of the amount required for that purpose, and its admission, to prove the improbability that a contract would be made for printing so large a number as that claimed to have been agreed on for defendant's factory, was erroneous.—Owen v. Union Match Co., 48 Mich. 348.

¶ 1436. A witness having knowledge of the value of replevied goods may testify as to their value.—Arnstine Brothers & Mier v. Treat, 71 Mich. 561.

¶ 1437. Where the value of a set of furniture of unique pattern designed by plaintiff and having no ascertained market value is in question, a witness who has worked thereon for some months and who has testified that he knows how much time plaintiff spent upon it may state how much it would cost to replace it or to make another just like it.—Ruppel v. Adrian Furniture Mfg. Co., 96 Mich. 455.

¶ 1438. In a suit to recover the amount of a claim against an estate for services rendered deceased, witnesses who have some knowledge of the services rendered and the value thereof, may testify to an opinion as to such value.—In re McNamara's Estate, 155 Mich. 585; McNamara v. Michigan Trust Co., Id.

¶ 1439. One Bolin was active as a promoter in selling stock in a corporation and knew all about its details. In an action of deceit by plaintiff, who was induced by defendant through Bolin to purchase stock, held, Bolin was competent to testify as to the value of the stock.—Diel v. Kellogg, 163 Mich. 162.

¶ 1440. Testimony by an administrator as to the value of legal services performed by the intestate is competent where a history of the services is given.—Walbridge v. Tuller, 125 Mich. 218.

¶ 1441. In an action for breach of warranty in the sale of fruit trees testimony of the value of fruit land is admissible although the witness testifies he knew of no sale of fruit land.—Long v. Pruyn, 128 Mich. 57.

¶ 1442. In a suit by a father as administrator to recover for loss of services for the death of his child, it is error to permit a witness to estimate the value of the child's services, where his opinion is based on no knowledge.—Feldman v. Detroit United Ry., 162 Mich. 486.

§ 251. ——As to sanity or mental state.

Admissibility of opinions, see ante § 239.
Matters for lay witnesses and experts respectively, see ante § 244.
Subjects for experts, see post § 259.
Basis for conclusion that persons assented to given proposal, see ante ¶ 1360.

¶ 1443. A nonprofessional witness, in giving his opinion as to a person's sanity, can speak only from personal observation, and his opinion is not admissible in evidence if he does not, as far as possible, explain to the jury the grounds for it.—Rice v. Rice, 50 Mich. 448.

¶ 1444. An intimate acquaintance of five years with a testatrix, terminating six years before she made her will, and frequent conversations with her during that period about her children, her life, and the hardships she had gone through, do not render the witness testifying to such facts competent to express an opinion as to the competency of the testatrix to make the will.—Buys v. Buys, 99 Mich. 354.

¶ 1445. Where a witness in a will contest showed by his testimony that he had met decedent on the average of twice a week during a period of ten years preceding testator's death and had observed him in various business transactions in the bank with which witness was connected and deceased did business, it was not error to allow witness to testify that decedent was the equal of the average business man and could not be influenced in business transactions against his will.—In re Sparks' Estate, 198 Mich. 421; Hodgman v. Sears, Id.

¶ 1446. Witnesses in a will contest should not be permitted to state opinions as to the mental incompetency of the deceased until they have given evidence of having made sufficient observations upon which to base such opinion.—In re McMaster's Estate, 163 Mich. 210; Cooper v. Harlow, Id.

¶ 1447. A witness who appears to have been well acquainted with an injured child since the time of the injury is competent to give an opinion whether he is an ordinary bright child.—Keyser v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co., 66 Mich. 390.

¶ 1448. The opinion of a witness upon the question of testator's competency is admissible only when it appears that the witness was sufficiently acquainted with him to be able to form an opinion; and the trial judge may properly require the witness to state all of the circumstances upon which his opinion is based before permitting him to state his opinion, and perhaps it would not be a great stretch of discretion if he permitted cross-examination before allowing the opinion to be given.—O'Connor v. Madison, 98 Mich. 183.

¶ 1449. Nonexpert and nonprofessional witnesses, before being permitted to give an opinion as to the mental competency of a testator, must state facts and circumstances as a basis for their opinion.—In re Hogmire's Appeal, 108 Mich. 410.

¶ 1450. Before a witness may express an opinion as to the mental competency of the testatrix in a will contest, he must state the facts and circumstances upon which he bases such opinion.—In re Hoyles' Estate, 162 Mich. 275.

¶ 1451. A witness' opinion that her aged father was incompetent to execute a deed is not sufficiently supported by her testimony that he sometimes addressed her by the name of one of his other children, that he lost his way several times in the city, that he sometimes cried, seemed low-spirited, and sat all day without talking except when some one spoke to him, in which case he answered intelligently.—Lynch v. Doran, 95 Mich. 395.

¶ 1452. A witness who has described looks and actions and language of a testator, inconsistent with a normal state of mind is properly permitted to express an opinion that he was mentally unsound.—Rivard v. Rivard, 109 Mich. 98.

¶ 1453. The opinion of witnesses as to mental incompetency is of no weight unless they state facts tending to show it.—Ramsdell v. Ramsdell, 128 Mich. 110.

¶ 1454. It is improper in a will contest to take the testimony of a witness of two or three erratic detached acts of the testatrix of doubtful significance and then permit the witness to give an opinion that the person was insane or incompetent.—Page v. Beach, 134 Mich. 51.

¶ 1455. In a will contest, testimony that the witness visited the testatrix soon after the death of her husband, that when asked how old she was she cried, that she was sitting up in apparent good physical health but fleshy and old and most of the time half crying, that the witness was there half an hour and never saw her before or after, is insufficient to justify taking the witness' testimony as to the mental capacity of the testatrix.—Page v. Beach, 134 Mich. 51.

¶ 1456. Testimony of witnesses tending to show eccentricities on the part of the testator beginning years before and continuing to and increasing until his death, formed sufficient basis for opinions as to such testator's mental incapacity, even though such witnesses had only slight acquaintance with the testator.—Roberts v. Bidwell, 136 Mich. 191.

¶ 1458. The opinion of a witness that a testator was sane is competent, where it appears that he was well acquainted with the testator, and had never seen anything unusual in his speech or actions; but before a witness can express an opinion that the testator was insane, he must testify to something that the latter said or did fairly tending to show insanity.—Lamb v. Lippincott, 115 Mich. 611.

¶ 1460. The extent of nonexpert testimony must depend upon the familiarity of the witness with the testator, the character of the disqualification, the nature and number of extraordinary circumstances detailed, and proximity to the act involved in point of time; and, taken as a whole, they should move the judicial discretion of the trial judge by apprising him that the witness may fairly doubt the competency of the person upon reasonable grounds; and this discretion must be carefully exercised.—O'Connor v. Madison, 98 Mich. 183.

¶ 1462. Nonexpert witnesses may not express opinions as to the mental incompetency of a testatrix where they have testified to no facts inconsistent with sanity.—Graves v. Northrop, 190 Mich. 377; In re Curtis' Estate, Id.

¶ 1463. On a petition by a woman to be relieved of guardianship on the ground of incompetency, an answer to a question propounded to a witness as to whether he deemed petitioner mentally competent to have charge of her affairs, held properly excluded on the ground that no foundation had been laid where the witness detailed nothing on which to base an opinion that she was not mentally competent to have charge of her affairs.—In re Stroebel, 194 Mich. 634; Appeal of Runge, Id.

§ 252. ——As to handwriting or signatures.

Subjects for experts, see post § 260.
Qualifications of experts, see post §§ 276, 277.
Knowledge as qualifying expert, see post § 277.

¶ 1464. In proving handwriting in general no particular amount of skill is required in the witness.—Vinton v. Peck, 14 Mich. 287.

¶ 1465. Any experience in using pen and ink will qualify a person of ordinary capacity to form and express an opinion whether one writing was with the same ink as another, though it might be of small weight in doubtful cases.—Vinton v. Peck, 14 Mich. 287.

¶ 1466. A mortgagee's wife, who has never seen the mortgagor and never saw him write is incompetent to testify as to his handwriting in letters received from him acknowledging the debt.—Carr v. Carr, 138 Mich. 396.

Comparisons by experts, see post §§ 296, 297.

¶ 1467. An experiment by a witness at a railroad crossing placing himself at or near the spot described where plaintiff first saw an approaching train, and then when a train approached testing the time required to cross at the supposed speed made by plaintiff, is inadmissible as invading the province of the jury and, where the speed and traverse of the train are not established, as lacking in necessary data for comparison.—Klanowski v. Grand Trunk R. Co., 64 Mich. 279, per Campbell, C. J., and Champlin, J.

B. EXPERT OPINIONS.

1. Subjects for and qualifications of witness.

§ 254. In general; proper subjects and scope.

Matters for lay and expert opinions respectively, see ante §§ 241-247.
Qualifications of experts, see post §§ 270-291.
Formation of hypothetical question to exclude opinion on ultimate issues, see post § 299.
Hypothetical questions propounding direct issues, see post § 305.
Necessity that opinion be responsive to question and within the assumed hypothesis, see post § 305.
Weight and effect of expert testimony, see post § 600.
Direct evidence overcoming opinions, see post § 600.
Conclusion by party stated out of court as hearsay, see post ¶ 1748.
Competency of physicians to testify of exclamations of pain or complaints of sickness offered as res gestæ, see post §§ 453-456.
Motion to strike improper opinion or extraneous matter therein, see Trial, V, C.
Relevancy and sufficiency of opinions to prove values, see Values.
Expert evidence in trials for crime, see Indictment, VIII, B.

¶ 1470. The opinions of physicians are admissible when confined to medical inferences from hypothetical facts based on the testimony.—Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Martin, 41 Mich. 667.

¶ 1471. An expert witness cannot be asked whether, in his opinion, the jury would be justified in basing a verdict upon his testimony.—Strudgeon v. Village of Sand Beach, 107 Mich. 496.

¶ 1472. Expert testimony to show the character and quality of goods sold and delivered is admissible, in an action for the price thereof, where the buyer alleges in defense, fraud and misrepresentations on the part of the seller in the inception of the contract of sale.—Lyon v. Linblad, 145 Mich. 588.

Evidence to impeach or refute opinions by showing false premises or bad reasoning, see Witnesses, VI, D.

¶ 1473. In an action for personal injuries alleged to have resulted from an electric shock, held not erroneous to permit plaintiff's physician to rebut the diagnosis of defendant's physicians.—Sykes v. Village of Portland, 193 Mich. 86.

§ 256. Professional and trade skill and practices.

with him to attend a case of confinement, a competent witness may testify as to the custom among physicians in regard to calling assistance in such cases.—De May v. Roberts, 46 Mich. 160.

¶ 1475. In an action for malpractice physicians and surgeons may testify whether the treatment as detailed by other witnesses was proper or improper.—Spaulding v. Bliss, 83 Mich. 311.

§ 257. Bodily conditions, causes and effects, and prognosis.

Limits and extent of admissible lay opinions or observations, see ante § 243.
Lay opinions as to intoxication, see ante § 240.
As to expectancy of life, see post § 258.
Mental conditions, see post § 259.
Animal injuries and pathology, see post § 268.
Admissibility of rebutting opinions, see ante § 255.
Qualifications of expert, see post § 273.
Basis or predicate for opinion, see post §§ 292-297.
Opinion of physician as to condition of woman explaining nature of assault, see also Assault ¶ 103.
Medical opinions as to probable consequences as evidence of damages from personal injury, see Damages § 322.

¶ 1476. A physician may testify whether a cause which it is alleged existed would, in his opinion as a medical man, suffice to produce a condition claimed to have resulted from such cause.—Lacas v. Detroit City R. Co., 92 Mich. 412.

¶ 1477. In an action for an assault with intent to ravish, plaintiff's physician was properly allowed to testify that after the assault he found her in a condition for which he could not account until he heard of the attempted outrage, and that he was satisfied that if the fact was true it would account for her state.—Fay v. Swan, 44 Mich. 544.

¶ 1478. It is proper to permit a medical witness, who examined the injury and treated it, to state that the injury suffered "could be produced" from the cause sued on.—Boehm v. City of Detroit, 141 Mich. 277; Bush v. St. Joseph & B. H. St. Ry. Co., 113 Mich. 513.

¶ 1480. Where there is evidence in the case from which the jury may find that a healthy, robust child with perfectly sound legs was injured by stepping into a hole in a walk and that directly after the injury an abscess formed, a medical witness may properly state that the abscess might have been caused by straining the leg; and the presence of proof that there was any straining of the leg is not a necessary predicate for his opinion.—Boehm v. City of Detroit, 141 Mich. 277.

¶ 1481. In an action for an injury to the plaintiff's arm a medical expert may be asked to give his opinion whether the condition alleged could coexist with the fact of the plaintiff's ability to use her arm in the manner witnessed by the jury.—Graves v. City of Battle Creek, 95 Mich. 266.

¶ 1482. The physician who treated plaintiff for personal injuries may testify whether or not, in his judgment, plaintiff will continue to suffer pain, and whether she will be able to perform her household duties.—Holman v. Union St. R. Co., 114 Mich. 208.

¶ 1483. Inasmuch as it is competent for a surgeon to testify that a physical injury would render useless for work the injured member, a physician familiar with the injury may testify to the degree of impairment; and a question as to how much in the physician's opinion the injuries reduced the plaintiff's physical ability to perform manual labor was admissible as against the objection it was pure "speculation."—McDonald v. City Elec. Ry. Co., 144 Mich. 379.

¶ 1484. Plaintiff was injured by the breaking of a seat board in defendant's grand stand, whereby she fell to the ground. Held, that it was proper to permit plaintiff's physician to testify that her present injuries were due to the fall.—Logan v. Agricultural Society Lenawee County, 156 Mich. 537.

¶ 1485. In an action for damages for personal injuries, it is proper for a physician who has made a physical examination of plaintiff to state in his testimony before the jury that in his opinion the plaintiff could not control the manifestations made upon the application of certain physical tests, and as to others, that he might control them in part.—Marshall v. Wabash R. Co., 171 Mich. 180.

¶ 1486. In an action for personal injuries alleged to have resulted from an electric shock, where the testimony as to the actuality of physical injury was conflicting, and there were no external marks or indications of the shock received by the plaintiff, held that defendant's medical expert should have been permitted to testify as to whether there is a characteristic element of deception and dissimulation in the ailments of hysterical persons.—Sykes v. Village of Portland, 193 Mich. 86.

¶ 1487. A physician who has examined a patient may, in an action for damages for assault and battery, state whether or not the hearing in patient's ear has been destroyed.—Matthews v. Lamberton, 198 Mich. 746.

¶ 1489. In an action for personal injury it is proper to strike out as mere conclusions answers of plaintiff's medical witness, such as, "He is a physical wreck as well as a mental wreck. He is in that condition of health in which there is absolutely no enjoyment of life to him and can be none. There is evidence of constant pain—plenty of it."—Sterling v. City of Detroit, 134 Mich. 22.

¶ 1490. In an action for personal injuries, it is not error as calling for a conclusion to admit testimony of a doctor as to the seriousness of mental and physical shock.—Haines v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 129 Mich. 475.

¶ 1491. It is error to allow physicians and an attending nurse to give an opinion as to the reality of a plaintiff's illness and to state whether in their judgment the patient was simulating and malingering; and where the condition of the patient had been fully described to the jury it is for them to draw the conclusion.—McCormick v. Detroit, G. H. & M. Ry. Co., 141 Mich. 17.

Qualifications of experts, see post § 291.
Relevancy and sufficiency of evidence of expectancy on damage questions, see Damages §§ 329, 330; Death by Wrongful Act §§ 26, 28.
Admissibility of mortality tables on question of expectancy, see also Damages § 329.
Admissibility of expert opinions to increase or reduce individual expectancy as shown by mortality tables, see Damages § 329.
Relevancy of opinion on expectancy of life to rebut or corroborate mortality tables, see also Death by Wrongful Act ¶ 97.

¶ 1492. In a suit for injuries to a child resulting in his death under the Survival Act (Comp. Laws 1897, § 10117), it is proper to admit the testimony of an insurance expert as to the child's expectancy of life.—Love v. Detroit, J. & C. R. Co., 170 Mich. 1.

§ 259. Mental capacity or conditions.

Relative field for lay and expert opinions, see ante § 244.
Observation by attending physician as basis for opinion, see post § 295.
Relevancy and sufficiency of evidence on insanity or incompetency, see Insane Persons, I; Incompetents; Wills, III, V.

¶ 1493. The opinion of a physician as to the capacity of a testator to plan and execute a paper propounded as a will was held admissible as evidence.—McGinnis v. Kempsey, 27 Mich. 363.

§ 260. Signatures, writings, alterations, and genuineness.

Decipheration of obscure or illegible writings, see post § 261.
Qualifications of experts, who is expert, see post §§ 276, 277.
Comparisons of genuine and questioned writing as basis for opinion, see post § 297.

¶ 1494. Where the official minute books of a corporation are claimed to be the best evidence, expert testimony is admissible to show that a page, which is alleged to have been fraudulently inserted, was, judging from an examination of the book, written by a different operator on a different typewriter than another page, as indicated by the alleged differences in type, margining, punctuation, capitalizing and water marks on the paper.—Bartholomew v. Walsh, 191 Mich. 252.

As to custom of trade to explain trade terms, see post ¶ 1498.

¶ 1496. A cipher telegraph message is a proper subject for translation, and it is not improper to permit a witness to testify as to the meaning of a message sent, "Buy three May."—Carland v. Western Union Tel. Co., 118 Mich. 369.

¶ 1497. The meaning of written bulletins and rules governing the movement of railroad trains is a question for the court, and opinion evidence as to what they mean is not admissible.—Jones v. Pere Marquette R. Co., 168 Mich. 1.

§ 262. Customs, usages and matters of trade.

Admissibility of custom to explain or interpret, see ante § 166.
Relevancy and sufficiency of evidence of custom and usage, see Customs and Usages.
Qualifications of experts on customs of trade, see post § 278.

¶ 1498. A bill for belting was made out at a certain price, but the words were added,

"Less expense account, $47.46," and this was claimed to be a discount from the regular price list. Held, that the custom as to selling belting at a discount might be shown by the testimony of an experienced buyer in connection with proof of the value of the belting furnished.—Sager v. Tupper, 38 Mich. 258.

§ 263. Values and damages or loss.

Conclusions and admissible opinions, see ante § 224.
Qualifications of experts, see post §§ 286-290.
Relevancy and sufficiency of opinion proof of value, see Values.

¶ 1499. The value of services in keeping house on a farm and taking care of men there is not so far a subject upon which a jury can form an opinion as to render inadmissible expert testimony in relation thereto.—Fowler v. Fowler, 111 Mich. 676.

¶ 1500. Where the sire and dam of a colt killed by a train had been shown, it is proper in estimating the value of such colt to take the testimony of horsemen as to the value of get from such stock.—Parker v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 93 Mich. 607.

¶ 1501. The relative value of foreign and American currency is a question of commercial usage, and may be proved by any one acquainted with the usage.—Kermott v. Ayer, 11 Mich. 181.

¶ 1502. In an action on a fire insurance policy where there was dispute as to the cause of the loss of the merchandise in question, and there was an assumption that such loss was occasioned by an explosion followed by fire, an expert was permitted to give an estimate of the proportion of the loss caused by fire and the proportion caused by the uninsured fall of the building.—N. & M. Friedman Co. v. Atlas Assur. Co., 133 Mich. 212.

¶ 1503. Where, in a suit for destruction of an elevator from fire set by a locomotive, said building has no market value, an expert witness may properly be asked his opinion of the value of said elevator and its equipage for the purpose for which it was used.—Close v. Ann Arbor R. Co., 169 Mich. 392.

§ 264. Surveys, boundaries and landmarks.

What are admissible opinions or conclusions, see ante § 223.
Lay and expert questions, scope of each respectively, see ante § 245.
Qualifications of experts, see post § 279.
Field notes and other data as basis for opinion, see post ¶ 1651.

¶ 1504. A surveyor may testify as an expert that he found the corners of the land in dispute to be in accordance with the original government survey.—Hockmoth v. Des Grands Champs, 71 Mich. 520.

§ 265. Mechanics and construction.

Questions for lay or expert witnesses, see ante §§ 242, 246.
Railroad, transportation, logging, and lumbering questions, see post §§ 266, 267.
Qualifications of experts, see post § 280.
Qualifications on engineering questions, see post § 279.
Qualifications of experts on mechanical and construction questions, see post § 280.

¶ 1506. A bridge builder may testify as to the effect of the loosening of timbers forming a brace in a bridge. It is not a matter of common knowledge for the jury.—Bettys v. Township of Denver, 115 Mich. 228.

¶ 1506a. In a suit against a township for injuries arising from the sliding off of plaintiff's sled from an embankment constructed on a public road across a culvert, it is not reversible error to refuse to permit plaintiff's driver to state his opinion as to whether a railing on either side of the embankment would have been of any benefit to him.—Stanton v. Tp. of Webster, 170 Mich. 428.

¶ 1507. It is proper for one having long experience with timber, to give an opinion that the timbers of a sidewalk were so rotted for a year or so past that they would not hold a nail.—Williams v. City of Lansing, 152 Mich. 169.

¶ 1509. The incompetency of an engineer to run an engine may be shown by the opinions of others competent to testify in an action involving the liability of the master for damages for injuries to a fellow workman alleged to be due to such incompetency.—Salo v. Martin, 187 Mich. 617.

¶ 1510. A witness, shown to be experienced and expert, may give his opinion that a certain kind of insulator is ineffective to prevent the escape of current to trolley span wires, and may state that insulators of a given kind such as those in question are falling into disuse in places where they have been used.—Warren v. City Elec. Ry. Co., 141 Mich. 298.

¶ 1511. Expert engineers may express an opinion as to whether the running of a traction engine past buildings where there was inflammable material, with the damper open, and no spark arrester, was a proper operation of the engine, since it is not a matter necessarily within common knowledge as to how much the issue of sparks would be increased by an open damper.—Underwood v. A. W. Stevens Co., 149 Mich. 39.

¶ 1512. In an action for damages to a building alleged to have been caused by the negligent excavation of caisson pits on adjoining land, it would seem that a question to one skilled in such business is proper as to the effect a building of the character of the one in question usually has on neighboring buildings.—Bissell v. Ford, 176 Mich. 64.

¶ 1513. In an action for damages to plaintiff's building alleged to have been caused by the negligent excavation of caisson pits on defendant's land, when there is testimony that there was a bulging in the lagging in one of the pits on the side towards plaintiff's building, expert testimony is admissible to the effect that it is impracticable to put down such pits without leaving some space between the lagging and the earth.—Bissell v. Ford, 176 Mich. 64.

Speed or motion as matter of conclusion, see ante § 225.

Field and limits for nonexpert testimony, see ante § 246.

Qualifications of experts, see post §§ 281, 282.

¶ 1514. In an action by a brakeman against his employer for injuries received while engaged in more dangerous work, which he had been required to do, it is proper to allow a competent witness to show what the actual duties of a brakeman were in practice, in order to find how the additional duties differed therefrom. But where the witness himself was hired as train baggageman, and, like plaintiff, had been ordered to take part in the extra work, a question as to whether, in his opinion, the order called him out of the line of his duty, was immaterial.—Jones v. Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co., 49 Mich. 573.

¶ 1515. In an action against a railroad company for killing cattle, the testimony of a roadmaster as to the condition of the cattle guard in question as far as being in condition suitable to turn cattle away and prevent cattle from passing over it, should have been admitted as expert testimony, and was not a conclusion on the ultimate issues.—Johnson v. Detroit & M. Ry. Co., 135 Mich. 353.

¶ 1516. In an action based upon a refusal to pay for defective machinery placed in a steamer, expert evidence was held admissible to show the condition of the boat as fitted to receive the machinery, as, e. g., whether the stern, in which it was placed, settled more than it ought to.—Clark v. Detroit Locomotive Works, 32 Mich. 348.

Safety or danger from fires, see post ¶ 1523.

¶ 1517. Witnesses shown to be accustomed to run logs on a certain stream, and to have a knowledge of the business and the stream not possessed by ordinary persons, may state their opinions or conclusions—after giving the facts upon which they are based—as to whether any force of men could have got defendant's logs out of the stream, and whether a force should not have been put on for such purpose.—Butterfield v. Gilchrist, 63 Mich. 155.

Traits and dispositions of animals as conclusion or admissible opinion, see ante § 230.

As to value of pedigreed or blooded animals, see ante § 263.

Qualification of experts on animal questions, see post § 275.

Qualifications of experts on values, see post § 286.

¶ 1518. Expert woolgrowers may give their opinion, based on an examination of land where sheep have been kept, as to its being a proper place to keep sheep in the wintertime; but they cannot testify that the condition in which they found the sheds wherein the sheep were kept was not suitable for the purpose, it not being shown that their condition was the same as when the sheep were there some years before.—Wolscheid v. Thome, 76 Mich. 265.

¶ 1519. A mortgagee of a crop of celery when sued by the mortgagor for damage done to such crop by opening the trenches should be allowed to show by expert testimony of skilled celery growers what proper care of the crop is.—Van Werden v. Winslow, 117 Mich. 564.

¶ 1520. Plaintiff sued defendant telephone company for negligently placing one of its wires near another live wire so as to conduct a charge of electricity into the ground, killing plaintiff's horses. Defendant sought to show that the death of the horses was caused by a stroke of lightning. Held, it was proper to permit a physician and surgeon to testify in plaintiff's behalf as to whether it takes less voltage to kill a horse than a man, where said physician's learning and experience with reference to experiments with electricity were established by evidence.—Anthony v. Cass County Home Tel. Co., 165 Mich. 388.

Conclusions and admissible opinions, see ante § 229.

Questions of construction, mechanics, railroading, and logging, see ante §§ 265-267.

¶ 1521. Evidence from competent persons as to the dangerous character of machinery, and the consequences of coming in contact with it, is admissible in an action for injuries caused thereby.—Huizega v. Cutler & Savidge Lumber Co., 51 Mich. 272.

¶ 1522. In an action for injuries caused by plaintiff's falling into a hole on defendant's ground, a civil engineer may testify that the hole was a dangerous place and needed protection.—Cross v. Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co., 69 Mich. 363.

¶ 1523. It does not require any special knowledge, beyond that presumably open to a jury in a lumbering country, to determine what means would be safe or ordinarily prudent to be used to put out fires in an engine and boiler room or sawmill, and expert testimony is not admissible in that direction.—McNally v. Colwell, 91 Mich. 527.

¶ 1524. In an action against a village and a telephone company for personal injuries resulting from a shock received by a woman when she attempted to rescue her child from contact with a charged electric light wire belonging to the defendant village, and which had burned off and fallen as a result of coming in contact with wires of the telephone company because of an insecurely fastened telephone pole which swayed in the breeze and permitted the telephone wires to sag down upon the electric light wire in question, held that an expert witness for the plaintiff did not usurp the jury's functions in testifying concerning his conclusions that proximity of less than 40 inches between the wires of the two defendants was unsafe, and that the court did not err in admitting such evidence. —Sykes v. Village of Portland, 193 Mich. 86.

¶ 1525. In an action by a tile setter against one selling and delivering plaster to a plaster contractor for damages for personal injuries sustained as the result of collapse of the porch on which plaintiff was working, due to placing heavy bags of plaster upon a bay window sill and on the floor inside the building, it was error to permit the architect to answer the question "That would be a dangerous situation which any ordinarily prudent man would undoubtedly see?" since such question called for a conclusion.—Schneider v. C. H. Little Co., 200 Mich. 361.

Proof of qualifications, see post § 271.
Qualification as court or jury question, see post § 272.
Qualifications for particular subjects, see post §§ 273-291.
Basis or predicate for testimony, see post §§ 292-297.
Sources of experience of knowledge of the witness, see post §§ 294-297.
Sufficiency of book learning to qualify expert, see post § 294.

¶ 1526. Expert evidence can be rejected where the witness has no personal knowledge of the matter in controversy, and for many years has had no experience of his subject, which has changed meanwhile.—McEwen v. Bigelow, 40 Mich. 215.

§ 271. ——Evidence as to qualifications and experience.

Necessity of proof of data or facts on which opinion is predicated, see post § 293.
Impeachment or refutation of opinions, see Witnesses, VI.
Cross-examination of experts, see Examination of Witnesses, II.
Showing of experience in affidavit for capias to qualify affiant, see Civil Arrest § 10.

¶ 1527. When persons offer themselves as experts to testify respecting business in which their experience has not been very great, it is competent to call persons of greater experience, and inquire of them how much time and experience are necessary to make one an expert in respect to that business.—Mason v. Phelps, 48 Mich. 126.

¶ 1528. One expert testifying to his opinion derived from knowledge as to the qualifications of another expert should not base his opinion on general reputation.—People v. Holmes, 111 Mich. 364.

¶ 1530. In an action for negligent injury to a hearse, against a street railway company, whose car collided with the vehicle, having run down a steep grade, witnesses who have driven other street cars cannot testify to the feasibility of stopping if the brake had been in good order, where there is no evidence that they knew what brake was used on the car, or that they had ever driven the car down the incline.—Geist v. Detroit City Ry., 91 Mich. 446.

¶ 1531. In an action by a contractor against the owner of a building to recover under a contract for the installation of tile floors in defendant's building, where defendant sought to recoup on the ground that the tile was not laid in a workmanlike manner and that the floors were uneven, necessitating the doing over of the work, held that the evidence of a witness for defendant who was asked to state what it would cost to put the job in dispute which he had examined in a good and workmanlike condition and also to state why, in his opinion, the floor was not level, was properly excluded on the ground that a proper foundation had not been laid for the admission of such testimony where it also appeared that he stated that he had never laid the kind of floor that was in dispute, and that his sole experience in laying tile floors was in laying tile around fireplaces, which, he admitted, was a different kind of tile.—Forrester v. Lawson, 194 Mich. 92.

§ 272. ——As a question of law.

¶ 1532. Whether a witness has been shown to be an expert is for the trial judge to determine.—Ives v. Leonard, 50 Mich. 296.

On expectancy of life, see post § 291.

¶ 1533. One who, though not a physician or medical school graduate, has had actual experience for fifteen years with one hundred employees in the manufacture of Paris green, is competent to testify whether such patent results as paralysis, and cutaneous diseases, affecting exposed parts of the body, follow from employment in such manufacture.—Fox v. Peninsular White Lead & Color Works, 92 Mich. 243.

¶ 1535. Where, in an action for a personal injury, one of the questions involved is the competency of an employee of defendant, who was acting as head sawyer in defendant's sawmill at the time of the accident, to fill that position, it is competent for defendant's foreman and regular head sawyer, with whom said employee had worked, to testify whether or not he was a competent head sawyer.—Lewis v. Emery, 108 Mich. 641.

As to values of animals, see post § 286.

¶ 1536. An expert's qualifications depend on his experience and not upon his profession; a man may know something of horses without being a horse doctor.—Peer v. Ryan, 54 Mich. 224.

¶ 1537. The fact that one has been employed in a stable for two years and a half, where he has had charge of forty horses, and that he has, as he testifies, "watched the symptoms" of horses, does not, in the absence of any showing that he has had skill or experience in the diseases of animals, render him competent as an expert as to the cause of death of a horse.—Lewis v. Bell, 109 Mich. 189.

¶ 1538. A witness who testifies that he noticed a puff on the hind leg of a horse, which looked like a bog spavin, that he was raised on a farm with horses, has been a blacksmith for fifteen years, and has read something about spavins, is competent to testify that he does not think such a spavin would appear within a week after it was contracted, although he also testifies that he never watched one until it was fully developed, and has no practical knowledge of them.—Rogers v. Ferris, 107 Mich. 126.

Knowledge required of lay witness, see ante § 252.

¶ 1539. A conveyancer of twenty-five years' practice is entitled to express an opinion whether a signature is genuine.—Vinton v. Peck, 14 Mich. 287.

¶ 1540. Evidence that a witness can read and write, and would know his own signature, is not a sufficient foundation to permit him to testify as an expert on his own handwriting.—Pillard v. Dunn, 108 Mich. 301.

¶ 1541. Bankers may testify as to the genuineness of a treasury note.—Atwood v. Cornwall, 28 Mich. 336.

¶ 1542. The testimony of one who swears that he knows another's handwriting, either from having seen him make his signature or from business correspondence apparently signed by him, is competent in proving the latter's indorsement.—Empire Mfg. Co. v. Stuart, 46 Mich. 482.

¶ 1543. Any one who has had the proper facilities and can swear to a knowledge of the handwriting of a person is a competent witness to prove such handwriting.—Stretch v. Stretch, 191 Mich. 416.

¶ 1544. One who swears definitely that he has read a number of letters written by his brother and that he is able to identify his handwriting is a competent witness to prove the signature of the brother to a promissory note.—Stretch v. Stretch, 191 Mich. 416.

¶ 1545. Where there is no direct knowledge of handwriting, there must be something which assures the recipient of letters, in a responsible way, of their genuineness, before he can swear to their writer, or use them as comparisons of handwriting.—Pinkham v. Cockell, 77 Mich. 265.

¶ 1546. Where one or more letters, purporting to come from a certain person, are recognized by him in subsequent transactions, that may, in some cases, be admissible on questions of handwriting. But the mere receipt of letters purporting to be from a person never seen, and with whom no subsequent relations existed which were based on them as genuine, has no value as means of knowledge. So held where a witness called to prove an indorsement on a note testified that he never saw the purported indorser write, but had one or two letters from him, and saw two or three that a bank had, and thought the signature was his.—Pinkham v. Cockell, 77 Mich. 265.

¶ 1548. It was competent for a witness who was a builder to state what is meant among mechanics when the term "smokestack" is used.—Skelton v. Fenton Electric Light & Power Co., 100 Mich. 87.

Questions for experts, see ante §§ 245, 264.
On mechanics, construction, railroads, speed or distance, and mining questions, see post §§ 280-283.

See also ante § 265 and ante ¶¶ 1531, 1548.
Qualification of witness as to competency of workmen, see ante § 274.
On sawmill operations, see post § 284.

¶ 1550. One does not become qualified as an expert to testify as to the cost of an alteration in an engine by talking with machinists and mechanics about it.—Wickes Bros. v. Swift Electric Light Co., 70 Mich. 322.

¶ 1551. In an action for injuries from the nonrepair of a bridge, a witness whose testimony showed that he was possessed of more than ordinary skill in such matters, and who testified that he had examined the premises thoroughly a few minutes after the accident (the falling of an engine through a bridge) occurred, and that he saw the lugs and joists, the appearance of which he described, may be asked by what reason the engine went down.—Woodbury v. City of Owosso, 64 Mich. 239.

¶ 1552. A witness who is shown to have some knowledge of and to have had some experience with elevators and safety devices may testify as an expert in an action for injuries caused by the fall of an elevator, although he has never had any experience with an elevator with a safety device similar to that used in the elevator in question.—Hall v. Murdock, 114 Mich. 233.

¶ 1553. A witness who had been a locomotive engineer for five or six years, who had known stay bolts to break, and seen them taken off, and who had been in railroad shops a great deal during the time mentioned, was competent to testify whether the bolts examined by him had been recently broken.—Woods v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co., 108 Mich. 396.

¶ 1554. In an action for personal injuries, testimony of an expert boiler maker, as to the safety and value of a home-made mechanical device used on the safety valve of a boiler which exploded is properly admitted.—Beunk v. Valley City Desk Co., 128 Mich. 562.

¶ 1555. In an action by an employee for injuries received by the breaking of a saw, it is competent for witnesses who are shown to be familiar with such saws, and who have had large experience in their use, and know their strength, and the force to which they are subjected, to testify that in their judgment the saw in question was suitable and safe for use.—Lau v. Fletcher, 104 Mich. 295.

¶ 1556. A witness who has been in the soda fountain business for 20 years, is qualified to give his opinion as to why a particular soda fountain failed to work.—Tufts v. Verkuyl, 124 Mich. 242.

¶ 1557. One who had worked five years about trolley span wires insulated as defendant's were, and who during that time found many hot wires, may testify as an expert that the insulation was unfit to prevent their becoming hot from the current passing into them.—Warren v. City Elec. Ry. Co., 141 Mich. 298.

¶ 1558. An expert who has observed the operation of an electric motor three dozen times, is qualified to give an opinion as to whether it was operated carefully or otherwise.—H. J. Reedy Co. v. Cameron, 163 Mich. 638.

¶ 1559. A person who is employed by defendant for the purpose of looking after and repairing its machines, may testify as an expert, with regard thereto.—Clemens v. Gem Fibre Package Co., 153 Mich. 495.

¶ 1560. A university instructor in metallurgical and qualitative analysis who does practically all the metallurgical analysis and microscopic work along metallurgical lines in the university, is competent to testify as an expert concerning the condition as to softness or temper of a steel hammer.—Potvin v. West Bay City Shipbuilding Co., 156 Mich. 201.

¶ 1561. Admission of opinion evidence tending to show that the stakes of a show tent should not have been driven vertically, at right angles with the earth, and should have been driven at another angle, given by witnesses not shown to have had any experience in securing such tents to the earth, held to be erroneous.—Jacobs v. Hagenbeck-Wallace Shows, 198 Mich. 73, 16 N. C. C. A. 535.

§ 281. ——On railroad and transportation questions.

On navigation and shipping, see post § 285.
Competency of brakeman to testify how lumber is customarily piled alongside tracks, see also Customs § 7.

¶ 1562. An experienced conductor is presumed to know whether ties are fit for use.—Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Huntley, 38 Mich. 537.

¶ 1564. The testimony of one who had had seventeen years' experience as motorman and conductor, who was familiar with the place where the accident occurred and with the car in question, was properly admitted as to the distance within which a car could be stopped, running at various rates of speed, at the place where the car struck plaintiff.—Bladecka v. Bay City Traction & Electric Co., 155 Mich. 253.

¶ 1565. Where it is shown that a former motorman operated all of a street car company's freight cars before another street car company took control of them and renumbered them, and that a certain renumbered car was one of such cars, he may properly answer a hypothetical question as to the distance within which he could stop such car when traveling at a specified speed with a specified amount of freight therein.—Walter v. Detroit, J. & C. Ry. Co., 191 Mich. 667.

¶ 1566. Evidence that plaintiff had been a passenger on freight trains many times, and had frequently seen them "come together," established his competency to testify that the shock produced upon the occasion in question was the hardest he had ever experienced from coupling cars, although it did not specifically appear that he had been on such trains when couplings were being made.—Moore v. Saginaw, T. & H. R. Co., 115 Mich. 103.

¶ 1567. A locomotive engineer is competent to state whether a cracked push bar on the engine would have stood the shock of coupling if sound.—McDonald v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 108 Mich. 7.

¶ 1568. Witnesses who have worked as motormen for a street railway, and have run over a certain line a part of the time, are competent to testify as to whether the use of sand and sand boxes on the cars is necessary to make the track safe.—Mayer v. Detroit, Y., A. A. & J. Ry., 152 Mich. 276.

¶ 1569. On an issue as to whether a locomotive from which sparks escaped and set fire to a building, was in good order and properly managed, within the meaning of Comp. Laws 1897, § 6295, locomotive engineers of several years' experience were competent to testify from their observation and experience as to the distance burning sparks would be carried if the engine was in proper order, although on cross-examination they stated that they had made no scientific tests, were not familiar with the law of independence of motion, and were not competent physicists.—Potter v. Grand Trunk Western Ry. Co., 157 Mich. 216.

¶ 1570. In an action for the destruction of an ice house by fire set by defendant's locomotive, an engineer of 22 years' experience was qualified to testify as an expert as to whether or not an engine in good condition for arresting sparks could set a fire 40 or 50 feet from the track.—Union Ice Co. v. Detroit & Mackinac Ry. Co., 178 Mich. 346.

¶ 1571. In an action for injuries caused by plaintiff's falling into a hole on defendant railroad's ground, a civil engineer may testify that the hole was a dangerous place and needed protection.—Cross v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 69 Mich. 363.

§ 282. ——As to speed, times and distances.

Judicial notice of locomotive engineer's business to estimate speeds, see ante ¶ 115.
Competency of laymen to give opinions, see also ante §§ 225, 247.
Speed compatible with control of cars, see also ante ¶¶ 1563-1565.

¶ 1572. A person who has timed trains many times is competent to testify as to the speed.—Thomas v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co., 86 Mich. 496.

Thomas v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co., 86 Mich. 496.

¶ 1574. A witness who testifies that he has seen bodies move and in motion a good many times and has seen horses trot and run, is not qualified to give an opinion as to the rate of speed of a hand car.—Mott v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co., 120 Mich. 127.

¶ 1577. Witnesses who had lived two or three years in houses fronting a railroad track not more than three or four rods from it and who have observed the rates of speed of trains are competent to express an opinion as to the rate of speed of a particular train, particularly as to whether it was going at a high or a low rate of speed.—Garran v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 144 Mich. 26.

¶ 1578. A person who has been employed as a brakeman on a steam railroad, and who has also frequently ridden with street car motormen, is competent to express an opinion as to the speed of a street car at the time of an accident.—Millette v. Detroit United Ry., 186 Mich. 634.

¶ 1579. One who has driven a vehicle in a city for years and ridden upon and observed the speed of street cars, is competent to express an opinion as to the speed of a car at the time of an accident.—Millette v. Detroit United Ry., 186 Mich. 634.

¶ 1580. A plaintiff who is accustomed to watch automobiles, who has ridden in them himself, and who saw the auto in question approaching for some distance, is competent to testify in a personal injury suit that its speed exceeded ten miles an hour.—Matia v. Rapid Motor Vehicle Co., 160 Mich. 639.

¶ 1581. A railroad locomotive engineer of long experience is a competent judge of the speed of an automobile which passes his engine, although he sees it only while passing over a space of twenty feet.—Harnau v. Haight, 189 Mich. 600, 13 N. C. C. A. 566.

¶ 1582. The cost per ton of mining ore may be testified to by a witness who has shown himself competent to express an opinion upon the subject.—Hartford Iron Min. Co. v. Cambria Min. Co., 93 Mich. 90.

¶ 1583. Miners with practical experience in such work are qualified to give opinion evidence as to the proper method of building a raise or chute in a mine.—Ranta v. Newport Min. Co., 180 Mich. 459.

As to values, see post §§ 286, 289, 290.

¶ 1584. In an action against a boom company for obstructing a river and thereby preventing plaintiff from putting his logs therein, a witness who testifies that he has put logs into the river for twenty-seven years, driving logs part of the time, may give an opinion whether defendant handled the logs as well as they could have been handled to prevent the jam.—Coburn v. Muskegon Booming Co., 72 Mich. 134.

¶ 1585. A witness is competent to testify as to the competency of plaintiff as a sawyer where, although he is not a sawyer himself, he has had a long experience in sawmills, has observed plaintiff's work, was able to compare it with that of others, and where he testified to other matters, such as the causes for "pulling off a saw," which rendered him competent to give an opinion.—Alexander v. Mud Lake Lumber Co., 153 Mich. 70.

¶ 1586. In an action for damages to land and timber due to overflow, held that a witness who had had some experience as an estimator of timber was properly qualified to testify as an expert regarding the amount of timber destroyed.—Colwell v. Alpena Power Co., 190 Mich. 255.

¶ 1587. In an action for the price of railroad ties a witness who states that he has shipped railroad ties to a certain market and seen the reports of the inspection sent back from there may state what an inspection according to the rules of that market would show with regard to a certain lot of ties with which he is familiar, although he may not have been present when the count was made in the place of inspection, and he could not impeach that count.—Lehigh v. Standard Tie Co., 149 Mich. 102.

On logging and lumbering, see ante § 284.

¶ 1588. A general custom of navigation, like that for vessels to pass each other to the left, may be proved by the testimony of persons skilled in navigation.—Drew v. The Chesapeake, 2 D. 33.

§ 286. ——As to values and prices or damages.

As to mining costs, see ante ¶ 1582.
On timber quantities and estimates, see ante § 284.

As to land values, see post § 287.
As to value of services or labor, see post § 288.
As to value of one's own services or property, see post § 289.
As to depreciation or loss, see post § 290.
As to damage or loss by fire, see post § 290.
Competency of one to testify of the value of his own goods or property, see post § 289.
Proof of character or description of articles to afford basis for valuation, see post § 293.
Personal examination of object as basis for opinion, see post § 295.

¶ 1589. A farmer who testifies that he is acquainted with the market value of horses may testify to what the value of a particular horse would be on the hypothesis that it is not a blooded animal.—Browne v. Moore, 32 Mich. 254.

¶ 1590. A witness who has shown himself to be possessed of a sufficient knowledge of the market value of horses to entitle him to speak upon the subject is competent to testify, in an action for breach of warranty of a horse, as to the value of the horse in question.—Connell v. McNett, 109 Mich. 329.

¶ 1591. Proof of a witness' competency to testify as to the value of horses and carriages, is not sufficient proof of his competency to testify as to the value of any other articles belonging to a livery outfit.—Mulholland v. Kelsey, 166 Mich. 269.

¶ 1592. A workman in a sawmill, if familiar with the prices of lumber at the mill, is a competent witness as to the value of particular lumber cut in the neighborhood and taken there for manufacture.—Skeels v. Starrett, 57 Mich. 350.

¶ 1593. A married woman sued for the seizure of some goods in which she owned an undivided half interest. Held, that as she had shown a knowledge on the estimate, her subject of the aggregate value of the goods taken was admissible; and as the amount of sales was an element in arriving at the true condition of the stock, it was also proper to allow her to state the value of the goods sold out of the store during her own attendance on the store.—Keables v. Christie, 47 Mich. 594.

¶ 1594. Testimony as to the "general value" of a stock of second-hand drugs by a witness who, though he has been in the drug business for twenty-four years, knows nothing of the stock in question, is properly excluded.—Showman v. Lee, 86 Mich. 556.

¶ 1595. A witness who testifies that he has been in the drug business for a number of years, and is very familiar with a stock of drugs, which he assisted in inventorying at time of their purchase, and is acquainted with the value of such goods, is competent to testify as to their market value.—Showman v. Lee, 86 Mich. 556.

¶ 1596. A witness who testifies to having handled engines for ten years, as engineer, but who is not shown to have any knowledge as to the value of threshing machines, is not competent to testify as to such value.—Woods v. Gaar, Scott & Co., 99 Mich. 301.

¶ 1598. In an action upon the breach of a contract for the sale of an insurance business, which contained a guaranty that the value of commissions upon the business then in force and for one renewal, amounted to a stated sum, witnesses who were familiar with the insurance business and had knowledge of what makes such a business valuable, were competent to testify to the effect that the value of an insurance business depended largely upon the value of the business which was likely to be renewed; although they had no particular knowledge of the business in question.—Graves v. Kennedy, 119 Mich. 621.

¶ 1599. A party who has been in the business of selling the particular patterns, the value of which is in question, for one year and a half, is competent to testify as to their wholesale market value.—Hines v. Pictorial Review Co., 192 Mich. 256.

¶ 1600. In an action for conversion of an automobile a witness who has handled automobiles a number of years and had driven the particular car was qualified to testify as to the value of the car.—Ward v. Carey, 200 Mich. 217.

¶ 1601. In a suit against a railway to recover for a building destroyed by sparks from a locomotive, an experienced contractor and builder who has made most of the improvements upon said building and has taken contracts for the erection of buildings in which the cost of painting was included in the bid made, is a competent witness to give an opinion of the cost of painting the building in question.—Close v. Ann Arbor R. Co., 169 Mich. 392.

§ 287. ——As to land values and damages.
See also post ¶ 1667.
As to damage or depreciation, see post § 290.

¶ 1602. One need not be a real-estate dealer to testify as to the value of real estate.—Huff v. Hall, 56 Mich. 456.

¶ 1603. A farmer who has resided for several years in the vicinity of the premises in question and is well acquainted with them—who owns land near by and knows of the purchase and sale of lands in the neighborhood—is competent to testify as to the value of the premises.—Wallace v. Finch, 24 Mich. 255.

¶ 1604. Opinions as to the value of land may be given by farmers, though not residents of the immediate vicinity, if they have examined it and made the usual inquiries to inform themselves.—Stone v. Covell, 29 Mich. 359.

¶ 1605. Witnesses who have knowledge of grape culture and of the value of grape vines may testify to the value of vines upon land sought to be condemned for a street, even though it is insisted that such vines are of peculiar value.—City of Detroit v. Robinson, 93 Mich. 426.

¶ 1606. In an action by the owner of property sold by a broker under an agreement not to sell for less than $35,000, wherein he sought to recover part of the commission based on a sale made on a basis of $35,000, and wherein other real estate had been taken as part payment, evidence of expert real estate men as to the actual value of the property taken in exchange was admissible, the real issue involved being the actual amount of the consideration of the sale.—Yore v. Meshew, 146 Mich. 80.

¶ 1607. The testimony of a witness, who is a farmer and has resided in the vicinity where a particular tract of land is located, and is familiar with it, and knows the value of other lands in the vicinity, as based upon the sale price, as to the value of the tract in question, is admissible in an action by the purchaser of such tract for damages because of alleged fraudulent statements as to value made by vendor.—McCormick v. Bradbury, 187 Mich. 512.

¶ 1608. The testimony of a witness who states that he does not know the market value of land in the vicinity of a particular tract, the purchaser of which is suing for damages for alleged false representations as to value made by vendor, is inadmissible upon the question of value.—McCormick v. Bradbury, 187 Mich. 512.

¶ 1609. The opinions and estimates of eye-witnesses acquainted with the premises and the surroundings are admissible to show the extent of damage done by overflowing land. —Enright v. Hartsig, 46 Mich. 469.

¶ 1610. Witnesses who are familiar with a particular residence property and have an adequate knowledge of real estate and rental values in the city in which such residence is located are competent witnesses to testify as to the depreciation in the rental value of such residence property due to the construction of a railroad in the street in front of it.—Plantenga v. Grand Rapids Terminal Ry. Co., 190 Mich. 661.

§ 288. ——As to value of services or labor.

Competency of one to testify of value of his own services or labor, see post § 289.

As to probable earnings, see post § 291.

Comparisons as basis for opinion, see post § 296.

Testimony of associate of attorney as to value of services, see also Attorneys ¶ 155.

¶ 1611. Neighbors who have employed servants to do like work are competent to testify to the value of the services of a girl employed to do housework.—Carter v. Carter, 36 Mich. 207.

¶ 1612. A woman who frequently visited the home of a decedent, and is familiar with the services rendered the latter in the household by another, is competent to testify as to the value thereof.—Bolthouse v. De-Spelder, 181 Mich. 153.

¶ 1613. In an action against an estate to recover the value of services rendered to deceased, held that the opinion of neighbors as to the value of the services of plaintiff was admissible.—Maynard v. Schrumpf's Estate, 192 Mich. 494.

¶ 1614. The admission of the opinion of a witness living in one place as to the value of services performed at another is not error where there is nothing to show that he did not know the value of labor at the latter place or the comparative value of wages at both.—Kent Furniture Mfg. Co. v. Ransom, 46 Mich. 416.

¶ 1615. Witnesses who employed a farm laborer at or about the time he was working for another person, or who knew the character of his work for those who did so, are competent to give an opinion as to the value of his work.—Ritter v. Daniels, 47 Mich. 617.

¶ 1616. In an action against an estate for services rendered to decedent by way of attendance and companionship, a witness who, together with claimant, resided in decedent's house, and who showed herself possessed of a general knowledge of the physical condition of decedent, and of the necessity for care, and of the kind of care furnished by claimant, was properly permitted to give an estimate, based on the conditions described, as to the value of the services rendered.—Lathrop v. Sinclair, 110 Mich. 329.

¶ 1617. A witness who had been a carriage manufacturer for many years, and had hired trimmers by the piece, although not by the day, is competent to testify as to the value of trimmers' services by the day, in the absence of a showing of incompetency on cross-examination.—Hialey v. Hialey's Estate, 157 Mich. 45.

¶ 1618. An attorney's services in managing, probating and settling a decedent's estate are professional, meriting compensation as such, and an expert may testify as to their value.—Turnbull v. Richardson, 69 Mich. 400; Kelley v. Richardson, 69 Mich. 430.

¶ 1620. A lawyer of experience with lumbermen as clients, may give his opinion as to the value of the services of a lawyer employed as such in managing, administering and settling an estate mainly consisting of large lumber interests; and this although purely business matters are somewhat involved in such services.—Kelley v. Richardson, 69 Mich. 430.

¶ 1621. A witness who is not an attorney is incompetent to testify to the value of professional services rendered by an attorney.—Howell v. Smith, 108 Mich. 350.

¶ 1622. The defendant in a suit brought by attorneys to recover for professional services testified that he had had some experience in employing counsel, and had employed as good attorneys as plaintiffs, and those who were in as good standing in the profession, and had had occasion to settle with them. Held, that this testimony did not render the defendant competent to state what plaintiffs' services were worth.—Howell v. Smith, 108 Mich. 350.

§ 289. ——As to value of one's own services or property.

Competency of attorney to testify to value of his own services, see also Attorneys ¶ 152.

¶ 1623. A party to an action on a contract of employment is as competent as any other witness, if he knows the facts, to swear to the value of services according to current rates.—Richardson v. McGoldrick, 43 Mich. 476.

¶ 1624. In an action of assumpsit, when plaintiff testifies that he has performed work and labor for defendant, it is proper to ask him how much his services were worth.—McDonald v. McDonald, 67 Mich. 122.

¶ 1625. Where plaintiff suing for such services had testified generally that he is acquainted with the value of services rendered by him in the apprehension of a felon, it is competent for him to express his opinion as to their value.—Foley v. Platt, 105 Mich. 635.

¶ 1626. A woman employed to do the general housework about a farmhouse is competent to testify, in an action to recover therefor, as to the nature and value of the services rendered.—Fowler v. Fowler, 111 Mich. 676.

¶ 1628. Where plaintiff's household goods have been seized on attachment, she and her husband may testify as to the value of such articles; they being presumed as householders to have sufficient knowledge upon the subject.—Erickson v. Drazkowski, 94 Mich. 551.

¶ 1629. The purchaser of a horse, who is engaged in a business in which he makes use of such horses, is competent to give an opinion as to the value of the animal.—Mason v. Patrick, 100 Mich. 577.

¶ 1630. An assignee for the benefit of creditors, who has been in possession for the purposes of making sales, and is shown to be acquainted with the goods and with the prices they brought, can give his opinion as to the value of a portion of the stock taken from him under process in bankruptcy, and for which an action of trover has been brought against the officer taking them.—Mathews v. Stewart, 44 Mich. 209.

§ 290. ——As to depreciation or loss.

As to damages to land, see also ante § 287.

¶ 1631. To show the value of the growth and increase in weight which cattle might reasonably have been expected to attain but for overfeeding of plaintiff's pasture caused by defendant's tortiously turning into it his own cattle also, the testimony of farmers, graziers and drovers having experience of cattle and that mode of feeding is competent.—Gilbert v. Kennedy, 22 Mich. 117.

¶ 1632. It is not error to exclude the opinion of a witness as to the depreciation caused to property by a trespass if it does not appear that he professed to know or had means of judging of the effect on the value of the estate.—Clark v. Field, 42 Mich. 342.

¶ 1633. A witness who has been engaged for five years in selling threshing machines and engines, and who shows that he is possessed of a degree of knowledge upon the question of their values, is competent to testify as to what their depreciation in value would be by reason of use for one season.—Woods v. Gaar, Scott & Co., 99 Mich. 301.

¶ 1634. In an action on a fire insurance policy for the loss of a vessel which sank while burning, a witness who admits that he cannot estimate the cost of repair may nevertheless testify, if otherwise competent, that in his opinion, apart from that question, the boat is a total loss.—Jackson v. British America Assur. Co., 106 Mich. 47.

¶ 1635. The opinion of a witness as to the value of an insured house is properly rejected where it is not shown that he had any competent knowledge on the subject.—Guest v. New Hampshire Fire Ins. Co., 66 Mich. 98.

¶ 1636. In an action on an insurance policy a daughter of the plaintiff who had bought many of the articles insured, and was present when others were bought, is a competent witness as to the value of goods burned.—Continental Ins. Co. v. Horton, 28 Mich. 173.

¶ 1637. One who was buyer and owner of a museum and who has taken part in exhibitions of several museums, and has bought curios and animals for exhibition, is competent to express an opinion as to the value of articles in a museum destroyed by fire.—Richter v. Harper, 95 Mich. 221.

¶ 1638. An expert wool buyer, though he has never inspected wool damaged by fire, is nevertheless a competent witness, after inspecting wool so damaged, to give an opinion concerning the amount of the damage to the fibre and the market value of the fleeces burned, wet, torn, and made unclean.—Close v. Ann Arbor R. Co., 169 Mich. 392.

§ 291. ——On expectancies and probable value of earnings.

¶ 1639. In an action to recover damages for the negligent killing of a five-year-old child, testimony of witnesses who by their knowledge and experience are qualified to express an opinion upon the pecuniary value of such a life is admissible to aid the jury in assessing damages.—Rajnowski v. Detroit, B. C. & A. R. Co., 74 Mich. 20.

2. Basis of opinion and form of question or hypothesis.

§ 292. Basis or predicate for opinion.

Basis for lay opinions, observed facts narrated to jury, see ante §§ 248-252.

Sufficiency of knowledge to support lay opinion, see ante §§ 248-252.

Necessity of evidence in case to support opinion, see post § 293.

Source of expert's knowledge or opinion, see post §§ 294-297.

Necessity of basing hypothetical question on testimony as adduced, see post § 299.

Incorporation in question of testimony heard by expert, see post § 302.

In criminal cases, see also Indictment, VIII, R.

¶ 1640. A physician cannot testify to his opinion as to what ails a patient, where it is not the result of his own examination, nor based on facts in proof, nor given in answer to hypothetical questions based on facts.—Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Huntley, 38 Mich. 537.

¶ 1642. In an action for false imprisonment a physician was asked his opinion of the effect of the arrest upon the plaintiff's health. It did not appear that he had any information as to what the circumstances were that attended the arrest. Held, that the objection to the question, if there was any, was avoided by an answer limited to the plaintiff's condition as he had observed it before and after the time when the arrest took place. He expressed no opinion upon a hypothetical case, but only on facts falling under his own observation.—Somerville v. Richards, 37 Mich. 299.

¶ 1643. It is not error to allow a physician testifying for plaintiff in an action for damages for assault and battery to answer in the affirmative a question as to whether, if plaintiff's ear was filled with dirt, gravel and blood, as the witness found upon his examination, that would be the natural and most probable way of having germs introduced into the ear, where the answer of the witness was based entirely upon his personal observation and not upon hypothesis.—Matthews v. Lamberton, 198 Mich. 746.

¶ 1644. A physician testifying in a case of personal injury was asked what he should say the cause of the trouble was, judging from the examination he had made at the time and supposing it to be true that the injured person was suffering in certain specified ways. The question was objected to on the ground that the answer could not be based partly on a hypothesis and partly on examination. Held, that the question was allowable.—Joslin v. Grand Rapids Ice & Coal Co., 53 Mich. 322.

§ 293. Necessity and sufficiency of proof of data or predicate.

Establishment of genuineness of writing as basis for comparison by expert, see post § 297.

Sufficiency and conformity of the hypothesis to the evidence in the case, see post § 299.

Conformity of opinion to issues and restriction thereto, see post §§ 305, 306.

¶ 1645. Scientific opinions can only be founded on established facts.—Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Huntley, 38 Mich. 537.

¶ 1646. An expert cannot give an opinion based on his personal examination unless the facts on which the opinion is founded are all stated; and it must be limited to those facts and exclude all others, even though there are others within his knowledge.—Hitchcock v. Burgett, 38 Mich. 501.

¶ 1647. An expert cannot be asked for a conclusion upon facts not stated; as where a physician is asked his opinion as to what produced the condition of a patient as he observed it.—Van Deusen v. Newcomer, 40 Mich. 90.

¶ 1648. Neither medical experts nor other witnesses can be allowed in any case to give an opinion upon mental capacity or condition, without first showing the circumstances and facts upon which the opinion is based.—White v. Bailey, 10 Mich. 155.

¶ 1649. Upon questions relating to the mental capacity of a person to make a will, the opinions of men skilled in medical science, though not founded on their own personal observation of the facts of the particular case, are admissible in evidence. The facts, however, on which the opinion is founded must be stated, and the jury left to determine, not only the truth of the facts, but of the opinion founded upon them.—Kempsey v. McGinniss, 21 Mich. 123.

¶ 1650. It is not competent for a professional witness to give his opinion of a case, assuming the testimony of certain specified witnesses to be true, when it appears that he did not hear the whole of their testimony and it does not appear what facts stated by them he did and what he did not hear.—Kempsey v. McGinnis, 21 Mich. 123.

¶ 1651. A surveyor's testimony as a man of science is never receivable except in connection with the data from which he surveys, and if he runs lines they are of no value until the data are established from which they are run.—Jones v. Lee, 77 Mich. 35.

¶ 1652. In an action for personal injuries, testimony of an expert boiler maker as to the cause of an explosion of a boiler is competent when accompanied by explanations and reasons for his opinion.—Beuhk v. Valley City Desk Co., 128 Mich. 562.

¶ 1654. An expert may not testify as to injury to the spine of a person where he bases his opinion on an X-ray picture, if the picture is not produced in court.—Jolman v. Alberts, 192 Mich. 25.

¶ 1655. A shepherd dog chiefly valuable for his ability to herd cattle and horses need not be shown to have a market value in order to render competent the opinions of witnesses as to his value.—Bowers v. Horen, 93 Mich. 420.

¶ 1656. Statements made by an accountant from account books, in evidence without objection, showing, as claimed, the condition of the owner's business at a given date, are admissible in evidence in connection with said books.—Mooney v. Davis, 75 Mich. 188.

¶ 1658. A dry goods and clothing merchant testified, in a suit to recover for damage to insured property, that he had been in the store of the plaintiff a number of times, but could not say that he was there within a month before the fire, but had been within a year; that he thought he had noticed a stock which would amount to anywhere from $9,000 to $12,000; that in such estimate he did not confine himself to the year before the fire, and that all he knew was that he had a recollection of being in the store several times, when he saw a good-sized stock of goods there. Held, that the witness did not show himself competent to testify as to the value of the insured property.—Metzger v. Manchester Fire Assur. Co., 102 Mich. 334.

¶ 1659. A witness shown to be familiar with the value of goods is not qualified to testify as to the value of a stock where he testifies that he was not asked to examine the stock, that he saw no inventory and that he could not tell within 1,000 pieces as to how much the stock contained.—Grabowsky v. Baumgart, 128 Mich. 267.

Witness' personal experience or knowledge as basis for opinion, see post § 295.

Use of market reports or comparative prices as basis for opinion, see post § 296.

Comparison of questioned with genuine writings as basis for opinion, see post § 297.

Conformity of question to personal knowledge or hypothesis based on evidence adduced, see post § 298 et seq.

Incompetency of physician to testify of privileged communications, see Witnesses, V, B.

Knowledge of signature gained from privileged statements in writing (tax returns), see Witnesses, V, E.

In criminal cases, see also Indictment, VIII, B.

¶ 1660. It is competent for a medical expert to testify, from knowledge derived by him from books of recognized authority, as to the effect of a specified poison when taken into the system.—Brown v. Marshall, 47 Mich. 576.

¶ 1661. Where, in an action against a railroad company for damages caused by fire set by its engine, a witness who was the fireman on the engine at the time of the fire and was subsequently promoted to be engineer, has testified on his cross-examination that he had read no books on engineering or on the construction of locomotives, it is proper to exclude as immaterial the question "What education have you received, then, with reference to your present position as engineer aside from the fact that you stoked on an engine?"—Ireland v. Cincinnati, W. & M. R. Co., 79 Mich. 163.

¶ 1662. One who has merely been in a store without inspecting the goods there is not competent to express an opinion as to their value on mere inspection of the inventory and invoices.—Dyer v. Rosenthal, 45 Mich. 588.

¶ 1663. The testimony of a boot and shoe dealer who was present when a stock of boots and shoes was inventoried by attaching creditors, and set down the amount of the appraisement as given to him by the appraisers, but who did not look over the goods to any extent, though he noticed that they were in fair condition and comparatively new, and who did not make sufficient examination to give an opinion as to the exact value of the goods, is admissible, and the weight to be given to it is for the jury.—Hutchinson v. Poyer, 78 Mich. 337.

¶ 1664. An experienced millman and lumberman may testify to his opinion as to the value of saw logs which he has never seen, upon reports made to him by his partner and an employee, who are both practical and expert woodsmen, and upon the strength of which reports the witness made an offer for the purchase of the logs.—Meigs v. Weller, 90 Mich. 629.

¶ 1666. A physician in charge of a poorhouse testified that he based his diagnosis of the case of an inmate who was suffering from partial paralysis on "that paper," being apparently an indorsement by the city physician upon the inmate's ticket of admission. Held, that the testimony of the diagnosis should have been stricken out as based on hearsay.—Fox v. Peninsular White Lead & Color Works, 92 Mich. 243.

§ 295. ——Personal experience, observation and attendance.

See also ante ¶ 1643.

Brief observation of speed, see ante ¶ 1581.

Res gestæ of treatment or attendance, matters to which physician may testify, see post §§ 453-456; Witnesses, V, B.

Testimony of attending physician as to actions and utterances of patient, see also post § 454.

Examination of plaintiff's person before trial by experts chosen by defendant to qualify them to give evidence based thereon, see Discovery § 9.

¶ 1668. A physician who was injured by the derailment of a train on which he was a passenger, may testify that his injuries resulted from a concussion of the spine, although by reason of temporary unconsciousness, he was unable to state what he was thrown against.—Marshall v. Wabash R. Co., 184 Mich. 593.

¶ 1669. Experts who have examined damaged wearing apparel and baggage may give an opinion in money as to the amount of damages to each article.—Withey v. Pere Marquette R. Co., 141 Mich. 412.

¶ 1670. On an issue as to the correctness of a logger's scale, the testimony of the plaintiff as to a scale made by him was admissible where it was shown that lumbering had been his paramount business and that he had been engaged therein for more than twenty years and what he had learned about scaling was by observation, and that he was capable of making a fairly accurate scale of sound logs, although he had never acted as scaler for anybody before he went into the business, and that the logs in question were sound logs.—Peterson v. Reichel, 143 Mich. 212.

¶ 1671. The testimony of a physician as to the cause of the death is admissible even though he was not present at the time thereof, where it appears that he was the attending physician, and had called upon the patient once a day for several days preceding the death.—Chadwick v. Phoenix Accident & Sick Benefit Ass'n, 143 Mich. 481.

¶ 1672. In the contest of a will the physician who attended the testator a few hours after he is alleged to have signed the will may give his opinion as to the testator's mental capacity where his testimony shows a full knowledge of the case.—Lange v. Wiegand, 125 Mich. 647.

¶ 1673. In a will contest on the ground of mental incompetency, a physician was called to testify for the contestant, who was a close friend of the deceased, but did not attend her professionally; who saw her often in the weeks preceding her death; knew the disease she was afflicted with; observed the progress of the disease from her general appearance; and testified that said disease in its late stage produces blindness and dullness of mind. Held, he was competent to express an opinion as to the mental competency of the deceased.—In re Hoyles' Estate, 162 Mich. 275.

¶ 1674. In an action by the purchaser for a breach of contract to deliver lumber at Detroit, a witness in behalf of plaintiff testified as to the value of such lumber at Wayne, a point eighteen miles distant, and stated that he did not know the market value at Detroit, though it would be higher there. Held, that the evidence was admissible.—Savercool v. Farwell, 17 Mich. 308.

¶ 1675. The value of logs at a particular place cannot be proved by the opinion of a witness having no knowledge of values there, and showing no facts from which it could be got at as compared with values elsewhere. Knowledge of one market justifies no presumption of knowledge of others.—Greeley v. Stilson, 27 Mich. 153.

¶ 1676. A witness may testify to his knowledge of the market value of cattle derived from the reports of newspapers.—Cleveland & T. R. Co. v. Perkins, 17 Mich. 296.

¶ 1677. Testimony as to the value of attached goods from a clerk who had been employed for some time in selling them, and might therefore be presumed to have some knowledge of current rates in the business, was held admissible, although it appeared that he had based his estimates on "price-lists," i. e., such market lists as guide dealers.—Sirrine v. Briggs, 31 Mich. 443.

¶ 1678. A witness who is not shown to have any knowledge of the value of the services for which a suit is brought, beyond that possessed by the jury, cannot give his judgment of such value, based upon what he considers the services of plaintiff worth to him in a line of business not disclosed.—Williams v. Williams, 82 Mich. 449.

¶ 1679. In a suit by an attorney to recover the value of his services, he may show by his own testimony his experience and knowledge, and give his judgment as to such value, and to that end may testify as to his knowledge of the charges of other attorneys for like services in similar cases.—Babbitt v. Bumpus, 73 Mich. 331.

¶ 1680. In the absence of some customary standard of charges, or proof of such standard, it was not competent to base judgment as to the value of one's own services in arresting thieves upon the fact that specific rewards may have been from time to time offered in cases corresponding to a greater or less extent with the case under consideration. If that was the only basis, some different standard should be adopted, as, for instance, a reasonable per diem.—Foley v. Platt, 105 Mich. 635.

Foundation proof of genuineness of writing used for comparison, see post § 516.

¶ 1681. Where a signature is in question, witnesses may be allowed to compare it with a genuine signature to any paper already in the case—e. g., an appeal bond on file therein,—and to express an opinion whether they are the same in writing.—Vinton v. Peck, 14 Mich. 287; In re Foster's Will, 34 Mich. 21; First Nat. Bank of Houghton v. Robert, 41 Mich. 709.

¶ 1682. An alleged signature may be tested by comparing it with an unquestioned signature to some writing already in evidence in the cause; but such comparison cannot be made with a signature not established or admitted, and where the result might be to raise a collateral issue as to the genuineness of such other signature.—Vinton v. Peck, 14 Mich. 287; In re Foster's Will, 34 Mich. 21.

¶ 1684. In an action on a note the question arose whether defendant had written certain letters. The execution of the note was not in issue, but defendant denied having signed it, and there was testimony tending to show he did not write the letters. Held proper to admit, for purposes of comparison, the testimony of a witness showing that he had a note which he had seen defendant sign, and to allow him to compare the note in suit with it, and express his opinion as to whether he had signed the note and written the letters.—Worth v. McConnell, 42 Mich. 473.

¶ 1685. It is immaterial with which of two papers in evidence an expert witness compared a disputed signature before testifying as to its genuineness; and his statement that he based his testimony upon the handwriting, both papers being shown him, does not necessarily exclude either paper.—Mallory v. Ohio Farmers' Ins. Co., 90 Mich. 112.

Form of hypothetical question, see post § 299.
Form of question based on testimony heard, see post § 302.
Long and confusing questions, see post § 300.
Ambiguous and uncertain questions, see post § 301.
Incorporating allusions to books, see post § 303.
Relation of the question to the issues, see post § 304.
Responsiveness and form of the opinion, see post § 305.
Question based on observation and hypothesis, see also ante ¶ 1644.
Propriety of question as matter for the court, see Trial, VI.
In criminal cases, see also Indictment, VIII, B.

¶ 1686. A question to an expert witness calling for an expression of opinion upon a state of facts not known to him or stated to him hypothetically in the question, is properly excluded.—Stowell v. Standard Oil Co., 139 Mich. 18.

¶ 1687. It was error to ask an insurance expert's own opinion as to whether undisclosed or misrepresented facts were material to the risk; the proper inquiry being whether he was able to say from his knowledge or the practice and usage among life insurance companies generally, that information of such fact would have enhanced the premium or would have led to a rejection of the risk.—New Era Ass'n v. Mactavish, 133 Mich. 68.

¶ 1688. In an action for diminishing the flow of a stream by diverting its course, the defendant claimed that the diminution was due to a succession of dry seasons. One of his witnesses testified to having known the stream for many years, and lived near it before its course was changed. and to having examined it the preceding fall. Held, that he could ask this witness how the flow at that time compared with what it was when he lived there.—Pettibone v. Smith, 37 Mich. 579.

¶ 1689. A long question to an expert witness in a malpractice case concluded thus: "I ask you, as a surgeon, what you have to say of that kind of treatment?" Held, that this was intended to call for the opinion of the witness upon the kind of treatment indicated in the question, and was unobjectionable.—Mayo v. Wright, 63 Mich. 32.

¶ 1690. In an action for personal injuries, physicians, called as experts, were asked if certain conditions described by them might be caused by the injury shown. It was objected that the form of the question should be whether they would "probably" be caused thereby. Held, that the degree of probability was a proper subject for cross-examination, and did not need to be indicated by the question.—Bush v. St. Joseph & B. H. St. R. Co., 113 Mich. 513.

¶ 1691. A lawyer testifying as an expert in an action to recover compensation as an attorney may properly be asked the value of plaintiff's services as "associate counsel in the administration, management and securing to defendant the estate left her by her husband"; such question cannot be considered to include services of a business and not of a legal character.—Turnbull v. Richardson, 69 Mich. 400.

Ambiguous and uncertain questions, see post § 301.
Reduction of question to writing, when proper or advisable, see post § 304.

¶ 1692. A hypothetical question must not wrongly state a matter that is in evidence.—Prentis v. Bates, 88 Mich. 567.

¶ 1693. Hypothetical questions to experts must be based upon facts and conditions that are supported by the testimony.—Fox v. Peninsular White Lead & Color Works, 92 Mich. 243.

¶ 1694. Hypothetical questions to experts are not necessarily objectionable because based upon facts not at the time in evidence. If after the testimony is all in any questions are found unsupported by facts, the court should be asked to exclude the answers and the ruling thereon would be reviewable.—Wilkinson v. Detroit Steel & Spring Works, 73 Mich. 405.

¶ 1695. Hypothetical questions are not erroneous if they contain no assumption not justified by the evidence.—Daniells v. Aldrich, 42 Mich. 58.

¶ 1697. Hypothetical questions asked of an expert are not necessarily improper because embracing facts assumed or not proved which are not, standing alone, the subject of expert testimony. And if the facts stated are in the case, or are afterwards proved, and are such as to form the basis of an opinion by an expert, the question is proper although it does not contain a statement of all the facts.—Turnbull v. Richardson, 69 Mich. 400.

¶ 1698. All facts which the jury can interpret as well as the witness should be excluded from hypothetical questions put to a witness testifying as an expert.—Prentis v. Bates, 88 Mich. 567.

¶ 1700. Questions as to propriety of medical treatment, based on hypotheses stated in such sequence as to convey the idea that the conditions described followed one upon the other, and failing to state the time elapsing between the various acts and events included in the hypotheses, are improper.—Farrell v. Haze, 157 Mich. 374.

¶ 1701. An objection to permitting a physician to state whether a certain effect, alleged to exist, would naturally arise from a certain cause, on the ground that the question is deficient in not stating the circumstances under which the cause arose, is without merit, for such a question does not call for an opinion on the whole case.—Smith v. Detroit United Ry., 155 Mich. 466.

¶ 1702. Admission of a hypothetical question to medical experts who had without objection been permitted to testify as to an examination of plaintiff made by them and what it disclosed, on the ground that under it the witness was at liberty to consider subjective symptoms in his answer, was not error where the question did not call upon the witness to consider such symptoms and there was no such specific objection.—Potter v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co., 122 Mich. 179.

¶ 1703. An objection to a hypothetical question as deviating from the testimony in the case is untenable where the answer is based on an examination of the injured person made professionally.—Boehm v. City of Detroit, 141 Mich. 277.

¶ 1704. In an action to recover compensation for services as an attorney in settling an estate, a hypothetical question to an expert witness stated that "an actual contest was made in the probate court which resulted favorably to the proponents of the will." The bill of exceptions in the case stated that the only proceedings had in the probate court were the filing of papers, etc., and it also showed that certain heirs were represented in the probate court, who cross-examined the proponents' witnesses. Held, that the words "actual contest" meant that the probate proceedings were not entirely ex parte; and that it could not be claimed that the statement in the question was not borne out by the evidence.—Turnbull v. Richardson, 69 Mich. 400.

¶ 1705. Including in a hypothetical question to medical witnesses the distance that plaintiff fell when she was injured does not make the question improper, where it is undisputed that she did fall that far.—Smith v. Township of Sherwood, 62 Mich. 159.

¶ 1706. A hypothetical question is not objectionable where there is testimony which warrants it, especially where the objection is general and does not point out the facts claimed to be assumed by it.—Styles v. Village of Decatur, 131 Mich. 443.

¶ 1707. In a personal injury case a hypothetical question based upon the claim that the plaintiff was a well woman at the time of injury is proper and may be admitted as against the objection that she was a sick woman when in fact there was some evidence to support the assumption she was well, although it was in dispute.—Herbeck v. Germain, 144 Mich. 157.

¶ 1708. A hypothetical question assuming that plaintiff in an action for personal injuries was suffering from no displacement of the womb before the injury is not objectionable, on the ground that it is not based on the evidence, where plaintiff has testified that her general health was good before the accident, that she had no soreness or lameness, or injury to the internal organs, and that before that time she did all her household work, and a physician has testified that the patient is usually the first to discover any displacement.—Holman v. Union St. R. Co., 114 Mich. 208.

¶ 1709. A witness for plaintiff was examined about a point in the walk thirty-five or thirty-six feet from a bridge, and testified concerning a hole in the walk at that point that he thought was five inches deep. Plaintiff identified the place of the accident as being near a telephone pole, which she located at a distance of from thirty-four to thirty-five feet from the bridge. The witness said nothing about a telephone pole in describing the place he saw. Expert witnesses were asked hypothetical questions, in which the hole was described as of the depth testified to by the witness. Held, that the court properly allowed the question to be answered, as it was for the jury to say whether or not plaintiff was hurt in the place testified to by the witness.—Edwards v. Common Council of Village of Three Rivers, 102 Mich. 153.

¶ 1710. A physician should not be permitted to answer a hypothetical question as to what effect the administration of quantities of opiates to an injured person would have upon his capacity to knowingly execute a release, where there is nothing in the evidence to show the time of the administration of the opiates, or the quantity thereof.—Brown v. Ann Arbor R. Co., 183 Mich. 574. (McAlvay, C. J., Brooke and Kuhn, JJ., concurring in result only.)

would occasion the fall of such building in the manner in which it fell, was not objectionable on the ground that the matter was not the subject of expert testimony, and as assuming facts not shown by the evidence; where there was testimony that almost immediately before the building fell a flame or blaze shot up from the building and that the method of remodeling the building was safe.—N. & M. Friedman Co. v. Atlas Assur. Co., 133 Mich. 212.

§ 300. ——Long or confusing questions.

Ambiguous and uncertain questions, see post § 301.

Length as reason for reducing to writing, see post § 304.

¶ 1712. A question to an expert witness cannot be objected to on account of its length if it is confined to the facts upon which the expert's opinion is desired, and does not contain statements irrelevant for that purpose, and not proper to be submitted as a basis of expert testimony.—Mayo v. Wright, 63 Mich. 32.

¶ 1713. In examining a nonprofessional witness as to a person's capacity to execute a will, it seems to be improper to put a hypothetical question containing a confusing number of elements as to the various items of his property and the members of his family, and then require the witness to arrive at a result by comparing the testator's appearance and conversation as he had described it to the jury with what the witness had known of him formerly.—Rice v. Rice, 50 Mich. 448.

Long and confusing questions, see ante § 300.

¶ 1714. In a will case in which the testator's sanity is in issue, an omnibus question to an expert, presenting a hypothesis covering many things of which there was neither proof nor offer of proof, including conditions which necessarily indicated insanity as well as facts which might coexist with a state of mental soundness, and going not only into the history, eccentricities and physical condition of the testator, but into the personal traits of his relations, is properly excluded as tending to make the jury suppose that each of the enumerated circumstances indicated insanity, and to leave them at discretion to decide whether the will was suitable and proper and satisfied their judgment.—Fraser v. Jennison, 42 Mich. 206.

¶ 1716. One of defendant's medical witnesses was asked whether, in cases where there is simply a physical shock, as a fall upon the side, and there is no warning or apprehension preceding the shock, he would expect a case of railroad spine or concussion of the spine to follow. Held, that the question was properly excluded; that, aside from the fact that it did not fairly represent the case as made by the proofs, it contained an assumption that railroad spine and concussion of the spine meant the same thing; that, as the question was put, it would be impossible for any expert to give an intelligent answer as to whether a fall upon the side would occasion concussion of the spine, and that something of the nature of the fall should have been included in the question.—Turner v. Township of Ridgeway, 105 Mich. 409.

Testimony not all heard by witness, see ante ¶ 1650.

¶ 1717. A witness who did not see a collision between a street car and a loaded wagon cannot give his opinion of the speed the car was going at the time of the accident when the question does not assume he heard all the testimony, and it does not appear what part of the testimony he did hear, nor that he had knowledge of the weight of the car, its momentum, or the weight of the load which was struck.—La Londe v. Trans St. Mary's Traction Co., 145 Mich. 77.

¶ 1717a. Hypothetical questions so framed as to call for answers based "particularly upon the testimony" of designated witnesses, or based upon "the testimony in the case," which the witness says he has heard "to some extent," are properly excluded.—Connell v. McNett, 109 Mich. 329.

§ 303. ——Allusions to quotations from books.

Admissibility of scientific books as documentary evidence, see post § 511.

¶ 1718. In examining an expert witness counsel are not allowed so to evade the rule against reading scientific works to the jury as to have the witness read a selected paragraph in private and thereafter to ask him if there is a record of such and such a case, reading from the paragraph.—Marshall v. Brown, 50 Mich. 148.

§ 304. Reduction of question to writing.

¶ 1719. A question to be put to an expert witness should, if of considerable length, embracing a long history of a case, be reduced to writing in order to enable the witness to answer intelligently and the opposite counsel to cross-examine or offer testimony in rebuttal.—Mayo v. Wright, 63 Mich. 32.

¶ 1720. A hypothetical question put to a physician testifying as an expert cannot be objected to on account of its length, but it should be in writing, and should embrace the whole question in a connected manner.—Jones v. Village of Portland, 88 Mich. 598.

¶ 1721. It is the better practice to reduce a hypothetical question to writing where the facts are confusing or complicated.—Matthews v. Lamberton, 198 Mich. 746.

§ 305. Relation of question to the issues, specificness and details.

Form of the question to confine answer to proper issues, see also ante § 298.
Conformity of the opinion to the predicated facts, see ante § 293.

¶ 1722. It is proper to put the question to the witness in such a way as to call for his opinion upon mental capacity with reference, as near as may be, to the very act in dispute.—Beaubien v. Cicotte, 12 Mich. 459.

¶ 1723. A witness in a will contest may be asked as to the capacity of the testator to make a will without confining the question to the particular will in controversy.—Page v. Beach, 134 Mich. 51.

¶ 1724. Hypothetical questions based on evidence of the defendant's treatment of the plaintiff may be submitted to expert witnesses in an action against a physician for malpractice.—Duffy v. Charters, 180 Mich. 572.

¶ 1725. In an action for injuries from the nonrepair and collapse of a bridge under a traction engine, a witness whose testimony showed that he was possessed of more than ordinary skill in such matters, and who testified that he had examined the premises thoroughly a few minutes after the accident occurred, and that he saw the lugs and joists, the appearance of which he described, may be asked by what reason the engine went down.—Woodbury v. City of Owosso, 64 Mich. 239.

¶ 1726. A hypothetical question asked an expert as to the value of a lawyer's services in managing, probating and settling a large estate, where he was consulted daily and held himself prepared for threatened litigation, need not set out each special item of consultation or business included in such services.—Kelley v. Richardson, 69 Mich. 430.

¶ 1727. In an action for negligence in withdrawing or disturbing lateral support an expert on engineering questions cannot be asked as to the effect of a specific building or pressure.—Bissell v. Ford, 176 Mich. 64.

General rule as to responsiveness of answers, see Examination of Witnesses, I; and see Trial, V.

¶ 1729. Plaintiff was injured by defendant's train, amputation of his leg being necessitated. The condition of the leg had been stated in detail in the evidence, and, in response to a question as to what could be done to improve the condition of the limb, and make it practicable for the use of an artificial leg, a physician, qualified as an expert, replied that he feared there would not be bone enough left to swing the artificial limb. Held, that this was an expression of expert opinion, and a motion to strike out what the doctor "feared" was properly denied.—Beauerle v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 152 Mich. 345.

¶ 1730. A medical witness' testimony that a certain physical condition of an injured member "evidently" exists "yet" is not objectionable as not founded on any examination recently made, where he afterwards states that within two weeks before the trial an examination was made.—Boehm v. City of Detroit, 141 Mich. 277.

VII. HEARSAY, CHARACTER, DECLARATIONS, AND RES GESTÆ.

A. HEARSAY AND DECLARATIONS OUT OF COURT IN GENERAL.

Contemporaneous or prior conversations and statements to explain or vary writings, see ante, V.
Statements and declarations or appearances held out as evidences or grounds of estoppels in pais, see Estoppel, III.
Instructions on admissions and declarations as evidence, see Instructions, V, VI.
Motion to strike evidence subsequently appearing to have been hearsay, see Trial, V, C.
Striking out hearsay from depositions, see Depositions § 34.
Rules of criminal evidence as to declarations made out of court, see Indictment, VIII, B.

§ 307. Hearsay in general, what constitutes.

[Note. The rule excluding hearsay and declarations made out of court has relatively few decisions. Most of the cases turn on some one of the exceptions to the rule. They have been arranged according to the controlling principle of decision in the sections which follow in this division. The cross-references which immediately follow will explain the analysis and arrangement.]

Various kinds and circumstances of statements out of court, constituting hearsay, see post §§ 308-320.
Matters provable by hearsay as exceptions to rule, see post §§ 321-325.
Admissibility of evidence that statement was made for purpose of proving other than facts stated, see post §§ 326-328.

Admissibility of statement by person since deceased, see post § 336.
Admissibility of former testimony of persons as witnesses, see post §§ 337-344.
Admissibility of declarations and acts amounting to admissions against interest of declarant, see post, VII, C.
Admissibility of statements because part of the res gestæ, see post, VII, D.
Exclusion of self-serving declarations, see post, VII, E.
Mode and sufficiency of proof of declarations, see post §§ 345-347.
Testimony that statement was made as distinguished from statement as evidence of facts stated, see post § 327.
Effect of death of declarant to make declarations admissible, see post § 336.
Testimony as to incorporation based on information and personal dealings, see Corporations ¶ 74.

¶ 1731. Testimony that an insurance agent stated that the premium note was paid to defendant insurer is hearsay.—McIntyre v. Michigan State Ins. Co., 52 Mich. 188.

¶ 1732. In an action for the price of an engine warranted to effect a saving in fuel "equal to that claimed for the Corliss," the reports of an expert upon tests made of the Corliss and similar engines at an exposition are irrelevant where it is not shown that such reports were in the contemplation of the parties at the time of the sale or that the contract was made in reference to such tests.—Wickes Bros. v. Swift Electric Light Co., 70 Mich. 322.

¶ 1733. Evidence in a libel case that a person said that her mother had read the libelous article and shed tears over it and felt badly about it is hearsay and incompetent.—McDuff v. Detroit Evening Journal Co., 84 Mich. 1.

¶ 1734. In a libel suit what certain signers of a petition for the appointment of plaintiff to office said to defendant about plaintiff's character and reputation is hearsay.—Sanford v. Rowley, 93 Mich. 119.

¶ 1735. Testimony, upon the probate of a will, as to the statement of a person who not long before testator's death was sent for to draft a will for him and who declined to go, that his reason for declining was that he did not consider testator capable of making a will, is inadmissible, being hearsay.—In re Lefevre's Estate, 102 Mich. 568.

¶ 1736. Testimony of a witness for the contestant of a will as to what her husband told her with reference to proponent's intention to keep them away from testator, is inadmissible as hearsay.—Hurton v. Hurton, 113 Mich. 634.

¶ 1737. In replevin for goods fraudulently purchased from plaintiffs, it is error to permit plaintiffs' attorney to testify to a statement, made by the representative of other vendors in the absence of the vendees, of a conversation he had with a stranger in a street car that he had sold the vendees a large bill of goods, and that the representative further said that he had ascertained that the vendees had purchased several thousand dollars' worth more than they got from him.—Munzer v. Stern, 105 Mich. 523.

¶ 1738. In an action to recover for the illegal sale of liquor to plaintiff's son, who was injured by reason of his intoxication, testimony of statements made by the son to the effect that he did not procure liquor from defendant, is hearsay and inadmissible, except to impeach the son as a witness.—Van Alstine v. Kaniecki, 109 Mich. 318.

¶ 1739. Evidence as to what was said by the son of an alleged fraudulent vendor with reference to where he obtained property subsequently sold by him is inadmissible in a suit between the vendee and an execution creditor of the vendor, being mere hearsay.—Vyn v. Keppel, 108 Mich. 244.

¶ 1740. Testimony by a bank cashier, sued upon his written agreement to repay to the bank certain money, that his son, an employee of the bank, told him he had stolen the money from the bank, is hearsay and incompetent to invalidate the writing for want of consideration and thus to relieve defendant from liability where the theft has never been brought home to the son.—Lansing Nat. Bank v. Coleman, 117 Mich. 177.

¶ 1741. In an action involving the payment of a check paid by the banker's son in the absence of the father, testimony of the father as to what was said between the father and son upon the father's return, is inadmissible for the drawer against the payees.—Baumgardner v. Henry, 131 Mich. 240.

¶ 1742. As against a father-in-law, defendant in an alienation suit by the wife, it is hearsay for her to testify that her husband ascribed the blame for a temporary separation to the father, and that on a certain occasion his father was mad about taking a horse.—Derham v. Derham, 125 Mich. 109.

¶ 1743. Testimony by witnesses as to statements made to them by the wife of plaintiff, in an action for alienation of affections and criminal conversation, detailing acts of extremely cruel conduct on the part of her husband, is inadmissible, being purely hearsay.—Brown v. Evans, 149 Mich. 429.

¶ 1744. In an action for trespass vi et armis, where damages were claimed to a mowing machine which had been damaged by spikes that were concealed in the grass the tenant was cutting, evidence by plaintiff as to what some one told him it would cost to have the machine repaired is hearsay and incompetent, when in fact the machine had not yet been repaired.—Byers v. Anderson, 143 Mich. 178.

¶ 1745. Testimony of a witness to the effect that three members of the board of public works, together with the city engineer, examined the street, and agreed that the plan proposed for the improvement was the best one, is hearsay evidence, and therefore incompetent.—City of Grand Rapids v. Coit, 149 Mich. 668.

¶ 1746. Where, in an action on an insurance policy the defense was suicide, and as a motive for suicide it was attempted to show that insured had appropriated money received by him on certain collections, such appropriation cannot be shown by evidence of an agent of insured's employer as to what third persons said to him concerning moneys paid to insured.—Grimme v. General Council of Fraternal Aid Ass'n, 167 Mich. 240.

¶ 1747. Evidence that a teamster hauling goods from a railroad to the warehouse of the consignee, told witness that he hauled a certain number of cases of goods, is inadmissible as hearsay in an action by an assignee of the consignee against the railroad to recover for loss of goods before delivery.—Oceana Canning Co. v. King, 200 Mich. 268.

§ 308. Party's acts and declarations as hearsay.

Admissions and declarations against interest by party in person, see post VII, C, 1, 2.
Admissibility of declarations by agents and privies against interest of party, see post, VII, C, 3.
Others' statements as to what a party said or did, see post § 312.
Res gestæ declarations, see post, VII, D.
Self-serving declarations of party, see post VII, E.

¶ 1748. Where a surgeon is sued for malpractice in healing a fractured limb it is not proper to give in evidence plaintiff's statement, while under treatment, that he thought the bandages were too tight. Plaintiff was not an expert, and if he had been the testimony was hearsay.—Mayo v. Wright, 63 Mich. 32.

¶ 1749. Testimony by the father of a person who claims bona fide and actual possession of a parcel of wild land that he once heard his son say he calculated to buy an adjoining parcel of land and make a home of the two parcels, is inadmissible, being hearsay.—McKinnon v. Meston, 104 Mich. 642.

¶ 1750. The testimony of a widow, on a bill to determine the title to a policy of insurance taken out by her deceased husband, in which he named his mother as the beneficiary, that he said he had made a demand of the policy of his mother and she had refused to give it up, is hearsay evidence—no witness being called who heard such a demand made.—Coston v. Coston, 145 Mich. 390.

Conversations offered as admissions or declarations against interest, see post, VII, C.
Conversations offered as res gestæ, see post, VII, D.

Conversations evincive of mental state, attitude or thoughts, see post §§ 329-335.
Conversations admissible in proof of other than stated facts, see post §§ 326-328.
Admissibility of complementary portions to make conversation complete, see ante § 91.

¶ 1751. In an attorney's action for services rendered in the trial of a case, a conversation between him and his client in the nature of advice shortly after such trial concerning the result thereof was admissible although it contained a reference to the opinion of a third person on the same subject.—Crowell v. Truax, 94 Mich. 585.

¶ 1752. In a suit on an indemnity bond to secure repayment to a surety upon a former bond of what he paid thereon, evidence may be given of interviews between the parties thereto concerning their respective interests, whether before or after date of the bond sued on.—Lee v. Wisner, 38 Mich. 82.

§ 310. Common remark or bystanders' comment.

See also post ¶ 2473.
Acts of persons in like situation as res gestæ of accident, see post § 466.
Character evidence and evidence of common reputation, see post, VII, B.

¶ 1753. It is incompetent to testify to mere statements made by people living in the vicinity of alleged oil lands as to the character and market value of the lands; such evidence is hearsay.—Kost v. Bender, 25 Mich. 515.

¶ 1754. That bystanders at the time of an assault asked a policeman to arrest defendant cannot be shown in an action for assault, nor are the opinions or comments of such bystanders admissible.—Kuhn v. Freund, 87 Mich. 545.

¶ 1755. In a suit for assault and battery, evidence as to the opinions and conclusions expressed by bystanders on various aspects of the controversy are inadmissible, as being hearsay.—Pratt v. Hamilton, 161 Mich. 258.

¶ 1755a. In an action on a mutual benefit insurance certificate, in which it is claimed that defendant was estopped to set up the defense of fraudulent statements in the application of insured as to his use of intoxicating liquor and drugs by knowledge of the habits of the insured before the certificate was signed, the evidence of a local officer that she told a representative of the supreme camp before the certificate was signed that it was rumored that insured was a user of liquor and a drug fiend is incompetent as hearsay.—Cameron v. Royal Neighbors of America, 197 Mich. 173.

¶ 1756. Where, in an action for conversion of goods, their value is in question, evidence as to what was said concerning their quality by prospective bidders at an execution sale is inadmissible.—Wessels v. Beeman, 87 Mich. 481.

Testimony as to one's own age, see post § 323.

Testimony as to another's health, pain or bodily condition, see ante § 236.

Opinion of expert based on another's medical report as hearsay, see ante ¶ 1666.

Testimony to description of lands identified by others, see post ¶ 1815.

Hearsay as to another man's reputation, see post § 358.

Based on writings made by others, see post § 317.

Writings embodying information gained from others, see post § 315.

Hearsay testimony of telephone conversation, see post ¶ 1799.

Admissibility of testimony by party that other parties to contract sued on told him they were a partnership, see also Corporations ¶ 396.

¶ 1757. In an action for injury from a surgeon's negligence it is proper for the defense to show that it resulted from plaintiff's imprudence in throwing off his splints and going on crutches; but that fact cannot be shown by the statements of one who had no personal knowledge of it.—Hitchcock v. Burgett, 38 Mich. 501.

¶ 1758. In an action for personal injury from mill machinery, the question whether a witness had ever heard of such injuries to other persons is improper as calling for hearsay.—Huizega v. Cutler & Savidge Lumber Co., 51 Mich. 272.

¶ 1759. In an action for labor and materials furnished a plaintiff was asked, "How about the time?" and was allowed to answer, "It was correct as given by my foreman." Another plaintiff who testified on the subject stated that he knew nothing about it except what the workmen had told him. It did not appear who the foreman was, and no excuse was given for not producing his testimony or that of the workmen. Held, that the evidence was hearsay and inadmissible.—Richmond v. Atkinson, 58 Mich. 413.

¶ 1760. A physician who says that he knew nothing as to the health of deceased, cannot testify as to a conversation concerning it between himself and the mother of deceased, as evidence of such health.—Brown v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 65 Mich. 306.

¶ 1761. Where a sheriff sued in trover for selling mortgaged property defends on the ground that the mortgage was fraudulent, the testimony of the mortgagor's wife as to negotiations between her husband and the mortgagee, of which she knows nothing except as the husband informs her, is incompetent.—Eddy v. McCall, 71 Mich. 497.

¶ 1762. Defendant in slander was charged with having said that plaintiff "is a damned, low-lived, thieving son of a bitch, and I have had a man watching him, and seen him steal: and I believe you know he is a thief." One of the persons to whom these words were spoken testified that defendant did not state at the time what he had plaintiff watched for. Held, that testimony from such witness that he had since learned why defendant had plaintiff watched was properly excluded as hearsay.—Ellis v. Whitehead, 95 Mich. 105.

¶ 1763. On the issue whether a tax purchaser ever went into possession of land in question, it is hearsay prove by a child of the original owner what he understood to be the facts learned in conversations with a third person.—Watkins v. Green, 101 Mich. 493.

¶ 1764. In an action involving payment of a check, paid by the banker's son in his absence from the bank, the banker cannot testify as to what the son said to him relative to the transaction or as to who presented the check, such testimony being clearly hearsay.—Baumgardner v. Henry, 131 Mich. 240.

¶ 1765. In an action to recover for hauling goods where the defendant had denied he had requested plaintiff to haul them, the plaintiff cannot prove defendant's order by testifying as to what another had reported to him defendant had said over the telephone.—Duvall v. Ferwerda, 146 Mich. 13.

¶ 1766. In an action for the price of goods sold and delivered, being furnished under an oral contract to erect a building, where the contention was over articles furnished and claimed to be extras, testimony by the plaintiff's superintendent as to what items figured in the work is properly excluded where it appears that witness had no conversation with the defendant, and only knew what the plaintiff had told him about the contract.—Rikerd Lumber Co. v. Hoertz, 146 Mich. 386.

¶ 1767. In an action by a tenant against a landlord for unlawful ejectment, there was no written lease between the parties but there was evidence that one Starks, the preceding tenant, had a written lease, that defendant orally told plaintiff he should have the same rights as Starks and that during the making of the oral arrangement plaintiff did not see Starks' lease or know its contents. Held, the testimony of plaintiff as to Starks' lease was not admissible.—Carman v. Scott, 172 Mich. 44.

§ 312. Testimony by others as to what a party said or did.

¶ 1768. The kind of knife with which an attack was made upon defendant cannot be testified to by one who did not see the knife at the time of the fight, but to whom defendant subsequently showed a knife which he claimed to have been the one used.—Culley v. Walkeen, 80 Mich. 443.

¶ 1769. Where in a suit for assault and battery, the question is disputed as to whether defendant hit the plaintiff with his fist or a hammer, it is error to permit a physician to testify that the plaintiff said he was hit by a hammer.—Pratt v. Hamilton, 161 Mich. 258.

¶ 1770. In an action for breach of promise of marriage, testimony that third persons had told plaintiff that defendant said she had certain physical disabilities is inadmissible, being hearsay.—Goddard v. Westcott, 82 Mich. 180.

¶ 1771. Testimony of a witness in a will probate contest as to statements made by another to the effect that one of the parties to the suit had made certain admissions, is hearsay and therefore inadmissible.—Henrich v. Saier, 124 Mich. 86.

¶ 1772. In an action for seduction testimony by the plaintiff that she had been told by third parties that defendant said she was a mother but he could prove he was not the cause is clearly hearsay and inadmissible.—Greenman v. O'Riley, 144 Mich. 534.

¶ 1773. In an action for assault and battery, defendant sought to show in support of his plea of self-defense that plaintiff had gone about saying defendant was cheating one Mills. Held, it was prejudicial error to permit defendant to quote Mills as saying plaintiff had made such statements.—Mills v. Warner, 167 Mich. 619.

¶ 1774. Testimony by plaintiff in an action for libel that a third person stated that defendant sent him to plaintiff to make a settlement between the parties is hearsay and refusal to strike it is error.—Kovacs v. Mayoras, 175 Mich. 582.

§ 313. Testimony as to source of information or authority.

Proof of making of statement as distinguished from truth of statements, see post § 327.

Competency of agent's direct testimony that he is agent, see Agency §§ 9, 40.

¶ 1775. A husband's testimony that he had a building made by his wife's directions and with her money is not hearsay evidence of her title.—Gutsch v. McIlhargy, 69 Mich. 377.

¶ 1776. In an action upon a note defendant sought to show that the indorsement by the payee (since deceased) to plaintiff was a forgery. Plaintiff's testimony showed the indorsement was made after the actual transfer. Held, that a question asked plaintiff by his counsel as to the person who told him that such indorsement was necessary was properly excluded as immaterial and hearsay.—Hillman v. Schwenk, 68 Mich. 293.

Admissibility of entire conversation or communication, see ante § 91.

Testimony as to things said admitted for proof of other things, see post § 326 et seq.

Declarations admissible to show mental state and inadmissible for other purpose, see also ante ¶ 494.

¶ 1777. Where individual witnesses, in testifying to the reasons of several joint parties for delaying in the presentation of stale claims, speak in the plural number, their testimony, so far as it involves merely the knowledge or opinions of others than themselves, is hearsay.—Patrick v. Howard, 47 Mich. 40.

¶ 1778. In an action by an attorney for services rendered in the trial of a case, it is error to permit the plaintiff, when testifying as a witness, to state that part of a conversation had with defendant upon his employment in a previous case in which he told defendant what lawyers about town said in regard to defendant's having trouble in settling with all the lawyers he ever had.—Crowell v. Truax, 94 Mich. 585.

¶ 1779. Where the testimony of a witness in reference to a particular subject is part of a continuous conversation relating to that matter and to the subject of the litigation, it is not error to admit it if the conversation is relevant.—Dibble v. Nash, 47 Mich. 589.

§ 315. Private writings and entries as hearsay.

Diary entries based on others' statements, see post ¶ 2601.

Writings emanating from third persons, see post § 316.

Public writings as hearsay, see post § 320.

¶ 1780. Mere memoranda appearing upon the pages of a ledger and journal fix no right or credits, and are inadmissible in evidence, if they cannot be identified with any transaction or their purpose ascertained. And they cannot be treated as if they were different in any respect from what they really are for the purpose of giving them significance.—Seligman v. Ten Eyck's Estate, 53 Mich. 285.

¶ 1781. A plaintiff cannot be permitted to testify that his bill of particulars is a correct statement after he has testified that it does not refresh his memory as to items to which he cannot testify without it, and of which he has no personal knowledge.—Richmond v. Atkinson, 58 Mich. 413.

¶ 1782. A memorandum written by witness on the envelope in which the note was inclosed is not admissible as original evidence to corroborate his testimony as to the date of receipt; since it is like any other declaration by him out of court.—Weaver v. Bromley, 65 Mich. 212.

¶ 1783. A private memorandum made by one party of the differences arising on an attempted settlement is not admissible in evidence in a suit involving the subject-matter of such attempted settlement.—Tompkins v. Gardner & Spry Co., 69 Mich. 58.

¶ 1784. Ex parte statements in preliminary proof of death of an insured person are not evidence.—Cook v. Standard Life & Accident Ins. Co., 84 Mich. 12.

¶ 1785. An inventory based in part upon information derived from others by the person who made it is not admissible in evidence.—Black v. Simon, 116 Mich. 382.

¶ 1786. Memoranda purporting to show items of shortage in goods purchased are inadmissible in evidence in the absence of testimony to prove their correctness.—Pabst Brewing Co. v. Lueders, 107 Mich. 41.

¶ 1787. In an ejectment suit brought by plaintiff claiming title by adverse possession, defendants sought to show that the possession had been interrupted by contractual sales and surrender of the premises to third parties. Held, it was improper to allow defendants to introduce in evidence the memoranda and indorsements of payments made upon the contract, such evidence being hearsay.—Merritt v. Westerman, 165 Mich. 535.

Statements based on others' writings, see post § 317.

Official and public writings, see post § 320.

Recital in deed as to facts of ownership as prima facie evidence thereof, see also post ¶ 2904.

¶ 1788. Time checks issued by a subcontractor to laborers are in the nature of hearsay and inadmissible in an action for a labor debt.—Chicago & N. E. R. Co. v. Sturgis, 44 Mich. 538.

¶ 1790. In a proceeding against an estate to recover the face of the note given by decedent it was shown that the maker had directed the cashier of a bank to pay the claimant a certain sum, and had himself given the cashier a check to serve as a voucher. Held, that after the payment of the amount had been shown the cancelled check was properly excluded as evidence, at least as against the claimant, since it was only a voucher by the bank to the drawer.—Smith's Appeal, 52 Mich. 415.

¶ 1791. Where there is nothing to show that plaintiff is bound by its contents, a letter to defendant from a third person is inadmissible to show that plaintiff has parted with his interest in the cause of action.—Ziegler v. Henry, 77 Mich. 480.

¶ 1792. Letters from the board of a church of which a clergyman was about to take charge, to such clergyman, and letters from his former parishioners to such board, in answer thereto, were hearsay evidence as to defendants, and inadmissible, in an action for a libel consisting of a letter derogatory to the character of such clergyman written to such board.—Konkle v. Haven, 140 Mich. 472.

¶ 1793. It is not competent to offer petitions for appointment to office as evidence in a libel suit to show that the plaintiff's character and reputation for truth and veracity is good.—Sanford v. Rowley, 93 Mich. 119.

¶ 1794. In garnishment proceedings to reach property conveyed by a husband to his wife, a letter written by a son to a friend is inadmissible, because, not being introduced by way of impeachment, and not being so connected with the transaction as to be part of the res gestæ, it is mere hearsay.—Webber v. Hayes, 117 Mich. 256.

¶ 1795. In an action on a contract to furnish logs through a boom company, the number of logs delivered by the company cannot be shown by asking a witness who has no personal knowledge to state the number as given him by the company's tally.—Hopkins v. Sanford, 41 Mich. 243.

¶ 1796. Allowing a surveyor, who is called as a witness in a case involving the location of a boundary line, to state his knowledge of its true location as derived from his early survey of the same, which he found to correspond with certain specified old maps and plats not offered in evidence, was held not to have been error.—Wineman v. Grummond, 90 Mich. 280.

¶ 1797. Where, in an action for the price of goods sold, plaintiff's shipping clerk is handed statements which he testifies he saw copied from plaintiff's order-books, containing lists of goods shipped to a third person on defendant's account, such clerk may testify that he gave the lists to the packer, and shipped the cases packed by him to such third person; and this though the packer is not produced as a witness.—Robinson v. Mulder, 81 Mich. 75.

Admissibility of market reports and quotations on questions of damages or values, see Damages, XI, B; Values.

¶ 1798. Market quotations contained in a trade paper as to the value of hides in Chicago were admissible in evidence, in an action for breach of contract of sale of hides in Detroit, Michigan; where supported by evidence that more hides of the class named in the agreement of sale are taken off in Chicago than in any other city of the United States.—Kibler v. Caplis, 140 Mich. 28.

§ 319. Conversations over telephone.

Presumption as to identity of person called and responding, see ante ¶ 237.

Testimony that another reported having had certain telephone conversation, see ante ¶ 1765.

¶ 1799. Testimony of the plaintiff as to what someone had told him the defendant had said over the telephone is inadmissible as hearsay and should have been stricken out on proper motion.—Duvall v. Ferwerda, 146 Mich. 13.

¶ 1800. Conversation over the telephone is admissible as evidence against a railroad company for wrongful interference with plaintiff's contract rights, where there was no doubt concerning the identity of the persons talking over the telephone and the official character of those who were assuming to speak for such company.—Harrison Granite Co. v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 145 Mich. 712.

¶ 1801. A telephone conversation is admissible where the identity of the persons communicated with by telephone is established.—Thelsen v. Detroit Taxicab & Transfer Co., 200 Mich. 136.

Official tests and reports, see also ante ¶ 1732.

Reports as documents, see post § 534.

Reading law books as evidence of particular custom, see Customs ¶ 50.

¶ 1802. An unofficial oral statement of an ex-deputy land commissioner to the commissioner of the land office was held to be mere hearsay, and too uncertain to have any bearing on a question of land titles.—People ex rel. County of Houghton v. State Land Office Com'r, 23 Mich. 270.

¶ 1803. In an action to recover for the breach of a contract to construct a building, a notice from the building department of a city is not admissible for the purpose of showing the condition of the structure at a certain time, since it is hearsay.—Newton v. Consolidated Construction Co., 184 Mich. 63.

¶ 1804. A policeman's report as to the time of an accident is inadmissible in a personal injury action where not based on his own personal knowledge.—Sterling v. City of Detroit, 134 Mich. 22.

¶ 1805. In an action for personal injuries a report by a patrolman sent to the scene of the accident after it had happened is properly excluded.—Goosen v. Packard Motor Car Co., 174 Mich. 654.

§ 321. Exceptions to hearsay rule, matters provable.

Exception in favor of ancient documents, see post § 322.

To prove identity, possession, existence, or title, see post §§ 324, 325.

Proof of statements to fix time or other extraneous fact, see post §§ 326-328.

Exception as to res gestæ, see post, VII, D.

Inadmissibility where fact is unnecessary to be proved, see ante ¶ 389.

Admissibility for limited purpose of impeachment, see Witnesses, VI, D.

Ruling limiting purpose and instructions thereon, see Trial, V, C; Instructions, VI.

¶ 1806. In those cases where hearsay is admissible because the matter is of public interest, what a witness has heard post litem motam—by which is meant since the dispute has arisen, and not merely the commencement of suit—is not evidence.—Stockton v. Williams, W. 120.

§ 322. Recitals in ancient documents.

¶ 1807. Documents, viz., a power of attorney, a deed, and a court order, executed in 1846 are ancient documents, and their recitals are proof of the facts therein recited, even as against strangers.—Norris v. Hall, 124 Mich. 170.

§ 323. Pedigree, age and relationship.

One's testimony to his own age as best evidence, see ante § 113.

Proof of breed or pedigree of horses by registration in stud books, see Jud. Act, chap. XVII, § 45; Comp. L. 1915, § 12533.

¶ 1808. Interrogatories relating to family relationship, dates of decease and marriages, may well be answered on the basis of family tradition instead of direct personal knowledge.—Van Sickle v. Gibson, 40 Mich. 170.

¶ 1809. While the declarations of a deceased person shown to have been legitimately related by blood to the person to whom they relate, or by the husband or wife of such a person, are admissible as primary proof of pedigree, such relationship, if questioned, must be shown by other evidence than such declarations.—Lamoreaux v. Attorney-General, 89 Mich. 146.

¶ 1810. A leaf taken from deceased soldier's private record book, required to be kept by soldiers in the British service, containing the names of the father and his wife, and the names, ages and birth-places of all his children, is admissible in proof of the age of a child of such soldier.—Hunt v. Supreme Council of Chosen Friends, 64 Mich. 671.

¶ 1812. General hearsay and public reputation subsequent in time to the treaty are inadmissible to prove which of two persons claiming, by the same name, a particular reservation made by the treaty of Saginaw of September 24, 1819, was the person intended.—Campau v. Dewey, 9 Mich. 381; Stockton v. Williams, 1 D. 546 which affirmed, but criticised as too broad the rule laid down in Stockton v. Williams, W. 120.

¶ 1813. Testimony that a witness knows by repute that her father and his brother came to the state together, and that they were the only two brothers of the family that did come to the state, is not objectionable as hearsay.—Fraser v. Jennison, 42 Mich. 206.

¶ 1814. Hearsay evidence is not admissible to prove the existence of living persons; especially when it furnishes no means of finding or identifying them.—Crane v. Reeder, 21 Mich. 24.

§ 325. Possession, title, identity or ownership of property.

Statements showing title, see also post § 326.

As to identity, see also post ¶ 1819.

Res gestæ declarations, see post §§ 447, 448.

Agents' declarations relative to possession as res gestæ, see post § 481.

Self-serving claims of title or right, see post § 486.

¶ 1815. Where the controversy was whether lumbering on certain lands ceased in 1873, a witness testified that subsequently he worked upon lands the government description of which he could not give, but which he had pointed out to another witness. Held, that the latter witness, after testifying that the lands were so pointed out to him, and that he knew the descriptions, could give the same.—Wright v. Dickinson, 67 Mich. 590.

§ 326. Admissibility on issues other than facts stated.

To show rationality or irrationality of declarant, see post § 335.

Declarations as verbal acts forming part of res gestæ, see post, VII, D.

Admissibility of declarations in contradiction or corroboration of impeached witness, see Witnesses, VI, D.

Admissibility of newspaper advertisement, offering property for sale, in action for broker's commission, see Brokers ¶ 165.

Admissibility of evidence of threats to prosecute as bearing on issue of compounding crime, see Contracts § 314.

Admissibility of prosecuting attorney's statement to complaining witness as bearing on who was responsible for prosecution, see Malicious Prosecution, VI.

¶ 1816. The fact of a conversation with a third person in the absence of the opposite parties to a case may be admissible to show the date of a negotiation with them when it would not be to show the terms of the negotiation itself.—Shaver v. Ingham, 58 Mich. 649.

¶ 1817. Parol negotiations with a third person by which a chattel was sold to him on condition and that the condition was not performed by reason whereof title remained in the party testifying to such conversation are admissible against the person claiming under the conditional buyer even though they were not had in his presence.—Fifield v. Elmer, 25 Mich. 48.

¶ 1818. A letter from the superintendent of a boom company to its president, stating the terms upon which he had hired an employee (i. e., what he "told" the plaintiff when hiring him), is admissible in evidence for the latter in a suit by him against the company for his wages, where it was obtained by the defendant for its own information as to terms of the employment.—Hardy v. Tittabawassee Boom Co., 52 Mich. 45.

¶ 1819. In a suit by the taker of a counterfeit note to recover its value, the statements of persons not witnesses, through whose hands the note has passed, are not admissible either to identify or prove the note counterfeit.—Atwood v. Cornwall, 28 Mich. 336.

¶ 1820. A woman whose husband's employer had discharged him sued the employer for an indecent assault upon her. Defendant claimed the suit was one by collusion to extort money. Held proper to strike out as hearsay a witness' testimony for plaintiff that she had heard of the case from the plaintiff's husband before his discharge.—Mawich v. Elsey, 47 Mich. 10.

¶ 1821. A telegram from the owners of logs to a broker, to whom they had given an option on the logs, which he had sold to a lumber manufacturer for an agreed commission, stating that the option was extended, is competent evidence, in a suit by the broker against the buyer to recover the commission, of the extension of the option.—McKinnon v. Gates, 102 Mich. 618.

¶ 1822. Plaintiff, employed by defendant's general agent to get out timber, and claiming also that there was a separate agreement to hire help in getting out a particular lot pursuant to which plaintiff advanced money to the person so hired, may testify as to conversations had with persons about getting out that timber after the general agent sanctioned the employment, such conversations having been reported by plaintiff to the general agent.—Inglish v. Ayer, 79 Mich. 516.

¶ 1823. In an action by the owner of goods against commission merchants to whom goods are intrusted for sale on the common counts in assumpsit and for goods sold and delivered, correspondence between the commission merchants and their agent offered for the purpose of showing what became of the goods and the things done in discharge of their duties is properly excluded as hearsay.—Hutchins v. Vinkemulder, 187 Mich. 676.

¶ 1824. In an action on an insurance policy where the question is whether formal proofs were waived by the conduct of an insurance adjuster, the company's agent, as showing the circumstances under which the adjuster came, may testify that he introduced him to the son of the assured, and heard some of their conversation.—Gristock v. Royal Ins. Co., 84 Mich. 161 adhered to on rehearing 87 Mich. 428.

¶ 1825. In an action for fraud in the sale of a partner's interest in a business, based on misrepresentations of the value of the interest and of the accounts outstanding, it was proper for the plaintiff as a witness to testify what was said as to the extent of the continuing partner's interest, and to show that it was really nominal.—Totten v. Burhans, 103 Mich. 6.

¶ 1826. Where one party to an action claims that he stopped cutting timber on certain lands because served with an injunction, which claim and the fact of service the other party denies, the testimony of witnesses that they had heard of such service, offered to fix the date when the cutting was suspended, but which is unnecessary for that purpose, is inadmissible.—Wright v. Dickinson, 67 Mich. 590.

§ 327. ——To prove the making of the statement.

Proof that another gave or reposed authority, see ante § 313.

Admissibility of hearer's testimony of what words were spoken, see ante ¶ 415.

¶ 1827. Where the correctness of a scale was disputed in an action on a contract for sawing logs testimony that a witness had heard something going to affect the correctness of plaintiff's scale from certain specified persons is not hearsay; though to state what he heard would be improper.—Grosvenor v. Ellis, 44 Mich. 452.

¶ 1828. A husband's testimony that he caused a building to be made by his wife's directions and with her money is not hearsay evidence of her title.—Gutsch v. McIlhargey, 69 Mich. 377.

¶ 1830. Where testimony was offered to prove by a clerk that certain letters were dictated to her by a member of the firm, were written out by her and signed by her with the firm name, put in an envelope properly addressed and mailed to the plaintiff, an objection that the evidence was hearsay and the proper person by whom to prove the facts was the member who dictated the letter was improperly sustained.—Wyandotte Portland Cement Co. v. Bruner, 147 Mich. 400.

¶ 1831. One at whose direction a letter was written by another, and who read it after it was written, is competent to testify as to its contents.—Burt v. Long, 106 Mich. 210.

¶ 1832. Replevin for certain barrels of apples. Defendant claimed a part of them. It became a question whether these could be distinguished from the rest; and the question of title was also material. On the trial, the defendant being a witness, it was held competent for him to testify that when the apples were replevied his agent pointed out certain barrels and stated that they were the ones purchased by defendant. The evidence was competent, not to establish title, but as tending to show whether there was such a confusion of goods that the officer was justifiable in taking possession of more apples than belonged to the plaintiffs.—Sleight v. Henning, 12 Mich. 371.

¶ 1833. In an action to charge two defendants as partners with the payment of plaintiff's services in running a shingle-mill previously owned by both as a firm, but then belonging to one only, reports of a scaler employed by plaintiff, wherein the mill is described by the name of the defendant alone, and which were made for the purpose of enabling the plaintiff to settle with the boom company for boom charges, are admissible in evidence as tending somewhat to show notice to plaintiff that the mill business was being carried on on such defendant's individual account, and not, as formerly, by the firm.—Robinson v. Worden, 33 Mich. 316.

¶ 1834. A plaintiff in trespass can show that he received information from a third person that the trespassers were on his land, but the testimony is admissible to show how he learned of the trespass, and not as tending to show that it was committed.—Gordon v. Cook, 47 Mich. 248.

¶ 1835. In an action by a married woman for the seizure of property mortgaged by her husband and son, but in which she had an undivided interest, evidence of defendant's conversations with the mortgagers on their own private business, and in plaintiff's absence, is inadmissible. But evidence bearing on a conversation between defendant and plaintiff concerning the purchase of property for herself and her husband is competent to show his knowledge of her interest.—Keables v. Christie, 47 Mich. 594.

¶ 1836. In an action for the value of timber taken from land by one who has purchased from the holder of a void tax-title, the good faith of the purchaser could not be shown by merely hearsay evidence that before his purchase the title was investigated by counsel and pronounced good.—Tuttle v. White, 49 Mich. 407.

¶ 1837. A client buying land on which execution has been levied cannot, against objection, show that his attorney advised him that the execution was returned satisfied and the levy was no longer a lien, for this would be hearsay. And if the advice were sound it would be unnecessary for protection, while if it were not it could not affect rights depending on the levy.—Vroman v. Thompson, 51 Mich. 452.

¶ 1838. In replevin for shingles which both parties claim to have purchased from the same vendor, evidence of conversations between vendor and defendant's agent, when the latter visited the mill to count the shingles, is admissible for defendant.—Marthinson v. Wagner, 63 Mich. 543.

¶ 1839. On an issue of plaintiff's good faith in cutting timber on another's land evidence as to what C., a foreman of the landowner, but having no authority to bind him, said after the trespass, about the boundary between plaintiff's land and the other's, is inadmissible, especially where it does not appear that plaintiff was informed of what C. said.—Gates v. Rifle Boom Co., 70 Mich. 309.

¶ 1840. Where the good faith of a chattel mortgage is in issue, evidence of advice given to the mortgager, in the mortgagee's absence, by one who had done the business for both parties, "as to what disposition he could make of his property so as to cover it up," cannot be received to affect the mortgagee's rights.—Ganong v. Green, 71 Mich. 1.

¶ 1841. In an action in assumpsit for breach of warranty, hearsay evidence is admissible for the purpose of showing when the plaintiff learned and became satisfied that he had been defrauded.—McNitt v. Henderson, 155 Mich. 214.

¶ 1842. On the question whether a creditor, holding an unrecorded chattel mortgage, made false representations of his debt and of the debtor's residence to induce another to give the debtor credit, such other person may state, as bearing upon the place where he would be likely to search for chattel mortgages, where he understood the debtor's residence to be, from a letter written to him by the creditor in answer to a letter of inquiry.—Curtis v. Wilcox, 91 Mich. 229.

¶ 1843. Where, in a suit to recover the price of certain mirrors, defendant claimed that they were defective, and were never accepted, it is competent to show that defendant requested a third person to notify plaintiffs of her dissatisfaction, if it is shown that such message was communicated to plaintiffs; otherwise such testimony is incompetent and immaterial.—Hudson v. Roos, 76 Mich. 173.

Declarations evincive of other thoughts and intents or of mental condition of declarant, see post §§ 330-335.

To show adverse claim, see post § 330.

¶ 1844. Testimony in a replevin suit that plaintiff's son had offered to sell the property would not tend to show the son's actual ownership, but would tend to show his assertion of ownership, which would be some evidence that he did not recognize his father's title, and might bear upon the father's acquiescence; it would be of the same quality as testimony of the father's conduct showing the nature of his possession.—Woolston v. Smead, 42 Mich. 54.

¶ 1845. In an action for trespass evidence of a previous conversation between the plaintiff and a third person about splitting rails to fence the land was held admissible as tending to show acts of ownership.—Gordon v. Cook, 47 Mich. 248.

¶ 1846. In an action for withholding possession of furniture in a hotel and leased by plaintiff's vendor to K., who was also sublessee of the hotel, for as long as K. continued to lease the hotel, it was admissible as against defendant claiming under later levy against plaintiff's vendor to show that when demand by plaintiff was made of K. for surrender of the furniture he stated that the lease was terminated and that he could not surrender because he was holding under the levy; also that the lessor of the hotel had agreed to cancel; it shows that plaintiff was then entitled to possession because of the termination of the lease.—Munroe v. Moloney, 67 Mich. 83.

¶ 1847. Where plaintiff seeks to recover for goods furnished to M. on the credit of defendant, who, as plaintiff alleges, knew the fact and understood he was to pay, evidence that defendant's agent took possession of a part of the goods for the reason, as stated, that his principal would have to pay for them, is admissible as tending to support plaintiff's claim.—Hagadorn v. Stronach Lumber Co., 81 Mich. 56.

¶ 1848. In a suit against the owner of a building for personal injuries arising from the lack of automatic gates to the elevator, a letter from defendant to the tenant in possession, confirming oral arrangements for the leases and stating that the defendant would provide automatic gates to the elevator, is admissible, not as an admission of a statutory duty to provide such gates, but to show defendant's assertion of dominion over the building.—Barfoot v. White Star Line, 170 Mich. 349.

Res gestæ of possession, see post § 447.
Self-serving declarations, see post § 486.

¶ 1849. The lessee of one tenant in common told the son of the other, while the father was living, that he (the lessee) had more right on the premises than he (the son) had. Held, that this had no tendency to prove that the tenant in common under whom he occupied the premises held adversely to the other.—Campau v. Campau, 45 Mich. 367.

¶ 1850. Assertions of title by one tenant in common to a stranger not communicated to or known by a cotenant are not receivable in evidence to show acts of open hostility to the title of said cotenant.—Loranger v. Carpenter, 148 Mich. 549.

§ 331. ——Evincive of responsibility or authorship.

¶ 1851. A hotel dining room manager brought suit against the proprietor for preventing the performance of the contract of management by interference. Held, that a letter from the proprietor to a newspaper, avowing his responsibility for the discharge of the table-waiters, was relevant evidence.—Beecher v. Pettee, 40 Mich. 181.

§ 332. ——Evincive of feelings or mental attitude.

Exclamations of pain as acts rather than declarations, see post ¶ 2401.
Evincive of intent or thoughts, see post §§ 333, 334.
Res gestæ showing feelings or state of mind, see post § 450.
Admissibility of threats known to defendant as bearing on self-defense, see Assault § 27.

¶ 1852. What one sued for assault and battery said after the assault is inadmissible to show malice at the time of the assault.—Breitenbach v. Trowbridge, 64 Mich. 393.

¶ 1853. Statements made by a wife, not in the presence of defendant, and letters written by her, may be admitted, in an action by her husband for alienating her affections, for the purpose of showing her state of mind towards him; though on his objection she is excluded from testifying to her version of it in behalf of defendants.—McKenzie v. Lautenschlager, 113 Mich. 171.

¶ 1854. Evidence of statements made to plaintiff by his wife and tending to show the state of her feeling towards him, are admissible in an action for the alienation of her affections, although not made in the presence of the defendant.—Sweikhart v. Hanrahan, 184 Mich. 201.

¶ 1855. In an action by an administrator to recover for the conversion of certificates of deposit claimed by defendant as a gift causa mortis from decedent, declarations tending to show the relations of decedent and defendant are admissible as tending to show a state of mind inconsistent with the claim of the gift.—Pease v. Jennings, 180 Mich. 682.

§ 333. ——Evincive of good or bad faith, knowledge or intent of declarant.

Admissibility of statements made as showing notice to hearer, see ante § 328.
Evincive of recognition, understanding, demand, claim, or protest, see post § 334.

Admissions tending to prove fraud on third persons in chattel mortgage, see Chattel Mortgages § 59.
Admissibility of letter to prove good faith in execution of chattel mortgage, see also Chattel Mortgages ¶ 246.

¶ 1856. Declarations and admissions made by an assignor for creditors, subsequent to the assignment and not in the assignee's presence, are nevertheless admissible to show the assignor's bad faith.—Koch v. Lyon, 82 Mich. 513.

¶ 1857. In order to show a co-defendant's knowledge of and connection with a fraud in procuring a loan partly of money and partly of other smaller mortgages on other land, the security being worthless land not owned by the mortgagers, plaintiff's agent testified that after obtaining certain of the smaller mortgages he met this co-defendant, who asked him "Have you got them all?" The agent answered "Yes." Defendant said "Don't you want to sell it. . . . It is a good thing." The agent further testified that he had never had any previous talk with this defendant about these mortgages. Held, that the evidence was admissible.—Stubly v. Beachboard, 68 Mich. 401.

¶ 1858. Admissions of a subsequent purchaser that he had knowledge of an attachment are admissible in evidence where it is further shown that he admitted also that he had purchased both after and subject to the attachment.—Hunt v. Strew, 33 Mich. 85.

¶ 1859. In a suit in replevin brought to recover on hay grown on defendant's land and harvested by plaintiff under an agreement for the division thereof made with defendant's father, testimony of defendant's conversations and acts after suit commenced is admissible to show acquiescence by him in the acts of his father as his agent.—Cronk v. Mulvaney, 168 Mich. 346.

¶ 1860. In an action for damages for assault and battery and ravishment, it is not reversible error to admit evidence that the defendant without giving any reason requested a friend to go on his bond, if necessary, before any action was taken and before he had knowledge that the plaintiff had informed her husband of the alleged acts.—Totten v. Totten, 172 Mich. 565.

¶ 1861. An admission by the defendant after the destruction while in his possession of a lighter belonging to the plaintiff, that he guessed that he would have a lighter to pay for, is admissible in an action against him for the value thereof, as tending to show that he understood that he had neglected some duty to protect the lighter.—Lund v. Lough, 186 Mich. 640.

¶ 1862. Conversations between the seller of a moving picture business and certain of his employees in which the former told the latter that he was losing money in the business, are properly admitted in evidence in an action by the purchaser of the business for damages for fraud as admissions against interest.—Johnson v. Campbell, 199 Mich. 186.

§ 334. ——Evincive of understanding, recognition, demand, claim, or protest.

Evincive of fraud or bad faith, see ante § 333.
Res gestæ declarations, see post § 449.
Res gestæ of performance, acceptance or rejection, see post § 459.
Book entry as evidence which of two persons was one charged, see post ¶¶ 2676, 2685.
Admissibility of plaintiff's letters written during engagement to prove promise, see Breach of Promise to Marry § 5.

¶ 1863. The question of a loan by plaintiff to defendant being in issue, two witnesses testified to conversations with defendant, in which he authorized and requested one of them to procure the loan. Held competent to prove by a third witness that he had a conversation with defendant about the same time, about the feasibility of procuring such loan from the plaintiff.—Clark v. McGraw, 14 Mich. 139.

¶ 1864. Where a receiptor, on demand for the goods, replied orally that he would pay up the execution thereon, his answer was admissible to show which clause of the receipt he chose to comply with.—Bowen v. Culp, 36 Mich. 224.

¶ 1865. Where there was an issue as to whether abandonment of a contract by a third person was caused by defendant, and some evidence in the affirmative, it was proper to admit a letter from defendant to such third person telling him not to do certain work until certain conditions prevailed, and, if they did not occur, to omit doing it.—Hood v. Olin, 68 Mich. 165.

¶ 1866. On an issue as to there having been a settlement of accounts leaving a third person free from debt to one of the parties, a letter to another third person, stating that there had been such a settlement and that little was owing, and warning against selling anything more on defendant's account, is admissible.—Hood v. Olin, 68 Mich. 165.

¶ 1867. A surety on a note, after maturity, endorsed thereon his consent to "any extension of time" which might be given the principal. In an action against the surety, the defense being the statute of limitations, held that testimony that the surety upon being asked to give further extension refused to sign again and stated that the note was just as good as if he had signed it, is admissible as tending to show the light in which the parties regarded the agreement whether as a technical extension or as forbearance and successive indulgences.—Borden v. Fletcher's Estate, 131 Mich. 220.

¶ 1868. In a suit by a plaintiff to collect a loan, it is proper to admit letters written to defendant demanding payment, where the court instructs that the only purpose of such evidence is to prove a demand.—Leonard v. Piggott, 152 Mich. 436.

¶ 1869. In an action under the Interstate Commerce Act where the shipper sues the initial carrier for a diversion of the shipment, a letter sent by plaintiff to the connecting carrier protesting against stoppage of the car short of its destination is admissible to show that plaintiff objected to a violation of the contract of shipment but not as to declarations in his own favor.—Perkett v. Manistee & N. E. R. Co., 175 Mich. 253.

¶ 1870. In an action by a father against the estate of his son-in-law to recover on a claim for money loaned to be used by deceased and his wife in the purchase of property, letters written by deceased to claimant referring to a transaction relating to some stock which another witness stated that deceased said to him was turned over to claimant to pay interest, were admissible for the purpose of showing that the loan was made and that it was kept alive by payments and by acknowledgments in writing.—In re Davis' Estate, 200 Mich. 500.

¶ 1871. Statements and conduct of a grantee named in a deed delivered to a third person for delivery to the former at the grantor's death, may be considered in an action to set aside such conveyance for the benefit of the grantor's creditors, as bearing on the grantee's credibility as a witness, and his understanding as to the delivery and acceptance of the deed prior to the grantor's death.—Brown v. Keiser, 182 Mich. 432.

Admissibility against heirs, legatees or estate, see post § 412.

Book entries by decedents, see also post, VIII, B.

Relevancy and sufficiency of evidence of sanity or insanity, see Insane Persons, I; Wills, II, V.

¶ 1872. Where, in a suit to set aside a deed for a nominal consideration made to defendant by an aged and infirm person, mental incapacity and undue influence are charged, declarations made by the grantor to the effect that the defendant had agreed to give him a contract providing for his support are properly admitted as tending to show the mental state of the grantor at the time of the execution of the deed.—Noban v. Shoup, 171 Mich. 191.

§ 336. Declarations by persons since deceased.

Former testimony of persons since deceased, see post §§ 337-344.

As admissions against interest binding on successors, see post § 409 et seq.

Self-serving declarations by person since deceased, see post § 488.

¶ 1873. Testimony as to statements or understandings of executors respecting land sold by them, which would be inadmissible as hearsay, if they were living, is not made admissible because they are dead.—Egan v. Grece, 79 Mich. 629.

¶ 1874. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 2635, providing that the certificate of a notary public "shall not be evidence of notice of non-payment or non-acceptance in any case" in which a defendant shall annex to his plea an affidavit denying the fact of having received such notice; such a certificate is not admissible as secondary evidence when the notary is dead, under the rule admitting memoranda made in the usual course of business, etc.—Sexton v. Perrigo, 126 Mich. 542.

§ 337. Former testimony of witness present or available.

Former testimony of party where other party has since died, see also post ¶ 1889.

Former testimony as admission against interest, see post § 376.

Failure to deny other's testimony heard in court as an admission, see post ¶ 2068.

Failure to deny testimony in deposition as admission, see post ¶ 2070.

Propriety for impeachment, see Witnesses, VI, D.

Testimony on preliminary examination as evidence in trial for crime, see Indictment, VIII, B.

¶ 1875. Evidence of what a witness testified to on a former trial is properly excluded as hearsay, until he has been called as a witness on the second trial, and the proper foundation laid for such evidence.—Michigan Sav. Bank v. Butler's Estate, 98 Mich. 381.

¶ 1876. A witness may be questioned as to his testimony on a former trial for the purpose of refreshing his memory or to impeach him.—Battishill v. Humphreys, 64 Mich. 514.

¶ 1877. On a former trial plaintiff testified as to the location of a particular article and gave exactly the same evidence on the second trial. Held, that there was no error committed in allowing the testimony of another witness, given on the former trial, that he heard the testimony of plaintiff on the point, and what such testimony was.—Johnson v. Spear, 82 Mich. 453.

¶ 1878. Where the court permitted the reading of the testimony of one witness on a former trial, that he heard the testimony of another witness on that trial to a certain effect, held, that such reading could not be injurious where the latter witness himself testified that he had given such evidence at a former trial, although his recollection at the second trial was indefinite as to the particular point involved.—Johnson v. Spear, 82 Mich. 453.

¶ 1879. Where a witness has stated that on the trial in justice's court defendant's son-in-law testified that he was present and heard the contract made between plaintiffs and defendant, his testimony that certain persons testified on such trial that such son-in-law was not present is hearsay and inadmissible.—Curren v. Ampersee, 96 Mich. 553.

¶ 1880. Upon a new trial, the attorney for plaintiff had caused a copy of the stenographic notes of the former trial to be made, and at the request of defendant's attorney produced them, and defendant's attorney read portions therefrom in evidence to the jury. Later, plaintiff desired to read from them to show what defendant testified on the former trial. Defendant's attorney objected on the ground that the defendant was in court and ready to testify. No proof of the authenticity of the notes was made, but defendant made no objection on this point. Held, no error was committed by allowing plaintiff to read into the evidence extracts from the notes of defendant's testimony on the former trial.—Opsomere v. Opsomere, 167 Mich. 636.

§ 338. Testimony on former trial by person since dead, absent or incompetent.

Of absent witness where deposition might be taken, see post § 339.
Character of former examination and testimony requisite to admission, see post § 340.
Requisite identities of present and former cases, see post § 341.
For and against whom admissible, see post § 342.
Foundation proofs or stipulations for admission, see post §§ 343, 344.
Means and sufficiency of proofs of former testimony, see post §§ 346, 347.
Sufficiency of proof of absence and of search, see post § 343.
Evidence to rebut inference arising from failure to testify on former occasion, see ante § 86.

¶ 1881. Where a witness has died, or is sick, insane or beyond the jurisdiction of the court, his testimony given on a former trial of the same issue between the same parties may be introduced.—Howard v. Patrick, 38 Mich. 795; Dunbar v. McGill, 69 Mich. 297.

¶ 1882. Where it has been shown that a witness at a former trial is beyond the jurisdiction of the court at the second trial his testimony given at the former trial may be read to the jury.—Dolph v. Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co., 149 Mich. 278; Croze v. St. Mary's Canal Mineral Land Co., 153 Mich. 363.

¶ 1883. Where a witness is only temporarily absent from the state, and it does not appear that he has been subpœnaed or that any effort has been made to procure his testimony or personal attendance, his testimony given on a trial in another court between other parties cannot be introduced.—Kellogg v. Secord, 42 Mich. 318.

¶ 1884. Temporary illness of a witness is not sufficient ground to justify the reading of evidence of the testimony of such witness taken upon a former trial.—Siefert v. Siefert, 123 Mich. 664.

¶ 1885. One cannot introduce the stenographic notes of testimony given on a former trial without having exhausted the best sources of information reasonably accessible to learn whether the witness himself cannot be found: this was so held where the witness' wife was not questioned as to his whereabouts.—Mawich v. Elsey, 47 Mich. 10.

¶ 1886. Testimony given in a justice's court by a party who has since died may be shown on appeal in the circuit court.—Lewis v. Roulo, 93 Mich. 475.

¶ 1887. Where a witness in justice's court dies pending an appeal, evidence of what he testified to before the justice is admissible upon the trial at the circuit.—Detroit Baseball Club v. Preston Nat. Bank, 113 Mich. 470.

¶ 1888. The right to use on a second trial, because of his absence from the state, the testimony of a witness given on the first trial of the case, is not affected by the fact that on the first trial he testified as a witness for the opposite party.—Hudson v. Roos, 76 Mich. 173.

¶ 1889. Where, after the first trial of a cause, defendant dies, plaintiff's testimony taken on such trial cannot be read upon a second trial if it relates to matters equally within defendant's knowledge; nor can the stenographer testify as to what plaintiff said on such trial, even though plaintiff offers to admit defendant's testimony as given thereon (How. St., § 7545).—Barker v. Hebbard, 81 Mich. 267.

¶ 1890. Stenographer's minutes of testimony given on a former trial may be admitted even though the deposition of the witness himself has since been taken.—Labar v. Crane, 56 Mich. 585.

¶ 1891. In replevin against an officer for goods attached by him, an appraiser identified his signature to the appraisal, testifying that there was no material difference in the stock between his appraisal and an appraisal upon attachment. Held, that on a new trial, if he was absent from the state, his testimony could be read in evidence without showing that his deposition could not have been taken.—Rosenfield v. Case, 87 Mich. 295.

¶ 1892. Testimony is not admissible if the party against whom it is to be used, or those in privity with him, has no opportunity to cross-examine the witness.—Sperry v. Moore's Estate, 42 Mich. 353.

¶ 1893. Where the assignor of a claim against an estate was called to prove the claim, and his cross-examination was delayed by the claimant to accommodate another witness, and he died before it could be taken, it was held proper to exclude his testimony.—Sperry v. Moore's Estate, 42 Mich. 353.

¶ 1894. Testimony given on a former trial by a party whose examination was left incomplete cannot be introduced in evidence, as a whole, by an adverse party, even though the witness has an opportunity to add to it.—Misner v. Darling, 44 Mich. 438.

§ 341. ——Identity of theories, issues, and parties.

Admissibility against different parties, see also post ¶¶ 1901, 1902.

Admissibility in other action of deposition taken, see Depositions § 37.

¶ 1895. Testimony given on a trial in ejectment cannot be introduced after the death of the witness, in an action between other parties in interest upon a covenant of warranty.—Mason v. Kellogg, 38 Mich. 132.

¶ 1897. In an action against a railroad company for negligent killing the declaration was amended so as to charge gross negligence. A witness on both trials testified that the company through him had notified persons not to use the crossing. On a third trial, under the amended declaration, the witness not being present, it was held that his original testimony, which had not been produced on a second trial, was incompetent because given under a different issue.—Schindler v. Milwaukee, L. S. & W. R. Co., 87 Mich. 400.

¶ 1898. In a suit for obstructing a river so as to damage complainant in the use of its water power, the testimony of a deceased witness taken at another trial at which the complainant was not a party and in which the issues were not the same, is not admissible for the purpose of showing the history of the river prior to the building of defendant's dam.—Eesley Light & Power Co. v. Commonwealth Power Co., 172 Mich. 78.

¶ 1899. Testimony of the husband, given in another case, is inadmissible against the wife, in an action against the wife and husband to reach property alleged to have been conveyed to the wife in fraud of the husband's creditors.—Riggs v. Whitaker, 130 Mich. 327.

¶ 1900. Testimony taken in another case to which one of the present parties was not a party is inadmissible; and the fact that the present party is suing by a next friend, who was a party in the other suit, does not alter the rule; since a next friend is a nominal party and did not then represent them.—Walterhouse v. Walterhouse, 130 Mich. 89.

Necessity that theory, issues and parties be the same in both cases, see ante § 341.

¶ 1901. Stenographer's minutes of the testimony given upon a former trial by a party who has since left the jurisdiction are admissible; and if the effect of such evidence is so confined as to affect only the liability of the party who gave it, a joint party cannot complain of its admission.—Stewart v. First Nat. Bank, 43 Mich. 257.

¶ 1902. In an action by a wife against a saloon-keeper for wrongful sale of liquor to her husband, the stenographer's notes of the testimony given by such saloon-keeper in a prosecution against the husband for drunkenness resulting proximately from the sale complained of, are admissible.—Lucker v. Liske, 111 Mich. 683.

§ 343. ——Sufficiency of foundation proof.

See also ante ¶ 1885.

For impeachment, see ante ¶ 1875, and see Witnesses, VI.

Necessity of diligence to find and produce absent witness, see ante § 338.

Showing as to possibility of taking deposition, see ante § 339.

Grounds for admission, see ante §§ 338-342.

¶ 1903. The proof of inability to find a witness should be full and convincing, and the sufficiency of such proof is largely in the discretion of the trial court, which will not be reviewed in the absence of evidence of gross abuse.—Krouse v. Detroit United Ry. Co., 170 Mich. 438.

¶ 1904. The absence of a witness from the state so as to permit his testimony at a former trial to be read, is sufficiently shown by the affidavit of a deputy sheriff that he was unable to find him and was informed he was out of the state, and by testimony of an attorney looking after his business, that on certain dates the attorney had received letters from him postmarked at a distant city where the witness was said to be.—Wheeler v. Jenison, 120 Mich. 422.

¶ 1905. As a foundation for introducing the testimony of a witness taken on a former trial of a personal injury suit, defendant proved that he had searched for the witness by going to the witness' former address and by looking for his name in the city directory, and was unable to find him. No showing was made that the witness was dead or out of the jurisdiction of the court, or that all reasonable efforts to find him had been diligently made. Held, the evidence taken at the former trial was properly excluded.—Krouse v. Detroit United Ry. Co., 170 Mich. 438.

¶ 1906. It is not an abuse of discretion to admit the testimony of a witness given on a previous trial of an action, wherein he was fully cross-examined by counsel for the opposite party, and it appearing that whereabouts of the witness was unknown and could not be ascertained by diligent search and inquiry.—Karwick v. Pickands, 181 Mich. 169.

¶ 1907. Evidence held insufficient to show that plaintiff's illness was so severe and of such permanent character that he could not testify so as to render admissible evidence in another case in which he testified as to the validity of the claimed contract involved in both cases.—Neal v. Novelty Leather Works, 198 Mich. 598.

§ 344. ——Stipulations for admission.

¶ 1908. Under a stipulation that the "testimony" of a witness who was examined and cross-examined on a former trial might be used, as taken down by the official stenographer, as evidence, it is error to exclude the cross-examination, after having admitted the direct, even though at the request of the party who has conducted such cross-examination.—Campau v. Traub, 27 Mich. 215.

§ 345. Sufficiency of proof of declaration; exact words or substance.

Inadmissibility of hearsay to prove hearsay, see ante § 312.

Means and sufficiency of proof of former testimony, see post § 346.

Competency of witness who has heard part only of the statement, see post § 347.

Stenographer's transcript as means of proof of admission made in testifying, see also post ¶ 2762.

Effect of declarations in conflict with acts of declarant, see post § 608.

Mode of examination and cross-examination to bring out whole conversation, see Examination of Witnesses, I, II.

Admissibility of negative evidence that conversation was not heard, see ante § 80.

¶ 1909. Witnesses are not required to rehearse verbatim, but may give the substance of what occurs and is said in the dealings to which they testify.—Willard v. Fralick, 31 Mich. 431.

¶ 1910. While a witness testifying to declarations of a party, or to conversations, should give the words used if able to do so, yet a general answer embodying the substance or purport is not objectionable where that is all the witness can recollect.—Chambers v. Hill, 34 Mich. 523.

¶ 1911. The substance or effect of a conversation may properly be given in evidence even when the witness cannot remember the exact conversation itself; and the question in how many conversations between the witness and one of the parties a certain subject involved was referred to is a proper preliminary to an inquiry into the details of the conversation.—Bathrick v. Detroit Post & Tribune Co., 50 Mich. 629.

¶ 1912. Testimony of a witness as to a conversation is not to be rejected because he cannot reproduce the exact words.—Steers v. Holmes, 79 Mich. 430.

¶ 1913. The competency of a letter offered as a narration from recollection of particular facts constituting an admission by another is tested first of all by the ability of the writer to testify that it accurately states his knowledge and recollection at the time.—Draper v. Brown, 153 Mich. 120.

¶ 1914. A letter stating that a person "offers his wife's mortgage on the house and lot he occupies," is not admissible as evidence of an admission by the husband alluded to, it being the witness' conclusion as to the effect of what was said.—Draper v. Brown, 153 Mich. 120.

§ 346. Means and sufficiency of proof of former testimony.

See also ante ¶ 1880.

When minutes may properly be read, see ante §§ 337-344.

Minutes kept by attorney, see post ¶ 2602.

Best and secondary evidence of former testimony when transcribed, see ante § 110.

Stenographers' transcripts as documents, see also post § 547.

Sufficiency of proof of substance of statement without exact words, see ante § 345.
Witness to portion only, see post § 347.
Admissibility of deposition of party or witness who has since died, see Depositions § 29.

¶ 1915. It is not necessary that a witness, called to prove what a person since deceased had testified to on a former trial, should be able to recollect the precise words of the deceased witness. It is sufficient if he be able to state that he recollects and can give the substance of the testimony.—Burson v. Huntington, 21 Mich. 415.

¶ 1916. The foundation for admission of a stenographer's minutes of testimony on a former trial is not impeached by the fact that the stenographer could not remember every word.—Lucker v. Liske, 111 Mich. 683.

¶ 1917. The official stenographer or anyone else who heard it is competent to testify to a witness' testimony at a former trial. —Merrill v. Leisenring, 166 Mich. 219.

§ 347. Witnesses to portions of conversation or testimony.

¶ 1918. Witnesses can testify to such parts of a conversation as they have heard, though they did not hear the whole. The weight of their testimony in such case is for the jury.—Pendill v. Neuberger, 64 Mich. 220.

B. REPUTATION AND CHARACTER.

§ 348. In general, what constitutes.

Common remark and bystanders' talk as hearsay, see ante § 310.
Distinction between general reputation and specific rumor, see post § 349.

§ 349. General reputation and specific facts.

¶ 1920. The character for chastity of a plaintiff suing for slander can only be assailed by general reputation, not by specific acts.—Proctor v. Houghtaling, 37 Mich. 41.

¶ 1921. To show the value of a horse, evidence of the general reputation of fast trotters of horses of the same blood is admissible, but it is inadmissible to name particular horses and to give their reputed time as trotters; and if such testimony is admitted, it is error to exclude rebutting evidence that certain horses of such blood have not developed into fast trotters.—Ellis v. Simpkins, 81 Mich. 1.

To prove identity of persons, see also ante § 324.
Particular traits and manifestations of character, see post §§ 352-355.
Best evidence of appointment and character of officials and personal representatives, see ante § 126; see also Estates of Decedents, ¶ 1034.
General reputation to prove partnership, see Partnership, I.
Professional reputation and standing as element in value of professional services, see Values.
Character evidence in prosecutions for crime, see Indictment, VIII, B.
Evidence of effect of malicious prosecution on reputation, see also Damages § 316.
Relevancy of character for carefulness and thrift in action for death as bearing on damages, see Death by Wrongful Act § 24.

¶ 1922. Proof of the character of parties is allowed in criminal cases, but rarely as independent testimony in civil suits, though it might perhaps be proper to cross-examine a witness thereon where it would bear on his belief as to their sincerity.—Howard v. Patrick, 43 Mich. 121.

¶ 1923. In civil cases evidence of defendant's good reputation, unless the proceedings put it in issue, is inadmissible.—Fahey v. Crotty, 63 Mich. 383.

¶ 1924. Evidence of defendant's good character is inadmissible in a civil suit for assault and battery.—Pokriefka v. Mackurat, 91 Mich. 399.

¶ 1925. In an action against policemen and another for assault and battery on one who opposed the unlawful making of a sewer trench on his land it is immaterial that one of the policemen was long in service and never was arrested.—Zube v. Webber, 67 Mich. 52.

¶ 1926. Evidence of the bad reputation of one named as executor in a will offered for probate and of testator's knowledge of it is admissible on the question of testamentary capacity.—McGinnis v. Kempsey, 27 Mich. 363.

¶ 1927. The reputation of the house a witness rooms in is immaterial to the issue so long as the party in whose interest he is testifying is not responsible for it.—Taylor v. Adams, 58 Mich. 187.

¶ 1928. In an action for the price of logs sold it appeared that after a scaler mutually agreed upon had scaled a portion of the logs his place was by agreement filled by another scaler who scaled all of the logs. Held, that evidence of the first scaler's reputation was immaterial, his scale not being in controversy and his reputation not in question.—Malone v. Gates, 87 Mich. 332.

¶ 1929. Evidence of defendant's good character is inadmissible in an action of assumpsit to recover money alleged to have been misappropriated by defendant while a clerk for plaintiff.—Adams v. Elseffer, 132 Mich. 100.

¶ 1930. The fact that a party to a civil action is asked, on cross-examination, questions implying, by inference, wrongdoing upon his part, does not entitle him to introduce testimony as to his general reputation.—Munroe v. Godkin, 111 Mich. 183.

Evidence of reputation, professional standing, and the like as bearing on damages from libel or slander, see Damages § 315.

¶ 1931. One who sues for libel puts his previous reputation in issue.—Bathrick v. Detroit Post & Tribune Co., 50 Mich. 629.

¶ 1932. Plaintiff in an action of slander cannot introduce evidence of his good reputation unless it has been attacked, even though on his own cross-examination questions discreditable to his character were asked.—Hitchcock v. Moore, 70 Mich. 112.

¶ 1933. In an action for slander in charging a horse-jockey with theft in that he retained the winnings of defendant's horse, evidence of plaintiff's general reputation for dishonesty in failing to account to the owners for the winnings of horses driven by him, is admissible on the question of damages, but not to support a plea of justification.—Finley v. Widner, 112 Mich. 230.

¶ 1934. In an action for libel brought by a member of the legislature charged with having bribed and improperly influenced other members, testimony as to the reputation of the legislature, or of individual members thereof, except plaintiff, is inadmissible.—Randall v. Evening News Ass'n, 97 Mich. 136.

¶ 1935. In an action against a liquor-seller for damages from the killing of plaintiff's husband by an intoxicated person, evidence of the husband's habits as a drinking man is admissible.—Brockway v. Patterson, 72 Mich. 122.

¶ 1936. In a wife's suit for damages to her means of support occasioned by the killing of her husband by a person intoxicated with liquor obtained from the defendant, evidence that the person causing the death was in the habit of getting drunk is admissible.—Doty v. Postal, 87 Mich. 143.

¶ 1937. One sued for an injury caused by his servant's careless driving cannot be allowed to show that such servant was a temperate man and not addicted to the use of intoxicating liquors.—Williams v. Edmunds, 75 Mich. 92.

Admissibility of evidence of plaintiff's quarrelsomeness as bearing on self-defense, see Assault § 27.

In criminal cases, see Indictment, VIII, B; Homicide, VII.

¶ 1938. In an action for assault and battery evidence as to defendant's good reputation, or of his reputation as a peaceable citizen, is inadmissible.—Fahey v. Crotty, 63 Mich. 383.

¶ 1939. Where a person charged with assault has been allowed to show that his reputation is that of a peaceable and law-abiding citizen, he cannot complain that he has not been allowed to prove by his neighbors that it was not that of a man who would be likely to commit such an assault.—Alford v. Vincent, 53 Mich. 555.

¶ 1941. In an action against a liquor-seller for damages from the killing of plaintiff's husband by an intoxicated person, evidence that the husband was quiet when sober and quarrelsome when drunk is admissible as bearing on the question of his intoxication and contributory negligence.—Brockway v. Patterson, 72 Mich. 122.

¶ 1942. In an action by lessees for forcible eviction, evidence that defendant, the lessor, was a hard-tempered and dangerous man is admissible for the purpose of showing the effect of his actions and threats upon plaintiff's conduct in leaving the premises, and to rebut the statement of defendant's counsel, made during the opening of the case, that though defendant did chase plaintiffs off and did have a gun it was done under advice of counsel and without intent to hurt any one.—Baumier v. Antiau, 79 Mich. 509.

Inadmissibility of specific facts, see also ante ¶ 1920.

Mode and means of proof, see post § 358.

Reputation of prosecutrix in bastardy proceedings, see Bastards § 9.

Evidence of reputation of party as bearing on adultery in divorce, see also Divorce § 59, ¶ 209.

¶ 1943. Defendant in a civil action for seduction cannot show by way of defense that his general reputation for chastity has always been good.—Watson v. Watson, 53 Mich. 168.

¶ 1944. Evidence of reputation is not admissible to show adultery in a divorce case, but it may be considered as subsidiary evidence and going to explain the conduct of the parties toward each other.—Marble v. Marble, 36 Mich. 386.

§ 355. Financial repute or credit, honesty and integrity.

¶ 1945. The fact that among his neighbors a man is reputed to be worth a stated sum does not prove that he is, nor is it admissible upon the issue of his making a fraudulent disposition of his property.—First Nat. Bank of Sturgis v. Buck, 56 Mich. 394.

¶ 1946. General reputation as to financial standing is inadmissible to prove fraud.—Bodine v. Simmons, 38 Mich. 682.

¶ 1947. Where an assignment for creditors is attacked as fraudulent, evidence of general reputation that the assignee is insolvent is admissible.—Angell v. Rosenbury, 12 Mich. 241.

¶ 1948. In an action for damages for wrongfully suing out an attachment against a firm, it is proper to show that plaintiff's business reputation was good before the issue of the attachment.—Brand v. Hinchman, 68 Mich. 590.

¶ 1949. In an action for a fraud in which several persons were concerned there was no error in admitting evidence that the reputation of one of them was good the year it was committed; his supposed integrity would be material in determining the reliance the person defrauded might be expected to place in him.—Daniels v. Dayton, 49 Mich. 137.

¶ 1950. In a suit to recover money claimed to have been paid by reason of defendant's false representations, evidence of his good character for honesty and integrity is irrelevant.—Klein v. Bayer, 81 Mich. 233.

§ 356. Reputed qualities and traits of animals.

General reputation or particular facts and rebuttal by particular instances, see ante ¶ 1921.

General reputation of car horse as bearing on negligence in using it, see also Carriers ¶ 616.

¶ 1951. As tending to show the value of a horse of a certain blood, evidence of the general reputation as fast trotters of horses of that blood is admissible, but the reputed time, as trotters, of particular horses cannot be shown.—Ellis v. Simpkins, 81 Mich. 1.

§ 357. Common report and understanding.

General repute as to adverse possession, see also Adverse Possession § 46.

¶ 1952. Evidence of common report as to the area of a piece of land is not admissible to rebut the presumption of fraud arising from a vendor's positive false statements thereon made to his vendee.—Starkweather v. Benjamin, 32 Mich. 305.

¶ 1953. In ejectment where the defendant claims title by adverse possession, it is proper to permit him to show that the land was generally called and spoken of as his in the neighborhood, as this tends to prove the notoriety of his claim of title.—Sparrow v. Hovey, 44 Mich. 63.

¶ 1954. Where the question is whether defendants had maintained adverse possession for fifteen years up to a certain fence, it is error to admit evidence that it was common repute in the neighborhood that the fence was not on the true line.—Atwood v. Canrike, 86 Mich. 99.

¶ 1955. In an action of ejectment evidence of general reputation that land was claimed to be owned by occupant, is admissible in showing adverse possession.—Sanscrainte v. Torongo, 87 Mich. 69.

¶ 1956. Evidence of general reputation and understanding among lumbermen of the state that a certain log-scale was adopted is inadmissible where the issue is whether that or another scale was in use on a certain lake or river.—Headley v. Hackley, 50 Mich. 43.

¶ 1957. Evidence of general knowledge and rumor among the employees of a street railway company that a car had been on the road ever since it was built is hearsay and irrelevant in a suit for injuries received by a passenger.—Wormsdorf v. Detroit City R. Co., 75 Mich. 472.

§ 358. Mode and means of proving reputation.

Presumption as to continuance of reputation unchanged, see ante § 40.

Competency of witness as dependent on knowledge of reputation in question, see Witnesses, II.

¶ 1958. No one can testify to another's reputation whose knowledge is subsequent and consists of what he has been told the reputation was, for this is hearsay.—Bathrick v. Detroit Post & Tribune Co., 5 Mich. 629.

¶ 1959. On an issue as to chastity of the girl in a civil case for seduction, a question to a witness whether he had heard any remarks made as to her conduct is hearsay.—Badder v. Keefer, 91 Mich. 611.

¶ 1960. Where in an action for slander it had been charged that the woman was of a low character, and defendant had submitted testimony on her general reputation for chastity, the plaintiff was properly allowed to prove by a witness who had lived in the same town with plaintiff all his life, and who had been a newspaper reporter for three years that he had never heard a word or a suspicion against plaintiff's character, without proving that witness personally knew plaintiff.—Smitley v. Pinch, 148 Mich. 670.

Declarations and acts by others attributable to the party, see post, VII, C, 3.
Scope and effect of admissions and rebuttal of admissions, see post, VII, C, 4.
Admissions to prove promise to marry, see Breach of Promise to Marry § 5.

¶ 1961. The statements or admissions of a party to the record are always admissible against him.—Mears v. Cornwall, 73 Mich. 78; Reiser v. Portere, 106 Mich. 102.

¶ 1962. Where a man voluntarily admits a fact against his interest the ordinary motives of human conduct are sufficient warrants for its belief, and such a statement is evidence for the adverse party.—Merrill v. Leisenring, 166 Mich. 219.

¶ 1963. Where the existence of any valid claim against a vendor in a contract for the sale of logs is in issue, statements to a third person made by the vendee referring to such contract, and tending to refute the existence of any such liability, are competent.—Seligman v. Ten Eyck's Estate, 60 Mich. 267.

¶ 1964. In an action for services rendered by plaintiffs' intestate, a witness to a conversation with intestate may be asked what intestate said as to helping to sell land, where the tendency of the answer will be to negative a portion of the services sued for.—Webster v. Sibley, 72 Mich. 630.

¶ 1965. In an action involving the question of liability for the interest as between the mortgager and a grantee of the premises subject to the mortgage, a witness may state what defendant mortgager said tending to support the theory that he agreed to pay the interest.—Ford v. Savage, 111 Mich. 144.

¶ 1966. The debauching by defendant of plaintiff's wife may, in an action for alienating her affections, be shown by admissions contained in letters written by defendant to the wife.—Mead v. Randall, 111 Mich. 268.

¶ 1967. In an action on an insurance policy, defended on the ground of ill health at the time of making the contract, it is error to strike out testimony of one physician that the insured had told him that he was attended by another physician.—Rhode v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 129 Mich. 112.

¶ 1968. In a claim against an estate upon a note, testimony of a witness as to statements made by the decedent that claimant held her note, was competent as bearing upon the question of whether the note had been paid in full, and whether claimant was entitled to retain possession of it.—Fowles v. Joslyn, 135 Mich. 333.

¶ 1969. In an action against the estate of a decedent for services rendered, plaintiff alleged that decedent contracted to convey to her a certain farm or leave her its value in money, besides paying a weekly compensation in return for her services. Held, that statements of decedent to third persons that he would do well by plaintiff if she would care for him and that he had promised it to her, were admissible as tending to prove such contract.—In re Thompson's Estate, 157 Mich. 669; Forsythe v. Thompson's Estate, Id.

¶ 1970. In an action for fraud, an attorney formerly employed by plaintiff who had several interviews with defendant before suit was instituted, some of which were had when both litigants were present, may testify that defendant admitted the charges, upon which the action was based, to be true, both when the plaintiff was present and when he was not present.—Priebisch v. Ottenwess, 176 Mich. 476.

§ 360. Concessions or admissions of law.

¶ 1971. Admissions of parties as to conclusions of law cannot bind the court.—Rice v. Ruddiman, 10 Mich. 125; Church v. Holcomb, 45 Mich. 29.

¶ 1972. A concession that defendant is liable for the injury complained of is but the admission of a rule of law, and the court is not bound to act on it, if satisfied that in fact there was no right of action.—City of Detroit v. Beckman, 34 Mich. 125.

§ 361. Relevancy to or connection with matters in issue.

Foundation proofs of connection and relevancy, see post § 367.

¶ 1973. In a suit by commercial agents to recover from their principal the advances, charges and expenses on the sale of merchandise made elsewhere through a correspondent the account of the sale as rendered by the correspondent embracing that principal's goods and others cannot be received in evidence on the ground of contract, since it must accord, and not conflict, with the contract. Otherwise it is merely hearsay.—Coe v. Nash, 28 Mich. 259.

¶ 1973a. In an action upon a life insurance policy, statements made by the insured as to having suffered an abortion which resulted in her death, held to constitute an admission of a breach of the contract of insurance which was based on a warranty that she was not pregnant.—Gilchrist v. Mystic Workers of the World, 188 Mich. 466.

¶ 1974. Declarations or admissions by an occupant of land as to the character of his possession should be excluded where there is no evidence of the indentity of the land with that in suit.—Brown v. Quinland, 75 Mich. 289.

¶ 1975. In ejectment by the husband of a cotenant against others, a deposition stating that plaintiff's wife before her death said she wanted some property made over to her name to be conveyed to the rightful owners, is inadmissible to show that the title acquired by her to the land in question belonged to defendants, where it appears that the conversation related to other land.—Fenton v. Miller, 94 Mich. 204.

¶ 1976. Where two persons are engaged in purchasing timber and manufacturing it into lumber, their admissions of joint liability, made when they purchased the timber from a third person, are admissible in evidence in an action against them for hauling logs, as the purchase, hauling and sawing constitute but one transaction.—Dumanoise v. Townsend, 80 Mich. 302.

¶ 1977. In a wife's action against her father-in-law for alienating her husband's affections, plaintiff and her family being Roman Catholics, while the husband and his family were Protestants, testimony of defendant's statement in the presence of plaintiff and her aunt, that "he would rather see his son dead than living with a Catholic" is competent, but further statements by him derogatory of a picture of the Virgin Mary which was hanging upon the wall in plaintiff's house, are irrelevant.—Rice v. Rice, 104 Mich. 371.

¶ 1978. In a suit by a nurse to recover for services rendered to an injured employee of a defendant corporation, the testimony of the attending physician that he had charged his own services to defendant on his books was incompetent, although it was claimed that defendant had authorized the physician to employ plaintiff.—Hodges v. Detroit Electric Light & Power Co., 109 Mich. 547.

¶ 1979. In an action for compensation under a contract to furnish a tug and boom to inclose 500,000 logs, both tug and boom to be under the direction of the defendant, it was error to permit testimony of statements of the captain of the tug that the boom would hold over 500,000 feet of logs of less than average size, for the purpose of sustaining a claim that defendant was damaged by deficiency in the size of the boom to take 510,000 feet.—Hebard v. Shaw, 123 Mich. 514.

¶ 1981. In an action for negligence by a tenant against his landlord to recover damages for a fire caused by an unswept chimney flue in his apartment, testimony as to whether a former tenant of another apartment permitted anybody to use a ladder which was the only means of access to the roof, is properly excluded, since his assumption of control over the ladder would not fix his rights nor those of plaintiff so as to deny plaintiff access to the roof to clean the flue.—Cooper v. Lawson, 139 Mich. 628.

Inadmissibility as parol evidence varying writings, see ante § 155, ¶ 784.

Capacity of infant or insane person to make admissions, see Infants, I, VII; Insane Persons, II, V.

Exclusion of declarations to physicians, attorneys, priests, or to spouse of declarant as privileged communications, see Witnesses, V.
Exclusion of declarations because equally within knowledge of person deceased, see Witnesses, IV.

¶ 1982. In a suit for alienation of a wife's affections, the defendant sought to show admissions made on the stand by plaintiff in the former trials of the case with reference to the time plaintiff ceased to cohabit with his wife and admissions as to plaintiff's relations with another woman. Held, the testimony was material on the question of damages to show the state of feelings then existing and it was error to exclude it on the theory that under the declaration in the present trial plaintiff could not testify as a witness due to the issues raised by a count added charging adultery.—Merrill v. Leisenring, 166 Mich. 219.

§ 363. Interest or motive of declarant at time.

Acts and declarations by predecessors in title after or before having title as affecting successors, see post §§ 415, 416.
Declarations and utterances as to pain or sickness in presence of prospective witness, see post § 455.

¶ 1983. The declarations of a party in interest, although he is at the time taking measures to divest himself of his interest, or those of an actor, before the transaction is completed, are admissible evidence on the ground of such interest, or relation to the transaction.—Wyckoff v. Carr, 8 Mich. 44.

¶ 1984. Where the question is whether goods for the price of which suit is brought were accepted by defendant, acts of ownership by him after suit brought cannot be shown.—Black v. Delbridge, Brooks & Fisher Co., 90 Mich. 56.

§ 364. Declarations or acts in derogation of title or possession.

Necessity that lands be the same as those in issue, see ante ¶¶ 1974, 1975.
Acts and declarations of agents and privies, see post, VII, C, 3.
Declarations and acts of predecessors binding on successors, see post §§ 414-416.
Res gestæ acts and declarations, see post § 447.
Time of acts or declarations, declarations after or on eve of passing title, see ante § 363.

¶ 1985. The declarations of a party in interest are always admissible in derogation of his own title.—Hogan v. Sherman, 5 Mich. 60.

¶ 1986. Declarations as to the ownership, by a party in possession, are to be received in disparagement of title, not in support of it, unless as res gestæ to make out an adverse holding.—Michigan Paneling Machine & Manufacturing Co. v. Parsell, 38 Mich. 475.

¶ 1987. Action on a promissory note in the name of the payee. Held competent to prove the admission of the plaintiff that he did not own the note, and did not know who did; that it was given for money won at cards by a third person, and made payable to him without his knowledge or consent.—Hogan v. Sherman, 5 Mich. 60.

¶ 1988. A statement of the lessee to effect that he was holding not under lease but under levy is admissible as tending to show termination of lease as against him.—Munroe v. Moloney, 67 Mich. 83.

¶ 1989. Where it is proper for a person suing a bank for the amount of a deposit which he made in another's name, but claims as belonging to himself, to prove his title to it, he may properly show everything connected with the origin and history of the deposit, and the other person's statements in derogation of his own interest.—Davis v. Lenawee County Sav. Bank, 53 Mich. 163.

¶ 1990. Statements by one tenant in common recognizing the title of another tenant in common are admissions against interest and admissible in evidence.—Loranger v. Carpenter, 148 Mich. 549.

§ 365. ——As to boundaries or extent of possession.

By predecessor in title, see post § 414.
Res gestæ affecting boundaries, see post § 448.

¶ 1991. In ejectment for land which defendant claims was not included in the deed under which plaintiff's title is asserted, plaintiff, if the deed is ambiguous, can show such conjoint acts of the parties thereto as tend to show their understanding of the location of the boundary and that stakes placed by them were so placed to define it.—Moran v. Lezotte, 54 Mich. 83.

¶ 1992. There was testimony tending to show that a house standing on A.'s ground on the shore of a lake had, on account of the shore's washing away, been moved back upon B.'s land without his consent. Held, that a conversation between A. and B., in which A. made a statement in disparagement of his title, and in which they arrived at an understanding with reference to the house, was admissible.—Hoffman v. Clark, 63 Mich. 175.

¶ 1993. In an action of trespass, it is competent to show admissions of the defendant, who participated as chairman in an early survey, as to the correctness of the survey.—Sherrard v. Cudney, 134 Mich. 200.

§ 366. Rebuttal or contradiction by admissions.

Admissions receivable in rebuttal of declarant's testimony, see also ante ¶ 448.
Necessity of foundation, see post § 367.
Admissions and declarations to impeach or discredit witness, see Witnesses, VI, D.

¶ 1994. Where one who is sued by a woman for seduction denies that he ever had intercourse with her, testimony of his admissions that he is the father of her child is competent.—Rabeke v. Baer, 115 Mich. 328.

§ 367. Foundation evidence of interest, privity, etc.

Burden of proving foundation facts, see ante § 69.
Sufficiency of evidence of genuineness of receipt ascribed to party, see post § 589.
Admissions made in diverse capacity or right, see post § 372.
Settlements made with or offers to third persons, see post § 396.
Foundation proof of agency or privity where declaration is made by another person, see post §§ 437-439.
Knowledge or hearing of statement to qualify witness thereto, see also Witnesses, II.

¶ 1995. In connection with testimony by his wife in defendant's presence that money was in the bank to pay plaintiff, a materialman and laborer, testimony that the premises belonged to defendant's wife is material as bearing upon her interest in the subject, and is admissible.—Evans v. Montgomery, 95 Mich. 497.

¶ 1996. It is unnecessary to lay a foundation for impeachment before showing former contradictory testimony as an admission.—Cady v. Doxtator, 193 Mich. 170.

¶ 1997. Where testimony is of such a character as to constitute an admission of the party, it is not necessary to lay the foundation for its reception, or even to cross-examine the party on the subject.—Merrill v. Leisenring, 166 Mich. 219.

¶ 1998. A fire policy was defended on the ground that there was false swearing as to losses by insured and her servant respecting the property destroyed. Some of it was found concealed and removed. A witness was asked whether she had seen plaintiff after the fire and had any conversation with her in which witness was warned not to say anything about the whereabouts of any of the property, and was then asked if witness had had any "such conversation with any one." Held that the question was improper without some thing to show its materiality.—Monaghan v. Agricultural Fire Ins. Co. of Watertown, N. Y., 53 Mich. 238.

¶ 1999. Evidence that a solicitor who has filed an answer for defendant, lately an infant, was employed, not by him personally, but by his father, who represented that he was authorized by the son to employ counsel, but who, when examined as a witness in the cause, gave no testimony upon the question of such authority, is insufficient in the absence of any other evidence on the subject to bind the son on the theory of an affirmance by answering. Upon such evidence there is no presumption of the solicitor's authority to put in the answer; the father's representations were mere hearsay upon a question not provable, and which, if true, admitted of easy proof at the proper time by competent evidence.—Carrell v. Potter, 23 Mich. 377.

¶ 2000. Where two witnesses in a will probate contest, testify to the same state of facts as to the payment of a sum of money, the opposite party cannot introduce declarations of one not a party, affecting rights of a party, under the claim that the similarity of testimony of such two witnesses shows that they are guilty of a conspiracy, where there was no other evidence tending to show conspiracy.—Henrich v. Saier, 124 Mich. 86.

¶ 2001. It must be presumed that the plaintiff in an action under a city ordinance for damages for injury to his automobile sanctioned a statement in his declaration that his automobile was driven by his agent and servant, so as to authorize the receipt in evidence of such pleading as an admission in a subsequent action wherein the parties were reversed for damages for injury to such defendant's automobile in which second action a violation of a statutory duty to maintain lights on such plaintiff's automobile was alleged, and it was pleaded as a defense in the second action that the automobile was driven without the consent or knowledge of the owner, and where the plaintiff in such former action testified at that trial in support of the allegations in the declaration.—Cady v. Doxtator, 193 Mich. 170.

2. Nature, form and sufficiency of admission; implied admissions.

Substance of the declaration or act and its relevancy to the issues, see ante VII, C, 1.
Relevancy and connection of admissions to subject of suit, see ante § 361.
Certainty or ambiguity of the admission, see post § 369.
Completeness of the admission, see post § 370.
Voluntariness of the admission, see post § 371.
Representative, joint or official acts and declarations, see post §§ 372-374.
Testimony in other proceedings or admissions therein, see post § 376.
Oral and written admissions, see post §§ 375, 377-384.
Implied and tacit admissions from conduct or silence, see post § 385 et seq.
Claims and assertions of right as implied admissions, see post § 388 et seq.
Offers of compromise as admissions, see post §§ 394-396.
Effect of declarations and acts by third persons, predecessors, representatives, privies, and agents of party to bind him, see post, VII, C, 3.

Admissions and confessions excluded as privileged communications, see Witnesses, IV, V.
Admissions by party or counsel in open court in the cause for purpose of dispensing with proof of issues, see Trial. V.

¶ 2002. The declarations and admissions which bind the party making them, and which he is estopped to deny, are declarations or admissions of facts by which the rights of others are or may be affected, and must be made with a purpose of affecting or influencing the judgment or action of another. But the loose conversations of one respecting the effect of a particular act upon himself can affect no right of any other party, and consequently are not binding upon any one.—Porter v. Henderson, 11 Mich. 20.

§ 369. Ambiguous, noncommittal or uncertain statements.

Loose talk, see also ante ¶ 2002.
Statements to two or more persons jointly, see post § 373.
Scope, effect and construction of the admission, see post § 440.
Intendment against person speaking, see post § 441.

¶ 2003. A letter stating that the writer has sold a certain make of pianos "for the best" is not to be construed as an admission that he sold them as superior to another make; things may be "best" in the sense of ranking in the very first class without being superior to each other, and one piano may be best for one purpose and another for another.—Whittemore v. Weiss, 33 Mich. 348.

¶ 2004. A statement by an employer, soon after an accident to an employee, "that he would see him through all right, and not to worry," is not a confession or admission of liability, and evidence of the making of the same is inadmissible in a suit for damages by the employee.—Kinney v. Folkerts, 78 Mich. 687.

¶ 2005. Where a man was sued for an injury done by his driver, it was held proper to exclude evidence that, when he was called on with regard to a settlement of damages, he said it made no difference to him how the suit went—that if it went against him his driver would have to pay the damages. This did not tend to show any recognition of liability.—Mabley v. Kittleberger, 37 Mich. 360.

¶ 2006. The fact that a letter, while stating that the writer is "hard up," makes no claim against the person to whom addressed, has no tendency to show that such person was not indebted to the writer, and it is properly excluded when offered for that purpose.—Burt v. Long, 106 Mich. 210.

¶ 2007. Defendant and one Bolin were interested in organizing a new corporation, selling its stock, and inducing the new corporation to buy a certain proprietary food. Defendant wrote a letter to Bolin in which he made a false statement as to the profits from said food, and there was evidence that said letter was intended by him to be used by Bolin to induce purchase of the stock in the new corporation. Plaintiff was thereby induced to buy stock. Held, that in an action of deceit, the letter was admissible in evidence though by its general trend it purported to be written for another purpose.—Diel v. Kellogg, 163 Mich. 162.

¶ 2008. A freight bill upon which appears an indorsement, "102 cases short" with signature and date, made by an authorized agent of the carrier at the point of destination, constitutes an admission of shortage and of nondelivery though the person who made it states that it meant only that a claim of that much shortage was made.—Oceana Canning Co. v. King, 195 Mich. 628.

§ 370. Fragmentary or incomplete admissions.

Uncertain or noncommittal statements, see ante § 369.
Incomplete answer by witness, see post § 376, ¶ 2024.

¶ 2009. Proof of an admission cannot be excluded merely on the ground that it does not cover a whole series of transactions.—Stansell v. Leavitt, 51 Mich. 536.

§ 371. Fear, threats or favor inducing admissions.

Rule as to involuntary confessions of crime, see Indictment, VIII, B.

¶ 2010. An effort to make a suspected person confess a wrong already committed is not unlawful if undue means, fraud, illegal compulsion or duress are not used.—University of Michigan v. Rose, 45 Mich. 284.

§ 372. Statements made in different capacity or relationship.

Individual and partnership declarations and admissions, see post § 420.
Official acts and declarations and writings, see post § 374.
Declaration by agent in dual capacity as res gestæ in one and self-serving in other, see post ¶ 2567.

¶ 2011. An administratrix as such brought a claim against an estate in which she was a distributee. Held, the evidence that she had admitted that her personal claims were settled was inadmissible.—Howard v. Patrick, 38 Mich. 795.

¶ 2012. On the issue of gratuitousness of services not within the line of duty of a trustee of a religious corporation, but rendered by such a trustee who was also an attorney, recognition by other trustees and the curate as individuals of the attorney's right to compensation is inadmissible as against the corporation; though their official acts and sayings would have been admissible.—Cicotte v. St. Anne's Catholic Church, 60 Mich. 552.

¶ 2013. Declarations of an admissive character by one speaking in the capacity of bank president respecting the knowledge of the bank that the bonds lacked a consideration, are not admissible against him suing as a trustee in representation of an estate owning the bonds by title coming through the bank.—Thompson v. Village of Mecosta, 141 Mich. 175.

¶ 2014. In an action by a father's estate against a son's, the fact that the administrator of the latter had presented a claim against the former can have no bearing on the relations of the two intestates, where ownership to property is claimed because of a partnership between them, though if his decedent had lived and presented the claim, it might possibly have shown inconsistency in his position.—Howard v. Patrick, 43 Mich. 121.

¶ 2015. The assignee of a note replevied a stock of goods said to be mortgaged as security. It had previously been mortgaged to the assignor. There was a dispute as to whether the mortgage was then in force. Held error to exclude evidence that, before assigning the note, the assignor had, as commercial reporter, reported the stock freed from mortgage.—Cadwell v. Pray, 41 Mich. 307.

§ 373. Statements to two or more persons jointly.

¶ 2016. The fact that the letters written by defendant were addressed to his stepfather and his mother jointly, will not render them incompetent when offered by the stepfather in an action brought by him to recover money advanced defendant for educational purposes, as evidence of the receipt of the money, and of the fact that it was a loan, and not a gift, whether construed as admissions of a liability to plaintiff individually, or of a joint liability; neither would such letters prevent plaintiff from proving the liability to be several instead of joint.—Cairbre v. McQuillan, 151 Mich. 590.

Acts and declarations by persons sustaining dual capacities, see ante § 372.

¶ 2017. A county treasurer's entries on his official books of the balances remaining at the end of his term are evidence against him as to the extent of their admissions, and the burden was on him to show that he paid over to his successor the balance appearing there.—Van Ness v. Hadsell, 54 Mich. 560.

¶ 2018. In an action against an attaching officer the appraisal under his writ is admissible against him as some evidence of the value of the attached property.—Worthington v. Hanna, 23 Mich. 530; Hunt v. Strew, 33 Mich. 85; Densmore v. Mathews, 58 Mich. 616.

¶ 2019. In an action for assault and battery, whatever defendant said, by way of admission, upon the trial of a criminal action growing out of the same transaction, is admissible, but what the police justice said to him at the trial is incompetent.—Breitenbach v. Trowbridge, 64 Mich. 393.

¶ 2020. A bill of sale from an alleged owner to another person with indorsement of record by the grantor (he being register of deeds at the time), found among the grantor's papers after his death, is admissible to show that he was not the owner being offered for that purpose only and not to show title in the grantee.—Fenton v. Miller, 94 Mich. 204.

¶ 2021. In an action against a prosecuting attorney for legal services rendered by plaintiff as his assistant, proof that defendant promised to tell the supervisors that the bill was right, and ought to be paid, is no evidence of a recognition of personal liability, or of the actual rendering of the services.—Engle v. Chipman, 51 Mich. 524.

¶ 2022. The statements of a decedent as to what he had already done with his business are admissible in a suit concerning the right of another to carry it on as partner, but not as evidence of an intention to transfer it as by an oral will.—Howard v. Patrick, 43 Mich. 121.

¶ 2023. On the question whether defendant owned a certain lot of land or leased a right of way over it, a declaration of defendant to his tenants when giving them a lease, that he had the right of way to use the premises for a passage, is admissible, though the lease was in writing.—Ledyard v. Morey, 54 Mich. 77.

§ 376. Testimony or admissions in other proceedings.

By pleadings in other case, see post § 381.
Admissibility of whole testimony to explain admissions away, see post ¶ 2347.
Stenographers' transcripts as evidence, see also post § 547.
Admission before justice on trial as admission requiring proof de novo on appeal from justice, see Justices of the Peace, V, C.
Conclusiveness in subsequent trials of matters admitted in open court by party or counsel, see Trial, V, A.

¶ 2024. The answer of a witness to a question does not constitute an admission where counsel interrupts him before the sentence is completed, and it cannot be told what the completed answer would have been.—White Pine Lumber Co. v. Manufacturers Lumber Co., 191 Mich. 390.

¶ 2025. Admissions by a party to the record may be shown by his opponent whether made upon the witness stand or elsewhere, and those who heard them made may be called to testify to them.—Potter's Appeal, 53 Mich. 106.

¶ 2026. Testimony given by a party containing material admissions, is always competent against him in any action, whether the same may be given orally or in written answers and interrogatories propounded.—Merrill v. Leisenring, 166 Mich. 219.

¶ 2027. In an action for assault and battery, whatever the defendant said, by way of admission, upon the trial of a criminal action growing out of the same transaction, is admissible, but what the police justice said to him on such trial is incompetent.—Breitenbach v. Trowbridge, 64 Mich. 393.

¶ 2028. The admissions of a son in testifying on the trial of a contest over the probate of his father's will are competent to show that he was a tenant under his father at the time of the latter's death.—Johnson v. Johnson, 70 Mich. 65.

¶ 2029. Statements of plaintiff's counsel in opening the case to the jury on a former trial are not admissible on the second trial as admissions binding plaintiff.—Evans v. Montgomery, 95 Mich. 497.

¶ 2029a. In an action by a daughter involving the genuineness of a note in her favor signed by her mother, since deceased, the testimony of the daughter as defendant in a chancery suit brought by her mother to set aside certain deeds to the daughter, is admissible as bearing on the probability of its being made, where the daughter was examined at length relative to transactions between her mother and herself on and after the date of the note in issue and which probably would have involved it.—Mack v. Cole's Estate, 130 Mich. 84.

¶ 2030. In proceedings to enforce the separation of grades and to assess damages an admission made by the attorney for petitioner at a former trial, made only for the purpose of expediting the trial, and which in effect was that if the tenant's witnesses were called they would testify that the damages amounted to a certain amount, is properly rejected on a second trial.—City of Detroit v. C. H. Little Co., 146 Mich. 373.

¶ 2031. Evidence of witnesses in a previous case involving a claim for damages for injury to an automobile due to a collision with another automobile that the plaintiff testified that the person driving his car was driving it with his knowledge and consent, and as his agent and servant, is admissible as an admission in a subsequent action for similar damages in which the parties are reversed.—Cady v. Doxtator, 193 Mich. 170.

¶ 2032. Testimony illegally taken but voluntarily given in the probate court upon an oral examination where the statute provides for written interrogatories as to money and effects in the witness' hands belonging to an intestate estate, is admissible as such person's declaration against interest in a suit by the administrator to obtain a reassignment of an insurance policy which such person claims was absolutely assigned to him by the intestate.—Lilley v. Mutual Benefit Life Ins. Co., 92 Mich. 153.

Invalid deed as evidence of grantor's mind inconsistent with claim made by him, see post ¶ 2589.

Notation of shortage on freight bill as admission, see ante ¶ 2008.

Authority of agents to make admissions by letter or writing, see post § 429 et seq.

Award of umpire or arbitrator as admission, see post § 435.

¶ 2034. Where the president of defendant company in an action for wages testifies that he has no reason to doubt the correctness of a statement taken from the books of the company which show an amount due plaintiff, the statement is admissible as showing an admission by defendant.—Keel v. Wilson Fruit Juice Co., 176 Mich. 345.

¶ 2035. A copy of an annual inspection report of a place of employment, made by an indemnity insurance company and furnished to plaintiff, the insured, stating that there were no dangerous agencies employed, and that no minors were employed in violation of law, is admissible against it in an action by the assured to recover damages paid for injuries sustained by a minor employed in operating a dangerous machine in violation of statute.—Great Lakes Laundry Co. v. Aetna Life Ins. Co., 184 Mich. 294.

¶ 2035a. A coroner's verdict voluntarily furnished to the defendant by the beneficiary of a life insurance policy after proofs of death were made is not admissible in evidence as an admission of its contents.—Gilchrist v. Mystic Workers of the World, 188 Mich. 466.

§ 378. Entries and charges on account books.

Statement made up from books and proved correct, see also ante ¶ 2034.

Bills and accounts rendered or stated, see post § 379.

Books of account as documentary evidence, see post VIII, B.

¶ 2036. Entries against a particular person on the plaintiff's business books are not conclusive evidence that some other person is not liable for the amount charged, and they may be explained or contradicted by parol testimony.—Lyon v. Chamberlain, 41 Mich. 119.

¶ 2039. The act of a party defendant, claiming title to chattels against plaintiff in replevin who took them under a mortgage, in charging them to the mortgagor, and stated accounts to the mortgagor wherein the chattels appeared as debits are not admissions to plaintiff that the title was in or had passed to the mortgagor; where such charges and accounts were mere bookkeeping entries. —Hood v. Olin, 68 Mich. 105.

¶ 2040. A statement of account taken from a book of a deceased person is competent as in the nature of an admission, and cannot be objected to on the ground that proper foundation was not laid where the book is admitted in evidence.—Raub v. Nisbett, 118 Mich. 248.

¶ 2041. In an action to recover for goods sold, the defense being that defendant made the purchase for a corporation of which he was manager, plaintiff's books of account showing that the goods were charged to defendant individually with evidence that defendant saw the entries and made no objection, are admissible.—Love v. Ramsey, 139 Mich. 47.

¶ 2042. Book entries may be received against one who is shown to have examined them and agreed to pay the account as there shown.—Baxter v. Reynolds, 112 Mich. 471.

§ 379. Accounts rendered or stated.

Entries and charges in books of account, see ante § 378.

Books exhibited and not challenged, see ante ¶¶ 2041, 2042.

Inadmissibility of bill rendered as evidence of value of services, see also Attorneys ¶ 153.

Bill rendered as binding admission of value of services, see also Attorneys ¶ 154.

¶ 2045. Where a bill rendered for services in driving logs is kept a month and credit is then given for its amount on a bill rendered, this amounts to an acknowledgment of liability, and binds unless it is impeached for fraud or mistake.—Bewick v. Butterfield, 60 Mich. 203.

¶ 2046. Where a man had a written agreement with his daughter-in-law whereby she was to receive the proceeds of the sale of certain property after specified charges against it had been paid him, the fact that he had afterwards, and before sale, sent her a statement of an account between themselves containing items not covered by the agreement, will not bind her to the deduction of so much from the amount due her under it, in the absence of evidence that she had examined the account or consented to such deduction.—Fraser v. Fraser's Estate, 42 Mich. 275.

§ 380. Receipts and acknowledgments of payment or delivery.

Distinct and unrelated receipts, see ante § 95.

Canceled check passed between strangers, see ante ¶ 1790.

Receipt for payment made by other in party's interest, see also post ¶ 2121.

Best evidence of contents, see ante § 120.

Foundation for secondary evidence, see ante § 150, ¶ 745.

Applicability of parol evidence rule to receipts and acknowledgments, see ante §§ 190-192.

Receipts as res gestæ, see post § 473.

Tax receipts as documentary evidence, see post § 540.

Receipts as evidence of accord and satisfaction, see Accord and Satisfaction § 17.

Receipt as evidence of bailee's right of possession to grain, see Bailments ¶¶ 3, 4.

¶ 2048. A receipt of notes for collection, signed by defendant and another, is not admissible to establish a sole liability against defendant, but it may be received to show plaintiff's right to the money if other evidence shows its collection by defendant.—Kimball v. Kimball, 16 Mich. 211.

§ 381. Statements and recitals in pleadings.

Served copy of complaint in another suit as an admission, see also ante ¶ 573.

Presumption that pleading was by party's authority, see ante ¶ 2001.

Pleadings by deceased persons as admissions against successors, see post § 409.

Pleadings in other cases as documentary evidence, see post § 548.

[Note. The admissions by plea, answer or demurrer for the purpose of joining and settling the issues are regulated by the law of pleading. See Pleading, IX, X; Equity, VII, F. They are admissions in the case itself, as distinguished from admissions against interest made by allegations or want of allegations in pleadings used by the party.]

Effect of pleadings in equity as evidence in the cause, see Equity § 164 et seq.

Sufficiency of bill to make answer admissive in character, see also Equity, ¶ 614.

¶ 2049. Where a bond and defeasance were treated as a mortgage and foreclosure was had thereon, a petition by defendant to open the foreclosure decree on the ground that the bond was drawn for double the debt amounts to an acknowledgment of a mortgage indebtedness.—Scriven v. Hursh, 68 Mich. 176.

¶ 2050. Where the issue is whether a certain mortgage sale has been made, papers served upon defendant by the general solicitors of the same plaintiff in a former lawsuit, stating that a sale had been made, should go to the jury as admissions by plaintiff of such sale.—Hamilton Provident & Loan Soc. v. Northwood, 86 Mich. 315.

¶ 2053. The petition of one claiming a gift of notes of which she was the maker, which petition was presented to the probate court asking the executors to surrender the notes to her and not to include them in the estate, and which petition did not legally state facts constituting either a gift or a trust of the notes for her but a mere promise to deliver them to petitioner, and sickness preventing performance of that promise, cannot be used as evidence in her favor but may be an admission against her that the gift was executory and void.—Botsford v. Bradfield, 141 Mich. 370.

Written portion of contract as tantamount to admissions, see ante ¶ 646.

Proposals to make contract or settlement, see post §§ 394-397.

Preparatory drafts, see post § 397.

Words "value received" in bill or note as evidence of consideration, see also Negotiable Instruments, XIV; Non-negotiable Paper.

¶ 2058. A man gave a deed of bargain and sale without covenants, but reciting that at its date he had entered the land as described in a certain certificate of purchase. He afterwards obtained a patent. Held, that the recitals in the deed and patent were evidence as against all the world that conveyance had been made before the patent issued.—Fisher v. Hallock, 50 Mich. 463.

§ 384. Statements contained in invalid writings.

Oral statements where writing is requisite, see ante § 375.

Proposals to contract and offers not carried into contract, see post § 397.

¶ 2060. An invalid agreement may be used as a parol admission of the facts recited in it, and open to explanation and contradiction as such.—Hickey v. Hinsdale, 12 Mich. 99.

¶ 2060a. A conveyance or contract to convey, though invalid as such, may be admissible as evidence of the value of services rendered on promise of compensation, where the conveyance was intended to be the compensation.—In re Williams' Estate, 106 Mich. 490; Sammon v. Wood, 107 Mich. 506.

¶ 2060b. Where a son makes a claim against his father's estate for services performed and there is evidence of a promise by the father to pay his son therefor, notes executed by the father payable at his death to his son that were never delivered to the son but to the executor are admissible as evidence of what the father considered the services of the claimant were worth.—Abel v. Roosenraad, 173 Mich. 93.

§ 385. Implied from conduct, secretiveness and denials of fact.

Implication from silence, see post § 386.
Implication from omission to reply to letters, see post § 387.
Implication from assertion or nonassertion of claim, see post §§ 388-391.
Implication from payment or tender, see post § 392.
Implication from listing or payment of taxes, see post § 393.
Implication from compromise or offer to compromise and settle, see post §§ 394-396.
Implication from proposal or offer to make contract or legacy, see post §§ 397, 398.
Implication from subsequent actions, see post §§ 399, 400.
Silence in face of assertion as an implied admission, see post § 386.
Acts done by agent in procuring testimony for trial, see also ante ¶ 465.
Presumption against party refusing to testify or adduce available witnesses or evidence, see ante §§ 63-65.

¶ 2061. Where, in replevin for a horse, defendant insisted that he had obtained it in a trade, plaintiff was allowed to prove that he had unsuccessfully sought and inquired for it after defendant took it away, since this tended to show that defendant had secreted it or kept it out of the way, and was conscious that an absolute trade had not been made and that he had obtained no right to the horse or to the possession of it.—English v. Caldwell, 30 Mich. 362.

¶ 2062. In a suit for negligently setting a fire which spread and burned plaintiff's pile of wood, evidence that defendant, when asked if he had set the fire, gave an evasive answer, is admissible to prove that he set the fire.—Rowe v. Bregenzer, 161 Mich. 684.

§ 386. Silence in the face of assertions of fact.

Failure to object or assent to book account as exhibited, see also ante § 378.
Retention of account rendered without objection, see ante § 379.
Omission to reply to letters, see post § 387.
Necessity that assertion be heard or communicated, see post § 402.
Report of inspection as admission against party receiving it, see ante ¶ 2035.
Effect of silence in face of charges under express contract calling for lesser amount, see also Contracts ¶ 1557.
Estoppel by silence under duty to speak, see Estoppel, III, B.

¶ 2064. The silence of an employee when his employer stated to a fellow employee in his presence that the former was to have a dollar a day, and the latter should have the same, ought not to be taken as an admission of the truth of such statement in his suit for wages; at least not in the absence of any showing that he in fact heard it, or that it was made in such a way as to call upon him to deny it if untrue; and the rejection of evidence of such statement is not error.—Barry v. Davis, 33 Mich. 515.

¶ 2066. In an action to recover for plastering a house, where defendant claims that the work was done for his contractor, evidence that after the completion of the work defendant's wife stated to plaintiff in her husband's presence that the money was in the bank to pay for it is admissible, defendant's silence being a tacit admission of the fact.—Evans v. Montgomery, 95 Mich. 497.

¶ 2067. In ejectment involving a disputed boundary, evidence of the statement by the defendant's husband in her presence and without dissent on her part that he moved the division fence at his own expense, and did not notify plaintiff to build half of it, because if he had plaintiff would have objected to the removal, is admissible.—Sanscrainte v. Torongo, 87 Mich. 69.

tain accounts transferred by him to his brother were to be used in paying the wife's creditors, are admissible in evidence as the admissions of the assignee, where they were made to creditors in the assignee's presence and were not contradicted by him.—Mathews v. Forslund, 112 Mich. 591.

¶ 2070. The fact that a person having notice that a deposition is being taken, fails to deny the matters contained therein, will not be regarded as an admission of their truth, where the controversy with regard to which the deposition is being taken is being tried in a court without jurisdiction.—O'Dell v. Goff, 153 Mich. 643.

¶ 2073. Omission to answer a letter does not, ordinarily, raise a presumption of the truth of facts therein stated, but regard must be had to the relations of the parties, the nature of the correspondence, and the questions involved; and a letter in repose to and in affirmance of a questioned fact is admissible as part of the res gestæ.—Rutter v. Collins, 96 Mich. 510.

§ 388. Assertion or nonassertion of claim or suit.

¶ 2075. A city officer rendered certain services to the city which were not within the scope of his duties. Held, that they could not be shown to be gratuitous by evidence that he made no claim for compensation in conversation with third persons who would have no authority to make compensation or fix the amount of it. But his statement to such third persons that he made no claim or that he did not expect or desire pay would have been competent.—McBride v. City of Grand Rapids, 49 Mich. 239.

¶ 2076. A man bought a steam engine and other machinery to put into a mill which he was building, but it was expressly stipulated that title thereto should not pass until it was fully paid for. He afterwards sold the mill to his uncle without having paid for the machinery, and the owner thereof, after demanding it, brought trover for it against the purchaser. It appeared that defendant knew his nephew was embarrassed and had indorsed his paper and took the property to save himself. Held proper, in support of the action, to show that, before buying, defendant had a conversation with plaintiff in which he admitted that he knew there was something about the latter's claim; that his nephew had not paid for the machinery; that defendant had been to see if plaintiff had any chattel mortgage on it and did not find any; and that when he purchased he had not said anything to his nephew about the matter or asked him if plaintiff was paid, and had not said anything to plaintiff though he had frequent opportunities to do so.—Ingersoll v. Barnes, 47 Mich. 104.

¶ 2078. In an action to recover for services, the fact that plaintiff had previously sought to recover the debt by action against a third person is immaterial where such action proceeded upon guaranty, which the court in that action held to be void because oral.—Lemiette v. Starr, 66 Mich. 539.

¶ 2080. In an action on an insurance policy, affidavits in the proofs of loss submitted by the plaintiff to the effect that the insured committed suicide, and in the plaintiff's proofs of loss submitted to other insurance companies, are admissible as evidence and not subject to withdrawal upon showing that the affiants had no personal knowledge of the fact; and an instruction to disregard the affidavits if the affiants did not know the facts is erroneous.—Wasey v. Travelers' Insurance Co., 126 Mich. 119.

After passing title on to another, see ante ¶ 1984.

Admission by claiming common source, see post § 391.

Estoppel by inconsistent claim of title or right, see Estoppel, III, B.
Assignment of right as admission of fact of title, see also Assignments ¶ 75.
Promise to pay for goods as admission of bailee establishing his liability, see Bailments ¶ 39.

¶ 2081. Claim of title under tax deeds is an admission that the property has been transferred by general government so as to become taxable.—Solomon v. Grosbeck, 65 Mich. 540; Tillotson v. Webber, 96 Mich. 144.

§ 391. Claiming common source of title.

Pleading common title in ejectment as admission, see Ejectment § 36.
Estoppel to deny common title, see Estoppel, III, B; Ejectment.

¶ 2083. Parties in ejectment who claim title from a common source mutually admit the title of him from whom they derive title. —Eames v. McGregor, 43 Mich. 313; Van Den Brooks v. Correon, 48 Mich. 283.

¶ 2085. Where the defendant in ejectment undertakes to establish title in himself derived from the same person through whom the plaintiff claims, and sets up no other right in himself, it seems that he must be regarded as admitting the title of the person through whom he thus claims.—Johnstone v. Scott, 11 Mich. 232.

§ 392. Making payment or tender or delivery.

¶ 2086. Payment by the defendant to the plaintiff, pending an action of assumpsit, of part of the demand to recover which the action is brought, is not equivalent, in its effect as an admission of the cause of action, to a payment of money into court.—Galloway v. Holmes, 1 D. 330.

¶ 2089. Plaintiffs in ejectment cannot affect a claim of long continued adverse possession by showing that the land was assessed to their ancestor for several years after his death, when it does not appear that defendants' ancestor, who had paid the taxes, had anything to do with having them assessed to plaintiffs' ancestor.—Dubois v. Campau, 28 Mich. 304.

¶ 2090. In a suit to set aside a husband's deed to his wife as fraudulent as to creditors, the fact that the land was assessed to the husband for several years after the execution of the deed, and while it was unrecorded, can have no weight, it appearing that he attended to his wife's business affairs, and paid the taxes from the products of the land.—Wooden v. Wooden, 72 Mich. 347.

Offers to buy, sell or lease as admissions, see post § 395.
Settlements with or offers to others to settle, see post § 396.
Proposals to enter into contract, see post § 397.
Proposals to make legacy or devise in compensation, see post § 398.
Testimony that third person said he was sent to make settlement as hearsay, see ante ¶ 1774.
Offer to pay damages as res gestæ, see post ¶ 2474.
Offer to arbitrate breach of warranty as res gestæ, see post ¶ 2447.
Admissibility for other purpose of testimony tending to show offer, see ante ¶ 496.
Consummated settlement as bar to original claim, see Accord §§ 10-14; Composition with Creditors; Releases, II.
Instructions as to evidentiary force, see Instructions, V, VI.

¶ 2091. All admissions not expressly made to make peace, and all independent facts admitted during negotiations for settlement, are, as a general rule, admissible in evidence.—Manistee National Bank v. Seymour, 64 Mich. 59; Michigan Mut. Home Ins. Co. v. Pere Marquette Ry. Co., 193 Mich. 429.

¶ 2092. Offers made in negotiations for compromising suits involving titles cannot be used as admissions of fact.—Campau v. Dubois, 39 Mich. 274.

¶ 2095. An offer of compromise is inadmissible in evidence and cannot constitute a waiver.—Richards v. Continental Ins. Co., 83 Mich. 508.

¶ 2096. An offer of compromise cannot be considered as an admission of liability, and evidence thereof is incompetent in an action for damages for injuries sustained through defendant's negligence.—Montgomery v. Allen, 84 Mich. 656.

¶ 2099. An agreement to compromise a case may be binding, but concessions made in an ineffectual attempt to reach a settlement are not binding upon either party.—Rikerd Lumber Co. v. Hoertz, 146 Mich. 386.

¶ 2100. In a suit by a plaintiff contractor on a building contract, evidence of an offer by defendant to compromise the claim is inadmissible.—Germain v. Union School Dist. City of Stanton, 158 Mich. 214.

¶ 2101. In a suit for commissions for the sale of real estate, it is error to admit in evidence a letter from defendant offering a certain sum as a compromise.—Crane v. Ross, 168 Mich. 623.

¶ 2102. An offer to settle a note by turning over bank stock in payment of it is inconsistent with a theory that it was made solely for accommodation and as collateral to another note already discounted for the real party.—Manistee National Bank v. Seymour, 64 Mich. 59.

¶ 2104. An offer to buy a claim does not estop one to deny its validity: so held where creditors negotiate for a chattel mortgage which was void as to them.—Wallen v. Rossman, 45 Mich. 333.

¶ 2105. In an action for damages to a dock owner caused by the construction of a bridge near the dock which tended to prevent vessels from stopping at the dock, the fact that plaintiff has offered to lease part of the property to defendant has no proper bearing in the case.—Maxwell v. Bay City Bridge Co., 46 Mich. 278.

¶ 2106. An unsuccessful attempt by one of two partners to settle and cancel a lease which he claims was executed by his copartner in the firm name without authority, is not evidence of ratification.—Koch v. Endriss, 97 Mich. 444.

§ 396. Settlements or offers to settle with others.

¶ 2109. In an action for personal injuries to plaintiff caused by an engine which he was driving falling through a bridge which defendant township was required to keep in repair, evidence that the township paid for taking the engine out of the stream into which it fell, is inadmissible, since any settlement made with the owner of the engine could not affect the rights of plaintiff, the driver.—Comstock v. Township of Georgetown, 137 Mich. 541.

¶ 2111. Statements made in a paper proposed as a contract may have weight, if intelligently and deliberately made as admissions of fact, even though the proposition is not accepted, but another contract is made; but if they are made by way of concession and compromise they may be entitled to no weight whatever.—Alpena Lumber Co. v. Fletcher, 48 Mich. 555.

¶ 2113. Statements by decedent of intention to recompense may be received in evidence to show an understanding or agreement that services previously rendered decedent over a period of two years by claimant against the estate for such services, were to be paid for; but such testimony should be limited to the showing of such agreement and the mention of amounts should not be received on the issue of reasonable value.—Luizzi v. Brady's Estate, 140 Mich. 73.

¶ 2115. Evidence that decedent undertook to execute a codicil to her will to add a bequest to claimant equal to the amount of her claim for reasonable value of attendance and services rendered to decedent, is not admissible, to show such value on appeal to the circuit court from the decision of the commissioners disallowing the greater part of such claim.—Luizzi v. Brady's Estate, 140 Mich. 73.

¶ 2116. Where a claim is made against an estate for compensation for services, in addition to services rendered under a contract by which compensation was provided by a life lease of certain property, and an oral promise to pay for such additional services is set up, an unsigned codicil to a will made by deceased which gave to claimant some money and property is inadmissible on the question of the value of the services where it is not shown under what circumstances the writing was made, nor whether he intended the provision to take the place of the contract or intended it as a gift.—Oliver v. Jessup's Estate, 137 Mich. 642.

[Note. Subsequent acts, such as taking of precautions not before taken or the making of repairs, while usually admissible for the purpose of showing dominion over or responsibility for the place in question or for the purpose of showing conditions, are usually excluded as evidence of blame or liability. The exclusion is not only based on the nonadmissive character of such acts but also on their lack of any tendency to prove neglect or liability at the time of the accident or injury. For this reason the cases on this subject are treated in the specific topics hereafter referred to.]

Relevancy and competency in actions for negligence of acts done and statements made after injury, see Negligence, V; and see also Carriers §§ 89, 211-215; Highways, XII, H, XIII, B; Master and Servant, III; Railroads, VIII; Street Railways, IV.

§ 400. ——Making repairs and changes.

See also note under § 399, ante.

Repair of bridge after accident as evidence of negligence, see also Bridges § 16.

permitting a building to remain near the crossing where the accident occurred, which act was not in fact negligence, although the jury were not so instructed, evidence of the removal of the building by defendant after the accident is not admissible.—Thompson v. Toledo, A. A. & N. M. R. Co., 91 Mich. 255.

3. Statements and acts by third persons, privies, representatives, and agents.

By pledgee, see also post ¶ 2549.
Conversation by lessor with another tenant than plaintiff, see ante ¶ 1980.
Writings emanating from third persons as hearsay, see ante § 316.

¶ 2121. A receipt for money paid in the alleged interest of a third party is not evidence against him.—Storrs v. Scougale, 48 Mich. 387.

¶ 2122. In an action upon a contract of hire, where defendants claim that plaintiff was not a competent workman, and that they found fault with his work, a letter written to defendants rejecting some of plaintiff's work was not admissible in the absence of evidence that a conversation occurred about it to show that defendants were dissatisfied or that the work was not well done.—Koehler v. Buhl, 94 Mich. 496.

§ 402. Statements not heard or communicated to party to be affected.

Statements by admitting party in other's absence, see ante § 359.

Declarations by another in presence of party's agent, see also post ¶ 2515.
Self-serving writings not brought to notice of other party, see post ¶ 2555.

¶ 2124. In an action by a person injured by a vicious animal kept by defendant with knowledge, etc., a statement by a former owner of the animal that it is "ugly," made while removing it to defendant's premises and in defendant's absence, is inadmissible.—Brooks v. Taylor, 65 Mich. 208.

¶ 2124a. One urging a claim against an estate cannot make testimony for himself out of the transactions of his attorney not brought home to the decedent or included in any dealings known to him or authorized by him.—Passmore v. Passmore's Estate, 60 Mich. 463.

¶ 2126. In an action for damages from the sale of liquor to plaintiff's husband, the husband's statements after the injury ensuing from the sale, but on the same night while seeking help, as to how it occurred, are inadmissible for the wife.—Brockway v. Patterson, 72 Mich. 122.

¶ 2129. In an action for the value of land which defendant agreed to convey to plaintiff in exchange for other lands, while it was competent to show that defendant took the abstract of the property to his attorney's office, it was not competent to show what took place there in the absence of the plaintiff.—Dikeman v. Arnold, 83 Mich. 218.

¶ 2130. An admission by the owner of an equity in pine lands that he had no authority to sign in behalf of the legal owner a contract for cutting the pine cannot affect the contractor when made in the latter's absence.—Busch v. Wilcox, 82 Mich. 315, affirmed on rehearing 82 Mich. 336.

¶ 2135. In an action against a husband and wife on a promissory note signed by the wife and indorsed by the husband, evidence of conversations between defendants is incompetent in the absence of a showing that they were in the presence of the cashier of plaintiff bank or were communicated to him.—National Lumberman's Bank v. Miller, 131 Mich. 564.

¶ 2137. An agent's unauthorized subsequent declaration as to a boundary is inadmissible to show good faith of a trespasser over such boundary especially where it does not appear that the trespasser was informed of what the agent said.—Gates v. Rifle Boom Co., 70 Mich. 309.

¶ 2138. Where the good faith of a chattel mortgage is in issue, evidence of advice given to the mortgagor, in the mortgagee's absence, by one who had done the business for both parties, "as to what disposition he could make of his property so as to cover it up," cannot be received to affect the mortgagee's rights.—Ganong v. Green, 71 Mich. 1.

¶ 2139. The conduct and statements of a bankrupt after the sale of certain property at the bankruptcy proceedings, not brought to the knowledge or made in the presence of the purchaser, are not admissible when offered in evidence by a creditor of the bankrupt, in an attachment suit against such purchaser to show the title to that or other property disposed of by the sale in bankruptcy, or to dispute the validity of the purchaser's claim.—Preston v. Newcomb, 149 Mich. 512.

¶ 2141. In a transaction between two persons communicating through the medium of an interpreter, the person furnishing the interpreter is concluded by statements made to the latter, and it would not be necessary to show that such statements were communicated by the interpreter to him; but it would be otherwise with an outside person who would question his good faith in the transaction.—Highstone v. Burdette, 61 Mich. 54.

§ 404. By witness out of court.

¶ 2142. It is not competent to show that one of the witnesses in a slander case had conceded the existence of a certain contract, which bore on a question of mitigation, since the witness is not a party and his admissions are not material.—Ellis v. Whitehead, 95 Mich. 105.

§ 405. By parties joined or related in interest.

See also ante ¶ 1976.

As to land claims and boundaries, see also ante §§ 364, 365.

By equitable owner as affecting legal owner, see also ante ¶ 2130.
By copartners, see post §§ 420-422.
By parent, child or relative, see post § 423.

¶ 2143. Where the interest is joint, if the effect of an admission by one of the parties interested is to create an obligation—as, for example, where it is an admission that a condition precedent has been performed—it is evidence only against the party making it.—Thompson v. Richards, 14 Mich. 172.

¶ 2144. The admissions of one of two vendees that the machine bought worked well are not binding upon the other, who was not present when such statements were made.—Osborne & Co. v. Bell, 62 Mich. 214.

¶ 2145. The admissions of one of several parties on the same side are admissible against him, but not evidence to affect the others, unless there is some joint interest or privity of design between them.—Dawson v. Hall, 2 Mich. 390.

¶ 2146. Where two persons are jointly interested on one side of a contract the acts of one of them, in behalf of both, bind both.—Cook v. Blake, 98 Mich. 389.

¶ 2147. Whether the admissions of a surety are proper evidence to bind a cosurety, quære.—Mathews v. Phelps, 61 Mich. 327.

¶ 2148. A surety, who, in an action upon a bond against both principal and surety, calls the principal as a witness, is bound by admissions made by the principal.—People v. Traves, 188 Mich. 345.

§ 406. ——Parties to bills and notes.

¶ 2150. The admissions of one joint maker of a note are not evidence against another.—Rogers v. Anderson, 40 Mich. 290.

See also ante ¶ 2109a.

§ 408. ——As to competency of testator or validity of will.

Declarations and admissions by decedent as affecting heirs, see post § 412.

§ 409. Declarations by decedents in general.

Respecting advancements or gifts, see post § 410.
Respecting undue influence or mentality, see post § 412.
Respecting contents of will, see post § 413.
By predecessor in title affecting such title, see post §§ 414-416.

Nonadmissive declarations by decedents, see ante § 336.
Settlement made by heir since deceased, see ante ¶ 2109a.
Self-serving declarations, see post § 488.
Exclusion of testimony to declarations by decedent as matters equally within knowledge of deceased person, see Witnesses, IV.
Rule as to dying declarations in homicide cases, see Homicide, VII, B.

¶ 2156. A party's death before the suit is heard does not exclude evidence of his admissions.—Matson v. Melchor, 42 Mich. 477.

ter and heir, upon her mother's death, are admissible in evidence, being an admission by one with whom defendant was in privity relative to a matter provable by parol.—Brown v. Stutson, 100 Mich. 574.

¶ 2162. A testator's certificate reciting that he had advanced a stated sum is not admissible to prove that an advancement was actually made, though it is admissible, if the payment itself is otherwise proved, to show decedent's purpose to treat it as an advancement.—McClintock's Appeal, 58 Mich. 152.

Admissions by bookkeepers, effect to bind employers, see post § 429, ¶ 2267.

§ 412. By testator evincive of undue influence or mental condition.

Declarations evincive of mental state or condition as exceptions to hearsay rule, see ante § 335.

Declarations by heirs and legatees as admissions, see ante § 408.

As to contents of will, see post § 413.

¶ 2165. Declarations made by a testator before or after the will's execution in opposition to its dispositions are admissible as bearing on mental capacity at the time of execution, but are not competent upon the distinct fact of undue influence.—Harring v. Allen, 25 Mich. 505.

¶ 2166. A testator's declarations showing a change of mind in regard to the disposal of his property and an actual alteration thereof are admissible where a will is contested on the ground that there was a later will.—In re Hope's Appeal, 48 Mich. 518.

¶ 2167. Evidence of testator's declarations both before and after the making of the will are admissible for the purpose of showing his state of mind.—Haines v. Hayden, 95 Mich. 332.

¶ 2169. Declarations by a testator that he intended to provide by will for certain relatives are admissible in so far as his state of mind is material in the contest of a will for mental capacity and undue influence, but not for the purpose of showing that undue influence was exerted over him by other legatees.—Bush v. Delano, 113 Mich. 321.

¶ 2170. Where a will is contested on the ground of testator's mental incapacity, his declarations as to his intended disposition of his property, even though made as long as thirteen years before the making of the will may be shown, and in the absence of proof of such change of purpose, the remoteness of time when the declarations were made bears rather upon the weight of the testimony than its admissibility.—In re Lefevre's Estate, 102 Mich. 568.

¶ 2171. Statements made by a testator after the execution of the will, tending to show that he then entertained an insane delusion against a relative, are inadmissible to prove the existence of a delusion at the time the will was made, where the transactions to which such statements related were likewise subsequent to the will.—In re Merriman's Appeal, 108 Mich. 454.

¶ 2172. Where a will is contested on the ground of testator's mental incapacity, evidence of acts or statements of his tending to show that he was irritable rather than incompetent, is not admissible.—In re Lefevre's Estate, 102 Mich. 568.

§ 413. By testator to contents of will.

Best evidence of contents, see ante § 135.

¶ 2174. Where, in contesting the probate of a will, evidence of the existence and fraudulent concealment or destruction of a later will has been adduced from other sources, statements of the testatrix are admissible to show the contents of such later will.—In re Estate of Lamble, 97 Mich. 49.

§ 414. By predecessor in title or estate.

Declarations made before interest attached, see post § 415.
By mortgagor or mortgagee, see post § 417.
Listing and assessment to one party's ancestor for taxes as admission by ancestor of other, see ante ¶ 2089.
By alleged prior owner in absence of claimant, see ante ¶ 2132.

Estoppel of successors by acts of predecessor, see Estoppel, III, C.

¶ 2175. Admissions made in the lifetime of a person since deceased and against his interest, are admissible against his estate.—Walsh v. Backus, 183 Mich. 527.

¶ 2177. Declarations by an original grantee before parting with his title may be shown in an action of ejectment brought by parties claiming under him, if adverse to the claims made by them.—Moran v. Lezotte, 54 Mich. 83.

¶ 2180. Conversation between an attachment debtor and his grantee, tending to show that the deed, which was dated some time before the levy of the attachment, was not delivered until after, is admissible in evidence in an action of ejectment against a later grantee.—Cook v. Knowles, 38 Mich. 316.

§ 415. ——Declarations prior to interest.

Declarations made after parting with interest, see post § 416.

¶ 2186. On a bill by complainant to set aside his deed on the ground of his mental incompetency to execute it, admissions and declarations by the grantee as to the incompetency made before she acquired title are inadmissible in evidence against heirs of the grantee.—Benson v. Raymond, 142 Mich. 357.

§ 416. ——Declarations after interest ceased or grant made.

Declarations on eve of divesting title, see ante ¶ 1983.
Declarations made before acquiring title, see ante § 415.
Testator's declarations after making will as evincive of status at time of making, see ante § 412.

¶ 2187. A grantor's admissions to third persons after conveyance made cannot be shown to affect his grantee.—Blanchard v. Moors, 85 Mich. 380.

¶ 2189. A grantor's declarations made after a conveyance are not admissible to impeach the title conveyed.—Fenton v. Miller, 94 Mich. 204.

¶ 2190. Statements made by a vendor of chattels after the sale, tending to impeach its validity, are inadmissible as against the vendee.—Vyn v. Keppel, 108 Mich. 244.

¶ 2193. In trover by a vendee for the value of property attached by the vendor's creditors, where the sale to plaintiff was attacked as void as against the creditors, statements of the vendor made after the attachment to a third party are inadmissible.—Lewis v. Rice, 61 Mich. 97.

¶ 2194. The declaration of a vendor in an alleged fraudulent sale made immediately after creditors had attached the property and while such vendor was not with the goods, that she claimed to be in possession thereof, cannot be used in a suit by the vendee claiming by a prior good faith purchase against the attaching officer, the vendee not being bound thereby.—Pickard v. Bryant, 92 Mich. 430.

¶ 2198. The acts and declarations of the assignor, made after the assignment was signed and delivered, but before the schedules were made out and attached, and while he was engaged in preparing them, are competent evidence to show fraud.—Wyckoff v. Carr, 8 Mich. 44.

§ 417. By mortgagor or mortgagee.

See also ante ¶ 2160.

¶ 2200. Statements made by a mortgagor of chattels, inimical to the interests of the mortgagee, are properly excluded in an action between the latter and a third person, in the absence of testimony tending to connect the mortgagee therewith.—First Nat. Bank v. Marshall & I. Bank, 108 Mich. 114.

§ 418. By person in possession.

By one cotenant recognizing other's title, see ante ¶ 1990.

¶ 2201. In garnishment proceedings against a chattel mortgagee, declarations made in his absence by those in apparent possession of the goods, tending to show that the garnishee was then in possession, are not admissible.—Krementz v. Howard, 109 Mich. 466.

§ 419. By coconspirators and persons in concert of action.

Acts and declarations amounting to res gestæ, see post § 475.

Foundation proofs of conspiracy, see post § 438.

Of acts of others to show concert in monopoly, see Combinations § 10.

Admissions of coconspirators and accomplices against each other in prosecutions for crime, see Indictment, VIII, B.

¶ 2202. In conspiracy to commit an actionable wrong, everything said, done or written by any one of the conspirators in furtherance of the common purpose is a relevant fact against each; but such facts occurring before the conspiracy are not relevant as against any but those who accomplish them or are present when they are accomplished.—Hamilton v. Smith, 39 Mich. 222.

¶ 2203. Where two persons conspire or unite in a common purpose to withhold certain goods from a third person, each is responsible for what the other does and says in furtherance of the common purpose.—Cadwell v. Pray, 86 Mich. 266.

¶ 2204. Where some testimony has been introduced tending to show a conspiracy to defraud, evidence of statements made by one of the conspirators, in furtherance of the common purpose, is admissible against the others.—Jansen v. McQueen, 112 Mich. 254.

¶ 2204a. The books of a partnership are competent against a defendant company in a suit by the receiver of the firm on claims by partnership customers, where by the law of a former appeal it was settled that such company, doing business with the firm, knew that it was practicing fraud on its customers. —Austin v. Hayden, 176 Mich. 331.

¶ 2204b. Declarations of a coconspirator are inadmissible to prove fraud where the conspiracy has not been shown.—Kimble v. Gillard, 177 Mich. 250.

¶ 2206. Where two defendants are interested together in a transaction in which they have used a questionable note, the acts and statements of either in regard to any part of the transaction, even if made in the other's absence, may be put in evidence; so, also, to show their animus, may the statements made by either to third parties as to the responsibility of the maker of the note, though such statements related instead to other notes made by him, which they had endeavored, at about the same time, to trade off in similar transactions. The acts and representations of a third person present at the transaction in question, indicating that he was acting in concert with the defendants in fraudulent dealing with such notes, are also admissible to show animus.—Beebe v. Knapp, 28 Mich. 53.

¶ 2207. Complicity in fraud with joint defendants against whom there is direct evidence is provable by showing that all the defendants have been engaged together in similar transactions and that the act was done under a general agency for the particular defendant, who had previously proposed to participate with the others in a series of frauds of the same character.—Dayton v. Monroe, 47 Mich. 193.

¶ 2208. In an action for assault and battery, evidence of violence or of the consequences of violence committed by one who is not a party to the suit is admissible when circumstances tend to show that the person committing it was co-operating with defendant.—Miller v. Sweitzer, 22 Mich. 391.

¶ 2209. The president of a mutual aid society organized for fraudulent purposes, edited a newspaper which was used to advance the interests of the enterprise. Held, that statements published in such paper were admissible in evidence in a suit to recover money fraudulently obtained.—Timmerman v. Bidwell, 62 Mich. 205.

¶ 2211. In an action against plaintiff's father-in-law for alienation of the affections of plaintiff's wife, sayings and doings by the mother-in-law are admissible against defendant where they were acting in concert.—Edgell v. Francis, 66 Mich. 303.

After dissolution or before partnership formed, see post § 421.
As to fact of partnership, see post § 422.
Individual and firm books of account, see post § 523.
By representatives of partners, see ante ¶ 2014.
Acts and declarations amounting to res gestæ, see post § 477.
Scope of agency as limiting agent's authority to make admissions, see post §§ 429-431.
Mutual authority of partners to make binding acknowledgments, see Partnerships, IV, A.
Admissibility of partner's admissions under Uniform Partnership Act, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 72, § 11.

¶ 2213. Where the authority of a partner to speak for his associates is not shown, his statements, so far as concerns them, are mere hearsay.—Heffron v. Hanaford, 40 Mich. 305.

¶ 2214. The acts and declarations of a partner actually engaged in a venture in his own name cannot be proved for the purpose of fixing a liability upon the partnership in respect to such venture.—Lockwood v. Beckwith, 6 Mich. 168.

¶ 2215. A partner's private books are not evidence between partners as to partnership matters.—Kinney v. Robinson, 66 Mich. 113.

¶ 2216. In a suit between two partnerships, the testimony of one defendant that he paid one of the plaintiff's his share of an account due from defendant's firm to plaintiff's firm is not admissible either to bind the latter firm as to the amount, or to show a dissolution of the partnership, it not appearing that either party acted for his firm.—Welch v. Palmer, 85 Mich. 310.

¶ 2217. In an action of replevin, where the issue was whether a proper demand had been made for the return of a safe sold under conditional contract of sale, a question propounded to a witness for plaintiff as to what conversation he had had with a member of the firm of which defendant, who had personally bought the safe, was a member, held properly excluded.—Detroit Safe Co. v. Myer, 192 Mich. 215.

¶ 2218. One partner cannot, after the dissolution of the firm, create a new partnership contract by his admission, or revive a claim against the firm which has been barred by the statute of limitations. But except as to claims so barred by the statute, and others coming within a similar reason, the admission of one partner, made after such dissolution, having reference to previous actual partnership dealings or transactions, stands upon the same ground, and is evidence against the firm in like manner as if made before the dissolution.—Pennoyer v. David, 8 Mich. 407.

¶ 2219. A partner's admission, made after dissolution, must be confined to cases where there has been in fact previous partnership dealings with the plaintiff, or some transactions with the firm out of which a partnership liability to the plaintiff might have originated; and the fact that there might have been such dealings or such transactions must be shown by some evidence outside of the admission itself.—Pennoyer v. David, 8 Mich. 407.

§ 422. ——As to fact of partnership.

Admissions by agent of partner as to partnership, see post ¶ 2266.

Incompetency of agent's declarations to establish agency or disputed authority, see post § 439.

¶ 2220. An admission by one of two defendants, sued as partners, that such relation exists, made in the absence of his codefendant, while not admissible to prove the partnership as against the absent defendant, is admissible for that purpose as against the defendant making the admission.—Armstrong v. Potter, 103 Mich. 409.

¶ 2221. Declarations by each of two alleged copartners made at different times are admissible to show the partnership if the court in its instructions to the jury limits the use of such testimony so that it cannot be considered except as evidence against the defendant making the particular declaration.—Chamberlin v. Fisher, 117 Mich. 428.

¶ 2222. Statements made by persons who have been partners, but after the firm has dissolved and its debts have been assumed by another member, are immaterial in seeking to show the liability of a nonconsenting partner for bonds specially deposited, the firm not having been organized to receive such deposits and getting no profit from them.—Hatheway's Appeal, 52 Mich. 112.

¶ 2223. In an action against alleged partners, testimony of statements by one partner who has defaulted is inadmissible to show the partnership relation.—Scholtz v. Freud, 128 Mich. 72.

§ 423. By parent, child or relative of party.

¶ 2224. Statements or admissions of children in their father's lifetime cannot be received to affect his estate.—Campau v. Dubois, 39 Mich. 274.

¶ 2225. A mother's admissions that her child was warned to avoid the danger cannot release the child's right of action for injury.—Power v. Harlow, 57 Mich. 107.

¶ 2226. Admissions of indebtedness made by one who has robbed a bank are not conclusive upon his relations, who, having given their note to the bank in settlement of such indebtedness, are at liberty, when sued by the bank, to show that he did not owe the amount claimed.—Buck v. First Nat. Bank, 27 Mich. 293.

¶ 2227. Plaintiff in an action on an insurance policy made affidavit that certain property had been burned, but on search it was found concealed. A witness for defendant testified as to what plaintiff said while this search was going on, but it was proper to exclude his testimony as to what the plaintiff's mother, a stranger to the case, had said on that occasion.—Monaghan v. Agricultural Fire Ins. Co. of Watertown, N. Y., 53 Mich. 238.

¶ 2228. Statements by the father of the owner of an automobile which was damaged by fire while in the possession of the vendor in order to be made by him to comply with a warranty, that they would not pay for any repairs, when made in the presence of the son and where the father had been conducting negotiations are admissible against the vendor in an action to recover for such repairs.—Helber v. Schaible, 183 Mich. 379.

§ 424. By husband or wife against each other.

Statements in absence of party to be charged and not communicated to him or her, see ante § 402.

Acts and declarations as res gestæ affecting other spouse, see post § 476.

¶ 2230. A wife is not bound by her husband's unauthorized admissions or statements concerning her property.—Dawson v. Hall, 2 Mich. 390; Wright v. Towle, 67 Mich. 255.

¶ 2231. In replevin brought against a wife to get possession of property mortgaged by her husband, who had absconded, testimony of what the husband had said and done was inadmissible, unless the acts or statements had been in her presence or with her knowledge.—Campbell v. Quackenbush, 33 Mich. 287.

¶ 2240. What the husband said and did when buying lots is imputable to his wife, where he caused the deeds to be made to her in her name and she relies thereon.—Conlin v. Masecar, 80 Mich. 139.

¶ 2242. In an action against a liquor-dealer for selling to plaintiff's husband, remarks made by the husband tending to exculpate the dealer, but not as part of any transaction in dispute, are inadmissible in evidence; they could not bind plaintiff.—Kehrig v. Peters, 41 Mich. 475.

¶ 2243. In an action by a woman for injuries caused by her horse shying at a hole in a bridge and backing through the railing over the side of the bridge or its abutment, it is proper to strike out what her husband, not a witness, once said about the horse "always being afraid of bridges since he got through the T. bridge," such statement having been volunteered by defendant's witness and plaintiff not being bound by such statement either because of her relation to the declarant or because he owned the horse.—Smith v. Township of Sherwood, 62 Mich. 159.

¶ 2246. In an action of trover by a wife to recover for the unlawful conversion of an automobile which was taken by defendant sheriff under an execution against the husband, held that a certified copy of an application for an automobile license made by the husband was properly excluded where there was no claim that such application was made in the presence of the wife, and there was no testimony that she authorized it to be issued to her husband.—Jaddatz v. Great Harbor Lumber Co., 194 Mich. 273.

¶ 2250. Where a husband sues his father-in-law for depriving him of his wife's company, and it appears that defendant and his wife were acting in concert, the doings and sayings of defendant's wife may be shown against her husband.—Edgell v. Francis, 66 Mich. 303.

¶ 2251. In criminal conversation, statements by the wife not in the husband's presence that he knew of her misdeeds and did not object and that she had taken care and had good witnesses are erroneously admitted where there is no evidence of conspiracy.—Smith v. Hockenberry, 138 Mich. 129.

¶ 2253. Where one party has voluntarily made his trustee or agent the ostensible principal, and the only one capable of legal action, he will be bound by the admissions of such trustee or agent.—Hogan v. Sherman, 5 Mich. 60.

¶ 2254. The agency having been fully proved, a letter written by the manager of the defendant's railroad to an attorney of a grantor, afterwards plaintiff in ejectment, stating that the deed from the latter to the defendant did not cover the land in dispute, that it must have occurred through mistakes, etc., was properly admitted, as were conversations between the manager and the attorney.—McCammon v. Detroit, L. & N. R. Co., 66 Mich. 442.

regularly executed and delivered to prevent trouble after her death, are admissible, in an action by another daughter to set aside the deed, to show delivery of the deed and the intention of the testatrix as to the disposition of her property, since they are her declarations though through her agent.—Price v. Hagle, 171 Mich. 455.

See also post ¶ 2528.

¶ 2258. An accommodation acceptor of paper may properly seek information from the agent or manager of a bank to which the paper is to be paid as to the condition of the person whom both understand to be really responsible on it. And in a suit by the drawee against the acceptor the latter may show his condition and the agent's statements or admissions.—Canadian Bank of Commerce v. Coumbe, 47 Mich. 358.

¶ 2259. Statements by an employee of a firm that has been hired to run logs cannot bind the log-owner in a statutory proceeding against him to recover compensation for breaking his log-jams.—Butterfield v. Gilchrist, 53 Mich. 22.

§ 429. Pertinency of statements to scope of agency.

Conversations by broker with purchaser to show latter's willingness to make bargain, see also Brokers § 38.

¶ 2260. Statements of one invested with apparent authority relating to the subject-matter of the transaction are properly admitted.—Cronk v. Mulvaney, 168 Mich. 346.

¶ 2261. The principal is not bound by statements made by his agent outside the scope of his agency.—Andrews v. Tamarack Min. Co., 114 Mich. 375; Maxson v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 117 Mich. 218.

¶ 2265. In suit for the value of timber cut by defendant's contractor on plaintiff's land, the declaration of the contractor, made while he was still lumbering for defendant, that he had cut timber on what turned out to be plaintiff's land and delivered it to defendant, is admissible.—Ayres v. Hubbard, 71 Mich. 594.

¶ 2266. Where the surviving partner of a banking firm, being sued for deposits, denies the existence of the partnership, but evidence has been given thereof, the statements of the cashier, whose general agency has been established, made to plaintiffs when contemplating future deposits, as to the existence of the firm, are admissible in evidence as part of the res gestæ.—Wright v. Weimeister, 87 Mich. 594.

¶ 2270. In an action against a mining corporation for the death of a miner killed by falling walls, the testimony of the mining captain, who had charge of all the underground work, given at the coroner's inquest over the body of the deceased, that he had ordered precautions to be taken to avoid accident, because he did not consider the place safe, is inadmissible, where it is offered, not for purposes of impeachment, but to prove the substantive fact, that defendant, through its agent, had knowledge of the danger.—Andrews v. Tamarack Min. Co., 114 Mich. 375.

was bound by Marshall's statements made to plaintiff.—Walling v. Poulsen, 160 Mich. 392.

¶ 2272. In a suit for injuries due to the negligence of an automobile owner's chauffeur, the statements of said chauffeur made on the occasion of the accident are not admissible to bind defendant, where the evidence clearly shows he was acting outside the scope of his authority in taking out the automobile on the occasion in question.—Riley v. Roach, 168 Mich. 294.

¶ 2273. Admission of testimony tending to prove that either before or after a certain storm from the effects of which upon defendant's tent in which plaintiff was attending defendant's show plaintiff was injured, certain employees of defendant admitted that the tent was not properly erected or made statements from which the inference of defendant's negligence would arise, held to be erroneous; otherwise, if at any time responsible officers and agents of defendant made such admissions.—Jacobs v. Hagenbeck-Wallace Shows, 198 Mich. 73, 16 N. C. C. A. 535.

¶ 2274. The statements of a steamboat clerk who is not shown to occupy any position of general agency are not admissible to bind the corporation that employs him, as to matters not within the scope of his employment.—Ward's Cent. & P. Lake Co. v. Elkins, 34 Mich. 439.

¶ 2275. In an action against a railroad company by one who claims he has a contract with it to be employed for life, the statements of a division superintendent of the road made several years after the making of the alleged contract, that the company had given plaintiff a life job, are inadmissible to establish such contract, both because the superintendent had no authority, and because not having been made at the time of the contract, the statements are not part of the res gestæ.—Maxson v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 117 Mich. 218.

¶ 2276. Upon the issue whether the goods in question were delivered by defendant to connecting carrier, evidence of a statement made by defendant's agents after the return of the goods at the shipper's direction, to the point of shipment, to the effect that the goods had never left defendant's line of road, is material as an admission; but where it does not appear that such agent knew, or could have known, to what point the goods had traveled, or in whose custody they were found when ordered to be returned, or that he sought the information, or that it was part of his duty to thus inform himself, the statement was merely a gratuitous one, and proof of it incompetent.—Reason v. Detroit, G. H. & M. Ry. Co., 150 Mich. 50.

¶ 2277. What a scaler said and did while making a scale of logs and his declarations against the correctness or honesty of the scale may be shown, where the scale is in evidence to prove quantity.—Malone v. Gates, 87 Mich. 332.

By corporate officer after the fact, see post ¶ 2297.
Subsequent statement not made known to principal, see also ante ¶ 2137.
Declarations as res gestæ after time of principal occurrence, see post § 484.
Subsequent conversations by broker with other party as evidence against principal, see also Brokers ¶ 153.

¶ 2278. In an action against the principal, the admissions of an agent, after his agency has terminated, are inadmissible.—North v. Metz, 57 Mich. 612.

¶ 2279. Admissions of an agent, made after the fact, and entirely unconnected with any act of agency, are not evidence of the fact.—Bowen v. Rutland School Dist. No. 9, 36 Mich. 149.

¶ 2280. Evidence of the statement of an agent made nine months after he had sold property for his principal, that he knew at the time of the sale that it was good for nothing, is inadmissible to affect the rights of his principal.—Horner v. Fellows, 1 D. 51.

¶ 2282. In an action for the price of an article sold, declarations of the vendor's agent after the contract was completed, and not in the vendor's presence, as to the bargain, are not admissible except to impeach such agent's testimony, in which case his attention must first be called to such statements.—Platt v. Broderick, 70 Mich. 577.

¶ 2284. In a suit to recover for injuries received by being kicked by defendant's bay mare, while plaintiff was inspecting her with a view to purchase, evidence on plaintiff's part that an employee of defendant, who had charge of the barn in which the injury was received, testified on the trial of the case in justice's court that there was a bay mare in the barn at the time that was a kicker, is inadmissible.—Ablard v. Fort Wayne & B. I. R. Co., 104 Mich. 147.

¶ 2287. Although plaintiff had stated there was no retraction made in an action for libel against one who sent a letter to a newspaper, which published it, it is error on cross-examination to admit an unauthenticated letter to plaintiff, assuming to exonerate plaintiff and condemn defendant, purporting to have been written by the editors of the paper; since it is hearsay and is not authenticated.—Kovacs v. Mayoras, 175 Mich. 582.

¶ 2288. In a suit against a street railway company for injuries received by a passenger the testimony of a witness to a conversation between the driver and the superintendent, after the accident, in which the driver stated that he had reported the car as having a bad brake, etc., is inadmissible to bind the company with notice of the defect claimed.—Wormsdorf v. Detroit City R. Co., 75 Mich. 472.

¶ 2289. In an action against a carrier for injuries to a passenger riding on an electric car, the declarations of the motorman, made eighteen hours before the accident, that his car was not working well, are inadmissible, because not part of the res gestæ, and as made by one without authority.—Rouston v. Detroit United Ry., 151 Mich. 237.

¶ 2293. Admissions made by the driver of an automobile, the owner of which was injured by being violently thrown about upon running into an excavation in a highway, as to the speed of the car, are not admissible as substantive evidence in an action by the owner for damages for personal injuries, where they were made some time after the accident and not in the presence of the plaintiff.—Loose v. Township of Deerfield, 187 Mich. 206.

Statutory rule as to admissions by members as evidence against corporation in suits by or against it, see Jud. Act, chap. XVII § 57; Comp. L. 1915, § 12545.

¶ 2295. Evidence is admissible against a corporation of acts of its officers and agents within the scope of their employment.—Attorney General ex rel. James v. National Cash Register Co., 182 Mich. 99, ¶ 2296. In an action for a balance claimed to be due the plaintiff for services as superintendent of a corporation, a certificate by the treasurer of the company, who was also consulting director, that the company was indebted to plaintiff in a given sum for balance of salary, is not admissible in evidence as an admission binding on the company in the absence of any showing of authority in such treasurer and consulting director to make such admissions.—Kalamazoo Novelty Mfg. Co. v. McAlister, 36 Mich. 327.

¶ 2297. In an action against a company for the price of goods ordered by its agent, it is not error to exclude testimony as to a conversation with one of the company's officers concerning the agent's connection with it where such conversation took place after the orders were given, when the one who took the orders was absent and there is no evidence that such officer had authority to bind the company by his admissions.—Rothschild v. Sugar Beet Products Co., 174 Mich. 237.

¶ 2300. In an action by the holder in due course of notes purchased by the holder, who was an officer of a corporation, from the corporation, held that evidence as to a conversation between the maker and the treasurer of the corporation relative to payment of the notes, was inadmissible.—Poss v. Meader, 189 Mich. 323.

Award by lawyer as referee, see post ¶ 2309.
Admissions by attorneys in open court in trial of the case, see Trial, V.
General authority of attorneys at law to bind clients, see Attorneys, II, C.

¶ 2301. A note written by plaintiff's attorney before suit, and expressing the opinion that defendant is not liable, is not admissible in evidence for the defense.—Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co. v. Bowen, 40 Mich. 147.

¶ 2302. A solicitor has no authority to make admissions for his client in a proceeding, as for a contempt, to enforce a civil remedy.—Scott v. Chambers, 62 Mich. 532.

¶ 2303. A statement of the attorney for the defendant in an attachment suit made at the time the judgment was rendered, that he could defeat the judgment but had made up his mind to let plaintiff take judgment, is inadmissible to show fraud and collusion on the attorney's part, for by itself it has no such tendency.—Hunt v. Strew, 33 Mich. 85.

¶ 2304. A railroad company is not bound by the statements of its local attorney, whose authority is limited to matters specially entrusted to him, concerning a matter in which he has not been employed.—Fletcher v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 109 Mich. 363.

¶ 2305. In an action against a railroad company for malicious prosecution in causing the arrest of plaintiff for knowingly receiving stolen property, statements made by the local attorney for the road that there had been considerable feeling over the stealing from the company, that they thought plaintiff had been at the head of it, and that they wanted to put a stop to it, are inadmissible, where the attorney had no general authority, and had not been employed in the matter in question.—Fletcher v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 109 Mich. 363.

¶ 2306. Letters from an attorney, containing an admission of the receipt of notices claiming rent and asserting a purpose of holding a bankrupt lessee, are not admissible against the lessee, where the attorney was employed in the bankruptcy proceedings only and no competent evidence brought receipt of the notices home to the lessee.—Stewart v. Sprague, 71 Mich. 50.

§ 434. By persons referred to for information or decision.

¶ 2307. Where a party claiming property alleged to have been transferred to him for the purpose of defrauding creditors was inquired of by a creditor as to his responsibility and referred the creditor to the business men of a place where he had formerly resided to ascertain in regard to such responsibility, held, that this reference did not authorize the statements of the business men of such place, made in answer to the inquiries of the creditor, to be given in evidence (on the ground of agency) on behalf of the officer who subsequently attached such property at the suit of the creditors.—Rosenbury v. Angell, 6 Mich. 508.

plaintiff to the maker of the note for information, it was held that any statements made by the maker in reference to the note at that interview were as much a part of the res gestæ as if made in the defendants' presence, or even as if made by themselves. —Beebe v. Knapp, 28 Mich. 53.

§ 435. ——Award of umpire, arbitrator or scaler.

Scale made by selected person as binding on parties, see also Contracts § 185.

Admissibility of arbitrator's award when not intended to bind, see also Arbitration ¶ 107.

¶ 2309. Evidence of a parol submission to a lawyer and of his award between the parties is admissible against one of them and in favor of the other as an implied admission.—Cady v. Walker, 62 Mich. 157.

¶ 2310. Where an employee of the owner of timber is accepted by the contractor as scaler, and, at the request of the contractor, prepares a scale on which he also keeps an account of the logs in such a way as to disclose how many feet are cut by each of the contractor's employees, thereby furnishing the contractor a basis for paying his men, such scale is admissible in evidence against the owner in an action by the contractor to recover for work and labor on the contract after failure of owner to furnish funds pursuant to contract.—Brooks v. Bellows, 192 Mich. 109.

¶ 2311. Where, under a contract for grading a road-bed, the plaintiff's work is to be under the direction of and subject to change by the engineer in sole control, a conversation between plaintiff and such engineer, acting for defendant, though in defendant's absence, is admissible.—Bush v. Brooks, 70 Mich. 446.

¶ 2312. An unnecessary memorandum of assessment of damages by the clerk on a default is not binding on the plaintiff on the theory of a reliance on the facts stated.—Danielson v. Dyckman, 26 Mich. 169.

¶ 2313. Evidence of what a person deputized to serve an execution said as to his authority from the execution plaintiffs, when he returned a prior execution and took out the one in question in the suit, is admissible against such plaintiffs.—Harvey v. McAdams, 32 Mich. 472.

¶ 2314. Statements made by a highway commissioner to third persons are inadmissible to show that the township had notice of defects in a bridge whereby injury was done, if such statements were not made until after the injury took place nor while the commissioner was in the discharge of his duties.—Stebbins v. Township of Keene, 55 Mich. 552.

¶ 2315. In an action for injuries sustained by the breaking of a bridge, statements by the one who was overseer of highways at the time of the accident, made some eighteen months thereafter, that he had not regarded the bridge as safe, are inadmissible.—O'Neil v. Township of Deerfield, 86 Mich. 610.

¶ 2316. In an action for assault and battery, although what the defendant said, by way of admission, upon the trial of a criminal action growing out of the same transaction, is admissible, what the police justice said to him on such trial is incompetent.—Breitenbach v. Trowbridge, 64 Mich. 393.

¶ 2317. In an action against the warden of a penal institution of the state to recover for the cancellation of a contract, evidence is not admissible on behalf of the plaintiff as bearing on the question whether grounds existed for the cancellation, to show an attempt by his assignor to bribe a member of the board of control, since the state could not be affected by it.—McDowell v. Fuller, 183 Mich. 639. (Per Brooke, C. J., McAlvay, Stone and Ostrander, JJ.)

§ 437. Foundation proof of agency or privity.

Inadmissibility of agent's declarations to prove agency or authority to make the admission, see post § 439.

Order of proof of agency and declarations by the agent, see Trial, V, B.

Evidence of agency in general, see Agency §§ 9, 10.

Evidence of agent's authority in general, see Agency §§ 40, 41.

¶ 2318. In a suit against a railroad company for extra services as station agent, it was shown that plaintiff was requested by two agents of the company to take charge of the station; but it was not shown that the agents had any authority to act. Held, that evidence was inadmissible in behalf of plaintiff to show what one of the agents said to him about taking the position at the station.—Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Nichol, 18 Mich. 170.

¶ 2318a. Where a son sends one who wishes to buy land of him to bargain with the father, saying that he will agree to whatever bargain they shall make, the person sent is authorized to regard the father as the son's agent for the purpose of the bargain, and the father's statements while negotiating the sale will bind the son.—Reeves v. Kelly, 30 Mich. 132.

¶ 2318b. Evidence sufficiently shows that one whose brother, now deceased, had given a mortgage to a third person was the mortgagor's agent, so that his acts and admissions in regard to a second mortgage claimed to have been given and received in satisfaction of interest that had accrued on the first mortgage were binding upon his principal, the two having "worked and acted together" and consulted each other on this and other transactions.—Blair v. Carpenter, 75 Mich. 167.

¶ 2319. A letter and published statements in a newspaper are admissible against persons in charge of the paper, where the letter was written by their manager purporting to admit the responsibility of those composing the company, and the published statements and other evidence identified the persons under whose authority the admissions were made.—Callam v. Barnes, 44 Mich. 593.

¶ 2320. In an action by the wife against a saloon keeper and his bondsmen for illegal sale of liquor to the husband, where the defense offers in evidence a receipt in full and testimony of payment of $10.00 for a discharge of all liability, it is error in attempting to show fraud or duress to admit testimony that three different persons told the plaintiff that the defendant had threatened to have her arrested as a common prostitute, without connecting up their statements with the defendant by showing previous authority or ratification.—Boydan v. Haberstumpf, 129 Mich. 137.

¶ 2321. In an action for damages by a vendee of land for fraudulent representations made by the vendor, it is proper to admit evidence of the representations made by the vendor's agent in vendor's absence on a showing that said vendor told the plaintiff said agent was acting for him in selling the land.—Wegner v. Herkimer, 167 Mich. 587.

¶ 2322. In an action of ejectment, evidence that defendant attempted to purchase plaintiff's interest as cotenant is inadmissible on the question of adverse possession, where the authority of an attorney to represent defendant in the purchase was not shown.—Croze v. Quincy Min. Co., 199 Mich. 515.

¶ 2323. The agency of one alleged agent cannot be shown by the admissions, declarations, and recognition of another agent of the same principal unless the latter be one authorized to make those admissions.—Fisk v. Liverpool & London & Globe Ins. Co., 198 Mich. 270.

§ 438. ——Of conspiracy or concert.

Mere similarity of testimony as evidence of conspiracy by witnesses, see ante ¶ 2000.

General evidence and indicia of conspiracy, see Conspiracy § 6.

Foundation proofs in criminal cases, see Indictment, VIII, B.

¶ 2324. In conspiracy to commit an actionable wrong, things said, done or written by any one of the conspirators in furtherance of the common purpose are not relevant as against any but those who accomplish them or are present when they are accomplished, and they cannot be admitted as against the rest unless there is prima facie ground for believing in the existence of a conspiracy.—Hamilton v. Smith, 39 Mich. 222.

¶ 2325. Declarations of one conspirator are inadmissible in proof of the conspiracy, though they may perhaps be evidence against his associates after the conspiracy is made out.—Solomon v. Kirkwood, 55 Mich. 256.

¶ 2327. Where, in an action for negligent injury it appeared that one who had been injured in the same accident with plaintiff, after recovering judgment against defendant, furnished apartments for plaintiff, took general management of her suit, and was to receive a share of her recovery; defendant might show what such person said about not wanting plaintiff to attend the trial, and what plaintiff said about a letter received from such person about the trial, as bearing on a conspiracy between the two to extort money from defendant.—Cole v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 81 Mich. 156.

¶ 2328. Declarations of a coconspirator are admissible as to a party to the conspiracy, but not until the existence of conspiracy has been otherwise established.—Kimble v. Gillard, 177 Mich. 250.

¶ 2329. In criminal conversation, statements by the wife not in the husband's presence that he knew of her misdeeds and did not object and that she had taken care and had good witnesses are not admissible to show the husband a coconspirator and they furnish no evidence of connivance.—Smith v. Hockenberry, 138 Mich. 129.

§ 439. ——Declarations or assumptions by agent that he is such or has authority.

Res gestæ as evidence of authority, see post § 480.

Husband's declaration of agency for wife, see ante ¶ 2245.

Admissions by one agent that another is agent, see also ante ¶ 2323.

Incompetency of partner's declarations to establish partnership relation, see ante § 422.

Admissibility of agent's direct testimony that he is agent or has authority, see Agency §§ 9, 40.

¶ 2330. That one assumed to do an act as another's agent cannot be shown as evidence of his authority so to do it.—Reynolds v. Continental Ins. Co., 36 Mich. 131.

¶ 2331. Agency cannot be established merely by dealings between the alleged agent and a third person.—North v. Metz, 57 Mich. 612.

¶ 2332. The acts and declarations of one who assumes to be acting as the agent of another are not evidence against the supposed principal until the fact of agency is established by other evidence.—Hatch v. Squires, 11 Mich. 185; Carpenter v. Continental Ins. Co., 61 Mich. 635.

¶ 2333. Agency is not proved by the alleged agent's own acts or statements alone. —Hatch v. Squires, 11 Mich. 185; Kornemann v. Monaghan, 24 Mich. 36; McDonough v. Heyman, 38 Mich. 334.

¶ 2334. The acts, statements or declarations of an alleged agent are inadmissible to establish his agency.—Davis v. Kneale, 97 Mich. 72; Somerville v. Wabash R. Co., 109 Mich. 294; Coldwater Nat. Bank v. Buggie, 117 Mich. 416; Fontaine Crossing & Electrical Co. v. Rauch, 117 Mich. 401; Theisen v. Detroit Taxicab & Transfer Co., 200 Mich. 136.

¶ 2335. Agency cannot be established by testimony as to the statements of the alleged agent relating to the fact or to the possession of any of the indicia of agency.—Henneberger v. Matter, 88 Mich. 396.

¶ 2336. An alleged agent's declarations are inadmissible in proof of his authority or of its extent.—Bacon v. Johnson, 56 Mich. 182; Ironwood Store Co. v. Harrison, 75 Mich. 197; Three Rivers Nat. Bank v. Gilchrist, 83 Mich. 253; Henneberger v. Matter, 88 Mich. 396; Swanstrom v. Muskegon Imp. Co., 91 Mich. 367.

¶ 2340. Declarations by a person claiming to be an agent, and constituting part of his transactions as such, may be shown as res gestæ on the question of his authority.—Haughton v. Maurer, 55 Mich. 323; Hirschmann v. Iron Range & H. B. R. Co., 97 Mich. 384.

¶ 2340a. The statements of an alleged agent as to his agency, made in a matter not connected with his principal, have no tendency to prove such agency.—Ironwood Store Co. v. Harrison, 75 Mich. 197.

¶ 2341. When there is evidence tending to show ratification of an alleged agent's acts, his admissions and declarations, although not competent to establish the fact of agency, are competent to show ratification.—Mally v. Excelsior Wrapper Co., 181 Mich. 568.

¶ 2342. In an action against a father for board furnished his son, the son's false representations as to his authority to bind his father are insufficient to bind the father.—McCrady v. Pratt, 138 Mich. 203.

¶ 2343. A lessee, having testified that he had no authority to effect an alteration of a writing after he and his colessee had signed it, cannot be shown to have had authority by proof of declarations made out of court to the contrary; but such testimony is proper to impeach his denial of authority.—McPherson v. Pinch, 119 Mich. 36.

¶ 2344. In an action to which he is not a party and not directly involving the goods the declaration against interest of one in possession of goods is not admissible to show that he is in possession as defendant's agent. —Coldwater Nat. Bank v. Buggie, 117 Mich. 416.

¶ 2348. To overcome the effect of the giving of orders for wages and payment of them by the opposite party, the one against whom they are urged may show that he had no knowledge of the form of the orders, as in that case they could not operate against him or tend to show that he was not acting merely as defendant's agent, and there was nothing in their payment by defendant to estop plaintiff from showing the circumstances under which they were drawn.—Boyce v. Martin, 46 Mich. 239.

Letter to overcome effect of original pleading put in evidence though since amended, see ante ¶ 470.

¶ 2349. Where a claim for services is made against an estate and the claimant proves that the intestate has made declarations tending to show that he expected to pay for the services, the defense cannot be allowed to show that he has made declarations of a different character.—Van Fleet v. Van Fleet, 50 Mich. 1.

D. RES GESTÆ.

§ 444. In general; nature and admissibility.

Spontaneousness of utterances, see post § 445.
Nature and circumstances of the utterance and facts manifested, see post §§ 446-456.
Particular acts and subjects and res gestæ thereof, see post §§ 457-467.
Time of the utterance and relation and connection with event, see post §§ 468, 469, 484.
Demeanor or writings as res gestæ, see post §§ 470-474.
Acts of agents and persons in privity to party as res gestæ admissible in the case, see post §§ 475-484.
Declarations evincive of thoughts, intents and mental condition of declarant, see ante §§ 329-335.
Res gestæ rule as applied in trials for crime, see Indictment, VIII, B.
[Note. Since the res gestæ are the circumstantial parts and utterances characterizing and comprised within the principal event or fact in issue, it must follow that no exact distinction and classification of cases illustrating the res gestæ rule is possible. In addition to the cases collected here, the specific topics should be consulted in those parts dealing with admissibility of evidence.]

¶ 2350. To make statements admissible as res gestæ they must be spontaneous, made at or near the time and place of the accident, and so closely connected with the occurrence as to be evoked and prompted by it.—Bernard v. Grand Rapids Paper Box Co., 170 Mich. 238.

¶ 2352. The conditions under which unsworn statements that are exclamations are admissible as a part of the res gestæ under the exception to the hearsay rule are that there is a startling occasion, startling enough to produce nervous excitement and render the utterance spontaneous and unreflecting; that the statement must have been made before there has been time to contrive and misrepresent; and the statement must relate to the circumstances of the occurrence preceding it.—Rogers v. Saginaw-Bay City Ry. Co., 187 Mich. 490.

¶ 2353. A party's statement made at and during the time of a transaction is admissible as showing what the transaction was. —Towle v. Dunham, 84 Mich. 268.

¶ 2354. The res gestæ of a transaction are usually significant and tend to enlighten the jury upon the matters in issue; and they are not to be shut out by proffered admissions of the other party.—Baumier v. Antiau, 79 Mich. 509.

¶ 2355. The whole of a conversation containing words complained of as slanderous is admissible as part of the res gestæ.—Ellis v. Whitehead, 95 Mich. 105.

¶ 2356. Admissions of parties may be admissible in evidence as part of the res gestæ, even though they cannot bind any one else.—Callam v. Barnes, 44 Mich. 593.

¶ 2357. Where a party is sued in trover for goods seized by him under a chattel mortgage given to him by his codefendants, who were a majority of the directors of an incipient corporation, he cannot, in explaining how he came to take the mortgage, narrate statements of such codefendants concerning their previous dealings with plaintiff, as such statements are hearsay and not needed to describe the res gestæ.—Doyle v. Mizner, 42 Mich. 332.

Admissibility in proceedings under compensation acts for death of employee of statements made by deceased, see note, 5 N. C. C. A. 917-924.

As to spontaneousness, see also ante ¶¶ 2350, 2352.

Statements of reasons or explanations, see post § 446.

Exclamations and complaints of pain and sickness, see post §§ 453-456.

Burden of proving foundation fact of spontaneity, see ante ¶ 372.

¶ 2358. In a suit for the death of a child killed by a street car, evidence that the motorman, fifteen or twenty minutes after the accident, admitted he was to blame, is not competent where a large crowd assembled about the car and assaulted and intimidated the motorman.—Feldman v. Detroit United Ry., 162 Mich. 486.

¶ 2359. Statements of decedent, in an action for personal injuries resulting in his death, are not admissible as res gestæ where it appears that they were made over a mile away from the place where the accident occurred, and an hour afterwards, that decedent was not unconscious during all of this interval, and that such statements were not spontaneous and voluntary, but were drawn out by questions.—White v. City of Marquette, 140 Mich. 310.

¶ 2362. A man who took a traction-engine down a slope and across a bridge was injured by the breaking of the bridge, and it being claimed, in defense to his action for the injury, that he came down the slope with steam on, he showed that at the top he told the engineer to shut it off, and that the engine was propelled by horse alone. Held proper to show also that the engineer had answered that he had shut off the steam; his answer was res gestæ.—Stebbins v. Township of Keene, 55 Mich. 552.

§ 446. Statements of reason, purpose or explanation.

Subsequent statements, see post § 468.

Explanations and statements of cause of accident or injury, see post § 469.

Res gestæ of possession or claim, see post §§ 447, 448.
Statements at time of recording instrument, see post § 461.

¶ 2363. Where a druggist brought an action of libel based on a newspaper article which charged him with making and selling counterfeit Haarlem oil, proof that purchasers from plaintiff returned the oil, and gave the printed article as a reason for not keeping it, is admissible without calling such persons as witnesses. Reasons given in connection with such return are part of the res gestæ, and not to be treated as hearsay.—Steketee v. Kimm, 48 Mich. 322.

¶ 2364. Conversation clearly connected with the facts in issue is admissible in evidence as explanatory of the facts and as part of the res gestæ.—Stewart v. Brown, 48 Mich. 383.

¶ 2365. In breach of promise suit, letter by plaintiff replying to letter sent by defendant in reply to note sent by her, and affirming a fact questioned by his letter, is admissible in her behalf as part of the res gestæ.—Rutter v. Collins, 96 Mich. 510.

¶ 2367. In an action for the price of lumber to be used in defendant's house, and which was to have been furnished the builder on credit, he being already in debt to the plaintiff, where the order was entered on the books of plaintiff, the fact that plaintiff's manager saw the foreman after the entry was made and the builder had left, and told him not to fill the order was not a part of the transaction of making the entry on the books and therefore inadmissible as part of the res gestæ thereof as against the defendant.—Tolbert v. Burke, 89 Mich. 132.

§ 447. To characterize possession or claim of right.

As to location of boundaries, see post § 448.
To characterize agent's possession, see post § 481.
Declarations other than res gestæ relative to possession or claim, see ante §§ 325, 329, 330.
Declarations in derogation of title or possession of declarant, see ante §§ 364, 365.

¶ 2368. A wife claimed ownership of a horse as given to her by her husband, and testified that after the gift was made she went to the stable where the horse was kept and gave directions respecting its keeping, and that she afterwards controlled it. Held, that this was admissible as part of the res gestæ and as tending to show that possession was delivered.—Davis v. Zimmerman, 40 Mich. 24.

¶ 2369. A man found several cows damaging his crop, and he impounded them within his own inclosure. The owner of one of the cows, after tendering appraised damages and demanding the cow, brought replevin. The transaction at time of making demand, involved several other cows, but the court refused to permit any inquiry except as to the one for which suit was brought. Held error to exclude evidence of the conversation and dealings as showing defendant's course with reference to consenting or refusing to give up the cattle.—Toomy v. Woodruff, 50 Mich. 31.

¶ 2370. What an attachment defendant said and did with respect to the property attached, at or about the time the writ was served, are competent evidence in an action of trover by one claiming to be the owner and claiming that the attachment defendant was his agent.—Adams v. Kellogg, 63 Mich. 105.

¶ 2371. Where possession is demanded of an officer who has levied execution his statement is properly given in evidence to show on what pretext he acted, it not being offered to bind the execution plaintiff.—Gutsch v. McIlhargey, 69 Mich. 377.

¶ 2372. An insured person, in proving loss by fire, swore to the destruction of a sewing-machine, but in an action on the policy a neighbor who was at the fire testified that she saw the machine standing on the ground, and that next day plaintiff's hired man left it at witness' house for safe-keeping. Held proper to ask what he said on doing so, as part of the res gestæ, and as bearing on the question whether he also had sworn falsely in proofs of loss.—Monaghan v. Agricultural Fire Ins. Co. of Watertown, N. Y., 53 Mich. 238.

¶ 2373. In an action on a claim involving the genuineness of a note alleged to have been executed by a mother, since deceased, in favor of her daughter, testimony of a witness that he had talked with the claimant daughter about the note shortly after her mother's death and that she told him that she had such note and supposed he knew about it, which knowledge he then denied, is competent on behalf of the estate.—Mack v. Cole's Estate, 130 Mich. 84.

ing the agreement, on the question whether plaintiff gave oral notice to such defendant of his election to sell the stock to such defendant at such time, that plaintiff told such defendant that he was not purchasing the stock, but that he was merely putting 3 per cent money to work to earn 6 per cent and that he did not intend to hold the stock, and he wanted such defendant to understand that it was expected that he would redeem the stock and pay the purchase price, and interest, at the expiration of the contract, was admissible as part of the res gestæ. —Semer v. Cleary, 199 Mich. 173.

Subsequent declarations by surveyor, see post ¶ 2475.

Statements at time of drafting instrument, see post ¶ 2440a.

Statements in derogation of one's own boundary or claim, see ante § 365.

¶ 2375. The question being as to the location of a dividing line between lands, the declarations of a former owner of one parcel are admissible to explain the nature and extent of his possession, whether such declarations are in disparagement of title or not.—Bower v. Earl, 18 Mich. 367.

§ 449. To show assent or dissent.

Declarations other than res gestæ evincive of declarant's mind, see ante § 334.

¶ 2377. A party can always show by his own testimony that he did not enter into an agreement relied on against him, or voluntarily enter upon the performance of work which had been imposed upon him, but for which he had not been engaged; and he may show this by testimony of what he said at the time he was directed to do such work.—Jones v. Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co., 49 Mich. 573.

¶ 2378. In an action supported by attachment to recover rent due on an oral lease of a store building providing that the balance of the year's rent would be due and payable if the tenant vacated the premises before the expiration of his term, held that evidence that the managing clerk of the store stated that defendant had given her orders to "pack up and get out" was admissible as part of the res gestæ.—Spears v. Black, 190 Mich. 693.

§ 450. To characterize feelings or state of mind.

Declarations other than res gestæ evincive of declarant's mind and intents, see ante §§ 329-335.

To show assent or dissent, see ante § 449.

¶ 2379. In an action for criminal conversation evidence of plaintiff's conduct when his wife's offense was communicated to him is admissible to show how he was affected by the disclosure, and as bearing upon the damages.—Hutchins v. Kimmell, 31 Mich. 126.

¶ 2380. In an action crim. con., such part of a conversation between plaintiff and his wife as tends to show his feelings and conduct on learning of her infidelity is admissible as bearing on the question of damages.—Dalton v. Dregge, 99 Mich. 250.

¶ 2381. A letter by a wife to her parents stating that her husband was so unkind to her that she was "sick of her home" is proper res gestæ in an action for alienation based on her subsequent leaving home.—Perry v. Lovejoy, 49 Mich. 529.

¶ 2382. In an action against a father-in-law for taking and detaining plaintiff's wife, the wife's statements during the period of alienation but not in defendant's presence, concerning the reasons why she stayed with her parents, and her feelings and wishes, are admissible as res gestæ; but her statements reflecting on her parents made to a stranger are hearsay.—Edgell v. Francis, 66 Mich. 303.

¶ 2383. Where the defense to a suit upon a promissory note was that it was given in compromise of a criminal complaint against the maker's son-in-law, and was procured through the entreaties of the daughter, whose fears had been played upon by the plaintiff with that purpose, held, that it was competent to show what she stated to her father to induce him to give the note, as that was part of the res gestæ.—Snyder v. Willey, 33 Mich. 483.

What declaration admissible to show mental suffering in actions for personal injuries, see note, 12 N. C. C. A. 399-414.

§ 451. To evince malice, intent, fraud or knowledge.

Subsequent statements, see post § 468.

Writings res gestæ of fraud, see post § 474.

Declarations other than res gestæ showing mind or intent, see ante § 333.

¶ 2384. In an action for slander uttered by a priest from the pulpit evidence of an altercation in the church so connected with the utterance of the alleged slanderous words as to form a part of the res gestæ is admissible as bearing upon the question of malice.—Provost v. Brueck, 110 Mich. 136.

¶ 2385. In cases where fraud is the subject of investigation, the statements of the parties charged with it are admissible in evidence if made before the instrument charged to be fraudulent is completed, or while it is in preparation.—Wyckoff v. Carr, 8 Mich. 44.

¶ 2386. In an action for fraud in selling plaintiff a second for a first mortgage, it is admissible to show that at the time of making the mortgage defendant said he did not want it to contain an exception in the covenant against encumbrances, as it might prejudice its sale.—Cronkhite v. Dickerson, 51 Mich. 177.

¶ 2388. On the question of fraud in obtaining a signature to a lightning rod contract it was admissible to show a conversation in which defendant agreed to do the work at a stated price and also that later plaintiff presented a writing which defendant thought was a recommendation which he signed on plaintiff's request and reading in part, defendant's vision being poor and plaintiff in a hurry.—Hobbs v. Solts, 37 Mich. 357.

¶ 2389. Where, in a suit for damages for alleged fraudulent representations by which plaintiff was induced to purchase a note, the jury finds that the fraud was committed as claimed, evidence that defendant said he would guarantee that the note would be paid is admissible as a part of the transaction, if the jury finds that such promise was made to aid in the fraud perpetrated on plaintiff.—Averill v. Wood, 78 Mich. 342.

¶ 2390. Where, in an action for the conversion of articles claimed by plaintiff to have been stolen, defendants admit purchasing several of the articles from a third person, but deny plaintiff's claim as to the rest, testimony by such third person that he was paid a certain sum by defendant for the articles admittedly bought from him is admissible as part of the res gestæ to show that the property was got in an apparently honest transaction.—Davidson v. Kolb, 95 Mich. 469.

¶ 2391. Where an action for goods sold is defended on the ground that a greater quantity than that agreed upon was fraudulently inserted by plaintiff in defendant's written order, evidence of the conversation between the parties at the time of procuring the order, and of the circumstances surrounding the transaction, is admissible to prove the fraud.—Shrimpton & Sons v. Rosenbaum, 106 Mich. 68.

¶ 2392. On the issue whether a bank took a fraudulently certified check with notice, it may be shown as part of the res gestæ that when the cashier took the check he expressed doubt of its validity.—Detroit Nat. Bank v. Union Trust Co., 145 Mich. 656.

§ 452. To show hearing, attentiveness or consciousness.

To rebut or prove negligence, see post § 465.
Response to command or request, see ante ¶ 2362.

¶ 2393. In an action for injury resulting from a surgeon's unskilfulness in treating a dislocation as a fracture, it was shown that if his diagnosis was correct a grating sound would have been heard on manipulation of the limb. Held, that evidence could be given of remarks made by bystanders at the time of the examination tending to show that they heard such a sound.—Hitchcock v. Burgett, 38 Mich. 501.

¶ 2394. Where, in an action for injuries received at a railroad crossing, a witness has testified that the signals required by the statute were not given, it is proper to reject the question whether, immediately after the accident, the men present talked over the matter of such signals; since testimony cannot be corroborated in that way.—Sanborn v. Detroit, B. C. & A. R. Co., 99 Mich. 1.

§ 453. Exclamations and complaints of pain or sickness.

Utterances incident to medical examination or treatment, see post § 454.
Utterances made to prospective witness or expert, see post § 455.
Narratives and statements as to past sickness or suffering, see post § 456.
Narrative complaints, see post § 456.
Admissible nonexpert testimony as to pain or sickness, see also ante § 236.

¶ 2396. The declarations of a sick person, made from time to time concerning present sufferings and sensations, are admissible to prove the fact of such sufferings and sensations.—Elliott v. Van Buren, 33 Mich. 49.

¶ 2397. The natural and ordinary exclamations of pain by the plaintiff in an action for personal injuries, called out by her suffering, and not by any motive of making testimony, are admissible in evidence.—Burleson v. Village of Reading, 110 Mich. 512.

¶ 2398. The natural and ordinary exclamations of present pain and suffering by plaintiff in an action for personal injuries, though made after the commencement of suit, are admissible in evidence, if the surrounding circumstances are free from suspicion. So held where the expressions were made by a child of tender years, in his own home, and in the presence only of the immediate members of the family.—Strudgeon v. Village of Sand Beach, 107 Mich. 496.

¶ 2400. In an action for personal injuries persons who had heard the plaintiff complain of pain and suffering after the injury may testify as to the fact that she had made complaints but not in her words and not where made for the purpose of making evidence; but it may be left to the jury with appropriate instructions.—O'Dea v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 142 Mich. 265.

¶ 2401. Complaints by one who has been injured as to his then condition made at different times subsequent to the injury are not regarded as hearsay, as they are received upon the theory that they are acts rather than declarations.—Loose v. Township of Deerfield, 187 Mich. 206.

¶ 2402. In an action to recover damages for negligent injury, evidence of exclamations of pain made by the injured person is admissible as part of the res gestæ.—Harris v. Detroit City R. Co., 76 Mich. 227.

¶ 2403. Exclamations of present pain and suffering by the person injured, together with his statements as to the location, nature, and extent thereof, are admissible as original evidence.—Will v. Mendon, 108 Mich. 251.

¶ 2404. Exclamations of present pain and suffering from an injury are admissible, in an action to recover damages for such injury.—Hall v. City of Flint, 195 Mich. 638.

¶ 2405. Proof of the condition of a plaintiff in a personal injury case, by her manifestations and complaints a length of time after the accident, was competent as part of the res gestæ.—Beath v. Rapid Ry. Co., 119 Mich. 512.

¶ 2406. Exclamations of pain and suffering are not to be excluded simply because they were uttered long after the injury and after the person uttering them had decided to bring suit for the injury whence they came.—McCormick v. Detroit, G. H. & M. Ry. Co., 141 Mich. 17.

¶ 2407. In a personal injury suit exclamations of pain made by the plaintiff 30 minutes after the injury, are admissible in evidence.—Pruner v. Detroit United Ry., 173 Mich. 146.

¶ 2408. In a personal injury action, the testimony of plaintiff's neighbor as to the exclamations of pain and observed acts of suffering the day after the accident, is admissible.—Schock v. Cooling, 175 Mich. 313.

¶ 2409. Lay witnesses may testify as to the acts, expressions and manifestations of a person immediately after the occurrence of a railway wreck in which he was injured, when not made in anticipation that such laymen would be called as witnesses in his behalf.—Marshall v. Wabash R. Co., 184 Mich. 593.

§ 454. ——Incident to medical examination or treatment.

Explanations of cause of injury made to physician, see also post § 469.

¶ 2410. A physician who is called to treat a person for an injury, when sworn as a witness in a suit to recover damages for the same, may state how the patient described the pain from which she was suffering, and may describe the patient's actions, as tending to inform the jury of the patient's condition.—Ashton v. Detroit City R. Co., 78 Mich. 587.

¶ 2411. In an action for a personal injury the physician who attended plaintiff may testify to declarations of pain made by her immediately after the injury.—Mulliken v. City of Corunna, 110 Mich. 212.

¶ 2412. A physician may testify in an action for personal injuries as to plaintiff's exclamations of pain on an occasion when he was making an examination with a view to treatment.—Heddle v. City Electric R. Co., 112 Mich. 547.

¶ 2413. In an action to recover for personal injuries plaintiff's exclamations of pain while her physician was examining her after the accident may be testified to by such physician and other witnesses.—Butts v. City of Eaton Rapids, 116 Mich. 539.

¶ 2414. Exclamations accompanying pain, and descriptive of personal suffering, are admissible as evidence in a suit for malpractice.—Mayo v. Wright, 63 Mich. 32.

¶ 2415. In an action against a physician for malpractice what the patient said to the doctor concerning his feelings of pain and his sensations, and what the doctor said to the patient in reply or concerning the treatment, are part of the res gestæ, and properly included in a question to an expert witness.—Mayo v. Wright, 63 Mich. 32.

¶ 2416. On a trial for malpractice in a surgical operation, evidence of the patient's exclamations of pain during and after the operation—some of them in defendant's absence—are admissible as bearing on the alleged malpractice, but not in aggravation of damages.—Hyatt v. Adams, 16 Mich. 180.

¶ 2417. The evidence of a physician as to plaintiff's condition is admissible as against the objection that he was called with the intent of using him as a witness, where the evidence complained of indicates that the physician was called to consult with the attending physician, with regard to the treatment to be pursued in the case.—Judd v. Township of Caledonia, 150 Mich. 480.

¶ 2418. In an action for personal injuries, it is not error to admit testimony of plaintiff's attending physician that plaintiff complained to him that she was unable to sleep. —Marshall v. Saginaw Valley Traction Co., 157 Mich. 541.

§ 455. ——Made to prospective witness.

See also ante ¶ 2417.

¶ 2419. The rule that a physician called for the purpose of obtaining information from which to testify cannot testify as to exclamations of pain by the plaintiff applies only where it appears that the physician was attending him for the purpose of securing evidence.—Leedy v. Hoover, 160 Mich. 449.

¶ 2420. Exclamations of pain are properly excluded from evidence in an action for personal injury, where they were made at a medical examination conducted after the controversy arose, for the purpose of obtaining testimony, and not for treatment.—Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Huntley, 38 Mich. 537.

¶ 2421. A physician employed by a person contemplating suit to make an examination for the purpose of testifying in such suit cannot testify to exclamation of pain made by such person.—Jones v. Village of Portland, 88 Mich. 598.

¶ 2422. Exclamations and statements as to pain and suffering made on an examination by a physician after suit brought for personal injuries, and intended to be given in evidence, cannot be testified to by the physician.—Jones v. Village of Portland, 88 Mich. 598.

¶ 2423. A physician, called to examine plaintiff in an action for personal injuries, for the express purpose of giving testimony, is incompetent to testify to voluntary exclamations made by her, and to the fact that she seemed unable to walk without aid.—McKormick v. City of West Bay City, 110 Mich. 265.

¶ 2425. In an action for personal injuries evidence of a physician not called for the purpose of giving treatment that the plaintiff complained of suffering is inadmissible, such not being the natural expressions of present suffering but voluntary statements made for an ulterior purpose of making testimony.—O'Dea v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 142 Mich. 265.

¶ 2426. Testimony that the plaintiff when examined by a physician seeking to qualify himself as a witness, flinched on pressure being applied to an injured limb or gave exclamations of pain, is not admissible in an action for personal injuries.—Norris v. Detroit United Ry., 185 Mich. 264.

§ 456. Narratives and statements relating to past injury or sickness.

Involuntary exclamations of pain subsequent to injury, see ante § 453.

¶ 2427. Testimony of statements of present suffering made by plaintiff to another person are competent in an action for negligence, statements of past suffering being excluded.—Lacas v. Detroit City R. Co., 92 Mich. 412; Girard v. City of Kalamazoo, 92 Mich. 610.

¶ 2430. A witness cannot testify to what plaintiff—who sues for a negligent injury—said to him about her sleeplessness at night, in response to his inquiries made the next morning; such testimony being hearsay.—Kelley v. Detroit, L. & N. R. Co., 80 Mich. 237.

¶ 2431. Where, in an action for negligent injury, one claims that he was hurt by his horse's struggles to extricate itself from a hole in a bridge into which it had stepped, his wife's testimony that after he had released the horse and had started to drive home he stated to her that the horse had hurt his arm, and that he could not hold the lines in his hand, is inadmissible, such statement being hearsay, and not a part of the res gestæ, or an expression of pain or anguish occurring at the time of the injury. —LaDuke v. Township of Exeter, 97 Mich. 450.

¶ 2432. In an action upon a life insurance policy statements by the insured as to her sickness being due to an abortion performed on her and how it was caused, made to her physicians and to a nurse are not admissible as part of the res gestæ.—Gilchrist v. Mystic Workers of the World, 188 Mich. 466.

§ 457. Of existence, formation and terms of contract.

Res gestæ of oral contracts, see post § 458.

¶ 2433. Where the execution and delivery of a contract were in dispute, one of the parties testified that the other went away while it was being drawn, and that after it was finished he, the witness, said he would sign it and go and get the other party to complete it. The lawyer who drafted it testified that it was drawn under the instructions of both parties while present, but that he thought it was sent to one of them unsigned by the other. He also stated that so far as its terms were concerned it was then finished. Held, that this was admissible as res gestæ, no change having been suggested by one party in the other's absence. —Seligman v. Ten Eyck's Estate, 53 Mich. 285.

¶ 2434. Where the question is whether the delivery of a deed was absolute or conditional, conversations held on the same day the deed and abstract were delivered between grantor and his attorney, and the one who examined the title, to the effect that grantor was about to make a trade and wished to see if the title was perfect, are admissible as part of the res gestæ.—Chick v. Sisson, 95 Mich. 412.

¶ 2435. Where in an action to recover for plastering defendant's house defendant claims the work was done for his contractor, evidence that at the time the agreement between plaintiff and defendant is alleged to have been made, the former told the latter that the contractor already owed him, and that he (plaintiff) would not have anything to do with him, is admissible as part of the res gestæ.—Evans v. Montgomery, 95 Mich. 497.

¶ 2437. Where the question is whether defendant signed the note in suit before its delivery and before the passage of the property for a part of the purchase-price of which the note was given, plaintiff can show what took place when the note was drawn and signed by the principal debtor, and what was then said as to its delivery, and who were expected to sign as sureties; and it is immaterial that defendant was then absent.—Steers v. Holmes, 79 Mich. 430.

¶ 2438. In trover against administrators for merchandise delivered to their decedent, defendants testified without objection that their decedent was to send it to certain dealers for plaintiff's benefit with instructions not to sell it at less than a stated sum; that he received a letter from the dealers finding fault with the quality of the merchandise, reporting current prices, and asking how to deal with it; that he showed the letter to the plaintiff, who again directed that the merchandise should not be sold for less than the sum stated, but never gave any orders to get it back. Held, that as the case depended on the arrangements made on or after the receipt of the goods by decedent, defendant could show the transactions and all his conversations bearing on the subject: he could also show the report of prices current as part of the res gestæ, and could show by decedent's clerk, who received the merchandise from plaintiff, the agreement that it should be sent to the dealers, who were to determine quality and price.—Van Aukin v. O'Connor, 50 Mich. 374.

¶ 2439. What was said at the time of a treaty by the parties to it, indicating for whose benefit the grant was intended to be made, is admissible in evidence as part of the res gestæ.—Stockton v. Williams, 1 D. 546.

¶ 2440. Statements made at the time of executing a mortgage as to its purpose are admissible as part of the res gestæ.—Albion State Bank v. Knickerbocker, 125 Mich. 311.

¶ 2440a. In ejectment for lands, the boundaries of which are left uncertain through the latent ambiguity of a former deed of conveyance, it was held proper to give in evidence, as res gestæ tending to identify the boundaries, a conversation thereon between the parties to that deed in the presence of the conveyancer who was drawing it up and in accordance with which a change was made in the description.—Purkiss v. Benson, 28 Mich. 538.

Self-serving entries to show oral contract, see post ¶ 2552.
Rejected draft as evidence of terms, see also post ¶ 2595.

¶ 2441. In an action on an oral contract it is proper for plaintiff to show whether the other party thereto, in a conversation had at the time it was made, said anything as to his general manner of dealing with other people.—Wilcox v. Ney, 47 Mich. 421

¶ 2442. Where a contract is sued upon as made orally it is proper to allow proof of all of the conversation and negotiations between the parties prior to the conclusion of the alleged contract as bearing on their relations and tending to show the real nature of the agreement.—Owen v. Union Match Co., 48 Mich. 348.

¶ 2443. In an action for breach of a contract which was entered into in view of, and which superseded, an earlier arrangement, all the dealings being oral and continuous, the former arrangement may be shown in evidence.—Brush-Swan Light & Power Co. v. Gardiner, 59 Mich. 424.

¶ 2444. In a suit for wages a conversation between one of the defendants and a third party is admissible if it belongs to the negotiation which led to hiring the defendant, and tended to show that a fixed amount was to be paid him.—Millar v. Cuddy, 43 Mich. 273.

¶ 2445. A defendant sued in trover for the value of a cow may show that he sold the cow by parol bargain to one through whom plaintiff claims title, upon the express condition that title should remain in defendant until payment; that nothing had been paid, and that the condition of sale had neither been performed nor waived. Such conditional sale could only be proved by showing what was said and done between the parties, and the fact that plaintiff was not present could not affect it.—Fifield v. Elmer, 25 Mich. 48.

Res gestæ of scale, measurement of survey, see post § 460.

Evidence of acts done or conversations had by broker as showing efforts to sell, see Brokers, § 38.

¶ 2446. In suing a decedent's estate for work done under contract with the decedent, it is admissible as res gestæ to show that the executor oversaw the work.—McKeown v. Harvey, 40 Mich. 226.

¶ 2447. In an action for breach of warranty, plaintiff may, in order to prove rescission, state his offer to arbitrate, since it is a part of the res gestæ of such rescission.—McNitt v. Henderson, 155 Mich. 214.

¶ 2448. Conversations between the broker and the customer which are a part of the negotiations and are communicated by the broker to the principal are admissible in an action for commissions on the exchange thereby negotiated.—Huff v. Cole's Estate, 127 Mich. 351.

§ 460. Of scale, measurement or survey.

Subsequent declarations of surveyor, see post ¶ 2475.

¶ 2449. When the scale of a deceased scaler of logs is received in evidence in an action for their price, witnesses who were present when the scale was made may testify to the manner of its making and what they did and knew about it, and what the scaler did and said while making it.—Malone v. Gates, 87 Mich. 332.

§ 461. Of recordation of instruments.

¶¶ 2450, 2451. What a grantor said to the register of deeds when leaving conveyances for record was a part of the res gestæ and admissible as explaining the character and intent of his act.—Stevens v. Castel, 63 Mich. 111.

§ 462. Of accounting and settlements.

¶ 2452. In an action involving the settlement of accounts, figuring done by one of the parties when they were trying to settle may be admissible as res gestæ.—Bennett v. Smith, 40 Mich. 211.

§ 463. Of execution of writs, levy and sale.

See also ante ¶ 2371.

¶ 2453. Where possession is demanded of an officer who has levied execution, his statement is properly given in evidence to show on what pretext he acted.—Gutsch v. McIlhargy, 69 Mich. 377.

Res gestæ evincive of care or neglect, see post §§ 465-469.

See also topics treating of the specific torts, e. g., Conversion; False Imprisonment; Malicious Prosecution; Trespass; Nuisances; Negligence, V.

Evidence admissible as to acts and appearances in trespass for assault with intent to ravish, see Assault § 25.

Admissibility of letter of plaintiff in breach of promise to marry as part of res gestæ, see also Breach of Promise to Marry § 4.

¶ 2455. The acts, conduct and utterances of an accused party, if of the res gestæ, are competent evidence in a civil case as bearing on his culpability.—University of Michigan v. Rose, 45 Mich. 284.

¶ 2456. Declarations made by one sued for conversion of sheep to witness while the sheep were yet commingled, which commingling was the act constituting the alleged conversion are admissible as part of the res gestæ.—Dunbar v. McGill, 69 Mich. 297.

¶ 2457. In an action under the Civil Damage Act, against a druggist for unlawfully selling intoxicating liquor to plaintiff's husband, it was proper to allow a physician to testify that he had seen plaintiff's husband intoxicated while attending upon plaintiff in her home, that he had seen him drinking there from a bottle, and that he had offered witness a drink, especially since there was testimony showing that plaintiff's husband had secured whisky from defendant in bottles, and had taken it home; this statement was a part of the res gestæ, and might well be found by the jury to be evidence of the drinking of the very whisky sold by defendant.—Leckard v. Van Alstyne, 155 Mich. 507.

§ 465. To prove or rebut neglect or care or skill.

Acts or statements of others than party, see post §§ 466, 467.

Indifference of manner as res gestæ, see post § 470.

Circumstantial evidences of negligence or care, see Negligence, V; and see also specific topics such as Highways, XII; Master and Servant, III; Railroads, VIII; Street Railways, IV.

¶ 2458. Where during a ride the driver of a horse has conversation with his companion as to the horse's appearance and condition, and the conversation tends to show that the driver is exercising due care, it is admissible for that purpose in an action against the driver for injury alleged to have been caused the horse by his ill-usage and neglect.—Pinney v. Cahill, 48 Mich. 584.

¶ 2459. In an action against a street railway company for an injury to plaintiff alleged to have been caused by a driver's negligently allowing the horses attached to his car to be started suddenly forward while plaintiff was alighting, testimony that the driver, who had been driving rapidly between switches, stated that he was behind time and wanted to go on, and that the conductor said not to do so but to wait until the other car came up, is not part of the res gestæ, and does not tend to prove the negligence alleged.—Gardner v. Detroit St. R. Co., 99 Mich. 182.

¶ 2463. Defendant was using a circular saw in the mill of plaintiff's employer. Plaintiff claimed that while he was oiling the saw under directions of his foreman, defendant struck or jostled him so that he came in contact with the saw. Having testified to this, and the foreman having testified that the plaintiff was under his orders, without which he had nothing to do with the saw, the defendant could show the foreman's instructions to plaintiff, which were material evidence and also part of the res gestæ.—Ribble v. Starrat, 79 Mich. 204.

Acts and declarations of driver of vehicle, see post § 467.

¶ 2465. In an action against a street railway company for injuries sustained by reason of the collision of an open car, in the front part of which plaintiff was riding, with a car ahead of it, evidence as to what was done by the passengers at the rear end of the forward car when they saw the danger of collision is admissible, as part of the res gestæ, on the question of plaintiff's contributory negligence in preparing to jump from the car.—Holman v. Union St. R. Co., 114 Mich. 208.

¶ 2466. In an action against a street railway company for personal injuries, where it is material whether or not plaintiff acted with due diligence at the time of the accident, and where plaintiff has proved that she acted as other passengers did, it is competent to prove by a passenger and eyewitness what other passengers did at the time, as being part of the res gestæ.—Smith v. Detroit United Ry., 155 Mich. 466.

¶ 2467. In a suit against a street railway company for injuries sustained by reason of the car suddenly starting just as plaintiff was on the bottom step, preparing to alight, the testimony of her husband that he himself had just alighted and, upon seeing the car start forward, cried out "Hang on," is admissible as part of the res gestæ.—Smith v. Detroit United Ry., 155 Mich. 466.

Statements of driver as agent or servant of party, see post § 478 et seq.

¶ 2468. In an action for personal injuries sustained by being struck by a street car while riding in a buggy, statements by the driver of the vehicle not made at the time of the accident or in the presence of the plaintiff are inadmissible against the plaintiff.—Edwards v. Foote, 129 Mich. 121.

§ 468. Statements and acts after the time.

Agents' subsequent statements, see post § 484.

¶ 2469. Declarations made by a party subsequent to a transaction, as to his motives or intentions at the time, are not receivable in evidence to affect the rights of others. It is only the intention declared at the time which, as a part of the res gestæ, can bind or affect others.—Dawson v. Hall, 2 Mich. 390; Lewis v. Rice, 61 Mich. 97.

¶ 2470. The exception to the rule that declarations of intent must be contemporaneous is where the statements are made to the party to be affected, under circumstances from which his acquiescence in their truth can fairly be inferred; and then the degree of consideration to which they are entitled depends on the circumstances under which they are made.—Dawson v. Hall, 2 Mich. 390.

¶ 2471. What one sued for assault and battery said after the assault is not admissible to show malice at the time of the assault.—Breitenbach v. Trowbridge, 64 Mich. 393.

¶ 2472. Evidence as to the appearance of the plaintiff, and the witness' impression of what he said shortly after an alleged assault, are admissible in an action for assault and battery.—Matthews v. Lamberton, 184 Mich. 493.

¶ 2473. In an action for a negligent injury caused by a fire the fire marshal cannot testify to what he heard said next day at the scene of the fire as to its cause.—Cook v. Johnston, 58 Mich. 437.

¶ 2474. In an action for damages for personal injuries sustained as a result of a collision between defendant's automobile and a buggy belonging to plaintiff's husband, evidence that defendant stated almost immediately after the collision occurred that he would pay for the repair of the buggy is admissible as part of the res gestæ.—Jolman v. Alberts, 192 Mich. 25.

¶ 2475. Declarations by a deceased surveyor to his employer that he had made a mistake in a former survey are admissible where such mistake was discovered during the course of the second survey, and the declarations were in direct connection therewith, though it is not apparent whether the surveyor made the declarations in the course of such second survey or afterwards.—Wilcox v. Jenison, 198 Mich. 182.

§ 469. ——Statements and acts relative to injury.

Exclamations, statements and narratives of pain and sickness, see ante §§ 453-456.
Overheard explanations, see also ante ¶ 2473.

¶ 2476. The statement of a party as to the cause of an injury subsequently resulting in his death, not made at the time of the accident, nor necessary or pertinent for medical treatment, is inadmissible as evidence.—Lendberg v. Brotherton Iron Mining Co., 75 Mich. 84.

¶ 2477. Where a boy who had driven against a foot passenger on the street immediately stopped the horse and came back and said that he did not mean to, the fact was held to be as much a part of the res gestæ as an exclamation would be if made at the moment of the accident.—Cleveland v. Newson, 45 Mich. 62.

¶ 2479. In an action to recover for the illegal sale of liquor to plaintiff's son, who was injured by reason of his intoxication, statements made by the son immediately after the injury to the effect that he did not procure liquor from defendant, are not admissible as part of the res gestæ, since they do not relate to the injury itself.—Van Alstine v. Kaniecki, 109 Mich. 318.

foreman of defendant factory, who was present at the accident. Held, in a suit for injuries the statement of the foreman blaming himself for the accident, made some fifteen or twenty minutes after the accident, and while he was taking plaintiff in the ambulance to the hospital, was not admissible as part of the res gestæ.—Bernard v. Grand Rapids Paper Box Co., 170 Mich. 238.

¶ 2482. In an action for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by a defective sidewalk, statements by plaintiff immediately after the accident are admissible as part of the res gestæ.—Styles v. Village of Decatur, 131 Mich. 443.

¶ 2483. Declarations of the person injured as to manner of injury made after the time of the accident are not part of the res gestæ, and cannot be testified to by an attendant physician any more than by a nonprofessional man.—Merkle v. Township of Bennington, 58 Mich. 160; Lendberg v. Brotherton Iron Mining Co., 75 Mich. 84; Dundas v. City of Lansing, 75 Mich. 499; Jones v. Village of Portland, 88 Mich. 598.

¶ 2484. An injured person's statement to his physician as to the cause and circumstances of his injury is not admissible as res gestæ if not made until time enough has passed for him to be removed and to get the doctor. So held in an action against a township for fatal injury caused by a defective bridge.—Merkle v. Township of Bennington, 58 Mich. 156.

Declarations made immediately on regaining consciousness as part of res gestæ in personal injury cases, see note, 12 N. C. C. A. 35-47.

§ 470. Manner or demeanor as res gestæ.

¶ 2485. A person on being injured by the collision of his buggy with a cart asked the driver of the cart what he meant, and the driver answered in an indifferent and impudent manner that he couldn't help it. Held, that the manner and matter of his reply were part of the res gestæ.—Joslin v. Grand Rapids Ice & Coal Co., 53 Mich. 322.

§ 471. Entries, memoranda or writings as res gestæ.

Pleadings and affidavits in other actions as res gestæ, see also post ¶ 2780.

Notary's certificate of demand, nonpayment and protest, see also ante ¶ 1874.

Res gestæ rule as basis for admission of books of account, see post § 522.

Train and car records and other records of complex nature as admissible documentary evidence, see post §§ 506, 507.

¶ 2486. Any written agreement that constitutes part of the bargain by which title to a vessel has been acquired may properly be put in evidence where the purchase is to be shown.—Mitchell v. Chambers, 43 Mich. 150.

¶ 2487. A party who had sold and delivered wheat to another at the latter's warehouse testified that account was kept of the wheat as delivered, by means of slips of paper tacked on the spout of the hopper and by entries which he made on a page of his memorandum book; that after delivery of the last load the purchaser's warehouse clerk called off the amounts from the slips of paper, and he took them down on the opposite page of his memorandum, and that he and the clerk then compared the two series of entries and found that they agreed, and the clerk receipted for the amount. Held, that such a memorandum could be used in evidence as a contemporaneous record, to the correctness of which both parties assented when made.—Fish v. Adams, 37 Mich. 598.

¶ 2489. The assignees of a contract to sell and deliver logs brought suit upon it against the estate of the other party, who had died. They put in evidence a memorandum indicating, as they claimed, that evidence of the fulfillment of the contract existed on decedent's books. It had no tendency in itself to prove this, but they were also allowed to show, in connection with it, a computation by decedent's bookkeeper and certain alleged conversations with him, on which they had relied as inducements in purchasing the claim. Held, that this was not properly admissible as res gestæ to show the good faith of the assignment, nor as bearing on the merits.—Seligman v. Ten Eyck's Estate, 49 Mich. 104.

¶ 2491. In an action for goods sold and delivered where the plaintiff sued to recover for cement blocks furnished in the construction of a dwelling where the plaintiff claimed that the blocks were to be furnished under an agreement to pay the actual cost of the work and material and the defendant claimed they were to be furnished at an agreed price, a memorandum appearing upon the book of the defendant as to the price claimed to have been made at the time the contract was made by the buyer in the immediate presence of the seller, while not conclusive, is admissible in evidence as part of the res gestæ.—Rogers v. Krumrei, 143 Mich. 15.

¶ 2492. In an action to recover a commission agreed to be paid by the purchaser of logs, papers relating to the situation, amount, character, and quality of the logs, which papers one of the plaintiffs gave to defendant during the negotiations, are admissible as part of the res gestæ.—McKinnon v. Gates, 102 Mich. 618.

¶ 2493. In a suit for trespass to the person based upon the forcible removal of plaintiff from premises which she was occupying with her husband as a homestead, a writ of assistance directed against the husband, under which defendant assumed to act, is admissible in evidence, not as a justification, but as a part of the res gestæ, and as bearing upon the question of damages.—Haviland v. Chase, 116 Mich. 214.

¶ 2494. Where certain apples refused by the buyer were resold by the seller, a written statement used by the seller and the person conducting the resale at the close of such dealing, is admissible in an action to recover the damages for breach of the original contract, in connection with the testimony of the parties, as a part of the res gestæ.—Plowaty v. Sheldon, 167 Mich. 218.

¶ 2495. A report of an engineer to his superior of the circumstances of an accident or injury to a child struck while on the track, including a statement of the reason why the train was not stopped in time, is res gestæ; where the train was backed up and the injured child taken aboard and the run then completed to the point of reporting, during all of which time the engineer was in performance of a duty relating to the child and in control of the train for that purpose, and where the making of such a report is regularly a part of his duties under like circumstances, although a time of 50 minutes intervened between the striking and the completion of the report.—Keyser v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co., 66 Mich. 390. (Campbell, C. J., dissenting, and Champlin, J., concurring in the result.)

Answering letter as res gestæ, see also ante ¶ 2073.

Admissibility of correspondence with third persons in proving commissions earned on broker's contract, see also Brokers ¶ 179.

¶ 2496. A defendant cannot put in evidence a letter written by him to the agent of defendant after the beginning of the suit, unless the reply contained material admissions; and in that case it could only be introduced to explain the bearing of the letter called out by it.—Canadian Bank of Commerce v. Coumbe, 47 Mich. 358.

¶ 2497. The correspondence of a borrower and an insurance company regarding a loan was properly introduced in evidence in an action brought by such borrower against a loan agent to recover money claimed to have been paid such agent under duress as an alleged commission on such loan, where it appeared that such borrower had applied to such loan agent for a loan, at which time, he claimed, he did not know that such agent was loaning money for the company or that such company was in existence; that subsequently the borrower negotiated the loan himself, dealing with the company personally and by letter; that the money was sent by the company to such agent, who insisted on keeping a part of it for his services, and compelled the borrower to give a receipt showing a settlement in full; since such correspondence tended to show that the borrower had his dealings for the money entirely with the company, and that such loan agent was acting for the company in handling the money.—McAllister v. Eagle, 52 Mich. 56.

¶ 2500. Letters which passed between the broker and a third person not the eventual buyer or bargainer are not res gestæ of his services under his employment.—West v. Demme, 128 Mich. 11.

¶ 2501. Plaintiff's evidence offered in an action to recover money paid to defendant on a condition showed that he sent the money to a third person to be paid to defendant, and the third person testified that he received the money inclosed in a letter, and that the letter had been lost and the money paid over. Held, that the letter was admissible.—Nowlen v. Lyon, 73 Mich. 434.

tion of T.'s release, an order on N. for the amount of T.'s debt given by defendant to plaintiffs when the alleged promise was made is admissible as a part of the res gestæ.—Bond v. McMahon, 94 Mich. 557.

¶ 2503. Receipts or the stubs thereof may be admissible in connection with proof of the delivery of wheat as part of the res gestæ.—Freese v. Arnold, 99 Mich. 13.

§ 474. ——Writings involved in alleged fraud.

¶ 2504. A mortgage in connection with a fraud is part of the res gestæ, and proof concerning it, and to show its purpose, is admissible in an action for damages arising from the fraud itself.—Daniels v. Dayton, 49 Mich. 137.

¶ 2505. On the issue whether a replevin plaintiff's mortgage was fraudulent as to creditors, another mortgage executed at the same time and as a part of the general scheme of the debtor by which other mortgage security was given to a creditor who was a relative of the mortgagor, and who was seeking to secure plaintiff as well as himself, is admissible as bearing upon the fraudulent intent.—Krolik v. Graham, 64 Mich. 226.

¶ 2506. The notes given upon a purchase of goods and the chattel mortgage on such goods to secure the notes are properly put in evidence in an action of replevin brought by the vendor for the property.—Cass v. Gunnison, 58 Mich. 108.

§ 475. Acts of coconspirators and persons in concert.

Admissions by coconspirators, see ante § 419.
Declarations by third persons in favor of party, see post § 489.

¶ 2507. Where, in an action for fraud and deceit, the evidence showed that defendants engaged in the common enterprise of inducing plaintiff to purchase a tax title for their mutual benefit, the acts of each are admissible against the other as part of the res gestæ.—Sudworth v. Morton, 137 Mich. 575.

¶ 2508. What was said by one who bought merchandise at the time he got it is part of the res gestæ, and is admissible where there is evidence tending to show that the purchase was part of a conspiracy to defraud the seller in which the adverse party was implicated.—Jansen v. McQueen, 112 Mich. 254.

Admissions against each other, see ante §§ 424, 425.

§ 477. Acts and statements of copartners.

Admissions against each other, see ante §§ 420-422.

¶ 2510. In an action against a firm on notes executed by one partner in the firm name, but used in his private business, his statements to his banker explaining why he kept the account at the bank in his own name though it was in fact the firm's account is admissible as showing what the transaction was.—Towle v. Dunham, 84 Mich. 268.

¶ 2511. The statements of a partner at the time he purchased a team that he was buying it for the firm and that plaintiff sold it to the firm, in an action against the copartnership for the price of such team, is admissible as part of the res gestæ, and to show the nature of the contract actually agreed upon; although it was not competent to prove such partner's authority to bind the firm as its agent, or to show that such purchase was within the scope of his authority.—Beckwith v. Mace, 140 Mich. 157.

§ 478. Acts and declarations by agents.

Pertinency and relation of the declaration to the authority or duty of the declarant, see post § 482.
By corporate officers and agents, see post § 479.
By railroad clerks, agents and trainmen, see post § 483.
Inadmissibility of agent's declarations to establish agency, see ante § 439.
Res gestæ to show authority, see post § 480.
Res gestæ declaration as to fact of agency, see ante ¶ 2340.
Res gestæ of agent's possession, reception or refusal of property, see post § 481.
Agent's statements after the fact, see post § 484.
Declaration by person referred to as res gestæ, see ante ¶ 2308.
Declarations in interest of principal, see post § 490.
Admissions by agents affecting principals, see ante §§ 427-435.
Res gestæ doctrine as basis for admission of agent's admissions, see also ante ¶ 2256.
Direct testimony of agent and of principal in rebuttal, see ante ¶ 447.

¶ 2512. The declaration of an agent, made at the time of doing an act within the scope of his authority, and relating to the subject-matter of the act, is evidence, as a part of the res gestæ; but statements subsequently made by him stand on the same footing with the declarations of other persons.—

Benedict v. Denton, W. 336; Horner v. Fellows, 1 D. 51; Converse v. Blumrich, 14 Mich. 109.

¶ 2513. Declarations of an agent or servant do not, in general, bind the principal. To be admissible they must be in the nature of original and not hearsay evidence. They must be made not only during the continuance of the agency, but in regard to a transaction depending at the very time.—Roux v. Blodgett & Davis Lumber Co., 94 Mich. 607.

¶ 2514. Where an agent's acts will bind his principal, his representations, declarations and admissions respecting the subject-matter will also bind him if made at the same time and constituting a part of the res gestæ.—Ayres v. Hubbard, 71 Mich. 594; Andrews v. Tamarack Min. Co., 114 Mich. 375.

¶ 2515. The declarations of an agent, and declarations made in the presence of an agent, at the time of doing an act within the scope of his authority and relating to the subject-matter of the act, are evidence, as part of the res gestæ.—Zart v. Singer Sew. Mach. Co., 162 Mich. 387.

¶ 2516. An agent's declarations can be shown in connection with evidence of acts done by him in carrying on negotiations that are within his power.—Bacon v. Johnson, 56 Mich. 182.

¶ 2517. An agent's talk with strangers concerning past transactions of his employer is not res gestæ either in point of time or in relation to parties, and, being of no account as proof, cannot affect his principal's right under a contract on which the transactions were based.—Benner v. Feige, 51 Mich. 568.

¶ 2518. In an action for an injury from the negligent driving of defendant's servant, the driver's admissions of his negligence in conversations with third persons are not admissible as res gestæ unless contemporaneous with the main fact.—Mabley v. Kittleberger, 37 Mich. 360.

§ 479. ——By corporate agents or officers.

Admissions binding corporation, see ante § 432.

¶ 2519. In an action for the price of a machine sold to a corporation, statements made by a director who had given some directions regarding the work and who might have had authority to make a settlement with plaintiff, to the effect that the machine had been tried and successfully run, were not part of the res gestæ; as such statements were not made in connection with any act relating to the business of the corporation, within the scope of such director's authority.—Allington & Curtis Mfg. Co. v. Detroit Reduction Co., 133 Mich. 427.

Agent's declarations out of court that he is agent, see ante § 439.

Admissibility of deceased agent's memoranda of transactions as showing relationship and extent of it, see Agency ¶ 42.

¶ 2520. Declarations of an alleged agent are inadmissible to prove agency, but where there is testimony to show ratification or original authority, or a holding out as having authority, such declarations accompanying the act are admissible to show in what capacity he acted.—Hirschmann v. Iron Range & H. B. R. Co., 97 Mich. 384; see Michigan Slate Co. v. Iron Range & H. B. R. Co., 101 Mich. 14.

¶ 2521. Declarations by a person claiming to be an agent, and constituting a part of his transactions as such, may be shown as res gestæ on the question of his authority.—Haughton v. Maurer, 55 Mich. 323.

§ 481. ——Declarations incident to possession, reception or refusal of property.

¶ 2522. Any creditor has a right to know whether a person in possession of property has any claim hostile to his right to levy on it, and the declarations of employees in charge in their employer's absence, made in reply to inquiries by his creditors, are admissible, as in the nature of res gestæ, to explain a possession of chattels claimed to be held under an unrecorded bill of sale to one whose rights are kept secret.—Haynes v. Leppig, 40 Mich. 602.

¶ 2523. An agent's possession of chattels cannot empower him to admit away his principal's title, notwithstanding the rule that his declarations within the scope of his agency and in connection with some transaction as agent, are receivable as res gestæ.—Michigan Paneling Machine & Manufacturing Co. v. Parsell, 38 Mich. 475.

¶ 2525. Declarations by the agents of a manufacturing company concerning the quality and condition of an engine may be received as res gestæ, if made during negotiations for the sale, and during experiments to amend defects.—Kimball & Austin Mfg. Co. v. Vroman, 35 Mich. 310.

¶ 2526. Conversation between lessor and lessee's agent in which he disclaimed authority to turn over the property, leaving it for another to arrange, is competent, as part of the res gestæ, to show that lease had not been surrendered at the time it took place.—Stevens v. Pantlind, 95 Mich. 145.

§ 482. ——Relation of act or statement to duty or authority.

See also ante ¶ 2513.

Admissions beyond scope of agency, see also ante § 429-431.

As to railroad clerks and trainmen, see post § 483.

Necessity that declaration accompany and pertain to authorized act, see also ante §§ 478, 479.

¶ 2528. An answer of a bank's bookkeeper to an inquiry at the bank by one who had intrusted a draft to it for collection is admissible to show payment of the draft to an agent of the bank, being an admission made in the course of his duties and his agency, and constituting part of the res gestæ.—Simpson v. Waldby, 63 Mich. 439.

¶ 2529. It is relevant to an alleged promise of defendant plank road company to repay tolls paid, if a judgment of ouster of its franchise should be affirmed, the promise being evidenced by a receipt so stating, to show what the toll gatekeeper said at the time of collecting the tolls. VerDuyn v. Detroit & Saline Plank-Road Co., 141 Mich. 450.

¶ 2530. In an action on an insurance policy, defended on the ground that the insured was in poor health at the time of making the contract, the statements of the company's examining physician made at the time of the application are admissible, not as conclusive evidence but as bearing on the insured's condition at that time.—Rhode v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 129 Mich. 112.

¶ 2531. In an action for an injury caused by a chip flying from a hammer which plaintiff was using, testimony of what a fellow-servant, to whom the hammer belonged, said immediately after the injury about the hammer or about the work, is not admissible as part of the res gestæ.—Dompier v. Lewis, 131 Mich. 144.

§ 483. ——Railroad clerks and agents and trainmen.

¶ 2533. A brakeman's admission that he caused a railway accident is inadmissible as res gestæ in an action arising therefrom against the company by which he is employed, if his statement was not made in the execution of his duty or while the act to which it referred was in progress; nor can it bind the company as the admission of an agent, if it does not appear that the act done was in the line of his duty.—Patterson v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co., 54 Mich. 91.

¶ 2534. In an action against an electric railway company, for killing stock, a statement of the motorman that it resulted from running without a headlight, if made as he alighted from the car at the time of the accident is admissible as part of the res gestæ. —Ensley v. Detroit United Ry., 134 Mich. 195.

¶ 2535. Upon the issue whether or not the flooring of a street car was so defective as to render the company liable for an accident caused by it, it is competent for plaintiff to show what the conductor did with the section of flooring at the time of the accident, it being a part of the res gestæ.—Plefka v. Detroit United Ry., 155 Mich. 53.

¶ 2536. Plaintiff, a passenger on defendant's street car, sued for personal injuries due to a fall received when the conductor started up the car. The conductor testified to a conversation had with plaintiff in which he said "I supposed you were off" when he gave the bell to start. Held, the evidence was admissible as part of the res gestæ.—Reese v. Detroit United Ry., 159 Mich. 600.

§ 484. ——Subsequent statements; time and connection.

See also ante ¶¶ 2275, 2512.

Admissions by agents after termination of agency or authority, see ante § 430.

Explanations of accidents and injuries as admissions, see also ante § 431.

Utterances evoked by questions or fear, see ante § 445.

¶ 2537. Where an accident in a mine indicated danger and was followed three days later by another which did fatal injury, the acts and statements of the mine officers meanwhile in relation thereto were continuous parts of the res gestæ.—James v. Emmet Min. Co., 55 Mich. 335.

dence of a conversation held with a brakeman soon after the accident, in which the brakeman said that the train should have stopped longer. This is matter for the jury, and the rule concerning res gestæ does not apply.—Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Coleman, 28 Mich. 440.

¶ 2540. In an action to recover the value of a horse which had been hired to go on a journey and died before his return, evidence of the driver's statement to a third person that he supposed the horse had been driven too hard the day before its death, but that he had driven according to instructions, is mere hearsay and inadmissible; this was a narrative of a past transaction and not made while in the performance of any duty calling for it, and therefore was not part of the res gestæ.—Ruggles v. Fay, 31 Mich. 141.

¶ 2541. In an action to recover damages for personal injuries sustained in a collision between an interurban car and a moving van, conversations as to the cause of the accident with the driver of the van more than a half hour after the accident, held not admissible as part of the res gestæ.—Hyatt v. Leonard Storage Co., 196 Mich. 337.

E. SELF-SERVING DECLARATIONS.

By persons since deceased, see post § 488.

By third persons and agents of party, see post §§ 489, 490.

Utterances and complaints of pain and sickness in presence of prospective witness, see ante § 455.

Party's own declarations as res gestæ showing assent or dissent at time, see ante ¶ 2377.

Book of account for self-serving purpose, see also post § 522.

Admissibility of self-serving declarations for other purposes, see ante § 93, ¶ 500.

Statement of plaintiff as to existence of contract to marry, see Breach of Promise to Marry § 4.

Rule as to self-serving declarations in trials for crime, see Indictment, VIII, B.

¶ 2542. A party's declaration in his own interest and not in the other party's presence is inadmissible.—Tolbert v. Burke, 89 Mich. 132.

¶ 2543. A self-serving statement is not admissible on behalf of the party making it and the corroboration of the party in a material part of the case by his own statement is not admissible, since any declaration made by a party in his own favor to a third party, in the absence of the other party to the suit, is in general mere hearsay.—Drake Coal Co. v. Croze, 165 Mich. 120.

¶ 2544. Exculpatory remarks made by a defendant to third persons, but not in the nature of res gestæ, are properly excluded.—Kehrig v. Peters, 41 Mich. 475.

¶ 2546. In an action to recover for the purchase price of goods where the defense was that the order had been canceled by mail during the time limited, held that evidence as to what defendant said when he wrote a letter to the seller about the goods within such time limited, and whether or not he said it was a letter canceling his order, was properly excluded as being self-serving statements.—Farmers' Handy Wagon Co. v. Newcomb, 192 Mich. 634.

¶ 2546a. What a party sued for a false imprisonment said to his attorney when about to cause the arrest is not admissible in his favor.—Josselyn v. McAllister, 22 Mich. 300.

§ 486. Claims and declarations of title.

¶ 2547. Evidence that one in possession of lands when notice to quit was served upon him set up claim to the lands as owner is not competent on his behalf to disprove a tenancy.—Hogsett v. Ellis, 17 Mich. 351.

¶ 2548. The declarations of a third party from whom defendant bought the property in suit, made in plaintiff's absence, to the effect that he owned the property, are inadmissible in defendant's favor although such third party has since died.—Carr v. McCarthy, 70 Mich. 258.

¶ 2550. In garnishment where plaintiffs claimed that the stock in question was purchased from their debtor, and the garnishees claimed that they purchased from another creditor of such debtor, it was reversible error to admit testimony of a statement made by the principal debtor that his firm had sold out to defendant garnishees, such being a self-serving statement.—Seitz v. Starks, 136 Mich. 90.

¶ 2551. In an action against an attaching officer the appraisal under his writ is not evidence in the officer's favor.—Dyer v. Rosenthal, 45 Mich. 588.

¶ 2552. It is error to admit in evidence an entry made in a book by one of the parties, of his version of the parol contract in question.—Collins v. Shaw, 124 Mich. 474.

¶ 2553. In trover for the conversion of property of the plaintiff which the latter claimed was leased by her and that it was wrongfully taken while in the possession of her tenant, an objection to the admission of the lease on the ground of permitting the plaintiff to make testimony in her own interest will not lie, as the lease is competent as one link in the plaintiff's chain of testimony.—Grenier v. Hild, 124 Mich. 222.

¶ 2554. Entries made by a part owner in the discount register of a private bank are not admissible in order to show a purchase of the note sued on by the bank, since such entries were of a self-serving character.—Conroy v. Haffner, 182 Mich. 289.

¶ 2555. Where the question was whether the consideration for certain notes was the services of the payee's stallion with the privilege of returning the mares for service the next year if they did not foal, or was the begetting of a colt for each note, a circular offered in evidence by plaintiff advertising the stallion, and stating that he would make the season of the year in which the notes were given at a certain price the season, and that mares which did not foal might be returned free for service the next year, was properly excluded, copies of it not having been shown to have been published, posted, distributed, or brought to defendant's attention.—Van Tuyle v. Pratt, 101 Mich. 38.

¶ 2555a. In an action for personal injuries sustained in a collision between two automobiles, repair tickets and letters tending to show that the parts which would have been damaged in the collision had not been repaired, held incompetent and immaterial and in the nature of self-serving statements made after the fact.—Granger v. Farrant, 179 Mich. 19.

¶ 2556. The declarations of a person since deceased cannot be made evidence on behalf of his representatives or of his estate any more than on his own behalf while living.—Wilson v. Wilson, 6 Mich. 9; Jones v. Tyler, 6 Mich. 364; Ward v. Ward, 37 Mich. 253; Van Fleet v. Van Fleet, 50 Mich. 1.

¶ 2557. Self-serving declarations made by a person in his lifetime, are not admissible in behalf of his estate.—Walsh v. Backus, 183 Mich. 527.

¶ 2558. Self-serving declarations of a decedent tending to disprove a claim against his estate, not made in the presence of the claimant, are not admissible in favor of the estate.—Bolthouse v. DeSpelder, 181 Mich. 153.

¶ 2560. In an action for services rendered by a son to his mother since deceased, evidence of ex parte statements of the mother as to trouble between herself and son, is inadmissible.—Bettinghouse v. Bettinghouse, 156 Mich. 169.

¶ 2561. Statements made by a deceased mortgagor as to payments claimed to have been made by him upon the mortgage, are self-serving, and not admissible to prove such payments, though all the parties who knew the facts are dead.—Rose v. Lockerby, 116 Mich. 277.

§ 489. By others in party's interest.

¶ 2562. An endeavor on the part of defendant, sued for assault and battery, to have an interview afterwards with the injured person in regard to the affair and a voluntary payment by him of the attending physician are irrelevant to disprove malice.—Johnson v. McKee, 27 Mich. 471.

¶ 2563. On the question whether a sale by a failing merchant was fictitious and fraudulent or was in good faith and as against the purchaser suing an attaching sheriff for conversion, testimony in defendant's behalf that after the attachment had been levied and the suit in trover begun, the seller selected his exemptions and that they were set aside to him by defendant, is inadmissible, when it was all done at the sheriff's direction.—Bendetson v. Moody, 100 Mich. 553.

By third persons by procurement, see ante § 489.

¶ 2564. In an action to recover for plastering a house, which work, defendant claims, was done for his contractor, evidence of what was said in a talk between defendant and his architect is inadmissible in defendant's behalf.—Evans v. Montgomery, 95 Mich. 497.

¶ 2566. Plaintiff sued defendant for the price of coal delivered under an oral contract of sale. Defendant sought to escape liability on the ground that plaintiff had agreed to deliver four or five thousand tons of coal, whereas in fact he had refused to deliver more than 1,427 tons. Plaintiff was permitted to introduce a letter written by its agent to plaintiff after said agent had made the agreement in question with defendant and returned to his hotel, the purpose of introducing the letter being to show that the agent had written plaintiff that the order was for seven hundred tons. Held, the admission of the letter in evidence constituted reversible error.—Drake Coal Co. v. Croze, 165 Mich. 120.

¶ 2567. In an action by a fraternal benefit society to recover the amount of a draft drawn by its finance keeper who was also the assistant cashier of defendant bank, the proceeds of which were received by the bank, it being alleged that it was used to pay his individual indebtedness to the bank, statements of the finance keeper that the draft was for the payment of warrants and other proper charges against plaintiff, made at the time of the transaction to defendant's officers, while admissible as part of the res gestæ, are not binding upon plaintiff since such statements may have been actuated by self-interest.—Supreme Tent K. O. T. M. v. Port Huron Sav. Bank, 137 Mich. 627.

VIII. DOCUMENTARY EVIDENCE.

[Note. In this division the competency of documents and writings as a means of evidence is treated, leaving to other specific topics and to other divisions in this topic the relevancy of the facts appearing by the document to prove the facts in issue. For example, the relevancy of properly executed deeds to prove title in ejectment is treated in Ejectment, IV, while the sufficiency of the deed or the proof of its authenticity or of the record of it or of a certified transcript of the record to be received in evidence is treated here. See cross-references for further outworkings of this classification.]

Private records and writings admissible in trials for crime, see Indictment, VIII, B.

¶ 2568. An irrelevant instrument between third parties is properly excluded.—Wright v. Irwin, 33 Mich. 32.

¶ 2569. Private books and records are not evidence of the nonoccurrence of a fact, because they do not contain any mention of it. —Winnett v. Detroit United Ry., 171 Mich. 629.

¶ 2570. It is no objection to admission of a proper document that the party offering it has been guilty of laches in asserting the right which it is to prove.—Murphy v. Cady, 145 Mich. 33.

¶ 2572. In replevin against a city treasurer for property levied upon to satisfy a tax assessed against plaintiff's husband, it was proper for plaintiff, after proving its execution, to introduce the bill of sale by which her husband previously had transferred the property to her to show title in her.—Hall v. Moriarty, 57 Mich. 345.

Relation of deed to chain of title, see post § 493.
Invalid and unstamped instruments, see post § 494.
Altered and interlined instruments, see post § 495.
Unrecorded deeds and plats and those illegally recorded, see post § 496.
Drafts not executed, see post § 497.
Official deeds and transfers, see post § 539.
Deed record as evidence, see post § 542.
Deeds as evidence as to true location of boundary, see Boundaries, § 26.
Recital of consideration in deed as evidence between the parties, see also Contracts ¶ 625.

¶ 2573. It is no objection to the admission of a deed in evidence that the description of the premises is not in the same words as laid in the declaration. The identity of the premises may be shown by other evidence.—Hovey v. Smith, 22 Mich. 170.

¶ 2574. Ejectment was brought for land in town 2 south, range 10 west, in Kalamazoo county, being in the township of Comstock, and the plaintiff in support of his title introduced a deed purporting to convey the same description of land in the township of that name, but describing it as in range 9. Held, that the discrepancy was not sufficient ground for excluding the deed, but that extrinsic evidence was admissible to identify the land conveyed with the premises in suit. —Crooks v. Whitford, 47 Mich. 283.

¶ 2576. The mere recital of a valuable consideration in a deed is not evidence of payment thereof as against a party holding under a prior but unrecorded deed.—Shotwell v. Harrison, 22 Mich. 410.

¶ 2576a. The absence of a seal from a deed, though not affecting its validity may be a circumstance tending to show the instrument never was such a one as it is claimed to be, but was in fact a simple written contract.—Spicer v. Bonker, 45 Mich. 630.

§ 493. ——Connection with or relation to party's claim or title.

¶ 2577. A deed is no evidence of title in the grantor, where he is not otherwise connected with the title, or shown to have ever had possession.—Smith v. Lawrence, 12 Mich. 431; Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank of Michigan v. Bronson, 14 Mich. 361.

¶ 2578. Where the title to land is involved, a deed that has been executed to a party after he has closed his case is inadmissible to remedy a defect therein.—Houghton Village Common Council v. Huron Copper Min. Co., 57 Mich. 547.

¶ 2579. A quitclaim deed is no evidence of title if at the time of its execution the grantee was in possession and the grantor not.—Anderson v. Thunder Bay River Boom Co., 57 Mich. 216.

¶ 2580. Recitals in a deed describing the grantors as heirs of the deceased owner of the land conveyed are insufficient proof of such heirship, and the grantee, in order to entitle the deed to be received in evidence in an action of ejectment brought by him for said land, must prove the identity of the grantors as heirs of said deceased owner. —Wolf v. Holton, 104 Mich. 107.

¶ 2581. In an action to recover damages for breach of a contract to cut and manufacture certain timber, in which the breach is alleged to consist in a failure of title, deeds and bills of sale are inadmissible in evidence as establishing title where they are not shown to have been to defendant, and are not connected with his title.—Mott v. Penoyar, 153 Mich. 273.

¶ 2582. The registry of a quitclaim deed purporting to be from the heirs of a former owner is inadmissible to show title on proof only that they were his children, without showing that they were born in wedlock or that their mother became his wife.—Van Auken v. Monroe, 38 Mich. 725.

¶ 2583. A deed purporting to be made by an executor at the request of certain other persons who signed it with him is not properly admissible as evidence of title without proof that the grantor had authority to act as executor and that he or the estate had an interest in the premises conveyed.—Chapman v. Crooks, 41 Mich. 595.

¶ 2584. In trover for the conversion of timber, the question of title to the lands on which the timber was cut being involved, a swamp-land patent issued by the governor, under the great seal of the state, and covering the premises in dispute, is admissible to prove title in the patentee, without proof of the title of the state or the authority of the governor to issue the patent.—Grant v. Smith, 26 Mich. 201.

¶ 2585. A deed from a sole heir to supply a defect in the ancestor's deed is admissible in evidence of the title transferred without showing that the earlier deed could not be found; and a recital in the second deed that its purpose is to supply the defect in the first does not hurt it.—Boyce v. Stambaugh, 34 Mich. 348.

¶ 2586. In an action of trover to recover the value of timber, a deed to Harriet N. Andrews was received in evidence, after which the conveyance of the title to the land by her was attempted to be shown by the introduction of a deed from Cyrus Andrews and Harriet Andrews, his wife, who was described in the body of the deed as "Harriet N. Andrews," and in both of which deeds her place of residence was the same; which facts are held sufficient proof of identity to warrant the court in receiving the latter deed as a link in the chain of title.—Clow v. Plummer, 85 Mich. 550.

§ 494. Invalid or unstamped deeds, contracts or instruments.

Invalid or inoperative instrument as admission of facts, see ante § 384.

Secondary proof of invalidly recorded deeds, see ante § 140.

Stamps as circumstance showing value passed, see ante ¶ 398a.

Invalidity of federal law requiring stamps on documents to be admitted in evidence, see Constitutional Law § 125.

¶ 2586a. In state courts the want of a stamp does not affect the force of a document as evidence.—Sammons v. Halloway, 21 Mich. 162.

¶ 2586b. The provisions of the acts of congress which precluded unstamped instruments being received in evidence had no application to state courts.—Clemens v. Conrad, 19 Mich. 170.

¶ 2587. A contract void on its face as against public policy, will not be rejected as evidence, on the grounds of incompetency. —Benson v. Bawden, 149 Mich. 584.

¶ 2588. Leases made by plaintiff, a tenant, for a portion of the premises and tending to show the rental value of the subleased portion were admitted over an objection that the subleases were void because no sufficient consent to subletting was shown, where there was some evidence that the condition against subletting was waived by plaintiff's lessor.—Vincent v. Defield, 105 Mich. 315.

¶ 2589. In an action of ejectment in which the defendant, although conceding record title in plaintiff, claimed under a life lease from a prior grantor after he had acquired title by adverse possession to the property which he had conveyed by deed prior thereto, held that a deed from the grantee of such prior grantor to another person, although it had been declared invalid by the courts, was admissible in evidence to show the mental attitude of such prior grantor inconsistent with a claim of adverse possession.—Tyler v. Wright, 188 Mich. 561.

Mutilated and incomplete books of account, see post § 522.

Presumption against suppresser or despoiler of documents, see ante § 64.

Propriety of submitting genuinely signed note to jury when alteration is in question, see Negotiable Instruments, XIV; Trial, V.

Effect of alteration to invalidate the instrument, see Alteration of Instruments.

¶ 2590. Unless an alteration or interlineation in an instrument is suspicious in appearance the presumption is that it was made before the paper was executed; if so, it will not prevent the admission of the paper in evidence.—Munroe v. Eastman, 31 Mich. 283; Sirrine v. Briggs, 31 Mich. 443; Brand v. Johnrowe, 60 Mich. 210.

¶ 2591. The note may be read in evidence when the genuineness of the signature is admitted, although defendant claims it has been altered.—Hunter v. Parsons, 22 Mich. 96; Willett v. Shepard, 34 Mich. 106.

¶ 2592. A deed cannot be excluded as evidence on the ground that part of it seems to have been written over an erasure; but the burden of proving its genuineness is upon him who claims under the suspected clause.—Comstock v. Smith, 26 Mich. 306.

§ 496. Unrecorded or illegally recorded plats and deeds.

Competency of record of deed or plat improperly placed on the record, see post § 530.

Necessity and sufficiency of proof of execution as foundation, see post § 515 et seq.

¶ 2593. A plat actually, though not legally, recorded may be used to identify the land described in the deeds referring to it.—Johnstone v. Scott, 11 Mich. 232.

¶ 2594. A plat referred to in deeds under which both parties to an ejectment suit claim title, is admissible in evidence although its execution is so defective that it is not entitled to record, especially where it appears that lots have been conveyed with reference to it, and that streets marked out on it have been used as public highways for more than twenty years.—Pere Marquette R. Co. v. Graham, 150 Mich. 219.

§ 497. Preparatory drafts and unexecuted writings.

As admissions against interest, see ante § 397.

Admissibility of written draft or contract as evidence of terms of oral agreement, see Contracts § 315.

¶ 2595. Where one of the parties to an oral agreement puts it in writing, and the other party refuses to sign it and denies its accuracy, the former cannot use it as evidence of the actual agreement in an action thereon.—Holland v. Rea, 48 Mich. 218.

§ 498. Papers connected by reference or otherwise.

¶ 2597. Where a marine protest is made part of the proofs of loss by being referred to therein, it is admissible in evidence with such proofs as an explanatory writing.—Richelieu & O. Nav. Co. v. Boston Marine Ins. Co., 136 U. S. 408, 34 L. ed. 398, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 934.

§ 499. Papers bearing diverse instruments.

Indorsements and bank stamps on paper, see post § 502.

¶ 2598. It is not error to admit a paper bearing a deed and also a memorandum where the paper was offered because of the memorandum which was admissible in evidence, though it referred to the land described in the deed.—Russell v. Phelps, 42 Mich. 377.

¶ 2599. Where upon a letter written by defendant to plaintiff, relating to the subject-matter of the suit, and offered in evidence by plaintiff, there appears an unsigned memorandum not so relating, and not written by defendant, and the author or purpose of which does not appear, the memorandum is no part of the letter and is immaterial as evidence.—Julius King Optical Co. v. Treat, 72 Mich. 599.

§ 500. Private record books or diaries.

Memoranda or minutes, see post § 501.

Corporate books and records, see post § 503.

Complex records, like scales, tallies and train records involving numerous persons and details, see post §§ 506, 507.

¶ 2600. A leaf sworn to as taken, after his death, from a soldier's private record book, required to be kept by soldiers in the British service, containing the names of the father and his wife, and the names, ages and birthplaces of all his children, is admissible in proof of the age of a child of such soldier.—Hunt v. Supreme Council of the Order of Chosen Friends, 64 Mich. 671.

¶ 2601. Entries in a diary, which is not a book of accounts kept in the usual course of business, made by a wife, not from her own knowledge, but from what her husband told her, are inadmissible in evidence unless used merely to aid the recollection of a witness.—Stabler v. Clark, 155 Mich. 26.

§ 501. Memoranda or minutes.

Memoranda on paper bearing other writings, see also ante § 499.

Entries and memoranda as res gestæ, see ante § 471.

Computation figures as res gestæ of accounting and settlement, see ante ¶ 2452.

Memoranda used to refresh memory of witness, see Examination of Witnesses, I.

¶ 2602. The minutes of the testimony of witnesses at a former trial, taken at the time by one who was attorney for one of the parties on that trial, may be read as evidence of what those witnesses then testified to, after the attorney has sworn that his minutes are correct.—Fisher v. Kyle, 27 Mich. 454.

¶ 2603. A settlement of partnership accounts was claimed to have been made from a memorandum drawn from the books of a firm instead of from the books themselves. Held, that the fact of such settlement being for the jury to determine, the memorandum was admissible in evidence.—Miner v. Lorman, 66 Mich. 530.

§ 502. Indorsements and stamped impressions on papers.

Official indorsements and filing marks, see post § 535.

¶ 2604. A bank stamp upon a promissory note, indicating that it was paid upon a certain date, is admissible in evidence to show the time of such payment, in connection with testimony that the note was so stamped by the bank officer when paid, in accordance with the custom of the bank, and that such stamp was used upon no other occasions.—Hanish v. Kennedy, 106 Mich. 455.

§ 503. Corporate books.

Foundation proofs of authenticity, see post § 515 et seq.

Best and secondary evidence of corporate acts, see ante § 125.

Opinion evidence as to existence and contents of records, see ante § 218.

Entries on corporate stock book as evidence of title to stock, see Corporations § 284.

¶ 2605. The transactions and acts of a corporation may be proved by entries in its books.—People ex rel. Platt v. Oakland County Bank, 1 D. 282.

¶ 2606. Where a private corporation has power to employ a superintendent, the entry in its proper record book of a resolution of appointment passed by its directors is admissible to help establish a claim for salary.—Kalamazoo Novelty Mfg. Works v. Macalister, 40 Mich. 84.

¶ 2607. The subscription books of a railroad corporation, opened and kept by commissioners according to statute, are in the nature of official registers, and are competent evidence, in an action against a subscriber, to prove how much per mile had been subscribed to the capital stock.—Monroe v. Fort Wayne, J. & S. R. Co., 28 Mich. 272.

¶ 2608. Official statements and business correspondence as to the dealings of a corporation with the party to whom they run are corporate and not private acts, and admissible in proof of such dealings in an action between the parties, if material thereto; and this though signed only by the name or initial of the secretary of the corporation.—Harrison Wire Co. v. Moore, 55 Mich. 610.

§ 504. Maps and diagrams.

As ancient documents, see post § 508.

Certified copies of land office plats and surveys, see post § 552.

Foundation proof of correctness, see post § 517.

Foundation proofs of accuracy or resemblance for photographs, see post § 572.

Survey and field notes as evidence of boundaries, see Boundaries § 30.

¶ 2609. Error being assigned because a witness was allowed to use a map whereon he pointed out the locality of an alleged trespass, held, that it was not necessary that a map correct in every respect should be produced; a map could only be used in connection with the testimony to enable the jury to understand the facts testified to.—Hoffman v. Harrington, 44 Mich. 183.

¶ 2610. A map of a government subdivision is inadmissible in evidence without the surveyor's field notes and has no evidential significance.—Wilson v. Hoffman, 54 Mich. 246.

¶ 2611. A map made by a deputy surveyor of the United States, whereon certain lands are shaded green, and which bears a memorandum that "the tracts embraced in the green shade are reserved for light-house purposes, see commissioner's letter, June 14, 1852," and a map of the same survey from the office of the register of deeds, concerning which a witness testifies that the green shade indicates lands resurveyed for light-house purposes, do not show that such lands were so reserved from the operation of Act, Cong. Sept. 28, 1850, granting swamp lands to the state.—Sterling v. Jackson, 69 Mich. 488.

Admissibility to show appearances to jury, see post § 572.

Enlarged photographs of things for better illustration, see post ¶ 2853.

Photographs as secondary evidence of original, see ante § 109.

¶ 2613. In an action for negligence in leaving an elevator shaft unguarded, photographs of the premises where the injury occurred should not have been excluded.—Bedell v. Berkey, 76 Mich. 435.

¶ 2615. Where supported by proof of their accuracy, photographs of the locus in quo are admissible in an action for personal injuries caused by defective highway.—Sterling v. City of Detroit, 134 Mich. 22.

¶ 2618. A picture of the place where an injury was received is properly considered as corroborating testimony of an eyewitness.—Measel v. Detroit United Ry., 166 Mich. 688.

§ 506. Records of data, work or operations involving complexity.

Foundation for tally books, see post ¶ 2650.

¶ 2619. A log scale can be proved by the testimony of a witness to a scale book of a boom company, where the book was made up in the office from figures there received from a tallyboy, who took them down as given by the log scaler, neither the tally boy nor his original entries being produced.—Smith v. Kelly, 43 Mich. 390; Seligman v. Ten Eyck's Estate, 60 Mich. 267.

¶ 2620. In an action for the price of logs where a scaler relying upon measurements made by an assistant of the opposite ends of logs on a skidway which he called off, also calling any apparent defects, measured the ends of the logs next to him, such scale was held to be incompetent because not of the witness' personal knowledge in the absence of proof that the measurements were accurately made by the assistant and defects accurately reported which testimony only the assistant himself could give.—Sovereign v. Mosher, 86 Mich. 36.

¶ 2621. Entries copied upon freight books from the waybills by a railroad agent, purporting to show the receipt by the company of cases of goods which the agent swears he delivered to the consignee's authorized draymen, are competent evidence in a suit against the consignee for the price of the goods.—Robinson v. Mulder, 81 Mich. 75.

¶ 2622. A railroad yardmaster and weighmaster may testify as to the weight of a carload of wood from the records of the railroad wherein are entered in the regular course of business the weights of cars as taken from the cards whereon originally entered, though such weighmaster did not himself weigh the car nor were the entries in the book in his handwriting, and especially where he testified that he compared the entry made in the book with the entry on the original card.—Meyer v. Brown, 130 Mich. 449.

¶ 2623. Weight cards kept by a carrier showing the weight of the contents of a car are admissible in an action between joint shippers to show the amount of grain in the car, notwithstanding that the employee who made the entries on the card was not available as a witness.—Remer v. Goul, 185 Mich. 371.

§ 507. ——Train and car records.

Freight records, see also ante § 506.
Train reports as res gestæ, see ante § 471.
Foundation for admission, see post § 515 et seq.

¶ 2626. Books kept by an electric railway company showing the records of conductors and motormen, and containing entries as to the alleged incompetent motorman, were admissible in evidence, in an action against such company by a servant for injuries received by being struck by a car operated by such incompetent motorman, not only for the purpose of showing notice to the company of his record, but also as prima facie evidence of any facts stated therein, and plaintiff is not limited in his use of such books to specific acts of incompetency otherwise shown, except as he may have limited himself by his declaration.—Trend v. Detroit United Ry., 149 Mich. 338.

§ 508. Ancient documents and records.

Recitals in ancient documents as exception to hearsay rule, see ante § 322.

¶ 2627. Parish record of church thirty years old showing date of baptism of deceased person admitted on question of age. —Hunt v. Supreme Council of Chosen Friends, 64 Mich. 671.

¶ 2628. A husband leased a part of a homestead to a township, and the township officers occupied the premises for thirty-six years. The lease was found in the clerk's office among the township papers. Held, the lease should be treated as an ancient document and no proof of the husband's signature was necessary.—Township of Jasper v. Martin, 161 Mich. 336.

¶ 2629. Records of surveys and other papers that have been subject of statutory regulation are not admissible as ancient records.—Wilcox v. Jenison, 198 Mich. 182.

§ 509. Baptismal records and parish registers.

Ancient records, see ante § 508.
Marriage records and certificates, see post § 510.
Certified copies and transcripts from official registers, see post § 554.

¶ 2630. A record of baptism, when admissible in evidence, is evidence of the date of baptism but not of birth, although stated therein.—Durfee v. Abbott, 61 Mich. 471.

¶ 2631. When a record of baptism is introduced in evidence to establish a person's age, it is necessary to prove the identity of the person baptized with the person concerning whom the issue is raised.—Durfee v. Abbott, 61 Mich. 471.

¶ 2632. A sworn and examined extract from the parish record of a church, showing the baptism of a deceased party, and reciting the names of her parents, with their description, and a statement of her age, supported by the affidavit of the priest that such a record was required to be kept by the rules of the church, and which is thirty years old, is admissible as evidence of age.—Hunt v. Supreme Council of the Order of Chosen Friends, 64 Mich. 671.

§ 510. Marriage certificates and registers.

Certified copies and transcripts, see post § 552.
In criminal cases, see Indictment, VIII, B.

¶ 2633. A statement in a marriage certificate is not evidence of the age of the parties.—Passmore v. Passmore's Estate, 60 Mich. 463.

§ 511. Books on science, art or special subjects.

Allusions to scientific books in hypothetical question to expert, see ante § 303.
Use in examining or cross-examining expert witnesses, see ante § 303; Examination of Witnesses, I, II; Witnesses, VI, D.
Reading books to jury to contradict or impeach expert, see Witnesses, VI, D.

¶ 2634. Medical books are not admissible as evidence on medical questions.—People v. Hall, 48 Mich. 482; Marshall v. Brown, 50 Mich. 148; People v. Millard, 53 Mich. 63.

¶ 2635. To permit plaintiff's counsel, in an action for personal injuries, to read to the jury extracts from medical works in connection with the cross-examination of experts called by defendant to refute plaintiff's theory of the cause of his physical condition, is prejudicial error.—Hall v. Murdock, 114 Mich. 233.

¶ 2636. The only circumstances under which medical works can properly be read in evidence are where the witness has based his opinions upon them, and has referred to them as authority.—Hall v. Murdock, 114 Mich. 233.

§ 512. Self-proving documents.

Acknowledged and recorded deeds and mortgages, see post § 513.
Deeds executed abroad or for lands in other states, see post § 514.
Instruments connected by reference with admissible instruments, see also ante ¶ 2597.
Ancient documents and records, see ante § 508.
Admissibility of record without foundation proofs, see post § 549.
Sufficiency of device used as seal to be admitted as such, see Jud. Act, chap. XVII, § 28; Comp. L. 1915, § 12516.

¶ 2637. A bill of sale of an account though signed and witnessed does not prove itself.—Bush v. Meacham, 53 Mich. 574.

§ 513. ——Acknowledged or recorded deeds and mortgages.

Admissibility of the record or of transcript thereof, see post §§ 530, 542, 557.
Admissibility of certified copy of records, see post §§ 551, 557.
General requisites of acknowledgments, see Acknowledgments.
Sufficiency of certificate of acknowledgment to admit deed in evidence, see also Acknowledgments § 9 et seq.
Admissibility of deed whose date varies from that of acknowledgment, see also Acknowledgments ¶¶ 25, 26.
Admissibility of deed not acknowledged when made but acknowledged before offer in evidence, see Acknowledgments § 21.
Instruments made self-proving by acknowledgment, see Jud. Act, chap. XVII, § 41; Comp. L. 1915, § 12529.
Statutory rules for admissibility of record or transcript of it or copy of instrument, see Jud. Act, chap. XVII, § 20; Comp. L. 1915, § 12508.

¶ 2638. A deed the record of which is admissible in evidence is also itself admissible without preliminary proof.—Lacey v. Davis, 4 Mich. 140.

¶ 2639. Under How. St., § 5685, making a certified transcript of the record of a deed sufficient proof of its execution and delivery, the original deed, with the certificate of record indorsed thereon, is also admissible without preliminary proof.—Webb v. Holt, 113 Mich. 338.

¶ 2640. An unacknowledged deed does not prove itself, and cannot be proved by the registry though actually recorded.—People v. Marion, 29 Mich. 31 (criminal case).

¶ 2641. An objection to the introduction of an instrument, because at the close of the attestation clause it purports to be executed in duplicate, is of no force where it does not appear that any duplicate was ever intended to be made, and the party objecting never required it.—Dykes v. Wyman, 67 Mich. 236.

§ 514. ——Executed abroad or for foreign lands.

Requisites and sufficiency of certification of record of foreign executed deed, see post § 557.

¶ 2642. Where proof of a foreign deed is to be made, it is competent to establish the official position of the certifying officer by proof of the foreign law. The statutory certificate of authentication is not the only way. —Crooks v. Whitford, 47 Mich. 283.

¶ 2643. A deed of New York lands does not prove itself in Michigan under our statutes.—Gault v. Van Zile, 37 Mich. 22.

§ 515. Foundation proof of authenticity.

¶ 2644. In an action for delaying freight in transit, bills of lading are incompetent to prove the date on which the freight was delivered to defendant railroad for transportation until the genuineness of such bills has been proved.—Fremont Canning Co. v. Pere Marquette R. Co., 180 Mich. 283.

¶ 2645. In an action on a note executed in the name of a corporation, a paper purporting to be a resolution authorizing the execution of the note and signed by the president and secretary, is not admissible where its adoption is not established by competent evidence.—Northville State Bank v. Detroit Silver Refining Co., 181 Mich. 515.

¶ 2646. All the testimony of a witness should be taken together in determining whether it fairly tends to establish facts entitling documentary evidence to be admitted. —Ortmann v. Merchants' Bank of Canada, 41 Mich. 482.

¶ 2647. The plaintiff, having testified to the admissions and explanations of defendant on the former trial, as to the circumstances attending the signing of the instrument sued upon, if in fact it was signed by defendant at all, and these circumstances having some tendency to prove the signature to be that of defendant, it was not error to admit the instrument to be read in evidence.—Gibbs v. Linabury, 22 Mich. 479.

¶ 2648. The court should admit a document sued on, the signing of which is disputed but of which there is some evidence, since it is ultimately for the jury to determine on the issues whether the instrument was signed or not.—Gibbs v. Linabury, 22 Mich. 479.

¶ 2649. In an action upon a warranty of title free from incumbrances, of a span of horses sold by defendant to plaintiff, it is error to receive in evidence, against objection, a note and mortgage purporting to be executed by defendant without any proof of their execution.—McHugh v. Brown, 33 Mich. 2.

¶ 2651. The reports of the business condition of a corporation cannot be admitted in evidence in the absence of the testimony of the secretary who made them.—Diel v. Kellogg, 163 Mich. 162.

¶ 2652. In a suit on a promissory note signed by a corporation and indorsed personally by defendant secretary thereof, who was payee, the correspondence between plaintiff and said corporation was admitted in evidence relative to the said note, letters from said corporation dictated, though not signed by defendant, were properly admitted on the stenographer's testimony to those facts.—Gelder v. Welsh, 169 Mich. 490.

¶ 2653. In an action against a street car company for injuries to the plaintiff caused by the starting of the car while she was alighting, the only evidence of the accident was plaintiff's testimony, neither the conductor or motorman having any recollection of the incident. There was evidence that it was the custom to report all accidents at the office, and the witness for defendant testified that she had charge of the record of accidents. There was no proof as to how or when the record was made, nor by whom it was made, and no showing was offered as to its accuracy. Said witness was permitted to testify that her files contained no report of the accident from the conductor or motorman. Held, the admission of the evidence constituted reversible error because if the private books of the company were competent, no proper foundation for same had been laid.—Winnett v. Detroit United Ry., 171 Mich. 629.

¶ 2655. In an action for the alienation of a wife's affections, post-marked letters and envelopes in defendant's handwriting, addressed to plaintiff's wife at her street and number, and showing on their face that they belong to a connected correspondence, are admissible in evidence upon proof that defendant, in the presence of a witness, admitted having written them, producing letters from the wife, in support of his claim that they constituted simply a friendly correspondence, although receipt of his letters by the wife is not otherwise shown.—Mead v. Randall, 111 Mich. 268.

Admissibility of writings for comparison, see post § 569.

Admissibility of writing used by expert to compare with questioned writing, see ante ¶ 1685.

Comparison of questioned with genuine writing as basis for opinion, see ante § 297.

§ 517. ——Of correctness of map or diagram.

¶ 2657. A map of the premises where an alleged assault occurred, and of the surrounding property, cannot be used before the jury by counsel without proof that it is correct, and testimony that it has been adopted by the city council is not such proof.—Zube v. Weber, 67 Mich. 52.

§ 518. ——Of authority of agent to execute.

As to letter dictated but not signed, see also ante ¶ 2652.

¶ 2659. In a suit between firms relating to certain sales, a letter written in the name of one of the firms by a boy in the office, in answer to a dispatch referring to the sales, was offered in evidence but objected to for want of proof of authority to write it. A member of the firm testified to the handwriting, also that the letter was written on paper having the printed heading of the firm and such as was used in the office at the time; also that the boy was in the firm's employ and sometimes wrote letters for it; though he said he did not know whether this particular letter was written by the firm's authority, or how or by whom it was sent. Held, that the evidence was sufficient to go to the jury on the question whether written by the firm's authority, and that the letter was properly admitted.—Botsford v. Kleinhans, 29 Mich. 332.

¶ 2660. An attorney's letter in reply to one addressed to his client seems to be admissible, if relevant, when it has been shown that he is attorney and has been put in possession of the letter to which his is an answer.—Ward v. Beecher, 56 Mich. 616.

§ 519. ——Necessity of proof by attesting witnesses.

In proving existence of lost instrument as foundation for secondary, see ante § 153.
Statutory rule for necessity of calling subscribing witnesses, see Jud. Act, chap. XVII, § 50; Comp. L. 1915, § 12538.

¶ 2661. The statutory right of a party to testify on his own behalf does not dispense with the necessity for calling the subscribing witness to prove a contract to which he was a party.—Hess v. Griggs, 43 Mich. 397.

¶ 2662. Where replevin rests on plaintiff's possession through another person, who holds under a contract with him which the other contracting party had signed only by his mark, the contract must be proved by the subscribing witness.—Hess v. Griggs, 43 Mich. 397.

¶ 2663. Where a paper requiring no witness was admitted in evidence on prima facie proof of the signature, by one not an attesting witness and the witness thereto admitted on subsequent cross-examination that he was not familiar with the signer's handwriting and did not see it signed, but there was abundant other evidence of the signature, there was no error in refusing to direct a verdict on the ground that the signature was not proved.—Bulen v. Granger, 63 Mich. 311.

¶ 2664. A subscribing witness need not be called to prove an official bond that is proved by certified copy under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 886.—Lee v. Wisner, 38 Mich. 82.

¶ 2665. Where a party calls his adversary or permits him to be called to prove an instrument referred to, it need not also be proved by the subscribing witness.—Rayburn v. Mason Lumber Co., 57 Mich. 273.

¶ 2666. The "reasonable time" before trial within which an effort should be made to serve a subpoena for a subscribing witness depends largely on the latter's abiding place at the time.—McMillan v. Larned, 41 Mich. 521.

When proof by attesting witnesses is required, see ante § 519.

¶ 2668. The testimony of a subscribing witness that he did not see the instrument executed, but signed as such witness because he knew the handwriting of the party executing it, destroys his character as such witness.—Cooper v. Smith, 75 Mich. 247.

¶ 2669. Proof by a witness of the execution and seal on a bill of sale by an association suffices to make it admissible.—Lingle v. Dalzell, 141 Mich. 399.

§ 521. ——Right to inspect and cross-examine.

Practice on offer of instrument in general, see Trial, V.

¶ 2670. Documents cannot be treated as proved by the testimony of a witness to their identity unless the adverse party has had an opportunity to inspect them and cross-examine the witness.—De Witt v. Prescott, 51 Mich. 298.

B. BOOKS OF ACCOUNT.

§ 522. In general; admissibility.

Firm and individual books, see post § 523.
Corporate books, see post § 524.
What are books of original entry, see post § 525.
Foundation proof for books, see post §§ 526, 527.

Presumable knowledge of contents of one's own books, see ante § 46.
Presumption against party suppressing or against despoliator of books, see ante §§ 63-65.
Books themselves as best evidence as to person charged therein, see ante § 120, ¶ 607.
Oral evidence of amount due on mortgage, objection as secondary, see ante ¶ 583.
Oral testimony without production as to whether books contain given entry, see ante ¶ 594.

Bill made up from original entries by witness since deceased as competent secondary proof of contents of lost book of originals, see ante § 152.
Private books and entries as hearsay, see ante § 315.
Book entries as admissions, see ante § 378.
Entries in decedent's books as admissions to bind his estate, see ante § 411.
Self-serving entries, see also ante § 487.
Conclusiveness and unimpeachability of one's own books, see post § 601.
Instructions as to use and weight in evidence, see Instructions, V, VI.
Statutory requisites of admissibility of books of account, see Jud. Act, chap. XVII, § 53; Comp L. 1915, § 12541.

¶ 2671. Where account books are received in evidence it is only where the entries are apparently made of items as they arise, and as contemporaneous res gestæ.—McClintock's Appeal, 58 Mich. 152.

¶ 2672. How. St., § 7526, as amended by Laws 1885, Act No. 105, defining for what purpose the books of a commission merchant may be used as evidence, does not allow the defendant, in an action for the price of goods, to introduce his books of account to show by the heading of his account that he only held the goods to sell on commission.—Richards v. Burroughs, 62 Mich. 117.

¶ 2673. Books of account containing charges for money paid, laid out, furnished or lent are admissible under How. St., § 7526, and the rights of the opposite party are properly guarded by instructing the jury that they are memoranda from which the party offering them may refresh his recollection, and testify in regard to the transactions themselves.—Lester v. Thompson, 91 Mich. 245.

¶ 2674. Whether books carelessly kept by assistants who are not agents are admissible in evidence upon a bill for an accounting against their superior, quære.—University of Michigan v. Rose, 45 Mich. 284.

¶ 2675. Where payments alleged to have been made by a deceased mortgage debtor are denied by the creditor they are not sufficiently proved by entries in the debtor's handwriting in an unusual place in his day-book from which the immediately preceding leaves have been torn, while the regular entries are followed by a number of blank pages.—Robinson v. Hout, 39 Mich. 405.

¶ 2676. In an action to recover the price of goods sold, plaintiff's books, testimony having been given as to their correctness, were properly admitted to show to whom goods were charged and to whom credit is given.—Montague v. Dougan, 68 Mich. 98.

¶ 2677. In an action for materials and labor, an account book kept by the plaintiff and by him shown to contain a correct statement of the transactions in dispute is properly admissible in evidence.—Smaltz v. Newhof, 178 Mich. 500.

¶ 2678. In an action by a materialman against a contractor and surety on a bond, held that books of accounts were admissible to prove the receipt by the contractor of the material for the price of which the suit was brought.—People v. Traves, 188 Mich. 345.

¶ 2679. Books of account regularly kept by a party in which entries are promptly made after each transaction, and which contain the only record thereof, are admissible in his favor.—Mally v. Excelsior Wrapper Co., 181 Mich. 568.

¶ 2680. Book entries, when receivable, are not allowed beyond the purpose for which the exception in their favor is allowed in the usual course of business.—In re Ward's Estate, 73 Mich. 220.

¶ 2681. A recital in a decedent's books of account that certain stock was turned over to a named person in full of her share in a certain estate does not prove anything more than a charge of the amount, and has no weight in establishing a settlement.—In re Ward's Estate, 73 Mich. 220.

¶ 2682. Book entries by a guardian's clerks are not admissible to prove a settlement in favor of the guardian making them.—In re Ward's Estate, 73 Mich. 220.

¶ 2683. An entry in the handwriting of a deceased payee of a note, made in his day-book in his lifetime, is competent evidence to show the transfer of the note to plaintiff's testator.—Macomb v. Wilkinson, 83 Mich. 486.

¶ 2684. In an action on a claim against an estate on a promissory note, the books of account of the claimant are admissible to show that the note was for the same amount as the books showed to be due, if limited to that purpose.—Baker v. Halleck's Estate, 128 Mich. 180.

¶ 2685. In an action against a married woman to recover for work and labor, plaintiff may show that he made the original charge upon his books against defendant rather than her husband as she claimed.—Lempke v. Felcher, 115 Mich. 37.

§ 523. Firm and individual books.

Books of partnership associations, see post § 524.

¶ 2686. Where an administrator of one estate brought a claim against another estate, and the defense gave evidence tending to show that the decedents were in partnership, and that defendant's intestate kept the accounts, a book of accounts in the latter's handwriting, and containing entries purporting to have been made in the presence of the other partner, was held admissible for defendant as tending to prove the copartnership and the condition of the accounts.—Howard v. Patrick, 38 Mich. 795.

¶ 2687. A partner's private books are not evidence against other partners as to partnership matters.—Kinney v. Robinson, 66 Mich. 113.

¶ 2688. A man sued a firm for the price of some produce he had furnished, and the firm defended on the ground that it had only been left for sale with an individual partner as a personal transaction, and that the partner had afterwards sold out his interest and this transaction had not entered into the account. Held, that defendant could be asked whether plaintiff's account on the firm books showed a credit to him of the amount claimed; and the plaintiff was also entitled to call for the partnership books for evidence as to the account.—Grant v. Masterton, 55 Mich. 161.

Township or county treasurer's books, see also post ¶¶ 2727, 2728.

¶ 2689. The books of a corporation, when properly kept by its officers or agents, are competent testimony to prove the entries of payments entered therein as paid to an employee.—Ganther v. James Jenks & Co., 76 Mich. 510.

¶ 2692. The servant of a man dealing in brick, who keeps a tally book or slate upon which he keeps memoranda of sales during the day, reporting them to his employer at night, who enters them upon his regular account books, is not a clerk within the meaning of the rule; and such regular account books are to be considered the books of original entries.—Jackson v. Evans, 8 Mich. 476.

¶ 2693. A bank depositor's pass book is as much a book of original entry as the deposit slip and the bank books.—Kux v. Central Michigan Sav. Bank, 93 Mich. 511.

Necessary and proper witnesses under statutes, see post § 527.

Proof of open account or account stated by affidavit to copy attached to declaration to recover amount due on such account, see Jud. Act, chap. XVII, § 52; Comp. L. 1915, § 12540.

¶ 2694. A party's own entries in his books of account cannot be admitted as evidence in his behalf unless a foundation be first laid by proving that he had no clerk; that some of the account books were those of the party containing original entries; and by further proof of those who have dealt and settled accounts with him, that he keeps fair and honest accounts.—Jackson v. Evans, 8 Mich. 476.

¶ 2696. In an action on an implied assumpsit for services in breaking a rollway, the entries made in the plaintiff's time book by his foreman as to the number of days' work done are admissible in connection with the plaintiff's testimony that he knows the entries to be correct.—Peters v. Gallagher, 37 Mich. 407.

¶ 2697. Entries in the bill book of a bank are admissible to fix the original dates of an altered bill of exchange only in connection with testimony tending to show that they were accurately made from the original or from a correct memorandum of it.—Ortmann v. Merchants' Bank of Canada, 41 Mich. 482.

¶ 2698. In order to entitle books of account to be received as evidence, it must appear that the party keeping and producing them is usually precise and punctilious respecting the entries therein, and that they are designed at least to embrace all the items of the account which are proper subjects of entry.—Countryman v. Bunker, 101 Mich. 218.

¶ 2699. The testimony of a witness that he made entries in an account book as original entries taken from the job or order book, and that he knew they were correct, is sufficient foundation to admit the book.—Baxter v. Reynolds, 112 Mich. 471.

¶ 2700. A merchant's books of account are inadmissible in an action for goods sold and delivered, where the only testimony to support them is that of the bookkeeper, who merely transcribed the entries from slips handed him by salesmen, and who had no personal knowledge of the sale and delivery of the articles charged.—Swan v. Thurman, 112 Mich. 416.

¶ 2701. Original books of entry are admissible in an action for goods sold and delivered where shown to have been properly kept and that settlements had been made on these books, that several clerks who made sales were called, the entries of others were proven to be in the handwriting of clerks who were then without the jurisdiction, and the defendant testified to no objection against the items allowed in the verdict.—Cameron Lumber Co. v. Somerville, 129 Mich. 552.

¶ 2702. In an action for the price of goods sold on credit the introduction of the ledger account with the explanation that the items were copied from slips sent to the bookkeeper by clerks and the original slips destroyed, renders it necessary to show that no entries were made except from slips, that no slips were sent to the bookkeeper except when goods were sent to the bundle counter, and that all goods sent to the bundle counter were delivered to the customer.—Taylor-Woolfenden Co. v. Atkinson, 127 Mich. 633.

¶ 2703. In an action by an insurance company on an agent's bond the books of the company were competent under How. St., § 7526, to show the balance claimed to be due, where the state agent testified to their correctness and that the entries were made at his dictation.—Union Cent. Life Ins. Co. v. Smith, 119 Mich. 171.

¶ 2704. A testator bequeathed to his daughter a certain sum of money, "of which sum shall be deducted the amount she may be owing on my books." Testator's books of account containing entries both on the debit and credit sides of the daughter's account, were admitted in a suit by the daughter to obtain an order of distribution. The books were in testator's handwriting, were books of original entry, and most of the entries were corroborated by producing checks corresponding to them. Petitioner was competent to testify, and she alone knew whether the account was accurate, but she kept silent. Held, that the books were properly admitted as being books kept in the ordinary course of business, and as being the books referred to in the will.—In re Bresler's Estate (Appeal of Faeder), 155 Mich. 567.

¶ 2705. Since the statute allows parties to testify generally, it is no longer necessary, before putting plaintiff's account books in evidence, to require proof by third persons that they had settled accounts with plaintiff upon his books, and that he kept correct books. Parties can testify to the keeping of their accounts, and the correctness of their books.—Montague v. Dougan, 68 Mich. 98.

¶ 2706. Books of account, testified to by those who have kept them as "correctly and accurately kept," are admissible in evidence without calling as witnesses persons who have settled accounts by them.—Montague v. Dougan, 68 Mich. 98; Seventh Day Adventist Pub. Ass'n v. Fisher, 95 Mich. 274.

¶ 2708. The witnesses to prove that the party keeps honest books should be able to identify the books, and to testify to settlements made from the entries on such books. It is not sufficient that they testify to having made settlements from bills presented, which they found honest, without being able to testify whether such bills were from the account books or not.—Jackson v. Evans, 8 Mich. 476.

¶ 2709. It is not competent, in order to dispense with the necessity of calling the teamsters, to prove by others that if called it would not be possible for them to testify from recollection to the quantity hauled. The main fact to be established is that the articles have been delivered; and it is only on failure to prove the delivery, or the quantity, by the teamsters when called, that the books are received as the next best evidence. The books are receivable on the presumption that no other proof exists which has not been adduced.—Jackson v. Evans, 8 Mich. 476.

C. OFFICIAL AND PUBLIC RECORDS AND DOCUMENTS.

1. Admissibility in general.

See note at head of this division (VIII).

Improper and irregular records and recorded instruments, see post §§ 529, 530.

Mode of proving absence of matters from records, see post § 531.

Particular records and documents, see post §§ 532-548.

Judgments and judicial records, see post § 543 et seq.

Official subscription books for corporations, see ante ¶ 2607.
Certified copies and transcripts, see post, VIII, C, 2.
Purposes for which transcripts are relevant under statute, see post ¶ 2790.
When writings deemed best evidence, see ante, IV, A.
Secondary proof of public records not producible in court, see ante § 142.
Copies in official files as superior secondary evidence of original, see ante § 154.
Public writings and reports as hearsay of facts stated, see ante § 320.
Official writings and entries as admissions against interest of maker, see ante § 374.
Weight and effect of record and documentary evidence, see post §§ 580, 594, 607.
Conclusiveness or unimpeachability of record evidence, see post § 601.
Admissibility of tax rolls to prove taxes an incumbrance, see Covenants for Title ¶ 72.
Depositions as evidence, see Depositions.
Proper offer, whole record or relevant portions, see Trial, V, A.
Right of adversary to read complementary portions of admitted document, see Trial, V, A.
Restrictions in admitting document as to use or purpose of proof, see Trial, V, C.
Admissibility of public records and writings in trials for crime, see Indictment, VIII, B.

¶ 2710. Record entries in the office of a register of deeds, whether in his own handwriting or not, are competent evidence in an action against him for negligence in failing to give information of the matters of record.—Smith v. Holmes, 54 Mich. 104.

§ 529. Improper and unnecessary recitals and records.

Improper notation in tax record, see also post ¶ 2739.
Unauthorized record of plat as evidence of dedication, see Dedication § 24.

¶ 2711. Where, after default in an action for the price of goods sold, there had been an assessment of damages, which was afterwards set aside to permit the defendant to plead, a memorandum made by the clerk of the court at the time of the assessment was inadmissible to show that the plaintiff had treated as his own a certain order by which the defendant now claims to have paid for the goods. Such a memorandum is not an official document, nor any part of the record, and does not bind the plaintiff.—Danielson v. Dyckman, 26 Mich. 169.

¶ 2712. A recital in a justice's docket on discontinuing an action that the matters in dispute have been settled is not evidence of such settlement, the entry being one not required by statute.—Shank v. Woodworth, 111 Mich. 642.

¶ 2713. In an action for malicious prosecution in causing plaintiff's arrest for knowingly receiving stolen property, the entries in the docket of the justice before whom plaintiff was examined after his arrest are admissible, in so far as they state those things which the law requires to be entered there; but a statement therein that the case was discontinued by complainant, "representing" defendant in the civil suit, a corporation, is inadmissible.—Fletcher v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 109 Mich. 363.

Competency of the deed notwithstanding improper record, see ante § 496.
Proper deed recorded as evidence, see post § 542.

¶ 2714. The record of a deed, void for defective execution, is inadmissible in evidence.—Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank v. Bronson, 14 Mich. 361.

¶ 2715. A book of township plats found in the office of the register of deeds is not evidence where there is no law requiring it to be kept or declaring it to be evidence.—Smith v. Lawrence, 12 Mich. 431.

¶ 2716. An unauthorized record of a plat is not evidence of the plat's validity and execution.—City of Grand Rapids v. Hastings, 36 Mich. 122.

¶ 2717. An unofficial book of entries kept in the office of a register of deeds and purporting to give descriptions of property, with the names of purchasers, date of sales and manner of payment, is not, of itself, or under any statute, evidence of land title from the United States government.—Newell v. McLarney, 49 Mich. 232.

¶ 2718. The record in one county of a certified copy of a record in another county from the register of deeds of that other county is not admissible in evidence.—Shotwell v. Harrison, 22 Mich. 410.

§ 531. Proof of absence of matters from records or documents.

Presumption of nonexistence of record not found in place, see ante § 58.
Opinion evidence as to what records show, see ante § 218.
Oral testimony as to lack of signatures to original record and that a transcript omits nothing relevant or material, see ante ¶ 612.
Testimony as to absence of record opposed to certificate of such record, see post ¶ 2977.
Effect of certificate that no report has been filed as required, see also Corporations ¶ 668.

Certificate of official search and of absence of matter from records and files as evidence of nonexistence of record, see Jud. Act, chap. XVII, § 22; Comp. L. 1915, § 12510.

¶ 2719. The record of the official proceedings of a common council need not be produced in court to show that the council has taken no action with reference to posting notices of the meeting of a board of review; it is enough to prove the official character of the record and to show, by a competent person, that he has examined it and that it shows no action.—Maxwell v. Paine, 53 Mich. 30.

§ 532. Published books of laws and ordinances.

Proof of ordinances by record book of councils, see post § 534.

Necessity of proving foreign laws by copy, see post § 555.

Foundation proofs for oral evidence as to foreign laws, see ante § 149.

Foundation proof of published book of foreign laws, see post § 550.

Statute authorizing reception in evidence, see Jud. Act, chap. XVII, §§ 24-26; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12512-12514.

¶ 2720. Comp. L. 1871, § 5935, How. St., § 7508, requires that a volume of laws of another state must have been published by the authority of the state government to make it admissible as evidence of the laws it contains. Held, that a volume purporting on the title page to have been "printed by order of the governor" was admissible under the statute, the purpose of which was merely to exclude unauthorized publications.—Wilt v. Cutler, 38 Mich. 189.

¶ 2721. The charter of Detroit having provided that the printed volume of the city ordinances shall be evidence in all courts, they are placed on the same footing, as regards proof, as the statutes.—Napman v. People, 19 Mich. 352.

¶ 2722. The marriage laws of Pennsylvania may be proved by the introduction of Brightly's Purdon's Digest, a nonofficial compilation of the statutes of that state of twenty-five years' standing, and which is admitted in the courts of Pennsylvania as prima facie evidence thereof.—People v. McQuaid, 85 Mich. 123.

¶ 2723. The statutes of another state and the reports of its courts are admissible under How. St., §§ 7508, 7509 (Comp. L. 1871, §§ 10173, 10174), to prove the negotiability of notes executed in such state.—Rice v. Rankans, 101 Mich. 378.

¶ 2724. A decision of the supreme court of another state is proper evidence to prove the law of that state.—Barger v. Farnham, 130 Mich. 487.

§ 533. Public reports and documents.

Admissibility of interstate commerce reports in other cases as evidence in overcharge suit, see ante ¶ 527.

¶ 2725. Under Interstate Commerce Act § 14, as amended March 2, 1889 (25 Stat. 859), providing for the admission of reports and decisions of the Interstate Commerce Commission in evidence, a pamphlet purporting to be a decision of the commission made December 23, 1897, and their report and order signed "By the commission, Edw. A. Moseley, Sec'y" is admissible.—Nichols v. Chicago & W. M. Ry. Co., 125 Mich. 394.

§ 534. Municipal records and books or minutes.

Printed book of ordinances as evidence, see ante § 532.

¶ 2726. The official record of the proceedings of a municipal council, including the ordinances passed by that body, and showing that they were adopted and properly published, is admissible in evidence of an ordinance.—People v. Murray, 57 Mich. 396.

¶ 2727. The books of a township treasurer are competent evidence of his indebtedness to the township in an action on his bond.—Township of Otsego Lake v. Kirsten, 72 Mich. 1.

¶ 2728a. Where plaintiff was injured as a result of the fact that the city light at the place of the accident was not lighted, a record kept by the police department as to lights not burning, is not admissible to show that this light was not reported, where it appears that the record was made up from reports of both citizens and police officers made by telephone and then noted in the book and was in no sense an official report.—Taylor v. City of Jackson, 151 Mich. 639.

Private indorsements, see ante § 502.

Memoranda by clerk on filings unnecessary thereto, see ante ¶ 2711.

¶ 2729. The certificate of the registry of a mortgage, required by Comp. L. 1871, § 4229, How. St., § 5681, to be indorsed thereon, is evidence of its record.—Jakway v. Jenison, 46 Mich. 521.

§ 536. Certificates of death or birth or marriage.

Parish registers and baptismal records, see ante § 509.

Verdict of coroner's inquest as document, see post § 537.

Copies and transcripts of filed certificates, see post § 553.
Admissibility by statute of marriage certificates and records or copies of records, see Jud. Act, chap. XVII, § 42; Comp. L. 1915, § 12530.
Proof of marriage license by record or copy of record thereof, see Jud. Act, chap. XVII, § 43; Comp. L. 1915, § 12531.

¶ 2730. In an action on an insurance policy a certificate of death by a physician is admissible in evidence under provisions of Comp. L. 1897, § 4617.—Krapp v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 143 Mich. 369.

¶ 2731. That part of the death certificate of a woman containing the words "contributory abortion," being a proper part of the certificate required under Comp. Laws 1897, § 4616, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 1579, is not objectionable as hearsay.—Gilchrist v. Mystic Workers of the World, 188 Mich. 466.

§ 537. Inquest of death and verdict.

¶ 2733. A coroner's verdict that a person came to death by suicide is not admissible to prove the cause of death.—Wasey v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 126 Mich. 119.

§ 538. Weather records.

Admissibility of weather records by reason of other testimony, see ante ¶ 466.
Weather reports of conditions at place remote from one in question, see ante ¶ 523.
Proof by certified copy or certificate, see post § 551.

¶ 2734. The weather record, kept for a number of years at the state insane asylum at Kalamazoo, held competent to prove the temperature in the vicinity on a particular day.—De Armond v. Neasmith, 32 Mich. 231.

§ 539. Official grants, deeds and transfers.

Certified copies of land office records, see post § 552.
Tax deeds and certificates, see post § 540.
Best and secondary evidence, see ante §§ 112, 131.

¶ 2735. A defendant railway in a suit to eject it from occupying certain streets may introduce in evidence the original franchise given by a township, granting it a right of way in such streets, upon parol proof that the paper is genuine and was regularly granted, and this evidence is admissible despite the fact that the record book of the township board does not show the granting of such franchise.—Chase v. Michigan United Rys. Co., 165 Mich. 493.

¶ 2736. Where a deed, dated 1817, purported to be a deed of partition and to have been made in part execution of an order by the register of probate that an administrator make conveyances in partition of an estate, the deed being in the handwriting of the register, subscribed by him as a witness, and acknowledged before him, the recital of this order in the deed was held to be evidence of the granting of the order, the record of the proceedings in partition being defective and part of it lost.—Willetts v. Mandlebaum, 28 Mich. 521.

General requisites of taxation and tax sale proceedings to sustain sale and make deed admissible, see Taxes.

¶ 2738. A book kept by a county treasurer, containing his entries of tax sales, though not distinctly required by any statute to be kept, yet being necessary to the adequate discharge of his duties, is an official book, and admissible in evidence to prove the facts therein stated.—Groesbeck v. Seeley, 13 Mich. 329.

¶ 2739. A certificate of the register of deeds that, in reference to a deed recorded in his office, the words "not sealed" were entered in the record opposite the names of the signers to the deed, is not evidence, as the register has no authority for entering statements of fact not in the original.—Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank v. Bronson, 14 Mich. 361.

¶ 2740. The provisions of the tax laws of 1889 and 1893 providing that tax deeds shall convey absolute title to the land sold, and be conclusive evidence of title in fee, having been declared unconstitutional, the plaintiff in ejectment claiming title under a deed issued under such provisions, was bound to follow the common-law rule and show the proceedings leading up to the giving of the deeds, before he could put them in evidence.—Dawson v. Peter, 119 Mich. 274.

Certified copies from land office, see post § 552.

¶ 2741. County surveyors' certificates are not admissible in evidence of the facts they contain unless they contain the particulars which the statute (Comp. L. 1871, §§ 587-590, How. St., §§ 616-619) requires to be entered in the surveyor's record.—Smith v. Rich, 37 Mich. 549.

¶ 2742. To constitute the action of a county surveyor evidence, the requirements of Comp. L. 1871, §§ 587-590, How. St., §§ 616-619 must be complied with.—Beeman v. Black, 49 Mich. 598.

¶ 2743. Surveyor's records defective within Comp. L. 1897, § 2622, are not made admissible in evidence by section 2619.—Pugh v. Schindler, 127 Mich. 191.

¶ 2746. Under Rev. Stats. 1846, chap. XIV, §§ 96, 97, 102, providing that certain records of surveys made by the county surveyors since the organization of the state government may be received in evidence, records of surveys are not competent evidence unless made by county surveyors.—Wilcox v. Jenison, 198 Mich. 182.

§ 542. Records of deeds, mortgages, etc.

Record as original or secondary evidence, see also ante § 112.
Secondary evidence of invalidly recorded instrument, see ante § 140.
Parol evidence to show that title had not passed at time appearing from deed record, see ante ¶ 1183.
Admissibility of improper record or of record of instrument ineligible to record, see ante § 530.
Admissibility of sworn and compared copies, see post § 565.
Admissibility of recorded deed without further foundation, see ante § 513.
Admissibility of record without foundation, see post § 549.
Mode of certifying transcript of record, see post § 557.

¶ 2747. It is no objection to the admission of a deed record in evidence in ejectment that it was not recorded until after the commencement of the suit.—Russell v. Sweezey, 22 Mich. 235; Eames v. McGregor, 43 Mich. 313.

¶ 2748. Where a deed from several grantors is put upon record, as to only a part of whom it is properly executed and witnessed, the record is evidence of a deed as to those parties only by whom it has been properly executed, and whose execution of it has been duly witnessed so as to entitle it to record had they been the only grantors named.—Hall v. Redson, 10 Mich. 21; Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank of Michigan v. Bronson, 14 Mich. 361; Rayner v. Lee, 20 Mich. 384.

§ 543. Record of will or probate.

Certification of foreign probate record, see post §§ 560, 561.

¶ 2749. A record from the registry of deeds of a county in this state containing a certified copy of a will executed and probated in another state is admissible in evidence where it recites that a copy of the will and of the probate thereof duly authenticated was presented to the probate court here: that due notice of hearing was given by publication, and that said copy was duly admitted to record upon full proof.—Culbertson v. H. Witbeck Co., 127 U. S. 326, 32 L. ed. 134, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1136.

§ 544. Judgment and judicial records.

Unnecessary entries and records, see also ante § 529.
Record of probate of will, see ante § 543.
Decision of other state as evidence to prove its laws, see ante § 532.
Best and secondary evidence, see ante § 122.
Foundation proof for admission, see post § 549.
Effect of the judgment as adjudication or as evidence of facts decided, see Former Adjudication.
Condition, time and stage when judgment becomes an estoppel, see Former Adjudication, II.
Mode of proof of judgment on plea of estoppel by it, see also Former Adjudication, VII.
Appeal as suspending evidentiary force of decree, see Appeal ¶ 598.

¶ 2750. A record made in October, 1847, by a probate court, of a decree made by the same court in February, 1837, admitting a will to probate, was held good evidence of the probate of the will.—Ives v. Kimball, 1 Mich. 308.

¶ 2751. In an action of ejectment, although the pleadings are admissible to show bad faith, the plaintiff may not introduce in evidence the record of a judgment in a former ejectment action between the parties to show the bad faith of the defendant in claiming that her grantor had title by adverse possession because such claim was not made on the former trial, especially where no good reason exists why the jury should know the outcome of the former trial.—Tyler v. Wright, 188 Mich. 561.

§ 545. Mode and means of proving judgments.

Certification of transcripts, see post §§ 558-561.
Mode of proving judgments when urged as estoppels, see Former Adjudication, VII.

Admissibility of record of certified copy of judgment or decree rendered elsewhere than in place of record, see Jud. Act, chap. XVII, § 29; Comp. L. 1915, § 12517.

¶ 2752. A judgment of the circuit court is to be proved by the files and journal entries, which, under our practice, are a substitute for a judgment record.—Norvell v. McHenry, 1 Mich. 227; Crane v. Hardy, 1 Mich. 56; Prentiss v. Holbrook, 2 Mich. 372; Whitwell v. Emory, 3 Mich. 84; Emery v. Whitwell, 6 Mich. 474; Kenyon v. Baker, 16 Mich. 373; Hovey v. Smith, 22 Mich. 170.

¶ 2753. The docket entry of a judgment, without proof of such files, entries and proceedings as could alone justify the court in awarding it, is no evidence whatever of a valid judgment.—Kenyon v. Baker, 16 Mich. 373.

¶ 2754. Where, in ejectment, the plaintiff, claiming the premises under execution sale, offered in evidence, to prove the judgment on which execution issued, the journal entry, the execution issued for the debt, with the indorsement thereon, and the files in the case, showing declaration, plea thereto, etc., the writ of error by the defendant in the same case and the return thereto, being a transcript of the judgment record and proceedings in the supreme court where judgment was affirmed, held, that such evidence was sufficient and admissible.—Emery v. Whitwell, 6 Mich. 474.

¶ 2756. The record of attachment proceedings, upon which a defense in replevin is based, cannot be excluded on the objection that the attachment of logs will not justify the taking of lumber on the execution, there being no dispute that the lumber was made from the logs; and even if this were disputed, it would be the subject of extrinsic evidence, and would not appear on the face of the record, and would, therefore, be no ground for excluding the record.—Hubbardston Lumber Co. v. Covert, 35 Mich. 254.

¶ 2757. A decree in chancery cannot be proved without the rest of the record.—Day v. De Jonge, 66 Mich. 550.

§ 546. ——Of inferior courts and justices.

Admissibility of justice's original entry or transcript to prove his judgment or writs or proceedings before him, see Jud. Act, chap. XVII, § 30; Comp. L. 1915, § 12518.

Proof of proceedings before justice by his oath or by minutes and proof of his handwriting if he be dead or absent, see Jud. Act, chap. XVII, § 31; Comp. L. 1915, § 12519.

¶ 2758. Where in an action for false imprisonment the petty nature of the charge in a justice's court becomes material, such nature may be proved by the docket entries.—Bates v. Kitchel, 166 Mich. 695.

¶ 2760. A justice's judgment may be proved by showing jurisdiction of the defendant, a trial at the proper time, the rendition of the judgment and its amount.—Henry v. Gates, 118 Mich. 379.

¶ 2761. After judgment is pronounced by a justice of the peace, and before the proceedings are entered on his docket, it is competent to prove the judgment by the oath of the justice, who produces for that purpose his minutes of the trial, which are as full as the docket entries are required to be.—Hickey v. Hinsdale, 8 Mich. 267.

§ 547. Stenographers' notes or transcripts.

¶ 2762. A literal transcript of accurate stenographer's notes of testimony containing admissions may be introduced in proof of such admissions.—Potter's Appeal, 53 Mich. 106.

¶ 2763. The stenographer's transcript, if correct and accurate, may be received where a witness at a former trial has since absented himself from the state and cannot be reached by a subpoena.—Dunbar v. McGill, 69 Mich. 297.

¶ 2766. A stenographer's notes of testimony given on a former trial are not admissible in evidence if he has not testified to their accuracy or if they are not in some way authenticated.—Misner v. Darling, 44 Mich. 438.

¶ 2767. Where the supreme court reverses and grants a new trial, the stenographer's notes of testimony taken upon the former trial are not competent when not proven.—Opsomere v. Opsomere, 167 Mich. 636.

¶ 2768. In a suit for personal injuries sustained from being assaulted and forcibly thrown from defendant railway's car, plaintiff, in order to prove defendant the owner of said car, introduced in evidence the stenographer's minutes of another suit, in which defendant was party defendant and plaintiff was not concerned. There was no proof that defendant's chief officers were at the time of the trial absent from the state. The minutes read related to a trial held some years before. There was no evidence to show that the conditions of ownership remained the same. The stenographer who took and read the testimony did not swear that it was a true and correct reproduction of the evidence given at the trial of the former case. Held, the admission of such evidence constituted reversible error.—Kaiser v. Detroit United Ry., 167 Mich. 288.

§ 548. Pleadings, files and affidavits.

Foundation proof for admission, see post § 549.

Admissibility of entire files, part having been admitted, see ante § 91.

Inadmissibility of judgment where pleadings only are relevant, see also ante ¶ 2751.

Pleadings and files in the cause making up judgment roll, see ante § 545.

Admissibility for impeachment or contradiction or corroboration, see Witnesses, VI, D.

Effect of affidavits, see generally Affidavits.

Pleadings as evidence of ratification by joining in suit on contract, see Agency ¶ 397.

Warrant of attorney from files as evidence of authority, see Appearance § 4, ¶ 10.

Files and records in prior suit as evidence of act done with knowledge, see also Carriers ¶ 400.

Pleadings and judgment as evidence in action on bail bond given in the action, see Civil Arrest § 63.

Bill in prior suit as evidence in divorce on issue of collusion, see Divorce ¶ 210.

Drain proceedings bill of costs as evidence in action by commissioner to recover costs, see Drains § 48, ¶ 149.

Effect of equity pleadings as evidence in the cause, see Equity § 164 et seq.

Affidavits of printer to prove publication of notices, see Jud. Act, chap. XVII, §§ 35-38; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12523-12526.

¶ 2769. In an action for alienating the affections of plaintiff's wife it is competent for plaintiff to show that he has obtained a divorce from his wife, as this would negative a claim that there has been a reconciliation between the two, but the bill of complaint in the divorce suit, being an ex parte statement by plaintiff, himself not a competent witness, is inadmissible.—Mead v. Randall, 111 Mich. 268.

¶ 2770. In an action upon a bond given by one arrested as a fraudulent debtor, evidence of the proceedings is admissible to show that they were void and the bond lacking in consideration.—Butts v. Davis, 50 Mich. 310.

¶ 2771. Records and files of several attachment suits held admissible in trover against an officer by person claiming under chattel mortgage attacked as fraudulent, although goods had been sold under one of the judgments in such suits which they failed to satisfy; since the others tended to show existence of creditors when the mortgage was made.—Eureka Iron & Steel Works v. Bresnahan, 66 Mich. 489.

¶ 2772. Where a vendor in a contract to sell land which was executed by his covendor without sufficient authority has joined with the latter in a suit against their vendee to recover the unpaid purchase-money, so much of the pleadings in such suit as are necessary to show the joinder are admissible to prove a ratification of the covendor's doings on the contract, and as tending to establish a joint liability.—Wright v. Dickinson, 67 Mich. 590.

¶ 2773. Where an injunction's issue and service are material in a subsequent action at law between the same parties, there is no error in admitting in such action the files of the injunction suit where there is nothing in the other portions of such files harmful to the objecting party.—Wright v. Dickinson, 67 Mich. 590.

¶ 2774. In an action against a bank for neglecting to present a draft promptly to a debtor who was the drawee, it is error to exclude files and records in attachment cases offered by defendant to show that after plaintiffs had brought suit other creditors sued out attachments against the drawee, and that in several cases bonds were given to release the attached property; since giving the bonds had some weight to show that collection was possible by pressing the drawee.—Finch v. Karste, 97 Mich. 20.

¶ 2775. The purchaser of a stock of goods mortgaged the goods, after which they were attached by creditors of his vendor, and he replevied them from the creditors. The mortgagee induced another party to become cosurety with himself in the replevin bond by promising to indemnify him from loss in doing so. Judgment passed for the defendants in the replevin suit, and also in their favor in a suit brought upon the replevin bond. In a suit brought against the mortgagee by his cosurety to recover the money by him paid on the latter judgment, the court admitted in evidence in plaintiff's favor the files and records in the attachment suit as bearing on the question whether the indemnity promise was an original promise or one within the statute. Held, that it was a case in which the broadest latitude of investigation was permissible under plaintiff's claim that the replevin suit was in fact for the benefit of defendant, and that the court did not err in receiving said evidence.—Boyer v. Soules, 105 Mich. 31.

¶ 2778. A bill of particulars cannot be rendered competent evidence by the introduction of private account books to sustain its charges.—Tioga Mfg. Co. v. Stimson, 48 Mich. 213.

¶ 2779. The affidavit in attachment does not establish the fact of indebtedness as against third parties.—Cook v. Hopper, 23 Mich. 511; Manning v. Bresnahan, 63 Mich. 584.

Admissibility in evidence in personal injury or death action of pleading in another suit, see note 14 N. C. C. A. 499-511.

§ 549. Foundation proof.

For tax deed in absence of constitutional statute prescribing less than common-law foundation, see ante ¶ 2740.

Judicial notice of public records and documents, see ante § 18 et seq.

Certification of foreign affidavit to show authority of notary taking it, see Affidavits ¶ 19.

Mode of authentication of affidavits taken in other state or country to make them admissible in cases where by law receivable, see Jud. Act, chap. XVII, § 14; Comp. L. 1915, § 12502.

Seal of supreme court as conclusive evidence of authenticity of process issued by it, see Jud. Act, chap. I, § 15; Comp. L. 1915, § 12020.

¶ 2783. In an action for malicious prosecution, the files in the criminal case may be identified by the testimony of a lawyer that he obtained them from the county clerk, whose signature they bear, as the criminal files of that case.—McLeod v. Crosby, 128 Mich. 641.

¶ 2784. The record of a deed, properly executed and acknowledged, may be read in evidence without further proof of delivery under Comp. Laws 1897, § 8990, How. 2nd Ed., § 10852, and it is immaterial whether the deed was recorded before or after the grantor's death.—Barras v. Barras, 192 Mich. 584.

§ 550. ——Of authenticity of foreign book of statutes or reports.

¶ 2785. A sufficient foundation for the introduction of a volume in proof of the laws of a foreign country is laid by the testimony of a barrister and solicitor of such country that it is a volume of the statutes commonly admitted and used as evidence in the courts of his country.—Dawson v. Peterson, 110 Mich. 431.

2. Transcripts and copies.

§ 551. Certified or authenticated copies of records.

Of land office records and maps, see post § 552.

Of filed certificates of birth, death or marriage, see post § 553.

Of parish registers, see post § 554.

Requisites of the transcript and mode of authenticating it, see post §§ 556-563.

Sworn copies, see post § 565.

Probative force and effect of copies, see post § 566.

Certificate of record indorsed on deed, see ante § 535.

Sworn copies and compared copies, see post § 565.

General rule as to secondary proof by copies, see ante, IV.
Served copy of pleading rather than filed original as original for some purposes, see ante § 111, ¶ 573.
Statutory provision for reception of certified copies of official files and records, see Jud. Act, chap. XVII, § 19; Comp. L. 1915, § 12507.
Proof of Weather Bureau records, by certified copies, see Jud. Act, chap. XVII, § 34; Comp. L. 1915, § 12522.

¶ 2786. Regarding matters which an officer is not bound to record, his certificate, being extra-official, is merely the statement of a private person.—Fox v. Peninsular White Lead & Color Works, 92 Mich. 243.

¶ 2787. An indorsement by a city physician upon a ticket of admission to the poorhouse that the bearer has been ill with arsenical poisoning is inadmissible as evidence of such illness in an action for damages from the poisoning, such indorsement not being required by statute.—Fox v. Peninsular White Lead & Color Works, 92 Mich. 243.

¶ 2788. The certificate of the secretary of state to a legal conclusion is of no validity as evidence. His duty in certifying to copies of instruments on file in his office is purely ministerial, and he must certify to a copy of the entire document. A mere certificate that a paper required to be acknowledged is accompanied by an acknowledgment in the usual form is of no effect.—Doyle v. Mizner, 42 Mich. 332.

¶ 2791. In a suit on notes, plaintiff put in evidence a certified statement of the appointment by the probate court of one Purdon as administrator of the estate of the payee, and the deposition of said Purdon taken in Vermont that he was such administrator, and as such indorsed and delivered the notes to plaintiff and that said notes belonged to plaintiff. Held, the proofs of appointment of administrator were insufficient, since the probate register did not set forth a copy of the order of the court certified by him, but certified to what the court did, "as appears by the records and files of said probate court."—General Conference Ass'n of Seventh-Day Adventists v. Michigan Sanitarium & Benevolent Ass'n, 106 Mich. 504.

§ 552. ——Of land office maps and records.

Sufficiency of certificate to copy, see also post §§ 557, 558.
Certified transcript of record of patent as secondary evidence, see ante ¶ 575.
Public abstract of records as statutory evidence, see also post § 580.
Proof of land office records, plats and maps by certified copies, see Jud. Act, chap. XVII, § 32; Comp. L. 1915, § 12520.
Proof of possession of land by land office certificates of purchase or entry, see Jud. Act, chap. XVII, § 44; Comp. L. 1915, § 12532.
Proof of records, plats and maps of St. Mary's Falls Ship Canal Board by certified copy, see Jud. Act, chap. XVII, § 33; Comp. L. 1915, § 12521.

¶ 2792. A patent of land from the United States being lost, a copy of the record thereof from the general land office, properly certified by the commissioner, is evidence.—Lacey v. Davis, 4 Mich. 140.

¶ 2793. A certified copy of a map from the general land office, on which a certain section was designated as the tract of one of the reservees, was held evidence of the due location of such section, according to the conditions of a treaty.—Dewey v. Campau, 4 Mich. 565.

¶ 2794. A surveyor's field notes on file in the United States land office may be proved by a certified copy from the commissioner.—Gilman v. Riopelle, 18 Mich. 145.

§ 553. ——Of filed certificates of birth, death and marriage.

¶ 2796. A certified copy of a publicly recorded certificate of death showing the date and cause thereof, is admissible in evidence in an action on a certificate of fraternal insurance, to show the falsity of the insured's statements and warranties in her application, as to her family history.—O'Brien v. Brotherhood of American Yeomen, 183 Mich. 86.

§ 554. ——Of parish registers.

See also ante ¶ 2632.
Sufficiency of sworn copy embodied in deposition, see post § 2831.

¶ 2797. Certificates based upon the parish registry of baptisms and marriages kept in a foreign country, which do not purport to be authenticated copies of such registry, but simply assert that certain facts are shown thereby, are not competent evidence of the facts so stated.—Tessman v. Supreme Commandery of United Friends, 103 Mich. 185.

§ 555. Copies and transcripts of foreign laws.

Manner of certification, see post ¶ 2818.

Sufficiency of evidence to establish foreign laws, see post § 587.

¶ 2798. The statute laws of other states and countries must be proved by copies authenticated in some mode recognized by law.—People v. Lambert, 5 Mich. 349; Kermott v. Ayer, 11 Mich. 181; Ellis v. Maxson, 19 Mich. 186.

§ 556. Requisites of copy or transcript, certification and authentication.

Of various kinds of records, see post §§ 557-561.

Certification of part only of record, see post § 564.

Preservation by statute of common-law modes of proving foreign records, see Jud. Act, chap. XVII, § 17; Comp. L. 1915, § 12505.

Certification of copies of filed affidavits which by law are admissible, see Jud. Act, chap. XVII, §§ 39, 40; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12527, 12528.

¶ 2799. Under Comp. L. 1871, §§ 8058-9 (see How. St., § 9679), relating to meetings of the board of state prison inspectors, and the adoption by them of rules for the direction and government of the officers, the clerk being made a mere amanuensis whose attendance is not requisite to make the acts of the board valid, copies of the inspectors' rules, verified by the signatures of the inspectors, are held sufficiently signed without the clerk's signature to make them a record, and, as such, admissible in evidence. Printed copies pasted in the board's record book and signed by each member are sufficiently verified as to correctness.—Hulin v. People, 31 Mich. 323.

¶ 2800. A copy of articles of incorporation and of the affidavit of acknowledgment attached thereto are, under How. St., § 3600, presumptive evidence of incorporation, if properly certified by the secretary of state, and the mere fact that in the certification the affidavit is referred to as a "certificate" does not justify the rejection of the certified copies as evidence.—Canal St. Gravel Road Co. v. Paas, 95 Mich. 372.

¶ 2801. A county clerk's certificate that "the annexed and foregoing is a true copy of a statement of lien, and of the whole of said original record as compared by me," is sufficient under How. St., § 7504, to entitle the copy to be received in evidence.—Huntoon v. O'Brien, 79 Mich. 227.

¶ 2802. A certificate by the township clerk, that a copy of a chattel mortgage, to which it is attached, is a true and compared copy of the original on file in his office, and of the whole of such original, is sufficient to entitle the copy so certified to be received in evidence. The form of certificate indicated by Comp. L. 1871, § 5931, How. St., § 7504, viz., that the copy certified is a true transcript compared by the officer with the original in his office, is not designed to require one general form for all cases; the purpose was only to indicate a certificate that should be sufficient, without precluding others which, but for this statute, would have been good. Comp. L. 1871, § 4711, How. St., § 6198, seems to provide for this certification, under which the certificate in question would be sufficient.—Bills v. Keesler, 36 Mich. 69.

¶ 2803. A copy of parts of the record of the proceedings of a board of supervisors, purporting to show the action of the board with reference to the equalization and apportionment of taxes, and certified by the county clerk to be a correct copy, and to contain all entries appearing upon the record in relation to that subject, is admissible in evidence to show the invalidity of the tax levy over an objection that it appears to be a selection of portions of the record, and may be given the same force as a complete record, where no offer is made to supplement it.—Hoffman v. Pack, Woods & Co., 114 Mich. 1.

Admissibility of deed where transcript is admissible, see also ante § 513.

Record or transcript of it or copy of filed instrument as evidence, see Jud. Act, chap. XVII, § 20; Comp. L. 1915, § 12508.

¶ 2804. The record of a deed purporting to have been executed and acknowledged in another state, and to have had attached thereto the certificate of the clerk of the proper county, under his hand and the seal of said county, certifying to the official character of the acknowledging officer, the genuineness of his signature, and the execution and acknowledgment of the instrument according to the laws of said state, but which record fails to show that any seal was attached to said certificate, is inadmissible in evidence.—Hoban v. Cable, 102 Mich. 206.

¶ 2805. The record of a deed executed in another state and certified so as to entitle the deed to record under the law in force here at the time, is admissible in evidence although the certificate does not show another fact required by a later statute.—McCammon v. Detroit, L. & N. R. Co., 103 Mich. 104.

§ 558. ——Of records of federal courts and government offices.

Admissibility of official bond without proof by witnesses, see ante ¶ 2664.

¶ 2807. The mode of authenticating the documents, records and proceedings of any of the departments or courts of the United States is governed by the laws of the United States, and by the practice of such departments and courts, and not by the statutes of the state.—Lacey v. Davis, 4 Mich. 140; Gilman v. Riopelle, 18 Mich. 145.

¶ 2808. A judgment rendered in a United States court, authenticated in the common-law mode and in the manner provided by the laws of Michigan, is admissible in evidence, notwithstanding that the form of authentication is not such as the acts of congress require to make it evidence in all places.—Dean v. Chapin, 22 Mich. 275.

¶ 2809. Papers from one of the departments of the federal government, if authenticated according to the practice of the department, are admissible as prima facie if not as conclusive evidence, even though not certified in accordance with our statutes; so held of an exemplification from the records of the federal land office of a list of lands selected by the state agent under a railroad grant, where, under the department's practice, only the lands involved in the case at issue were certified in such list.—Tillotson v. Webber, 96 Mich. 144.

¶ 2810. Exemplified copies of pension vouchers made pursuant to U. S. Rev. St., § 882, are admissible as self-proving documents.—Murphy v. Cady, 145 Mich. 33.

¶ 2811. An instrument purporting to be a copy of an assignment in bankruptcy from the register to the assignee, purporting to be certified by the register, but not certified by the clerk, and not otherwise identified by acknowledgment or record, is not evidence under the Bankrupt Law without further proof.—Wisner v. Wirth, 48 Mich. 291.

§ 559. ——Of judgments and judicial records.

See also ante ¶ 2781.

Of judgments and records from inferior courts and justices, see post § 562.

Of federal courts and offices of government, see ante § 558.

Foreign judgments and records, see post §§ 560, 561.

Statutory requisites of copy and authentication of records of courts of record within State of Michigan, see Jud. Act, chap. XVII, § 18; Comp. L. 1915, § 12506.

¶ 2813. A judgment is sufficiently proved by a properly certified copy, under the seal of the court, of the pleadings, which were special, and on personal appearance, and of the record of verdict and judgment.—People v. Mersereau, 74 Mich. 687.

¶ 2814. As a judgment cannot be attacked collaterally for mere irregularities, it is only on proceedings in error and not when offered in evidence by certified copy that all the continuances and other matters of practice need be mentioned in the transcript.—People v. Mersereau, 74 Mich. 687.

¶ 2815. Where the record of proceedings in one court (a federal court), has been put in evidence and made a part of proceedings in another court (a Wisconsin court), which is in evidence in the case at bar, whether the authentication of the record of the latter court, as including the transcript of the proceedings in the former, can so embody such introduced transcript upon the record now in evidence as to make it a component part thereof, quære. Held, safer to introduce authenticated copies of both original records.—Aldrich v. Chubb, 35 Mich. 350.

§ 560. ——Of foreign judgments and records under statute.

Of foreign justices' and inferior court judgments, see post § 563.

Statutory authentication of foreign records and judicial proceedings, see Jud. Act, chap. XVII, § 15; Comp. L. 1915, § 12503.

¶ 2816. The authentication of a judgment of a foreign court of common law, authenticated by the seal of the court and the signature of the clerk, is sufficient both by common law and by the statute.—Capling v. Herman, 17 Mich. 524.

¶ 2817. In a suit on a note, plaintiff put in evidence the deposition of one Ruiter of Canada, which set out the will of the payee of the note and stated that she being universal legatee thereunder was vested with administration; that the indorsement on the note was her own as administratrix; and that the estate was fully settled. Plaintiff further put in evidence a certified copy of probate of the proper court in Canada showing the will of the payee to have been duly proved. Held, that the proofs were sufficient to be admitted in evidence under section

§ 561. ——Of foreign records and judgments under act of congress.

Mode of certifying federal court judgments, see ante § 558.

Sufficiency of common-law certification instead of certification according to act of congress, see ante § 560.

Federal statute regulating authentication of legislative acts, judicial proceedings, and other records of any state or territory for use in evidence in other states, see Comp. L. 1915, preliminary chap. V.

¶ 2818. A paper purporting to be a certificate of a marriage solemnized in another state, which paper is certified by the clerk of the county court to be a true and perfect copy of such certificate as the same appears from the records in his office, is inadmissible as evidence in this state of the marriage, it not being certified as required by the act of congress, and not conforming to any Michigan rule on the subject.—People v. Perriman, 72 Mich. 184.

¶ 2820. A transcript of the record showing the probate of a will in New Jersey was held to be properly authenticated where its correctness was certified to by the surrogate under the seal of his court, and the president judge of the orphans' court had certified under the seal of that court that the authentication was in due form and by the proper officer.—Wilt v. Cutler, 38 Mich. 189.

§ 562. Transcripts and certifications of inferior judgments.

¶ 2821. Where a transcript from a justice's docket is not certified as such it may be proved by the justice's oath; but if neither certified nor proved it is inadmissible to prove a judgment.—Wilber v. Goodrich, 34 Mich. 84.

¶ 2822. It is presumed that a particular justice of the peace is the one who certified a transcript if his name is signed, as justice, to the certificate.—Holcomb v. Tift, 54 Mich. 647.

¶ 2823. A transcript of a justice's judgment is admissible as evidence though certified by another justice, if his certificate shows that he had possession of the docket of the justice who rendered the judgment.—Holcomb v. Tift, 54 Mich. 647.

Statutory provisions as to authentication, see Jud. Act, chap. XVII, § 23; Comp. L. 1915, § 12511.

¶ 2826. A properly certified transcript of a justice's judgment rendered in another state on personal service and appearance is sufficient evidence of the judgment and of the justice's jurisdiction (Comp. L. 1871, § 5933, How. St., § 7506).—Campbell v. Wallace, 46 Mich. 320.

¶ 2828. A copy of a record is not to be wholly rejected because the certificate attached is confined to a portion of the document only. The copy will be evidence so far as it is properly certified.—Gilman v. Riopelle, 18 Mich. 145.

¶ 2829. In an action for malicious prosecution a certificate of the records in the criminal case which is in proper form and shows the copy to be the whole of the entries that it purports to certify, is properly admitted although it does not attempt to certify all orders in the case, where it does show a verdict of not guilty but fails to show judgment of not guilty and discharge of the prisoner.—McLeod v. Crosby, 128 Mich. 641.

Inadmissibility of deposition of register as to contents of record, see ante ¶ 662.

Statutory requisites of copy, comparison and proofs, see Jud. Act, chap. XVII, § 16; Comp. L. 1915, § 12504.

Admissibility of common-law modes of proof of foreign records, see Jud. Act, chap. XVII, § 17; Comp. L. 1915, § 12505.

¶ 2830. A bill of sale intended as a security, and properly filed in the town clerk's office, is a public record, which may be proved by a sworn copy.—Pierce v. Rehfuss, 35 Mich. 53.

¶ 2831. A deposition showed that deponent was a minister at A., and had custody and control of the church records, which contain the records of those christened and confirmed in said church; that the records were kept according to the regulations of the royal consistory, and had been so kept for more than two centuries; that deponent had inspected such records for the purpose of ascertaining the facts; and that it appeared therefrom that one C. was baptized on March 17, 1822, when he was seven days old, and that he was born at G., in East Prussia. The deposition directed: "Q. If witness answers 'Yes' to the last question [as to the inspection of the records], please attach here a copy, made by your own hand, and compared with the original by yourself, of so much of said records as pertains to the christening of said C., of the age of said C. when christened, and of the birthplace of said C." The next answer was: "A. [Copy attached]," and said copy was followed by the statement, "According to the local church record, it is hereby officially testified that to [a certain person] of G., * * * by his lawful wife," a child "was born on the 10th of March, 1822, who was baptized on the 17th of March of the same year, and received the name of 'C.' Evangelical Church at A., East Prussia, December 9, 1895. R., Minister. [Church Seal]." Held, that the record attached to the deposition was a sworn copy of the church record, and hence the deposition was admissible in evidence on the issue of C.'s age.—Drosdowski v. Supreme Council of Order of Chosen Friends, 114 Mich. 178.

§ 566. Probative force and effect of copies and certificates.

Effect of statutes, see also ante ¶ 2790.

Weight and effect of documents, certificates and official evidence, see post § 595.

¶ 2832. How. St., § 7504 provides that certified copies of papers on file in public offices shall be evidence in like manner as the originals would be. Section 6198 provides that a certified copy of a chattel mortgage "shall be received in evidence, but only of the fact that such instrument was received and filed, * * * and of no other fact." Held, that a certified copy of a chattel mortgage does not prove its execution.—Shelden v. Merrill, 69 Mich. 156.

¶ 2833. An aid note that had been drawn to the order of a railroad company which fell into bankruptcy was transferred by the assignee's deed and a subsequent conveyance, and sued on by the final holder. Held, in an action on the note, that, as the deeds had been lost, certified copies thereof were admissible as tending to show that plaintiff, having succeeded to the franchises of the promisee company, was a proper person to perform on the promisee's part the contract embodied in the note; they would not, however, be admissible evidence of the transfer of such contract.—Toledo & A. A. R. Co. v. Johnson, 55 Mich. 456.

IX. EVIDENCE ADDRESSED TO THE SENSES; REAL EVIDENCE.

§ 567. Objects, models and things as evidence.

Foundation proofs of sameness and identity, see post § 576.

Correctness of model as jury question, see Trial, VI.

Production and examination of tangible property before trial, see Discovery § 10.

Defective insulator as evidence in action for injuries from escaped electric current, see Electricity ¶ 24.

Use by counsel of diagrams or articles not in evidence as illustrations in argument, see Argument of Counsel §§ 4, 9.

Admissibility in criminal trials of subjects of crime or other things as evidence, see Indictment, VIII, B.

¶ 2834. Where a village is sued for injuries occasioned by a defective sidewalk, plaintiff may produce and identify the defective plank, and show that it was taken from the walk at the place where plaintiff claimed to have been injured.—Lombar v. Village of East Tawas, 86 Mich. 14.

¶ 2835. In an action for injury alleged to have been caused by a defective sidewalk, the theory being that the stringers were rotten, a piece of wood offered upon a claim that it was a part of a stringer of the walk in the immediate proximity of the place of the accident, is admissible.—Styles v. Village of Decatur, 131 Mich. 443.

¶ 2837. A model may properly be exhibited to the jury in a case involving questions of construction, if there is testimony that it correctly represents distances and dimensions; its correctness, if disputed, is a question for the jury.—Richmond v. Atkinson, 58 Mich. 413.

¶ 2838. In an action for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by a defective brake, the brake beam may be introduced in evidence in order that the jury may understand its working more clearly, without any evidence that it is in the same condition as at the time of the accident.—Bernard v. Pittsburg Coal Co., 137 Mich. 279.

§ 568. Inspection and comparison of goods.

Testimony as to comparisons and tests made by witness or others with other things, see ante § 96.

¶ 2839. In an action for the price of goods sold, but rejected by the vendee on their arrival as not merchantable, it is not error to permit the exhibition of some of the goods to the jury, and to admit testimony as to how they compare with others, and also to allow, in connection with such testimony, the exhibition of a sample of goods taken from the original packages of other merchants to show that the goods were not No. 1, as ordered.—Imbrie v. Wetherbee & Co., 70 Mich. 103.

¶ 2840. Where on the trial of a suit to recover the price of a mirror which, after being delivered to the purchaser, had been taken away by the vendors to be resilvered, the mirror was brought into the court room by plaintiffs, and witnesses testified in relation to it, having their attention directed to it by plaintiffs' counsel, and its workmanship, and whether it was defective or not after being resilvered, was made part of the issue, the jury should have been permitted to inspect the mirror at the request of defendant's counsel.—Hudson v. Roos, 76 Mich. 173.

§ 569. Inspection and comparison of questioned writings by jury.

Comparison of writings as basis for opinions of experts, see ante § 297.

Compelling writing for comparison, see post § 577.

Propriety of microscopical examination of alterations, see Alteration of Instruments ¶ 38.

Statutory rule for admission of instruments for comparison of questioned hand writing, see Jud. Act. chap. XVII, § 51; Comp. L. 1915, § 12539.

¶ 2842. Where an accommodation maker sued upon a note testifies that it has been altered without his consent by filling a space which he left blank, it is error to allow him to introduce in evidence for the purpose of comparison by the jury other notes subsequently written by him.—Weidman v. Symes, 116 Mich. 619.

¶ 2845. It was error to refuse to submit to the jury a statement alleged to have been made and signed by affiant in a suit commenced by capias, just before he died retracting the charges made in his affidavit, to enable the jury to compare the two signatures, where such affidavit stated facts conclusively showing adultery between defendant and plaintiff's wife, and where defendant claims that affiant was one of several conspirators who were attempting to blackmail him, and where plaintiff claims that such statement was a forgery.—Brown v. Evans, 149 Mich. 429.

§ 570. Demonstrations and operation of machines.

Opinions of lay witnesses based on experiments, see ante § 253.

Demonstrative experiments as evidence in criminal cases, see Indictment, VIII, B.

Irreviewableness of question depending on demonstration made in open court and not reducible to record, see Appeal § 278.

¶ 2846. In an action for an injury caused to plaintiff by the starting, without his knowledge, of a blower in defendant's planing mill, it was proper to refuse to allow defendant to run the blower in the presence of the jury, who, under permission, were examining the mill; it appearing that the construction of the blower had been changed since the injury.—Kinney v. Folkerts, 84 Mich. 616.

¶ 2847. In an action to recover the price of a machine, sold by plaintiff to defendant, defendant claimed that the machine failed to operate correctly. Held, not error to allow a witness to operate the machine before the jury and to explain the principle upon which it worked, there being testimony in the case showing the identity of the machine and its unchanged condition.—National Cash Register Co. v. Blumenthal, 85 Mich. 464.

§ 571. Reproduction of sound by phonograph.

¶ 2848. In condemnation proceedings for a right of way by a railroad company it was proper to permit the operation in the presence of the jury of a phonograph reproducing sounds claimed to have been made by the operation of trains in proximity to the landowner's hotel where the proper foundation had been laid.—Boyne City, G. & A. R. Co. v. Anderson, 146 Mich. 328.

§ 572. Appearance as shown by photographs.

X-ray picture of injury as best evidence, see ante § 109.

Photographs as documentary evidence, see ante § 505.

Admissibility of pictures or photographs to corroborate or contradict witnesses, see Witnesses, VI.

¶ 2849. In an action upon an insurance policy where the defense is a false statement in the application that the assured was in good health at the time it was made, a photograph of the assured offered to show her healthy appearance is incompetent.—Brown v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 65 Mich. 306.

¶ 2851. Photographic copies of handwriting are inadmissible as evidence of existing documents if the originals can be had.—Maclean v. Scripps, 52 Mich. 214.

¶ 2852. In an action for personal injuries a photograph of an ulcerated sore on the leg as a claimed result of the injury is competent evidence and admissible.—Davis v. City of Adrian, 147 Mich. 300.

¶ 2853. It is not error to admit photographs of sections of tools enlarged so as to explain and illustrate the testimony of an expert witness as to microscopic tests which he had made.—Potvin v. West Bay City Shipbuilding Co., 156 Mich. 201.

§ 573. Inspection of person for resemblance or identity.

Opinion as to person's resemblance to photograph, see ante ¶ 1304.

Resemblance of bastard as evidencing paternity, see Bastards §§ 8, 10.

¶ 2854. It is not clearly error to permit argument in a bastardy case upon the resemblance between the child and the respondent.—People v. White, 53 Mich. 537.

§ 574. Examination of alleged incompetent.

¶ 2855. At the hearing on a bill to set aside and annul a deed on the ground of the mental incompetency of the grantor it is proper to bring him before the court to afford the judge an opportunity of seeing him, and of questioning him if desirable.—Benson v. Raymond, 142 Mich. 357.

§ 575. Exhibition of person or injured part.

For resemblance or competency of the person, see ante §§ 573, 574.

Power of court to compel, see post § 577.

Photograph of injured parts, see ante ¶ 2852.

Physical examination of the person before trial to prepare or to qualify experts, see Discovery § 9.

Exhibition of injury suffered by assault, see Indictment, VIII, B.

¶ 2856. It is not competent to allow a jury to determine for itself the correctness of a physician's treatment of a woman's fractured leg; and the court is justified in refusing to permit the jury to inspect the leg for that purpose, even when such inspection is asked by the woman.—Carstens v. Hanselman, 61 Mich. 426.

¶ 2857. The trial court, when entertaining a motion to compel the plaintiff in a personal injury case to display the injured part to the jury, must be ruled by considerations of delicacy, also by that of whether the effect will be merely cumulative evidence, or evidence unnecessary or not material to aid the jury.—Graves v. City of Battle Creek, 95 Mich. 266.

¶ 2858. Where, in an action for negligent injury, there is testimony and a question that plaintiff's broken leg has shrivelled, he may be allowed to exhibit it to the jury as evidence of its present condition.—Langworthy v. Township of Green, 95 Mich. 93.

¶ 2859. Where plaintiff in an action for negligent injury claimed that such injury resulted in a swelling of the ankle and in a cracking of the skin of the foot, and that such condition was continuous to the time of the trial, she was properly allowed to exhibit the limb that the jury might see its condition though two years had elapsed.—Edwards v. Village of Three Rivers, 96 Mich. 625.

¶ 2860. In an action to recover for the services of physicians who had treated victims of a wreck on the railroad of defendant, it was not error to refuse to compel a witness for defendant, who was one of the wreck victims and had been treated by plaintiff, to exhibit his leg to the jury.—McKnight v. Detroit & M. Ry. Co., 135 Mich. 307.

¶ 2861. In a suit for personal injuries the trial judge does not abuse his discretion in permitting plaintiff to exhibit his injured arm to the jury.—Barfoot v. White Star Line, 170 Mich. 349.

§ 576. Foundation proofs of identity, etc.

See also post ¶ 2928.

Proof that machine is unchanged when operated before jury, see ante ¶ 2847.
Effect of subsequent changes, see also ante ¶ 2846.
Foundation for photographs, see also ante ¶ 2850.
Foundation proofs of genuineness of writings offered for comparison, see ante § 516.
Admissibility of foundation evidence to show that object introduced remains unchanged, see also Electricity ¶ 26.

¶ 2862. Where a stringer claimed to have been removed from a defective sidewalk in making repairs after an injury is not sufficiently identified as coming from the walk—it having been found standing against a building near by—it is not admissible in evidence.—McGrail v. City of Kalamazoo, 94 Mich. 52.

¶ 2863. It is error to permit plaintiff, suing for a dog-bite, three years and four months after the bite and nine months after the time during which the declaration claims he suffered from such bite, to exhibit the condition of the bitten limb without any testimony tending to show that it is not changed for the worse.—French v. Wilkinson, 93 Mich. 322.

§ 577. Power to compel exhibition or demonstration.

To compel examination before trial, see Discovery.

¶ 2864. The court has power to require a plaintiff suing for an injury to her arm to allow a physician to examine the arm in the jury's presence.—Graves v. City of Battle Creek, 95 Mich. 266.

¶ 2865. Where the genuineness of his signature is in issue, a party cannot be required to write his name in court for purposes of comparison.—First National Bank v. Robert, 41 Mich. 709.

X. WEIGHT, PREPONDERANCE AND SUFFICIENCY.

§ 578. In general; preponderance rule.

See note under § 586, post.
Statutory degrees required such as "positive" proof, see post § 579.
Statutory effect of record evidence, see post § 580.
Stipulations controlling evidence, see post § 581.
Sufficiency, weight, effect, and construction of evidence, see post §§ 582-610.
Conflicting or balanced evidences, see post § 604 et seq.
Relative weight of numbers, numerical preponderance in conflict, see post § 604.
Positive testimony overweighing greater number of negative witnesses, see also post § 605.
Issues in civil cases involving criminal acts, see post § 585.
Rule under former practice as to number of witnesses to overcome sworn answer, see Equity § 165c.
Instructions on preponderance rule and on numerical disparity of witnesses, see Instructions, V.
Establishment of facts in litigation by other means than evidence, see Estoppel; Former Adjudication; Stipulations; Trial, V (admissions other than by pleadings made in open court); Pleading, IX (issues admitted); Equity, VII, F (admissions by pleadings).

¶ 2866. A preponderance of the evidence is all that is required in any civil case to sustain a verdict, judgment, or decree.—Fitch v. Vatter, 143 Mich. 568.

¶ 2867. "Preponderance of evidence" means simply evidence that outweighs that which is offered to oppose it.—Strand v. Chicago & W. M. R. Co., 67 Mich. 380.

¶ 2868. Under the rule requiring a preponderance of evidence in civil cases, plaintiff has the burden merely of producing evidence which, when weighed with that opposed to it, has more convincing force, from which it results that the greater probability is in his favor.—Hoffman v. Loud, 111 Mich. 156.

¶ 2870. A preponderance of evidence does not mean the number of witnesses on one side or the other. It means rather the quality and kind of evidence produced.—Newman v. Bowman, How. N. P. 46.

¶ 2871. No greater preponderance of proof is required to authorize a verdict in one civil action than in another.—Elliott v. Van Buren, 33 Mich. 49.

¶ 2872. In an action for an assault and battery accompanied by an attempt to ravish, such attempt need not be made out beyond a reasonable doubt.—Elliott v. Van Buren, 33 Mich. 49.

¶ 2873. Proof beyond a reasonable doubt is not required in a civil action charging assault and battery with ravishment.—Schenk v. Dunkelow, 70 Mich. 89.

§ 579. "Positive" or other statutory degrees and kinds of proof.

Conflict between positive and negative, see post §§ 605, 606.

¶ 2874. By "positive proof" required in a statute is meant direct proof, as contradistinguished from that which is circumstantial or merely presumptive; and it excludes a mere admission of a party.—Niles v. Rhodes, 7 Mich. 374.

§ 580. Statutory effect to be given record evidence.

Conclusiveness of record evidence, see post § 601.
Lessened strictness required where records are ancient or destroyed, see post ¶ 2899.
Force and effect of copies of records and documents, see ante § 566.

¶ 2875. Laws 1867, Act No. 20 (How. St., § 5678), providing, in effect, that deeds executed by executors, administrators and sheriffs, or the record thereof, shall be prima facie evidence of the regularity of all proceedings required by law anterior to such deed, applies to records existing at the time the act was passed as well as the records made subsequently.—Sauers v. Giddings, 90 Mich. 50.

¶ 2876. Under Laws 1865, Act No. 315, which declares that the "Scranton Abstract," so called, owned by Kent county shall be "public records" and "shall have the same virtue and effect as by present provisions of law the records of the office of register of deeds do possess," was designed to give it the same evidentiary effect either under present or future law as is given to other public records.—Sauers v. Giddings, 90 Mich. 50.

§ 581. Stipulations for proof.

Sufficiency of abstracts of title admitted under stipulation, see post ¶ 2900.
Validity of stipulations as to requisite kind and weight of evidence, see also Contracts § 332.
Conclusiveness and effect of stipulations of facts, see Stipulations.

¶ 2878. The parties to a contract cannot stipulate therein as to the kind of evidence that shall alone authorize a recovery thereon.—Utter v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 65 Mich. 545.

§ 582. Sufficiency of proofs.

Of negative of an issue, see post § 583.
Of secondary evidence, see post § 584.
To prove particular facts, see post §§ 586-589.
To prove facts involving criminality, see post § 585.
Preponderance rule, see ante § 578.

Consideration of the evidence as a whole, see post §§ 596-598.
Conclusiveness and impeachment, see post §§ 601-603.
Conflict in the evidence, see post § 604 et seq.
Of opinion evidence, see post §§ 599, 600.
Conclusiveness and unimpeachability of evidence, see post §§ 601-603.
Conclusiveness of presumptions, see ante § 33.
Evidence or presumptions effective to shift burden of proof, see ante § 70.
Sufficiency of foundation proofs to admit documents, see ante § 515 et seq.
Sufficiency of proof of declarations and statements out of court and of former testimony, see ante §§ 345-347.
Admissibility of circumstantial evidence, see ante, III-IX; and see specific topics treating of the thing to be proved.
Sufficiency of circumstantial proof of adultery in divorce, see Divorce § 69.
Sufficiency of testimony of plaintiff to make prima facie case, see also Attorneys ¶ 157.
Sufficiency of testimony of or admissions by party in divorce, see Divorce § 66.
Directing verdict because of insufficiency of evidence to go to jury, see Directing Verdict, § 5 et seq.
Rules for review on appeal or error, see Appeal, XII, E.
Statutory rules for prima facie proof by various evidences, e. g., seals, incorporation, copartnership, see Jud. Act, chap. XVII, §§ 46-49; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12534-12537.

¶ 2879. The jury are not warranted in finding a fact established by a greater probability unless, also, the evidence satisfies them that the fact exists; the conclusion that it exists may be drawn from a preponderance of probabilities in its favor, but the probabilities must be such that the conclusion may be and is drawn, or it is not proved.—Dunbar v. McGill, 64 Mich. 676.

¶ 2880. In civil cases a jury cannot be required to discard testimony which produces a rational belief because it does not conclusively establish the fact to be proved.—Watkins v. Wallace, 19 Mich. 57.

¶ 2881. Evidence is not merely that which a witness swears to. Evidence is that which satisfies the consciences and convinces the minds of the jurors of the truth of the existence of a fact sought to be established.—Newman v. Bowman, How. N. P. 46.

¶ 2882. An admission by defendant to plaintiff's agent who presents an account to him, of the correctness of the account, is sufficient proof thereof.—Bjorkquest v. Wagar, 83 Mich. 226.

¶ 2884. The presumption that one is cognizant of the contents of his own books of account may be entirely overcome by his positive, uncontradicted testimony that the accounts were kept, and entries made, by a bookkeeper, and were never examined by the party himself, and that he had no knowledge thereof.—Hurley v. Watson, 68 Mich. 531.

¶ 2885. One cannot ask for a verdict upon the testimony of a witness whom he has himself impeached.—Bell v. Zelmer, 75 Mich. 66.

Conflict of positive with negative testimony, see post §§ 605, 606.

¶ 2886. Where a party is required to prove a negative the same clear proof is not necessary as where proof of an affirmative is required.—Young v. Stephens, 9 Mich. 500.

¶ 2887. Very slight evidence only should be demanded of a party called upon to prove a negative.—Taff v. Hosmer, 14 Mich. 309.

Sufficiency of proof of loss of originals to admit secondary proofs, see ante §§ 148-151.

Proper witnesses and means of proving contents of writing secondarily, see ante §§ 152, 153.

Equal competency of parol and secondary written proofs, see ante § 154.

Existence of contract proved by secondary evidence as jury question, see Contracts ¶ 1405.

¶ 2888. The refusal, after reasonable notice, to produce a document in the possession of the adverse party, and which the party demanding it is entitled to introduce in evidence, authorizes proof by secondary evidence; but it does not dispense with such proof as is attainable, nor allow the tenor of the instrument to be made out by anything less than satisfactory evidence of all that is essential.—Moulton v. Mason, 21 Mich. 364.

¶ 2889. The contents of a lost instrument secondarily proved should be established by proofs that satisfy the mind as to its contents.—Shouler v. Benander, 80 Mich. 531.

¶ 2890. In proving the contents of lost instruments it is sufficient to give the substance.—Holmes v. Deppert, 122 Mich. 275.

¶ 2891. Secondary evidence of a contract, said to have been lost, is insufficient where one of the witnesses was not believed and the others either did not agree as to its terms or else did not see it, and the person alleged to have made it with defendant denies that there was any writing.—Seymour v. Canfield, 122 Mich. 212.

¶ 2892. The substance of a lost deed is sufficiently proved where a witness who is not disputed testified positively that it was an absolute conveyance of a right of way across lot 41, a right of way being sufficient description after it had been located by the parties and used for 20 years by the grantee.—Thomson v. Flint & P. M. R. Co., 131 Mich. 95.

§ 585. ——Issues of criminality in civil suits.

¶ 2894. Proof beyond reasonable doubt can only be required in criminal cases; in all others, including those, even, that involve facts of a criminal nature, the question is one of preponderance.—Elliott v. Van Buren, 33 Mich. 49; Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co. of Gratiot County v. Gargett, 42 Mich. 289; Peoples v. Evening News Ass'n, 51 Mich. 11.

¶ 2895. In a civil case involving an issue of criminal misconduct a preponderance is enough, provided it overcomes the presumption of innocence.—Monaghan v. Agricultural Fire Ins. Co. of Watertown, N. Y., 53 Mich. 238.

¶ 2896. Proof beyond a reasonable doubt is not required in a civil action charging assault and battery with ravishment.—Schenk v. Dunkelow, 70 Mich. 89.

¶ 2897. While in a civil case it is only necessary to establish the commission of a crime by a preponderance of evidence, there should, however, be testimony of sufficient weight and character to satisfy the court or jury that a crime has been committed.—Baird v. Abbey, 73 Mich. 347.

§ 586. ——Of particular facts.

[Note. For cases on the sufficiency of the evidence as presented and considered to prove a given issue consult the specific topic treating of that issue in the portion devoted to "evidence" or to "remedies and procedure." The sufficiency of the evidence to establish an issue or a cause of action presents a question much more closely related to the law of that issue than to the general law of evidence, and for that reason only such cases as lay down general rules for sufficiency and weight of evidence are retained in this division. See cross-references which follow.]

Sufficiency of proof of incorporation, see Corporations § 15.

Certainty and clarity of proof of justification in libel or slander, see Libel, VIII.

§ 587. ——To establish foreign law.

¶ 2898. Testimony of a barrister and solicitor engaged in practice in Canada as to the prevailing practice in Canada is sufficient to establish the procedural law there in force in the absence of proof of any contrary precedent (or, though the opinion does not so state, of any statute or regulation to the contrary).—Patterson v. Kennedy, 122 Mich. 343.

§ 588. ——To prove title or possession.

Conflict of oral with written evidence, see post § 607.
Effect of counter testimony by surveyor, see also ante ¶ 2842.
The sufficiency of proof of title or possession usually is decided in such a way as to be referable to one of the specific topics, and this has been done leaving but a few holdings of a general character. See Adverse Possession §§ 48-51; Conversion §§ 37, 38; Ejectment § 42 et seq.; Forcible Entry, II; Replevin, III; Trespass, II; and other specific topics.
Sufficiency of proofs requisite in suits in equity to overcome or supply lack of written evidences, see Rescission, VI; Reformation, III; Specific Performance, IV; Mortgages, II, B, IX.

¶ 2899. Proof of title resting upon ancient probate proceedings is not required to be as strict as if they were recent, especially if had at a time the judicial records of which are so far lost or destroyed as to make it impossible in most cases to make a complete exhibit of all the papers or proceedings.—Willetts v. Mandlebaum, 28 Mich. 521.

¶ 2900. Mere abstracts of title which are unintelligible without the aid of some proof to explain the meaning of abbreviations and initial letters used in them, introduced in evidence under a stipulation which does not determine what effect shall be given to them, are insufficient of themselves to establish title to lands which became material to show the real facts on an issue of fraud in selling property for less than it was worth with a good title.—Weeks v. Downing, 30 Mich. 4.

¶ 2901. A written conveyance of timber does not, as against a stranger to the deed, conclusively show title; but the real owner may show that title was so made for security.—Busch v. Pollock, 41 Mich. 64.

¶ 2903. Testimony that plaintiff in an action for damages to crops by flooding, was in "possession and occupancy" of the farm which was owned by his father and mother, at the time in question and "had growing crops there," and that a tenant had half a share, constituted evidence that in some way plaintiff acquired his parent's interest in the growing crops before they were damaged by defendant.—Hovey v. Grand Trunk W. Ry. Co., 135 Mich. 147.

¶ 2904. It cannot be said that there is no evidence of the title of plaintiff in ejectment, claiming under foreclosure sale of a certain railroad, where defendant put in a deed to himself with a recital contained in it that a predecessor in title of the plaintiff owned all of the land but a described strip; for although such deed was no estoppel because the parties were not the same yet the recital was some evidence of the facts recited.—Pere Marquette R. Co. v. Graham, 136 Mich. 444.

§ 589. ——Authorship or genuineness of writings.

On uncontradicted testimony respecting alteration of instrument, see also post ¶ 2915.
Sufficiency of evidence of execution and genuineness of instruments between parties, see Execution of Instruments, I.

¶ 2905. A receipt for payment of professional services purported to be signed by plaintiffs in their firm name. Defendant testified that he wrote the receipt, and that plaintiff signed it in his presence; that, after the receipt had been written, such plaintiff stated that it was not dated, and thereupon dated it and signed it; but that witness thought it was given in July, instead of February, its purported date. Plaintiff testified that he never executed the paper, either on the date it purported to bear or upon any date; that he could not state positively whether or not the signature was his; that the paper bore evidences of having had writing upon it before, which had been erased by a rubber; that it was his impression that he wrote the date and signature; that, it being in pencil, it was difficult for him to say; and that, if it had been done in ink, he could tell a great deal better. Held, that it could not be said that the genuineness of the signature was admitted.—Howell v. Smith, 108 Mich. 350.

¶ 2906. The regents of the University of Michigan filed a bill against the director of the chemical laboratory and his assistant, an officer appointed by their authority, for an accounting for moneys received in that department and in which there was a deficit. The suit involved the question, as between the defendants, of the genuineness of the initial of the director, used in certain stubbooks as a voucher to indicate that the assistant had accounted to him for moneys received. The director claimed that these initials were forged. Held, on appeal that they were forged, upon comparison of the handwriting of both defendants, and especially of the director, which had changed somewhat, with that of the disputed vouchers; and in the light, also, of expert testimony and, particularly, of the conduct of the assistant in admitting delinquencies in his accounts of moneys received, when the deficit was first called to his attention, and in borrowing money and mortgaging his property to make them good, and giving security to meet whatever deficits might be discovered.—University of Michigan v. Rose, 45 Mich. 284.

¶ 2907. In considering the testimony of a witness his unfamiliarity with our language and customs, and his capacity for comprehending and answering the questions propounded through the medium of an interpreter, must be borne in mind.—Walker v. Western Underwriters' Ass'n, 142 Mich. 162.

¶ 2908. Testimony may be given the construction which the parties placed upon it, and hence may be held to afford evidence of a particular fact, although a charge of perjury could not be made with relation to such evidence because of its uncertain meaning.—Hillman v. Hulett, 149 Mich. 289. (Blair, Montgomery and Hooker, JJ., dissenting.)

¶ 2909. The testimony of a defendant in an action as to material facts is for the jury to weigh the same as that of any other witness.—People v. Traves, 188 Mich. 345.

¶ 2910. Where part of complainant's testimony was taken before, and part after, the death of her husband, so that there was no opportunity to take his testimony to explain the transactions testified to by her, and concerning which her bill for accounting was filed, her testimony should be carefully scrutinized, and her claim, if allowed, found to rest upon a solid foundation.—Moore v. Smith, 103 Mich. 387.

¶ 2911. Evidence introduced without restriction is available on any issue which it tends to prove, and which is within the pleadings.—Malkowski v. Olfs, 161 Mich. 303.

Sufficiency of evidence, in absence of eyewitness, that death or injury resulted from "accident," within meaning of Workmen's Compensation Acts, see note 10 N. C. C. A. 618-645.

§ 591. ——Uncontradicted evidence.

Inferences against uncontradicted witnesses, see post § 609.

¶ 2912. Where no attempt is made to meet complainant's evidence in a suit to set aside a partition for fraud, its accuracy is substantially admitted.—Adair v. Cummin, 48 Mich. 375.

¶ 2913. Testimony must be taken as true where the adverse party with knowledge of the facts is in court and fails to take the stand to deny it.—Fruit Dispatch Co. v. Russo, 125 Mich. 306.

¶ 2914. A jury is not required to accept as absolute verity every uncontradicted statement of a witness.—Yonkus v. McKay, 186 Mich. 203.

¶ 2915. A case turned upon the question whether an alteration in a written instrument was by consent of defendant. There was testimony that it was made by a subscribing witness, and none that defendant made it. The judge, from inspection, concluded that it was in the handwriting of defendant, and decreed accordingly. Held to be error.—Sheldon v. Hawes, 15 Mich. 519.

§ 592. ——Error or falsity affecting weight.

Falsity of testimony discrediting witnesses, see Witnesses, VI, A.

Discrediting testimony entire because shown false in part, see Witnesses, VI, A.

Evidence by discredited witness, see also Conversion ¶ 198.

¶ 2916. Where a bank entry is incorrect on its face in one particular, the fact is entitled to be considered as bearing on its accuracy in other respects.—Ortmann v. Merchants' Bank of Canada, 41 Mich. 482.

§ 593. ——Withholding or suppression affecting weight.

Presumptions against party failing to adduce available evidence, see ante §§ 62-65.

¶ 2917. It is a maxim that all evidence must be weighed according to the proof which it was in the power of one side to have produced, and in the power of the other to have contradicted.—Wallace v. Harris, 32 Mich. 380.

¶ 2918. The fact, that the testator's papers, including the will if there was one, fell under the control of the contestants who had a powerful motive for suppressing it, is to be considered in weighing the evidence in support of the case for the existence of a lost will.—Ewing v. McIntyre, 141 Mich. 506.

§ 594. ——Admissions and declarations out of court.

Construction and effect of admissions, see ante §§ 440, 441.

Conclusiveness of party's admissions, see post § 602.

Of served copy of complaint in other action put in as admission, see ante ¶ 573.

Admissions of matter of law, see ante § 360.

¶ 2919. The weight to be given to admissions depends upon the circumstances under which they are made, and the mode in which they are proved.—Niles v. Rhodes, 7 Mich. 374.

¶ 2921. Testimony of oral admissions has always been regarded as the least satisfactory evidence for the establishment of disputed facts, because it depends upon the intelligence and accuracy of the memory of the transmitter, his freedom from bias and his opportunity to understand and interpret the language and meaning of the person whose admission is the subject of the testimony. It is even less satisfactory when the only person who could correct the testimony is dead or absent.—Boam v. Greenman, 147 Mich. 106.

¶ 2921a. Receipted bills for goods may be used with the testimony of the parties to show a debt and payment of it; but of themselves will not show it or the value of the goods.—Dyer v. Rosenthal, 45 Mich. 588.

§ 595. ——Documentary or official evidence.

Deed recitals as proof of heirship, see also ante ¶¶ 2580, 2582.

Recital as evidence rather than as estoppel, see Estoppel ¶ 26.

Statutory effect to be given record evidence, see ante § 580.

Probative force and tendency of copies and certificates, see ante § 566.

Tax receipt as evidence between third persons, see also ante ¶ 2737.

Error affecting weight, see ante § 592.

Conflict between oral and written evidence, see post § 607.

¶ 2922. A bank depositor's pass book is the book of original entry of deposits, and is entitled to as much credence as the deposit slip and the books of the bank; hence it is proper to refuse an instruction that such slip and books are as against the pass book prima facie evidence of the amount of the deposits.—Kux v. Central Michigan Sav. Bank, 93 Mich. 511.

¶ 2923. In replevin by the debtor against an attaching officer for articles which plaintiff had selected from the property seized as exempt from attachment, being equal in value to $250 according to the officer's appraisal, such appraisal is conclusive as to value, if the articles were in fact exempt as belonging to the class specified in the statute; but if the property is not exempt the value is open to proof.—Wood v. Bresnahan, 63 Mich. 614.

¶ 2924. Under Comp. Laws 1897, § 10170. How. 2nd Ed., § 12815, the certificate of the secretary of state relative to the filing of the annual report of a corporation is presumptive evidence of the facts so certified in the same manner and with like effect as if such officer had personally so testified in court at the time of trial.—Macbeth-Evans Glass Co. v. Gumbinsky, 201 Mich. 18.

¶ 2925. Testimony of one who took an acknowledgment, that the grantor was in full possession of his faculties at the time, is lessened in weight; where it also appears that at the time he did not carefully investigate the condition of things in the beneficiary's absence, though the circumstances were suspicious.—Duncombe v. Richards, 46 Mich. 166.

§ 596. Consideration as a whole.

Of adverse party's testimony, favorable and unfavorable portions, see post § 597.
Of cross-examination with direct, see post § 598.
Construction and effect of admissions, see ante §§ 440, 441.
Conflicting or balanced evidence, see post § 604 et seq.

¶ 2926. One cannot repudiate part of the evidence given in his behalf and claim benefit from the rest.—Humphrey v. Hurd, 31 Mich. 436.

¶ 2927. Where the question before a jury is whether a person is a party to a transaction, and it has to be determined by his acts and conduct, such acts should be considered all together and not separately.—Ward v. Beecher, 56 Mich. 616.

¶ 2928. Where in an action against a municipality and a telephone company for a death caused by coming into contact with an electric wire, the separate testimony of several witnesses may not be sufficient to identify a piece of wire offered in evidence but is sufficient when the testimony is considered as an entirety, held, the wire was identified.—Sykes v. Village of Portland, 177 Mich. 290.

¶ 2929. The general rule is that the whole of an admission must be taken together, although a jury is not bound to give equal weight to that which operates in favor of the party making it.—Case v. Dean, 16 Mich. 12.

§ 597. ——Testimony of adverse party.

Weight of party's testimony, see ante § 590.
Right to rest on admission made in testifying without being bound by the testimony, see post ¶ 2953.
Right to impeach or contradict one's own witness, including adversary called as witness, see Witnesses, VI.

¶ 2930. Complainants must accept as a whole the statements of the defendants when they make them their witnesses and rest the case on their evidence.—Darling v. Hurst, 39 Mich. 765; Brigham v. Fawcett, 42 Mich. 542.

¶ 2931. Where complainant, seeking to have a deed from husband to wife set aside as in fraud of creditors, relies solely upon defendant's testimony, he cannot discriminate between favorable testimony and that which is unfavorable where all is equally probable, merely on suspicion that the former is false.—Hicks v. McLachlan, 94 Mich. 278.

¶ 2932. All of the testimony of the defendant in a bill in aid of execution who is made complainant's witness must be considered and not that only which tends to support the charge of fraud made by complainant.—Hendrickson v. Voss, 115 Mich. 57.

§ 598. ——Of cross-examination with direct.

¶ 2933. The testimony given by a witness on legitimate cross-examination constitutes a part of his evidence in chief, and is, like that, to be treated as evidence on the part of the party calling the witness.—Campau v. Dewey, 9 Mich. 381; Wilson v. Wagar, 26 Mich. 452; Campau v. Traub, 27 Mich. 215; Schratz v. Schratz, 35 Mich. 485; Turnbull v. Richardson, 69 Mich. 400.

¶ 2934. A witness' testimony as given on direct and cross-examination must be taken together.—Maxwell v. Bay City Bridge Co., 46 Mich. 278; Gordon v. Cook, 47 Mich. 248.

§ 599. Conclusions by nonexperts.

Of expert opinions, see post § 600.

¶ 2935. The weight of the opinion of a nonexpert witness as to the mental capacity of a testator depends upon the opportunity he has had to form an opinion.—In re Merriman's Appeal, 108 Mich. 454.

¶ 2936. A promoter's testimony that corporation ratified "his acts" in securing subscribers to stock is not evidence that corporation ever ratified his representations to, or engagements with, subscribers.—Rapid Hook & Eye Co. v. De Ruyter, 117 Mich. 547.

§ 600. Opinions of experts.

To prove foreign laws, see ante § 587.
Of nonexpert opinions, see ante § 599.
Weight of surveyor's opinion as to boundary location, see Boundaries § 35.
In criminal cases, see Indictment, VIII, C.

¶ 2937. Expert testimony is not held in the highest esteem and should be limited to its proper uses.—McNally v. Colwell, 91 Mich. 527.

¶ 2938. Testimony of one who has sufficient knowledge to qualify as an expert, but who has no personal experience with the subject-matter (spavin in horses), is of little relative weight, though competent.—Rogers v. Ferris, 107 Mich. 126.

¶ 2939. In a conflict between scientific and other testimony the judge cannot decide for the jury that one witness is more to be regarded than another.—Watson v. Watson, 58 Mich. 507.

¶ 2940. Expert testimony as to the character of the sparks which, under certain circumstances, would come out of a smokestack, offered for the purpose of showing that the fire might have been set by another vessel than defendant's, is insufficient to justify a submission of that question to the jury, where the undisputed testimony is to the effect that at the time no sparks were coming from such other vessel.—Burrows v. Delta Transp. Co., 106 Mich. 582.

¶ 2941. The opinion of a physician as to mental competency, aside from the question of insanity, is entitled to no greater consideration than that of a layman having equal facilities for observation.—Maynard v. Vinton, 59 Mich. 139.

¶ 2942. Evidence of plaintiff's possession of what he has occupied as his lot cannot be overthrown, in a case where title is not in question, by a surveyor's testimony as to where the line ought to have been.—Fisher v. Dowling, 66 Mich. 370.

¶ 2944. Distinct and reliable evidence of facts outweighs the theories of experts as to their scientific possibility.—Treat v. Bates, 27 Mich. 390; Stone v. Chicago & W. M. R. Co., 66 Mich. 76.

¶ 2945. Expert opinions are of no force as against direct testimony for showing the speed of a locomotive, especially if many facts necessary for forming an opinion were not placed before the witness.—Viets v. Toledo, A. A. & G. T. R. Co., 55 Mich. 120.

¶ 2946. In an action against the receivers of a street railway company for the death of a yardmaster in a crossing collision between a street car and a backing steam railroad train, where the yardmaster was at the rear end and in charge of the train, and where there was opinion evidence, not objected to, that it was negligent and unsafe to back the train across the street without flagging in the absence of a watchman, such opinions were not conclusive on the jury and were properly left to the jury with the testimony tending to show an exceptionally dangerous crossing.—Philip v. Heraty, 135 Mich. 446.

Of admissions and receipts, see post §§ 602, 603.
Inconclusiveness of muniments of title as against third persons, see also ante ¶ 2901.

Directing verdict because evidence on material point is indisputable, see Directing Verdict §§ 2, 3.

¶ 2947. Documentary evidence, comprising books of account, cannot be impeached by the party requiring its production and relying upon it.—Hulbert v. Hammond, 41 Mich. 343.

¶ 2948. A charge upon a vendor's books is not conclusive as to whom the sale was made and credit given, but may be explained and shown to be a mistake, and it may be shown that the sale was actually made and credit given to a third party.—Loranger v. Foley, 79 Mich. 244.

¶ 2949. A person against whom criminal proceedings were instituted for perjury, alleged to have been committed by him in a case to which he was a party in justice's court, sued for malicious prosecution. In this suit the justice was produced as a witness for plaintiff and testified that he could not recollect all that was sworn to before him, but had some portion of it minuted down. Held, that he could produce his memoranda, after testifying that they were made at the time the testimony was given and were correct. But such memoranda are not conclusive as to the facts sworn to, and are entitled to no more weight than the testimony of the witness would have if he were testifying from recollection; the weight of the evidence is for the jury, who must also decide whether the memoranda were correctly made and what they tend to prove. —Spalding v. Lowe, 56 Mich. 366.

¶ 2950. While school records are not conclusive in themselves as against all other evidence, yet, if they are shown to have been made in the ordinary course of duty, they are entitled to very great weight in the absence of testimony that they have been tampered with. So held in a case where such were produced to show plaintiff's attendance at school at times he claimed to have been absent by reason of injuries alleged as received by him through the defendant's wrongful act.—Thurstin v. Luce, 61 Mich. 292.

§ 602. ——Admissions by party.

Effect of pleadings in equity as conclusive evidence and of admissions by the pleadings, see Equity, VII, F.

Binding force of admissions in open court by party or counsel on trial, see Trial, V, A.

¶ 2951. Evidence that defendant, who was sought to be held liable to his daughter, upon a bill in chancery, as trustee of bonds and mortgages transferred to him by his deceased wife, testified, in an action against him by a creditor, that he had received from his wife bonds and mortgages to a specified amount, while competent against him, is not conclusive, and a finding, based upon other competent evidence in the subsequent proceeding, that the amount received was less than that testified to by him, is permissible. —Hebard v. Reeves, 112 Mich. 175.

¶ 2952. Admissions stand upon a different footing from that held by mere testimony; the jury hears the testimony, weighs it, and believes it or not, as the case may be, but a judicial admission made intelligently and with deliberation establishes the fact with reference to which it is made, and the jury must accept it as so established.—Connor v. Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co., 168 Mich. 29.

¶ 2953. One of the parties to an action may avail himself of an admission made by the other party when sworn as a witness in his own behalf, without being bound by other parts of his testimony.—Liesemer v. Burg, 106 Mich. 124.

§ 603. ——Receipts and acknowledgments in writing.

Instructions on effect of receipt, see also Payment, V.

¶ 2954. Since a receipt may be explained, one signed in ignorance of the debtor's accountability for certain moneys concerned does not prevent the signer from recovering them.—Hart v. Gould, 62 Mich. 262.

¶ 2955. A receipt given by the register of deeds is not conclusive evidence of the payment of redemption money to him as against a purchaser.—Woodbury v. Lewis, W. 256.

¶ 2956. A recital in a deed of the amount of the consideration paid for the land conveyed is not conclusive upon the grantor, who, in an action for breach of covenant, may show that he received a less sum.—Cook v. Curtis, 68 Mich. 611.

¶ 2957. The recital of a consideration in a deed is not conclusive, and it may be shown to be greater or less than the amount stated.—Dodder v. Snyder, 110 Mich. 69.

¶ 2959. In an action to recover an unpaid balance upon an account for labor the fact that plaintiff submitted two bills of particulars differing in their items, and he has signed a statement and receipt when payments were made inconsistent therewith are not conclusive against him, but there is a plain issue of fact for the jury to determine. —Snyder v. Patton & Gibson Co., 143 Mich. 350.

¶ 2959a. One who obtains a payment from his employer on the representation that it is a settlement in full is presumptively bound by the representation, though not conclusively.—Judd v. Burton, 51 Mich. 74.

§ 604. Conflict or balance of evidence.

Province of jury to choose between diverse inferences, see also Directing Verdict § 16.

¶ 2960. In cases of conflict in oral testimony, that will be entitled to a preponderance which is most reasonable in view of all the surrounding circumstances, and is most consistent with conceded facts.—Kimball v. Myers, 21 Mich. 276.

¶ 2961. The court, in passing on conflicting proofs, will follow the probabilities though they are contrary to the impressions of witnesses of undoubted integrity of purpose.—Salisbury v. Salisbury, 49 Mich. 306.

¶ 2963. Complainant's case is not made out where the evidence is as consistent with defendant's theory as with complainant's.—Dragoo v. Dragoo, 50 Mich. 573.

§ 605. Positive and negative evidence.

What regarded as negative, see post § 606.
Sufficiency of evidence to establish negative, see ante § 583.
Presumptions opposed to positive evidence, see post § 609.

¶ 2965. Positive testimony as to the giving of stationary railway signals near a highway crossing cannot, as matter of law, control negative testimony on the same subject. If such proofs conflict their weight is for the jury.—Rhoades v. Chicago & G. T. Ry. Co., 58 Mich. 263.

¶ 2966. The testimony of bystanders that they did not hear the statutory signals which a railroad company claims to have given before making a crossing is negative evidence, and without weight, unless there is something in the surrounding circumstances tending to show a probability that the witnesses would have heard the signals if given.—McCullough v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. Ste. M. R. Co., 101 Mich. 234.

¶ 2967. The testimony of six witnesses that they did not hear the bell or whistle of an engine, is negative and without weight to go to the jury as against that of sixteen witnesses, six paying attention, that they heard them, including that of the enginemen that the bell was automatically operated and had been set in operation some time before. Shufelt v. Flint & P. M. R. Co., 96 Mich. 327, per Grant, J., Long and Hooker, JJ., concurring in the result without considering this point, and Montgomery and McGrath, JJ., dissenting on the ground that though perhaps not strong enough to support a jury finding that the signals were not sounded, yet the evidence was not so negative as to be withheld from the jury.

¶ 2968. In an action for personal injuries sustained at a railroad crossing by the plaintiff while riding in a covered buggy, a verdict and judgment for the plaintiff based on the defendant's negligence should be set aside as against the weight of the evidence where seven witnesses testified that the defendant gave the necessary signals and the plaintiff alone testified that the whistle was not blown but could not say whether the bell was ringing, she being partly deaf and her testimony conflicting with that given by her on a former trial.—Bond v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 128 Mich. 577.

¶ 2970. In a suit to set aside a sewer assessment, testimony by the complainant, that he did not remember receiving notice of ordering construction of the sewer but that he would not say he did not receive such notice, is not sufficient to establish the lack of notice as against an affidavit by the service clerk of the service on the complainant three days after the council ordered the sewer and fixed the district.—Walker v. City of Detroit, 138 Mich. 639.

¶ 2970a. On a suit by a patron against the owner of a moving picture theater, the plaintiff testified that she fell on a curved step in the exit that was unlighted and without a hand rail, and her testimony was supported by four witnesses. Seven witnesses for the defense testified that hand rails had been provided and that the exit was amply equipped with electric light. There were interested and apparently disinterested witnesses on both sides and the jury viewed the premises. Held, a verdict for the defendant was not against the weight of the evidence. —Branch v. Klatt, 173 Mich. 31.

Weight of positive and negative testimony as to locomotive and street car signals, see note, 10 N. C. C. A. 571-617.

Negative testimony as to sale by association, see Associations ¶ 43.

¶ 2971. Testimony of witnesses who were watching an approaching engine under circumstances which made it improbable that signals could have been given without being heard by them, that no signals were given, is not "negative," so as to entitle the company to an instruction, in an action by one who was struck by the train, that "the positive testimony of witnesses who had opportunity to know that the signals were given should outweigh the testimony of witnesses who did not hear them, unless in some manner their attention had been called to it."—Lonis v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 111 Mich. 458.

¶ 2972. Testimony that the witnesses gave particular attention to the approach of an engine, and listened for the whistle, but that no whistle was sounded or bell rung, is not negative in its character.—McDuffie v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 98 Mich. 356.

¶ 2973. Testimony that the witness did not hear a train whistle at a certain crossing on the day when an accident occurred, although on that day he was working where he had been in the daily habit of hearing the whistle, and although the wind was blowing towards him from the crossing, was properly submitted to the jury which might regard it as more than merely negative.—Sanborn v. Detroit, B. C. & A. R. Co., 99 Mich. 1.

¶ 2974. Testimony that witnesses never heard of a sale by an association or that the buyer owned the property is negative on the question whether the sale was made.—Lingle v. Dalzell, 141 Mich. 399.

¶ 2975. To establish an equitable right in lands, in opposition to the muniments of title, the parol evidence of the understanding of the parties ought to be very clear and distinct, and should leave no doubt regarding the precise terms of the agreement.—Van Wert v. Chidester, 31 Mich. 207.

¶ 2976. Where dealings between partners, who are connected by family ties, have been carried on for a long series of years without keeping any strict account of them, but in the confidence which springs from such relations, and litigation thereon arises between them and their successors, a court will be disposed to be governed by such indications as appear in the written evidence of their transactions, rather than by the recollections of the parties.—Wiswall v. Ayres, 51 Mich. 324.

¶ 2977. A solicitor's testimony that he has examined the record of a township board and is unable to find a certain resolution cannot prevail against a paper certified according to law as a true copy of part of the record and which contains the resolution in question.—Boyce v. Auditor-General, 90 Mich. 314.

¶ 2978. Where one in possession of real estate claims a right to title contrary to the record title, he must establish the contract to convey and its alleged performance by a clear and satisfactory preponderance of evidence, or the record title must control.—Delosh v. Delosh, 171 Mich. 175.

§ 608. Acts and declarations in conflict.

Implied admission against positive evidence of contract right, see also post ¶ 2982.

¶ 2979. Where there is conflicting testimony as to the admissions of parties, it is safer to trust to the inferences to be drawn from their conduct than to attempt to reconcile such a conflict without regard to their conduct. Their acts, clearly shown, are more reliable than any recollection of their words. —Russell v. Miller, 26 Mich. 1.

§ 609. Presumptions or inferences against positive evidence.

¶ 2980. The suspicion, where a party does not call an apparently important witness, that he dares not call him, cannot have the force of evidence to establish fraud or to overturn the evidence of other facts showing good faith.—Woodhull v. Whittle, 63 Mich. 575.

¶ 2981. When the jury permits inferences to outweigh the positive testimony of witnesses not impeached generally the proved or admitted facts and the reasonable inferences therefrom should be inconsistent with such testimony.—Bowsher v. Grand Rapids & I. Ry. Co., 174 Mich. 339.

¶ 2982. The acceptance of certain amounts monthly for services does not establish conclusively that such amounts were full compensation where there is evidence of a contract for additional compensation.—Shane v. Shearsmith's Estate, 137 Mich. 82.

¶ 2983. Testimony that a letter was duly mailed, permitted the inference that it was received, notwithstanding defendant's denial. —Lee v. Huron Indemnity Union, 135 Mich. 291.

Physical facts as overcoming presumption of due care in case of fatal accident in absence of eyewitness, see note, 12 N. C. C. A. 535-549.

¶ 2984. Testimony of the lessor as to a lease necessary to defeat a claim of adverse possession, though not directly contradicted, may be discredited by circumstances where it was wholly uncorroborated and intrinsically improbable.—Howatt v. Green, 139 Mich. 289.

¶ 2985. A plaintiff testified that he was injured by breaking through the deck of a threshing machine manufactured by the defendant. His testimony was not contradicted by oral testimony. Held, the court would not hold the verdict to be against the evidence on the ground that the structure of the machine made the plaintiff's contention impossible.—Pierce v. C. H. Bidwell Thresher Co., 158 Mich. 356.

XI. WITNESSES AND MEANS OF PRODUCTION.

Swearing by uplifted hand or by affirmation instead, see Jud. Act, chap. XVII, §§ 80, 81; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12568, 12569.

§ 4. Counsel allowed to examine; number and changes.

Rules for examination, number of counsel allowed to participate, see 1916 C. C. Rule 42, § 2.

¶ 4. Under circuit court rule 63, which provides that "one counsel only on each side shall examine and cross-examine witnesses," it is held no abuse of discretion to allow one of plaintiff's attorneys to continue and complete the examination of a witness whom the other attorney had commenced to examine.—Malone v. Gates, 87 Mich. 332.

¶ 5. Where a witness who has been cross-examined by one of the attorneys for the opposing party is recalled and examined on a matter not brought out on his first examination, the court under circuit court rule 63 may refuse to permit the other attorney to cross-examine him upon such new matter.—Cook v. Standard Life & Accident Ins. Co., 86 Mich. 554.

§ 5. Questions by court.

Leading question by court, see post § 13, ¶ 46.

¶ 6. It is prejudicial error for the court, without consent of counsel, to take partial control of the examination of a witness, and to dismiss him abruptly.—Darrow v. Pierce, 91 Mich. 63.

¶ 7. A judge may question witnesses to see that the facts are properly brought before the jury, but in so doing it is his duty to so frame the questions as not to indicate his own opinion, and not to lay undue stress upon particular features of a witness' testimony tending to impeach him. In re Stockdale's Estate (Appeal of City of Flint), 157 Mich. 593.

§ 6. Scope and latitude.

Form and manner of questions, see post §§ 8-10.

Scope and latitude on impeachment of witness, see Witnesses, VI, D.
Latitude of examination allowable on hearing of claims against decedent's estates, see Estates of Decedents ¶ 610a.
[Note. Where the evidence is circumstantial, indirect, remote, or rebuttal, the question how far the questioning may range without becoming immaterial and irrelevant is a question of admissibility. See Evidence, III; Indictment, VIII, B; and references there collected. See also the various specific topics, e. g., Fraud; Negligence, V; Contracts, X, B; and the like.]

¶ 8. Exact rules cannot be prescribed to limit examinations in criminal prosecutions; circumstances must determine how far back the prosecution may carry them.—People v. Niles, 44 Mich. 606.

¶ 9. Considerable latitude should be allowed in the examination of an illiterate and ignorant witness.—People v. Wheeler, 186 Mich. 489.

¶ 10. A wide range of examination is allowable where questions of fraud are involved.—Comstock v. Smith, 20 Mich. 338; Cook v. Perry, 43 Mich. 623; Dibble v. Nash, 47 Mich. 589; Gutsch v. Pittsley, 51 Mich. 566; Burrill v. Kimball, 65 Mich. 217; Hyde v. Shank, 77 Mich. 517; Loud v. Solomon, 188 Mich. 7.

¶ 11. Where the issue involves a charge of fraud a wide range of inquiry into transactions between the parties is allowed.—Gumberg v. Treusch, 103 Mich. 543; French v. Ryan, 104 Mich. 625.

§ 7. Province of direct, cross and redirect examinations.

Direct as limiting scope of cross-examination, see post §§ 37, 45 et seq.
Scope of redirect and relation to direct and cross-examinations, see post § 90 et seq.
Calling on cross-examination for repetition of matter brought out on direct, see post §§ 39, 40.
Admissibility of redirect as to matter that might have been shown in chief, see post § 95.
Order and sequence of proofs as distinguished from examinations of same witness, see Trial, V, B; Indictment, IX, B.
Order in which direct and rebutting and redirect matter shall be introduced, see Trial, V, B; Indictment, IX, B.

¶ 12. Although a witness called as an expert on the subject of insanity may base his opinion upon his observation and experience in cases similar to the one at bar, he cannot, on his direct examination, be questioned concerning the particular cases.—People v. Holmes, 111 Mich. 364.

¶ 13. After a physician has stated the condition in which he found plaintiff he may be asked whether plaintiff's symptoms, actions and complaints were simulated, and such question need not be withheld until rebuttal.—Miller v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 167 Mich. 21.

¶ 14. It is proper, on direct examination, as well as on cross-examination, to ask an impeaching witness if he would believe the impeached witness under oath.—Keator v. People, 32 Mich. 484.

§ 8. Form and manner of questions.

[Note. Relatively few objections to the question go to its form. Nearly all are aimed at the evidence which it calls for. Hence the decisions assume that the answer would have been given as objected to and pass on the admissibility of that evidence. Such decisions belong in topics, Evidence; Indictment, VIII, B; and in the specific topics as "evidence."]

Asking or putting questions in hearing of jury to create prejudice or cast innuendo as misconduct, see Trial, II, V; Indictment, IX, B.

¶ 15. A question calculated to bring out the improbability of a thing imputed to the party asking it is proper.—Julius King Optical Co. v. Treat, 72 Mich. 599.

¶ 16. It is not reversible error to sustain an objection to the double question, "Did he say anything what was to be done with the property? Did he say anything about his family?" since it contained two questions and it would have been easy for counsel to obtain from the witness any information which was material and competent by other questions.—Wilcox v. Wilcox, 139 Mich. 365.

¶ 17. A witness testifying as to the damage which cattle, loaded upon a train of cars at different places, had suffered in consequence of detention on the road, was asked what, in his opinion, was "the extra shrinkage of the stock at Osseo, Hillsdale, Coldwater and Detroit, above what it would have been had it gone on the regular train." Held, that as the cattle had been on the train for different lengths of time, they must have been differently affected, and the question for this reason ought to have been overruled.—Michigan Southern & Northern I. R. Co. v. McDonough, 21 Mich. 165.

¶ 18. The practice of handing to witnesses who had testified in some other proceeding, a copy of the testimony given by them and asking them to read it and then directing their attention to the subject-matter covered by the copies, is disapproved.—Lorimer v. Lorimer, 124 Mich. 631.

§ 9. ——Particularity and details.

Details and generality in answers, see post § 34.

Question not confining witness to his own knowledge, see also post ¶ 51.

Admissibility of complementary details and particulars of matter in evidence, see Evidence, III; Indictment, VIII, B.

Admissibility of substance rather than exact words of writing as secondary evidence, see Evidence §§ 152, 584; Indictment, VIII, B.

Admissibility of substance of former testimony of witness or of admissions, confessions and statements made out of court, see Evidence §§ 152, 584; Indictment, VIII, B.

Particularity in identifying time, place, details, and matter of impeachment, see Witnesses, VI, D.

¶ 19. In an action for money had and received plaintiff was asked as a witness how much defendant owed him. Held, that the question was not necessarily improper for being too general, especially where it appeared that details were gone into and evidence of items was submitted that was not given in the record.—Donkersley v. Levy, 38 Mich. 54.

¶ 20. In a suit to recover salary under a contract of employment "if satisfactory," a question whether the employee gave satisfaction to his employer while employed is considered too general, unless asked by way of introduction.—Kalamazoo Novelty Mfg. Works v. Macalister, 40 Mich. 84.

¶ 21. Where the ownership of chattels is disputed, and one of the parties testifies to having had a bill of sale of them which was lost, it is within the discretion of the trial judge to permit the witness to be asked what property it conveyed, though it would be better to ask for its contents; the other party could cross-examine into all particulars.—Stewart v. Brown, 48 Mich. 383.

¶ 22. Where on issue of a breach of warranty of an engine warranted to effect a saving in fuel "equal to that claimed for the Corliss," the evidence of both parties shows that the saving so claimed is fifty per cent, the inquiry should be confined to a fifty per cent saving, and the question: "How much less is this machine worth than it would be if it would effect the saving of the Corliss engine?" should be excluded.—Wickes Bros. v. Swift Electric Light Co., 70 Mich. 322.

¶ 23. A litigant's statements adverse to his own claim are always admissible, and it is immaterial that the examination with reference thereto is not conducted with the particularity required when impeachment is attempted.—Reiser v. Portere, 106 Mich. 102.

§ 10. ——Calling for indirect answers and conclusions.

Answers amounting to conclusions in form, see also post ¶¶ 152, 154.

Cross-question calling for conclusion, see also post § 83.

Reduction of hypothetical questions to writing, see Evidence § 304; Indictment, VIII, B.

Exclusion of opinion answers on ultimate questions, see also Evidence § 207; Indictment, VIII, B.

Form of question calling for contents of writings, see also Evidence ¶¶ 605, 606.

¶ 25. A question that is obviously preliminary in its nature, asked with the purpose of following it up with details, may be answered by the witness, although it calls for a conclusion rather than for a fact. The proper course to be pursued by opposing counsel is to cross-examine as to the details. —Lockard v. Van Alstyne, 155 Mich. 507.

¶ 26. If questions put to prove a contract call for the witness' inferences rather than the actual terms of the contract, they are improper.—Ward's Cent. & P. Lake Co. v. Elkins, 34 Mich. 439.

¶ 27. In an action for the breach of a contract to assort logs, a question as to whether the defendant drove and sorted all of plaintiff's logs specified in the contracts, was not subject to the objection that it called for an opinion and not a statement of facts, and that it tended to confuse because it combined the driving and sorting contracts; as the question did call for a statement of facts, and was not confusing where the direct and cross-examinations elicited all the facts in regard to the transaction.—Bellows v. Crane Lumber Co., 119 Mich. 424.

¶ 28. In proving the contents of a lost deed a witness should not be asked what was its "sense," but what was its language or the substance of the language.—Holmes v. Deppert, 122 Mich. 275.

¶ 29. The question in a will case whether or not the testator was an eccentric man is not objectionable as calling for a conclusion instead of a fact.—Fraser v. Jennison, 42 Mich. 206.

¶ 30. A question, "Under whose control was [testator] during the last six years of his life, that you saw," calls for a conclusion.—O'Connor v. Madison, 98 Mich. 183.

¶ 31. In an action against a railroad for killing cattle, the question as to what if any other defect the witness noticed in the cattle guard in question, asked of a witness who had given an incomplete description of the guard, was improperly excluded on the ground of calling for a conclusion.—Johnson v. Detroit & M. Ry. Co., 135 Mich. 353.

¶ 32. Where the branches of a tree, near the line where a line fence was being rebuilt by defendant, were cut under the claim that it was necessary in order to establish the line for the fence, questions to a witness whether it was necessary in lining out the fence, to cut these branches, is not objectionable where it is manifest that the inquiry was whether a person could sight along the line without cutting out these branches.—Newberry v. Bunda, 137 Mich. 69.

¶ 33. In an action for personal injuries a question asked a doctor testifying for the defendant, as to whether he had not testified that the plaintiff had told him that he had been drunk on the day before the accident, held properly excluded on objection to form where the defendant was not prevented from showing the extent to which the plaintiff's condition might have been due to indulgence in intoxicating liquor.—Foley v. Detroit & M. Ry. Co., 193 Mich. 233.

¶ 34. A question put to a motorman, who ran the car which injured plaintiff, and is called for cross-examination under Pub. Acts 1909, No. 307, as to what distance he could stop the car in under the conditions in question with the load on and the car going at the rate of 35 miles per hour, calls for a fact of knowledge and is not a hypothetical question so as to render his answer inadmissible. —Walter v. Detroit, J. & C. Ry. Co., 191 Mich. 667.

What regarded as leading or suggestive, see post §§ 13-17.

As calling for conclusions, see also ante § 10.

¶ 35. Questions put to witnesses must be understood to be framed so as to conform to the common understanding.—Parker v. Luce, 14 Mich. 9.

¶ 36. A proper question to a witness cannot be made improper by the statement of irresponsive and objectionable matter in reply. —Wilcox v. Ney, 47 Mich. 421.

¶ 36a. Misnomer of an object in the question cannot be regarded as an error where the name used and the correct name were similar in sound and the jury could not have been misled.—Osten v. Jerome, 93 Mich. 196.

¶ 37. In an action for breach of contract to furnish free telephone service, a question as to what is the "damage" to the plaintiff on account of the failure to furnish the service is not erroneous as including both law and fact where the connection in which the question was put shows that the "value" of the service was the specific item called for by the question.—Zabel v. New State Tel. Co., 127 Mich. 402.

¶ 38. A question in an action for damages for personal injuries as to how many times the witness heard plaintiff during the summer, after the injury, "speak of his back troubling him" is not improper as calling for a narration of past suffering, as it simply calls for complaints, if any, made by plaintiff of his then condition.—Loose v. Township of Deerfield, 187 Mich. 206.

§ 12. Questions assuming facts.

Redirect questions hypothesizing matters touched in prior examinations, see post ¶ 660.

Hypothetical questions to experts, see Evidence § 298 et seq.; Indictment, VIII, B.

¶ 39. A question which assumes the existence of a fact not proved is objectionable.—People v. Lange, 90 Mich. 454.

¶ 40. On a suit by a patron against the owner of a moving picture theater for injuries sustained on stumbling on an unlighted curved step, although evidence of prior similar accidents is admissible, a question as to how many times a day while the witness was standing near the step did he find people stumbling, is objectionable as assuming facts not proved and as including accidents subsequent to the one in issue.—Branch v. Klatt, 173 Mich. 31.

§ 13. Leading and suggestive questions.

When allowable and discretion to allow, see post §§ 14-17.

Leading questions through interpreters, see post § 19.

Leading question in refreshing memory, see post ¶ 90.

Impropriety of cross-examining one's own witness, see post § 35.

Striking out answers led from or suggested to witness, see Trial, V, C; Indictment, IX, B.

Allowance or exclusion as harmless error, see Harmless Error; Indictment, XV.

¶ 41. The supreme court severely censures the practice of putting the statements of counsel into the mouths of witnesses.—Hart v. Brockway, 57 Mich. 189.

¶ 42. A leading question points out the desired answer, and does not merely call for an affirmative or negative.—McKeown v. Harvey, 40 Mich. 226.

¶ 43. A question to be answered by yes or no, asking whether certain work conformed to the contract specifications, is not necessarily objectionable as leading, especially if it could not well have been asked in any other way that would not have been open to the same criticism.—McKeown v. Harvey, 40 Mich. 226.

¶ 44. No question is leading that does not suggest an answer (so held by two justices, two others concurring in result of case).—Stoudt v. Shepherd, 73 Mich. 588.

¶ 45. The contestants of a will put the following questions: "Did you notice during the spring any weakening of [testator's] mind?" and "In your opinion, during the spring of 1877, had [testator's] mind weakened?" Held, that these questions were not leading.—Fraser v. Jennison, 42 Mich. 206.

¶ 46. It is allowable for a trial judge to ask a witness whether a conversation testified to as having taken place in his presence could have gone on without his hearing it. The question is somewhat leading, but no more so than is sometimes allowed in impeaching questions, to save time; and, if directed merely to the substance of the alleged conversation, is less objectionable for its leading character than if it set out the precise language sworn to.—Driscoll v. People, 47 Mich. 413.

¶ 47. Where the good faith of a transfer from a son to his father is in question in an action of replevin brought by the father to recover the property after it had been seized in an attachment against the son, it is not leading, and it is proper to ask a witness who aided in the transfer whether there was any suggestion by the parties that they were seeking to avoid creditors, or anything of that kind; it is also proper to ask the attachment debtor whether any portion of his object in making the transfer was to delay, hinder or defraud creditors.—Hart v. Newton, 48 Mich. 401.

¶ 48. It seems that the question, "Will you state whether or not, in your judgment, the samples now shown you are off the pieces that were stolen," is not objectionable as leading.—Morrissey v. People, 11 Mich. 327.

¶ 49. In prosecuting a claim against the estate of a son for articles converted by him while living on the estate of his father, a daughter of the plaintiff's intestate, after stating that the mother "stayed right there at her own home," was asked "and [the son] took the whole thing and ran it and carried it on?" Held, that this question called for the deductions of an interested witness upon a subordinate issue which belonged to the jury, and that it led too far and its allowance was erroneous.—Patrick v. Howard, 47 Mich. 40.

¶ 50. A question whether an officer was instructed to go to a given place several days before a levy, and whether he did go, is properly excluded as leading, where the desired answer was to show that the visible presence of the officer was pursuant to a threat of attachment.—Goeschel v. Fisher, 108 Mich. 212.

¶ 51. Defendant in an action for selling liquor to plaintiff's husband admitted that he himself had furnished the liquor on certain specified occasions. Held, that a question by his own counsel as to whether those were the only times the husband got liquor at his place was objectionable as leading, and as not confining defendant to sales within his own knowledge.—Kehrig v. Peters, 41 Mich. 475.

¶ 52. In a manslaughter case growing out of an abortion it is not leading to ask the man responsible for the pregnancy of deceased what a physician consulted about it said "about marrying" the girl, or what accused said when he was consulted "in reference to the tools, if anything," or whether accused said he had to have a statement of some kind, or whether he paid any money to accused. Such questions merely called attention to subjects of inquiry.—People v. Hodge, 141 Mich. 312.

¶ 53. In a personal injury suit plaintiff's expert witness exhibited certain X-ray pictures of plaintiff's body. On cross-examination he was asked whether or not the pictures demonstrated anything abnormal and stated that he would not be positive about that. On redirect examination he was asked whether the plates indicated a deposit of any foreign substance in the muscles. Held, the ruling of the trial court permitting an answer to said question did not constitute error on the ground that the question was leading.—Wilkens v. Detroit United Ry., 169 Mich. 437.

§ 14. ——Propriety and occasions, discretion to allow.

To adverse, reluctant or hostile witness, see post § 15.
To participant, accomplice or subject of crime, see post § 16.
To accused testifying as witness, see post § 17.
To adverse party or his witness called to stand for cross-examination, see post § 82.
Refreshing memory of witness, see post § 20 et seq.
Propriety on redirect, see post § 105.
Review of rulings on leading questions, see Appeal § 406; Indictment, XVI.
Propriety of striking out answers given to leading or suggestive questions, see Trial, V, C; Indictment, IX, B.

¶ 54. Questions in leading form are not improper when rendered necessary by the nature of the inquiry.—Bullard v. Hascall, 25 Mich. 132.

¶ 55. The asking of questions upon direct examination of an extremely leading and suggesting character should be avoided, even though it may not be reversible error to allow them to be answered.—Cone v. American Elec. Fuse Co., 145 Mich. 536.

¶ 56. The allowance of leading questions is a matter entirely within the discretion of the trial court.—Fowler v. Fowler, 111 Mich. 676; People v. Roat, 117 Mich. 578; Lungerhausen v. Crittenden, 103 Mich. 173; Webb v. Feather's Estate, 119 Mich. 473; Burnham v. Home Ins. Co., 119 Mich. 588; Cairbre v. McQuillen, 162 Mich. 679.

¶ 57. It is within the discretion of the trial court to permit counsel to ask a leading question upon a wholly immaterial matter.—Mason v. Partrick, 100 Mich. 577.

¶ 58. To allow leading questions by the prosecutor is a matter for discretion of the trial judge.—People v. Farrell, 146 Mich. 264.

¶ 59. Admitting questions objected to as leading was not an abuse of discretion where they were merely calculated to reach facts concerning which it was easy to sift the witness by cross-examination, she being unable to speak English and testifying by interpreter.—People v. Jensen, 66 Mich. 711.

¶ 60. In a prosecution for seduction under promise of marriage where the woman testified through an interpreter it was not objectionable as leading to allow the prosecutrix to be asked on her examination in chief whether she had intercourse with respondent after the promise, and whether, without such promise, she would have allowed intercourse.—People v. Jensen, 66 Mich. 711.

¶ 61. A leading question asked, on the theory that the witness was unwilling, as to what he had said on a previous occasion, is not assignable for error because no unwillingness appears, where on the record the question seems a proper one to refresh the witness' memory and the answer was such as to show that no prejudice resulted.—Stone v. Standard Life & Acc. Ins. Co., 71 Mich. 81.

¶ 62. In an action by a traveling salesman to recover a monthly salary and his expenses under an agreement with his employer, denied by the latter, to pay such expenses while plaintiff was at headquarters, it is not an abuse of discretion to permit plaintiff to answer the question whether any arrangement was ever made about the home expenses other than the first agreement that they should be paid by defendant.—Church v. John Davis & Co., 93 Mich. 477.

¶ 63. Upon a trial for breaking and entering a store with intent to commit larceny, the prosecution may put leading questions to the store's manager who made and withdrew the first complaint, concerning money received by him as pay for the articles stolen, and concerning his withdrawing the complaint and returning the money, and also as to statements made by him about the identity of the stolen goods when they were discovered.—People v. Roat, 117 Mich. 578.

¶ 64. In a suit for injuries against a township arising from the sliding of plaintiff's sled off an embankment constructed on a public road across a ravine, plaintiff is properly refused permission to ask a witness riding in the sleigh why she was afraid of the road at the point in question, where the court offers to permit counsel to discover all that the witness knows about the condition of the road.—Stanton v. Tp. of Webster, 170 Mich. 428.

¶ 65. In a prosecution against a druggist for the illegal sale of intoxicating liquors, leading questions as to the registration of sales were held properly excluded where it did not appear that the witness was hostile, confused or unable to understand the English language.—People v. Frost, 179 Mich. 180.

§ 15. ——To adverse, reluctant or hostile witness.

See also ante ¶ 61.

¶ 66. When a witness unexpectedly shows by his testimony that he is adverse the party calling him may be permitted to ask leading questions.—McBride v. Wallace, 62 Mich. 451.

§ 16. ——To participant, accomplice or subject of crime.

¶ 67. One cannot be examined on the assumption that he is an unfriendly witness before there is any showing to that effect or any evidence from him to warrant it.—People v. Lyons, 51 Mich. 215.

¶ 68. Where the counsel of respondent in a criminal case states that he is advised the prosecuting witnesses are reluctant to testify, the court may in its discretion permit leading questions.—People v. Hennard, 162 Mich. 225.

¶ 69. Plaintiff's counsel, in a personal injury case, should have been permitted to put leading questions to defendant's engineer and to introduce his contradictory statements, where it was necessary to call such witness in order to make out plaintiff's case.—Kaess v. Tivoli Brewing Co., 149 Mich. 371.

¶ 70. The court may in its discretion permit leading questions to be put to a hostile and evasive witness.—Bales v. Evans, 182 Mich. 383.

¶ 71. The prosecuting attorney may be permitted to put leading questions to one of his own witnesses, or even to call her attention to an affidavit previously made by her and inconsistent with her testimony on the trial, where it is evident she is an unwilling witness and is seeking to screen respondent.—People v. Gillespie, 111 Mich. 241.

¶ 72. The trial court may, in its discretion, permit the prosecution to put leading questions to a witness for the people whose answers are evasive, and who evinces a disposition to favor respondent.—People v. Caldwell, 107 Mich. 374.

¶ 73. Whether the prosecuting attorney may examine an unwilling witness for the people by leading questions in discretionary with the trial court.—People v. Johnson, 186 Mich. 516.

¶ 74. Witnesses whom the prosecution is compelled to call because present at the occurrence for which respondent is on trial may be pressed with searching questions in behalf of the people if found not disposed to frankness.—People v. Deitz, 86 Mich. 419.

¶ 75. The court has discretion to permit the prosecuting attorney to ask leading questions of a particeps criminis who testifies in behalf of the people.—People v. Considine, 105 Mich. 149.

¶ 76. In a prosecution for carnally knowing a girl less than sixteen years old, it is discretionary to permit the trial court to ask leading questions of the victim, she being weak mentally.—People v. Bernor, 115 Mich. 692.

¶ 77. In a prosecution for an assault with intent to ravish, it is discretionary with the court to allow somewhat leading questions to the complaining witness as to her outcries at the time of the offense and as to the length of time she was confined to her bed afterwards.—Ulrich v. People, 39 Mich. 245.

§ 17. ——To accused testifying as witness.

Cross-examination of accused, see post §§ 79, 80.

¶ 78. A court may refuse to allow leading questions to be put to the prisoner by his counsel while making his statement; leading suggestions to him in any form are improper, but the court should see to it that the prisoner is not cut off from having his attention called to pertinent subjects through a written suggestion submitted to the judge for approval.—People v. Morrigan, 29 Mich. 4.

§ 18. Maps and diagrams to explain or illustrate.

Use of map or diagram to assist witness, see also Evidence ¶ 2609.

Admissibility of maps as documents, see Evidence §§ 504, 541; Indictment, VIII, B.

¶ 79. It is not error to exclude the use of a map in examining a witness who does not understand maps.—Ulrich v. People, 39 Mich. 245.

¶ 80. A map can be used in evidence, in connection with the testimony of a witness, only to enable the jury to clearly understand the facts stated.—Hoffman v. Harrington, 44 Mich. 183.

Requestioning to test correctness of translation, see post § 29, ¶ 139.
Explanations of testimony, propriety of allowance, see post § 34.
Use of interpreters in taking depositions, see Depositions § 12.
Duty to pursue suggestion of court to clarify answer by further questions, see Indictment, IX, B; Trial, V, C.

¶ 81. The intervention of an interpreter between counsel and witness or witness and jury is justified only by practical necessity, though allowable on a proper occasion, which occasion must usually be determined by the trial court.—Rajnowski v. Detroit, B. C. & A. R. Co., 74 Mich. 15.

¶ 82. The policy which provides shorthand reporters for trials might well provide also by law for competent and permanent translators and interpreters.—Rajnowski v. Detroit, B. C. & A. R. Co., 74 Mich. 15.

¶ 83. It is not ground of error that the next friend of an infant plaintiff was allowed to act as interpreter for a witness who did not speak English. It is a matter of discretion, but should not be permitted except for very peculiar and satisfactory reasons.—Swift v. Applebone, 23 Mich. 252.

¶ 84. Jurors cannot be allowed to intervene as interpreters of witnesses, and whatever goes to the jury must go to all through the same medium.—Lendberg v. Brotherton Iron Mining Co., 75 Mich. 84.

¶ 85. The rules of law excluding improper forms of questions, and hearsay and otherwise improper testimony, and making inadmissible leading questions and other devices for getting in what should be kept out, are as important in case of interpreters as anywhere else.—Rajnowski v. Detroit, B. C. & A. R. Co., 74 Mich. 15.

¶ 86. It is necessary, for the due course of examination, that the interpreter shall give to the witness the precise form and tenor of each question propounded, and no more or less, and that he shall in like manner translate the precise expressions of the witness.—Rajnowski v. Detroit, B. C. & A. R. Co., 74 Mich. 15.

§ 20. Refreshing memory.

See also ante ¶ 61.
Papers and memoranda fit or suitable for refreshing, see post §§ 21-24.
Mode of reminding witness, calling his attention, and submission of memoranda for his inspection, see post §§ 25, 26.
Question as to former testimony to refresh memory, see also Evidence ¶ 1876.

¶ 87. The testimony of a witness as to the nature of a certain message being somewhat contradictory, it was held proper, especially on cross-examination, to call his attention to his testimony on a former trial, and to ask him if he did not then state that a particular message was brought.—Beaubien v. Cicotte, 12 Mich. 459.

¶ 88. A witness may be questioned as to testimony given by him upon a former trial for the purpose of refreshing his memory or of impeaching him.—Battishill v. Humphreys, 64 Mich. 514.

¶ 89. In order to refresh the memory of a witness as to observations made by him concerning a sidewalk at the time of an accident, it is competent to call his attention to statements made by him at or about the time he made his observations.—Stone v. Standard Life & Accident Ins. Co., 71 Mich. 81.

¶ 90. A question asked of a witness for the purpose of refreshing his recollection and not for impeachment, even though leading and contradictory of the opposing party's testimony may, in the sound discretion of the trial judge, be allowed.—Dillon v. Pinch, 110 Mich. 149.

¶ 91. Where a witness who had testified to the mental unsoundness of testatrix was unable to remember on cross-examination whether testatrix did or did not attend a certain banquet while visiting her, it was proper to call her attention to certain facts in connection with the banquet, in order to refresh her recollection, the case being one justifying broad latitude in cross-examination.—Prentis v. Bates, 88 Mich. 567.

Sufficiency of copies and transcripts, see post § 22.
Sufficiency of memoranda by third persons, see post § 23.
Sufficiency of minutes or transcript of former testimony, see post § 24.
Cross-examination as to manner of making diary used as memorandum, see also post ¶ 197.

¶ 92. A witness may be shown an account-book of original entries to refresh his recollection.—Brown v. Weightman, 62 Mich. 557.

¶ 93. One who is shown to have made a scale of logs can use it to aid his memory in testifying, in an action of trespass for removing them, as to the quantity taken away; and if the correctness of the scale has been sworn to, it is admissible as original evidence.—Skeels v. Starrett, 57 Mich. 350.

¶ 94. A witness may use contemporaneous entries in a diary and pass-book to enable him to fix dates and other circumstances, and it is proper to receive these and to let the jury inspect them, after being instructed to look at nothing but what bears on the points in question.—Passmore v. Passmore's Estate, 60 Mich. 463.

¶ 95. Checks or receipted bills may be used as memoranda in connection with testimony.—Dyer v. Rosenthal, 45 Mich. 588.

¶ 96. Where a bill of particulars of goods sold contains many items, it is discretionary to let the plaintiff take it to answer the question whether it was a correct list.—Cool v. Snover, 38 Mich. 562.

¶ 97. A bill of particulars used in another suit may be used by a witness, one of the parties therein, to refresh his memory as to items of payment, notwithstanding the possibility that some of those items may therein have been adjudicated.—Avery v. Knight, 99 Mich. 311.

¶ 98. A witness may refresh his memory as to articles comprised in a stock of goods that he formerly owned by referring to memoranda made by him from recollection shortly before the trial.—Johnston v. Farmers' Fire Ins. Co., 106 Mich. 96.

¶ 99. A computation made by the witness when a mortgage was in his hands for foreclosure may be referred to by him in testifying to the amount due thereon without producing the mortgage.—Ford v. Savage, 111 Mich. 144.

¶ 101. No error is committed in permitting witnesses to use memoranda for the purpose of refreshing their recollection where they have personal knowledge of the facts recorded and testified to; and where they testify that they made or caused to be made said memoranda and with the aid thereof were able to remember the matters testified to by them.—Close v. Ann Arbor R. Co., 169 Mich. 392.

¶ 102. An inventory used by a witness in testifying was an original document made by said witness. He stated that he set down in it what he found at the time it was made, and knew at that time that it was correct. Held, no error was committed in permitting him so to use said document.—Close v. Ann Arbor R. Co., 169 Mich. 392.

¶ 103. In an action against a railroad company for damages for the destruction of plaintiff's ice house by fire originating from one of defendant's locomotives, held, that evidence as to the value of the building given by the builder from estimates made by him was properly admitted.—Union Ice Co. v. Detroit & Mackinac Railway Co., 178 Mich. 346.

§ 22. ——Copies, transcriptions and secondary entries.

See also post ¶ 128.

Admissibility of copies and trancripts as original evidence, see Evidence, IV, B, VIII, C, 2; Indictment, VIII, B.

¶ 104. In an action for obtaining goods by false representations to a commercial agency, the agent of the latter, in testifying as to the statement made to him by defendant, may give the statement from his recollection, aided by a copy made by him at the time, though such copy was not read to defendant or signed by him.—Hinchman v. Weeks, 85 Mich. 535.

¶ 105. It is not error to permit the plaintiff in testifying to refresh his memory by looking at a copy which he himself had made from a book of original entries.—Smith v. Pickands, 148 Mich. 558.

¶ 106. In an action on account where plaintiff testified that he had copied his bill of particulars right from his books he may testify therefrom as to the amount of the claims now due him.—Snyder v. Patton & Gibson Co., 143 Mich. 350.

¶ 107. In ejectment, the use by a witness who was a surveyor, of a copy of his survey instead of the original which had been turned over to the county surveyor, for the purpose of refreshing his recollection, was not prejudicial to defendant where it was fairly inferable from the record that the witness did not, on direct, testify to anything which he did not remember independently of such copy.—Miller v. Shumway, 135 Mich. 654.

¶ 108. Where logs sold were to be delivered afloat, and it was claimed by the vendee that there was a large deficiency in the quantity delivered, a witness for the vendor testified to keeping a memorandum book in which she entered every night the amount delivered as reported to her by the men in charge. Held, that she might use the book to refresh her recollection as to entries, and that it was not error to permit her to show the entries to the jury.—Mason v. Phelps, 48 Mich. 126.

¶ 109. It is not error for the trial court to allow a witness to use a ledger merely to refresh his recollection.—Craig v. Brown, 171 Mich. 256.

§ 23. ——Memoranda or writings by other persons.

Copies and transcripts as memoranda, see ante § 22.

¶ 110. When a witness swears that he has a complete recollection of the facts it makes no difference that the memoranda he uses to refresh his memory are not from his own entries.—Cameron v. Blackman, 39 Mich. 108.

¶ 111. A witness may refresh his recollection by a paper purporting to be written by his agent, and which he has acted on as authentic; and the handwriting need not be proved.—Watkins v. Wallace, 19 Mich. 57.

¶ 112. A plaintiff testifying in his own behalf can refresh his recollection, where he knows the facts, by reading from his bill of particulars when that is a duplicate of the account rendered, and on which he sues, even though it was copied by his clerk from entries in his book as to which he cannot say, without seeing them, whether or not he made them all himself.—Hudnutt v. Comstock, 50 Mich. 596.

¶ 113. A witness may refresh his memory from copies of invoices of goods claimed to have been shipped to him, or from a bill of particulars of the goods filed in the case, and if he can remember receiving the goods, independently of the papers, he may so testify.—Robinson v. Mulder, 81 Mich. 75.

¶ 114. Memoranda in the shape of books and papers purporting to contain a daily record of sales of logs and lumber, made in the course of business by and under the supervision of the witness producing them, may be used by him to refresh his recollection, and, so used, are admissible in evidence.—Crane Lumber Co. v. Bellows, 116 Mich. 304.

§ 24. ——Minutes or transcript of former testimony, or depositions taken.

Former statements other than testimony, see ante § 20.

¶ 115. In order to refresh the recollection of a witness his attention may be called to his evidence on a former trial, and counsel's minutes of the former testimony read for the purpose.—Beaubien v. Cicotte, 12 Mich. 459.

¶ 116. Minutes made by a justice of the peace of the testimony given before him, which he testifies were made at the time and were correct though not complete, may be used by him to refresh his memory.—Spalding v. Lowe, 56 Mich. 366.

¶ 117. The official stenographer, or any one else who hears plaintiff testify upon a former trial, is competent to testify as to what he said, and the stenographer may use his minutes taken on a former trial for the purpose of refreshing his recollection.—Merrill v. Leisenring, 166 Mich. 219.

¶ 118. It is error to permit the prosecution on a criminal trial, against the prisoner's objection, to read to the witness on the stand, and in the presence of the jury, under pretense of refreshing his recollection, his evidence given on a previous occasion, and to ask him whether, after having heard it read, he recollected certain facts stated in it.—Bashford v. People, 24 Mich. 244.

¶ 119. It is competent on the trial of a criminal case for the deputy clerk of the police court, in which the preliminary examination of respondent was had, after testifying that he wrote down the testimony of the complaining witness, and that his recollection would be so refreshed, as he thinks, by looking at said testimony as to enable him to remember, aside from said testimony, whether or not said witness testified to a certain alleged fact, to refresh his recollection from said testimony.—People v. Kennedy, 105 Mich. 434.

¶ 120. The prosecution, upon the examination of an unwilling witness for the people, may call his attention to depositions given by him on other occasions, not for the purpose of impeaching him, but to refresh his memory and elicit the truth.—People v. O'Neill, 107 Mich. 556.

§ 25. ——Mode of reminding, questioning or prompting witness.

¶ 122. A witness' testimony taken on a former trial may be read by him to refresh his memory when so offered though the attorney requesting it at first stated that his object was to impeach the witness which being refused with the suggestion that it was admissible to refresh memory it was reoffered.—Pickard v. Bryant, 92 Mich. 430.

¶ 123. Plaintiff sued for money had and received. He prepared the material from which his counsel made up the bill of particulars. Plaintiff's eyesight was so poor that he could not read, but could identify his memoranda. On the trial his counsel was permitted to read certain items from the bill of particulars to refresh plaintiff's memory and to ask leading questions. Held, no error was committed in this respect.—Cairbre v. McQuillen, 162 Mich. 679.

§ 26. ——Submission of memorandum to adversary for inspection and objection.

See also ante ¶ 104.

Reading or submission as basis for cross-examination, see also post §§ 87, 88.

Right to withhold answer until paper is shown, see post § 107.

¶ 124. Opposing counsel have a right to see the memorandum which a witness uses to refresh his memory and to see it at once.—Duncan v. Seeley, 34 Mich. 369.

¶ 125. Memoranda used by a witness for the prosecution should be open to the examination of respondent's counsel so far as necessary to expose falsehood and arrive at the facts; and this may be so even though the witness testifies that entries on other pages have nothing to do with the case.—People v. Lyons, 49 Mich. 78.

¶ 126. A grand juror who acted as secretary of the jury, who is called to impeach the defendant's witnesses on trial, will not be required to read all of the testimony of the impeached witnesses, from notes which he uses to refresh his memory, although counsel is entitled to see the notes and to examine the impeaching witness on them.—People v. Salsbury, 134 Mich. 537.

¶ 127. Where a witness uses memoranda, an opposing attorney is entitled to an inspection of the paper to aid in cross-examination.—Cortland Mfg. Co. v. Platt, 83 Mich. 419.

§ 27. Refreshing fact or memorandum as evidence.

Scale book as evidence when used to refresh, see also ante ¶ 93.
Map as evidence to explain testimony, see also ante ¶ 80.
Admissibility of memorandum on redirect to corroborate witness, see post § 102.
Admissibility of former testimony in general, see Evidence §§ 337-344; Indictment, VIII, B; Witnesses, VI, D.
Competency of documents as evidence, see Evidence, VIII; Indictment, VIII, B.
Secondary proof of writing by copy of copy used to refresh memory, see also Evidence ¶ 766.
Books of account used to refresh memory as admissible evidence to show witness' knowledge of facts shown, see Evidence ¶ 2691.
Conclusive effect of memoranda admitted in evidence, see Evidence ¶ 2949.
Admission or rejection as harmless error, see Harmless Error; Indictment, XV.

¶ 128. In replevin brought by rescinding vendors on the ground that the vendee falsely stated his financial condition to a reporter for a commercial agency, the reporter, when testifying, may refresh his memory, as to the vendee's representations, from a copy of a statement made by himself at the time; but where he states that he cannot remember the figures, and that he merely went to the vendee and got the statement, he cannot read a copy in evidence, it being mere hearsay.—Caldwell v. Bowen, 80 Mich. 382.

¶ 129. Scale-books made by a scaler at the time the scaling was done, from a scale-board, upon which he put down the measurement of each log and the number of feet it contained, and when full transferred sometimes such measurement, and at other times the number of logs and the number of feet they contained, to said scale-books, which he used as memoranda in testifying to the number of feet of lumber scaled, are admissible in evidence.—Welch v. Palmer, 85 Mich. 310.

¶ 130. Where a witness testifies that he remembers a certain conversation, the only legitimate use of which would be to refresh his recollection, it is not error to refuse to permit the witness to repeat the conversation.—People v. Smith, 106 Mich. 431.

¶ 131. Where a plaintiff is allowed to refresh his memory from a memorandum book, which he has kept in pencil, and on cross-examination his attention is called to a certain page, and he is asked if it has not been rubbed some with a pencil, which he denies, and the page is then offered in evidence, he is entitled to have the whole book before the jury, as a comparison of the page in question with the other pages would disclose whether there was anything peculiar in the appearance of that page.—Countryman v. Bunker, 101 Mich. 218.

¶ 132. A memorandum of account, used to refresh memory upon a defense of set-off and recoupment, may be received in evidence after defendant had been cross-examined upon it against an objection that it is not the best evidence of the account.—Smith v. Jackson, 113 Mich. 511.

¶ 133. For purposes of impeachment of a witness, a court stenographer was called to testify as to the witness' testimony given at a former trial. He stated that he could not remember what the witness said, but identified the typewritten copy in court as being the testimony given by the witness, and stated that he could identify it page by page. The verity of the stenographer's notes was not questioned. Held, they were admissible in evidence.—Johnson v. Union Carbide Co., 169 Mich. 651.

¶ 134. Where a witness testifies that a writing refreshes his recollection, so that he has a present recollection of the fact sought to be established, the writing is not admissible as further substantive evidence of the fact, since in such case it is the testimony of the witness, the recollection, which is evidence, not the document or writing used to refresh recollection.—Koehler v. Abey, 168 Mich. 113, 119.

¶ 135. Where a witness states that he does not remember the facts entered in his memorandum book but that he knows the entries when made were correct, the book is admissible in evidence.—Koehler v. Abey, 168 Mich. 113.

§ 28. ——Reading or making contents known.

Showing memorandum to witness before using it, see ante § 26.
Examination of woman to lay foundation for admitting preliminary deposition in bastardy proceeding, see Bastards § 8, ¶ 40.

¶ 136. A witness who has produced and identified a memorandum which is itself admissible evidence may be permitted to testify from it, and such testimony is not open to the objection that the memorandum itself should be read to the jury, where the witness merely repeats its contents; it is not material that the counsel should read it rather than the witness.—Raynor v. Norton, 31 Mich. 210.

§ 29. Repetitions and requestioning.

Reframing questions, see post § 30.
To elicit better answer, see also post ¶ 143.
On cross-examination, see post §§ 39, 40.
On redirect examination, see post § 96.
Improper or obstinate repetition and pursuit of objectionable matter as error, see Trial, V; Indictment, IX, B.
Rejection and limitation of cumulative testimony to same fact, see Trial, V; Indictment, IX, B.

¶ 137. Where a witness has clearly and explicitly testified to a certain fact, an objection to a question that merely calls for a repetition of the testimony from him is properly sustained.—Ellis v. Whitehead, 95 Mich. 105; Gutsch v. McIlhargey, 69 Mich. 377.

¶ 138. It is within the discretion of the trial judge to rule out a question that has already been answered in substance.—Busch v. Pollock, 41 Mich. 64; Gutsch v. McIlhargey, 69 Mich. 377.

¶ 139. Where a conversation, partly in a foreign language, has been testified to and interpreted by the witness on cross-examination, it is not error to refuse to allow it to be again detailed to test the correctness of the translation where that is not seriously questioned.—Ulrich v. People, 39 Mich. 245.

¶ 140. It is not error for the trial court to rule that once will do for an attorney to interrogate a witness on the same question, where the record shows that the witness had been twice before thoroughly cross-examined by counsel until apparently through and satisfied, and where numerous other questions had been asked the witness along the same lines, the court allowing ample latitude in that particular.—People v. Davis, 171 Mich. 241.

¶ 141. In an action for damages for personal injuries sustained by being knocked down by a runaway horse which was left standing by a street curb hitched by a weight only, and, after pulling the bridle off, which was too loose, ran away, held that a further question whether the driver had been furnished a bridle which was too loose was rightly excluded where the witness had already testified that he could not remember the bridle which the horse wore on the day of the accident.—Dyer v. Peoples Ice Co., 188 Mich. 203.

§ 30. Reframing questions or offers.

¶ 142. An examiner should avoid an objection to the form of a question by changing its form instead of relying upon bringing error on a ruling sustaining the objection.—Fraser v. Jennison, 42 Mich. 206.

§ 31. Form, construction and sufficiency of answers.

Responsiveness to question, see post § 33.
Argumentative or supposititious answers, see post § 32.
Details as matter of description of object rather than as testimony concerning the details, see post ¶ 164.
Details and particulars to explain answers, see post § 34.
Proper form of question to call out proper answer, see ante §§ 8-10.
Form and phrasing of answers as translated by interpreter, see ante § 19.
Form and sufficiency of opinions of experts in response to questions, see Evidence § 306; Indictment, VIII, B.
Construction of testimony for purpose of weighing it, see Evidence § 590 et seq.
Striking out or elucidation by further questions as proper practice where answer is ambiguous or not plain, see Trial, V, C; Indictment, IX, B.

¶ 143. An answer is not necessarily to be stricken out for uncertainty or ambiguity, but its meaning should be reached by further inquiry.—Merkle v. Township of Bennington, 58 Mich. 156.

¶ 144. Where the court in cautioning a witness states the proper rule to be observed, the testimony of the witness in so far as he obeys is competent; but in so far as it is disregarded, it is not competent.—Marshall v. Wabash R. Co., 171 Mich. 180.

¶ 145. A witness having personal knowledge of the value of the replevied property may be asked to state it, and it is unpecessary strictness to prevent his stating the amount of the appraisement.—Arnstine Brothers & Mier v. Treat, 71 Mich. 561.

¶ 146. Where in a suit in trover for the conversion of lumber a witness testifies in detail as to the market value of lumber in the community involved, it is not error for him to state the value of the timber converted to a person operating a particular mill, where the jury understands from the general examination that the question is directed to the market value.—Hennes v. Charles Hebard & Sons, 169 Mich. 670.

¶ 147. In an action for personal injuries, a statement by a witness that "She always complains of being sore through her lungs" fairly imports that the complaints made and testified to related to present suffering.—Howe v. Chicago, K. & S. R. Co., 139 Mich. 638.

¶ 148. In an action to recover the value of machinery exchanged for land, the refusal of the court to strike out testimony as to a conversation as a witness "understood" it, objected to as stating a conclusion, held not reversible error.—Bowen v. Chandler, 172 Mich. 678.

¶ 149. On the contest of a will on the ground of the mental incompetency of the testator it was not prejudicial error to allow the attorney who drew the will to testify whether or not the testator was mentally and physically competent to make and execute the will, although such a form of question might be construed as calling for the opinion of the witness on a question of law, when taking into consideration the cross-examination and the instructions of the court as to the degree of intelligence necessary it was manifest that the jury understood that the witness has attempted to testify of the degree of intelligence and understanding of the testator.—In re Morse's Estate, 146 Mich. 463.

¶ 150. A physician who examined the plaintiff some time after he sustained an injury may testify that his injuries would give him pain, and that a certain movement of his limb was evidently very painful, and such testimony need not be stricken as a statement of what the patient said or suffered.—Darling v. Grand Rapids, G. H. & M. Ry. Co., 184 Mich. 607.

§ 32. ——Argumentative and suppositious answers.

What witness "understood," see also ante ¶ 148.

Answer that witness "supposes" fact to be true as admission rather than conclusion or supposition, see also Evidence ¶ 1244.

¶ 151. Where on the trial of an action for libel founded on the publication of articles reflecting upon the support by the plaintiff, as a member of the legislature, of an act providing for a boulevard in the city where he resided, two of his colleagues testify, in behalf of defendant, to his statement in a speech made in support of the bill that his main purpose in going to the legislature was to secure the passage of the bill, and incidentally to take care of his constituents, it is not competent for plaintiff, when sworn as a witness in his own behalf, to state the substance of the speech, and argue therefrom to the jury that he did not say what the witnesses have stated because at variance with, or not a part of, the speech as rehearsed.—Randall v. Evening News Ass'n, 101 Mich. 561.

§ 33. Responsiveness to question.

Volunteered testimony, see ante § 2.

Double questions not admitting of proper answer, see ante § 8.

Necessity that opinion of expert be responsive to question and based on hypothesis assumed, see Evidence § 305; Indictment, VIII, B.

Who may object for irresponsiveness, see Saving Questions, II; Trial, V, C; Indictment, IX, B; XIV.

Motions to strike for irresponsiveness, see Trial, V, C; Indictment, IX, B.

Retention of irresponsive question which is relevant if called for, see Trial, V, C; Indictment, IX, B.

¶ 152. In an action against a township for an injury caused by a warped plank in a bridge a witness who testified that he had crossed the bridge a month before the accident was asked, "Did you notice the planking?" and answered, "When I went across it was all right." Held, that the answer was not fairly open to the objection that it was irresponsive, or an expression of opinion.—Merkle v. Township of Bennington, 58 Mich. 156.

¶ 153. Where a witness as to character is asked if he knows what respondent's character was while he lived at a certain place, and answers, "Yes; it was pretty bad," his answer is not strictly responsive; but if no motion is made to strike it out, it may properly be allowed to stand.—People v. Coffman, 59 Mich. 1.

¶ 154. The question, "What did he say to that?" being asked on cross-examination, it was held that the answer, "I could not say what he replied to it; it appeared to be all satisfactory and he assented to it," was irresponsive and should have been struck out for introducing an inference of the witness. —McCreery v. Green, 38 Mich. 172.

¶ 155. It is not responsive to a question asking for a conversation held at a specified date to add statements made by one of the participants to the other at a subsequent date.—Shaver v. Ingham, 58 Mich. 649.

¶ 156. Where a witness being asked to name some of the prominent members of an association states "most of the state and city officers at Richmond, Va., were members, and there were other prominent members in various states whose names I cannot tell," the answer is properly excluded as not responsive.—Angell v. Loomis, 97 Mich. 5.

¶ 157. In an action to recover damages for personal injuries, where a witness, after testifying that plaintiff who worked for him after the injury could do certain things in attending to a team, was asked what there was which plaintiff "did not do" about getting a team ready and answered, "He could not put his arm up to put the harness on," and testified further to things plaintiff did in using his arm, held, such answer was not responsive but its admission was not erroneous in view of what preceded and followed it.—Hall v. City of Flint, 195 Mich. 638.

¶ 158. The answer of a physician to a hypothetical question put to him as an expert must be based upon the facts stated in such question, and is to be excluded if it has recourse to the witness' knowledge of the particular case.—Fuller v. City of Jackson, 92 Mich. 197.

§ 34. Explanation, details and correction of testimony.

Refreshing memory of witness by citing explanatory statements or circumstances, see ante § 20.

Admissibil.ty of book used as memorandum to refresh memory so that erasure appearing in book may be explained, see ante ¶ 131.

On cross-examination, see also post ¶ 209.

Right on cross-examination to call out complementary or supplementary facts in explanation of matter opened on direct, see post § 46.

Cross-examination to rebut or explain previous discrediting statements, see post § 69.

Cross-examination as to other matters to show whether assigned reason for act was truthful, see post ¶ 369.

Explaining on redirect, see post §§ 97, 98.

Permissible change on redirect, see post ¶ 609.

Explanation or rebuttal of bad inferences by redirect, see post § 100.

Use of leading questions in aid of explanation on redirect, see post ¶ 662.

Recross to explain circumstances of correction of testimony made on redirect, see post ¶ 216.

Admissibility of matter to meet impeachment by explaining, see Witnesses, VI, D.

Admissibility of evidence to explain other evidence in general, see Evidence, III; Indictment, VIII, B; and see specific topics under portions treating of "evidence."

Admissibility of statements explanatory of attentiveness or observation of thing testified to, see Evidence § 81.

Right of witness to explain meaning of letter written by him and in evidence, see also Evidence ¶ 980.

¶ 159. Where a witness not familiar with the full bearing of questions put to him gives answers that seem ambiguous, or raise suspicions of collusion, it is not improper to show what the facts are.—McGuire v. People, 44 Mich. 286.

¶ 160. A witness should be allowed full liberty in explaining alleged discrepancies in his testimony on former occasions (by two justices, two others concurring in result).—Stoudt v. Shepherd, 73 Mich. 588.

¶ 161. It is proper to permit plaintiff, who testified through an interpreter, to take the stand and correct his testimony, where during a recess his counsel had informed him that the testimony varied from what had been told to counsel, and where plaintiff explained that the variance was due to misunderstanding between him and the interpreter.—Erickson v. Milwaukee, L. S. & W. R. Co., 93 Mich. 414.

¶ 163. In an action to recover for injuries caused to plaintiff's land by fire negligently set by defendant's section men, the man who had charge of the section men testified for plaintiff, and, having been recalled and asked as to his knowledge of the fire, plaintiff's counsel was allowed to call his attention to the fact that his testimony upon a former trial was very unlike his present testimony. Held, that this was within the discretion of the trial court to allow for the purpose of explaining a seeming contradiction.—Gilbert v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 116 Mich. 610.

¶ 164. Where a witness, being asked if he knew the subject-matter of the suit, replied by giving a general detail in outline of the facts claimed by the parties, it was held to be no assertion of any such facts, and therefore not objectionable.—Eslow v. Mitchell, 26 Mich. 500.

¶ 165. In an action for a negligent injury, physicians who have examined plaintiff are not confined to stating the results of their examination, but may give the details thereof, the value of the evidence depending largely upon the thoroughness of the examination.—Sherwood v. Chicago & W. M. R. Co., 88 Mich. 108.

¶ 166. On an issue of partnership in a business in which an employee negligently caused personal injuries to a third person, testimony of an employee of the alleged partners at the time of the accident as to such partnership in such business are admissible, although given as matters of detail supporting his belief.—Schulte v. Holliday, 54 Mich. 73.

¶ 167. In an action to recover for the destruction of plaintiff's barn by fire, caused, as claimed, by the negligent burning of grass and other refuse upon defendant's right of way by its employees, a witness was asked how he remembered that the wind was blowing so hard the morning of the fire, and answered, "We spoke about it, Mr. Buck and myself." Held, that the testimony was admissible.—Cole v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 105 Mich. 549.

¶ 168. It is not error to refuse to permit defendant's witness to answer a question of details explanatory of his answer on a technical question on matter not material or pertinent to the issue in the case, where the answer would tend rather to confuse than enlighten the jury.—Anthony v. Cass County Home Tel. Co., 165 Mich. 388.

Consideration of cross-examination with direct in weighing evidence, see Evidence § 598.
Right of residuary legatee in suit on his bond to cross-examine general legatee, see Estates of Decedents ¶ 1243.

¶ 169. Testimony given upon a legitimate cross-examination is treated as evidence in behalf of the party calling the witness.—Turnbull v. Richardson, 69 Mich. 400.

¶ 170. The benefit of cross-examination is an essential condition to the reception of direct testimony.—Heath v. Waters, 40 Mich. 457.

¶ 171. An admission by counsel of his client's complete insolvency cannot cut off the right to cross-examine him, as to his stock and debts, in an action of replevin brought by one who has purchased his stock against an officer who afterwards attached it.—Berger v. Clippert, 53 Mich. 468.

¶ 172. It is error to deprive counsel of the opportunity to cross-examine before the witness is discharged from the stand on the close of the direct examination; since the right of cross-examination, within reasonable bounds, secures to litigants the best means of ascertaining the reasonableness and truthfulness of the direct testimony.—Petrie v. Lane, 58 Mich. 527.

§ 36. ——On matters to which witness might be called in chief.

Right to call out entire transaction or all complementary facts of matters touched on in direct, see post § 46.
Matters of affirmative defense on cross-examination, see post § 44.

¶ 174. One cannot be compelled to make his adversary's witness his own to explain or fill up a transaction which the witness has partially explained already, but may do so by cross-examination.—Chandler v. Allison, 10 Mich. 460.

¶ 175. Cross-examination of a plaintiff on any part of the merits involving his own acts and statements is not to be rejected on the ground that defendant should have made him his own witness, where all the questions present but one substantial issue.—Haughton v. Maurer, 55 Mich. 323.

¶ 176. Defendant should be allowed to cross-examine plaintiff's witness where by so doing he can obtain testimony which he would otherwise be obliged to make the witness his own to obtain.—Bulen v. Granger, 58 Mich. 274.

§ 37. Scope and range in general.

Of witness called on formal or preliminary issues not touching main case, see post § 70.
Of character and impeaching witnesses, see post § 71.
Of expert witnesses, see post §§ 72-75.
Of nonexpert witnesses, see post § 76.
Of party as a witness, see post § 77.
Of wife of party, see post § 78.
Of accused as witness, see post §§ 79, 80.
Of cross-examination of party in his own behalf when called as adversary's witness, see post § 77.
Matters on which adverse party called for cross-examination may be interrogated, see post §§ 81, 82.
Germaneness of cross-examination to direct or to issues, see post § 45 et seq.
Refreshing memory of witness, see ante § 20 et seq.
Calling for incriminating, otherwise privileged, or incompetent matter, see post §§ 42, 43.
Control and discretion of court in regulating scope and extent, see post § 38.
Scope of redirect, see post § 90.

¶ 177. The object of cross-examination is to elicit the whole truth concerning transactions which may be supposed to have been only partially explained, and where the whole truth would present them in a different light.—Chandler v. Allison, 10 Mich. 460.

¶ 178. The doctrine laid down in People v. Horton, 4 Mich. 67, and Campau v. Dewey, 9 Mich. 381, that a party has no right to cross-examine witnesses upon facts and circumstances not connected with the matters stated in his examination in chief, is amplified to include questions tending to elicit the whole truth concerning the subject-matter of the issues, and to fill up or explain any omissions in the testimony in chief.—Chandler v. Allison, 10 Mich. 460.

¶ 179. Where a plaintiff is offered as a witness, any cross-examination affecting the merits of the cause is admissible, whether the particular transaction sought to be shown by such cross-examination has been referred to on the direct examination or not.—Hay v. Reid, 85 Mich. 296.

¶ 180. A witness may be cross-examined upon all points material to the issue, whether the party producing him has called them out on direct examination or not.—Ireland v. Cincinnati, W. & M. R. Co., 79 Mich. 163; Hemminger v. Western Assurance Co., 95 Mich. 355.

¶ 181. The latitude allowed in cross-examination should not ordinarily go so far as to permit the introduction of evidence which has no legitimate relation to any of the issues on trial and which is, at the same time of such character as to be likely to be applied to them by the jury, and improperly affect a verdict.—People v. McArron, 121 Mich. 1.

¶ 182. On cross-examination a witness may be asked any question material to the issue. —People v. Dupounce, 133 Mich. 1.

¶ 183. Where witnesses in a criminal case distinctly contradict each other in their evidence regarding a transaction which is important to the issue the most searching cross-examination should be permitted.—People v. Long, 50 Mich. 249.

¶ 185. In a prosecution for murder the testimony of a married woman witness for the defense justified a searching cross-examination into her relations with the defendant.—People v. Higgins, 127 Mich. 291.

§ 38. Regulation and limits on extent.

Restricting repetitions and requestioning, see post §§ 39, 40.

Discretion as to discrediting or impeaching cross-examination on collateral matters, see post §§ 56-69.

Collateral matters of character and antecedents, see post § 62.

¶ 186. The latitude given to cross-examination is within the discretion of the court. —Cummings v. Detroit United Ry., 163 Mich. 304.

¶ 187. The extent to which a witness may be cross-examined is addressed largely to the discretion of the trial judge.—Yonkus v. McKay, 186 Mich. 203.

¶ 188. The extent of cross-examination of witnesses in civil cases is a matter resting in the sound discretion of the trial court.—Hendrickson v. Harry, 200 Mich. 41.

¶ 189. In order that a jury may get a proper appreciation of the fairness and reliability of the testimony of witnesses, considerable latitude is generally allowed in the cross-examination of witnesses, and the extent of such cross-examination is a matter left largely to the discretion of the trial court.—In re Sparks' Estate, 198 Mich. 421; Hodgman v. Sears, Id.

¶ 190. The action of the trial court in limiting the extent of the cross-examination upon an unimportant matter, on the ground that too much time was being occupied thereby, will not call for a reversal.—Burt v. Long, 106 Mich. 210.

¶ 191. Where the good faith of the plaintiff is in issue, the extent to which cross-examination may be carried must be determined by the trial judge.—Grand Rapids Brewing Co. v. Pettis, 159 Mich. 679.

¶ 192. It is largely within the discretion of the trial court, upon an appeal from the justice court, to determine as to how far a cross-examination of the defendant as to proceedings in the justice court, drifting into a controversy between counsel and witness as to each other's veracity and propriety of conduct in the trial of the case in the justice court, should be allowed to proceed.—Salmer v. Hicks, 188 Mich. 391.

¶ 193. A ruling preventing further cross-examination on a subject is not error where there was no apparent reason for further examination on that subject and counsel stated none.—Brown v. Harris, 139 Mich. 372.

¶ 195. In an action for a balance due where it appears that a settlement was had between the parties and plaintiff claims that certain items were reserved by defendant who alleges a complete settlement and payment, some latitude should be given defendant in cross-examining plaintiff as to the settlement and items claimed to have been reserved which present the paramount issue and it is prejudicial error to unduly restrict such cross-examination and to make criticisms which might be taken as an intimation of the view of the court on the merits of the defense.—Darling v. Haff, 175 Mich. 304.

¶ 196. Where the trial court on cross-examination, sustained an objection to a question on the ground that it had been answered before, but immediately thereafter offered to permit the question if there was any doubt about the matter, such action did not unduly hamper counsel in the examination of the witness.—Richards v. City of Ann Arbor, 152 Mich. 15.

¶ 197. After a witness who had made use of a diary to refresh his memory on direct examination, had been questioned on cross-examination, as to various items not having any relation to the matters in issue, sufficiently to show the method by which such diary was made up and where it did not appear that examination as to other particular items would have cast discredit upon its accuracy, held that the refusal of the trial court to allow further cross-examination along the same line was not an abuse of discretion.—Collin v. Kittelberger, 193 Mich. 133.

¶ 198. The discretion of the trial judge in permitting a liberal cross-examination of the plaintiff's witnesses in an action against a saloonkeeper and his surety for an assault on a minor child by her father when intoxicated, in order to show similar assaults previously made when sober, held not an abuse of discretion.—Yonkus v. McKay, 186 Mich. 203.

¶ 199. The extent and rigor of cross-examination of witnesses in criminal prosecutions is largely within the discretion of the trial judge.—People v. Higgins, 127 Mich. 291.

¶ 200. In a murder case, where the respondent and deceased had had some difficulty some time before the actual killing and certain witnesses had testified as to what took place it was error of the court to restrict the cross-examination of the witnesses so as to shut out a theory of the defense as to what had happened, and the defense should further have been permitted to show the whereabouts of the witnesses in the interim between the first difficulty and the killing.—People v. Hull, 86 Mich. 449.

§ 39. Repeating or pursuing inquiry by further questions.

Pursuing question after disavowal or denial, see post § 40.

Repeating and pursuing cross-examination on redirect, see post § 96.

¶ 201. A witness may on cross-examination be asked to repeat what he has testified to on a particular point in his direct examination.—Zucker v. Karpeles, 88 Mich. 413; Beers v. Payment, 95 Mich. 261.

¶ 202. Upon cross-examination a witness may be asked to repeat what he has testified to upon a particular point in his direct examination, for the purpose not only of testing the recollection of the witness, but of ascertaining whether he makes a statement at variance with what he testified to in the direct examination.—Zucker v. Karpeles, 88 Mich. 413.

¶ 203. It is error to refuse to permit the mother of the complainant on a trial for statutory rape to be cross-examined by counsel for the respondent as to how she knew her daughter's age, which she had testified to on direct examination.—People v. Ayers, 182 Mich. 241.

¶ 204. Repetitions of questions in different language are properly excluded on cross-examination after full answers have been given.—Simon v. Home Ins. Co. of New York, 58 Mich. 278.

¶ 205. Where a witness denies that he was ever arrested or convicted on a criminal charge, or that he testified in another suit that he had been, it is within the court's discretion to exclude further questions as to his testimony in that suit; such discretion held not to have been abused.—Helwig v. Lascowski, 82 Mich. 619.

¶ 206. It is not error to refuse to permit further inquiries on matters already fully examined into, where it does not appear that additional or important information is excluded.—Ulrich v. People, 39 Mich. 245.

¶ 207. On an appeal from justices' court the refusal to permit the cross-examination of a party as to his testimony in the lower court, held not prejudicial, where his testimony sufficiently covered the question.—Brown v. Mitts, 187 Mich. 469.

¶ 208. A witness for the prosecution in a trial for an assault with intent to kill, being asked, on cross-examination, whether he did not steal overshoes from one Allen, answered that he never stole overshoes; and to the questions whether Allen did not follow him to his house and take these shoes, and whether he was followed and the overshoes taken from him, answered "no." Held, that no reasonable complaint could be made of the refusal to allow a further question as to whether any one followed him and took the overshoes; and that the court had already been liberal in permitting cross-examination as to this collateral matter.—People v. Niles, 44 Mich. 606.

¶ 209. It is not error for the trial court to refuse to allow counsel on cross-examination to explain a correction which witness made to testimony in another suit, where the witness testified that later at the other trial he corrected his mistake and testified substantially as at the present trial.—People v. Neely, 171 Mich. 249.

¶ 210. A plaintiff was asked on cross-examination for the apparent purpose of showing barratry, if her contract with her lawyer did not give him a percentage of the amount to be recovered. Plaintiff had fully answered the same question before, and objection to its repetition was sustained. Held, the ruling was not error on the ground that defendant's purpose was to prove a conspiracy, when he indicated no such purpose to the court.—Sisson v. Lampert, 159 Mich. 509.

¶ 211. On a trial for larceny, where it had already been developed that the character for chastity of one of the prosecution's witnesses was bad, it was held that the court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to permit further cross-examination tending to impeach her virtue.—People v. Harrison, 93 Mich. 594.

§ 40. ——After disavowal of knowledge.

¶ 213. It is not error in proceedings to condemn land to exclude on cross-examination of a witness a question as to his opinion upon facts the existence of which he has denied, especially when he has in effect answered the question in his direct examination.—Michigan Air Line R. Co. v. Barnes, 44 Mich. 222.

¶ 214. Where plaintiff when cross-examined as to statements made by his counsel in the argument before the jury on a former trial answers that he does not know what he said, it is proper to exclude an inquiry whether, if his counsel made such statements, it was not because of something plaintiff had told him in regard to the case.—Evans v. Montgomery, 95 Mich. 497.

Limiting further examination after recross, see post ¶ 601.

¶ 215. Where a party has not been limited in his re-examination, the cross-examination thereon may properly be allowed the same latitude.—Peoples v. Detroit Post & Tribune Co., 54 Mich. 457.

¶ 216. The prosecuting attorney was properly allowed on recross-examination of the prosecutrix in rape to ask her if she did not of her own initiative ask him if she might correct her testimony, where, having corrected on redirect examination a statement she had made on cross-examination, she testified on recross-examination that she had talked with the prosecutor relative to her testimony.—People v. Murphy, 145 Mich. 524.

§ 42. Calling for incompetent or privileged matter.

To meet inadmissible matter brought out on direct, see post § 43.

When collateral and immaterial matter is proper subject of cross question, see post § 56 et seq.

Calling for expert opinion from lay witness, see also post ¶ 350.

Claim of privilege, see post § 109; Witnesses, IV, V; Trial, V, C; Indictment, IX, B.

¶ 217. In a prosecution for larceny from a store, committed while the merchant's attention was engaged by defendant, who was tried as accomplice, the merchant, being the complaining witness, and having stated that he had once been in a banking firm, was asked on cross-examination the following question: "Did you not, while a member of that firm, extract from an envelope securities which were left in your vault for safe-keeping and use the proceeds for stock speculations in New York?" Held, that though the witness might refuse to criminate himself, the question should have been allowed.—People v. Arnold, 40 Mich. 710.

¶ 218. Where the defense of forgery is raised against a note procured by an agent of plaintiff, a farm-machine company, the agent, having testified to the execution of the note, may be asked on cross-examination whether he had not previously turned in a note to another company which falsely purported to be signed by defendant. The witness not claiming the privilege of not answering because it would tend to criminate him, his testimony was admissible as effecting his credibility, and as having some tendency to show that he fraudulently obtained the note in suit.—Johnston Harvester Co. v. Miller, 72 Mich. 265.

¶ 219. The rule that broad latitude should be allowed in the introduction of evidence where fraud is alleged, will not permit the admission of testimony, which is clearly incompetent and prejudicial.—Bales v. Evans, 182 Mich. 383.

¶ 220. It is not proper to cross-examine a witness upon a matter foreign to his direct examination, and as to which the law did not permit him to testify without the opposing party's consent.—Fox v. Barrett's Estate, 117 Mich. 162.

¶ 221. In an action of trover for goods claimed to have been deposited with defendants as warehousemen and to which they made no claim of title, or of right to hold for any third party, and which were not redelivered on demand, it is not proper on cross-examination of defendants to ask as to the probability of their having delivered the goods by mistake to some one else since that would call for a mere conclusion.—Bissell v. Starr, 32 Mich. 297.

¶ 222. One of two plaintiffs in replevin may be cross-examined as to his own understanding, as to whether he "considered" they had lost certain property, and also as to his coplaintiff's admissions, concerning a material fact in the case.—DeGraw v. Emory, 113 Mich. 672.

¶ 223. In an action for alienating the affections of her husband it is competent to ask the plaintiff on cross-examination her opinion whether her husband would have lived with her if she had stayed on the farm where they lived and not left of her own accord.—Derham v. Derham, 125 Mich. 109.

¶ 224. A question asked on cross-examination, calling for a conclusion as to the cause of an accident, may be excluded, where counsel is allowed to cross-examine fully in relation to the facts of the occurrence.—Gerhard v. Ford Motor Co., 155 Mich. 618.

¶ 225. Upon the question whether a defendant telephone company placed its wires in a safe position, it is proper to refuse to permit the plaintiff's witness to be asked on cross-examination whether, if he had been superintending the putting up of the plant, he would have considered it properly built as it stood, where said witness did not pretend to be an electrician, and on his direct examination was questioned only as to facts.—Anthony v. Cass County Home Tel. Co., 165 Mich. 388.

¶ 226. A witness who has testified that he was not present on occasions when boys were playing with a certain dog, cannot be permitted on cross-examination to answer the question whether he did not as a matter of fact know that some of the boys used to go in and play with the dog and get him to chase them; for that would be hearsay.—Kennett v. Engle, 105 Mich. 693.

¶ 227. In ejectment by a widow, claiming under her husband's will and his possession of the premises, a witness, having testified for plaintiff as to her marriage to such husband, cannot be cross-examined as to his having had another wife living thirty years before and as to that fact having been litigated in a contest of the will under which plaintiff claims; since the probate of the will was conclusive.—Johnson v. Johnson, 70 Mich. 65.

§ 43. ——To meet inadmissible matter brought out by adversary.

Inadmissible matter on cross-examination opening door to redirect, see post § 93.
Recross on matter of re-examination, see ante § 41.

¶ 228. The complaining witness in a prosecution for robbery was cross-examined as to having once been arrested for robbery himself, but he was also permitted to explain the affair as not inculpating him. The respondent then introduced the testimony of the officer who had arrested the complaining witness. Held improper; but as the officer's testimony was admitted, it was proper to allow him to be cross-examined as to that arrest, and to give exculpatory testimony.—Driscoll v. People, 47 Mich. 413.

¶ 229. Where in trover by a vendee against a sheriff who had attached the goods at the suit of the vendor's creditors, plaintiff was allowed to show a tender of the goods by the sheriff to him after the commencement of the trover suit, and his refusal to accept them, the reason of such refusal may be shown on cross-examination.—Buckingham v. Tyler, 74 Mich. 101.

¶ 230. In an action by a passenger on an open street car to recover damages for injuries sustained as the result of his being swept from the running board by a pole along defendant's right of way, held that the admission of evidence on cross-examination as to changes made in the running board after the accident was not error where the witness and another had testified on direct examination that changes had been made in the running boards and that they had been removed from one side of the car.—Murphy v. Manistee Ry. Co., 194 Mich. 595.

§ 44. Calling for matters of affirmative proof or defense.

See also post ¶ 234.
Cross-examination of party in his own behalf when called as adversary's witness, see post § 77, ¶ 534a.

Matters in rebuttal or traverse by cross-examination which might have been brought out in chief, see ante § 36.

¶ 231. An act of misconduct by a servant suing for his wages should be proved by itself by way of set-off if it is to be relied on for that purpose, and cannot be introduced upon cross-examination.—Bolt v. Frederick, 56 Mich. 20.

¶ 232. In a libel case where a witness has been examined on direct examination as to publication of the alleged libel and the circulation of it, it is error to elicit by cross-examination the fact of previous publications and a mass of current reports bearing on the truth of the charges made and the bad repute of the plaintiff, such being more proper matter of defense under a plea of justification.—Brewer v. Chase, 121 Mich. 526.

§ 45. Germaneness to issues and direct examination.

Right to go into issues beyond matter brought out on direct, see ante § 37.
Right to cross-examine adversary's witness as to matter adducible by questioner in chief, see ante § 36.
Calling out entire transaction or full details complementary of matters touched in direct, see post § 46.
Matter tending to rebut or explain direct, see post §§ 47-55.
When collateral and immaterial questions are permitted and for what purposes, see post § 56 et seq.

Cross-examination as to circumstances of shipment bearing on condition of goods when received, see also Carriers ¶ 233.

¶ 233. A party having testified on her direct examination that she never sold or authorized the sale of certain property may be properly asked on cross-examination questions with a view to show that she is estopped by her conduct from setting up any claim to the property in opposition to a sale made of it by another person.—Dann v. Cudney, 13 Mich. 239.

¶ 234. In replevin for oxen claimed as exempt from execution, the questions whether the plaintiff had sold other property to bring himself down to the exemption, or whether he sold any property during the winter prior to the taking of the oxen in question to avoid paying his debts, if material at all, are matters of defense purely, and in the nature of a confession and avoidance, and they are not competent on cross-examination of a witness who has testified simply to the plaintiff's occupation, and that he had no other team, because they have no tendency to controvert the facts elicited by the direct examination. —O'Donnell v. Segar, 25 Mich. 367.

¶ 235. It being in issue what was claimed, under a warranty of an engine to save fuel "equal to that claimed for the Corliss," a witness who testifies as to the claims so made, stating that he obtained his information regarding such claims from trade-circulars, he may be cross-examined as to the statements in such circulars relative to fuel efficiency.—Wickes Bros. v. Swift Electric Light Co., 70 Mich. 322.

¶ 236. An abstract question not confined to matters brought out upon direct examination in a criminal case is properly excluded on cross-examination.—Ulrich v. People, 39 Mich. 245.

¶ 237. Facts relating to the matters testified to on the direct examination of a witness, and which have an important bearing upon the issue, may be shown on his cross-examination.—Child v. Detroit Mfg. Co., 72 Mich. 623.

¶ 238. On cross-examination of plaintiff, suing as indorsee of a since deceased payee of a note, it is improper to ask whether the payee at his death had money to loan.—Hillman v. Schwenk, 68 Mich. 293.

¶ 239. An abstractor of titles, who has made an abstract of a tract in suit, and has testified that there is no record of a patent from the United States to a person by whose last will the property came into the hands of the grantor of one of the parties, may be asked on cross-examination why he made the abstract showing title from the government to that person, and where he obtained his information of such title.—Dikeman v. Arnold, 78 Mich. 455.

¶ 240. An attorney, suing other attorneys to whom he sent a claim for collection in order to recover from them for proceeds retained by them for fees of assistant counsel, whom they have employed, may be cross-examined as to the extent of his authority and as to his judgment of the value of the assistant counsel's services.—Mead v. Glidden, 79 Mich. 209.

¶ 241. Where a plaintiff has introduced testimony which the jury might consider as corroborative of the testimony of the witness on a given point, it is competent for defendant to cross-examine the witness on the same subject against objection that it is immaterial and irrelevant.—Valin v. McKerreghan, 104 Mich. 213.

¶ 242. In an action of ejectment, the defense being nondelivery of the deed, through which plaintiff claims title and adverse possession, testimony, upon cross-examination of one of the defendants, that he had presented a large claim against the estate of his mother which was disallowed, and that he contested her will which was duly probated, is not germane to the issue and should be excluded.—Carpenter v. Carpenter, 130 Mich. 213.

§ 46. ——Calling out supplementary or complementary matter.

Right to call out rebutting and explanatory matters, see post §§ 47-55.

Developing whole conversation or exact words on redirect, see post § 98.
Cross-examination to draw out full correspondence or conversation, see also Evidence § 91.

¶ 243. Whenever an entire transaction is in issue, evidence which conceals any part of it is defective; and any question which fills up the omissions of the witness is legitimate and proper on cross-examination. A party cannot glean out certain parts which alone would make out a false account and save his own witness from the sifting process without which these omissions cannot be detected.—Chandler v. Allison, 10 Mich. 460.

¶ 244. The defense cannot be compelled to give credit to plaintiff's witness as its own in order to obtain the explanation of facts constituting plaintiff's case, where the plaintiff has omitted part of them in examining him; but is entitled to cross-examine him as to all the facts where the whole transaction is at issue.—New York Iron Mine v. First Nat. Bank of Negaunee, 39 Mich. 644.

¶ 245. If a witness is asked if he had a conversation at a certain time, and the matter is left with an affirmative reply, the other party may call out the conversation if it would have any bearing on the controversy. —Dunbar v. McGill, 64 Mich. 676.

¶ 246. The payee of a draft had testified to an interview with the drawee in which the latter objected to paying because he had an unsettled account with the maker of the draft. Held proper on cross-examination to draw out all that the drawee said on the subject during that conversation.—Lichtenberg v. Mair, 43 Mich. 387.

¶ 247. In an action for an assault and battery growing out of plaintiff's being called to account to defendant for words spoken of him, plaintiff in the course of his testimony stated, "So I rehearsed what I said." Held proper on cross-examination to bring out what was rehearsed by him.—Galbraith v. Fleming, 60 Mich. 403.

¶ 248. Where a witness in an action on contract has been examined as to defendant's declarations, it is proper to cross-examine as to further statements made by him and bearing on the same subject.—Wheeler & Wilson Mfg. Co. v. Walker, 41 Mich. 239.

¶ 249. Plaintiff (who sues as indorsee of a note) having testified to a purchase of it and that the payee had kept it in a pocketbook, whereas defendant claimed that plaintiff forged the indorsement after the payee's death may, on cross-examination, be asked if he had in his possession, after the death, a pocket-book belonging to the payee.—Hillman v. Schwenk, 68 Mich. 293.

¶ 250. Where a witness testifies to certain admissions made by a party to the action when sworn upon a prior trial, the latter is entitled, upon cross-examination, to elicit all of his testimony then given which may tend to explain the statements which he is claimed to have made.—Reiser v. Portere, 106 Mich. 102.

¶ 251. In a prosecution against a public official for embezzlement, where one of the respondent's bondsmen had been permitted to testify to admissions made to him by respondent, and to payments made by his fellow bondsmen and himself, it was error to exclude on cross-examination all of the conversation he had upon such occasion with the respondent and the entire transaction about the payment.—People v. Warren, 122 Mich. 504.

¶ 252. Where the prosecutrix in a seduction case has testified that defendant had told her that certain other girls allowed such liberties as he took it was proper to ask her their names, as evidence bearing on the means used in effecting the seduction.—Lewis v. People, 37 Mich. 518.

¶ 253. Where a witness testified in a rape case that she went with one P. to see the mother of the injured girl in question and related the conversation which took place, cross-examination as to what the witness said to P. was proper.—People v. Rich, 133 Mich. 14.

¶ 254. In a will contest where, as tending to show mental capacity, testimony was offered that the testatrix a few hours after the execution of her will was attended by a priest who administered the last sacrament, and that the testatrix participated and appeared to comprehend the service, it is error to exclude cross-examination of a witness who was present at the service, as to what such service consisted of.—Henrich v. Saier, 124 Mich. 86.

¶ 255. A witness, having testified that he once owned the lands in question damaged by a nuisance, may be asked on cross-examination if he has sold them to plaintiffs.—Neely v. Detroit Sugar Co., 138 Mich. 469.

§ 47. Rebutting or explaining testimony.

To rebut or explain particular facts or matters, see post §§ 48-55.
Particularity required in question as to party's statements out of court offered to rebut his claim, see ante ¶ 23.
To show estoppel to make claim adduced on direct, see ante ¶ 233.
Right to call out matter on cross-examination from adverse party or witness who might have been called in chief, see ante § 36.
Contradictory testimony as ground for latitude, see ante ¶ 183.
Right to make explanation of testimony, see ante § 34.
Redirect to rebut or explain or complement cross-examination, see post §§ 97, 98.

Relevancy of evidence because tending to rebut or explain other evidence in the case, see Evidence § 84 et seq. and references there found; Indictment, VIII, B.
Order in which evidence in chief or in rebuttal should be received, see Trial, V, B; Indictment, IX, B.

¶ 256. It is competent on cross-examination to call out not only any fact contradicting or qualifying any particular statements made on the direct examination, but also anything tending to rebut or modify any conclusion or inference resulting from such statements.—Detroit & M. R. Co. v. Van Steinburg, 17 Mich. 99; Wilson v. Wagar, 26 Mich. 452.

¶ 257. On cross-examination of a witness for the plaintiff, the defendant may put any question calculated not only to test his credibility and the extent and means of his knowledge, but to draw out any fact which might tend either to contradict, weaken or explain any one of his particular statements, or to weaken any inference from the whole or any part of his testimony in chief that supports either of the main facts essential to the plaintiff's case.—Thompson v. Richards, 14 Mich. 172; O'Donnell v. Segar, 25 Mich. 367.

¶ 258. On cross-examination, questions relating to the subject-matter of the witness' testimony cannot be excluded merely because the precise subject has not been called up on his examination in chief, but may extend to any matter not wholly foreign to the subject-matter of such examination and tending to limit, explain or modify the same.—Haynes v. Ledyard, 33 Mich. 319.

¶ 259. A witness whose testimony makes out a prima facie case may be so cross-examined as to draw out any facts which would tend to destroy the case so made.—Jacobson v. Metzger, 35 Mich. 103.

¶ 260. It is competent for a father on cross-examination to state that he never told his young child that accused was the man who robbed the father, such child having identified accused and testified that the father told that; since the father's testimony tended to render the identification erroneous.—McGuire v. People, 44 Mich. 286.

¶ 261. Where the counsel of a defendant sued for criminally assaulting plaintiff while she was employed in defendant's house, has, in cross-examining plaintiff, emphasized the fact that one L., an employee of defendant, slept in a room adjoining the one occupied by plaintiff, and where plaintiff has been permitted to show, on cross-examining defendant, that, at a previous term of court, defendant procured a continuance on an affidavit showing that L. was a material witness, and that defendant expected to prove by him that he slept in said ajoining room during the time of the alleged assault upon plaintiff, and heard no outcry, that defendant knew the whereabouts of L., but did not produce him, and had concluded not to call him after having had a conference with him, such cross-examination was competent to rebut the inference which defendant sought to draw from plaintiff's failure to produce L. as a witness in her behalf.—Hart v. Walker, 100 Mich. 406.

¶ 262. An indorser, sued upon a note, the amount of which has been raised, may, after testifying that spaces were left before the figures and the written numbers large enough to admit of the insertion of other figures and words, be asked on cross-examination why he did not fill the spaces with marks and whether he did not know it is usual to do so.—Pearson v. Hardin, 95 Mich. 360.

¶ 263. In cross-examining a wife who is suing her father-in-law for alienating her husband's affections it is not competent to ask her whether she did not know that her church did not recognize as binding a marriage between a Protestant and a Catholic when solemnized by a Protestant minister, or to ask her sister, a witness in her behalf, whether she did not know that in the Catholic church the marriage meant no salvation for plaintiff, and whether the witness did not object to that; the proposed testimony being too remote for its purpose of rebutting the testimony of the witness that plaintiff's family did not object to the marriage.—Rice v. Rice, 104 Mich. 371.

¶ 264. In assumpsit, brought by a corporation against its former treasurer to recover an alleged shortage in his account, it is competent for defendant to prove on cross-examination that no demand was made on him for such shortage at the stockholders' meeting when he was relieved of his office, there having been evidence tending to show a constructive demand.—American Seed Co. v. Cole, 174 Mich. 42.

See also ante ¶¶ 238, 264, 265, post ¶¶ 281, 282, 285.
As to particulars of damages and values, see post § 54.
As bearing on probability of large order being for cash or on credit terms, see post ¶ 293.

¶ 266. Where a prosecuting witness claims to have been robbed of a large sum of money, taken from his person, cross-examination to show that he was straitened and considerably indebted, and that his stock of goods was small, and that on the preliminary examination of the accused he had made statements indicating that his inventory was very much larger than he knew it to have been, is admissible as bearing on the probabilities and to test his candor and credibility.—People v. Morrigan, 29 Mich. 4.

¶ 267. A wife replevied, as her own, property that had been seized on execution against her husband, and on the trial called her husband to show that it belonged to her. Held proper to cross-examine him as to his own use of the property and of its proceeds, and also as to his business, what he did with his earnings, and where his wife got her money to pay for the property in suit.—Gavigan v. Scott, 51 Mich. 373.

¶ 268. Where, in suit against A. and B. for money alleged to have been lent to them as partners, A.'s theory was that B. had no money when he went into business with him, and that B. borrowed part of the money sued for to pay that which he had borrowed to go into business with, it was held proper, B. having testified in behalf of plaintiff, to subject him to a searching cross-examination as to his financial condition and transactions from the time the business began, and to ask him if he did not know at the time he went into business that he had no money for the purpose.—Coller v. Porter, 88 Mich. 549.

¶ 269. In an action upon an obligation given by a man to his divorced wife, the consideration for which was that she should pay certain debts of his, where she had testified that she paid such debts with money obtained from an insurance company, it was proper to cross-examine her as to whether she did not borrow such money on property given her by her husband, the purpose being to show that the money was not borrowed, but was taken out of her husband's store.—Bulen v. Granger, 58 Mich. 274.

¶ 270. In an action on a promissory note, the execution of which is denied, it is competent to cross-examine the payee as to where he obtained the money to make the alleged loan.—Neal v. Neal, 181 Mich. 114.

§ 49. ——Existence, terms, performance, or discharge of contracts.

As to assignments, transfers and sales, see post § 50.

Financial conditions and resources as bearing on contract, see also ante § 48.

Cross-examination as to previous statements respecting existence of instrument, see post ¶ 468.

¶ 271. It is proper to ask a witness on his cross-examination, who has testified on his direct examination to the execution of a policy of insurance, whether, when policies of the kind testified to by him were issued by the company, any other papers were executed by either party in connection with the policy.—Throop v. North American Fire Ins. Co., 19 Mich. 423.

¶ 272. Where defendant in an action for breach of contract does not admit the contract and plaintiff testifies to it, defendant may put in by cross-examination anything that would tend to show that it was unreasonable or could not have been carried out by either party.—Petrie v. Lane, 58 Mich. 527.

¶ 273. Where the execution of a note is denied by defendant, and the agent who claims to have taken it for plaintiff testifies that he was present and saw defendant sign it, he may be cross-examined fully as to all that took place at the time of the alleged signing.—Johnston Harvester Co. v. Miller, 72 Mich. 265.

¶ 274. In an action for services in purchasing and shipping sheep for defendants it is error, on cross-examination of a witness who has given evidence tending to show the purchase from witness by plaintiff of certain specified sheep for defendants, to exclude the inquiry as to who paid him for such sheep; the payment in completion of the bargain might direct the jury to the principal for whom the purchase was made with quite as much certainty as any testimony of witnesses as to their mere understanding; the inquiry is relevant and important.—Parker v. Grinnell, 34 Mich. 199.

¶ 275. In an action against a landlord on an alleged promise to reimburse the costs, expenses and damages sustained by a tenant in taking an appeal from a judgment of eviction in summary proceedings brought against him by a tenant claiming under a prior lease, a witness testified that he told the landlord that he, the landlord, was responsible to appellant if evicted, and also that the landlord gave the witness to understand he would stand by appellant. Held, that it was proper on cross-examination to examine the witness in full as to the circumstances under which he gave such advice.—Cummerford v. Paulus, 66 Mich. 648.

¶ 276. In an action against an attorney upon an alleged agreement to prosecute plaintiff's suit and pay all costs, receiving half the recovery if successful, where plaintiff has testified that defendant solicited him to allow defendant to prosecute appeal from an adverse judgment on such terms, after plaintiff had given up trying to collect it, it is proper to ask plaintiff, on cross-examination, whether he had not tried unsuccessfully to get different attorneys to take the case on shares.—Wildey v. Crane, 69 Mich. 17.

¶ 277. In an action for breach of promise of marriage, plaintiff, having testified to statements circulated by defendant as to her physical disability, may be cross-examined as to statements made by herself on the subject; and, though plea is the general issue, she may be asked whether she has told certain persons that she had a tumor, for this would bear on her capacity to make or carry out at that time a contract of marriage without fraud or injury to defendant.—Goddard v. Westcott, 82 Mich. 180.

¶ 278. A defendant claiming to have signed without consideration and after negotiation to plaintiff, when sued on a note and having testified that he promised to pay the note if plaintiff would discount it, and as a compromise may be asked how much he offered to pay.—Steers v. Holmes, 79 Mich. 430.

¶ 279. A general agent of an insurance company who has testified upon direct examination, in an action by a solicitor against him for commissions, that he paid one-half of the commissions on the first premium on certain policies to a third person, may be asked on cross-examination, for the purpose of rebutting the inference to be drawn from his testimony that his agreement with the solicitor called for less than half the first premiums, as to how much annual commissions he is entitled to on policies after the first year.—Raymond v. Day, 111 Mich. 443.

¶ 280. In an action for non-performance of contract defendant should be allowed to show by cross-examination of the plaintiff that the latter, after the contract was made, had left it discretionary with defendant to rescind.—Petrie v. Lane, 58 Mich. 528.

¶ 281. In an action upon an obligation given by a man to his divorced wife, the consideration for which was that she should pay certain debts of his, it is proper for him to show in defense that she had paid them, if at all, with the surplus moneys furnished her by him for domestic expenses; since such evidence tended to show that she made use of his money instead of her own (if she paid them), in so doing.—Bulen v. Granger, 58 Mich. 274.

¶ 282. Where a person sued for commissions claimed by plaintiff as due him on a sale of land defends on the theory that he has paid the agreed commissions to another real-estate agent, by plaintiff's direction, and that the two were to make a division of the same, and the second agent testifies that he received the money under such an arrangement, which he has not carried out, he may be asked on cross-examination why he has not paid plaintiff his share of the money; since the answer might show a proper application to plaintiff's benefit by his consent. —O'Callaghan v. Boeing, 72 Mich. 669.

¶ 283. Where the defendant in a suit upon a contract for malleable iron seeks to recoup damages for breach of the contract which plaintiff claimed he was unable to fulfill because proper patterns, flasks, and cores were not furnished and defendant claimed that he did furnish proper patterns, flasks and cores, that they were the same he had furnished others, and that no complaint had been made, the defendant may be properly cross-examined relative to such contention.—Rockford Malleable Iron Works v. Tilden, 188 Mich. 80.

§ 50. ——Particulars of assignments, transfers and sales.

As to contracts and their terms in general, see ante § 49.

As to fraud, good faith or notice, see post § 53.

¶ 284. In an action upon an assigned obligation, the assignor, if called as a witness for the plaintiff, may properly be cross-examined as to any material fact affecting the execution of the paper.—Bulen v. Granger, 58 Mich. 274.

¶ 285. Where, in a suit by the vendee of a partner's interest in the firm's business and assets against his vendor, the other partner has testified in defendant's behalf as to the manner of selecting the assigned accounts, and that all of the accounts were not assigned to plaintiff, who claimed that he was to have gilt-edged accounts, it is competent, upon cross-examination, to show the amount of the retained accounts, and what had been realized upon them.—Totten v. Burhans, 103 Mich. 6.

¶ 286. Where the direct testimony of a witness tended to show a sale of articles without any specified price, it is competent in an action for their value to show by his cross-examination that they were furnished under a special contract.—Wilson v. Wagar, 26 Mich. 452.

¶ 287. In an action against a married woman to charge her individually for goods purchased, it is competent, on the cross-examination of plaintiff, who has sworn simply that she bought them at his store, and that they were charged to her on his books, to ask him whether at the time he sold her the goods he knew that she was a married woman.—Powers v. Russell, 26 Mich. 179.

¶ 288. In a suit against a married woman for goods sold her in the way of business it was held proper to cross-examine her and her husband fully as to their habit of purchasing and doing business.—Altman v. Young, 38 Mich. 410.

¶ 289. In an action for the price of wood sold and delivered it was proper on cross-examination of a witness, who had sworn that none of the wood had been sold and removed before the delivery and measurement had been completed, to ask whether it was not common for persons to buy wood there by the pile and haul it away themselves, since it bore on the probabilities as well as on the witness' knowledge as to what happened there during the time of unloading.—McGraw v. Sturgeon, 29 Mich. 426.

¶ 290. An architect suing for the value of some plans showed that he had delivered them, at defendant's request, to a third person, who swore that defendant had sent him after them. Held, that on the cross-examination of this witness, the question whether defendant had not demanded the plans of him, and he had refused on the ground that he owned them, was properly excluded as neither impeaching nor tending to show as against the plaintiff that he had really bought the plans.—French v. O'Connor, 39 Mich. 106.

¶ 291. A produce broker sued a dealer who had commissioned him to buy corn for future delivery, for refusing to receive the corn when tendered, and testified that while the expectation had been that the dealer would order a sale before the time for delivery, the broker had nevertheless expected to obtain title to the corn for delivery at the maturity of the contracts, if they were not sooner disposed of. Held, that in the absence of any evidence of previous gambling transactions between the parties, it was not proper on cross-examination to ask the broker if on any such dealings he had ever received any corn.—Gregory v. Wendell, 40 Mich. 432.

¶ 292. Where the only question at issue is whether property was transferred under one contract or another, and no question of fraud is raised, there is no ground for cross-examining a party as to the value of the consideration.—Leavitt v. Stansell, 44 Mich. 424.

¶ 293. Where the dispute is whether the terms of a sale were cash or four months' time, it is proper to ask defendant when he bought so large an order before; it being claimed by plaintiff that the purchase on time of so large an order by a dealer in a small town was improbable.—Julius King Optical Co. v. Treat, 72 Mich. 599.

¶ 294. Where a foreign manufacturer is sued for failure to deliver goods at the time agreed in the contract of sale, his agent, having testified to certain reasons for the failure to fill the order, may be cross-examined with a view of showing reasons other than those given.—Leo Austrian & Co. v. Springer, 94 Mich. 343.

¶ 295. A plaintiff in replevin, to establish his title, testified that the defendant had agreed to make for him the article in dispute, had notified him of its completion, asked him to take it, and afterwards, upon a claim relating to it, had recovered judgment against him, which he had paid; held proper on cross-examination to ask him whether, when defendant had notified him and required him to take the article, he had not refused on the ground that it was not made according to agreement, such a circumstance belonging to the group of facts related, and being adapted to give the affair a different legal aspect.—Lyman v. Becannon, 29 Mich. 466.

¶ 296. Where one who sues for a balance due on a contract to deliver timber claims that delay in delivery was waived by defendant, it is proper, as bearing on the question whether the latter understood he had waived such delay, to ask him, on cross-examination, whether he had a vessel to take the timber on the day fixed for delivery.—Duplanty v. Stokes, 103 Mich. 630.

¶ 297. In an action for goods sold and delivered, where the defendants had agreed to make a cash payment and the balance by giving a note, which was returned by the plaintiff as not properly signed it was proper cross-examination of one of defendants to ask him if a note had not been asked in return for the other one.—Illinois Roofing & Supply Co. v. Aerial Advertising Co., 142 Mich. 698.

§ 51. ——Torts and negligence and circumstances thereof.

Of party respecting tort or negligence, see post § 52.
As to damages and values, see post § 54.
Collateral and immaterial matters as subjects for cross-examination, see post § 56 et seq.

¶ 298. Where a witness has testified that he told deceased—who was about to cross a railroad track in a wagon drawn by a mule—to "whip up his mule," it is proper to bring out on cross-examination the fact that he had frequently joked deceased about the mule; this would be pertinent to the question whether the deceased understood the remark as indicating danger from an approaching train, or as mere pleasantry.—Gugenheim v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 66 Mich. 150.

¶ 299. In a personal injury case where plaintiff had been struck at a railroad crossing it was competent on cross-examination to ask the physician whether plaintiff had told him whether or not he had seen the engine before he had been struck by it, the purpose being to elicit admissions then made.—Thomas v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co., 86 Mich. 496.

¶ 300. In a statutory assumpsit for recovery of the cost of breaking a log jam alleged to have been caused by defendant's neglect, it was proper cross-examination of the foreman of the log-driving crew, called as a witness by defendant, to ask him if he had given directions to roll logs into the stream and keep its channel full and not to drive out defendant's logs and to make plaintiffs drive out defendant's logs first if they wanted to get their own out, there having been testimony in chief tending to show that defendant's logs were rolled into the stream so as to keep it dammed.—Butterfield v. Gilchrist, 63 Mich. 155.

¶ 301. Thorough cross-examination of the plaintiff's witnesses should be permitted in an action against a saloonkeeper and his surety by a minor child for an assault on her by her father while intoxicated, to show previous similar assaults by him when sober. —Yonkus v. McKay, 186 Mich. 203.

¶ 302. In an action for injury suffered by escape of electric current over trolley span wires through improper insulation, it is proper cross-examination of defendant's foreman to ask if he had warned workmen against hot span wires.—Warren v. City Elec. Ry. Co., 141 Mich. 298.

¶ 303. In an action for injury done by negligent driving it was held proper, on cross-examination of the driver, to exclude evidence that at the time of the injury he refused to give the name of the owner of the team he was driving. This could not have aided in fixing the liability.—Mabley v. Kittleberger, 37 Mich. 360.

¶ 304. Where defendant automobile owner's servant, in a suit for injuries from an accident, testifies that he ran his master's cars slowly all through town in testing them, cross-examination is permissible to show what his usual rate of speed was.—Matla v. Rapid Motor Vehicle Co., 160 Mich. 639.

¶ 305. In an action at common law for the negligent death of a railway pump operator in which it was alleged that defendant failed to furnish deceased with a place and machinery reasonably safe in which and with which to work, and in which a witness for defendant testified that the machine in question was in common and general use at the time of the accident and that the company by whom he was employed had sold this machine on a specified date, and that up to the date of the accident, a period of thirteen years, a certain number of machines was placed upon the market, held that it was proper by cross-examination of such witness to show that a great number of such machines were of different construction in that they had an entirely different clutch and had guards.—Snowden v. Detroit & M. Ry. Co., 194 Mich. 87.

Of party in general, see post § 77.
As to extent of personal injury and disability, see post § 54.

¶ 306. The nature of the possession of a plaintiff in trover can be inquired into in cross-examining him.—Stearns v. Vincent, 50 Mich. 209.

¶ 307. In an action for malicious prosecution based on charges of maliciously breaking a church window, it was not error to allow a full cross-examination of plaintiff as to his knowledge of or connection with other injuries to the church both before and after the injury complained of, such questions bearing on his motives and the extent of his injury from the prosecution.—Gurden v. Stevens, 146 Mich. 489.

¶ 308. Defendant may be cross-examined fully in regard to his former relations with plaintiff; in an action for assault and battery and malicious prosecution.—Peterson v. Toner, 80 Mich. 350.

¶ 309. In an action for assault and battery it is proper to ask plaintiff, on cross-examination, whether, before the parties came to blows, he did not assume a threatening attitude and advance toward defendant. —Galbraith v. Fleming, 60 Mich. 403.

¶ 310. In case of an assault, where the defendant claimed that the occurrence was merely a friendly scuffle, it was not error to permit cross-examination of him as to whether he threw cayenne pepper in a boy's eyes subsequent to the assault in question, the only objection having been on the point of time and the fact being relevant to defendant's disposition to play pranks on others.—Lee v. Longwell, 136 Mich. 458.

¶ 311. A defendant in a suit for assault and battery testified by way of justification that the plaintiff had a quarrelsome disposition, and defendant was in great fear of him on the occasion in question. Held, it was error to refuse the plaintiff permission to cross-examine the defendant as to his own traits for the purpose of showing that he was in fact not afraid.—Ulmer v. Seelman, 159 Mich. 253.

¶ 312. In an action for damages for assault and battery where defendant testified that he picked up the stone with which he struck plaintiff because he was afraid of plaintiff, held that it was proper on cross-examination to ask defendant if he did not at one time throw a club at another person and if he had not carried a piece of iron in his pocket and boasted that he would get a certain man with it for the purpose of showing his character and disposition.— Cornell v. Fidler, 194 Mich. 509.

¶ 313. In an action for libel where the newspaper article claimed as libelous alleged that plaintiff, a sheriff, was drunk and frequented saloons after hours, and the defendant pleaded justification, it was held error to exclude questions on cross-examination of plaintiff tending to show his habits as being a frequenter of saloons after closing hours.—Aronson v. Baldwin, 178 Mich. 565.

¶ 314. In an action for damages from defendant's careless driving it is not admissible on cross-examination of plaintiff to ask him as to his own habits of running horses on the highway, or of being intoxicated while driving, if it is not contended that he was indulging in either of the habits at the time of the injury.—Hill v. Snyder, 44 Mich. 318.

¶ 315. Where an action for an injury caused by the negligence of defendant's driver in colliding with plaintiff's wagon, plaintiff testified that if the defendant's driver had driven in a straight line from where plaintiff saw him he would not have touched plaintiff. It was proper to ask him how far in such case the wheels of defendant's truck would have come from him.—Boick v. Bissell, 80 Mich. 260.

¶ 316. In an action for injuries to a threshing machine outfit caused by the fall of a bridge, a question asked on cross-examination of a plaintiff as to whether it was not carelessness to drive the machine on the bridge without first examining the strength of it, was proper, although objected to on the ground that he might have assumed that the bridge was strong enough, and used it on that assumption.—Moore v. Township of Hazelton, 118 Mich. 425.

¶ 317. In a suit against the owner of a building for personal injuries arising from the failure to provide automatic gates at the elevator shaft, defendant asked plaintiff on the cross-examination whether, if he had had a good bright light, he would have seen that the elevator was not at the landing. Held, the exclusion of this by the court was not error as preventing defendant from showing that there was no light at the elevator shaft and from showing the general condition with respect to the light.—Barfoot v. White Star Line, 170 Mich. 349.

§ 53. ——Frauds and fraudulent conveyances, good faith, and notice.

Questions as to collateral matters bearing on fraud, see post § 56 et seq.

Respecting collateral frauds and misdoing to affect credibility, see post § 64.

As to prior statements admissible of the fraud, see post § 67.

¶ 318. Wide latitude of cross-examination may be allowed in cases involving fraud.—Anderson v. Walter, 34 Mich. 113; Jacobson v. Metzger, 35 Mich. 103; Snow v. Nowlin, 43 Mich. 383; Daniels v. Dayton, 49 Mich. 137; Ganong v. Green, 71 Mich. 1; Stevenson v. Woltman, 81 Mich. 200; Miller v. Hanley, 94 Mich. 253; Gumberg v. Treusch, 103 Mich. 543; Barnett v. Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 115 Mich. 247.

¶ 319. A wide latitude should be allowed in the cross-examination of a witness who participated in a transaction to which the defense of fraud is set up.—Neal v. Neal, 181 Mich. 114.

¶ 320. Where a principal charges collusion between his agent and a third party to defraud him, cross-examination of the principal as to making a claim against the agent's bondsman, is proper.—B. Marx & Son v. King, 177 Mich. 662.

¶ 321. In an action for fraud a person concerned with defendant testified with regard to the latter's purchase of a certain horse that he himself had objected to, cheating the owner of the horse because the owner had a crippled mother to support, and that defendant had carried out the cheat himself. On cross-examination defendant was asked, against objection, as to the crippled condition of the woman, and admitted it. Held, that this was admissible as bearing on the probabilities as corroborating the first witness.—Daniels v. Dayton, 49 Mich. 137.

¶ 322. On an application to dissolve an attachment granted on the ground that defendants had disposed of their property with intent to defraud creditors, it was proper to question a witness who testified that he held a mortgage on some of defendants' property as to what the particular property was and whether he had ever paid defendants anything for the mortgage.—Genesee County Sav. Bank v. Michigan Barge Co., 52 Mich. 164.

¶ 323. Where in an action by an indorsee upon a note defendant alleged that it was obtained by fraud, and that plaintiff knew it, and showed that other notes were fraudulently obtained and sold to third parties before maturity. Held, that plaintiff could not show, on cross-examination, the reputable character of the third parties.—Mace v. Kennedy, 68 Mich. 389.

¶ 324. Where a mortgagee seeks to recover the value of mortgaged property sold on execution, and the mortgage is charged to have been fraudulent, he may be cross-examined as to his disposition of other property covered by the mortgage but not involved in the suit.—Ganong v. Green, 71 Mich. 1.

¶ 325. Where, in a suit involving an alleged fraudulent sale of property, a vendor is sworn as a witness in behalf of the vendee and plaintiff, defendant on cross-examination may draw out any material fact tending to show that the sale was fraudulent as to creditors.—Pickard v. Bryant, 92 Mich. 430.

¶ 326. In a proceeding under How. St., § 8091, to hold garnishees on account of conveyances fraudulent as to the principal defendant's creditors, the manager of a commercial agency, after testifying in plaintiff's behalf to a statement made to him by the principal defendant as to his financial condition, and after testifying on cross-examination that he had known the garnishees several years, should not have been asked if he had known of their having been engaged during that time in any dishonest transactions.—Gumberg v. Treusch, 103 Mich. 548.

¶ 327. In garnishment proceedings where the defense was that no sale was made to the garnishee defendants but to a third party from whom they purchased and the plaintiff insisted this was a subterfuge, evidence produced through cross-examination of the garnishee defendants about other sales to other parties is immaterial, and especially improper when not touched on in the direct examination, and evidence that this sale to a third party was a fraudulent one was improper as impeaching evidence.—Seitz v. Starks, 144 Mich. 448.

¶ 328. In cross-examination of plaintiff in an action to recover for medical services, where defendant claims a fraudulent agreement between the plaintiff and his assistant to divide the fees, considerable latitude should be allowed as to such agreement.—McNair v. Parr, 177 Mich. 327.

¶ 329. Where it is claimed that one who sues upon a renewal note had knowledge of the invalidity of the original, he may be subjected to full cross-examination as to his conversations with defendant at the time he took the note.—Hunt v. Rumsey, 83 Mich. 136.

¶ 330. Where the testimony in a suit by an alleged bona fide holder of a "Bohemian Oat Note" tended to show that the plaintiff had knowledge of the true character of the paper before its purchase, he may be cross-examined touching his knowledge, before or at the time of such purchase, of Bohemian oat notes in general, or as to his information or knowledge specially in regard to any such note which had come into his hands or to his attention.—Ward v. Doane, 77 Mich. 328.

¶ 331. Witnesses for plaintiff may be cross-examined at length upon the question of bona fides, though they were not examined upon that subject in the direct examination, where the issue is whether the plaintiff bank is a bona fide holder of a fraudulently certified check.—Detroit Nat. Bank v. Union Trust Co., 145 Mich. 656.

¶ 332. In an action of assumpsit for fraud and deceit under Comp. L. 1897, § 10421, based upon the exchange of a hotel for some land, where plaintiff claimed that defendants had represented that the hotel was rented and the lessee was called to testify that the alleged lease was a mere pretense it was proper cross-examination to ask him if at the time of signing the lease it was understood that the officers were looking up evidence to prosecute for violation of the liquor law and the statute against gambling.—Pinch v. Hotaling, 142 Mich. 521.

¶ 333. Where plaintiff sues defendant to recover, on the ground of fraud, money advanced to defendant under a certain contract, it is proper to cross-examine defendant as to where he secured the form of contract used.—Ward v. Cook, 158 Mich. 283.

¶ 334. In an action for personal injuries caused by defendant's dog, cross-examination of defendant, to inquire into defendant's disposition of his property pending the suit is improper.—French v. Wilkinson, 93 Mich. 622.

§ 54. ——Damages or values and personal injuries and details thereof.

Cross-examination to show that contract was rescindable at option, see also ante ¶ 280.
Cross-examination of plaintiff in action for breach of promise to marry as bearing on damages, see Damages ¶ 1273.
Redirect to meet inference that injury was slight, see post ¶ 647.
Cross-examination as to means of knowing values, see post § 57.
Redirect as to data of valuation, see post § 97.
Admissibility of evidence bearing on damages, see Damages, XI.
Admissibility of evidence bearing on values, see Values.

¶ 335. In an action against a carrier for injury to hay by wetting where evidence has been admitted as to its condition at a previous connecting point of transshipment, it is proper cross-examination to inquire into the mode of transshipment, conditions of storage, weather, and condition in which it was delivered to defendant carrier.—Marquette, H. & O. R. Co. v. Langton, 32 Mich. 251.

¶ 336. In trover the value of the property in suit only is material, and evidence as to the value of other property described in the bill of sale under which plaintiff claims title is inadmissible under cross-examination.—Burrill v. Wilcox Lumber Co., 65 Mich. 571.

¶ 337. In an action for damages for false imprisonment, the plaintiff introduced evidence that she was a physician and offered to show the value of her practice. Held proper cross-examination to ask how she got it, as by advertising, through hand-bills, or otherwise.—Van Deusen v. Newcomer, 40 Mich. 90.

¶ 338. On cross-examination of a physician sued for malpractice, inquiry as to his having been engaged in farming pursuits during the time he has been practicing as a physician is proper.—Mayo v. Wright, 63 Mich. 32.

¶ 339. Where in an action for false imprisonment plaintiff was allowed, in proving damages, to show that he had subpoenaed witnesses, and the amount he had paid them, he was properly asked on cross-examination to state the specific amount paid a given witness.—Thurston v. Wright, 77 Mich. 96.

¶ 340. Where one sued for services in moving a building seeks to recoup damages for injury thereto, and testifies that it was worth $400 or $500 when he bought it, it is proper, as tending to discredit his statement of the value, to draw out from him on his cross-examination the fact that he paid $85 for the building.—Curren v. Ampersee, 96 Mich. 553.

¶ 341. Plaintiff having testified to rental value at a certain sum corresponding to rent reserved in leases introduced for the same purpose, it was competent on cross-examination to show that he actually received a less sum the year before for the use of said premises, and that he furnished heat for the same, said proposed evidence tending to contradict or weaken his testimony as to said rental value.—Vincent v. Defield, 105 Mich. 315.

¶ 342. The defense, in an action for damages to a dock owner, resulting from the construction of a bridge near by which tended to prevent vessels from stopping at the dock, may cross-examine the plaintiff as to the particulars upon which the general estimate which he gave in testimony as the annual damage, was formed.—Maxwell v. Bay City Bridge Co., 46 Mich. 278.

¶ 343. On the question whether accounts transferred on sale of an interest in a firm were good and collectible, a witness examined for the adverse party, and who has testified as to the manner of selecting the assigned accounts and that some of them had not been assigned, may be cross-questioned as to what was afterwards realized on those not assigned.—Totten v. Burhans, 103 Mich. 6.

¶ 344. In an action for breach of warranty in the sale of fruit trees on account of furnishing trees of inferior variety, where the witness has testified as to the increased value of real estate with trees upon it, cross-examination on the cost of raising trees is competent to test the credibility and the competence of the witness and to assist the jury in determining the value of the land with trees of proper varieties.—Angell v. Pruyn, 126 Mich. 16.

¶ 345. In assumpsit for goods sold and delivered to a retailer and a plea of recoupment for defects in the goods, it is proper to cross-examine the defendant as to the price he received for the goods, where he has testified on direct examination as to the usual custom.—Jackson Sleigh Co. v. Holmes, 129 Mich. 370.

¶ 346. In trover for the conversion of mortgaged tools by the mortgagee, the plaintiff having testified as to the value of the tools, it is erroneous to exclude cross-examination on the identity and value of certain tools alleged to be part of those mortgaged.—Lemon v. McBride, 134 Mich. 295.

¶ 347. Plaintiff brought mandamus to compel defendant city council to accept a saloon bond. Defendant called one Exelby to make a valuation of the farm of a surety, one Allen. Exelby owned a farm near Allen's farm. Held, that on cross-examination the court properly refused to permit Exelby to be asked whether he would sell his farm at the same valuation per acre.—Knabush v. Common Council Village of Britton, 158 Mich. 577.

¶ 348. Where plaintiff in an action for negligent injury had testified that he could not do any work until the next spring after he was injured, he may be asked whether he was obliged to hire a man during that time.—Langworthy v. Township of Green, 88 Mich. 207.

¶ 349. In an action for personal injuries, the admission, upon cross-examination of plaintiff, of evidence to show his physical condition for some time before the accident, and that he was drawing a pension for injuries received during the war, is not ground for reversing a verdict for defendant, although it appears that plaintiff was cured of such injuries before the accident.—Le Beau v. Telephone & T. Const. Co., 109 Mich. 302.

¶ 350. Where the daughter of the plaintiff on cross-examination testified that her mother did not go out as much as before her accident but she could not say it was wholly due to the accident, and she was asked whether her mother had other sicknesses that might cause it as well as the injury, such question is properly excluded on an objection that the witness was not an expert; but defendant might show whatever witness knew plaintiff had been afflicted with at or right after the accident.—Barker v. City of Kalamazoo, 146 Mich. 257.

¶ 351. In a suit for personal injury suffered by plaintiff in alighting from defendant's street car, held, it is proper to permit plaintiff to be cross-examined as to her employment and as to an occurrence in which she participated two months after the accident, where she testified that she could not resume her work for four months on account of the injury.—Cummings v. Detroit United Ry., 163 Mich. 304.

¶ 352. Plaintiff attorney at the trial of his suit for personal injuries was a candidate for judge, and on the question of the extent of his injury was asked on cross-examination if he wanted it to go out to the people of the county that his earning capacity had been lessened by reason of the accident. Held, the answer to said question was properly excluded.—Wilkins v. Detroit United Ry., 169 Mich. 437.

¶ 353. In an action for personal injuries the question asked the plaintiff on cross-examination, as to whether there was anyone dependent upon him for support, held properly excluded.—Foley v. Detroit & M. Ry. Co., 193 Mich. 233.

¶ 354. In an action to recover damages for personal injuries, where impairment of plaintiff's memory was claimed as one of the results of the injuries, testimony on cross-examination of plaintiff that he had been under observation in a psychopathic hospital on commitment by a probate court some time before the accident, held admissible as bearing on the question of plaintiff's condition of health prior to the accident as testified to by him.—Griggs v. Saginaw & F. Ry. Co., 196 Mich. 258.

§ 55. ——Circumstances of crime.

Relevancy and competency of circumstances as proof of crime charged, see Indictment, VIII, B.

¶ 355. A witness for the prisoner was examined as to the prisoner's being present and transacting business near the scene of an alleged murder, and near the time when it was claimed to have been committed; and it was held not improper to permit the prosecution to show, on his cross-examination, any facts having a tendency to show from which direction the prisoner came to that place; as that the witness went out and found tracks which, at the time, he believed and stated were the prisoner's coming towards the place, and the like.—Dillin v. People, 8 Mich. 357.

¶ 356. Where in a prosecution for a violation of a village ordinance which declares any assemblage of persons, in any place in the village, engaged in any noisy, etc., language or strife, or who shall be fighting or quarreling therein, a disorderly assemblage, and providing for the punishment of any person or persons who shall be convicted of a violation of said ordinance, the complaint alleges, and the testimony tends to show, that the disorderly assemblage was in a saloon in said village, it is not error for the court to permit the prosecuting attorney to cross-examine respondent as to facts occurring after he had left the saloon, it appearing that the inquiry related to the subject of whether or not he was attempting to follow up the parties with whom he was engaged in the quarrel in the saloon, thus bearing upon the question of motive.—Village of Vicksburg v. Briggs, 102 Mich. 551.

¶ 357. On a prosecution for seduction, the prosecutrix being a divorced woman 21 years of age and the sole witness for the people, held that the defendant should have been allowed, as bearing upon the previous manner of life, knowledge and worldly experience of the prosecutrix, to fully cross-examine her as to her relations with her former husband, the facts relating to the obtaining a divorce from him, and the allegations in her sworn bill of complaint for divorce.—People v. Turton, 192 Mich. 331.

§ 56. Collateral and immaterial matters.

To show knowledge or correct observation, see post § 57.

To show bias, interest or motive, see post §§ 58-61.

To affect character or show discrediting antecedents, see post § 62.

To affect credibility by showing relations of witness to parties, see post § 63.

To show other frauds, misdoings and crimes, see post §§ 64, 65.

To show previous statements or testimony affecting credibility, see post §§ 66-68.

Explanation or rebuttal of proven prior statements, see post § 69.

General rule as to scope of cross-examination, see ante § 37.

Admissibility of evidence on ground that it impeaches or corroborates a witness, see Witnesses, VI, D.

Rule that one cannot impeach or contradict his own witness on a collateral matter, see Witnesses, VI, D.

Improper examination as error made harmless by other matters in case, see Harmless Error; Indictment, XV.

¶ 358. Cross-examination tending to impeach a witness is proper.—People v. Tubbs, 147 Mich. 1.

¶ 359. Questions on matters immaterial to the issues cannot be employed in cross-examination to test the credibility of a witness, and are properly excluded.—Loranger v. Carpenter, 148 Mich. 549.

¶ 360. That the plaintiff had recovered judgment against the defendant and satisfaction therefor for a previous injury, cannot be shown on cross-examination in an action for a subsequent injury.—Johnson v. Union Carbide Co., 181 Mich. 403.

¶ 361. Where the notes of a certain person were in question and the defendants were charged with being in a conspiracy to use them in fraud of the plaintiff, and a witness had testified on cross-examination to having let different persons have some notes made by the same man, and there was nothing in the direct examination about the same matter, and the question was not calculated to draw out anything tending to show that the witness was connected in any common design with either of the defendants in disposing of, or trading in, these notes, the question was held inadmissible, as the answer might possibly have affected the witness' credit before the jury, as in their minds showing a bias in favor of the defense.—Beebe v. Knapp, 28 Mich. 53.

¶ 362. On a contested proceeding to establish a will it is improper to cross-examine one of proponent's witnesses as to the fact of proponent's son having been born very soon after her marriage and as to what witness heard some one else say about it.—Rickabus v. Gott, 51 Mich. 227.

¶ 363. It is error to ask plaintiff, a woman, suing for a carnal assault, and who has testified that she was being treated at a medical college, whether such treatment was in the presence of the student's class.—Derwin v. Parsons, 52 Mich. 425.

¶ 364. Where in an action on a fire insurance policy the plaintiff has testified as to the condition of her dress and her children's hasty escape from the fire, cross-examination on this point is immaterial and not admissible unless fraud is charged or the fire was improper.—Simon v. Home Ins. Co. of New York, 58 Mich. 278.

¶ 365. In an action wherein the assessability of lumber for taxation is in issue it is proper to bring out on cross-examination of the owner that taxes of former years on the property had been paid by him without protest in the same place, as tending to show in what light the owner regarded his occupancy and use of the premises upon which the lumber was piled or stored.—Hood v. Judkins, 61 Mich. 575.

¶ 366. A commercial traveler, suing for his wages, testified without contradiction that his samples were to be looked after by himself personally, and as he had no orders to send them by express he had to go with them when they were called in. Held proper, on cross-examination, to exclude the question whether they might not as well have been sent by express.—Lamb v. Henderson, 63 Mich. 302.

¶ 367. Respondent was informed against for receiving a bribe upon an agreement to vote for the adoption of a certain school seat at a prospective meeting of the board of education, of which he was a member. On the trial the testimony of one of the witnesses for the people, who was agent for one of the competing seating companies, showed that the witness encouraged another member of the board of education to advise respondent that the witness would accept a proposition from the respondent to sell his vote for a given sum; that the witness informed the mayor of the city of such fact; that the mayor was willing to aid in detecting respondent, if he should make such a proposition, and to that end an interview was arranged for between the witness and respondent within hearing of a stenographer and a police officer, whose presence was unknown to respondent, at which, as claimed, the criminal arrangement was made. Held, that respondent was entitled on the cross-examination of the witness to all of the facts that led up to the transaction, including the interviews with the mayor and police officer in relation to the proposed detection of the contemplated bribery, and the names of all who had to do with it, as bearing upon the credibility of the witness' testimony, and perhaps furnishing the means of refuting it.—People v. Liphardt, 105 Mich. 80.

¶ 368. To affect the credibility of a witness who testified that he was present at the assault, and that it was not made by respondent, but by another person, it was proper to show on cross-examination, that he attended the preliminary examination of respondent and of such other person, who were jointly charged with the offense, heard the latter swear that he did not commit the assault, and permitted him to be discharged, and respondent held for trial, without imparting his knowledge.—People v. Wirth, 108 Mich. 307.

¶ 369. Where a party has testified that he destroyed certain notes because he had been told by the probate judge that he might be "put through" for retracing them, he may, as bearing on the probability of the reason given by him, be asked on cross-examination, whether he destroyed any other notes at the same time.—Schulz v. Schulz, 113 Mich. 502.

¶ 370. In an action for damages caused by an explosion of adulterated kerosene, where a deputy inspector has testified as to the inspection and a loose system of inspection has been shown, a rigid cross-examination is permissible as to the accuracy of his report even in the matter of his charges for expenses; since such matters might bear upon his credibility.—Stowell v. Standard Oil Co., 139 Mich. 18.

¶ 371. In an action against a druggist and his bondsmen for the unlawful sale of liquor it was prejudicial error to allow the plaintiff to cross-examine the defendant bondsman as to how many druggist's bonds he had signed, and as to whether or not it was a fact that on all the drug bonds he had signed, the wholesale dealers were back of him and had given him security, there having been no direct testimony on those points.—Martin v. Fisher, 143 Mich. 462.

¶ 371a. In proceedings to contest the probate of a will on the ground of incapacity and undue influence induced by monomania on the subject of spiritualism it was discretionary with the court to refuse to compel one of the witnesses for the contestant upon his cross-examination to state which of several circumstances indicating insanity was in his judgment, most significant.—O'Dell v. Goff, 149 Mich. 152.

¶ 372. In proceedings to contest the probate of a will on the ground of incapacity and undue influence induced by monomania on the subject of spiritualism, a witness for contestant who had testified to lack of testamentary capacity, could not be cross-examined on the subject of other religions and their effect upon testamentary capacity.—O'Dell v. Goff, 149 Mich. 152.

¶ 373. In a suit for personal injuries from a runaway of plaintiff's horse, which was frightened by defendant's automobile, the companions of defendant gave their version of the occurrence. Held, the court did not abuse his discretion in permitting said companions to be cross-examined as to whether they were intoxicated on the day in question at an hour subsequent to the accident.—Chapman v. Strong, 162 Mich. 623.

¶ 374. In a suit to recover damages for the death of plaintiff's husband from intoxication caused by the sale of liquor to him by defendant saloonkeepers, plaintiff cross-examined defendants' witnesses vigorously to show that they were at the time of the trial receiving free drinks at defendants' saloons, and to learn what they understood by drinking to excess. Held, the court did not abuse its discretion in permitting such cross-examination.—Weatherbee v. Byam, 160 Mich. 600.

¶ 375. In a prosecution for seduction, a witness was put on to testify that he had falsely made a deposition at the solicitation of defendant, and had sworn to, not what he knew, but what defendant told him. Held, the court properly refused to permit defendant to cross-examine him to show that the witness had heard what he swore to from others besides defendant.—People v. Adams, 162 Mich. 371.

¶ 376. In an action over the allowance of discounts, though affirmative proof of third parties concerning similar transactions is inadmissible, a party may be cross-examined as to such transactions as bearing on the question of credibility.—B. Marx & Son v. King, 177 Mich. 662.

§ 57. ——Testing witness' observation, knowledge or opportunity for knowledge.

See also ante ¶ 257.

Contemporaneous details to fix memory by association, see also ante ¶ 167.

As to means of knowledge of fact of ownership testified to, see also Evidence ¶ 577.

Testing expert handwriting witness by use of irrelevant writings not in case, see also Evidence ¶ 1683.

¶ 377. Where three persons had been indicted for burning a barn with intent to defraud insurers, a witness who swore to seeing the three conversing by themselves soon after the fire should have been allowed to be cross-examined whether this impressed him at the time and when he first mentioned it. It is always important to know whether impressions have been warped or changed by subsequent suspicions, or whether at the time they were such as to strike attention and become accurately fixed in memory. The whole value of circumstantial evidence depends on the truth and accuracy of observation.—Hamilton v. People, 29 Mich. 173.

¶ 378. Where the plaintiff in an action for the price of merchandise has been examined as to the details of the transactions between the parties to the suit it is not error to allow him to be cross-examined as to the extent, kind and localities of his business if it tends to show his opportunity to know the facts he has testified to and the probability as to the correctness of his statements.—Peter v. Thickstun, 51 Mich. 589.

¶ 379. In an action for the amount due on a mortgage which it was claimed had been foreclosed and the property sold a witness for plaintiff who has testified that there were no payments or credits on the mortgage may be asked on cross-examination what he knows about the former suit.—Hamilton Provident & Loan Soc. v. Northwood, 86 Mich. 315.

¶ 380. Where a farmer sued by a former employee for carnally knowing her against her will has testified on his direct examination that on many occasions when he came home Saturday nights from a neighboring village he found plaintiff and a young man with whom she was keeping company sitting in a hammock, he may, to negative his opportunity for witnessing alleged familiarities between the two, be cross-examined as to his staying out late Saturday nights in said village.—Hart v. Walker, 100 Mich. 406.

¶ 381. Defendant, to account for his opportunity to witness conduct occurring at night, having testified that he frequently remained in the village until midnight, and volunteered the statement that he did not stay later than any other farmer who had business there, it is not error, in view of such statement, to permit as further cross-examination the question whether there were many farmers who stayed there as late as midnight.—Hart v. Walker, 100 Mich. 406.

¶ 382. Where the wife of a defendant, sued for a criminal assault upon plaintiff, has, for the purpose of giving the jury the impression that plaintiff was pregnant during the time she worked in defendant's house, testified that during that time plaintiff had morning sickness, she may, on cross-examination, to affect her candor and credibility as a witness, be asked at what stage of pregnancy morning sickness occurs.—Hart v. Walker, 100 Mich. 406.

§ 58. ——To show bias or interest of witness.

Particular elements of bias or interest, see post § 59.

To show credibility or bias of party testifying as witness, see post § 77.

Respecting pecuniary interest in suit or contributions to it, see post § 60.

Respecting relations of witness to parties or others, see post § 63.

To show motive, purpose or reason moving witness, see post § 61.

Redirect to contradict denial by witness, see post § 99.

¶ 383. The animus of a witness may be shown on his cross-examination as bearing on his credibility.—Brushaber v. Stegemann, 22 Mich. 266.

¶ 384. The bias of a witness is always open to full cross-examination, and he may be properly asked as to the interest he has taken in the case and in getting proof.—Hamilton v. People, 29 Mich. 195.

¶ 385. As a general rule any question upon cross-examination which will develop the interest or bias of the witness is admissible.—Murphy v. Manistee Ry. Co., 194 Mich. 595.

¶ 386. The latitude to be allowed in collateral inquiries as to difficulties between a witness and one of the parties is a question resting somewhat upon the discretion of the trial court, and a court of review will not reverse a judgment for the exclusion of such inquiries unless a clear abuse of discretion is made to appear.—McGinnis v. Kempsey, 27 Mich. 363.

¶ 387. Control of cross-examination as to motive, purpose and intent as bearing on the credibility of a witness is largely within the discretion of the trial judge.—People v. Davis, 171 Mich. 241.

¶ 388. It was error to refuse to allow a witness who appeared as state's evidence to be asked on cross-examination whether he had pleaded guilty, and said that he would not go to state prison alone. It bore directly on his disposition towards his codefendants.—Hamilton v. People, 29 Mich. 195.

¶ 389. It is competent for defendant on the trial of an indictment for a nuisance by keeping up a mill-dam to show by the cross-examination of witnesses for the prosecution that they have commenced civil suits for injury caused by the same dam, and then agreed together to suspend action in such suits and get defendant indicted, and in that way procure the removal of the dam. Such evidence is admissible to show the interest of the witnesses in the public prosecution, and the influence it might have on their testimony.—Crippen v. People, 8 Mich. 117.

¶ 390. Where plaintiff suing for slander has testified in regard to divorce proceedings between himself and defendant's daughter and to defendant's consequent hostile feelings towards himself, it is proper to ask him on cross-examination as bearing on his own animus and bias whether he had not been compelled to pay $500 for the support of his child and had not threatened to get part of it back.—Hitchcock v. Moore, 70 Mich. 112.

¶ 391. Questions on cross-examination of defendant's witness tending to show hostility to and prejudice towards one of plaintiff's attorneys, held properly admitted for such purpose.—Snyder v. Mathison, 196 Mich. 378.

§ 59. ——Particular elements of bias or interest.

Pecuniary interest in suit or contribution of time or money to it, see post § 60.
Mulcting of witness in damages, see ante ¶ 390.
Admissibility of evidence to impeach or contradict, see Witnesses, VI, D.

¶ 392. A witness shown to have been in litigation with the opposite party may be interrogated on cross-examination as to the subject of the litigation.—Threadgool v. Litogot, 22 Mich. 271.

¶ 393. A trustee named in a will who has testified as a subscribing witness to its due execution and to testator's sanity cannot be asked on cross-examination whether he has proved a claim against the estate.—Fraser v. Jennison, 42 Mich. 206.

¶ 394. It is improper cross-examination and also irrelevant to ask a witness for the prosecution in a murder case about circumstances between himself and respondent's mother from which ill-will would not necessarily be implied; such as whether he owed her for board.—People v. Macard, 73 Mich. 15.

¶ 395. In trover for horses seized under a void attachment it is proper, for the purpose of ascertaining plaintiff's bias or interest in the case and of testing his credibility, to ask on his cross-examination whether he knew the attachment was issued when he bought the horses, and whether he had not aided the debtor in other suits with the attachment plaintiff by becoming his surety.—Mears v. Cornwall, 73 Mich. 78.

¶ 396. Defendant sued in replevin for a horse, purchased by him for plaintiff and himself (as he claims), with plaintiff's money and their joint note, may be cross-examined as to a secret understanding between vendor and himself that he should have $50 of the purchase-money, as this would affect his credibility as a witness.—Ellis v. Simpkins, 81 Mich. 1.

¶ 397. Where a witness for a lessor sued for eviction has testified to lessee's admitting a surrender of the lease, it is not competent to show on cross-examination of such witness that he had held a lease from defendant of lands which, with those leased to plaintiff, were subsequently sold by defendant, and that defendant paid witness a certain sum for agreeing to vacate; such testimony would not tend to show that plaintiff had not surrendered before the sale the lands rented by him, nor was defendant's payment to effect a sale of his lands competent to show what the land was worth to witness, or what damages plaintiff had suffered.—Taylor v. Cooper, 104 Mich. 72.

¶ 398. In an action for libel imputing to plaintiff a homicide by abortion in which a witness had testified as to the relations between the plaintiff and the woman, it was proper to cross-question the witness as to the impressions on her mind and the feelings towards the plaintiff resulting therefrom.—Peoples v. Detroit Post & Tribune Co., 54 Mich. 457.

¶ 399. A party to a suit who has drawn out the fact that the opposite party has been arrested for a criminal offense may be asked on cross-examination, as bearing on the question of animus, if he did not instigate the making of the complaint upon which the arrest was founded.—Burt v. Long, 106 Mich. 210.

¶ 400. In the contest of a will, proponents counsel, for the avowed purpose of showing the interest of one of the contestants, who was sworn as a witness, cross-examined her closely as to whether certain of the contestants had not professed a willingness in the probate court to withdraw from the contest. The witness had previously frankly admitted her ill-feeling towards proponents. Held, that the examination was not competent for the purpose stated.—Bush v. Delano, 113 Mich. 321.

¶ 401. A cross-question to a contestant whether on probate some of contestants had offered to withdraw their opposition, designed to show feeling of the witness, was made competent by contestants' placing in evidence a letter written by one of the proponents, in which the decision of the contestants previously mentioned to withdraw from the contest was asserted; it being proper to show that this was not a misstatement.—Bush v. Delano, 113 Mich. 321.

¶ 402. Plaintiff in replevin to recover possession of goods purchased through fraud by one defendant and sold by him to another defendant before the commencement of the suit may be cross-examined as to the several times and cases in which he has testified in regard to the title to the goods in suit, for the purpose of showing his interest in the controversy and in the subject-matter involved, and his anxiety to bring it to a successful issue.—Schloss v. Estey, 114 Mich. 429.

¶ 403. On cross-examination of a particeps criminis who, while testifying as a witness in behalf of the people, has stated that he is under arrest in the cause and is out on bail, it is proper to exclude as immaterial the question whether the prosecuting attorney did not prepare his bail bond at the time he was arrested.—People v. Considine, 105 Mich. 149.

¶ 404. In an action of trespass by an alleged stockholder for being ejected from a stockholder's meeting, a question asked the plaintiff whether he had had considerable previous litigation with the corporation is on a collateral issue; and the discretion of the court to exclude it is not reviewable.—Noller v. Wright, 138 Mich. 416.

¶ 405. It was permissible for counsel for defendant in trover for conversion of logs, upon cross-examination of witnesses, called by plaintiff, who upon direct examination had testified to the sawing of logs for defendant and that such logs bore the log-mark of plaintiffs, to ask such witnesses if they had not had trouble with defendant and bore him ill-will, in order that the jury might better judge the value of their testimony; but whether a feeling shown to exist ought, or ought not, to exist, was immaterial.—Seymour v. Bruske, 140 Mich. 244.

¶ 406. In an action for personal injuries, it was proper to rule out a cross-question asked one of plaintiff's witnesses in order to show interest after he had testified that he attempted to settle plaintiff's case, as to whether he stated what he would settle for; as the fact of his attempt to make the settlement itself showed his interest.—Pomaski v. Grant, 119 Mich. 675.

¶ 407. The admission of cross-examination showing the conduct of a witness for the defense towards the claimant against the estate, his stepmother, is not error where the witness testified on direct examination that his relations with the claimant were friendly.—Taylor v. Taylor's Estate, 138 Mich. 658.

¶ 408. A witness for the prosecution who was with defendants part of the time while the crime of larceny was being committed may be asked on cross-examination if he did not make a statement concerning the crime to the police because of fear of being arrested for other crimes as tending to show his motive in assisting the police.—People v. Breen, 192 Mich. 39.

§ 60. ——Pecuniary interest in or contribution to suit.

See also ante ¶ 389.
On cross-examination of expert witness, see also post § 72.

¶ 409. Cross-examination of a witness as to his contribution to the expenses of the suit bears on his interest or bias, and is admissible.—Howard v. Patrick, 43 Mich. 121.

¶ 410. In an action against a village for injuries received from a defective sidewalk, it is not error to permit plaintiff's counsel, upon the cross-examination of a witness for defendant, to show that such witness has assisted in looking up testimony and that he is a large taxpayer in the village. (The facts herein stated are shown in the syllabus but not in the opinion.)—Will v. Village of Mendon, 108 Mich. 251.

¶ 411. Where, in a suit to recover for professional services, an attorney has testified that his client authorized him to employ counsel to assist in the case, it may be shown, as affecting his credibility, that he had agreed for a specified sum to conduct the suit to a successful issue.—Fraser v. Haggerty, 86 Mich. 521.

¶ 412. If an attorney in the cause presents himself as a witness he may be asked, as affecting his credibility on the ground of interest, concerning the arrangement made to compensate him.—Denman v. Johnston, 85 Mich. 387.

¶ 413. In an action for injuries alleged to have been caused by a defective sidewalk, it is within the discretion of the court to permit questions tending to show the interest of a witness as a taxpayer.—Styles v. Village of Decatur, 131 Mich. 443.

¶ 414. In a prosecution for violation of the liquor law, it was proper to sustain an objection to a question on cross-examination of a witness for the people who had shown no disposition to suppress or withhold anything, asking whether she had not done all that she could to secure a conviction in the case at bar.—People v. Rice, 136 Mich. 619.

¶ 415. An attorney who gives material evidence on behalf of his client may be cross-examined as to whether he is not to receive for his services a portion of the amount recovered in the action.—Luckhurst v. Schroeder, 183 Mich. 487.

¶ 416. An attorney who becomes a witness for his client may be cross-examined as to his financial interest in the result of the litigation.—McCloy v. Vaughan, 185 Mich. 189.

¶ 417. In an action to recover damages for personal injuries held that a question put to a witness for plaintiff on cross-examination as to whether any part of the bill for medical services which the witness had presented to plaintiff had been paid was admissible for the purpose of determining the interest or bias of the witness.—Murphy v. Manistee Ry. Co., 194 Mich. 595.

¶ 418. In an action by a husband to recover damages suffered because of an injury to his wife from a collision of plaintiff's buggy with defendant's automobile, including charges for medical services, a question propounded to the attending physician upon cross-examination by the defendant as to whether he did not expect to get the bill out of the litigation, held incompetent.—Jolman v. Alberts, 192 Mich. 365.

§ 61. ——Motive, purpose or reason moving witness.

See also ante ¶¶ 387, 389.

To show bias and interest of witness, see ante §§ 58, 59.

Explanation or rebuttal of prior statements proved, see post § 69.

Question as to motive as warranting redirect on same matter, see post § 92, ¶ 606.

Showing reasons or motive on redirect, see post § 97.

¶ 419. When, on cross-examination to show that a witness was interested as a purchaser, he testifies that the purchase was never carried out, his reason for not completing it is properly excluded unless it is claimed that the answer will not show interest or affect his credibility.—Sager v. Tupper, 38 Mich. 258.

¶ 420. In an action by one partner against another upon an account stated, where defendant had testified to a partnership, though admitting that on former trials he testified to the contrary, which he explained by saying that he did not suppose his arrangement with plaintiff constituted a partnership, it was proper to ask him, on cross-examination, whether there was any reason why he should not form a partnership with plaintiff, it appearing from his answer that he had been in the business of the partnership before, and had leased it, agreeing not to engage in it for five years.—Miner v. Lorman, 66 Mich. 530.

¶ 421. In a prosecution for seduction, prosecutrix testified that the act of intercourse occurred between 11 and 12 o'clock. On cross-examination she admitted that she testified in the preliminary examination that it occurred about half-past 9 o'clock. Objection was then sustained to the question "Then why did you tell it?" Held, error, since where the prosecution depended almost wholly upon her testimony, respondent was entitled to the benefit of full cross-examination.—People v. Payne, 131 Mich. 474.

¶ 422. In an action by an interurban car passenger against the railroad company for damages for personal injuries received while attempting to board one of defendant's cars, held that it was proper to cross-examine defendant's claim agent as to the purpose in gathering statements from witnesses of the accident for the purpose of showing that the statements which he made were as favorable to the company as possible where the only reference to an attempt to settle the case was made by defendant itself.—Musliner v. Detroit United Ry., 197 Mich. 409.

Of party testifying as witness, see also post ¶ 534.

Cross-examination of character witnesses, see post § 71.

Limiting character cross-examination, see also ante ¶ 211.

To show intoxication at given time, see also ante § 56, ¶¶ 373, 374.

Credulousness of witness to destroy value of his testimony as to good character of another, see post ¶ 501.

¶ 423. The cross-examination is not confined to the matters in issue, but may include such collateral questions as will enable a jury to obtain an insight into the witness' character and history, and thus to judge of his credibility.—Wilbur v. Flood, 16 Mich. 40.

¶ 424. On cross-examination the trial court must be allowed considerable latitude of discretion in permitting questions meant to draw out information as to the past life and conduct of the witness, and to enable the jury to see "what manner of man he is."—Beebe v. Knapp, 28 Mich. 53.

¶ 425. On cross-examination considerable latitude of discretion is allowed in permitting questions calculated to elicit information as to a witness' past life and conduct. —People v. Winney, 196 Mich. 347.

¶ 426. Cross-examination of plaintiff's witnesses as to their character, without reference to the issue, should be regulated at the discretion of the judge.—Bissell v. Starr, 32 Mich. 297.

¶ 427. Questions put to a witness upon cross-examination in order to affect his credit by showing his previous life and conduct are within the discretion of the court, and even if the proper discretion should be exceeded, it will be no ground for reversing a judgment when such evidence could have had no possible effect prejudicial to the party complaining.—Threadgool v. Litogot, 22 Mich. 271.

¶ 428. It is not error to permit counsel to inquire into the antecedents of a party when on the stand as a witness in his own behalf. The length to which such inquiries may go is in the discretion of the trial judge.—McBride v. Wallace, 62 Mich. 451.

¶ 429. Where the defendant in a civil action for an indecent assault appears as a witness therein, it is admissible for its bearing on his credibility to cross-examine him as to the antecedents of his life, if the questions do not call for self-crimination.—Leland v. Kauth, 47 Mich. 508.

¶ 430. Where, in a criminal prosecution, evidence is introduced as to respondent's good character, it is proper, on cross-examination, to inquire in regard to specific acts of his prior to the offense charge.—People v. Pyckett, 99 Mich. 613.

¶ 431. It is improper to ask a defendant, on cross-examination, to test his credibility, if he has been on the witness stand before, or to offer to show, when an objection to such question is sustained, that he has been such witness one hundred times, or to state to him, in the form of a question, that he has had about ten cases in the supreme court. —Brennan v. Busch, 67 Mich. 670.

¶ 432. That one is in the habit of drinking beer does not affect his credibility as a witness in a trial for the unlawful sale of spirituous liquors, and it is error to allow such habit to be inquired into on cross-examination.—People v. Kahler, 93 Mich. 625.

¶ 433. An employer who testifies that another employer's laborer has been discharged by his master for drunkenness cannot be asked upon cross-examination whether he himself is a total abstainer.—Fox v. Peninsular White Lead & Color Works, 92 Mich. 243.

¶ 434. Cross-examination of a witness with reference to his habits is competent in the discretion of the court (Syllabus 6 states: So held where a witness was questioned in relation to his use of intoxicating liquors.) —Johnston v. Farmers' Fire Ins. Co., 106 Mich. 96.

¶ 435. A witness for respondent in a murder case testified that the deceased had tried to hire him to kill respondent. After admitting on cross-examination that he married his wife from a house of prostitution, the witness was asked if she was a prostitute, and the question, as also another of a similar character, was excluded. Held, that the story of the witness was such as to render a very rigid cross-examination of his life and character competent; that, there being nothing to show that the excluded questions were not asked in good faith, they were not of such a character as to justify the holding that they prejudiced the jury.—People v. Palmer, 105 Mich. 568.

¶ 436. The extent to which cross-examination of witnesses relative to their character for chastity should be permitted to test their credibility is largely a matter of discretion with the trial judge which will not be interfered with by an appellate court in the absence of a clear abuse thereof.—Iamurri v. Saginaw City Gas Co., 148 Mich. 27, per McAlvay, C. J., Carpenter, Montgomery and Moore, JJ.

¶ 437. It is permissible, within the discretion of the court, to discredit a witness upon cross-examination by showing the witness' want of chastity.—People v. Cutler, 197 Mich. 6.

¶ 438. Inquiry on the cross-examination of a defendant in replevin as to his history in business matters before making the contract upon the alleged breach of which the suit is brought, which inquiry is not directed to showing that defendant has been guilty of any offense against the law, and raises immaterial issues, is properly limited by the circuit judge.—Mason v. Partrick, 100 Mich. 577.

§ 63. ——Relations of witness with other parties and persons.

Dissolute and depraved character of witness' wife, see ante ¶ 435.

As matter impeaching or discrediting witness, see Witnesses, VI.

¶ 439. Where the plaintiff in a civil case testifies in his own behalf, inquiries concerning his past life and associations are admissible on cross-examination as bearing upon his character and credibility as a witness; but such matters are not thereby put in issue so as to be open to proof by direct testimony.—Kingston v. Fort Wayne & E. R. Co., 112 Mich. 40.

¶ 440. The extent to which cross-examinations may go into the relations existing between the witnesses and the parties, is largely within the discretion of the trial court, and dependent upon the particular situations developed at the trial.—Seymour v. Bruske, 140 Mich. 244.

¶ 440a. It was not prejudicial as giving the jury the impression that the plaintiff, in an action for false imprisonment and malicious prosecution, came frequently in contact with the officers of the law as a law breaker, to permit the defendant to show upon cross-examination of plaintiff that plaintiff knew a certain deputy sheriff, who was not the officer who made the arrest, and had been to his office a couple of times.—Lansky v. Prettyman, 140 Mich. 40.

¶ 441. The scope of an examination as to the relation between witness and defendant is in the discretion of the court, and unless this discretion is abused the judgment of the lower court will not be disturbed.—People v. Mulvaney, 171 Mich. 272.

¶ 442. On cross-examination of the housekeeper of the defendant who saw the alleged crime, the prosecution may go into the question of the relations between the defendant and the witness, it being admissible as affecting her credibility and good faith.—People v. Mulvaney, 171 Mich. 272.

¶ 443. On cross-examination of a complaining witness in a criminal prosecution for assault with an intent to do great bodily harm, less than the crime of murder, he may be interrogated as to the relations between himself and the accused, and any circumstances tending to show whether they were friendly or unfriendly, as bearing upon the degree of credit his evidence should receive; the particulars and causes of the hostile feeling when shown may be inquired into as bearing on the fairness and truthfulness of the witness.—People v. Durham, 170 Mich. 598.

¶ 444. In a prosecution for robbery it was shown that after the robbery the complaining party went into a house in the door of which a woman was standing. Held, that the witness could not be cross-examined as to the reputation of this woman as a prostitute, thief and brothel-keeper.—People v. Whitson, 43 Mich. 419.

¶ 445. The trial court, in an action by a husband for alienation of the affections of his wife, does not abuse its discretion in refusing to allow a witness for the husband with whom he had some times associated to answer a question on cross-examination, as to whether a certain third person ever took her to a house of prostitution.—Hendrickson v. Harry, 200 Mich. 41.

§ 64. ——Other frauds and misdoings.

Other crimes and criminal associations and arrests and prosecutions, see post § 65.

Admissibility of other frauds evincive of system or method as showing intent, see Fraud, III.

¶ 446. Where, in a criminal prosecution for an aggravated assault, the complainant testifies on cross-examination that he has been arrested for drunkenness, the question how many times he has been drunk since is properly excluded as having no bearing on the issues involved.—People v. Sutherland, 104 Mich. 468.

¶ 447. In an action upon a fire-insurance policy, where the defense set up is a wilful burning of the property insured, plaintiff may be cross-examined as to his alleged fraudulent conduct with respect to insurance upon other property.—Barnett v. Farmer's Mutual Fire Ins. Co., 115 Mich. 247.

¶ 448. In an action for slander in charging plaintiff, a stock buyer, with cheating in the weight of defendant's hogs, it was proper, as bearing on the credibility of plaintiff, who had taken the stand in his own behalf, to permit defendant's counsel to ask him, upon cross-examination, questions tending to show that he had been dishonest in weighing stock for others.—Georgia v. Bond, 114 Mich. 196.

¶ 449. In a will contest the admission of evidence on cross-examination of one of the contestants and her former husband that such husband a short time prior to his death took his aged father to his home and procured a deed to him of all the father's property, and the wife received a deed of part of the property from the husband, and, after the father's death, the deed was set aside in proceedings by other children for its cancellation, for the purpose of showing the character of the witnesses, held not to be prejudicial error.—In re Sparks' Estate, 198 Mich. 421; Hodgman v. Sears, Id.

¶ 450. A witness may be asked on cross-examination if he has been guilty of desertion from the army, or been charged with crime.—Hamilton v. People, 29 Mich. 173.

¶ 451. A witness may be asked on cross-examination whether he has not been indicted and convicted of a criminal offense.—Clemens v. Conrad, 19 Mich. 170.

¶ 452. A witness may be cross-examined, within the proper discretion of the court, not only as to whether he has ever been convicted of crime, but as to any serious charge brought against him.—Driscoll v. People, 47 Mich. 413.

¶ 453. Where a codefendant in an action of damages for an assault had pleaded guilty on the appeal of criminal proceedings from before a justice, there was no harm done in asking him on cross-examination whether he was convicted before the justice.—Kuney v. Dutcher, 56 Mich. 308.

¶ 454. In trover for converting pension money collected by defendant, there is no error in refusing to allow a witness for the plaintiff to be cross-examined as to whether he had ever been arrested for conspiring to procure fraudulent pensions.—Mark v. Hillsendegen, 46 Mich. 336.

¶ 455. In a civil action for an indecent assault it was held proper to cross-examine the defendant as to whether he was ever arrested on a criminal charge made by a woman, and whether he settled it by payment.—Leland v. Kauth, 47 Mich. 508.

¶ 456. A lawyer was arrested for feloniously entering a court building and removing public records. A policeman testified that the prisoner had asked him to leave the court room door unlocked so that he could get the papers, and that after consulting with his superior officer he had consented, and afterwards lay in wait for him. Held proper to subject this witness to very searching cross-examination, and to ask him whether he had not previously had improper dealings with the prisoner and put in false swearing for him. The jury was entitled to all the light that would have been furnished by former transactions between them, and such a question might have tested the witness' credibility.—Saunders v. People, 38 Mich. 218.

¶ 457. On cross-examination of defendant's witness his ill-will towards plaintiff may be shown, but he cannot be asked questions tending to charge him with perjury and with an attempt to swindle plaintiff in another transaction.—Clink v. Gunn, 90 Mich. 135.

¶ 458. In the contest of a will, the chief beneficiary testifying on her own behalf, it is erroneous to cross-examine her as to how many times her husband had been arrested and how many times she had appeared as a witness for him, her husband not having been a witness in the present case.—Lange v. Wiegand, 125 Mich. 647.

¶ 459. In an action for malicious prosecution, cross-examination of the defendant asking him concerning various civil suits in which he had been defendant and concerning other cases in which he had been accused of crimes is improper and reversible error.—Gould v. Gregory, 126 Mich. 594.

¶ 460. A defendant was properly asked on cross-examination whether he ever pleaded guilty to stealing certain property; such testimony being admissible as affecting defendant's credibility.—Pratt v. Wickham, 133 Mich. 356.

¶ 461. On action for assault and battery and ravishment it is within the court's discretion to allow a witness to be questioned on cross-examination concerning his arrest and trial for a crime.—Totten v. Totten, 172 Mich. 565.

¶ 462. In an action upon assigned insurance policies held that the court did not exceed its discretion in permitting the cross-examination of witnesses for the plaintiff as to the indictments of an attorney for the assignors, who had been originally employed to adjust the loss, which did not result in conviction.—Jacobs v. Queen Ins. Co. of America, 195 Mich. 18.

§ 66. ——Previous statements or testimony by witness.

Of party on the stand, see post § 67.
Of witness as to previous statements to him by others, see post § 68.
Admissible cross-examination in rebuttal or explanation of previous statements, see post § 69.
To meet cross-examination variant from former testimony, see post § 103.

Offer and reading of minute or transcript, see post § 88.
Refreshing memory of witness by calling attention to prior statements or testimony, see ante § 20 et seq.

¶ 463. To ask a witness on cross-examination, for the purpose of contradicting or impeaching him, what he testified to on a former occasion concerning a matter which his present testimony does not mention, is incompetent, since there is no occasion to lay a foundation for impeachment.—Fox v. Barrett's Estate, 117 Mich. 162.

¶ 464. A witness questioned on stenographer's notes as to testimony given in a justice's court need not be confined to the deposition given and returned and read, as such a statement made, like other statements out of court, is subject to explanation even if not contained in the deposition.—People v. McArron, 121 Mich. 1.

¶ 465. A question to a witness, whether he did not, on a former trial, testify that he said yes and no, and played good Lord and good devil, because he did not know into whose hands he might fall, is admissible, as going directly to his fairness and candor.—Beaubien v. Cicotte, 12 Mich. 459.

¶ 466. A letter is a legitimate part of the cross-examination of a witness who wrote it, and who has denied giving any such advice as it contains.—Krolik v. Graham, 64 Mich. 226.

¶ 467. On cross-examination it is proper to show, by way of impeachment, that in a former action where the same questions were involved, the witness gave different testimony from that given on his direct examination in the present trial.—Graham v. Myers, 67 Mich. 277.

¶ 468. A witness, who testified that he was present and saw the signing of the note sued on and that he knew nothing of the consideration of the prior note which it renewed, may be cross-questioned whether he previously stated out of court that he did have such knowledge.—Johnston Harvester Co. v. Miller, 72 Mich. 265.

¶ 469. A witness who testifies upon his direct examination as to statements made by him while under arrest for participating in the crime of which respondent is accused may be cross-examined by the prosecutor with respect to such statements.—People v. Baker, 112 Mich. 211.

¶ 470. Upon a trial for murder where it was charged that respondent poisoned his wife to get rid of her because of his intimacy with another woman, respondent's brother, whose direct testimony had made no allusion to the relations of respondent with such woman, was required, on cross-examination, after he had sworn he never had seen any improper relations, to testify to expressions of opinion made by himself to various persons concerning improper relations between the two. Held, that such testimony was incompetent.—People v. Foglesong, 116 Mich. 556.

¶ 471. In an action for commissions in negotiating a sale of real estate, where the issue was as to whether the sale was made on the terms authorized by defendant, a declaration made by the purchaser to the defendant as to the terms on which he was willing to accept a conveyance may be shown in cross-examination of such purchaser as a witness for the plaintiff, where he testified as to his willingness to purchase the land.—Weaver v. Richards, 156 Mich. 320.

¶ 472. On a trial for murder occurring after a dispute over a drain where the surveyor had testified as to the peaceable disposition of the accused it was proper cross-examination to ask the surveyor if he had not made statements to the contrary.—People v. Tubbs, 147 Mich. 1.

¶ 473. In an action for physician's services, it was proper to hand a statement which was substantially a copy of plaintiff's bill of particulars, to witnesses for the defendant, and ask them whether they had not, when such paper had been shown to them previous to the trial, stated that the charges contained therein were reasonable; the paper having been offered in evidence, and the testimony having been limited to the single purpose of contradicting the witness.—McKnight v. Detroit & M. Ry. Co., 135 Mich. 307.

¶ 474. A witness who on direct denied the existence of a partnership between himself and plaintiff, was properly asked on cross, for the purpose of impeachment, whether he had not made statements admitting such partnership; in view of the conflicting testimony about the partnership.—Weeks v. Hutchinson, 135 Mich. 160.

¶ 475. In an action for personal injuries, a witness for the plaintiff who was in the same accident cannot be questioned as to the contents of the declaration in his own personal injury suit nor are the files of the other suit admissible; but it is competent to cross-examine the witness concerning his testimony in the other suit.—Monyhan v. Detroit & Saline Plank-Road Co., 129 Mich. 549.

¶ 476. Defendant was sued on a note, and denied the genuineness of the signature. One Younglove testified in support of the genuineness of the signature, and stated that he had once sued defendant on a note, and defendant made a similar defense. On cross-examination he was asked whether he did not on the occasion referred to admit that the alleged signature of defendant was not genuine. Held, it was not reversible error to sustain an objection to this question.—Jewett v. Bryant, 159 Mich. 345.

¶ 477. In a suit to recover for property destroyed by fire from a locomotive, plaintiff's witness may be cross-examined with reference to what he said to others, as to the cause of the fire.—J. H. Worden Lumber & Shingle Co. v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. S. M. Ry. Co., 168 Mich. 74.

¶ 478. In an action for damages for assault and battery where the father of the defendant, who had attempted to intercede, had testified in support of the defendant's claim that he threw the stone in self-defense, held that it was proper on cross-examination to ask the witness if a certain person did not inquire of him shortly after the affray what the trouble was about and if he did not reply that it was the work of his son.—Cornell v. Fidler, 194 Mich. 509.

¶ 479. In an action for statutory rape upon a female child, questions whether the complainant had not made charges similar in nature against other persons are proper, where such questions are asked on cross-examination as laying the foundation for collateral impeachment and as an offer of independent evidence relating to similar charges and their falsity evincing a morbid mind in the girl.—People v. Evans, 72 Mich. 367; People v. Wilson, 170 Mich. 669.

¶ 480. The defendant in a prosecution for seduction should be permitted to fully cross-examine the prosecutrix as to her testimony at the preliminary examination that she yielded on a promise of marriage conditioned on pregnancy resulting from their intercourse where her testimony on trial was that the promise was unconditional.—People v. Carlos, 183 Mich. 269.

§ 67. ——Previous statements or testimony by party testifying.

See also ante ¶ 277.

Of witnesses other than parties, see ante § 66.

Portion of record of former statement necessary as basis for cross-examination, see post § 86.

Propriety of exclusion of question about irrelevant prior statements though subsequent evidence made it proper rebuttal matter, see Trial, V, C; Indictment, IX, B.

¶ 481. In order to affect plaintiff's credibility as a witness in a civil suit her former conviction for crime may be shown, but she cannot be cross-examined as to her testimony in a criminal cause and then have her credit impeached by showing that she has at different times made statements contradictory to those made on such cross-examination.—Cole v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 95 Mich. 77.

¶ 482. It is proper on cross-examination of a party to ask whether he had not admitted fraud in the transaction at issue, as the question bears directly upon the trustworthiness of his evidence.—New York Iron Mine v. First Nat. Bank of Negaunee, 39 Mich. 644.

¶ 483. A party examined as a witness to prove extra work in building a culvert of stone instead of brick, as called for by the contract under which it was done, and whose testimony on direct examination tended to show that construction of stone was more expensive, may be asked on cross-examination whether he had not said on a specified occasion that the culvert was put in under his contract in lieu of brick and at a much less expense.—Turner v. City of Grand Rapids, 20 Mich. 390.

¶ 484. The prosecution in a criminal case may show on cross-examination that respondent has testified in another suit directly contradictory of his direct testimony which contradicts the complaining witness on a material fact.—People v. Jensen, 66 Mich. 711.

¶ 485. In an action for an injury alleged to have been caused by an obstruction in a highway, plaintiff may be asked on cross-examination a question tending to bring out whether he had ever made any different claim or given any different history of the accident.—Langworthy v. Township of Green, 88 Mich. 207.

¶ 486. Quære, whether plaintiff may not be asked on cross-examination if he did not formerly make a particular statement to his counsel, it not being a privileged communication.—Evans v. Montgomery, 95 Mich. 497.

¶ 487. In a bastardy case the defense should have been allowed to ask the complaining witness on her cross-examination whether she and her mother had not stated to certain specified persons that she was going to get a prostitute out of the house of correction to swear a case against respondent; such a question would bear on the witness' character and veracity and her disposition to resort to criminal practices. And when such cross-examination had been excluded it was further error to permit complainant's counsel to ask for her own version of the facts and to receive it without cross-examination.—People v. White, 53 Mich. 537.

¶ 488. In an action against a surgeon for want of skill, defendant claimed that plaintiff at a certain time had thrown off his splints and walked on crutches. Plaintiff, being asked if he had not caused one of the hospital nurses to write to that effect to a specified person, said he did not remember. Held proper, for the purpose of identifying the writer, to ask him further whether he had not afterwards caused the person said to have been addressed to write to the nurse.—Hitchcock v. Burgett, 38 Mich. 501.

¶ 489. On the trial of a replevin suit brought by the debtor's vendee to recover attached property, plaintiff in the attachment suit having testified that, in a conversation had with the debtor and his wife about a week prior to the issuance of the writ of attachment, he did not tell the debtor how much he owed him, because he did not know, and that he had never figured out the indebtedness at all, it is proper to ask him on cross-examination if he did not swear in the attachment affidavit that the debtor owed him $100, as near as he could estimate the same, and if he never did any figuring on the account, or made any computations or estimate of the amount the debtor was owing him, how he came so to swear in said affidavit.—Daniels v. Weeks, 90 Mich. 190.

¶ 490. A defendant, when arraigned for murder, admitted the homicide and asked the court to fix the crime. The court then called a jury to determine the crime and accused was again sworn and gave testimony as to his conversation with deceased at the time of the killing. On cross-examination the state was allowed, over defendant's objection, to go into the testimony given by defendant on this point before the court when arraigned, the purpose being to show a discrepancy in testimony. Held, overruling of defendant's objection was not error.—People v. Poole, 159 Mich. 350.

¶ 491. In a suit for damages arising out of a real estate transaction and building contract, the trial court commits reversible error in refusing to allow defendant to show by cross-examination of plaintiff that he testified differently at a former trial and made to a third person a different statement of his claim.—Bennett v. Wallace, 165 Mich. 66.

§ 68. ——Previous statements to witness by or affecting party.

Admissibility of declarations out of court and confessions to witness, see Evidence, VII; Indictment, VIII, B.

¶ 492. It is improper cross-examination to permit a witness testifying only to an alleged slander to testify to a remark by plaintiff to the effect that if beaten on the trial she would take the case up higher, that she would beat defendant, that defendant would then have to move out, and that plaintiff would "take possession of the premises," though it might be proper on cross-examination of plaintiff.—Proctor v. Houghtaling, 37 Mich. 41.

¶ 493. In a suit by a husband against his wife's brother for assisting her in forcibly removing the household goods from their house, a witness, testifying to a conversation with the brother while the goods were being removed, cannot be asked on cross-examination to state what the wife said at the time, if, in fact, the husband was not present, and the witness had not testified to any conversation with the wife.—Burns v. Kirkpatrick, 91 Mich. 364.

¶ 494. Having testified in a replevin suit that he sold the horses in question to the wife of the defendant, that the defendant had told him the property given in exchange for the horses belonged to the defendant's wife and that it looked as though he would get beaten, the witness' answer on cross-examination that the defendant said he was so blind he could not see and if he did not get the horses he would go to the poor-house, cannot be held competent as testing the recollection of the witness as it is irrelevant.—Atherton v. Defreeze, 129 Mich. 364.

Rebuttal and explanation when on main issues, see ante § 47 et seq.

¶ 495. In a prosecution for seduction evidence of a conversation between the complaining witness and her mother and sister explanatory of what had been drawn out by the defense on cross-examination of the sister as to occurrences on the occasion of the alleged seduction, is admissible.—People v. Gibbs, 70 Mich. 425.

¶ 496. In an action for injuries resulting from being thrown from a car while rounding a curve where it was shown that two witnesses had been promised a new suit of clothes by the plaintiff if they would testify for him and he won his case, it was not error to allow a cross-examination by the plaintiff which simply brought out what had been said, the circumstances thereof and its effect tending to show that no harm was intended, and that it did not influence the testimony of the witnesses.—Dupuis v. Saginaw Valley Traction Co., 146 Mich. 151.

¶ 497. Where, in an action against a principal, the letter of an agent is put in evidence to show ratification, it is error to exclude on cross-examination a subsequent letter which would rebut the inferences to be drawn from the first.—Turner v. Phoenix Ins. Co. of Hartford, 55 Mich. 236.

§ 70. Of witnesses not called or examined on main issues.

Of character witnesses and impeaching witnesses, see post § 71.

Of expert witnesses, see post §§ 72-75.

¶ 498. A party calling a witness, even for formal proof of a fact communicated to accused, thereby makes him his witness, and the adverse party may cross-examine him upon all matters material to the interview at which it was communicated.—People v. Barker, 60 Mich. 277.

¶ 499. Where defendant was called as a witness by plaintiff simply to identify and introduce a written statement of a fact found in defendant's book and in his own handwriting, for the purpose of explaining certain testimony previously introduced on defendant's part, it was held not proper cross-examination to ask him about other questions involved in the case.—Blackwood v. Brown, 32 Mich. 104.

¶ 500. In an action on promissory notes made by an agent, the principal question related to the agent's authority, but the plaintiff, who called him as a witness, did not examine him as to his signature to the notes and did not introduce the notes until after he was examined. Held proper, notwithstanding, so to cross-examine him as to fraudulent issues of notes to bring out the whole truth.—New York Iron Mine v. First Nat. Bank of Negaunee, 39 Mich. 644.

§ 71. Of character witnesses and impeaching witnesses.

Of the witness as to his own antecedents and character, see ante § 62.
Redirect examination, see post § 91.
Cross-examination on character, when proper, see also Evidence ¶ 1922.

¶ 501. It was proper to show, upon cross-examination of witnesses, who had testified to good character of accused in a statutory rape case, what the relations between them and respondent were, that they were credulous, and how they would be influenced in their estimate of what was right or wrong, immoral or unchaste, by what respondent had said, and by their estimate of the character he represented; where he was a religious imposter seducing young girls.—People v. Mills, 94 Mich. 630.

¶ 502. It is proper to show, upon cross-examination of a witness called to establish respondent's good character, and who has testified to respondent's purity and loving kindness, that respondent had on one occasion tied his wife's hands and confined her in a back room, because she was violent and rebellious, and that her violence was occasioned by her jealousy of his having other women in the house.—People v. Mills, 94 Mich. 630.

¶ 503. Where a witness for respondent testifies that, during the time respondent worked for her she found him honest and clever in his work, that he always did what was right, and that he did nothing wrong in her presence, she may be cross-examined as to his drinking habits and as to his being drunk and being out late nights, upon divers occasions and times during the time he worked for her and prior to the commission of the alleged murder.—People v. Willett, 105 Mich. 110.

¶ 503a. It is proper cross-examination of a character witness to ask if he has not heard that respondent had attempted suicide.—People v. Frey, 112 Mich. 251.

¶ 504. In a prosecution for larceny it is error to permit cross-examination of respondent's character witness as to individual opinions formed or expressed after the date of the claimed larceny and after things had become known which may have cast suspicion on respondent.—People v. Huff, 173 Mich. 620.

¶ 505. On cross-examination of a character witness in a criminal action, it is improper, though not reversible error, to go into matters subsequent to the time of the act charged.—People v. Snyder, 173 Mich. 616.

¶ 506. In a criminal prosecution where defendant's character witnesses testify as to his good character previous to the transaction charged cross-examination must be confined to acts prior to the act charged.—People v. Huff, 173 Mich. 620.

¶ 507. It is improper for a character witness to be cross-examined by the prosecuting attorney on a criminal trial as to the effect on the witness' opinion of the respondent's good reputation of the commission of the offense charged against him.—People v. Jansma, 181 Mich. 62.

¶ 508. Cross-examination of an impeaching witness to show that he is himself disreputable may be restricted in the discretion of the trial judge, and was properly excluded where the offer was to show that he was a procurer and blackmailer.—Hollywood v. Reed, 57 Mich. 234.

§ 72. Of expert witnesses.

Of medical experts, see post § 73.
Questions as to opinions and standing of other experts, see post § 74.
Use of scientific books, see post § 75.
Of nonexpert witnesses, see post § 76.
Relative scope of direct and cross-examination, see also ante § 7.
Matters admissible as affecting credibility of experts, see Witnesses, VI, D.

¶ 509. Considerable latitude should be allowed in the cross-examination of experts as to their competency; held proper, however, to exclude evidence of a mechanic's having compromised his bill on complaint made of his work.—Andre v. Hardin, 32 Mich. 324.

¶ 510. In a suit for the price of barley it was allowable in cross-examining plaintiff to ask him how long he has speculated in barley in order to test his judgment of qualities.—Duncan v. Seeley, 34 Mich. 369.

¶ 511. It may be shown on cross-examination of an expert that he was paid $25 for his attendance; but it would also be proper for the court to charge that there was nothing discreditable in the fact.—Alford v. Vincent, 53 Mich. 555.

¶ 512. In replevin for logs, where a witness has testified as to the quantity of the logs, it is competent, in order to test his accuracy, to show the quantity he has made in scaling other lands of which plaintiff has the actual scales.—Busch v. Nester, 70 Mich. 525.

¶ 513. In an action for the value of printing done, where there was evidence that the proof was returned so badly marked and interlined that resetting was necessary, it was proper on cross-examination to allow a printer testifying as an expert to state that a price testified by him as proper and less than was charged would be increased if an exceptional amount of change was made necessitating resetting.—Graham v. Myers, 67 Mich. 277.

¶ 514. Expert witnesses who have testified from comparison that disputed signature is genuine may, to test the value of their testimony, be asked on cross-examination to make comparisons between two signatures of a witness in the case—one admitted by him to be genuine, and the other claimed by him to have been written by some one else but by his authority and direction.—Johnston Harvester Co. v. Miller, 72 Mich. 265.

¶ 515. Where an expert witness based his testimony that certain samples of milk furnished him contained a larger per cent of water, and a smaller per cent of fat, than they ought, if unadulterated, upon comparisons and tests made of other samples of milk, he may be examined on cross-examination as to the results of such comparisons and tests.—Michigan Condensed Milk Co. v. Wilcox, 78 Mich. 431.

¶ 516. It is proper cross-examination of a consulting engineer, who has testified that "drips" pumped out of gas mains into a tank are explosive, to ask him whether a vent in the tank ought to have been closed and fastened as a precaution against fire from outside, the action being for negligence in leaving the tank open and unguarded whereby plaintiff playing about the tank was injured.—Iamurri v. Saginaw City Gas Co., 148 Mich. 27, per McAlvay, C. J., Carpenter, Montgomery and Moore, JJ.

Cross-questioning witness as to his expectation of being paid out of damages recovered, see ante § 60.

¶ 517. Where an expert had testified that a certain injury had in his opinion been inflicted with a hard instrument more or less sharp, and that he could not tell what it was, it is not error to exclude questions as to the probability that such an instrument could be used under specified circumstances without injuring other parts of the body.—Ulrich v. People, 39 Mich. 245.

¶ 518. A physician testifying as an expert that he has discovered no traces of an abortion in a certain case may properly be asked on cross-examination whether such traces would exist under certain circumstances, even though no proof of such circumstances has been made, the purpose being to show why no traces may have remained.—Bathrick v. Detroit Post & Tribune Co., 50 Mich. 629.

¶ 519. A physician testifying for the defense in an action for personal injury swore that when he had examined the plaintiff there was no evidence of any hurt, but on cross-examination admitted that if the injury had happened long before there would not necessarily be any surface indication of it. Held proper to cross-examine him as to what plaintiff had said when, on touching his person, he had asked him if he felt any pain. The fact was part of the res gestæ, and the plaintiff was entitled to show all the facts brought out by the physician's examination of him.—Joslin v. Grand Rapids Ice & Coal Co., 53 Mich. 322.

¶ 520. It is not proper on cross-examination of a physician, who has testified to the nature of injuries sustained by a plaintiff and the prospect of a full recovery, to ask him if he would be able to say from an examination of plaintiff, if he had never seen him, that he was unable to do manual labor, said question being hardly proper for a medical expert.—Lay v. City of Adrian, 75 Mich. 438.

¶ 521. A physician, having testified hypothetically that a delirious person would be incompetent, cannot be properly cross-questioned, it seems, as to whether asking for a person to draft a will would be evidence of delirium on the part of the person asking, then in her last sickness. It would be common knowledge that such was not evidence of delirium but of rationality.—McHugh v. Fitzgerald, 103 Mich. 21.

¶ 522. It is improper cross-examination of a medical witness testifying as to the ordinary consequences of a given injury from a dog's bite to ask what would be the danger of hydrophobia, where there is nothing in plaintiff's pleadings or proofs to show that he ever entertained any fears of hydrophobia as a consequence.—French v. Wilkinson, 93 Mich. 322.

¶ 523. A cross-question requiring a physician who attended a plaintiff suing for personal injuries to state whether he knew at a particular time that plaintiff contemplated a lawsuit against defendant was properly excluded, where he had given no testimony as of such time to exclamations of pain, or testimony of any other character which would be affected or impaired by the fact that plaintiff contemplated bringing an action.—Heddle v. City Electric R. Co., 112 Mich. 547.

¶ 524. Where there has not been any inquiry as to the nature of the plaintiff's claims upon which the conclusion would be based, and where no statements or exclamations of pain have been introduced in evidence, it is within the court's discretion in avoiding new fields of inquiry to refuse to permit a physician who had attended one who is suing for personal injuries, to be cross-examined as to whether or not plaintiff made pretenses during the last of his visits that her injuries were more severe than they really were.—Heddle v. City Electric R. Co., 112 Mich. 547.

¶ 525. Where a physician had testified to the mental capacity of the testator, evidence on cross-examination that 8 years previous to the execution of the will and 11 years before the codicils he had treated him for urethritis was too remote to be of value.—In re Morse's Estate, 146 Mich. 463.

§ 74. ——Questions as to standing and opinion of others.

Form of the question, see also post ¶ 577.
Admissible matter to affect credibility of experts' testimony, see Witnesses, VI, D.

¶ 526. Notwithstanding the hypothetical question was improper and was excluded, because based on having heard the testimony of physicians who conducted a post mortem examination without pointing out the particular facts on which it called for an opinion, a physician testifying as an expert on a trial for abortion may be asked on cross-examination how he differed from what the doctors who conducted the post-mortem examination had said about the case, since this called on him to relate what they had said and to state wherein he differed.—People v. Aikin, 66 Mich. 460.

¶ 527. In a personal injuries case where the issue was whether or not plaintiff's leg had been broken, and two physicians had testified to the fact that it was, it was improper on cross-examination of a physician of the defendant to ask him whether or not the two physicians called by plaintiff were not reputable physicians.—Weitzel v. Village of Fowler, 143 Mich. 700.

§ 75. ——Use of scientific books.

Reading books in direct examination of expert, see Evidence § 303; Indictment, VIII, B.
Scientific books as evidence, see Evidence § 511; Indictment, VIII, B.

¶ 528. A medical witness may testify from his knowledge of the accepted facts of medical science; but counsel cannot be allowed on cross-examination to place the statements of a medical book before the jury by reading therefrom to the witness after the witness had testified it was good authority, and then asking him whether what had been read stated the facts therein set forth.—Marshall v. Brown, 50 Mich. 148.

¶ 529. It is error to allow counsel on cross-examination of a medical witness, to read from a medical book.—Foley v. Grand Rapids & I. Ry. Co., 157 Mich. 67.

¶ 530. In an action for personal injuries alleged to have resulted from an electric shock, where defendant's expert witnesses had testified that when nerves are affected by a shock, it does not cause any organic or molecular change in them, the trial court's procedure in permitting counsel for plaintiff to cross-examine such witnesses in such manner as to bring references to alleged contrary opinions in medical books before the jury, constituted reversible error.—Sykes v. Village of Portland, 193 Mich. 86.

§ 76. Of nonexpert opinion witnesses.

See also ante ¶ 225.

¶ 531. The opinions of nonexpert witnesses cannot be sustained or attacked by their further opinions based upon hypothetical questions on cross-examination or on redirect which was practically cross-examination.—Hogmire's Appeal, 108 Mich. 410.

§ 77. Of party as witness.

Of party as to circumstances of tort or negligence, see ante ¶ 52.
Of party's wife, see post § 78.
[Note. In numerous cases where the party testified in his own behalf the questions decided as to proper cross-examination by the adversary have been placed under the various sections, ante and post, because they presented nothing distinctive from other witnesses. See generally those sections.]
Matters admissible to impeach or corroborate party testifying, see Witnesses, VI, D.
Refusal to answer as raising unfavorable inference, see Evidence § 63.

¶ 532. Considerable latitude must be allowed in the cross-examination of a party to ascertain whether his testimony is affected by his interest.—Connor v. McRae, 193 Mich. 682.

¶ 533. A plaintiff, on cross-examination, may be examined as to his bias and interest in the case, or any other matter affecting his credibility as a witness.—Mears v. Cornwall, 73 Mich. 78.

¶ 534. A party who testifies in his own behalf is subject to the same rules of cross-examination as any other witness and may be cross-examined as to his character and antecedents.—Ritchie v. Stenius, 73 Mich. 563.

¶ 534a. Where a plaintiff makes the defendant his witness, and he is sworn and testifies in his behalf, defendant's counsel has the right to cross-examine him upon any material question in the case, including matters not touched upon in plaintiff's direct examination.—Cairbre v. McQuillen, 162 Mich. 679.

§ 78. Of wife of party as witness.

Privileged communications between husband and wife, see Witnesses, V, D.

¶ 535. Respondent's wife, if a witness in his behalf, may be cross-examined by the prosecution as fully as any other witness.—People v. Gosch, 82 Mich. 22.

¶ 536. Where a wife is a competent witness in an action for damages for alienation of affections she may be cross-examined the same as any other witness.—Hendrickson v. Harry, 200 Mich. 41.

§ 79. Of accused as witness.

Respecting other crimes and offenses, see post § 80.

Of accused testifying on grade of crime as to variant testimony given to judge when admitting crime, see ante ¶ 490.

Privilege against self-criminating testimony, see post § 109.

Waiver of privilege against self-crimination, see post § 110.

Contradiction, impeachment and corroboration by others of accused as a witness, see Witnesses, VI, D.

¶ 537. When a respondent takes the witness stand in his own behalf he is subject to the same inquiries upon cross-examination as any other witness.—People v. Howard, 73 Mich. 10; People v. Sutherland, 104 Mich. 468; People v. Klise, 156 Mich. 373; People v. Bryan, 170 Mich. 683; People v. Danenberg, 176 Mich. 337.

¶ 538. A respondent who offers himself as witness and testifies in his own behalf is subject to the same rules as to cross-examination as other witnesses; so held where respondent so offering himself was permitted to make an unsworn statement to the jury.—People v. Robinson, 86 Mich. 415.

¶ 539. A respondent in a criminal case who becomes a witness in his own behalf is subject to all the rules of cross-examination to test veracity, applicable to ordinary witnesses.—People v. Gray, 135 Mich. 542.

¶ 540. A respondent who presents himself as a witness in his own behalf is subject to any cross-examination which goes directly to the merits of the case.—People v. Bussey, 82 Mich. 49.

¶ 541. The respondent in a criminal case, who offers himself as a witness in his own behalf, may be asked upon cross-examination to answer any question calling for material testimony which in the case of any other witness would be legitimate cross-examination.—People v. Fritch, 170 Mich. 258.

¶ 542. Where a defendant to a charge of criminal assault comes forward as his own witness, and contradicts the witnesses for the state, the court may without an abuse of its discretion, permit him to be cross-examined at great length.—People v. Hoffman, 154 Mich. 145.

¶ 543. Where a person accused of a crime committed on his own premises takes the witness stand, it is proper to examine into his conduct in connection with the accusation, and ask him whether he helped the officers investigate.—People v. Wallin, 55 Mich. 497.

¶ 544. Where, in a prosecution for rape, it appears that the victim has a venereal disease, and respondent on his own behalf testifies that he had no such disease at the time the offense was alleged to have been committed, it is proper, on his cross-examination, to inquire as to his physical condition and to ask why he had certain bottles of medicine which he used while in jail shortly after his arrest.—People v. Glover, 71 Mich. 303.

¶ 545. Where one charged with engaging in the liquor business without having paid tax testifies in his own behalf, he may be cross-examined as to his methods of conducting his business.—People v. Hicks, 79 Mich. 457.

¶ 546. It was proper, on the cross-examination of respondent, to go as fully into his antecedents as into those of any other witness in the case.—People v. Sutherland, 104 Mich. 468.

¶ 547. A respondent who testifies in his own behalf is subject to the same rules of cross-examination as any other witness, and a thorough examination into his past life is competent. Accordingly in a trial for murder of a girl claimed to have been pregnant by him, it was held proper to ask him if he had been twice married and twice divorced, and that she was a witness for him in the last divorce case.—People v. Parmelee, 112 Mich. 291.

¶ 548. On a prosecution for abandonment and nonsupport of his wife, it is proper to cross-examine accused by questions tending to controvert his claim that his wife abandoned him and refused to accept support which he offered her at the home of his father, where he went.—People v. Malsch, 119 Mich. 112.

¶ 549. Where a witness had testified in a prosecution for rape, that the prosecutrix had contracted gonorrhea from the respondent; on a trial of such witness for perjury in so testifying it was proper to show that he knew to the contrary, by showing on cross-examination that he knew that such prosecutrix had the disease before, and that he had treated her for it.—People v. Dowdall, 124 Mich. 166.

¶ 550. In a prosecution against defendant for an assault upon his wife with intent to murder, it is error to require respondent to state on cross-examination whether he was jealous of a certain third person, and married his wife upon her request, where both questions related to matters before their marriage and were not connected with the assault.—People v. Rohl, 166 Mich. 315.

¶ 551. Where the defendant in a prosecution for statutory rape has testified on direct examination to the fact that a money settlement had been demanded of him, he may be cross-examined as to all the facts and circumstances relating to such transaction.—People v. Coston, 187 Mich. 538.

¶ 552. An accused person who offers himself as a witness in his own behalf, on cross-examination may be compelled to answer the question whether revolvers found on his premises by the police belonged to him.—People v. Cona, 180 Mich. 641.

¶ 553. Full latitude should be permitted in the examination of the defendant in a prosecution for statutory rape, a man 75 years of age having a weak back and a double hernia, as to whether he had capacity to perform the sexual act against the will of complaining witness.—People v. Coston, 187 Mich. 538.

§ 80. ——Other crimes and arrests or prosecutions.

Privilege against self-crimination, see post § 109.

¶ 554. Where a person on trial for crime voluntarily offers himself as a general witness, it is discretionary with the trial judge to allow him to be cross-examined as to whether he has been arrested before, or has not been in the state prison.—People v. Cummins, 47 Mich. 334.

¶ 555. Where a respondent in a criminal case is examined as a witness on his own behalf it is discretionary with the trial judge to allow him to be cross-examined as to criminal proceedings against him.—People v. Gale, 50 Mich. 237.

¶ 556. Upon a prisoner's cross-examination it may be shown, as affecting his credibility, that he has been arrested for another crime.—People v. Foote, 93 Mich. 38.

¶ 557. Where the respondent in a criminal case is sworn as a witness it is not competent to compel him to answer on cross-examination questions irrelevant to the issue which have a tendency to bring in other charges.—People v. Pinkerton, 79 Mich. 110.

¶ 558. In a prosecution for embezzlement where the question of forgery of a certain receipt is in issue, it is error on cross-examination to require defendant, over objection, to answer the question whether certain other receipts, presented by him on an accounting with the complaining witness and upon which credit was not allowed, were not rejected because complaining witness claimed they were forgeries, since such claim was not material nor was it material that some court had disallowed claims presented by defendant.—People v. Peck, 139 Mich. 680.

¶ 559. Cross-examination of a respondent in a prosecution for assault with intent to commit rape upon a child under sixteen, in relation to his alleged conduct towards another girl and the bringing of suit by her was improper, particularly where although the suit had been long pending it had never been brought to trial.—People v. Dowell, 136 Mich. 306.

¶ 560. On a trial for murder where respondent testified to a difficulty with deceased on the Sunday preceding the shooting, it was permissible for the people on cross-examination to show that the difficulty took place in a saloon though this tended to show a violation of law by respondent.—People v. Farrell, 137 Mich. 127.

¶ 561. Details of former convictions of the accused given by himself and which were within the rule suggested by his own counsel and not objected to are proper on his cross-examination.—People v. Lambert, 144 Mich. 578.

¶ 562. An accused person, who offers himself as a witness in his own behalf, on cross-examination may be interrogated as to former convictions.—People v. Cona, 180 Mich. 641.

§ 81. Calling opposite party or his witnesses for cross-examination.

Right to cross-examine as to matter on which adverse party might have been called as witness in chief, see ante § 36.

Calling witnesses in court to the stand to testify, see Trial, V.

Subpoena to witness to come to court, see Witnesses, I.

Right to cross-examine adversary as class distinction, see Constitutional Law § 222, ¶ 943.

Competency of the party as a witness to the particular matters, see Fitnesses, II-V.

Right to call opposite party for cross-examination, see Jud. Act, chap. XVII, § 66; Comp. L. 1915, § 12554.

Power of court to require party or witnesses to testify in open court, see 1916 C. C. Rule 36, and see Jud. Act, chap. I, § 29; Comp. L. 1915, § 12034.

¶ 563. Where, under a rule authorizing the circuit courts, "at any time and in accordance with and for the furtherance of justice," to call upon all or any of the parties to be sworn, the court made an order that the parties be examined as witnesses, and they were examined accordingly, it was held not error to refuse to permit one of them to be sworn on his own behalf on a second trial, the other not being present.—Lester v. Sutton, 7 Mich. 329.

¶ 564. R. S. 1846, chap. 102, § 102, Comp. L. 1857, § 4342, provided that in trials before justices of the peace, if the claim of the plaintiff should be denied by the defendant, it should be lawful for the plaintiff to require of the defendant to answer on oath to such claim. Held, that the word "claim," though sufficiently comprehensive to embrace actions sounding in tort as well as those founded upon contract, is, in its popular sense, usually applied to a demand founded in agreement or contract; that this popular meaning was the sense in which the word was used in the statute; and that the examination of the parties was only authorized in actions ex contractu.—Carne v. Litchfield, 2 Mich. 340.

¶ 565. Under R. S. 1846, chap. 102, § 100, allowing a party to be called to prove facts which there was no competent witness attainable to prove, it was not allowable to contradict other witnesses, or to swear to facts on which they might be questioned, simply because he would give a different version.—McBride v. Cicotte, 4 Mich. 478.

¶ 566. The "party" allowed by statute on affidavit to be called to prove a fact by examination of the party (How. St. § 4340), which there was no competent witness attainable to prove, was the opposite party.—Hogan v. Sherman, 5 Mich. 60.

¶ 567. Comp. L. 1857, § 3765, How. St., § 6926, providing how parties in justices' courts may be made witnesses and for judgment against them in case they refuse to testify, is repugnant to Laws 1861, Act No. 125, amending Comp. L. 1857, §§ 4339-4342, How. St., subsequently amended, which prescribe the only rule as to the competency and examination of parties.—Gooderich v. Allen, 19 Mich. 250.

¶ 568. Where a plaintiff before filing her suit against the parents of her husband for alienation of affections has commenced a divorce suit, it is error for the trial court to refuse defendants in the alienation suit permission to cross-examine plaintiff as to the divorce suit. Walter v. Walter, 172 Mich. 351.

¶ 569. Under Act No. 307, Pub. Acts of 1909, a plaintiff may call a witness for cross-examination where it appears that at the time of the happening of the transaction out of which the suit grew said witness was an employee or agent of the defendant.—National Coal Co. v. Cincinnati Gas Coke, Coal & Mining Co., 168 Mich. 198.

¶ 570. The right to cross-examine a witness of the adverse party under Pub. Acts 1909, No. 307, How. 2nd Ed., § 12865, is not waived because of the failure to make announcement of the claim to examine under the statute before or at the time the witness is put on the stand, especially where the claim is made after only preliminary questions have been asked and the main facts have not been gone into.—Walter v. Detroit, J. & C. Ry., 191 Mich. 181.

¶ 571. Where one of defendant saloon keepers in an action by a wife for unlawfully selling liquors to her husband is called as a witness by the plaintiff under the statute permitting opposite parties to be called and limiting the effect of their testimony, the admission of such testimony is not reversible error where the objection of invasion of constitutional immunity is not made or the claim of such provision raised and where the witness gives no testimony tending to incriminate himself.—Rauhala v. Maki, 172 Mich. 112.

§ 82. ——Scope, latitude and mode of questioning.

Cross-examination in his own behalf or party called on direct by other party, see ante § 77, ¶ 534a.

¶ 572. Where a party sworn as a witness under R. S. 1846, p. 461, § 100, gave an answer clearly evasive and uncandid, it was held that the court should permit the broadest latitude of inquiry necessary to elicit the truth and effectuate the object of the law.—Way v. Billings, 2 Mich. 397.

¶ 573. In an action against a company for wages plaintiff is entitled to cross-examine the president of such company who is being examined by him under the statute, as to all material matters.—Keel v. Wilson Fruit Juice Co., 176 Mich. 345.

¶ 574. Plaintiff in a personal injury suit called a witness in the employ of defendant for a cross-examination under Act No. 307, Public Acts, 1909. Held, it was not error for the court to permit the defendant to cross-examine such witness and ask him leading questions.—Johnson v. Union Carbide Co., 169 Mich. 651.

¶ 575. An employee of a street railroad company who had nothing to do with the operation of a car at the time of an accident may be called to testify as to speed of a car by the adverse party for cross-examination under Pub. Acts, 1909, No. 307, How. 2nd Ed., § 12865.—Walter v. Detroit, J. & C. Ry. Co., 191 Mich. 667.

§ 83. Form and intendment of cross questions in general.

Misstatements, slurs and assumptions of fact in questions, see post § 84.
Foundation or connection for question or offer to connect, see post § 85.
Refreshing memory of witness, see ante § 20 et seq.

¶ 576. In an action on a promissory note, which the defendant alleges was obtained by fraud, it is proper to ask him on cross-examination where the fraud was; since this does not call upon the witness to draw a conclusion from the facts, but asks him to state what facts operated on his mind and produced the fraud.—Mace v. Kennedy, 68 Mich. 389.

¶ 577. A physician testifying as an expert on a trial for abortion may be asked on cross-examination how he differed from what the doctors who conducted the post-mortem examination had said about the case where this requires him to state what they testified to from which he differs.—People v. Aiken, 66 Mich. 460.

§ 84. ——Misstatements, innuendoes and assumptions in questions.

Necessity of evidence of fact or showing of it before question assuming it to exist, see also post § 85.
Casting innuendoes by questions or arguments on objections as mistrial, see Trial, II, V; Indictment, IX, B.

¶ 578. In case a question put on cross-examination includes a statement as to testimony given by another witness which statement is not strictly correct, it is proper to rule out the question unless the statement be eliminated.—Daniels v. Weeks, 90 Mich. 190.

¶ 579. The following questions put by the prosecuting attorney to respondent's wife—who had testified that she was present when the alleged crime was committed—"is it not a fact that you were not there at all?" "has this been written out?" "is it not a fact that you and your husband have concocted this whole story?" "you have been a witness for your husband in every lawsuit he has had, have you not?" were held improper as reflecting on the character of the witness, and as tending to discredit her by innuendo.—People v. Cahoon, 88 Mich. 456.

¶ 580. It is not prejudicial error to ask defendant questions on cross-examination which are imputations of a want of truthfulness when the stories told by the plaintiff and defendant as to how the accident happened are as divergent as they could be, and both could not be true.—Herbeck v. Germain, 144 Mich. 157.

§ 85. ——Showing of reason, connection or foundation.

Exhibition of paper to witness before questioning upon it, see post § 87.
Reference to former statements, testimony or doings to refresh memory of witness, see ante § 20 et seq.

¶ 581. Upon cross-examination, a question calculated to draw out a fact which may be rendered material by further evidence is competent, and the same rule does not apply as upon direct examination, that if the question can only be shown to be relevant by other evidence intended to be offered, it must be accompanied by an offer to introduce such other evidence.—O'Donnell v. Segar, 25 Mich. 367.

¶ 582. It is erroneous on cross-examination to reject questions which relate to the same subject as the direct examination, even though it be not apparent that the answers would have benefited the party putting the questions, unless it clearly appears affirmatively that such party could not be injured by the rejection; and this error is not cured by allowing such party to go fully into the same matters with his own witnesses.—O'Donnell v. Segar, 25 Mich. 367.

¶ 583. In an action of trespass for defendant's leading a gang of men upon plaintiff's premises to interfere with his workmen, plaintiff's witness cannot be asked on cross-examination what defendant had said to a meeting of men about observing the law, when no testimony of such meeting had been introduced, although another meeting later in the day and what was said there had been touched on.—Webber v. Barry, 66 Mich. 127.

¶ 584. The witness, having testified to all the facts and circumstances of which he had knowledge, was asked, on cross-examination, if respondent, to witness' knowledge, at any time knew what was in the trunks in which the stolen goods were placed. Held, that it was proper for the court to require the witness first to state if he knew whether or not respondent possessed such knowledge.—People v. Considine, 105 Mich. 149.

¶ 585. Cross-examination as to why the witness did not appear in certain proceedings was improper, in the absence of any evidence that he had been requested to appear, or had been subpoenaed.—Spring v. Perkins, 156 Mich. 327.

§ 86. Use and production of documents as basis for cross-examination.

¶ 586. A letter is a legitimate part of the cross-examination of a witness who wrote it, and who has denied giving any such advice as it contains. It is important not only as part of the series of transactions, but also to test his veracity or the accuracy of his memory.—Krolik v. Graham, 64 Mich. 226.

¶ 587. The fact that a witness has been confined in a state prison may be inquired of in cross-examining him without producing the record of his conviction.—Wilbur v. Flood, 16 Mich. 40.

¶ 588. Where suit is brought on an account shown to have been charged in plaintiff's books, defendant is entitled to a full cross-examination upon all that the books would show, and to have plaintiff produce them without making him her witness or issuing a subpoena duces tecum.—McCausland v. King, 60 Mich. 70.

¶ 589. In an action for sidewalk injury it is error to exclude cross-examination of the plaintiff as to her statements before the city council unless the entire stenographic record of her statements at that time is introduced.—Zibbell v. City of Grand Rapids, 129 Mich. 659.

¶ 590. A defendant, sued upon an indorsement which he denies to be his, cannot on cross-examination be required to introduce signatures made by him before the instrument in suit.—First National Bank v. Robert, 41 Mich. 709.

§ 87. ——Identification and submission of papers referred to.

Offering prior testimony as minuted or transcribed, see post § 88.
Reading or submission to witness to refresh memory, see ante §§ 25, 26.
Right to withhold answer until paper is shown, see post § 107.
Inadmissibility of paper to impeach witness where it was not shown to him, see also Witnesses, VI, D.

¶ 591. To ask a witness on cross-examination what he knows about a written statement the counsel holds in his hands is not admissible; there being nothing in the case to show the statement had any relevancy.—Detroit & M. R. Co. v. Van Steinburg, 17 Mich. 99.

¶ 592. A witness having testified that he made a written statement of the facts was asked, "Would you recognize a copy of the statement if it was read over to you?" Held incompetent.—Detroit & M. R. Co. v. Van Steinburg, 17 Mich. 99.

¶ 593. The refusal to permit a witness to be asked on cross-examination whether he wrote a letter referred to in another letter, unless the latter was put in evidence, was not error.—Simonds v. Cash, 136 Mich. 558.

¶ 594. In an action on a promissory note where plaintiff claimed that an agreement was made for the exchange of such note for two smaller notes and that such agreement was invalid because made on Sunday, and that he returned such smaller notes to the defendants, and defendants claimed that the agreement was made after midnight, and denied that such smaller notes were returned, and claimed that such smaller notes were subsequently paid, held that plaintiff was properly cross-examined as to whether or not he inclosed such smaller notes in a letter sent by him to defendants without first showing him the letter.—Prussia v. Bailey, 193 Mich. 77.

§ 88. ——Offer and reading of former testimony.

Offering statements made before municipal council, see ante ¶ 589.

¶ 595. It is not necessary for the prosecutor to exhibit to the defendant's counsel notes of testimony taken before the grand jury which he has in his possession and uses in cross-examining the defendant's witnesses.—People v. Salsbury, 134 Mich. 537.

¶ 595a. A witness testifying on his own behalf, and having testified at a former trial on the same subject, cannot be cross-examined for impeachment as to the particulars of his former testimony and interrogated whether it was true or false, before the transcript of the former testimony is before him and the jury.—Dunbar v. McGill, 69 Mich. 297.

¶ 596. The stenographer's minutes of the testimony given on a former trial cannot be offered as original evidence to contradict and impeach the witness; and he may, therefore, be asked on cross-examination whether he gave such testimony as is stated in detached portions of those minutes, without reading to him the whole testimony taken down by the stenographer.—Toohey v. Plummer, 69 Mich. 345.

¶ 597. In a prosecution for manslaughter a question asked of a witness as to her testimony in justice's court, for the purpose of impeachment, may be objected to until the witness' testimony contained in the deposition is read to her.—People v. McArron, 121 Mich. 1.

¶ 598. The testimony of a witness on the contest of a will is properly excluded on cross-examination of such witness in subsequent adjudication upon the final account of the administrator of testator's estate, where a copy of such testimony was not produced or offered in evidence, and no proper foundation was laid for its introduction.—Reed v. Whipple, 140 Mich. 7.

¶ 599. Generally speaking not all the testimony taken by a stenographer need be read to a witness before he can be asked questions as a basis for impeachment.—McDonald v. City Elec. R. Co., 144 Mich. 379.

III. REDIRECT EXAMINATION AND FURTHER EXAMINATIONS.

§ 89. Occasion, right and propriety.

Right to recall witness for re-examination or further examination after leaving stand, see Trial, V, B.

Discretion of court to permit re-examination on matter already gone into, see Trial, V; Indictment, IX, B.

Reopening case after party has rested and reception of further evidence, see Trial, V, B; Indictment, IX, B.

Mode of putting and arguing redirect question in presence of jury as misconduct amounting to error, see Trial, II, V; Indictment, IX.

Re-examination of witnesses in chancery, see also Equity ¶ 730.

¶ 600. The general rule is that after a witness has been examined he may be subjected to further interrogation by the party by whom he is called, in the discretion of the court.—Loud v. Solomon, 188 Mich. 7.

¶ 601. There is no abuse of discretion upon the part of a trial judge in refusing to allow further examination of a witness who has been subjected to a direct examination, a cross-examination, a redirect examination and a recross-examination.—Loud v. Solomon, 188 Mich. 7.

§ 90. Scope and extent in general.

What further examinations are proper, see ante § 89.

Relation of redirect to direct and cross, see post §§ 92-95.

Explaining, meeting or complementing cross-examination, see post §§ 97, 98.

Repeating and pursuing cross-examination, see post § 96.

Showing bias or discrediting, see post § 99.

Corroboration or rebuttal of bad inferences, see post §§ 100, 101.

Use of papers and documents in redirect, see post §§ 102, 103.

Form and construction of redirect questions, see post §§ 104, 105.

Of redirect examination of character witness, see post § 91.

Recross-examination, see ante § 41.

Refreshing memory of witness, see ante § 20 et seq.

Proper scope and subjects of rebuttal, as distinguished from mode of interrogation or form of question, see Evidence, III; Indictment, VIII, B; and see also specific topics treating of the subject of the primary evidence.

¶ 602. An action for damages from fraud was brought against certain persons charged with conspiring to obtain property by a course of fraudulent dealing. Upon the trial one of the defendants was asked how much he had given for certain land which plaintiff claimed he had sold to his confederates at an extravagant price, and he gave the sum. On re-examination he said this was about a year before he sold it. Held, that the exclusion of a further question as to what kind of pay he gave was immaterial.—Daniels v. Dayton, 49 Mich. 137.

§ 91. Of character and impeaching witnesses.

Proper questions for direct examination, see ante § 7.

¶ 603. Where a lawyer, called to impeach a witness, had testified against his reputation for truth and veracity, and on cross-examination had testified that he once had occasion to impeach said witness in a suit wherein he was counsel, and was then allowed under objection to answer the question whether the judgment of the court in that case sustained the theory to which the witness had testified, the supreme court declined to hold that the discretion of the circuit judge was exercised improperly or unwisely in admitting the answer.—Arnold v. Nye, 23 Mich. 286.

§ 92. Relation of redirect to direct and cross-examination.

Matters proper for direct rather than rebuttal, see ante § 7.

Scope of redirect and extent allowable, see ante § 90.

Matter improperly brought out on cross-examination or new matter then brought out, see post § 93.

New matter introduced by amendment, see post § 94.

Rebutting or explaining cross-examination, see post §§ 97, 98.

Preceding examinations as affecting proper form of redirect questions, see post § 104.

Recross-examination, see ante § 41.

Admissibility of evidence because of other evidence, see Evidence §§ 91, 92.

¶ 604. A question warranted by cross-examination may be asked on redirect examination.—People v. Hare, 57 Mich. 505.

¶ 605. It is within the discretion of the court to permit any question to be asked on redirect examination which might have been admitted on the examination in chief.—Hemmens v. Bentley, 32 Mich. 89.

¶ 606. Where a witness has been cross-examined as to his motive in taking a mortgage it is not error to permit redirect examination upon the same subject.—Huellmantel v. Vinton, 116 Mich. 621.

¶ 607. Unless withdrawn, matter introduced by the defendant on cross-examination may be pursued by counsel for the plaintiff on redirect examination.—Smith v. Smith, 185 Mich. 172.

¶ 608. In a passenger's suit for injury, testimony on re-examination from a physician who had once attended the person injured, that he had once thereafter called upon the person in company with a physician sent by the defendant company, was irrelevant and inadmissible.—Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Coleman, 28 Mich. 440.

¶ 609. Where, from the testimony of plaintiff in an action for personal injuries, it may be inferred that a pass-book on which he rode was given him as part of the consideration for his services, it is not error to allow plaintiff, when recalled, to change his testimony by testifying that defendant's foreman said he would give him a job at a certain sum per day, and tickets to go to and from his work.—Eberts v. Detroit, Mt. C. & M. C. Ry., 151 Mich. 260.

¶ 610. A witness for the prosecution is as much the people's witness when under cross-examination as when on his examination in chief, and the fact that on his cross-examination as to a subject entered upon in the direct examination he is permitted, without objection, to detail part of a hearsay story told him, will not authorize the calling out of the rest of it against objection on the redirect examination upon the claim that it is part of the same conversation. Whether this would be so where the defense is by way of confession and avoidance, and the defendants, while cross-examining the witness, have gone into new matters to establish it, and have thus brought out part of a conversation between the witness and a third person, quære.—Wagner v. People, 30 Mich. 384.

¶ 611. Where a claimant against an estate has been asked on cross-examination concerning admissions made by himself about his contract with decedent, a subject into which his direct examination did not enter, he may on his redirect examination explain the matter fully since it was a waiver of his disqualification to testify of a transaction with decedent.—Fox v. Barrett's Estate, 117 Mich. 162.

¶ 612. In a claim against an estate upon a note, where an entry in decedent's memorandum book relating to payment of $20 on the note was offered to avoid the statute of limitations, and the claimant was cross-examined at length as to the other entries to show that money had been borrowed from him, and where upon being asked whether the said $20 might not have been on the loaned money, he answered in the negative, it was proper to ask him on redirect what it did refer to; the cross-examination having opened the door to the inquiry.—Fowles v. Joslyn, 135 Mich. 333.

¶ 613. In a prosecution for violation of the local option law, where a witness testified on cross that he had bought liquor for medicinal purposes, had seen his name registered and had never seen anything out of character at respondent's store, and where on redirect he was asked what difficulty he bought the medicine for and stated that he could not tell and that it was well known that he took daily drinks; the redirect examination could not be complained of, as it was in response to new matter drawn out on cross.—People v. Robinson, 135 Mich. 511.

¶ 614. Where the defendant assaulted and beat the complaining witness in a quarrel which resulted from a trespass by the defendant's horses on complaining witness' land, for which he locked them up and refused to return them until a settlement was made for the trespass, if the defendant tries to show on cross-examination that ill-feeling existed between the parties because of former trespasses, he cannot object if the prosecution also goes into the question on redirect examination.—People v. Mulvaney, 171 Mich. 272.

¶ 615. Where defendant, in cross-examination of plaintiff's witness as to the extent of damages, covers a period subsequent to the starting of the suit, it is not reversible error to permit complainant on redirect examination to cover the same period.—Eesley Light & Power Co. v. Commonwealth Power Co., 172 Mich. 78.

§ 94. ——Issues introduced by amendment at trial.

¶ 616. In a suit for breach of contract brought by the sales agent against an automobile company for cancelling an agreement making plaintiff the sales agent of defendant, the contract provided that plaintiff must conduct the sales garage to the satisfaction of defendant. During the course of the trial plaintiff amended his declaration, charging that defendant acted in bad faith in cancelling the contract and was in fact satisfied with plaintiff's work. Thereupon defendant recalled its manager, to whom such bad faith was imputed, as a witness, and asked whether he canceled the contract in good faith or for the purpose of making a more advantageous one with another sales agent. Held, it was reversible error for the trial court to exclude the answer of the witness on the ground that it had not been gone into on his direct examination.—Isbell v. Anderson Carriage Co., 170 Mich. 304.

§ 95. Matters which might have been shown in chief.

¶ 617. It is not necessarily reversible error to admit in rebuttal evidence for the prosecution that should have been offered in chief, where such evidence could not have prejudiced respondent.—People v. Cox, 70 Mich. 247.

¶ 618. A doctor who took a case on the "no cure, no pay" basis sued for his fee. The patient showed that more than a year after he was treated he was still suffering. Held proper to permit the plaintiff, on rebuttal, to ask a medical witness if he knew whether the patient, when discharged, was suffering from the trouble testified to by his witness. But, also, that it was not clearly error to refuse to permit the question at that stage of the case. The evidence called out by it belonged to the examination-in-chief, as the plaintiff was bound to show that he left defendant cured.—Beebe v. Kostinic, 55 Mich. 604.

¶ 619. In an action for personal injuries where defendant introduces testimony to show that the accident was caused by an agency not within its control, the court may in its discretion allow plaintiff to introduce evidence that such agency did not cause the accident though it is not strictly rebutting. —Kozlowski v. Detroit United Ry., 174 Mich. 412.

§ 96. Repetition or further pursuit of matters already in evidence.

Cross-examination calling for repetition of direct testimony, see ante §§ 39, 40.
To rebut or explain, see post §§ 97, 98.

¶ 620. The admission on redirect examination of evidence of a physician, in a prosecution for manslaughter, as to whether persons die from fright, cannot be objected to where it is a substantial repetition of the testimony brought out on cross-examination. —People v. McArron, 121 Mich. 1.

¶ 621. Where plaintiff's medical witness testifies to a certain fact on cross-examination, an error in permitting him to make substantially the same statements on redirect, is not prejudicial.—Judd v. Township of Caledonia, 150 Mich. 480.

¶ 622. A plaintiff in a suit for personal injuries against defendant automobile owner had previously testified in a criminal prosecution of defendant for speeding on the occasion in question. In the two trials he made conflicting statements as to the relative positions of himself and defendant, and upon cross-examination stated that he did not remember what he testified to at the former trial. Defendant then asked him whether, if he testified on the former trial, that a certain distance was eighty-five feet, his statement was not untrue. Held, the court properly excluded the question.—Scott v. Dow, 162 Mich. 636.

§ 97. Explaining, complementing or meeting cross-examination.

Developing whole conversation or exact words, see post § 98.
Proper evidence to be received in rebuttal, see Evidence § 84 et seq.; Indictment, VIII, B.

¶ 623. Where testimony is brought out on cross-examination the transaction involved may be elucidated and explained on redirect. —Musselman Grocer Co. v. Casler, 138 Mich. 24.

¶ 624. Where defendant by cross-examination draws out a partial statement of facts only, the plaintiff's counsel may re-examine as to the same subject-matter for the purpose of making the facts clear and obtaining such as are material.—Wilcox v. Ney, 47 Mich. 421.

¶ 625. Where, on a second trial, a party has testified to a fact in his own favor, which cross-examination shows that he did not mention on the first trial, held, that on redirect examination he has a right to explain why he had omitted it, and perhaps to state any fact in verification of his explanation.—Ives v. Tregent, 29 Mich. 390.

¶ 626. Where it is brought out on cross-examination of plaintiff that she refrained from doing a certain act, it is competent to show on redirect examination her reasons for so refraining.—Lockard v. Van Alstyne, 155 Mich. 507.

¶ 627. Where a witness for plaintiff in slander had testified to the speaking of the words by defendant, and on cross-examination had stated that she had previously heard the story from others, it is proper, on re-examination, to ask from whom she heard it. If the object was to mitigate damages by showing that defendant had only repeated a common rumor, its prevalence became a proper subject of inquiry, and plaintiff had a right, if possible, to trace it back to defendant.—Burt v. McBain, 29 Mich. 260.

¶ 628. Where a man against whom a heavy award has been made transferred property to his wife, and in a case involving his title to it was cross-examined as to his indebtedness and transfers, a question, upon re-examination, as to whether he "was at all alarmed about that matter"—meaning the award—was permissible.—Hall v. Moriarty, 57 Mich. 345.

¶ 629. Plaintiff in an action for fraud was asked on cross-examination "when he first learned that he had been swindled." He was afterwards asked by his own counsel as to when he first learned of the evidence to support his action, and he answered "Since I commenced this suit." Held, that the latter question was in the line of inquiry opened by the defendant and that the latter could not complain of it.—Daniels v. Dayton, 49 Mich. 137.

¶ 630. The defense having cross-examined the people's witness to show that the witness had some trouble with respondent subsequent to the alleged larceny, and that he would like to get even with the respondent, it is proper to permit the witness, on his redirect examination, to explain the nature of the trouble.—People v. Hanifan, 98 Mich. 32.

¶ 631. Where defendant sued for slander seeking to mitigate an imputation of larceny has sought by cross-examination of a witness to show that plaintiff fraudulently took ice belonging to his copartners, plaintiff on the redirect examination may bring out the fact that all the partners but defendant consented to the taking.—Ellis v. Whitehead, 95 Mich. 105.

¶ 632. In trover by a wife against a mortgagee of the husband for property which she claimed to have owned, but which she had permitted the husband to use in his business, the husband, who was sworn for the plaintiff, having admitted on cross-examination that he told a former partner that the property belonged to him, was further questioned regarding his motive in deceiving his partner. Held, that the evidence was properly excluded as immaterial.—Little v. Williams, 107 Mich. 652.

¶ 633. A witness, having stated on cross-examination that his paper did not publish a retraction of an alleged libel like other papers had done, and having on re-examination stated that on hearing of the other retractions he had instituted an inquiry as to the true facts, should be allowed to state the result of the inquiry, as it would tend to explain his action and control the inference that he had persisted in a wrong.—Bathrick v. Detroit Post & Tribune Co., 50 Mich. 629.

¶ 635. Plaintiff in an action for fraud in sale of an interest in a firm, having testified that certain accounts were not collectible though represented to be good and having been cross-examined as to his diligence in trying to collect, may state on redirect that defendant had knowledge of the accounts and their condition, that defendant talked with plaintiff about them and the collection of them, and to whom plaintiff applied for information concerning them when about to try to collect them.—Totten v. Burhans, 103 Mich. 6.

¶ 636. Plaintiff in an action for fraud in selling an interest in a firm to him, having testified that no security for his payment of assumed debts had been taken and no writing given for that purpose (this on cross-examination), and having further testified that defendant was secured by an agreement that defendant's son was to be employed as bookkeeper and that defendant was in a situation to be advised of collections made, and that collections were to be applied to the liquidation of indebtedness, might properly testify on redirect that the son was so employed, and that defendant talked to and counseled with plaintiff about collections and had knowledge of the state of the accounts.—Totten v. Burhans, 103 Mich. 6.

¶ 637. In an action for the conversion of stock of a corporation, it is competent for the plaintiff after being cross-examined as to the property of the company, not equal to par value of stock, and being asked on redirect what, aside from the property, he took into account in fixing the value of the stock, to testify that he took into account the good will of the business; as good will is an element in determining the value of stock in a corporation.—Feige v. Burt, 124 Mich. 565.

¶ 638. In an action by the widow against the estate of her deceased husband on promissory notes executed by the husband payable to the wife, the action of defendant's counsel in proving by the claimant that she signed her husband's name to another promissory note introduced in evidence warrants redirect examination on the circumstances of execution of the note in question.—Taylor v. Taylor's Estate, 138 Mich. 658.

¶ 639. In an action under the Civil Damage Act, cross-examination of plaintiff as to her husband's earnings having increased latterly does not entitle plaintiff to show that she had two children who contributed to the earnings of the family.—Manzer v. Phillips, 139 Mich. 61.

§ 98. ——Developing whole conversation or exact words.

Admissibility of entirety of conversation or transaction, see Evidence, III; Indictment, VIII, B.

¶ 640. A witness who has been allowed to testify as to part of a conversation between himself and a party to the case should generally be allowed, on re-examination, to give the whole conversation as to the matter in evidence.—Passmore v. Passmore, 50 Mich. 626.

¶ 641. A witness on the probate of a will testified on his cross-examination that, some years before, he had a conversation with the deceased; but he gave no part of the conversation and it did not appear to have had any bearing on the case. Held not competent for the other party, on re-examination, to inquire what was said by the deceased on that occasion.—Beaubien v. Cicotte, 12 Mich. 459.

¶ 642. In an action of trespass for assault and battery after admitting, on cross-examination, use of abusive, insulting, and profane language towards defendant, plaintiff may on redirect examination state the words used.—Kent v. Cole, 84 Mich. 579.

¶ 643. Where plaintiff in suit for labor done on defendant's farm, being asked on cross-examination whether, in a conversation with one N., the latter did not ask him, "Why didn't you do as I did when I left the old man,—settle up with him?" admitted having had a talk with N., but denied that N. asked this, and denied that he said he had reasons for waiting, and also denied that there was such conversation, it was not error to permit plaintiff on redirect examination to state what the conversation was.—Alderton v. Wright, 81 Mich. 294.

¶ 644. A witness asked on cross-examination if she made a certain specific statement to defendant's foreman, in conflict with her testimony, cannot on redirect examination, over objection, be permitted to state the whole conversation had with the foreman, on the ground that defendant's counsel had brought out a part of it.—Mott v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co., 120 Mich. 127.

§ 99. Showing bias or matter affecting credit.

Corroborating or rebutting bad inferences developed by cross, see post § 100.

¶ 645. Testimony which touches the bias or interest of a witness can be shown on his cross-examination, and, if denied by him, can be proved on rebuttal, if the proper foundation is laid.—Swift Electric Light Co. v. Grant, 90 Mich. 469.

§ 100. Corroborating the witness or rebutting bad inferences.

Explaining writings used, see post § 101.
Papers and documents to corroborate, see post § 102.
Proper matter for corroboration, see Witnesses, VI, D.
Evidence to rebut discrediting inferences, see Evidence § 86.

¶ 646. Where plaintiff in an action against his father-in-law for enticing away his wife is asked by defendant's counsel if he did not meet his wife at one time when he had another woman in the buggy with him, he may explain, in answer to a question by his own counsel, the circumstances of his riding with the other woman.—Edgell v. Francis, 86 Mich. 232.

¶ 647. Where the plaintiff in an action for personal injuries had testified, on cross-examination, that she went to work soon after the accident, her testimony that the duty of paying her mother's funeral expenses and of meeting other pressing obligations required an early resumption of work was properly received to overcome the presumption against the seriousness of her injuries which otherwise might have arisen.—Burleson v. Reading, 110 Mich. 512.

¶ 648. Where a witness was asked on cross-examination as to certain statements said to have been made by him to the party in whose behalf he was being cross-examined as tending to show the witness' prejudice or bias against such party, held that there was sufficient foundation for testimony by such party in rebuttal as affecting the credibility of such witness.—Snyder v. Mathison, 196 Mich. 378.

¶ 649. Where, in an action for negligence, one of defendants is made a witness for plaintiff, and on cross-examination it is sought to suggest an inference that he had entered into an agreement with plaintiff's counsel in order that he might be relieved at the expense of his codefendants, he may, on redirect examination, be asked whether or not he wanted to settle the case for the purpose of repelling such inference.—Rogers v. Fowler, 151 Mich. 485.

¶ 650. An accomplice testified against defendants in a criminal action. Upon cross-examination he admitted that when confronted by defendants in the presence of an officer he had stated that in his charges against defendants he had lied. Held, it was proper to permit him on redirect examination to explain that he said in the presence of defendants he had lied from fear they would do away with him.—People v. Dumas, 161 Mich. 45.

¶ 651. Upon a trial for carnally knowing a young girl, the prosecutrix testified on cross-examination that a written statement signed by her had been prepared by the prosecuting attorney, who told her to sign it. Held, that it was competent upon her redirect examination to show that the statement was in her own language, that no inducements or threats were held out to her in connection with its preparation, and that she was not asked to make any statement that was not in fact true.—People v. Mills, 94 Mich. 630.

¶ 652. A respondent on trial for carnally knowing a young girl was the leader of a religious community whereof prosecutrix and another witness were members, and on cross-examination of the latter it was disclosed that they had made respecting respondent's general conduct certain statements inconsistent with their testimony. Held, that it was proper to show by those witnesses, upon their redirect examination, the circumstances under which the statements were made, that they were made while under respondent's influence, and that they had been taught that submission to his desires involved no wrong. —People v. Mills, 94 Mich. 630.

¶ 653. The grantee in a deed testified in ejectment that the deed was delivered to him the day of its date. Previous to the commencement of the ejectment suit, in his answer to a bill filed to set aside the deed, he had stated that the deed was delivered to him at a date subsequent to the marriage of the grantor to plaintiff, and this statement was introduced in evidence to contradict the witness. On his redirect examination, he testified that he did not know what the word "delivery" meant in law, and was then asked to state what he meant by the use of the word in his answer in the equity suit. Held, that it was proper for him to explain, if he could, what he understood by the term.—Jourdan v. Patterson, 102 Mich. 602.

§ 102. Papers and documents in redirect examination.

Memoranda and documents used for refreshing memory, see ante § 27, ¶ 132.

Minutes of preliminary testimony as bearing on cross-examination had at trial, see post ¶ 659.

General rules as to documentary evidence, see Evidence, IV, VIII; Indictment, VIII, B.

¶ 654. Upon the redirect examination of a witness who has been cross-examined with a view to discredit her testimony as to the dates and items of a money-claim alleged by the other side to be fraudulent, the bank-book and books of account of the witness may be introduced to corroborate her account of the transactions.—Wright v. Towle, 67 Mich. 255.

¶¶ 655, 656. Where the contents of a written statement are called out in detail on cross-examination, the statement may be offered in evidence on redirect examination. —Plowaty v. Sheldon, 167 Mich. 218.

¶ 657. One of the plaintiffs testified on cross-examination that at the time of the purchase he made a memorandum of the contract, in the presence of the defendant, in a book in which he was accustomed to enter such purchases, and at the request of the defendant's counsel he produced the book, and was cross-examined therefrom. Held, that the book was admissible on his redirect examination, not as evidence of the contract, but as bearing upon the weight to be given to the testimony of the witness.—Aulls v. Young, 98 Mich. 231.

¶ 658. The defendant contended that he had paid plaintiffs, and taken a receipt in full. Plaintiffs denied the execution of the receipt, the body of which was in defendant's handwriting. Upon cross-examination, defendant testified that he had frequently drawn receipts for lawyers to sign, but was unable to give an instance where he had done so, other than the one in question. The following day, upon being asked on redirect examination if he could produce any other receipts so drawn and signed, the witness produced several such receipts, and was permitted to testify what attorneys signed them, whereupon his counsel offered the receipts in evidence. Held, that they were properly excluded.—Howell v. Smith, 108 Mich. 350.

Refreshing memory of witness, see ante § 20 et seq.

¶ 660. The propriety of a question is not necessarily to be settled by considering it as a substantive and independent inquiry, but the preceding course of examination and the surrounding circumstances will be taken into account; and where, upon re-examination, an inquiry must have been understood as resting upon a hypothesis pointed at by the cross-examination, it was so treated, although in putting the question the hypothesis was not restated.—McGinnis v. Kempsey, 27 Mich. 363.

§ 105. Leading questions.

See also ante ¶ 53.

¶ 661. Leading questions to bring out explanation or completion of matters opened on cross-examination are objectionable.—Ives v. Tregent, 29 Mich. 390.

¶ 662. Permitting a witness to explain his testimony on being recalled, and the use of leading questions in so doing, was discretionary.—Webb v. Feather's Estate, 119 Mich. 473.

IV. DUTY AND PRIVILEGES OF WITNESSES.

§ 106. Duty, rights, and compulsion of answer.

Right of witness to explain testimony, see ante § 34.

Duty of witness to attend when subpoenaed, see Witnesses, I.

Duty to submit to physical examination before trial, see Discovery and Inspection, III.

Compulsory exhibition of person to jury as evidence, see Evidence §§ 575, 577.

Disability to compel writing of name for comparison, see ante ¶ 590, Evidence ¶ 2865.
Duty to answer on taking of depositions and compulsion of answers thereat, see Depositions §§ 13, 14.
Contemptuous refusal to answer and commitment and punishment for contempt, see Contempt.

¶ 663. As to compelling testimony of witness summoned before circuit judge under How. St., § 7455 et seq., to testify in suit pending in other state.—Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Jennison, 60 Mich. 232.

§ 107. ——Right to inspect paper before answering.

¶ 664. A witness cannot be compelled to answer whether a signature shown to him is his, unless permitted to examine the paper to which it is appended.—North American Fire Ins. Co. v. Throop, 22 Mich. 146.

¶ 665. In an action on promissory notes, a witness who has testified as to the genuineness of the maker's signature may properly refuse to express an opinion as to the genuineness of the signature on other instruments produced by defendant's counsel unless permitted to examine the documents. —Taylor v. Taylor's Estate, 138 Mich. 658.

§ 108. Privileged questions.

Incompetency of person in confidential or professional relation to testify of communications made in the privilege of such relation, see Witnesses, V.
Incompetency of person to testify of matters equally within knowledge of person since deceased or become incompetent, see Witnesses, IV.
Exclusion of affidavits or testimony of jurors to show ground for new trial or to sustain amendment of verdict, see New Trial, III; Verdicts and Findings, V, VI.

¶ 666. A witness has no privilege that excuses him from testifying to relevant facts that show him to be guilty of fraud or dishonesty, if not criminal.—Jennings v. Prentice, 39 Mich. 421.

¶ 667. Attaint upon untrue verdicts being abolished by statute, a juror cannot be questioned concerning his verdict or his motives or reasons for finding the same.—Welch v. Tribune Publishing Co., 83 Mich. 661.

§ 109. Privilege against self-crimination.

Waiver of the privilege, see post § 110.
Degrading but noncriminal self-accusation, see ante § 108.
Calling for incriminating matter as permissible cross-examination, see ante § 42.
Scope and range of cross-examination of accused, see ante §§ 79, 80.

Immunity of witness from prosecution on testimony given by himself, see Witnesses, I.
Right to counsel before grand jury, see Constitutional Law § 200.
Omissions or evasions of matter which might have been privileged as affecting credibility of testimony of statement of accused given in his own behalf, see Witnesses, VI; Indictment, VIII, A.
Admissibility of self-criminating testimony, see Indictment, VIII, B.
Privilege against self-crimination in accounting suit, see also Accounting Suits ¶ 29.
Impropriety of comment in argument on claim of privilege, see Argument of Counsel § 16; Indictment, IX, E.
Constitutional provision against self-crimination, see Court, Art. II, § 16.
Scope and extent of privilege to decline answer, see Jud. Act, Chap. XVII, §§ 59, 60; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12547, 12548.

¶ 668. The shield afforded by the provision in the Michigan and Federal constitutions against compelling a man to incriminate himself is personal to the witness and he cannot evoke these provisions to protect others no matter how close the association. —In re Moser, 138 Mich. 302.

¶ 669. Though an accomplice who consents to be used as a witness by the prosecution must testify fully on cross-examination concerning the transaction under investigation, he cannot be compelled to disclose his criminality in other cases.—Pitcher v. People, 16 Mich. 142.

¶ 670. A witness in a seduction case may decline to answer the question whether he ever had sexual intercourse with the prosecutrix, and give no reason for declining.— People v. Brewer, 27 Mich. 134.

¶ 671. It was held no error to refuse to compel a witness in a seduction case to state whether he had not had sexual intercourse with the prosecutrix before the time of the alleged offense, even if prosecution against him for seduction were then barred by statute of limitations, if he had not been complained of. The judge could not know whether a complaint had been made, and, if prosecution for rape were not barred, an affirmative answer might tend to convict him of either offense.—People v. Brewer, 27 Mich. 134.

¶ 672. Where a witness claims the constitutional immunity from answering a self-incriminating question, he cannot be compelled to answer unless the court is able to say, as a matter of law, that any direct answer to the question cannot tend to incriminate the witness.—In re Allison, 156 Mich. 34.

§ 110. ——Waiver of privilege.
Necessity of claim, see also ante ¶ 571.

¶ 673. A witness may waive the personal privilege of refusing to criminate himself. —People v. Arnold, 40 Mich. 710.

¶ 674. One who turns state's evidence and swears to an offense in which he was a party thereby waives his privilege against criminating himself in that matter, and has no right to set it up as to statements made to his counsel, or to refuse answering himself. All privileges are waived by a state's evidence in regard to the facts in controversy. He must disclose fully.—Alderman v. People, 4 Mich. 414; Hamilton v. People, 29 Mich. 173.

¶ 675. When an accomplice consents to be used by the prosecution as a witness, and is examined in chief, he thereby waives his privilege not to testify to facts criminating himself, and must submit to a full cross-examination.—Foster v. People, 18 Mich. 266.

¶ 677. Respondent was tried for keeping a place for the sale of intoxicating liquors contrary to the Local Option Act. The state demanded of the respondent the production of a revenue receipt, the court remarking that "unless time is asked it will be presumed that the request is refused." Later, respondent testified fully relative to the matter, giving his reasons for procuring such revenue receipt. Held, respondent's right not to be compelled to be a witness against himself was not violated.—People v. Aldorfer, 164 Mich. 676.

¶ 678. Where one who had been subpoenaed before the grand jury gave, in answer to interrogatories, testimony against himself, and was subsequently indicted, his constitutional privilege against self-crimination cannot be said to have been violated, for if he does not object he is presumed to have testified voluntarily.—People v. Lauder, 82 Mich. 109.

EXCHANGE OF PROPERTY.

TREATS of contracts for barter of property for property. A contract of sale at a price stated in money but payable in property to be taken on an agreed valuation is strictly a sale and is treated in Sales; Vendors and Purchasers. Property as a medium for payment of a debt by agreement is treated in Payment, I.

¶ 1. In case where an exchange of land has been agreed upon by parol, and one party's deed has been handed to the other party whose own deed is not ready, and whose title afterwards turns out to be defective, the delivery of the deed is not absolute.—Chick v. Sisson, 95 Mich. 412.

¶ 2. The rule that in case of exchange, title to the property of one of the contracting parties may pass before he acquires title to the property for which it was exchanged, applies in a replevin case where plaintiff left the property he agreed to exchange, at the place agreed upon and notified defendant of his action who thereupon refused to comply with the demand.—Pratt v. Wickham, 133 Mich. 356.

¶ 3. A mortgagee who agrees to discharge a mortgage on land received by the complainant in trade and to accept in lieu thereof a mortgage on land conveyed by the complainant to the mortgagor, cannot be compelled to discharge the mortgage until he has received a tender of a mortgage on the land newly acquired by the mortgagor.—Trombley v. Cannon, 134 Mich. 417.

¶ 4. A deed made in an exchange of properties will not be set aside because one of the grantors did not acknowledge, and it had but one witness where the omissions were subsequently remedied and the deed redelivered.—Pirgandi v. Fay, 128 Mich. 630.

§ 2. Remedies and actions.

Rescission of exchange contracts and effect of delay or failure to restore status quo, see Rescission.

Liquidated damages for breach, see Damages § 188.

¶ 5. Whether upon a rescission of a contract of exchange for failure of title, and after an offer of restitution such as would place the adverse party in statu quo, the only remedy is an action directly on the contract of exchange counting specially on the warranty, or whether an action will lie for goods sold and delivered, quære. If the latter is permitted it is on the ground that, as the express contract is rescinded, the law will imply one to meet the equities of the parties as they are left by the rescission.—Hunt v. Sackett, 31 Mich. 18.

¶ 6. A party who has been induced to exchange a horse for another by means of a false warranty of the horse received may sue in tort for the deception, and set out in his declaration the false warranty as the means whereby he was injured; and the fact that he sets out a warranty in his declaration and avers its breach does not make his declaration one in assumpsit, provided the essentials of a declaration in case appear.—Carter v. Glass, 44 Mich. 154.

§ 3. Evidence, instructions, and issues for jury.

Admission tending to show that trade was not made, see Evidence ¶ 2061.

Admissibility of parol evidence as to real consideration, see Evidence § 161, ¶ 849.

¶ 7. A man agreed for his wife to exchange property, and she afterwards brought trover for it, the question in issue not being the rescission of the bargain but its existence. Held proper to exclude a question to the plaintiff as to whether she knew the relative value of the property traded when the trade was made; and, if important, this question requires the value of each piece of property to be ascertained and made a basis of the inquiry.—Stansell v. Leavitt, 51 Mich. 536.

¶ 8. In ejectment a deed of exchange offered by defendant and apparently prepared for execution by both parties to complete the exchange, and actually executed by one, but not the one from whom defense was seeking to prove title, is competent evidence in connection with other proofs to show that mutual deeds were given.—Goodell v. Labadie, 19 Mich. 88.

¶ 9. Where in an action to recover the value of machinery exchanged for land, the machinery had been in the defendant's possession for three years and witnesses for the plaintiff testify they had seen it in general use on the defendant's farm, and the defendant testifies it had been used only three or four days in sawing wood, the question of whether his acts amounted to an acceptance is for the jury.—Bowen v. Chandler, 172 Mich. 678.

¶ 10. On a proceeding against an estate for the allowance of a claim consisting of a note given in part payment in the exchange of a blacksmith shop for an automobile, where it appeared that claimant had, two weeks before the consummation of such transaction, made an exchange of certain property for a saloon business and signed a contract for the purchase of the land on which the property was situated including the blacksmith shop, evidence held sufficient to show that the exchange of properties was a single transaction.—In re Cutter's Estate, 194 Mich. 34.

¶ 11. In an action for damages for breach of a contract for the exchange of real estate, held that a supplemental agreement providing that in accordance with the contract, to which it referred, a warranty deed and a certified abstract to plaintiff's premises were tendered, was admissible in evidence.—Frederick v. Hillebrand, 199 Mich. 333.

¶ 12. In an action to recover damages for breach of a contract for the exchange of real estate, plaintiff may testify to the actual value of his farm, as he has the right to show that his contract is a valuable one.—Frederick v. Hillebrand, 199 Mich. 333.

¶ 13. In an action for damages for breach of a contract for the exchange of real estate, held that the jury should have been instructed on the question whether the title tendered by plaintiff to defendant was or was not a marketable one.—Frederick v. Hillebrand, 199 Mich. 333.

Seal on chattel mortgage, see Chattel Mortgages § 24.
Seal as presumptive evidence of consideration, see Contracts § 139.
Necessity of sealed authority to agent to execute attachment bond for principal, see Attachment ¶ 116.

Authority to execute instrument under seal, necessity of seal, see Agency § 5.
Statutory provision as to seals on deeds or other instruments, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 11740, 11753, 11754.

¶ 9. A seal is of no practical importance except where the statutes require it.—Barton v. Gray, 57 Mich. 622.

¶ 10. The omission of a seal does not in any manner affect the instrument or change its nature in any respect.—McKinney v. Miller, 19 Mich. 142.

¶ 11. Comp. L. 1857, § 4550, How. St., § 7778, which provides that no bond, etc., shall be deemed invalid for want of a seal, was intended to give the unsealed instrument all the force and effect that a sealed one of the same tenor would have.—McKinney v. Miller, 19 Mich. 142.

¶ 12. Comp. L. 1857, § 4550, How. St., § 7778 operates to give a mortgage not under seal all the force that a sealed one would have.—McKinney v. Miller, 19 Mich. 142.

¶ 13. The failure of the grantor in a deed of standing timber to affix a seal to his signature will not invalidate the instrument. —Mee v. Benedict, 98 Mich. 260.

¶ 14. How. St., § 7778, dispensing with formal seals or scrolls, makes the intention of the parties, together with the purpose the instrument was intended to serve, the test of the existence of a deed or specialty.—Jerome v. Ortman, 66 Mich. 668

¶ 15. If a contract is intended as a deed the absence of a seal does not invalidate it.—Fowler v. Hyland, 48 Mich. 179; Lockwood v. Bassett, 49 Mich. 546.

¶ 16. An agreement involving the sale and purchase of lands used throughout the word "covenant," purported to bind the heirs of the respective parties, and was declared to be the "act of the parties, in witness whereof" they thereunto "set their hands and seals." Held operative as a deed, though bearing no actual seal or scroll.—Jerome v. Ortman, 66 Mich. 668.

¶ 17. The absence of a seal, though, under Comp. L. 1871, § 6194, not avoiding a deed, may be significant in determining whether or not an instrument was meant to be a conveyance.—Spicer v. Bonker, 45 Mich. 630.

§ 4. Affixing revenue stamps.

Necessity of affixing revenue stamps to entitle to action on instrument, see Internal Revenue.
Sufficiency of instrument as a stamped instrument where stamped after execution by revenue collector, see Internal Revenue.
Admissibility of instruments lacking internal revenue stamps, see Evidence § 494.

¶ 18. The omission of a revenue stamp from a deed will not make it invalid in the absence of proof of fraudulent intent.—Taft v. Simpson, 125 Mich. 206.

¶ 19. The want of a stamp required by the revenue laws of the United States does not utterly invalidate a contract; and the contract may be enforced in the state courts. Clemens v. Conrad, 19 Mich. 170; Sammons v. Halloway, 21 Mich. 162; Burson v. Huntington, 21 Mich. 415.

¶ 20. A stamp is not essential to the validity of a promissory note, and the want of a stamp does not put an indorsee upon inquiry.—Burson v. Huntington, 21 Mich. 415.

¶ 21. Where an assignment of a policy of insurance is properly stamped as such, the fact that it purports to authorize the assignee to collect the insurance money in case of loss does not make it necessary to stamp it as a power of attorney also.—Peoria Marine & Fire Ins. Co. v. Perkins, 16 Mich. 380.

¶ 22. A person being the holder of a draft drawn in August, 1863, made a gift of it causa mortis to her mother; and after her death her administrator, treating the draft as void for want of a sufficient stamp, brought suit against the drawer upon the original consideration. The drawer, defending in the interest of the donee, produced the draft on the trial and placed the requisite stamp upon it, in pursuance of the act of congress of June 30, 1864. It was held that the draft was thereby made valid from its inception, rendering the gift valid, and defeating the plaintiff's right of recovery.—Gibson v. Hibbard, 13 Mich. 214.

§ 5. Testimonium clause and date.

Presumption as to date of delivery from recordation, see post § 48.
Date of acknowledgment as evidence of date of execution, see also post ¶ 79.
Sufficiency of evidence as to date of execution, see post ¶ 61.
Presumption as to date of execution, see post ¶ 51.

¶ 23. A chattel mortgage filed as soon as delivered is not invalid because dated back. —Johnson v. Stellwagen, 67 Mich. 10.

§ 6. Attestation by witnesses.

Instruments with two or more executing parties, see post § 7.
Number of witnesses requisite, see post § 8.
Presumption as to validity of attestation where subscribing witnesses were not present at acknowledgment, see post ¶ 53.
Omission of attestation as evidence, see post ¶ 239.

Number of witnesses required for acknowledgment, see Acknowledgments § 3.
Effect between parties of unwitnessed deed, see also Acknowledgments ¶ 76.
Presumption that attesting witnesses attested knowingly, see also Evidence § 46, ¶ 243.
Proper witnesses to prove execution of lost instrument as foundation for secondary, see Evidence § 153.
Necessity of proof by attesting witnesses to make document admissible in evidence, see Evidence § 519.
Witnesses required to deeds, see Comp. L. 1915, § 11694.

¶ 24. Under the act of 1820 two witnesses were essential to the validity of a deed executed in 1823.—Crane v. Reeder, 21 Mich. 24.

¶ 25. The statutory requisites of a deed are that it be executed in the presence of two witnesses, who subscribe their names as such (§ 8962, Comp. Laws 1897, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 10824), though unwitnessed deeds are good between the parties.—Agar v. Streeter, 183 Mich. 600.

¶ 26. Comp. L. 1897, § 9035 providing that contracts for the sale of land must be executed before two witnesses does not render an optional contract for the purchase of land void in view of section 9051 providing that conveyances made in good faith and on a valuable consideration shall not be invalidated by reason of any defect in the statutory requisites in the sealing, signing, or attestation.—Mier v. Hadden, 148 Mich. 488.

¶ 27. A deed without witnesses is good in equity as a contract to convey; so held with reference to a deed executed in 1814.—Godfroy v. Disbrow, W. 260.

¶ 28. The proposition that a deed not witnessed is good between the parties is an established rule of property in this state. Comp. L. 1897, § 8962, prescribing the mode and formalities for their execution, does not make witnessing essential.—Fulton v. Priddy, 123 Mich. 298.

¶ 29. A contract for the sale of timber, executed through an attorney by a nonresident trustee but not witnessed, is not void but conveys an equity under How. St. § 5727 which provides that instruments defective as to attestation shall not be void but may be enforced in equity.—Chicago Lumbering Co. v. Powell, 120 Mich. 51.

¶ 30. A mortgage without witnesses is good as between the parties.—Baker v. Clark, 52 Mich. 22.

¶ 31. The mark of an attesting witness is to be recognized as his written signature, except when such construction is inconsistent with the manifest intent of the legislature (Comp. L. 1871, § 2, subd. 17).—Brown v. McCormick, 28 Mich. 215.

§ 7. ——Instruments with two or more executing parties.

¶ 32. Conveyance by two grantors held sufficiently witnessed as to both, where signatures of witnesses as to one grantor preceded and as to the other followed a memorandum of interlineation.—Culbertson v. H. Witbeck Co., 127 U. S. 326, 32 L. ed. 134, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1136.

¶ 33. A defective execution or attestation as to one grantor cannot be aided by a perfect execution and attestation as to other parties.—Hall v. Redson, 10 Mich. 21; Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank of Michigan v. Bronson, 14 Mich. 361.

§ 8. ——Number of witnesses requisite.

Number of witnesses to deed necessary to entitle to registry, see Notice and Record of Title, II, A.

¶ 34. A deed with only one witness is effective to convey property described therein.—Carpenter v. Carpenter, 126 Mich. 217.

¶ 35. Under the amendatory act of April 20, 1839, p. 219, § 19, the act of April 1, 1840, p. 166, and the later statutes, a deed with but one witness, or without witnesses, passed and passes not merely the equitable but the legal title as between the parties.—Dougherty v. Randall, 3 Mich. 581; King v. Carpenter, 37 Mich. 363; Price v. Haynes, 37 Mich. 487.

§ 9. Condition and readiness of the writing for execution.

Incomplete or partial execution, see post § 12.
Insertion of name of grantee after signature, see also post ¶¶ 47, 49.
Filling spaces left blank as alteration, see Alteration of Instruments.
Effect of deeds in blank or partly in blank, see Deeds § 5.

¶ 36. A mortgage executed in blank as to conditions of payment was filled up, after delivery in trust, by the mortgagee. A foreclosure bill was denied because authority from the mortgagor to insert the terms was not made out. It seems that parol authority would not be sufficient.—Stebbins v. Watson, 71 Mich. 467.

¶ 37. A blank deed executed in another state without stating the name of the grantee, the description of the property, or the consideration, but filled out in these particulars in Michigan by some one not shown to have authority from the grantor, conveys no title to any one who has notice of the facts.—Lindsley v. Lamb, 34 Mich. 509.

¶ 38. Where a deed is executed and acknowledged without naming a grantee, but the name is inserted before delivery, and the deed is delivered by the grantor himself or by his direction, the deed as completed must be regarded as adopted by him.—Lockwood v. Bassett, 49 Mich. 546.

§ 10. Alterations in writing pending execution.

Filling in blank instrument after signature, see ante ¶¶ 36-38.
Altered or erased signature, see ante ¶ 1.
Alteration of instruments after execution, see Alteration of Instruments.
Consent to alteration after execution, see Alteration of Instruments § 2.
Presumption that alteration was made before execution, see Alteration of Instruments § 12.
Visible alteration or interlineation as affecting admissibility of writing in evidence, see Evidence § 495.
Sufficiency of execution of deed not re-executed witnessed or acknowledged after erasure by consent of grantor of recall provision, see Escrows ¶ 8.

¶ 39. Conveyance by two grantors held sufficiently witnessed as to both, where signatures of witnesses as to one grantor preceded, and as to the other followed, a memorandum of interlineation.—Culbertson v. H. Witbeck Co., 127 U. S. 326, 32 L. ed. 134, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1136.

§ 11. Signing changed or variant instrument.

Parol agreements to vary, release or modify written or sealed agreements, see Contracts § 264.

¶ 40. Where the parties had entered into a parol contract for the sale of land which was afterwards reduced to writing by the vendor with some changes and sent to the purchaser who made additional changes before signing there was no meeting of minds and no contract and the vendor is not bound by the writing as changed unless he has ratified it.—Bewick v. Hanika, 142 Mich. 206.

¶ 41. Where a vendor had agreed to sell a lot and loan money to build thereon under a contract that had been changed by the purchaser after he had signed, the vendor does not by the mere signing of the building contract at the request of the contractor ratify the contract as changed, nor is he bound by the terms of the contract that were changed by the purchaser after he had signed.—Bewick v. Hanika, 142 Mich. 206.

§ 12. Incomplete or partial execution.

Consensus of minds in contracts, see Contracts, III.
Binding force of building restrictions although not signed by all the parties, see Buildings § 20, 21.
Sufficiency of appeal bond signed by one for all appellants, see Appeal § 82, ¶ 371.
Validity of mortgage where execution induced by fraud, see Mortgages, III.
Inclusion of claim in incompletely executed trust mortgage as basis of estoppel to enforce by levy, see also Estoppel ¶ 117.

¶ 42. It seems that where parties intend to make a contract in duplicate, so that each shall have in his possession the evidence of his rights and of the obligations of the other, the contract is not complete and duly executed until duplicates at least substantially alike are executed and delivered.—Crane v. Partland, 9 Mich. 493.

¶ 43. A contract of subscription for a share of stock in a telephone company and for the renting of a telephone at a stipulated rental, when signed only by the subscriber and not by the corporation, lacks mutuality, the two portions being dependent and the contract an entirety.—Co-operative Tel. Co. v. Katus, 140 Mich. 367.

§ 13. Spurious writings and questioned execution.

Knowledge, consciousness or volition of party, see post § 14.
Alterations and forgery of negotiable instruments, see Negotiable Instruments, XII.
Forgery or suppression as crime, see Crimes, II.
Fraud implied from nature of execution, see Fraud, II.
Evidence of fraud in procuring signature, see Fraud, III.
Validity in hands of bona fide purchaser of instrument secured through fraud or forgery, see Notice and Record of Title, I.
Crimes of forging, uttering or falsely procuring signature, see Crimes §§ 83-85, 87.
Necessity of equities to sustain rescission suit to cancel imperfectly executed instrument, see Rescission, I.
Criminal forgeries, see Crimes, II; Indictment.

§ 14. ——Knowledge, consciousness or volition of party.

Signing without reading as ratification of clauses inserted without authority of agent, see Agency ¶ 347.
Validity of bill of lading signed without reading, see also Bills of Lading ¶ 2.
Execution of instruments by incompetent, see Incompetents.
Execution of instruments by insane persons, see Insane Persons, IV.
Validity of assent to instrument of contract without reading, see Contracts § 38; Mistake; Fraud.
Binding force of bill of lading signed hastily, see also Carriers ¶ 45.
Attempted ratification of two party instrument without concurrence of other party, see Agency ¶¶ 340, 341.

¶ 44. An attorney induced his client to sign a deed of real estate under the impression that it was a duplicate of a lease that had been read to him. Held a forgery, and void.—McGinn v. Tobey, 62 Mich. 252.

¶ 45. A deed executed by a person who was apparently unconscious, who had been very sick and was confined to his bed, whose eyes were closed, who did not speak, and the deed was not read to him, but a pen put in his hand and the notary talked to him and remarked "We will say he says 'Yes'" and made a cross on the deed cannot be held to be the grantor's conscious, intelligent and free act.—Eggert v. Eggert, 144 Mich. 182.

¶ 46. Where complainants in an action to cancel and restrain the payment of certain promissory notes alleged to have been procured by fraud showed that they had been induced to sign written instruments which were a part of one contract, or were so attached as to appear so, but were afterward separated so as to appear valid promissory notes, they were entitled to show that the procurers of their signatures resorted to representations and devices to prevent the papers being read before signing, and while they were signing arranged to cover the written and printed parts so that the signers could not obtain information therefrom as to what they were signing.—Hulett v. Marine Sav. Bank, 143 Mich. 219.

Estoppel to deny delivery or acceptance, see post § 43.
Estoppel of draftsman or witness to claim own title in hostility to witnessed instrument, see Estoppel § 34.
Estoppel of corporation to deny due execution, see also Corporations ¶ 363.

¶ 47. Where a deed made by husband and wife as grantors, but drawn without naming a grantee, is placed by the husband in the hands of the wife to be used exclusively for her own advantage and with the purpose of putting the legal title at her disposal as equitable owner, and she inserts the name of a grantee and delivers it in her own interest and afterwards receives a conveyance of her husband's interest, she will be concluded from denying the validity of the deed as if she had held both legal and equitable estates when the deed was delivered.—Lockwood v. Bassett, 49 Mich. 546.

¶ 48. A woman who signs an instrument at the request of her husband without inquiry as to its nature, as she was in the habit of doing when he requested her to sign papers, and thus enabled her husband to obtain money from one who relied upon the paper being what it purported to be. She is estopped from denying the validity of its execution and delivery.—Ehle v. Looker, 182 Mich. 248.

¶ 49. Where a deed from which the grantee's name is omitted is delivered, and the blank is filled after delivery, the grantor, by claiming the benefit of accompanying and related contracts, makes the deed his own and estops himself from objecting that it is invalid.—Lockwood v. Bassett, 49 Mich. 546.

¶ 50. Under evidence introduced tending to show nonexecution the defendant was not estopped from denying the execution of the note because in a certain writing signed by him he wrote "I would like to have you hold the note until fall" when he in the same writing called plaintiff's attention to the failure on its part to perform the contract of which the alleged note was physically a part.—Acme Food Co. v. Tousey, 148 Mich. 697.

§ 16. Presumptions and evidence.

Sufficiency of evidence, see post § 17.
Evidence of genuineness of instrument, see post § 18.
Evidence and presumptions of delivery and acceptance, see post §§ 45-49.
Presumptions arising from acknowledgment, see also post § 19, ¶¶ 75-78.
Admissibility of parol evidence to show what the real and true terms of the writing were, see Evidence § 158.
Admissibility of parol evidence of execution and date, see Evidence § 160.
Preparatory drafts and unsigned instruments as admissive declarations, see Evidence § 397.
Admissibility of parol evidence to show that execution was on condition not embodied in writing, see Evidence § 157.
Parol evidence to disprove existence or legal execution of instrument, see Evidence §§ 156-158.
Opinion or conclusion evidence that one had or had not opportunity to sign, see Evidence ¶ 1258.
Best and secondary rule as to proof of execution, see Evidence, § 119.
Parol evidence to explain variance in name from corporation as named in printed form from corporate name of successor as signed, see Evidence ¶ 1096.
Burden of proof of execution of lost instrument as foundation for secondary evidence of contents, see also Evidence § 148, ¶ 726.
Proof of execution and existence of deed or contract as basis of secondary proof on ground of loss of original, see Evidence §§ 148, 150.
Statement that signing is conditional as res gestæ, see Evidence § 457.
Presumption that person knows nature of instrument executed, see Mistake.
Proper cross-examination as to existence and execution of contracts and transfers, see Examination of Witnesses §§ 49, 50.
Burden of proof of execution of appeal bond by surety, see also Appeal § 574.
Evidence of deception in securing execution of instrument, see Fraud, III.
Form of affidavit under circuit court rules for denial of execution of instrument sued on, see Pleading, IX, A.

¶ 51. A contract will be presumed to have been executed in its entirety on the date it bears.—Weis v. Stein, 187 Mich. 369.

¶ 52. The fact that a mortgage for purchase money, given at the time the conveyance was made, was executed with all proper formality, raises the presumption that the deed (which was unrecorded and lost) was likewise properly executed.—Godfroy v. Disbrow, W. 260.

¶ 53. Proof that neither of two subscribing witnesses was present at the acknowledgment of a deed does not warrant an inference against the validity of their attestation of it, in the absence of any showing that it had not been signed previously.—Watson v. Peters, 26 Mich. 508.

¶ 54. Weight must always be given to the fact of the execution of a contract; and the presumption which exists in favor of written instruments, not unconscionable in their character, but mutually advantageous in their provisions, and executed by parties competent to contract, and between whom no fiduciary relations exist, and in the presence of witnesses who affix their signatures as such, cannot be overcome except upon testimony from which an inference of duress, deception, misrepresentation, substitution, or artifice in clearly deducible.—Sullivan v. Ross's Estate, 98 Mich. 570.

¶ 55. Where two signatures, one admittedly genuine, were precisely alike, and there were indications that one had been copied from the other by the aid of pencil-tracing and outlining, a claim of forgery was sustained largely because the two were too much alike both to be genuine.—Day v. Cole, 65 Mich. 129.

¶ 56. A precise similarity of inks used in executing two different sets of instruments dated differently, but executed by the same persons, was treated, in connection with other facts, as tending to indicate that they were executed at the same time.—Shelden v. Warner, 45 Mich. 638.

¶ 57. Whenever the execution of an instrument is denied by defendant's affidavit under Circuit Court Rule 79 (first rules), the burden of proof is upon plaintiff to show the execution of the instrument, which includes its delivery.—Wilbur v. Stoepel, 82 Mich. 344.

§ 17. ——Sufficiency of evidence.

Sufficiency of evidence of delivery, see post §§ 51-55.

Sufficiency of evidence of genuineness of receipt or other noncontractual writing, see also Evidence § 589.

Mode of execution necessary to make instrument self-proving in evidence, see Evidence §§ 513, 514.

Sufficiency of evidence of incompetency to execute instrument, see Incompetents.

Sufficiency of evidence of insanity at time of execution, see Insane Persons, I.

¶ 58. In an action to foreclose a land contract, evidence held to establish that defendant had previously deeded the entire tract of land mentioned in the contract of purchase to plaintiff, and he executed the contract of purchase.—Balen v. Burgeson, 187 Mich. 621.

¶ 59. On a bill to set aside a deed of real estate on the ground that complainant never signed the deed to bar her dower although signature appears from the fact that she acknowledged the deed as shown by the certificate of a public officer, evidence held to sustain a decree dismissing the bill.—Hall v. Hall, 190 Mich. 100.

¶ 60. Where the genuineness of a paper is in question testimony that so far as witness noticed when he saw it, three years after its apparent date, it was not dirty, and did not seem to be very ancient, is not of sufficient weight to establish its fraudulent character in the face of positive testimony that it is genuine.—Woodhull v. Whittle, 63 Mich. 575.

¶ 61. In an action by one merchant to enjoin another from engaging in the same business in the same locality, evidence held insufficient to show that the contract upon which the rights of the parties were based was not executed in its entirety upon the date it bore.—Weis v. Stein, 187 Mich. 369.

¶ 62. A deed executed by a man on his death bed, where the evidence shows that he was not unduly influenced and that he was still intelligent, though so feeble that he signed by a mark, and where it appeared that he had, before he was fatally injured, explained his intention to leave the land to the grantee in the deed, was held to be the intelligent act of the grantor, and therefore valid.—Blackmore v. Thompson, 149 Mich. 693.

¶ 63. The defense to a foreclosure was that the mortgage was forged. But it appeared that the persons actually and nominally interested as mortgagees were both dead; that the mortgagor and his wife were the only persons living who knew the real facts: that the witnesses to the acknowledgment, one of whom was the acknowledging officer, were reputable and upright men, and that their signatures were genuine; that the signature purporting to be that of the mortgagor and alleged to be forged resembled that attached by him to his answer in the foreclosure suit, and both were in an easy handwriting unlikely to be feigned; that the defendant had tried to misrepresent the spelling of his name, and his explanation of the circumstances of an alleged payment for the mortgaged land were unsatisfactory and were not corroborated, and his manner as a witness was evasive. Held, that in view of the facts and circumstances the defense was not sufficiently made out.—Cameron v. Culkins, 44 Mich. 531.

Acknowledgment as evidence of genuineness, see post § 19.

Other forged note as evidence on genuineness, see also Evidence ¶ 553.

Necessity and sufficiency of proof of execution and authenticity of instruments to be admissible in evidence as documents, see Evidence § 515 et seq.

Res gestæ of conversation about note as bearing on genuineness, see Evidence ¶ 2373.

Admission on trial that writing bears genuine signature as limited admission not conceding execution of the writing, see Trial, V, A.

¶ 64. Where the defense to a bill to quiet title is based upon the claim that the deed on which the title was founded is a forgery, the proof thereof must be clear and convincing.—Miller v. Davis, 146 Mich. 719.

¶ 65. Evidence consisting of the testimony of the acknowledging notary and one who saw the deed with other facts, held not sufficient to make out that it was a forgery where it appeared that there was some kind of an instrument executed by his wife to complainant husband, and he testified that it was made without consideration to vest title in him, and there were facts corroborating him.—Miller v. Davis, 146 Mich. 719.

¶ 66. A mortgage was held to have been forged, and foreclosure was denied, where it was shown that the mortgagee was a grasping money lender, unlikely to run risks, that the mortgage was for a large sum on property of little value, contained no release of dower, and had been assigned without any apparent consideration to a nonresident brother of the mortgagee, in whose name the foreclosure was brought.—Matteson v. Morris, 40 Mich. 52.

¶ 67. Proof of the execution of a note is sufficiently shown to permit of its being received in evidence where the payee produces the same in court, and calls a witness who testifies that he has frequently seen the alleged maker write her name, and that, in his opinion, the signature to the note is genuine. —Union Banking Co. v. Martin's Estate, 113 Mich. 521.

¶ 68. The testimony of an aged man that he did not sign certain papers, which purport to have been executed by him ten years before as administrator, is insufficient to show a forgery, where it is so weakened on cross-examination that it amounts to little more than a statement that he has no recollection of signing them, and that, if he did sign them, it must have been when his hands were cold, and it further appears that he had little to do with the business of administrator, and that advanced age has rendered his memory very poor; especially if the papers are such as he would undoubtedly have signed upon request, thus doing away with any motive for a forgery.—Stevenson v. Kurtz, 116 Mich. 95.

¶ 69. A finding that mortgagor's wife never signed it is sustained on evidence that she had refused and that the notary volunteered to go to her house and persuade her to sign, and where though it bears her purported signature by mark witnessed by the notary and another, she denies signing but one instrument, to wit, a deed concededly signed by her at the same time and witnessed by her mother, the mother not having been asked to witness the mortgage, and where on the same day she told her husband that she had not signed the mortgage, in all which she is corroborated, though the notary disputed her testimony not claiming, however, that he explained the nature of the mortgage to her in spite of her known opposition to signing it.—Ann Arbor Sav. Bank v. Ellison, 113 Mich. 557.

¶ 70. On an issue of the genuineness of an alleged fraudulent deed, the fact that such instrument, being a long form warranty deed on paper folding like legal cap, upon examination was found to have been severed at the line of such folding, and the two sheets attached by paper and mucilage, and that the edges of the half sheet were smooth and had no appearance of having been worn like the other folded edges, and the further fact that one of the halves was wider than the other, and the marginal red lines failed to correspond with each other, was conclusive evidence of forgery.—Crawford v. Hoeft, 58 Mich. 1.

¶ 71. Testimony by the trustee that after a mortgage was made out and placed in trust with the member of the mortgagee corporation to secure indebtedness, the mortgagor told the trustee to have the notary who acknowledged it fill blanks left for the conditions of payment, and that it was to cover past as well as future debts, that the wife of mortgagor was not consulted and not present, and testimony of the notary that he filled them in as directed by the trustee, the mortgagors swearing that no authority was given and that the property was a homestead and the mortgage was signed on the condition that it was to secure personal advances only and in case certain expected profits did not equal them, is not sufficient to show that there was any subsequent authority to fill the blanks.—Stebbins v. Watson, 71 Mich. 467.

¶ 72. In an action against an estate on promissory notes alleged to have been made by the deceased and lost by the payee claimant, testimony by a witness of having seen the notes and of an admission of execution by the testator is sufficient to show execution. —Taylor v. Taylor's Estate, 138 Mich. 658.

that she never had executed the deed in question, testimony by a witness that the defendant had told her she had made a deed is not sufficient to establish the execution of the deed, but at most its effect would be to discredit the defendant's testimony as to the nature of the instrument which she did actually execute (having testified that it was a lease).—Hutchins v. Murphy, 146 Mich. 621.

¶ 74. Testimony that an inventory was attached by a pin to a bond at the time of its execution by the principal, that the principal took the bond away with him in that condition for the purpose of obtaining the signature of the surety, and that, when he returned it with the surety's signature, the inventory was still attached to the bond, when taken in connection with the fact that the bond contained a reference to the inventory as "hereto attached," is sufficient to justify a finding that the inventory was attached to the bond when the surety signed it, even though several witnesses testify positively that it was not attached at that time.—Wheeler v. Meyer, 108 Mich. 297.

Signature and seal to certificate of acknowledgment, see Acknowledgments §§ 15, 16.
Requisites and sufficiency of acknowledgments and certificates thereof, see generally Acknowledgments.
Presumptive validity and execution when acknowledged, see Acknowledgments § 20.

¶ 75. An officer taking an acknowledgment is bound to inform himself of the identity of the parties, and a proper certificate of acknowledgment is presumptive evidence of the genuineness of the mortgage to which it is attached.—Cameron v. Culkins, 44 Mich. 531.

¶ 76. While a certificate of the acknowledgment of a mortgage may be overthrown by proof of fraud or duress, yet the bare oath of the mortgagor, opposed by the officer's testimony, cannot overthrow the presumption of validity.—Johnson v. Van Velsor, 43 Mich. 208.

¶ 77. A certificate in proper form of an acknowledgment of a mortgage raises a presumption of the execution of the paper as stated therein that cannot be overcome except by clear and satisfactory evidence.—Shelden v. Freeman, 116 Mich. 646.

¶ 78. On a bill to quiet title to an undivided interest in land and on a cross-bill praying that title be quieted against complainant, evidence consisting in part of grantor's testimony that he did not recollect signing, held insufficient to overcome the presumption that a warranty deed was executed and acknowledged as it purported to be.—Donahue v. Vosper, 189 Mich. 78; affirmed in 243 U. S. 59, 61 L. ed. 592, 37 Sup. Ct. Rep. 350.

¶ 79. The date of the acknowledgment of a deed is not such satisfactory evidence of the time of signing as to affect, in itself, the validity of a witness' attestation.—Watson v. Peters, 26 Mich. 508.

¶ 80. A homestead mortgage executed at the joint solicitation and in the presence of the husband and one of the mortgagees, and acknowledged in their presence—if at all—when the wife could not understand English, and when the officer made merely a formal inquiry of her in that language, he speaking no other, was held invalid.—Fisher v. Meister, 24 Mich. 447.

¶ 81. Even where a mortgage upon the husband's homestead was given in 1871, chancery refused to set it aside for the mere reason that it was acknowledged by the wife in her husband's presence; there being no showing of compulsion or influence, the consideration being sufficient, and the wife having taken no steps to repudiate the security.—Norton v. Nichols, 35 Mich. 148.

¶ 82. A wife sought to avoid a homestead mortgage on the ground that she never knowingly signed or acknowledged it. But the justice who took the acknowledgment testified distinctly to the facts, and there was no doubt of the mortgagee's good faith or of the money's having been borrowed and used to build a house on the premises; and the mortgage was sustained.—Hourtienne v. Schnoor, 33 Mich. 274.

§ 20. Questions for jury and instructions.

Jury questions and instructions as to delivery, see post § 56.
Existence of contract as court or jury question, see also Contracts § 333.

¶ 83. A surety in a bond testified that he signed it upon condition that a person specified (whose name was actually in the bond, but was erased and a new name inserted in place thereof), should also sign. Held, that his understanding and intention, under the circumstances, were for the jury, as they had the right to disbelieve the positive testimony given by him and find the contrary from the circumstances of the case outside of his testimony.—Brand v. Johnrowe, 60 Mich. 210.

¶ 84. Submitting to the jury a note admittedly genuine but claimed to have been altered, does not pass on the jury's province of determining the genuineness when that is disputed.—Hunter v. Parsons, 22 Mich. 96; Willett v. Shepard, 34 Mich. 106.

¶ 85. There was sufficient testimony to go to the jury on the issue of the genuineness of bills of sale; where one was acknowledged, but the notary testified that it was not signed and had no consideration written in when he took the acknowledgment and the party to be bound denied signing it, the other and accompanying bill having been admittedly regular.—Metropolitan Lumber Co. v. McColeman, 140 Mich. 333.

¶ 86. The deceased, an aged illiterate woman, gave to the claimant, her son, a paper signed by "her mark" on which she stated that she had received $450 from him in 1889, to pay off a mortgage, and $50 in 1904, to pay off taxes on her property, and requested that these sums be repaid to him out of her estate after her death. Oral evidence also was put in to support these claims. Held, in the absence of evidence rebutting this proof or showing a lack of an intelligent execution of the paper by deceased, a verdict should be directed for the claimant on the issue of competency to execute it.—McGregor v. McGregor's Estate, 156 Mich. 487.

¶ 87. In an action on a forged promissory note given as collateral security to a title note given for the purchase price of a horse, which died before suit was brought and before defendants denied the forgery, held that the evidence was sufficient to warrant the submission of the question of estoppel to the jury.—Kole v. Lampen, 191 Mich. 156.

¶ 88. Where the genuineness of a guardian's deed is in question, and the guardian has testified that she did not execute it nor sign the petition for her appointment as guardian, the trial court may properly instruct the jury to take into consideration the fact that she denied her petition and that the record showed she had signed it.—Lynch v. Kirby, 36 Mich. 238.

¶ 89. Where a witness having no interest in the matter has testified to the execution of a deed, and there are no facts or circumstances tending to show any purpose or intention to withhold or destroy the paper and no suspicious circumstances, the court is justified in instructing the jury that the testimony is undisputed and that it established the execution of the paper.—Thomson v. Flint & P. M. R. Co., 131 Mich. 95.

¶ 90. In an action on a promissory note, the defense being that it was obtained by trickery, where the signature was affixed by defendant's wife for him because he could neither read nor write, it is error to give instructions which exclude the defense that the wife was deceived into signing the note supposing it to be some other document, and leaving the impression that if she had authority to sign any paper for him on that occasion, it was immaterial whether the authority included the note in question or not.—Beard v. Hill, 131 Mich. 246.

II. MANNER OF EXECUTION BY AGENTS, TRUSTEES, CORPORATIONS, ETC.

§ 21. Name and form of signature in general.

Addition of descriptive term to signature, see post § 22.
Under power of attorney, see post § 23.
Adoption or ratification of execution by another, see post § 24.
Instruments by corporations, see post § 25.
Instruments by trustees, see post § 26.
Signature as requisite of execution in general, see ante § 2
Individual or official nature of bank officer's act or contract, see also Banking § 60.
Effect of adding individual seals to corporate instrument, see also Corporations § 101.
Sufficiency of rubber stamp signature for corporation by agent, see Corporations ¶ 500.
Construction of agreement as joint or several, see Contracts § 169.
Necessity and sufficiency of seal of corporation, see Corporations §§ 19, 101.
Liability of agent where contract is not made binding on principal, see Agency, III.
Writing or seal to ratify agent's contract of specialty, see Agency § 57.
Deeds and other instruments of transfer by representatives, see Estates of Decedents § 241.
Parol evidence as to character or capacity of signer, see also Evidence § 182.

¶ 91. As a general rule, to bind his principal by a contract in writing, the agent must sign his principal's name to the instrument.—Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank of Michigan v. Troy City Bank, 1 D. 457.

¶ 92. Where it distinctly appears in the body of an unsealed agreement, signed by an agent in his own name, without the addition of the name of his principal, that the principal is the contracting party, the agreement will be construed to be that of the principal and not of the agent.—City of Detroit v. Jackson, 1 D. 106.

¶ 93. Where bills are drawn, accepted or indorsed by an agent, if, from the nature of the contract and the terms of the agreement, it clearly appears that the party by whom such bill is drawn, accepted or indorsed is an agent, and that he intended to bind his principal, he will be deemed to have contracted for such principal; but the terms of the instrument must be explicit to repel the inference that the agent intended to bind himself.—Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank of Michigan v. Troy City Bank, 1 D. 457.

¶ 94. Where one without written authority from the owner drew contracts for the sale of a parcel of land, both of which were signed by the purchaser, and one of them delivered to him, but they differed in the following particulars: that in the one delivered to the purchaser both the agent and the owner were named as parties of the first part, but it was signed by the agent alone in his own name; and in the one retained by the agent the owner alone was named as the party of the first part, and his name was signed thereto by the agent, it was held that the contract was not complete so that the purchaser could be sued on the one retained by the agent for the purchase money.—Crane v. Portland, 9 Mich. 493.

¶ 95. It seems that the execution of a submission to arbitration by an agent, not under seal, need not be in the name of the principal.—City of Detroit v. Jackson, 1 D. 106.

§ 22. ——Addition of descriptive term to signature.

Addition of descriptive term to signature of corporation, see post ¶¶ 103-105.

Addition of descriptive term to signature of trustee, see post ¶¶ 106, 107.

Addition of fraction to signatures as indication of signer's liability on bond, see Bonds ¶ 11.

¶ 96. Where, in signing a note, the maker has added "Agt." to his name, it may, as between the original parties, be shown by parol that he executed the paper in a representative capacity, and that the payee so understood.—Keidan v. Winegar, 95 Mich. 430.

¶ 97. The mortgagors of property deeded it, and afterwards gave a new mortgage in place of the former one for the purpose of correcting an error of description. The consent of the grantees to the execution of the later mortgage was attached thereto in writing, but was signed by only one, the name of the other being added "by his attorney in fact." Held, that the giving of consent by the one who signed was equivalent to uniting in the mortgage, and bound his interest and that of any one claiming under him to the extent to which his interest was incumbered by this consent; but that the other's interest was not bound.—Pool v. Horton, 45 Mich. 404.

¶ 98. To make a valid deed under a power of attorney it is essential that there should be an intention on the part of the attorney to execute the deed under and by virtue of the power; or at least that the contrary intention should not appear.—Davenport v. Parsons, 10 Mich. 42.

¶ 99. Where a deed purported to be made by attorneys under power from the two grantors, and there was some testimony that a joint power had existed, but it was not given in evidence, and only a separate power from one of the grantors was proved, it was held that the execution of this deed could not be referred to the separate power, and the deed sustained as the deed of the grantor who had executed that.—Davenport v. Parsons, 10 Mich. 42.

§ 24. Adoption or ratification of execution by another.

See also ante ¶ 38.

Instructions as to authority of wife to execute instrument for illiterate husband, see also ante ¶ 90.

Agency of husband for wife in execution of instruments, see Husband and Wife, IV, B.

¶ 100. The acceptance by the land owner of the duplicate of a land contract which had been retained by the agent, and the signing of his own name thereto, without the assent or knowledge of the purchaser, will not make it binding upon the latter having the other duplicate which was not legally signed for the owner. To make an act amount to a ratification in such a case, the two instruments must be capable of ratification by the same act.—Crane v. Portland, 9 Mich. 493.

¶ 101. The ratification of a contract by an indorsement of approval upon it does not bind the party so approving it or give the adverse party rights so long as it is not delivered or the indorsement is not made on the latter's duplicate. And the ratification, until then, may be withdrawn or the indorsement erased.—Dickinson v. Wright, 56 Mich. 42.

¶ 102. An officer's title added to his signature does not necessarily make the paper the contract of his corporation, but may be treated as mere descriptio personæ.—Knickerbocker v. Wilcox, 83 Mich. 200.

¶ 103. The addition "Vestryman, Grace church," to each of the names attached to a promissory note, does not make it anything but the note of the individuals signing it, if it does not purport to bind the corporation.—Tilden v. Barnard, 43 Mich. 376.

¶ 104. A bill of exchange directed to "J. A. W., cashier Farmers' and Mechanics' Bank of Michigan," and accepted across the face thereof, "Accepted, J. A. W., cashier," is drawn upon and accepted by the bank, and not by W. in his individual capacity.—Farmers' and Mechanics' Bank of Michigan v. Troy City Bank, 1 D. 457.

¶ 106. A contract for the construction of parochial buildings, describing the parties of the first part as the trustees and building committee of the church, and as acting by authority of the bishop of the diocese, whereby they agree, for themselves, their heirs, executors, and administrators, to pay the contract price, signed by them as individuals, except that one adds to his signature the title "president" and another the title "secretary," is binding upon them personally.—Landyskowski v. Lark, 108 Mich. 500.

¶ 107. Where one of two joint trustees of property under the name of the "Henry Howard Estate," who is at the same time executor of the will of the testator who owned the property, entered into a contract with a broker for the sale on commission of certain property of the estate he is personally liable on the contract although he may have signed the correspondence relating to the contract, "Henry Howard Estate, by A. D. Bennett, Trustee," and this liability cannot be avoided by proving that the "Henry Howard Estate" was a partnership of which he was the agent.—McGovern v. Bennett, 146 Mich. 558.

III. DELIVERY AND ACCEPTANCE OF INSTRUMENT.

§ 27. Necessity and office of delivery and acceptance.

To vest title or right, see post § 28.
Requisites and nature of delivery, see post §§ 29-31.
Purpose and intent of parties, see post § 32.
Recording as delivery, see post § 33.
Delivery through third person and conditional delivery, see post §§ 34-39.
Delivery through fraud or mistake and revocation, see post §§ 40, 41.
Acceptance and estoppel to deny, see post §§ 42, 43.
Burden of proof, presumptions, evidence, jury questions and instructions, see post §§ 44-56.
Presumptions as to acceptance, see post § 49.
Necessity of delivery of duplicates where required for completion of contract, see also ante ¶ 42.
Delivery of bond as operative commencement, see also Bonds ¶¶ 19, 20.
Delivery of assignment for creditors as part of requisites, see Assignments for Creditors § 5.

¶ 108. To make a valid delivery of a written contract the one party must deliver it, intending that it should take effect as his contract, and the party receiving it must accept it is a binding contract to take effect on its acceptance.—Continental Ins. Co. v. Horton, 28 Mich. 173.

¶ 109. Where a note is made and indorsed for the purpose of being sold or discounted, it is the delivery of the note to the purchaser which completes the contract as between him and the parties to it.—Kinzie v. Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank of Michigan, 2 D. 105; Vinton v. Peck, 14 Mich. 287.

§ 28. ——To vest title or right.

¶ 110. Title does not vest till delivery of the deed.—Heffron v. Flanigan, 37 Mich. 274.

¶ 111. Delivery of a deed is essential to pass title; its whole object is to indicate the grantor's intent to give effect to the instrument.—Thatcher v. St. Andrew's Church Wardens, etc., of Ann Arbor, 37 Mich. 264.

¶ 112. One of the essential requisites to the validity of a deed, so as to pass title, is delivery.—Pollock v. McCarty, 198 Mich. 66.

¶ 113. A deed is inoperative until delivered by the grantor and accepted by the grantee.—Brown v. Keiser, 182 Mich. 432.

¶ 114. "A necessary essential to the validity of a deed so as to pass title is delivery; not necessarily to the grantee, but it must be surrendered to grantee or to some third person for the grantee. The grantor must intend that there should be a delivery of the deed to make it effective."—Belding Sav. Bank v. Moore, 118 Mich. 150.

§ 29. Requisites and nature of delivery.

Yielding custody and control, see post § 30.
Retaining custody and control, see post § 31.
Delivery in escrow, see Escrows.
Delivery of gifts, see Gifts, III.
Requisites and nature of delivery and issuance of municipal bonds, see Municipal Bonds, II.
Sufficiency of transfers of municipal bonds, see Municipal Bonds, IV.
Delivery of assignment by way of gift of choses assigned, see Gifts, III.
Delivery of instruments by incompetents, see Incompetents.
Delivery of instruments by insane persons, see Insane Persons, IV.
Sufficiency of delivery of benefit certificate of fraternal association to change beneficiary, see Fraternal Associations, IV.

¶ 115. Delivery of a deed takes place when it is either actually or constructively by record placed beyond the control of the grantor.—Gardiner v. Gardiner, 134 Mich. 90.

¶ 116. Delivery in the sense that it is necessary to the complete execution of a contract implies a discretion both as to tender and acceptance.—Brockway v. Petted, 79 Mich. 620.

¶ 117. The delivery of a deed is not necessarily a transfer of the possession of the instrument to the grantee and an acceptance by him; but it is that act of the grantor, indicated by acts or words, or both, whereby his intention to perfect the transaction is shown by a surrender of the instrument to the grantee or to some third person for his use and benefit.—Thatcher v. St. Andrew's Church Wardens, etc., of Ann Arbor, 37 Mich. 264.

§ 30. ——Yielding custody and control.

See also ante ¶ 117.

Custody of deed given wife by husband for purpose of disposal where deed is blank as to grantee, see also ante ¶ 47.

Weight and sufficiency of evidence to show surrender of possession and control, see post § 53.

¶ 118. Where a husband has executed a deed to his wife, for the purpose of having her exhibit it to his creditors to induce them to grant an extension, and has deposited it with his other papers in the house where she had access to it, to make use of it for the purpose for which it was made, to show ownership in herself, the legal control of it must be regarded as delivered to her, and this constitutes a delivery in law.—Gage v. Gage, 36 Mich. 229.

¶ 119. Delivery of a deed was established where such deed was in the custody of the deceased grantee and, with the consent of the grantor, he claimed to be and handled the property as the owner, and where, when the deed was delivered, it was agreed that it should not be presently recorded, that if the grantor died first, it should then be recorded and that if the grantee died first, it should be destroyed and the title revert to the grantor.—Tabor v. Tabor, 136 Mich. 255.

§ 31. ——Retaining custody or possession.

Presumption from possession of instrument, see post § 46.

Recordation with retaining of possession as delivery, see post ¶ 142.

¶ 120. Delivery of a deed was not shown where the grantor after signing the deed handed it to his daughter for the purpose of placing it among his own papers.—Reason v. Jones, 119 Mich. 672.

¶ 121. A decedent executed certain deeds, at which time she remarked: "When I go dead, then everything is all right." She kept the deeds in her safe with her will until her death. At one time her son, in looking through her safe, ran across them. She told him to put them back and record them after her death. Held, there was no delivery of the deeds.—Stubman v. Modrack, 163 Mich. 667.

¶ 122. A father handed a deed to his son saying he would not like to see it recorded until after his death, and the son handed it back, the father retaining possession of the land and afterwards destroying the deed. Held, that there was no delivery.—Schuffert v. Grote, 88 Mich. 650.

¶ 123. Any deed that is to be maintained after death must have been made operative by some valid delivery by the grantor during his life and if found in his custody at death, there must be proof, or facts amounting to proof, that he had made an effectual delivery, and became thereafter a mere custodian of the instrument.—Taft v. Taft, 59 Mich. 185.

¶ 124. Delivery of a deed to a minor was not shown, where the grantor, after the execution of the deed, declined to act upon the suggestion of the conveyancer to put it in the hands of a third person, but kept it in the drawer of his own bureau in his own room, where it remained in the grantor's possession and control from the time he signed it until after his death, except for a brief interval when it was in possession of the minor's father to be read by himself and his wife.—Bisard v. Sparks, 133 Mich. 587.

¶ 125. A deed executed and acknowledged about one year before the death of grantor, retained in the custody of grantor, who gave directions to his daughter that upon his death such deed, on condition that the grantee should then execute a certain note, which grantor had drawn up and folded with the deed, should be delivered to such grantee, was void, since the delivery was meant to be, and was in fact, posthumous and since such delivery was conditioned upon the execution of such note after grantor's death.—Taft v. Taft, 59 Mich. 185.

§ 32. Purpose and intent of parties.

As to present or future effectiveness, see post § 33.

Intent to make delivery coupled with recordation, see also post ¶ 135.

Necessity of intent to make delivery effective, see also ante ¶ 114.

¶ 126. In determining the fact of delivery of a deed, the purpose of the grantor and the grantee in making the deeds is an important factor.—Gardiner v. Gardiner, 134 Mich. 90.

¶ 127. It is a question of intent whether the delivery of a deed to a third person to be later delivered to the grantee is effective.—Jenkinson v. Brown, 119 Mich. 108.

¶ 128. In deciding whether a deed was delivered at its date or at some other time the material inquiry is when did the minds of the parties meet in regarding it as unconditionally belonging to the grantee.—McCullough v. Day, 45 Mich. 554.

¶ 129. The act of delivery of a deed is not necessarily a transfer of the possession of the instrument to the grantee and an acceptance by him, but it is that act of the grantor, indicated either by acts or words, or both, which shows an intention on his part to perfect the transaction, by a surrender of the instrument to the grantee, or to some third person for his use and benefit.—Pollock v. McCarty, 198 Mich. 66.

§ 33. ——As to present or future effectiveness.

Time when effective where delivered through depositary at death of grantor or maker, see post § 38.

¶ 130. The execution and delivery of a deed by the wife to the husband without retaining any control over it, whether it is intended to take effect immediately or not to take effect until after the death of the wife, is a valid and effective conveyance after the death of the wife.—Dyer v. Skadan, 128 Mich. 348.

¶ 131. The test of a conveyance is whether it can be said that the delivery of the deed is such as to convey a present interest in land.—Pollock v. McCarty, 198 Mich. 66.

¶ 132. Deeds from a father dividing his property among his children were formally delivered, two of them on the day of their execution, the others at a later day, grantor being at the pains to figure out the proportions in which he desired the property to go to each of his children, he also stating that he had previously contemplated such a disposition, which, he was told, would be final. Held, that these facts showed the deeds were intended to have present effect.—Nichols v. Nichols, 94 Mich. 569.

¶ 133. Where an old man, unmarried, has his brother and wife live with him on his farm and allows them to keep all the profits on condition that they cultivate and improve the farm and pay the taxes, and the brother subsequently erects a new dwelling, on being told that the title to the premises had been fixed by a deed so that it will pass to him on the grantor's death and the grantor on being subsequently informed by the scrivener that the instrument is invalid for want of delivery has another one drawn which he hands to his brother, the grantee, who returns it to the scrivener who was instructed by the grantor to record the same after his death, such facts constitute a delivery so as to pass a present estate to the grantee.—Luscombe v. Peterson, 173 Mich. 165. (Ostrander, Stone and Bird, JJ., dissenting.)

¶ 134. Where a wife who has joined in a mortgage consents to its delivery in suspense on a condition that her husband should afterward assent to completion of delivery, and recordation and, subsequently he expressly authorized delivery of it, her inchoate right of dower is barred.—Fifth Nat. Bank v. Pierce, 117 Mich. 376.

§ 34. Recording as delivery.

Presumptions arising from recordation, see post § 47.

Insufficiency of recordation to constitute delivery without acceptance, see also post ¶ 186.

Constructive delivery by recordation, see also ante ¶ 115.

Recordation without knowledge of grantor as evidence of delivery, see post ¶ 271.

Delay in recordation as evidence, see post ¶¶ 243, 252, 266.

Admissibility of record of instrument to show its execution and existence without further proof, see Evidence, VIII, C.

Recordation of instruments, see Notice and Record of Title, II.

¶ 135. The recording of a deed with intent to pass title is a sufficient delivery, and in such case actual manual delivery and formal acceptance are not necessary.—Holmes v. McDonald, 119 Mich. 563.

¶ 136. The act of the father in causing a deed to his son, reserving a life interest in the father, to be recorded, held to constitute a sufficient delivery.—Griffin v. Hovey, 179 Mich. 104.

¶ 137. If a grantor who is the register of deeds makes and records a deed with intent to pass title, there is a sufficient delivery.—Fenton v. Miller, 94 Mich. 204.

¶ 138. The recording by a father of a deed in which he grants land to his minor children, reserving a life-estate for himself and their mother, is an effectual delivery and shows that he intended to convey an estate in fee to the grantees; actual manual delivery and formal acceptance are not necessary in such a case.—Compton v. White, 86 Mich. 33.

¶ 139. The execution of a mortgage in payment, or as security for the payment, of a bona fide indebtedness to the mortgagee, and the filing thereof, are, as between the parties, a sufficient delivery, although the mortgagor, instead of filing it himself, hands it to a third person to be filed, and it is filed accordingly.—Field v. Fisher, 65 Mich. 606.

¶ 140. Where a mortgage, executed in the mortgagee's absence and placed upon record by the mortgagor, is permitted to remain of record as a mortgage, and is assumed to be such by all of the parties in interest, want of a manual delivery is of no importance.—Sessions v. Sherwood, 78 Mich. 234.

¶ 141. Where a deed has been recorded and acted upon by the mutual consent of the parties, that amounts to delivery, and the fact that it was originally made without the knowledge of the grantee and not delivered manually to him is of no importance.—Jackson v. Cleveland, 15 Mich. 94.

¶ 142. Where a husband executes a deed to his wife and records it intending to pass title to her as of its date, there is a valid delivery, and title passes to her though the deed remains in his possession.—Glaze v. Three Rivers Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 87 Mich. 349.

¶ 143. The recording of an instrument in form a warranty deed, but testamentary in character, by its custodian, contrary to the instructions of its makers, is not a delivery actual or constructive, and cannot be taken as indicative of the grantors' intention to give effect to the instrument.—Leonard v. Leonard, 145 Mich. 563.

§ 35. Delivery through third person.

To one spouse for the other, see post § 36.
Delivery by depositary on grantor's or maker's death, see post § 38.
Weight and sufficiency of evidence to show delivery through intermediary, see post § 52.
Sufficiency of delivery where deed is executed by two of three grantors named and delivered to depositary, see Escrows ¶ 28.

¶ 144. The delivery of a deed to a third person for the benefit of the grantee, in the absence of anything conveying a different intention, is as much a delivery as if made to the grantee himself.—Shumway v. Mason, 189 Mich. 623.

¶ 145. It is sufficient delivery of a deed if the grantor, intending thereby to give it effect, leaves it with the conveyancer to be afterwards delivered; and sufficient acceptance, if grantees, who knew nothing about it when it was drawn, assent to it afterwards.—Thatcher v. St. Andrew's Church Wardens, etc., of Ann Arbor, 37 Mich. 264.

¶ 146. Delivery is not accomplished by placing a conveyance with the common agent of the parties for safe keeping until the contract between the parties is made and consummated.—Connor v. Buhl, 115 Mich. 531.

¶ 147. A delivery of a deed to a third person for the benefit of the grantee is as much a delivery as if made to the grantee himself, unless some other intent is evinced; and when papers show on their face that they are meant to take effect and operate from their execution, their delivery to a third person, to be afterward delivered to the parties, cannot be considered as merely an escrow, and as not to take effect until such subsequent delivery.—Hosley v. Holmes, 27 Mich. 416.

¶ 148. A deed of conveyance in present terms is inconsistent with the retention of a life estate and from the time of its delivery as a conveyance, the whole title goes with it, and the deed becomes irrevocable. Such delivery to a third person, intended to make the conveyance operative, is a legal delivery even where the grantee is ignorant of the transfer.—Taft v. Taft, 59 Mich. 185.

¶ 149. Where a husband executed a deed to his wife and left it in an envelope with his attorney with the indorsement thereon that it was to be delivered in case of his death, and later when the husband and wife were both very ill she asked him for the deed and he said he had attended to the matter and it was with his attorney, and permitted her attorney to go and get the deed which was done and the attorney returned with the deed and read it to the wife and told her the deed was all right, and the husband then acknowledged the execution thereof, and said that that was the property he wished his wife to have, and the wife upon being asked if she wished to keep the deed told her lawyer to keep it and the husband said keep it and "when we are well we will go down to your office and attend to it together" and the lawyer returned the deed to the scrivener, but the wife died within a week of the occurrence and the husband lived ten years, and paid taxes on the land, and interest upon the mortgage, and entered into a contract of sale therefor, there was no delivery of the deed so as to pass title to the wife.—Connor v. Rivard, 144 Mich. 177.

§ 36. ——To one spouse for other.

Weight and sufficiency of evidence of delivery from one spouse to other, see post § 54.

¶ 150. Where, on a purchase of land by a husband, the deed is made to the wife at the husband's direction, delivered to the husband, and recorded by him, such delivery is sufficient to vest title in the wife.—Wipfler v. Wipfler, 153 Mich. 18.

¶ 151. A man deeded to his brother under an arrangement that was afterward abandoned, but the grantor obtained a conveyance back to his wife, which was not delivered to her, but to him. Held, that her heirs could not claim under such a deed without some evidence that she was a party to the delivery.—Watson v. Hillman, 57 Mich. 607.

§ 37. Conditional delivery.

Condition for reversion of title in event of grantee predeceasing grantor, see also ante ¶ 119.
Delivery by depositary contrary to conditions, see Escrows § 10.
Where instructions to depositary are to deliver on condition grantee survive grantor or on fulfillment of condition uncertain, see Escrows § 2.
Other similar arrangements to show that signing was conditional on other signatures, see also Evidence § 95.
Delivery to grantee in escrow, see Escrows § 5, ¶ 12.
Sufficiency of delivery by depositary where conditional on performance of acts by grantee after grantor's death, see Escrows § 4, ¶¶ 10, 11.

¶ 152. A deed is inoperative if its delivery depends upon a condition precedent that can only be performed after the grantor's death.—Taft v. Taft, 59 Mich. 185.

¶ 153. Quære, whether parties to a negotiable paper may agree upon its conditional delivery to the payee.—Cannon v. McIntyre, 140 Mich. 24.

¶ 153a. There is no delivery of a bond where the agent of the obligee induced the obligor to sign as a surety on condition that the agent would also sign as a surety, which the agent did not do before he turned over the bond to the obligee.—Fidelity Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Johnson, 152 Mich. 578.

¶ 154. If the circumstances of the manual delivery of a deed are such as to indicate a conditional rather than an absolute delivery, no title passes until the condition is fulfilled; and the character of the delivery must be determined by the acts or words of the parties or by both.—Chick v. Sisson, 95 Mich. 412.

¶ 155. A writing, no matter how complete a contract according to its terms, is not a binding contract if delivered upon a condition precedent to its becoming obligatory. In such case it does not become operative until the performance or happening of the condition precedent.—Cleveland Refining Co. v. Dunning, 115 Mich. 238.

¶ 156. A bond to secure past and future indebtedness was sent for approval to the obligee's agent, who was not to deliver it to the obligee except on the condition that the obligor be retained in the obligee's employ. The agent did deliver it but the obligor was not retained. Held, that there was no legal delivery, and the bond was therefore void as an obligation, and would not support an action.—Weed Sewing Machine Co. v. Jeudevine, 39 Mich. 590.

¶ 157. Where, in the execution of a contract of sale, a deed is delivered with the intention that it shall be operative when the grantee approves of the title, he has the right to put such deed on record when he approves of it and tenders the consideration. —Ryan v. United States, 136 U. S. 68, 34 L. ed. 447, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 913.

¶ 158. In a grantor's suit to set aside deeds to his sons upon the ground that they were delivered conditionally and were not to be recorded until his death, it appeared that after the deeds had been placed with a depositary, the grantor delivered them to the grantees who executed life-leases to him. Held, that it was the intention that the deeds should be recorded upon delivery it appearing that he knew of the recording but made no objection for seven years.—Ayris v. Ayris, 116 Mich. 484.

¶ 159. Complainant prepared deeds of certain lands, running to his wife as grantee, and kept them in his possession for several years; on departing to take a hazardous railway trip he handed the deeds to his wife, telling her to record them if anything of a fatal nature should befall him. She recorded the deeds in violation of the instruction. Held, that this transaction constituted a delivery of the deeds to the grantee, without any express reservation of the right to recall them, and with intent that in a certain contingency they should be effective without any further act on the part of the complainant.—Wipfler v. Wipfler, 153 Mich. 18.

§ 38. Delivery by depositary on grantor's or maker's death.

Time when effective and doctrine of "relation back," see post § 39.
Delivery through third persons in general, see ante § 35.
Present or future effectiveness according to intent of parties, see ante § 33.
Weight and sufficiency of evidence to show delivery through intermediary, see post § 52.

¶ 160. A deed delivered by the grantor to a third person with directions to have it handed over to the grantee immediately after the grantor's death is valid.—Latham v. Udell, 38 Mich. 238.

¶ 161. Delivery of a deed to a third party to be by him delivered to the grantee after the death of the grantor is valid.—Jenkinson v. Brooks, 119 Mich. 108.

¶ 162. Delivery of deeds on the eve of grantor's death to a third party with directions to record them after grantor's death and notify the parties interested, and with no intent to recall the deeds, is effective; although such owner remained in possession of his homestead and instructed that those of the deeds running to his wife should be recorded before his death, and caused the papers to be brought to him for examination. —Jenkinson v. Brooks, 119 Mich. 108.

¶ 163. The delivery of a deed to a third person, to be delivered to the grantee after the grantor's death, and the delivery thereof by such third person before the grantor's death, in breach of the trust reposed in him, is a sufficient delivery to vest title at the death of the grantor.—Wallace v. Harris, 32 Mich. 380.

¶ 164. Where a grantor executed a deed to real estate, making her son the grantee and reserving a life estate, and delivered such deed to the scrivener with instructions to deliver it to the grantee at her death, held that the delivery was valid.—Loomis v. Loomis, 178 Mich. 221.

¶ 165. Delivery of a deed by a grantor before his death to a third person to be delivered to the grantee at her mother's death, is a good delivery.—Brown v. Stutson, 100 Mich. 574.

¶ 166. The delivery of a deed by a grantor to a third person, to be by him delivered to the grantee after the grantor's death, is valid. —Hoagland v. Beckley, 158 Mich. 565.

¶ 167. A grantor executed deeds in the office of one Hopkins, a lawyer, and left them in a sealed envelope, with Hopkins. The following was indorsed, by the grantor on the envelope: "I hereby direct that the within deeds shall be delivered to the parties of the second part therein mentioned at my decease, and as soon as that event shall occur. Betsey Beckley." Held, that this with the other circumstances warranted the circuit judge in finding that there was a valid delivery.—Hoagland v. Beckley, 158 Mich. 565.

¶ 168. A grantor made a deed of property preparatory to committing suicide, placed the same in the hands of a friend shortly after executing it, marked the names of the grantees, his children, on the envelope, and told the friend to give them to the boys when they called for them. Later he wrote a letter asking the friend to record the deeds, which letter was found on his person. Held, there was a valid delivery of the deed.—Cooper v. Cooper, 162 Mich. 304.

¶ 169. A deed delivered by the grantor to a third party to be delivered to the grantee after grantor's death is valid though it contain a clause that "This deed is to be delivered and recorded to the grantee on the death of both the grantors" since this clause evidently refers to the actual delivery to the grantee and does not affect the delivery to the third person.—Meech v. Wilder, 130 Mich. 29.

¶ 170. The fact that a deed is not to be delivered or take effect until after the grantor's death will not prevent its taking effect at that time.—Howard v. Patrick, 38 Mich. 795.

¶ 171. A deed delivered by a grantor to a third person for the benefit of the grantee, when delivered to and accepted by the latter, will, under the doctrine of relation, take effect from the date of the original delivery. —Brown v. Keiser, 182 Mich. 432.

¶ 172. The delivery of a deed by a grantor to a third person for delivery to the grantee after the grantor's death, operates as a conveyance in praesenti with the enjoyment of the gift postponed.—Brown v. Keiser, 182 Mich. 432.

¶ 173. The delivery of a deed by the grantor to a third party to be by him delivered to the grantee after the grantor's death is valid, conveys the fee and operates as a conveyance in praesenti, though the enjoyment is postponed until the grantor's death.—Meech v. Wilder, 130 Mich. 29.

¶ 174. The fiction that a deed delivered to a third person for delivery to the grantee at the grantor's death, at the second delivery relates back to the delivery to the repository, will not be permitted to work a wrong by defeating the grantor's intervening creditors.—Brown v. Keiser, 182 Mich. 432.

§ 40. Delivery through mistake or fraud.

What constitutes fraud and undue influence, see Fraud, I.

Fraud implied from circumstances or nature of delivery, see Fraud, II.

What constitutes mistake, see Mistake.

¶ 175. A deed collusively given in execution of a land contract, possession of which was surreptitiously obtained in the absence of the party holding it, is not absolutely void in law as for fraud, as it passes the legal title to the grantee named, and the contract purchaser cannot cause it to enure to himself except by showing his equitable right and title as against the grantee; and this showing cannot be made in an action of ejectment as an equitable defense.—Harrett v. Kinney, 44 Mich. 457.

¶ 176. The fact that grantor was ill and according to some testimony in another room at the time of the delivery of her deed does not affect the validity of such instrument, where the grantor was in her right mind and understood and comprehended what was done and the fact of a delivery is otherwise not questioned.—Wilbur v. Grover, 140 Mich. 187.

§ 41. Recalling and revocation of delivery.

Sufficiency of evidence as to right to recall instrument, see post ¶ 268.

Necessity of writing to revoke deed, attempt by destruction, see Frauds, Statute of, I.

Destruction of instrument to revoke it, see Rescission and Cancellation, IV.

Rescission or revocation by act of parties after execution is complete, see Rescission, IV.

¶ 177. Until a deed is delivered to the grantee to become presently operative, the grantor may rescind it.—Pennington v. Pennington, 75 Mich. 600; Burk v. Sproat, 96 Mich. 404.

¶ 178. Where a deed had been drawn and placed in the hands of a person subject to the grantor's orders and control, and had been legally recalled by the grantor, and had become inoperative before it was taken by the grantee named therein, it has no effect and should be canceled.—Pennington v. Pennington, 75 Mich. 600; Burk v. Sproat, 96 Mich. 404.

¶ 179. No title passed to property where the grantor deposited the deed with a third party to be delivered on his death and later recalled and destroyed the deed.—Cole v. Cole, 144 Mich. 676.

¶ 180. The grantor in a deed deposited with a third person with instructions to deliver it after his death has a right to recall the deed and destroy it unless at the time of depositing it he intended to deprive himself of that right.—Cole v. Cole, 144 Mich. 676.

¶ 181. A grantor in a deed deposited with a third person to be delivered after his death may recall and destroy the deed at any time unless he had at the time of depositing it intended to deprive himself of that right, and it is not necessary that the right be expressly reserved, it being sufficient that it was understood that the right was reserved. —Cole v. Cole, 144 Mich. 676.

¶ 182. Where a grantor places a deed in the hands of a third person to be delivered upon his death to the grantee, and does not intend to deprive himself of the right to recall the same, he is entitled to obtain it from said third person and destroy it.—Wagner v. Kirchberg, 166 Mich. 411.

¶ 183. The return of a deed to the grantor to insure that it would not be placed of record, did not in law defeat a delivery once accomplished, where the proofs show a delivery with intention to vest title, in an action to re-establish a deed.—Blackford v. Olmstead, 140 Mich. 583.

§ 42. Acceptance.

Estoppel to deny acceptance, see post § 43.
Discretion as to acceptance, see ¶ 116.
Sufficiency of acceptance, see also ante ¶ 145.
Necessity for acceptance, see ante § 27, ¶ 113.
Presumptions as to acceptance or rejection, see post § 49.
Sufficiency of acceptance where instrument returned to insure its not being recorded, see also ante ¶ 183.
Recordation without knowledge of grantee as delivery of deed, see ante ¶ 141.

¶ 184. A chattel mortgage executed by a debtor to secure a creditor, and retained in the debtor's possession for a time, when it is filed and notice given to the creditor, who accepts the security, but who had no prior knowledge or notice of its execution, or agreement with the debtor therefor, had no legal existence until delivery, which takes place on such acceptance.—Merrill v. Denton, 73 Mich. 628.

¶ 185. Acceptance of a deed may be after the grantor's death where the act of delivery is a continuing one, such as leaving it on deposit to be accepted afterwards if not recalled before.—Thatcher v. St. Andrew's Church Wardens, etc., of Ann Arbor, 37 Mich. 264.

¶ 185a. There is no acceptance of a bond which on its face requires two sureties and which is signed by one only, where on its receipt by the obligee it is returned with the direction that another signature is required. —Fidelity Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Johnson, 152 Mich. 578.

¶ 186. The making and recording of a deed with intent to pass title is not a good delivery where the infant grantee is ignorant of the fact and unwilling to receive it.—Lowes v. Lowes, 127 Mich. 307.

¶ 187. Acceptance by each of several grantees need not be shown where the instrument has been delivered to one for the benefit of all, and has not been repudiated by any.—Shelden v. Erskine, 78 Mich. 627.

¶ 188. A mortgage in favor of several creditors does not have to be delivered to all, if delivered to one for all and repudiated by none; proof of an acceptance by each is not necessary.—Shelden v. Erskine, 78 Mich. 627.

¶ 189. A mortgagee, on being informed of the execution and filing of the mortgage, which had taken place without her knowledge, but pursuant to the agreement of the mortgagor to give her security, authorized her attorney to take possession of the property in her interest, which he did by a third party, and was in actual possession when the property was attached by creditors of the mortgagor. Held, that there was a sufficient acceptance of the mortgage.—Louden v. Vinton, 108 Mich. 313.

§ 43. Estoppel to deny delivery or acceptance.

Estoppel to question execution, see ante § 15.
Estoppel to deny delivery as barring privies of person, see also Estoppel ¶ 234.
Right to make defense that contract was delivered in breach of condition, where other party's agent lacked authority to make such a contract, see Agency ¶ 300.
Acceptance of deed poll as assent to terms and covenants by grantee, see Contracts § 23.

¶ 190. Where a grantee accepts a deed without its being executed by the wife of the grantor, upon her agreement afterwards to execute it, which she does, he cannot be heard to say that the deed was never delivered to or accepted by him because of his refusal to receive it again after such execution by the wife, whose only interest in the land is an inchoate right of dower.—Dikeman v. Arnold, 78 Mich. 455.

¶ 191. Where the grantee in a deed has bargained for the property and paid down something towards the purchase and executed a mortgage for a part of the purchase price with covenants of warranty, and delivered it to the scriveners who held the deed, and has taken and held possession for some time of the lands conveyed, he is estopped from denying an acceptance and delivery of the deed.—Comstock v. Smith, 26 Mich. 306.

¶ 192. Where, at the solicitation of a third person who is working up the scheme, an agreement to pay to parties named a certain sum for building a creamery is signed "as a starter" upon condition that it is not to be delivered until the subscriber authorizes, of which the payee's agent has knowledge, the subscriber is not estopped, in suit upon the subscription, from showing the facts and a violation of the condition.—Davis v. Kneale, 97 Mich. 72.

¶ 193. By signing an official bond as surety on a condition not apparent therein, and intrusting it to the principal obligor to be completed and delivered, one makes such obligor his agent, and is estopped by his action in delivering it without complying with a condition of which the obligee had no notice.—McCormick v. Bay City, 23 Mich. 457; Brown v. Kent Probate Judge, 42 Mich. 501.

§ 44. Burden of proof.

Presumptions, see post §§ 45-49.

Burden of proof on plaintiff to show delivery where denied by defendant's affidavit under circuit court rules, see also ante ¶ 57.

Burden to impeach date, see also Contracts ¶ 1227.

Burden of proof as to delivery on Sunday, see Sunday.

Burden of proof to show revocation of instrument by rescission and cancellation, see Rescission and Cancellation, IV.

¶ 194. In an action of ejectment where defendant claimed under a deed from a deceased parent, held that the burden of proving delivery of the deed by a preponderance of evidence rested upon the defendant.—Barras v. Barras, 192 Mich. 584.

¶ 195. Complainant in a bill to remove a cloud from his title by setting aside deeds made by his ancestor, but which he claims were never delivered, has the burden of proof, and must make out his case by preponderance of testimony.—Salisbury v. Salisbury, 49 Mich. 306.

¶ 196. Where the grantee in a deed admitted that it was kept in a locked box in the grantor's house, and that he obtained the key from the grantor (his father) two or three days before his death, unlocked the box, and took the deed out, held that under such circumstances there was no presumption of delivery arising from the deed itself or the record thereof, and that the burden of proof was upon defendants to show its delivery.—Jourdan v. Patterson, 102 Mich. 602.

From possession of instrument, see post § 46.

From recordation, see post §§ 47-49.

Presumptions as to signature and execution of instrument preliminary to delivery, see ante § 16.

¶ 197. It is presumed that the parties to a deed understand that delivery is essential to an operative conveyance.—Eaton v. Trowbridge, 38 Mich. 454.

¶ 198. It is presumed conclusively that one of two joint makers of a note had authority from the other to deliver it, if he does so.—Beman v. Wessels, 53 Mich. 549.

¶ 199. When a grantor makes a manual delivery of a deed to the grantee without qualification, the law assumes that a present conveyance is intended, and will not permit proof of a concealed intent to the contrary.—Barras v. Barras, 192 Mich. 584.

¶ 200. Proof of the delivery of a deed to a stranger without directions raises no presumption that it is delivered for the use of the grantee.—Thomas v. Sullivan, 138 Mich. 265.

¶ 201. The delivery of a deed will be presumed, in the absence of direct evidence of the fact, from the concurrent acts of the parties recognizing a transfer of the title; thus, where a deed had been executed and recorded without the grantee's knowledge, but subsequently, upon the grantor's request, the grantee conveyed to a third party, such recognition by both parties of the transfer of the title was held sufficient evidence that at the time a delivery of the deed had been made.—Gould v. Day, 94 U. S. 405, 24 L. ed. 232.

¶ 202. The possession by the husband of the deceased wife's deed of land to a daughter does not raise a presumption that the delivery to the husband was delivery to the daughter, where the husband's will disposing of the property states that the deed was subject to revocation by him and the witnesses to the deed testify to similar statements made by him at the time of execution.—Thomas v. Sullivan, 138 Mich. 265.

¶ 203. The presumption of delivery of a deed produced by the grantee is overcome by evidence that it was not delivered at the time it was signed, that a companion deed was not produced nor accounted for, and that the grantee, after the grantor's death, had made contradictory statements relative to the claimed delivery and had made statements as to the title wholly inconsistent with his present claim of delivery.—Barron v. Mercure, 132 Mich. 439.

¶ 204. Defendant agreed to quitclaim certain land to be acquired by her to complainant, if complainant would in return quitclaim certain land to defendant. Complainant's deed was dated June 17, 1879. Defendant's deed was dated May 23, 1879, and recorded December 30, 1881. Defendant did not acquire title to the land she purported to quitclaim until June 15, 1879. In a bill to quiet title, defendant contended that nothing passed to complainant by her deed of May 23, 1879, since she had then acquired no title. Held, that complainant's bill should be sustained on the presumption that defendant's deed of May 23, 1879, was not delivered until after June 15, 1879.—Johnson v. Smith, 154 Mich. 122.

§ 46. ——From possession of instrument.

Retaining custody or possession as affecting delivery, see ante § 31.

¶ 205. Possession of a deed is prima facie evidence of its delivery.—Dawson v. Hall, 2 Mich. 390.

¶ 206. The grantee's possession of a deed is prima facie evidence of a delivery.—Fenton v. Miller, 94 Mich. 204.

¶ 207. The grantee's possession of a deed tends to prove its delivery.—Foster v. Hill, 55 Mich. 540.

¶ 208. The possession of a contract establishes a presumption of its execution and delivery which must prevail until overthrown.—Seligman v. Ten Eyck's Estate, 53 Mich. 285; Seligman v. Ten Eyck's Estate, 49 Mich. 104.

¶ 209. While possession of an instrument is presumptive evidence of delivery, that presumption cannot be entertained where upon the face of the instrument some act remains to be done to make it complete. The instrument to which this rule of presumption applies must be "in form of a simple contract."—Amos-Richia v. Northwestern Mut. Life Ins. Co., 143 Mich. 684.

¶ 210. The possession and production of a deed by a grantee, unexplained, gives rise to a presumption that it was delivered, but such presumption is not conclusive.—Barras v. Barras, 192 Mich. 584.

¶ 211. The delivery of a promissory note by the maker is necessary to a valid inception of the contract. The possession of a promissory note by the payee or indorsee is prima facie evidence of delivery.—Burson v. Huntington, 21 Mich. 415.

¶ 212. The delivery of a deed is presumed from its having been executed, acknowledged and recorded, and from possession by the grantee or beneficiary under it, unless there are facts against the presumption.—Patrick v. Howard, 47 Mich. 40.

¶ 213. The law will presume a delivery from the possession of the deed by the grantee, in the absence of testimony as to such delivery or the alleged nondelivery.—Wilbur v. Grover, 140 Mich. 187.

¶ 214. The nondelivery of a deed signed, acknowledged and recorded is not presumed from the grantor's remaining in possession for several months after it was put on record.—Howard v. Patrick, 38 Mich. 795.

§ 47. ——From recordation.

Record as evidence as to regularly executing and witnessed party only, see also Evidence ¶ 2748.

¶ 215. Recording a deed is presumptively a delivery of it as between grantor and grantee.—Sessions v. Sherwood, 78 Mich. 234.

¶ 216. The presumption of delivery to the grantee which is raised by recording a deed may be rebutted by proof of the intention of the grantor.—Glaze v. Three Rivers Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 87 Mich. 349.

¶ 217. The fact of recording a deed as proved by record is not conclusive of delivery of the deed.—Barras v. Barras, 192 Mich. 584.

¶ 218. When the record of a deed has for its object the defrauding, hindering or delaying creditors, recording is considered presumptively a delivery of the deed, as between the grantor and grantee.—Sessions v. Sherwood, 78 Mich. 234.

¶ 219. A husband being poor and somewhat indebted made a deed of his newly gained homestead to M., and caused M. to convey to the homesteader's wife without any consideration passing between the parties. Sometime later, having kept both deeds in his possession, he requested the register of deeds to put the two conveyances on record, but not to deliver them to anyone but himself. Afterwards he retained custody of the deeds. Held, that title did not pass to the wife, for the presumption of delivery arising from the recording was rebutted by the fact that there was no delivery nor intention of delivery.—Stevens v. Castel, 63 Mich. 111.

§ 48. ——As to date of delivery.

¶ 220. In the absence of evidence to the contrary, a deed is presumed to be delivered on the date when acknowledged.—Miller v. Peter, 158 Mich. 336.

¶ 221. It must be assumed that the delivery of a deed takes place at the time of its acknowledgment if nothing shows that it was delivered earlier or later.—Johnson v. Moore, 28 Mich. 3.

¶ 222. It is only a presumption that the date of acknowledgment, if later than that of the deed, is also the true date of delivery; it may be overcome by proof.—Eaton v. Trowbridge, 38 Mich. 454.

¶ 223. Where a deed is acknowledged on a day subsequent to its date, and there is no proof of delivery prior to the acknowledgment, it must be presumed to have been delivered afterwards; such being the usual course and practice in reference to the delivery of deeds and other instruments intended for record.—Blanchard v. Tyler, 12 Mich. 339.

¶ 224. Where a grantee died between the dates of a deed and its acknowledgment, it was presumed that the deed had been delivered in his life-time.—Eaton v. Trowbridge, 38 Mich. 454.

§ 49. ——As to acceptance or rejection.

Acceptance, see ante § 42.

¶ 225. Acceptance of a deed by the beneficiary thereunder is presumed.—Lewis v. Jacobs, 153 Mich. 664.

¶ 226. The acceptance of a beneficial grant is presumed.—Wayne County v. Miller, 31 Mich. 447; Hatch v. Village of St. Joseph, 68 Mich. 220.

¶ 227. There is no presumption that a grant of land for a public use is beneficial to the public, and hence no presumption of acceptance unless it does appear to have been beneficial.—Wayne v. Miller, 31 Mich. 447.

¶ 228. Where a written agreement, drawn to be executed by the party making it and signed by him only, is found among the papers of the other party after the latter's death, it is presumed to have been delivered; and its retention raises a presumption of acceptance, which must be overthrown by proof before it can be avoided.—Seligman v. Ten Eyck's Estate, 49 Mich. 104.

¶ 229. A voluntary conveyance of real estate, deliberately made by a husband to his wife, is binding on the grantor, and, if the deed is recorded and acted upon by their mutual concurrence, a delivery of the deed and its acceptance may be presumed.—Draper v. Brown, 153 Mich. 120.

¶ 230. Where a mortgage has been left with a firm of attorneys, acting for both parties, to be delivered only upon the consent of both, and there is a conflict of testimony as to whether or not such consent was ever given, the fact that the mortgagee is found in possession of the mortgage, and the mortgagor in possession of an instrument contemporaneously executed by the mortgagee to show what the mortgage was given to secure, the actual delivery of such instrument not being doubtful, raises a presumption that the mortgage also was actually delivered.—Hess v. Final, 32 Mich. 515.

§ 50. Admissibility of evidence.

Admissibility of declarations complementary or explanatory of delivery, see Evidence § 91, ¶ 482.

Admissions by deceased grantor as to terms of delivery, see also Evidence ¶ 2159.

Undelivered instruments as admissions against maker's interest, see Evidence § 384.

Inadmissibility of parol evidence of agreement reducing unqualified to conditional delivery subject to recall, see also Evidence ¶ 937.

Letter by agent of grantor respecting terms of delivery as admission receivable to show delivery, see Evidence ¶ 2257.

Res gestæ of delivery and acceptance, see also Evidence § 457.

Deed record or certified copy of record of conveyance of lands in other counties as evidence of execution and delivery of the deed, see Jud. Act, chap. XVII, § 21: Comp. L. 1915, § 12509.

¶ 231. In an action of ejectment a deed from the husband of plaintiff of a certain other tract of land was incompetent and immaterial on the question of delivery of the deed to the land involved in the action of ejectment, although both deeds were executed at the same time.—Jennings v. Reeson, 200 Mich. 559.

¶ 232. In an action on a promissory note, the defense being that it was obtained by trickery, evidence that the same parties had obtained other notes from people in the neighborhood by trickery, is admissible.—Beard v. Hill, 131 Mich. 246.

¶ 233. Where the fact that negotiations were pending for an exchange of land is not disputed, but the contention of the defendant, who is sued for refusing to execute a deed of his land, is that the delivery of a deed which the plaintiffs claim was made absolutely pursuant to such negotiations, at a meeting of the parties at a given date, was conditional upon the approval by defendant's attorney of the abstract of title to said land to be by him thereafter examined, what had taken place before said meeting of the parties is immaterial and irrelevant upon the issue of such delivery, unless defendant can be shown to have said or done something before going to the place of meeting indicating an intention to accept said deed without such investigation of title.—Dikeman v. Arnold, 78 Mich. 455.

¶ 234. A woman basing a claim against her husband's estate upon a note given by him can show, as bearing upon the fact that she held it before her husband's death, that she had tried to sell it during his life-time.—Passmore v. Passmore, 50 Mich. 626.

¶ 235. It is irrelevant and inadmissible that the intentions of the husband in taking deeds to his wife's property to himself was to vest title in the survivor of them, the deeds having been in fact delivered though not recorded and on the husband's death having been destroyed by her.—Wilbur v. Grover, 140 Mich. 187.

¶ 236. Declarations and acts of grantee in a deed subsequent to the delivery thereof were not admissible as evidence of the grantee's intent at the time of such delivery, since it is not competent to prove that either of the parties to a deed entertained a secret and undisclosed intention that the delivery of the instrument should be ineffectual to transfer title.—Wilbur v. Grover, 140 Mich. 187.

§ 51. Weight and sufficiency of evidence.

To show delivery through intermediary, see post § 52.

To show intentional surrender of possession and control, see post § 53.

Delivery from one spouse to other, see post § 54.

Recitals as evidence of delivery, see post § 55.

Sufficiency of evidence of signature and execution of instrument preliminary to delivery, see ante §§ 17-19.

Necessity and sufficiency of proof of delivery of antenuptial deed before marriage to prevent dower in the land, see Dower § 19.

Sufficiency of evidence of fraud in delivery, see Fraud, III.

Weight and sufficiency of evidence of delivery in suit to establish lost instrument, see Restoration of Papers and Records.

¶ 237. The record of a deed is not conclusive proof of its delivery.—Hendricks v. Rasson, 53 Mich. 575.

¶ 238. Where a deed was ready for delivery at its date, and delivery was practicable, and there is positive evidence that it was delivered, evidence to the contrary, consisting of oral admissions, and the testimony of prejudiced parties, cannot, in a proceeding in equity, be regarded as convincing.—McCullough v. Day, 45 Mich. 554.

¶ 239. Though title may pass without witnesses the omission of attestation is entitled to weight in a doubtful case in determining whether the instrument was intended to cover land.—Price v. Haynes, 37 Mich. 487.

¶ 241. The finding of the trial court, who saw the witnesses, that complainant in a bill to remove a cloud created by a recorded deed, had failed to establish the invalidity or want of delivery of the deed, was sustained, where the circumstances and other evidence overcame the grantor's testimony that it was genuine, his testimony being false in some important particulars.—Eighmey v. Thayer, 135 Mich. 682.

¶ 242. On the trial of a suit brought by the mortgagee to recover the value of the property, she was asked as bearing on delivery and acceptance whether she was still satisfied with what her attorney had done in taking the mortgage, and answered that she was "if she got her pay, and not before." Held, that this did not contradict her testimony that, with knowledge of the mortgage, she gave her attorney authority to take possession of the property.—Louden v. Vinton, 108 Mich. 313.

¶ 243. In an action by an executrix to set aside assignments of certain mortgages, made by deceased, on the ground that the assignments were never delivered, the fact that the assignments, though made a month before and alleged to have been delivered just before the death of deceased, were not placed on record until after his death, is of no significance.—Peirson v. McNeil, 137 Mich. 158.

¶ 244. On a bill to foreclose an alleged lien for alimony against real estate, which was claimed by the mother of the former husband of complainant as tenant by the entirety, evidence held insufficient to establish a delivery of a deed to the premises to complainant's former husband by his father.—Fowler v. Blount, 191 Mich. 575.

¶ 245. On a bill against an estate and legatees under a will to compel the restoration to complainant of property, the deed to which complainant alleged was destroyed by testatrix as a result of the fraudulent connivance of the legatees, or the payment of the value of such property to complainant, evidence held insufficient to establish delivery of the deed by testatrix to complainant.—McDaniels v. Crosby, 192 Mich. 18.

¶ 246. In weighing the evidence and determining the existence of a forgery it is proper to consider the relationship of the parties who profit and suffer by it, and the age and mental condition of the latter.—Crawford v. Hoeft, 58 Mich. 1.

¶ 247. On a bill in aid of execution to have a deed from a wife to her husband set aside as fraudulent to creditors, evidence held to sustain a finding that the deed was duly delivered and that it remained unrecorded for nine years because the husband had not until such time completed his payments for the property according to an agreement for withholding the deed from record until full payment was made.—Albert v. Patterson, 188 Mich. 378.

¶ 248. In a case involving the question whether a deed from complainant's husband to his mother, formerly tenants in common of the land, each owning an undivided one-half, was delivered before or after his marriage, it was held upon a review of the testimony that such delivery was made after the death of the husband, and that complainant is entitled to dower in the land; where it appeared that a few days after the death of the husband, defendant placed upon a record a quitclaim deed to her of decedent's one-half interest to the land in question, the consideration of which was expressed as one dollar, and love and affection, that the deed and acknowledgment bore a date two months earlier than date of the marriage of complainant and decedent, complainant claiming that such deed was kept secret from her, and was in fraud of her dower rights; that complainant and her husband did not live much together after their marriage; and where such deed, although demanded by counsel for complainant, was not produced nor its absence explained, and defendant, and her daughter, who took the deed from the register's office, though present in court, did not testify.—Lake v. Nolan, 81 Mich. 112.

¶ 249. Delivery of a deed to a father by his daughter may be found on evidence that the property was originally bought in the name of her mother for $2,400, that when $1,900 was paid the mother took a deed, that the first payment of $400 came from the mother, that on the mother's death the daughter and a son deeded the property to the father, who with the daughter and her mother had earned the balance of the money in business, that pending remarriage he redeeded to the daughter to secure her a $500 interest but his second wife had no knowledge of the deed, and when informed of it was told that the daughter would reconvey, and that the daughter did make such a deed and took it back into her possession, though she testified that it was only done to facilitate a sale by her father.—Hall v. Dobbin, 119 Mich. 106.

¶ 250. On a bill by a father against his daughter to remove a cloud from the title to a house and lot occupied by him as a homestead where the issue was whether a deed issued by the complainant to the defendant had ever been delivered with intent to pass title held, that although the testimony was contradictory, in view of the fact that the deed had been recorded, and complainant had changed the insurance policies in favor of the defendant, and that the deed had been made in contemplation of complainant's approaching remarriage, there had been a sufficient delivery with intent to pass title. —Gilman v. Gilman, 143 Mich. 287.

¶ 251. In a bill by a surviving parent to set aside deeds to sons which had been taken after the death of the mother from the receptacle in the father's room where they had been kept, and recorded by the sons, a statement which had been signed by the parents to the effect that the deeds which they had "made over to" the sons, were not to be recorded until after the death of both parents, and that after paying a stated sum to a daughter, the deeds were to be the sons', did not indicate an understanding that the deeds had been delivered, but rather the contrary. —Roup v. Roup, 136 Mich. 385.

¶ 252. In an action to set aside assignments of certain mortgages made by deceased, a finding that the assignments had been delivered to defendant before the assignor's death, is sustained by the evidence where the sister and mother of the assignee testified that they saw the papers in her custody prior to that time, and of two other persons that the assignor had stated that he had given assignee property to the amount of the mortgages assigned, and that he had assigned the mortgages to her, and it was conclusively shown that the assignor intended the assignee to have these mortgages after his death.—Peirson v. McNeil, 137 Mich. 158.

¶ 253. That certain deeds were not delivered to grantee and were never intended to be delivered by the grantor is shown in an action to quiet title, where it appears that the grantee lived with his father and mother, the grantor, that his mother never had any conversation with grantee about the deeds, that he never paid anything for such conveyances, and did not know of their existence until after the death of his mother; that prior to her death the deeds were in her custody or that of a third person; that they were subsequently placed of record by a third person; that the mother made her will devising the property described in such deeds, to her husband, and that she treated such deeds as of no account.—Lyon v. Lyon, 76 Mich. 610.

¶ 255. That there was a legal delivery of a deed is to be inferred, where, it appears that such deed, being in form a present grant, was in fact in the grantor's presence manually delivered to the grantee, and was by him formally accepted and retained, and that nothing was said or done at that time which in any way tended to qualify the legal effect of the acts and conduct of the parties. —Wilbur v. Grover, 140 Mich. 187.

¶ 256. The delivery of a deed is established by evidence that the grantor father handed it to the grantee sister who took it and handed it to her brother who kept it for her.—Fischer v. Union Trust Co., 138 Mich. 612.

§ 52. ——To show delivery through intermediary.

Delivery through depositary on death of grantor or maker, see ante § 35.
Delivery through third persons, see ante § 35.

¶ 257. Where the evidence pertaining to the delivery of a deed by a grantor to a third person with definite instructions for its delivery to a grantee after the grantor's death, rests in parol, the evidence must be clear, convincing and unequivocal in order to defeat the rights of the grantor's intervening creditors.—Brown v. Kelser, 182 Mich. 432. (Ostrander, Brooke, Kuhn and Bird, JJ., dissenting.)

¶ 258. On a bill to quiet title to a farm and to restore a deed evidence held sufficient to sustain a finding that a deed was delivered to a conveyancer to be delivered to the grantee upon the grantor's death.—Peterson v. Bisbee, 191 Mich. 439.

¶ 259. On a bill by heirs at law of a deceased person to set aside a deed by deceased to defendant, her brother, evidence held sufficient to show an unconditional delivery of the deed and certificates of deposit to the scrivener who prepared the deed, to take effect upon the death of deceased.—Luce v. Luce, 197 Mich. 465.

¶ 260. In an action for the partition of lands which was occupied by two sisters, each of whom owned one-half thereof but divided the aggregate income during their common lifetime, the sister dying first leaving a life estate in her property to the surviving sister, and the latter occupying both tracts until her death, evidence held insufficient to establish that a deed executed by the sister who died last in favor of the other and intrusted to a third person was ever delivered to the grantee.—Shumway v. Mason, 189 Mich. 623.

¶ 261. Evidence held sufficient to show that a representative of the owner of the land, who claimed an interest in his own behalf in the property for advances, would not have delivered a quitclaim deed if he had known that it was intended as a present conveyance of the land.—Conlon v. Irvine, 194 Mich. 165.

§ 53. ——To show intentional surrender of possession and control.

Yielding up custody and possession as requisite of delivery, see ante § 30.

¶ 262. Sufficient delivery is shown where a grantor has executed a deed for a right of way and delivered it to the grantee without any qualification or any intention to withdraw it and it is subsequently signed by other grantors and possession taken by the grantee.—Thomson v. Flint & P. M. R. Co., 131 Mich. 95.

¶ 263. Evidence of possession of a deed several years later by the attorney for the grantee's assigns and proof of the signature of the grantor and of the witness is sufficient to show delivery of the deed.—Carpenter v. Carpenter, 126 Mich. 217.

¶ 264. The evidence was sufficient to show a delivery of a deed where the testimony, though conflicting, was to the effect that the grantee had possession of the deed holding it as security for his liability as indorser of the grantor's obligations and that he recorded it after a delay of thirteen months following his enforced payment of the debts of the grantor.—Jordan v. De Golia, 91 Mich. 370.

¶ 265. A bill filed by a daughter against her mother to obtain the benefit of a deed from the latter was dismissed, and on appeal the dismissal was affirmed, but without costs of the supreme court against either party, where, though the proofs were strong, they did not sufficiently preponderate for complainant to show that the mother's deed to the daughter had ever been fully delivered so as to place the property beyond the mother's control.—Devaney v. Koyne, 54 Mich. 116.

¶ 266. A grantor who had executed to his son a deed of land which the latter occupied promised to record and send it to him, but kept it in his possession unrecorded till his own death, nearly four years later. The evidence was conflicting as to whether he really meant to record it or not. Held, by a majority of the court, that it fell short of showing a delivery.—Burnett v. Burnett, 40 Mich. 361.

¶ 267. Testimony of a son who claims a delivery of certain deeds to him by his father, in which he states that his father directed him to take care of a box containing the deeds in question together with other papers, is to be preferred to confused testimony of his wife, who stated on cross-examination that the deceased father told the son to take the box home and that the papers in it were his; and such preferred testimony fails to show a present delivery of the deeds to the son.—Gleason v. Stonehouse, 149 Mich. 611.

¶ 268. On an issue as to whether a deed was delivered absolutely or was subject to recall, evidence that when the deed was executed before the notary, it was left with him, and that he afterwards recorded it, together with his testimony that it was delivered absolutely without any right of recall, was sufficient to sustain a finding of an absolute delivery against testimony of two other witnesses, one being interested, that the grantor delivered the deed to the notary with instructions to take care of it for him.—Young v. Young, 157 Mich. 80.

¶ 269. In a suit by the heir to set aside a deed, evidence that the grantor and the grantees signed and acknowledged the deed in a notary's office and at the same time executed a lease for life to the grantor, testimony by one witness that the grantor never delivered the deed and by another that after delivery the grantor requested possession, and evidence that the lease for life was recorded only as a sort of protective measure after the grantor learned that the deed was recorded is held to support a decree for the complainant.—Merchant v. Guilds, 129 Mich. 168.

¶ 270. Evidence was sufficient to establish a delivery of a quitclaim deed where complainant's testimony was that the deed was executed by defendants and sent to complainant grantee with an indorsement of recordation on it and shortly afterwards at the request of the defendants the complainant grantee returned the deed to the defendant grantors for safe keeping; and there was no direct testimony contradicting that of complainant.—Nolan v. Garrison, 151 Mich. 138.

¶ 271. Delivery of deeds from parents to their sons was not established, where after the execution of the deeds the mother stated in the presence and without dissent on the part of the father "Here boys, are your deeds"; but where the deeds were put in a receptacle in the father's room and remained there until the mother's death when they disappeared and without the knowledge of the father were recorded; and where the parents lived on and retained complete control of the property and made improvements and executed a mortgage on the land and where the father claimed that the sons were not to have had the deeds, if at all, until after the death of both himself and his wife.—Roup v. Roup, 136 Mich. 385.

¶ 272. The testimony of the grantor of an instrument in form a warranty deed, but in character a will, that she told the person, to whom she had intrusted the instrument as custodian, not to put the same on record, will be taken as true, even though such testimony is directly contradicted by such custodian and his wife, where, the record shows that there was some feeling between these parties and such grantor, and their inclination on cross-examination to evade answering material questions upon this matter, and that they had made statements on another occasion in conflict with their testimony, and where such instruction of grantor is in accordance with the terms on which she first intrusted such instrument with a custodian, as established by the testimony of all the witnesses.—Leonard v. Leonard, 145 Mich. 563.

Validity and sufficiency of delivery to one spouse for other, see ante § 36.

¶ 274. The delivery of a deed by a husband to his wife is not conclusively shown by the fact that the grantor obtained a reconveyance by quitclaim deed from the wife's heir.—Draper v. Brown, 153 Mich. 120.

¶ 275. Under Comp. Laws 1897, §§ 8933, 8934, where a prospective husband and wife enter into an ante-nuptial agreement by which she is to give up all right, title and interest to his property in return for a note and mortgage for $2,000, and this agreement is drawn before marriage and retained by the attorney at their request until the marriage is executed and then handed over to the parties, there is sufficient to show delivery of the agreement "before marriage."—Koch v. Koch, 126 Mich. 187.

¶ 276. Testimony by a conveyancer that a husband and wife came to his office and stated that they wanted deeds drawn so that the survivor should get the property, that he drew deeds from each to the other and they took them away, does not of necessity show delivery at that time.—Gardiner v. Gardiner, 134 Mich. 90.

§ 55. ——Recitals as evidence of delivery.

¶ 277. A recital in a deed that it was signed, sealed and delivered in the presence of named witnesses, was some evidence of the delivery of the deed.—Dennis v. Dennis, 119 Mich. 380.

¶ 278. The statement "signed, sealed and delivered in the presence of" above the signatures of the witnesses to a deed does not necessarily imply an actual delivery.—Gardiner v. Gardiner, 134 Mich. 90.

§ 56. Court and jury questions and instructions.

Jury questions and instructions as to execution, see ante § 20.

¶ 279. Where the person claiming under a deed which remained under the control of the grantor, conditioned that delivery should be withheld during the latter's lifetime, fails to establish delivery by competent evidence, a verdict should be directed against him.—Broffee v. Le Fils, 183 Mich. 100.

¶ 280. Upon testimony admitted by plaintiffs to be true that subscription contracts for the building of a creamery were not to be binding until delivered over by a committee, which was to hold them until an investigation was made and the price ascertained to be as low as such a creamery could be purchased for, and that the project was dropped after an investigation and adverse conclusion by the committee, it was proper to direct a verdict for the subscriber for want of delivery, though the promisee had possession of the paper by some means not appearing.—Davis v. Kneale, 103 Mich. 323.

¶ 281. In an action of ejectment where defendant claimed under deed from deceased parent an instruction that burden was on plaintiff to show by preponderance of evidence that the deed from the parent to defendant had not been delivered, held erroneous.—Barras v. Barras, 192 Mich. 584.

¶ 282. Where the execution of a deed was testified to by the grantor and by the officer before whom it was acknowledged, a charge that there was no evidence of a conveyance from the alleged grantor to the grantee was properly refused.—Goodell v. Labadie, 19 Mich. 88.

¶ 283. Where a contract in duplicate was left by the parties with a third person, and the evidence as to the arrangement for its subsequent delivery, and the terms upon which it was to become operative, was conflicting, it was held that the question of the terms and conditions upon which the contract was to become operative was one of fact for the jury, depending upon the intention of the parties to be gathered from the whole transaction; and that the court was right in refusing to charge that delivery in a particular mode was essential.—Jaquith v. Hudson, 5 Mich. 123.

¶ 284. The question of delivery of a deed should not be submitted as a question of fact to the jury, although not witnessed or acknowledged, where the grantor executed the deed and delivered same to the grantee before the former's death, and it was in the possession of the grantee and in his safety deposit box at his bank at the time of the grantor's death.—Jennings v. Reeson, 200 Mich. 559.

EXECUTIONS.

TREATS of final process against property for the enforcement of judgments by subjecting such property to satisfaction of the judgment, excluding process for possession of the property (see Assistance, Writ of; Ejectment, V; Replevin, IV) in actions for possession or decrees carrying the right to possession, and capias ad satisfaciendum to coerce the person (see Civil Arrest and Bail). The original and mesne process of Attachment and Garnishment is treated in those topics.

Execution from probate court to adjust contribution, see Jud. Act, chap. LII, § 29; Comp. L. 1915, § 13801.

¶ 2. Where the original decree rendered in a cause authorized the issue of execution, express authority was unnecessary in an amended decree in the same cause, the former being, of necessity, part of the latter.—Reynolds v. Reynolds, 115 Mich. 378.

¶ 3. The fact that a decree in chancery fails to contain an order for an execution does not determine the complainant's rights in that respect; for if by law he is entitled to an execution on such a decree, application for a modification of the decree may be made.—Mast v. Washtenaw Circuit Judge, 154 Mich. 485.

§ 3. Stage or condition of the judgment.

Pending writ or error or appeal, see post § 4.
Stay or supersedeas of judgment, see post § 5.
Bar of judgment by time, see post § 6.
Stay to move for new trial or to settle bill, see post § 11.
Order for execution before enrollment but issuance thereafter, see post ¶ 17.
Taking out execution after death and before revivor, see Abatement ¶ 88.

¶ 4. Under 1 Comp. Laws 1897, § 468, execution cannot issue prior to the enrollment of the decree on which it is based, although an application for execution may be filed before the decree is enrolled.—Dewey v. Dewey, 151 Mich. 586.

¶ 5. An execution may issue at once upon a judgment rendered near the close of the term, unless a motion for a new trial or in arrest of judgment is made.—People ex rel. Gibson v. Bay County Circuit Court Clerk, 14 Mich. 169.

¶ 6. Where the plaintiff in ejectment, after verdict, elects, under Comp. L. 1897, § 10097, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 13197, to abandon the premises to the defendant at the value of an undivided interest fixed by the jury, and judgment is entered for such value, an execution is issuable immediately upon entry of the judgment, notwithstanding the provisions of section 10981 (How. St., 2nd Ed., § 10181), providing for a new trial within three years after judgment, on application therefor.—Rich v. Victoria Copper Mining Co., 163 Fed. 207.

§ 4. Pending writ of error or appeal.

Remand with directions as to execution, see Appeal § 516.

¶ 7. Mere intention to take out a writ of error does not preclude the prevailing party from taking out an execution.—Castor v. Allegan Circuit Judge, 54 Mich. 318.

¶ 8. A judgment creditor may proceed to collect his judgment notwithstanding the allowance of a writ of error, if his opponent has filed no bond to stay the proceedings; and under Comp. L. 1871, §§ 6189, 6190, if he does not exhaust this remedy he cannot take out a ca. sa. after three months from the return day of the execution.—Douglass v. Manistee Circuit Judge, 42 Mich. 495.

¶ 9. Upon the filing of a bond under How. St., § 7621c et seq., in stay of execution, and the issue of a writ of error, the circuit court loses jurisdiction, and has no power to make any further order in the cause until the same is properly transmitted to that court from the supreme court. In such case, therefore, an execution does not become "legally issuable" out of the circuit court, within the meaning of How. St., § 7029, which forbids a levy upon the property of a surety on an appeal bond unless the execution is issued within thirty days from the time when it shall be legally issuable, until the filing of a remittitur from the supreme court.—Wright v. King, 107 Mich. 660.

§ 5. Stay or supersedeas of judgment.

Effect of supersedeas or stay, see Stay, II.

¶ 10. An execution issued by the clerk and delivered to the attorney of the judgment creditor on the last of the twenty days during which proceedings were stayed, and by said attorney delivered to the sheriff on the following day, is a valid writ when delivered to the sheriff.—Peterson v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 108 Mich. 608.

§ 6. Bar of judgment or other laches or delay.

¶ 11. Execution cannot issue upon a judgment, action whereon is barred by the statute of limitations.—Jerome v. Williams, 13 Mich. 521; Parsons v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 37 Mich. 287.

¶ 12. Execution cannot issue nor can levy be made after action on the judgment is outlawed.—Ludeman v. Hirth, 96 Mich. 17.

¶ 13. An execution to enforce a deficiency after foreclosure of a land contract cannot issue after the statute of limitations has run against the original decree.—Albert v. Patterson, 167 Mich. 162.

¶ 14. An execution issued on June, 1904, on a decree filed in November, 1888, is invalid as barred by lapse of time and may properly be vacated on petition.—Quinnin v. Quinnin, 144 Mich. 232.

§ 7. Pendency of other process or action.

Outstanding capias as bar to property execution, see Civil Arrest § 38.

Outstanding body execution as bar to right, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, § 28 et seq.; Comp. L. 1915, § 12843 et seq.

Issuance of several writs at one time to different sheriffs, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, § 10; Comp. L. 1915, § 12825.

¶ 16. A circuit court commissioner may issue execution for collection of costs in proceedings against fraudulent debtors.—Watson v. Randall, 44 Mich. 514.

¶ 17. An execution is not void because the order allowing it to issue was made before the enrollment of the decree, if the execution itself did not issue until after enrollment.—Taylor v. Gladwin, 40 Mich. 232.

¶ 18. An execution is not issued until it is placed in the hands of an officer who can do some efficient act under it.—First Nat. Bank v. Dwight, 83 Mich. 189.

¶ 19. An execution cannot be considered as issued until it is placed in the hands of the sheriff, or other proper officer, for service.—Peterson v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 108 Mich. 608.

§ 10. Alias writs.

See also post ¶ 82.

Provisions for alias executions, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, § 1; Comp. L. 1915, § 12816.

¶ 20. Where an execution that has been levied on mortgaged chattels is returned unsatisfied with a statement showing that the levy had been unlawfully defeated by seizure of the chattels, a further execution may issue.—Nelson v. Ferris, 30 Mich. 497.

¶ 21. A second execution cannot issue where there is an existing levy undischarged.—Friyer v. McNaughton, 110 Mich. 22.

¶ 22. Execution was issued under a judgment in attachment proceedings against defendant, and the sheriff levied upon and sold thereunder a large amount of personal property and returned the fieri facias wholly satisfied. Subsequently defendant's general assignee obtained in the superior court a judgment in an action of trover against the sheriff for the value of the property levied upon and sold, and the judgment was affirmed by the supreme court on appeal. Plaintiff afterwards made a motion in the superior court for an order setting aside the return of the former execution and for an alias execution under Comp. Laws 1871, § 6118 (2 How. Stat., § 7703), for the full amount of judgment and costs. Held, that the return to the first execution should be set aside and that an alias execution should issue for the amount of judgment and costs, save those of the attachment and sale.—Omaha White Lead Co. v. Worcester, How. N. P. 274.

§ 11. Recall or stay of execution.

Stay on appeal or error, see Stay, II.

Stay of execution on ground of bankruptcy of debtor pending error to judgment, see Bankruptcy ¶ 46.

Jurisdiction to recall execution to permit of appeal or error, see Appeal § 138, ¶ 607.

¶ 23. Pub. Acts 1915, chap. XXII, § 23, providing that no stay of proceedings upon any verdict or judgment shall be granted for the purpose of moving for a new trial or settling a bill of exceptions for a longer period than 20 days unless a bond is executed to the adverse party, is unambiguous, and a party is not entitled to have an execution recalled where he does not file the bond within the required time.—Hatch v. Washtenaw Circuit Judge, 200 Mich. 1.

III. CONTENTS, FORM AND COMMAND OF WRIT.

Issuance and delivery to officer, see ante § 9.

Provision for inclusion of execution for costs or damages in writ of possession, see Jud. Act, chap. XXXIII, § 15; Comp. L. 1915, § 13372.

Executions in attachment cases, see Jud. Act, chap. XXVI, §§ 25-27; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 13052-13054.

Money executions in replevin actions, see Jud. Act, chap. XXVII, § 30; Comp. L. 1915, § 13109.

Executions in actions for recovery of penalties and fines, see Jud. Act, chap. XXXV, §§ 4, 41-43; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 13396, 13433-13435.

¶ 24. Want of seal does not avoid an execution. It may be supplied on motion to amend. It is not, therefore, a valid objection to a certified transcript of the judgment and the proceedings thereon, that it does not show that an execution issued upon the judgment was under seal.—Arnold v. Nye, 23 Mich. 286.

¶ 25. An execution is not made void by the accidental omission of the plaintiff's name if it appears in the indorsement, which for purposes of identification forms part of the process.—McGuire v. Galligan, 53 Mich. 453.

¶ 26. The fees for an execution are now included in the taxed costs (Comp. L. 1857, § 3790; How. St., § 6951), but an execution commanding the officer to collect twenty-five cents for the execution, in addition to the costs as taxed, does not avoid the writ, but is mere surplusage.—Hollister v. Giddings, 24 Mich. 501.

§ 13, Indorsements on writ.

Indorsing the levy on the writ, see post § 42.
Indorsement aiding omission of name from writ, see also ante ¶ 25.
Indorsement amounting to abandonment of levy, see post ¶ 154.

Indorsement of names of joint debtors not served, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, § 19; Comp. L. 1915, § 12834.
Indorsement of description of mortgaged premises on writ issuing on judgment for mortgage debt, with direction not to levy thereon, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, § 125; Comp. L. 1915, § 12940.

¶ 27. The failure of the attorney for an attaching creditor, in a case where defendant was not served and did not appear, to indorse on the execution issued in the cause a description of the property attached, with a direction to the officer as required by How. St., §§ 8008, 8009, cannot be taken advantage of on writ of error.—Hitchcock v. Hahn, 60 Mich. 459.

¶ 28. The court may permit the indorsement by the sheriff of the date of its receipt on an execution after the return thereof, when inadvertently admitted.—Forsythe v. Washtenaw Circuit Judge, 180 Mich. 633.

¶ 29. Where a sheriff fails to indorse on an execution the date he received same, as required by 3 Comp. Laws 1897, § 10309, the defect is not fatal where he testifies orally that he received the writ the same day on which he filed a notice of the levy on the land.—Shepard v. Schrutt, 163 Mich. 485.

IV. PROPERTY SUBJECT TO EXECUTION.

§ 14. In general; situs or ownership.

Provisions as to homesteads, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, § 73 et seq.; Comp. L. 1915, § 12888 et seq.

¶ 30. The right of seizure on execution is not confined to property within the state at the time of suit or of judgment.—Ralston v. Chapin, 49 Mich. 274.

¶ 31. Where one who buys from an attachment debtor after the attachment is sued out, but before it is actually levied, promises that he will pay the attaching creditor's claim, the promise does not render the property liable to execution even if it places the purchaser under a personal obligation to the debtor; the creditor is a stranger to it and cannot take the property.—Hunt v. Strew, 39 Mich. 368.

§ 15. Personal chattels and properties in general.

What is personal and what real, see post § 37.
Interests existing under mortgage, pledge or sale, see post §§ 16, 17.
Growing crops, see post § 18.

Abstract books and records, leviable by statute, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, § 37; Comp. L. 1915, § 12852.
Coin, currency and evidences of debt as leviable property, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, §§ 38, 39; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12853, 12854.

¶ 32. Unpublished manuscripts—as here, a set of books of abstracts of title—are not subject to levy.—Dart v. Woodhouse, 40 Mich. 399.

§ 16. ——Mortgagor's or mortgagee's or pledge interests in chattels.

Under conditional sales, see post § 17.
Mode of sale, see post § 65.
Rights of possession under levy and custody and keeping, see post § 51.
Levy and sale of property subject to pledge or mortgage, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, § 40; Comp. L. 1915, § 12855.

¶ 33. Prior to the statute of 1861 (see How. St., § 7682) mortgaged goods and chattels were not subject to seizure and sale on execution against the mortgagor, except during the time he was entitled to retain the property by special agreement with the mortgagee.—Tannahill v. Tuttle, 3 Mich. 104; Eggleston v. Mundy, 4 Mich. 295; Bacon v. Kimmel, 14 Mich. 201; Haynes v. Leppig, 40 Mich. 602.

¶ 34. Under statute execution may be levied upon the mortgagor's interest in mortgaged chattels at any time before actual foreclosure.—Cary v. Hewitt, 26 Mich. 228; Macomber v. Saxton, 28 Mich. 516; Nelson v. Ferris, 30 Mich. 497; Haynes v. Leppig, 40 Mich. 602; Smith v. Menominee Circuit Judge, 53 Mich. 560; Daggett v. McClintock, 56 Mich. 51.

¶ 35. Where a vendee claims under a bill of sale given as security, the sheriff under How. St., § 7682, has a right to levy upon the goods at the suit of the vendor's creditors subject to the vendee's mortgage interest.—Mueller v. Provo, 80 Mich. 475.

§ 17. ——Buyer's or seller's rights, goods sold reserving title.

¶ 36. A contract purchaser can waive his claim to a specific lot of merchandise by consenting that it be sold to some other person, or pledged or mortgaged to a creditor as the vendor's property, to revert to the vendor; and if he does so, his ownership ceases, and the merchandise must be regarded as the property of the vendor, and liable to execution against him, subject to the rights of the later purchaser or pledgee.—Anderson v. Brenneman, 44 Mich. 198.

¶ 37. Goods bought by A. with funds furnished him by B. for the purpose of setting him up in business do not belong to B., and are not subject to execution in favor of B.'s creditors.—Kintner v. Pickard, 67 Mich. 125.

¶ 38. Property sold on condition is not subject to execution by vendee's creditors when title remains in vendor.—Dewes Brewery Co. v. Merritt, 82 Mich. 198.

§ 18. Growing crops.

Crops as personalty for purpose of levy, see post § 37.
Necessity of sale in view of property, see post § 61.

¶ 39. Comp. L. 1871, § 4667; How. St., § 6147, forbids selling the equity of redemption when execution is levied on premises mortgaged for the debt; but it does not prevent a sale of a growing crop under such execution.—Preston v. Ryan, 45 Mich. 174.

§ 19. Choses in action, notes, bills, and orders for payment.

Corporate stocks and shares and partnership interests, see post § 20.

¶ 40. At common law a chose in action cannot be reached by or made subject to a levy of execution.—Feige v. Burt, 118 Mich. 243.

¶ 41. In the absence of express statutory authority choses in actions, bonds and promissory notes are not the subject of seizure and sale under execution.—Jensen v. Oceana Circuit Judge, 194 Mich. 405.

¶ 42. An order for the payment of money, or a promissory note, or any other similar chose in action, is not the subject of levy on execution.—People ex rel. Martin v. Wayne County Auditors, 5 Mich. 223.

¶ 43. A warrant drawn by a board of auditors upon the county treasurer for an account allowed by the board is not leviable.—People ex rel. Martin v. Wayne County Auditors, 5 Mich. 223.

§ 20. Corporate stocks and partnership interests.

Mode of levying, see post § 38.
Injunction against levy on share of partner, see also post ¶ 295.
Improper levy as conversion, see post § 122.
Executions and attachment against corporations, see Corporations, XX.
Execution and levy on stock as against holders, see Corporations §§ 287, 288.
What corporations are within statute making stocks subject to levy, see Corporations § 287.

¶ 44. Executions cannot be levied on shares of corporation stock if the debtor is not himself the legal possessor of the interest, or where he has only an equitable right or has regularly assigned his interest. —Van Norman v. Jackson Circuit Judge, 45 Mich. 204; Gypsum Plaster & Stucco Co. v. Kent Circuit Judge, 97 Mich. 631.

¶ 45. Stock issued by an association organized under How. St., ch. 188, for "yachting, hunting, fishing, boating, rowing, and other lawful sporting purposes," is not subject to levy and sale on execution under How. St., § 7697, authorizing levy upon a sale of shares of stock of a bank, insurance company, or any other joint-stock company; since it was not within the contemplation of such statute under which such association was organized, that it should carry on a business for profit, although allowed to hold a limited amount of property for the purpose for which it was organized.—Lyon v. Denison, 80 Mich. 371.

¶ 46. An execution upon a judgment against one partner cannot be validly levied upon the undivided half of such partner in a portion of the partnership property.—Hutchinson v. Dubois, 45 Mich. 143; Kunze v. Cox, 113 Mich. 546; Ernest v. Woodworth, 124 Mich. 1; Krupp v. Adams, 124 Mich. 215.

¶ 47. A debtor's title to lands which he has contracted to convey is subject to sale and execution against him; and the execution purchaser will take subject to the performance of the debtor's obligation to convey when the contract is complied with.—Doak v. Runyan, 33 Mich. 75.

¶ 48. Where a surrender of possession and of his contract is made in good faith by a vendee because of forfeiture for default in payment, a subsequent levy of execution on his interest in the land bought by him must fail.—Welsh v. Richards, 41 Mich. 593.

¶ 49. Where a judgment-debtor has sold land on a contract subsequent to taking out of execution, his legal title may nevertheless be reached by a sale of the land on the execution.—Rohrbacher v. Walsh, 170 Mich. 59.

¶ 50. Where a verbal agreement is entered into between heirs whereby one heir agrees to stay upon the premises to take care of same and also to take care of the mother and sisters during their lives, in consideration of the deeding of the interest of the other heir to such heir occupying the premises, the interest of the heir agreeing to make such conveyance is subject to levy by execution.—Schmidt v. Steinbach, 193 Mich. 640.

§ 22. ——Undivided and common interests.

Nonliability of wife's lands for husband's debts, see Husband and Wife, IV, D.

¶ 51. The individual interest of one of two joint tenants in land is subject to levy and sale upon execution against such tenant. —Midgley v. Walker, 101 Mich. 583.

¶ 52. Whether the interest of one tenant in common in a part only of the lands held in common can be sold on execution against him, quære.—Campau v. Godfrey, 18 Mich. 27.

¶ 53. Execution cannot be levied on a husband's undivided life interest in real estate which he occupied jointly with his wife, especially if it be their homestead.—Vinton v. Beamer, 55 Mich. 559.

¶ 54. The interest of a husband as tenant in common in land conveyed by him to himself and wife is subject to levy and sale upon execution under Comp. L. 1897, § 9167, How. St., 2nd ed., § 11321.—Michigan State Bank of Eaton Rapids v. Kern, 189 Mich. 467.

¶ 55. Where a husband purchased a part-paid certificate issued at state sale and assigned a half interest to his wife, and upon payment by the wife of the balance due, a patent issued to the husband and wife in entirety, the undivided half interest of the husband will be subject to execution upon a decree obtained against him enforcing liability as a stockholder in a bank which became insolvent prior to the issuance of the patent; although it is claimed that when the assignment was made the husband owed no debts and that the patent accomplished only what was intended to be accomplished by the assignment.—Foster v. Whelpley, 123 Mich. 350.

§ 23. ——Interests represented by certificates of purchase.

Undivided interests in certificate, see ante ¶ 55.

Nature of interest of purchaser under certificate, see post § 69 et seq.; Public Lands; Taxes, XII, A.

¶ 56. Since Laws 1851, pp. 84, 85 (How. St., § 5269), the interest of any purchaser of primary school lands is liable to levy and sale under execution.—Kercheval v. Wood, 3 Mich. 509.

¶ 57. A levy of execution on certificates of sale of land for delinquent taxes is good.—Welch v. Rogers, How. N. P. 255.

§ 24. ——Lands mortgaged or transferred for security.

Rights acquired by the levy, see post § 49.

Statutory exemption of equity of redemption from levy for mortgage debt, leviability of crops, see ante ¶ 39.

Nonsalability of equity of redemption on judgment for mortgage debt, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, § 124; Comp. L. 1915, § 12939.

Right to redeem from execution sale or from mortgages as leviable real estate, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, § 121; Comp. L. 1915, § 12936.

¶ 58. An equity of redemption in mortgaged premises, being a legal estate, is subject to execution against the mortgagor.—Gorham v. Arnold, 22 Mich. 247.

¶ 59. The grantor of a deed absolute to land, given as a mortgage, has a legal title to such land which may be levied upon and sold under execution as against such grantor.—Flynn v. Holmes, 145 Mich. 606.

¶ 60. A judgment may be satisfied from property conveyed by a judgment debtor by an absolute deed intended as a mortgage, after the satisfaction of the amount thereby secured.—Fassbender v. Donohue, 184 Mich. 52.

§ 25. ——Fraudulent transfers and titles taken in another's name.

What transfers are deemed fraudulent as to creditors, see Fraudulent Conveyances, I.

Creditors entitled to treat transfer as fraudulent and levy on the land, see Fraudulent Conveyances, II.

Remedy of creditors to levy on land and sue to set aside transfer, see Fraudulent Conveyances, V, A.

¶ 61. Lands which a judgment debtor has purchased and caused to be conveyed by the vendor directly to a third person are not subject to execution.—Trask v. Green, 9 Mich. 358; Maynard v. Hoskins, 9 Mich. 485.

§ 26. Franchises and appurtenances.

Priority of levy on and mortgage of franchises, see post § 32.

Levy on corporate franchises, see also Corporations §§ 198, 199.

Leviability of franchises of toll taking corporations, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, § 65; Comp. L. 1915, § 12880.

¶ 62. At the common law the franchises of a corporation were not subject to seizure and sale upon execution, but could only be reached by proceedings in equity.—James v. Pontiac & G. Plank Road Co., 8 Mich. 91.

¶ 63. Levy cannot be made upon the track or roadbed of a railway, but, aside from the goods and chattels, must be upon the franchise of earning tolls, as provided by the corporation laws.—Hackley v. Mack, 60 Mich. 591.

§ 27. Trust property and interests in trusts.

¶ 64. Trust estates are not liable to levy and sale on execution.—Gorham v. Wing, 10 Mich. 486; Gorham v. Arnold, 22 Mich. 247.

¶ 66. An execution cannot be levied on land to which the debtor has no right except as a trustee in good faith. So held where, without fraud, the debtor had sold his interest in his own contract to buy the land and had agreed to assign it when the purchase price was fully paid him, and had afterwards assigned his interest in this latter agreement to his wife for a bona fide previous indebtedness to her.—Loomis v. Smith, 37 Mich. 595.

¶ 67. The contingent right to a reconveyance is not a legal interest but a mere equity, and at common law it could not be levied upon. If subject at all to attachment and execution it could only be on compliance with Comp. L. 1871, § 4628, How. St., § 6108, which provides for supplementing levies by proceedings to determine the interest seized. Whether a bankruptcy proceeding would be sufficient to do this, quære.—Grover v. Fox, 36 Mich. 453.

¶ 68. While other creditors may have an interest in the surplus under a trust to sell lands for the benefit of specified creditors, they cannot reach it by attachment levy since such levy would hinder the sale.—Geer v. Traders' Bank of Canada, 132 Mich. 215.

¶ 69. The estate of a cestui que trust is not subject to execution.—Feldman v. Preston, 194 Mich. 352.

¶ 70. Contrary to the rule applying to real estate, execution may be levied to reach personal property of the debtor where the title was taken in the name of another, and parol testimony is admissible on behalf of a defendant in replevin to show by whom the property was really purchased.—French v. Newberry, 124 Mich. 147.

§ 28. Property affected by public interest.

Impropriety of execution to enforce judgments against municipalities, see Counties § 56; Municipal Corporations XVI, A; Townships, VIII; Municipal Bonds, VI.

¶ 71. The interest of a corporation in an electric plant, erected for the use of a city under a contract which has been declared void in a suit by taxpayers of the city for an accounting as to the moneys received thereunder, is not exempt from sale on execution issued upon the decree obtained in such suit, on the ground that such plant is devoted to public use.—Campbell v. Western Electric Co., 113 Mich. 333, 337.

V. LIEN AND PRIORITIES; DIVERSE WRITS AND JUDGMENTS.

§ 29. In general.

Of attachment liens, see Attachment, VIII.

Levy as commencement of lien, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, § 6; Comp. L. 1915, § 12821.

¶ 72. An execution levy relates back to the levy of an attachment so as to hold the interest then owned by the defendant.—Avery v. Stephens, 48 Mich. 246.

§ 30. Lien of levy on land.

Duration of lien, see post § 31.

¶ 73. By Act No. 227, Pub. Acts 1889 (3 Comp. Laws 1897, § 9224), the former rule was changed, so that now, upon the filing of notice of a levy with the register of deeds, such levy becomes a lien upon the property levied on, and the lien thus obtained is, from the filing of said notice, valid as against all grantees and mortgagees of whose claims the party interested has not actual or constructive notice.—First Nat. Bank of Durand v. Phillpotts, 155 Mich. 331.

§ 31. ——Duration of lien.

Effect of failure to give notice of levy on crop, see post ¶ 114.
Duration of lien of levy on real estate, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, § 84; Comp. L. 1915, § 12899.

¶ 74. A lien upon real estate by virtue of a levy under execution is not lost by delay in proceeding to sale, where fraudulent purpose on the execution creditor's part is not shown.—Ludeman v. Hirth, 96 Mich. 17.

¶ 75. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 9233, a levy by execution remains a lien on real estate for only five years, and a deed made by an execution debtor subsequent to a levy cannot be defeated by a sale made under a levy after the period of five years.—Bliss v. Slater, 144 Mich. 648.

¶ 76. Under Comp. Laws 1897, § 9751, How. 2nd ed., § 14158, providing that every action upon a judgment shall be brought within ten years after the entry thereof, and Comp. Laws 1897, § 10312, How. 2nd ed., § 13015, providing that an execution shall be binding upon the property levied upon from the time of levy, and Comp. Laws 1897, § 9224, How. 2nd ed., § 11386, relating to the filing of a notice of levy of execution in the office of the register of deeds and providing that such levy shall be a lien from the time of deposit of the levy, and Comp. Laws 1897, § 9233, How. 2nd ed., § 11387, providing that every levy by execution on real estate shall cease to be a lien at the end of five years from the time of making the levy unless the real estate is sooner sold thereon, a valid execution may be issued at any time during the lifetime of the judgment and it remains valid and enforceable for the five-year period, regardless of the expiration of the judgment.—Mosher v. Borden, 201 Mich. 106.

§ 32. Priorities between levy and transfers or mortgages.

Between diverse or successive levies, see post § 33.
Property or right taken by levy, see post § 49.
Conclusiveness of return as to facts controlling priority, see post § 111.
Priorities of mortgages and other incumbrances and transfers, see Mortgages, V: Notice and Record of Title.
Priority of levy on corporate property pending suit for receiver but before title vests in receiver, see Corporations § 241, ¶ 895.

¶ 77. A levy will prevail over subsequent transactions, but it cannot invalidate prior dispositions in favor of honest creditors.—People v. Bristol, 35 Mich. 28.

¶ 78. Where an instrument in the form of a deed and recorded as such, and not as a mortgage, was in reality given as security, it is subordinate to an execution levy by a creditor of the vendor who did not have actual notice thereof.—Johnson v. Cook, 179 Mich. 117.

¶ 79. A levy of execution on the franchises and property of a street railway company was given priority to a mortgage dated a year and a half earlier and given to secure bonds which were only meant to be sold in the market, but which, without corporate authority or ratification, had been turned over to the mortgagee, who knew they had never been sold, as collateral security for the private debts of the company's treasurer, who had a controlling interest in its property. —McKee v. Grand Rapids & R. L. St. R. Co., 41 Mich. 274.

§ 33. ——Diverse, successive and conflicting levies and sales.

Relation of execution levy back to levy of attachment, see ante § 29.
Effect of junior levy subject to senior levy, see also post § 49, ¶ 136.
Sale in gross under several writs, see post § 66.

Levy and sale of property in custody of law as contempt, see Contempt § 5.
Priority between attachment levy and other levies, see Attachment § 98.
Priority in levy as determining priority of conflicting attachment judgments, see Attachment § 98.
Priorities among levies and liens on creditor's bill, see Creditors' Suits, §§ 31, 32.
Statutory provisions for priority among diverse writs, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, §§ 7-9; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12822-12824.

¶ 80. The rule which protects property in the hands of the United States marshal from being seized on state process does not prevent the marshal from surrendering an illegal levy voluntarily; and where upon a levy by the sheriff it does not appear that the marshal notified him that he claimed the property officially, or objected on that account to giving it up, there is no clashing of process.—Weber v. Henry, 16 Mich. 399.

¶ 81. Under different execution sales A. and B. successively acquired claims upon the same land interest belonging to C. There was no redemption from A.'s sale within the statutory period, but the amount of A.'s bid, with interest, was deposited with the register of deeds, and he paid it to A., who indorsed upon his certificate of sale a receipt in full of the amount of the certificate, and five years later quitclaimed to C., to whom, as A.'s assignee, the sheriff executed a deed; but only a few weeks after the payment to A. a sheriff's deed was issued to B., whose assignees conveyed to D. C. ignored the sale to B., however, and made partition of the lands; E. was one of the partitioners, and F. his tenant. D. brought ejectment against them to recover his interest in the land which they occupy. Whether these proceedings under A.'s execution operated to defeat the force of the sale and deed under the later execution, so as to be a legitimate defense to the action of ejectment, quære; the court being equally divided.—Whiting v. Butler, 29 Mich. 122.

¶ 82. Where an execution sale and deed were void because made without leave of court after the appointment of a receiver, for defendant corporation, the return of the officer was equally void for want of sufficient authority to make it, and therefore a later levy did not have priority as a lien based on such return.—Campau v. Detroit Driving Club, 135 Mich. 575.

¶ 83. Land was levied upon and sold by a judgment creditor, and at the time one who was in possession of the premises held a deed from the debtor of all his interest in the land. Subsequently another execution was issued and levied. In the meantime the deed had been set aside as a fraudulent conveyance, and the first execution held to be of no force on account of notice of possession. Held, that the last execution is a lien upon the debtor's interest to the extent of the judgment against him, irrespective of the amounts bid at the sale on execution.—Barbo v. Jeru, 155 Mich. 353.

§ 34. ——Filing notice of levy or visible possession as notice of priority.

¶ 84. To be notice to subsequent purchasers, notice of levy filed must be certain. —Davis Sewing Machine Co. v. Whitney, 61 Mich. 518.

¶ 85. Under How. St., § 6173, providing that no levy by execution on real estate shall be valid against bona fide conveyances made subsequent to such levy until notice thereof shall have been filed with the register of deeds, but that such levy shall, from the time of filing said notice, be a lien upon the premises, which shall be valid against all prior grantees of whose claims the party interested shall not have actual or constructive notice, a lien thus obtained will not take priority over the rights of one in actual possession under an unrecorded contract of purchase from the execution debtor, since such possession is constructive notice of his rights; nor will the filing of such notice of levy operate as notice to the vendee so as to invalidate payments thereafter made by him. —Corey v. Smalley, 106 Mich. 257.

¶ 86. After A. had sold land to B. on contract, and assigned his interest under such contract to C., neither the contract nor the assignment being of record, an execution against A. was levied upon the premises, of which B.'s tenant was in possession, proper notice of the levy being filed with the register of deeds. B. afterwards assigned to complainant, who, in ignorance of the levy, paid the balance of the purchase price to C., took an assignment from him, and obtained a deed from A. Held, that a sale under the levy was properly enjoined, even though the assignment from A. to C. may have been made with fraudulent intent, because the possession was actual notice to the levying creditor.—Corey v. Smalley, 106 Mich. 257.

¶ 87. A judgment creditor levying an execution on land, is, under § 9224, Comp. Laws 1897, § 11386, How. St., 2nd ed., affected by actual or constructive notice of the previous conveyance by the judgment debtor, under an unrecorded deed, of the land levied upon. —Lachelt v. McInerney, 185 Mich. 413.

¶ 88. After the recording of notice of levy of an execution on land, as required by § 9224, Comp. Laws 1897, § 11386, How. St., 2nd ed., a judgment creditor is not affected by subsequently acquired constructive notice of an unrecorded conveyance of the land by the judgment debtor previous to the levy of the execution.—Lachelt v. McInerney, 185 Mich. 413.

¶ 89. By virtue of Comp. L. 1897, § 9224, a levy followed by execution sale gives the purchaser thereunder priority over the vendee under a deed not recorded until after the notice of the levy was filed.—First Nat. Bank of Cooperstown v. State Savings Bank of Ionia, 130 Mich. 332.

¶ 90. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 9224, governing notice of levy of execution and providing that from the filing of notice the lien shall "be valid against all prior grantees and mortgages (mortgagees) of whose claims the party interested shall not have actual or constructive notice," the purchaser at an execution sale takes priority over a bona fide grantee whose deed was not recorded until after notice of the levy was filed, though executed prior thereto, the owner of the execution having no notice.—Gardner v. Mason, 130 Mich. 436.

¶ 91. Under Pub. Acts of 1889, No. 227, How. 2nd ed., § 11386, a levy under execution is given the same priority as is accorded to a conveyance duly recorded.—Schmidt v. Steinbach, 193 Mich. 640.

¶ 92. Where a debtor, holding the legal title to property which his wife claimed to have paid for and allowed a conveyance to be made to the husband, deeds the property to his son and his son's wife for the purpose of a reconveyance by them to the mother, execution creditors of the husband who make and perfect levies upon the property before the latter deed is recorded and without knowledge of its existence have the rights of bona fide purchasers under Comp. Laws 1897, § 9224, How. 2nd ed., § 11386, and whatever rights the wife has are inferior to the rights of such creditors.—Atkinson v. Akin, 197 Mich. 289.

¶ 93. An unrecorded deed is good as against an execution levy in the absence of fraud.—Otis v. Sprague, 118 Mich. 61.

¶ 94. The rights of a judgment creditor whose notice is first recorded as required by § 9224, Comp. Laws 1897, § 11386, How. St., 2nd ed., are presumed superior to one holding under an unrecorded conveyance.— Lachelt v. McInerney, 185 Mich. 413.

¶ 95. A lien acquired by levy on land while it was in the name of one legally entitled thereto, but holding under a void parol trust, is not affected by the execution defendant's conveyance thereafter to the persons to whom he made the promise, though they were in possession under him by his consent.—Barnes v. Munro, 95 Mich. 612.

¶ 96. Comp. L. 1897, § 9224, providing that the lien of an execution levy shall after the filing of notice with the register of deeds, be valid as against all prior grantees of whose claims the party interested had neither actual nor constructive notice, did not apply where title to land was taken in the name of a debtor without authority from the real purchaser, and the recording of the deed to such purchaser was delayed until after the filing of said notice; as the execution creditor lost nothing in the circumstances and in addition such purchaser was entitled to the benefit of Comp. L. 1897, § 8837, providing that a trust shall result in favor of the person furnishing the consideration for a deed, where the alienee takes title to himself without the knowledge or consent of such person.—Uhl v. Welden, 122 Mich. 638.

Necessity of compliance with statute in levying on stocks, see Corporations § 287.
How levied against corporations, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, § 41; Comp. L. 1915, § 12856.
Statutory mode of levying on corporate shares, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, §§ 58-63; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12873-12878.

¶ 99. A levy of execution must be so made as to identify or give means of identifying the property levied on so as to make it chargeable to the officer; and property not levied on cannot be afterwards claimed. There must be manual seizure, or such assertion of control as may be made effectual, if necessary, in order to bring and keep the property within the dominion of the law for sale on execution only. An intention to allow it to be disposed of by the execution debtor is not the intention required.—Quackenbush v. Henry, 42 Mich. 75.

¶ 100. Where mortgaged goods are levied on under an execution against the mortgagor, it is not illegal, when necessary, to take possession of distinct articles separately.—Harvey v. McAdams, 32 Mich. 472.

§ 37. ——As dependent on real or personal character of property.

Manner of selling chattel interests in land, see post § 63.

¶ 101. The estate of a tenant for years is not realty within the meaning of the statute relating to the levy and sale of lands on execution.—Buhl v. Kenyon, 11 Mich. 249.

¶ 102. If a right of possession is subject to seizure on execution it is as a chattel interest and not as real estate; and an execution levied on it as real estate will not bind it.—Grover v. Fox, 36 Mich. 453.

¶ 103. Growing crops, though part of the realty, are treated as personalty for the purposes of levy and sale on execution.—Preston v. Ryan, 45 Mich. 174.

§ 38. ——On partner's or other undivided interest in property.

Nonleviability of partner's share, see ante § 20.

¶ 104. A sheriff cannot levy on specific articles of partnership stock to satisfy an execution against only one of the partners. The levy, if it can be made at all, should be on the partner's interest in the whole stock.—Sirrine v. Briggs, 31 Mich. 443; Hutchinson v. Davis, 45 Mich. 143.

¶ 105. While an execution creditor of an individual partner may levy upon the interest of the execution debtor in the partnership property, such interest must be treated as consisting of a right to an aliquot share of what remains after the payment of partnership debts and the adjustment of accounts between the partners; and, therefore, a levy upon the interest of one partner in a specific pile of partnership lumber that does not include all the partnership property, is invalid.—Kunze v. Cox, 113 Mich. 546.

§ 39. ——Separation and selection of goods.

¶ 106. Where goods subject to execution are admixed with others which are not, the levying officer is bound to separate the former from the latter if possible.—McCausey v. Hoek, 159 Mich. 570.

§ 40. Amount to be taken.

¶ 107. In levying execution an officer has no right to seize and hold the whole of a debtor's property to satisfy a debt, which, even if all exemptions were allowed, would be more than secured by the remainder; and if he thereby preclude the debtor from engaging in his customary business, and even from keeping house, his action is oppressive and unjustifiable.—Handy v. Clippert, 50 Mich. 355.

§ 41. Procedure to levy on land.

Indorsing the levy on the writ, see post § 42.

Certifying the levy and description in certificate, see post § 43.
Notice of the levy, see post § 44.
Time for levy, see post §§ 45, 46.
Setting out homesteads, see post §§ 47, 48.
Completion by succeeding officer, see Sheriffs, II.

¶ 108. The method of making a levy on real estate, and the statutes referring to the subject, considered.—Campau v. Barnard, 25 Mich. 381.

¶ 109. A judgment creditor who levies, under How. St., § 6108, on lands conveyed by his debtor, must strictly follow the statute and must take steps to ascertain the interest retained by the debtor in the land.—Jenison v. Rankin, 57 Mich. 49.

§ 42. ——Indorsements on writ.

Effect of omission to indorse levy, see also post ¶ 299.
Addition of indorsements by amendment, see post § 113.

¶ 110. The question whether an officer has levied upon a complete title or only an incumbered interest is one of intent, as to which the officer need make no statement beyond the indorsement on his writ, which is the evidence of his final action, whatever his intent may have been.—Wallen v. Rossman, 45 Mich. 333.

§ 43. ——Certificates of levy and description of land.

Certificates of sale, see post § 76.

¶ 111. A certificate of levy on "lot 7 of the subdivision of lots 12, 13 and 14 of the Labrosse and Baker farms in Detroit" is not sufficient to charge a purchaser with notice that it is intended to cover "lot 7 of John Gibson's subdivision of lots 12, 13, 14 and 18 of the Labrosse and Baker farms, situated on the south side of Pine street, between Sixth and Seventh streets, according to the recorded plat of the same in the register's office of Wayne county." Suggestions given for description in levies.—Burrowes v. Gibson, 42 Mich. 121.

¶ 112. Where an execution levy described the land "as the undivided one-half of the following described land, to wit: the S.E. ¼ of the N.W. ¼ and the S.W. ¼ of the N.E. ¼," while the description in subsequent proceedings was "the undivided one-half of the" same description, the descriptions were identical and could not mislead.—Hoffman v. Buschman, 95 Mich. 538.

¶ 113. It seems that a levy on property misdescribed therein is no better than a conveyance or mortgage which misdescribes it.—Beyschlag v. Van Wagoner, 46 Mich. 91.

§ 44. Notice of levy on land or crop.

Omission of description as invalidating sale of omitted portions, see post ¶ 239.
Filing notice to give priority, see ante § 34.
Attachment of lien by levy and filing of notice, see ante § 30.
Notice of sale, see post §§ 56, 57.
Notice of levy on crops, provisions of statute, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, § 55; Comp. L. 1915, § 12870.

¶ 114. The provision of How. St., § 7685, that an officer levying upon a growing crop shall file a notice thereof in the office of the clerk of the township where such crop is at the time of the levy, and that such notice shall be constructive notice of the interest of plaintiff in execution, is for the benefit of third persons, and a failure to file such notice does not, as between the parties, limit the life of the execution to the return day thereof.—Friyer v. McNaughton, 110 Mich. 22.

§ 45. Time for levy.

See also post ¶ 161.
At what hours of the day, see post § 46.
Effect of delay to release rights, see also post ¶ 153.
Time for sale, see post §§ 59, 60.
Time to charge defendant when under arrest or at large on bail, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, § 23 et seq.; Comp. L. 1915, § 12838 et seq.

¶ 115. A levy of execution is not valid unless made before the writ is returnable.—Quackenbush v. Henry, 42 Mich. 75.

¶ 116. Levy of execution after return day is void.—Evans v. Calman, 92 Mich. 427.

¶ 117. A levy of executions at eight-thirty o'clock in the evening upon a stock of goods in a store adjoining a dwelling house is not invalid, the goods being subject to levy.—Vanosdall v. Hamilton, 118 Mich. 533.

¶ 118. A levy of execution upon a large quantity of goods in a store made at about eight-thirty o'clock in the evening is not improper, where the officer took possession of the stock until the next morning when he proposed to make his inventory and allow the owner to select exemptions.—Vanosdall v. Hamilton, 118 Mich. 533.

§ 47. Inventory, appraisal, and setting out of exemptions or homestead.

Appraisal as evidence, see post § 112.
Showing in return, see post § 110.
Presumptions as to regularity, see post § 94.
Inventory and appraisal provisions, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, § 46 et seq.; Comp. L. 1915, § 12861 et seq.

¶ 119. Where execution is levied upon a class of property that is exempt from execution to a specified amount or value the officer should make an inventory of the whole of such property belonging to the debtor within his bailiwick, and cause the same to be appraised, and allow the debtor to make his exemption therefrom, or, if he neglects to do so, to make the selection for him.—Elliott v. Whitmore, 5 Mich. 532; Wyckoff v. Wyllis, 8 Mich. 48; Ostrander v. Packer, 35 Mich. 430; Sheldon v. Rounds, 40 Mich. 425; Vanderhorst v. Bacon, 38 Mich. 669; McCoy v. Brennan, 61 Mich. 362.

¶ 120. It is not necessary to the validity of execution proceedings in one county that the whole of the debtor's property of an exempted class, wherever else it lies, should be inventoried and appraised in order that the portion to be left to him out of the mass may be selected.—Alvord v. Lent, 23 Mich. 369.

¶ 121. The appraisal provided for by How. St., § 7687, is expressly limited to cases where a levy is made upon property of a class or species which is exempt from execution "to a specified amount or value."—Murphy v. Mulvena, 108 Mich. 347.

¶ 122. The appraisal of goods which an officer levying execution is required to make must be made where the goods are found; they cannot be removed for the purpose, when the appraisal can be made as well where they are.—Vanderhorst v. Bacon, 38 Mich. 669.

¶ 123. If the officer fails to make inventory and appraisal, and to give the debtor an opportunity for selection, the levy will be invalid to the amount of the statutory exemptions.—Town v. Elmore, 38 Mich. 305.

¶ 124. The debtor can have no advantage from the officer's failure to inventory and appraise the property, unless his status is such as to entitle him to an exemption, notwithstanding the property belongs to what is usually known as the exempt class.—Ferguson v. Washer, 49 Mich. 390.

¶ 125. It is the duty of an officer, who levies under an execution upon property which is exempt up to a certain value, to make an inventory, and allow the defendant in execution to select his exemptions; and, not having done so, he is liable in trover for the part that he sells.—Parker v. Canfield, 116 Mich. 94.

¶ 126. The "act to provide for the transfer of real estate on execution, and for other purposes," approved February 17, 1842 (S. L. 1842, p. 135), did not authorize an appraisal and set-off of mortgaged premises, in satisfaction of the mortgage, without previous proceedings to foreclose, either in equity or by advertisement.—Buck v. Sherman, 2 D. 176.

§ 48. ——Selection and qualifications of appraisers.

¶ 127. Appraisers should be disinterested; an attorney conducting attachment proceedings should not act as appraiser under an execution in force at the same time against the same defendant.—Bayne v. Patterson, 40 Mich. 658.

¶ 128. An appraisal of homestead on execution sale is not invalid though one of the appraisers was past 60 years old, and though Comp. L. 1897, § 10369, provides that they shall have the qualifications of jurors; since the exemption for age is one that only the juror can claim, and he was not disqualified.—Flynn v. Kalamazoo Circuit Judge, 136 Mich. 23.

§ 49. Property or right affected or acquired by levy.

Authority to change levy, see post § 53.
Property or right taken by the levy, see ante § 49.

Void and ineffective levy as defense to contempt to enforce payment of alimony decree, see Contempt § 22, ¶ 73.

¶ 129. Where one who has purchased chattels subject to a levy seizes them while under the levy, such seizure is a trespass.—Nelson v. Ferris, 30 Mich. 497.

¶ 130. Judgment creditors levying upon land that has been previously conveyed in good faith on both sides obtain by their levy no better title than is held by the debtor.—First Nat. Bank v. McAllister, 46 Mich. 397.

¶ 131. Levy of execution can never of itself place title in the judgment debtor by estoppel or otherwise.—Michigan Paneling Machine & Manufacturing Co. v. Parsell, 38 Mich. 475.

¶ 132. The mere levy of execution does not give an attachment creditor any rights analogous to those of a bona fide purchaser.—French v. De Bow, 38 Mich. 708.

¶ 133. A levy on the interest in lands of an owner who is under contract to convey upon future payment takes the legal title in full, and the beneficiary interest subject to the liability of conveying on complete performance of the contract.—Doak v. Runyan, 33 Mich. 75.

¶ 134. A levy on mortgaged property is only a levy on the right of redemption.—Bayne v. Patterson, 40 Mich. 658.

¶ 135. An execution levy does not prevent the enforcement of a prior mortgage, and it falls with the foreclosure thereof.—Connerton v. Millar, 41 Mich. 608; German American Seminary v. Saenger, 66 Mich. 249.

¶ 137. A lessee's creditor levying upon leased personalty gains no greater right than the lessee has.—Warren v. Gutches, 71 Mich. 407.

§ 50. Custody and keeping of property taken.

Of mortgaged chattels, see post § 51.

Custody and keeping of attached goods, see Attachment, VI, C.
Keeping of replevied goods when subject to prior levy, see Jud. Act, chap. XXVII, § 34; Comp. L. 1915, § 13113.

¶ 138. The proper means of protecting property levied upon is to put a keeper in charge, and unless violence is apprehended, this is a sufficient precaution.—Stilson v. Gibbs, 46 Mich. 215.

¶ 139. An officer levying upon goods in the evening may properly put a keeper in charge and this is a sufficient precaution to preserve possession under the levy.—Vanosdall v. Hamilton, 118 Mich. 533.

¶ 140. An officer has no authority for threshing wheat he has levied upon in the mow before selling it.—Stilson v. Gibbs, 40 Mich. 42.

¶ 141. A constable has no authority to work animals which he has taken on an execution to pay the expense of keeping them.—Bushey v. Raths, 45 Mich. 181.

§ 51. ——Of chattels subject to prior mortgage.

¶ 142. The officer levying an execution upon the mortgagor's interest in mortgaged chattels may take possession of them from the mortgagor and detain them in safe and convenient custody as against even the mortgagee, for the time prescribed by law for bringing them to sale on the execution, notwithstanding the mortgage, is past due.—Cary v. Hewitt, 26 Mich. 228; Macomber v. Saxton, 28 Mich. 516.

¶ 143. Temporary possession can be taken of mortgaged chattels for the purpose of a levy though they are in the mortgagee's hands. But the levy must be subordinate to the mortgagee's right.—Smith v. Menominee Circuit Judge, 53 Mich. 560; Daggett v. McClintock, 56 Mich. 51.

¶ 144. Concurrent possession of mortgaged chattels before foreclosure can be held by the mortgagee and by an officer levying execution; but the mortgagee holds only as the mortgagor's bailee, with a special interest, and for the sole purpose of storing them apart from property in daily use; and the officer must not interfere with the mortgagee's right of sale, but can retain the chattels in his custody until sale is made, and has a right to know the amount and conditions of it. And when the mortgagee proceeds to sell he can protect the rights of the officer as well as his own.—Haynes v. Leppig, 40 Mich. 602.

¶ 146. A chattel mortgagee whose claim has not yet fallen due is not entitled to possession of the chattels as against an officer who has levied execution thereon, until the time has passed for making execution sale; and this is so though the levy and the debt on which it is based be subsequent to the mortgage debt. But the sheriff may, in his discretion, turn the property over to the mortgagee's custody if the latter demands it for the purpose of making foreclosure sale.—Wilson v. Montague, 57 Mich. 638.

¶ 147. In case of an execution on the equity of redemption under a chattel mortgage the levying officer may detain the chattels long enough to bring the equity of redemption to sale under the writ.—Wilson v. Montague, 57 Mich. 638.

¶ 148. An officer levying execution upon the mortgagor's interest in mortgaged chattels may take possession of such chattels and detain the same as against the mortgagee for the time required to bring them to sale under his execution.—First Nat. Bank v. Summers, 75 Mich. 107.

§ 52. ——Delivery to receiptor, and sufficiency of receipt.

Surrender of mortgaged chattels to mortgagee or mortgagor, see ante § 51.
Rights of the sheriff as against receiptor, see Sheriffs, IV, G.
Liability of sheriff for injury to property in hands of receiptor, see Sheriffs, IV, D.

¶ 149. Receipts to the sheriff for property seized on execution need not set forth in detail and describe minutely the parties, court and other facts appearing in full from the execution, or describe everything with technical accuracy. Where a receipt for wheat misstated the township in which the wheat was growing, there being no question, however, as to the identity of the property, it was held that the receiptor, who had bound himself to give up the wheat to the sheriff on demand, could not refuse on the ground of misdescription.—Burk v. Webb, 32 Mich. 173.

¶ 150. Where a receipt for wheat taken on an execution in favor of the First National Bank of Ann Arbor sets out the name of the plaintiff as "the First National Bank" simply, the variance is held not fatal in an action of trover brought against the receiptor for its conversion, where it is found that the wheat in question was levied on by virtue of this execution, and that in order to prevent a sale of the wheat under it this receipt was given; the finding sufficiently indicates that the receipt was given in the case in which the execution issued.—Burk v. Webb, 32 Mich. 173.

¶ 151. An officer who levies subject to a mortgage can afterwards change the levy.—Wallen v. Rossman, 45 Mich. 333.

¶ 152. A sheriff's lien and right of custody under an execution cannot be disturbed by the order of a circuit court commissioner, on dissolving an attachment on the property, to return it to the defendant.—State Bank of Fenton v. Whittle, 41 Mich. 365.

¶ 153. Delay of two months in levying execution did not release levy.—Geiges v. Greiner, 68 Mich. 153.

¶ 154. Abandonment of a levy is not necessarily implied by the sheriff's indorsing on the writ of execution the fact of his levy and the words: "I hereby return the within execution to the clerk of the court for the county of Kalamazoo, as I am commanded by Seth D. Thompson, plaintiff."—Vroman v. Thompson, 51 Mich. 452.

VII. SALE.

A. NOTICE AND OTHER PRELIMINARIES.

§ 55. Conditions precedent in general.

Preliminary procedure, issuance of writ and levy, see ante II-VI.
Effect of lack of notice, see also post ¶ 227.
Statutory preliminaries to sale of real estate, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, § 85 et seq.; Comp. L. 1915, § 12900 et seq.

¶ 156. It is not a condition precedent to the sale on execution of property mortgaged by the defendant therein that the execution creditor should have paid off the mortgage and thus acquired the mortgagor's interest.—King v. Hubbell, 42 Mich. 597.

§ 56. Form and sufficiency of notice.

Proof of notice, see post § 57.
Showing in return, see post § 110.
Notice of sale under justice's execution, see Justices of the Peace, IV, H.
Penal liability for sale without notice, see Sheriffs, IV, B.

¶ 157. The description "lot 5, block Q, Mitchell's Revised Plat of Cummer & Gerrish's Addition to the Village of Clam Lake," instead of "lot 5, block Q of Mitchell's Revised Plat of the Village of Clam Lake," in a notice of levy and sale under an execution and in the certificate of sale is fatally defective.—Savidge v. Seager, 175 Mich. 47.

§ 57. Proof of notice of sale.

¶ 158. Publication of notice of execution sale is provable by the publisher's affidavit (Comp. L. 1871, § 5925; How. St., § 7498). Whether it is provable by the affidavits of those who posted the notices, quære.—Vroman v. Thompson, 51 Mich. 452.

§ 58. Remedy and procedure to carry out levy by sale.

Remedy to obtain deed, see post § 98.
Remedy to compel payment of proceeds into court, see post § 107.

¶ 159. Delay in giving notice of an execution sale is prejudicial to the execution debtor if to any one, and may be such as to entitle him to apply for mandamus to compel the officer to proceed.—Baldwin v. Talbot, 46 Mich. 19.

¶ 160. Where the return day has passed, it is not customary to resort to the writ of venditioni exponas; it is usual to proceed on the old execution or take out another.—Vroman v. Thompson, 51 Mich. 452.

B. TIME, PLACE, CONDUCT AND MANNER, AND AMOUNT.

§ 59. Time for sale.

Hours of the day for sale, see post § 60.
Effect of delay after levy upon lien, see ante ¶ 74.
On justice's execution, see Justices of the Peace, IV, H.
Time for sale of growing crops levied on, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, § 55; Comp. L. 1915, § 12870.
Provisions as to postponements of sale, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, § 53; Comp. L. 1915, § 12868.

¶ 161. An execution may be levied at any time on the return day, and the execution of the writ may be completed by a sale of the property after that day.—Smith v. Thompson, W. 1.

¶ 162. Where notice of a levy on real estate is filed under Laws 1875, Act No. 5, p. 3, How. St., § 6173, a delay of five years in making sale does not avoid the levy if the judgment creditor has acted in good faith; and a levy and sale made meanwhile cannot affect it.—Ward v. Citizens' Bank, 46 Mich. 332.

¶ 163. Since prior to How. St., § 6173a, passed in 1889, there was no limitation against acquiring a lien on land by levy, except that it must have been made before the judgment became extinct by limitations, where land has been levied upon and advertised for sale under execution prior to the expiration of the ten years within which the judgment is suable (How. St., § 8736), a sale after the ten years is valid.—Ludeman v. Hirth, 96 Mich. 17.

¶ 164. An execution sale of shares of stock of a building and savings association, made between nine and ten o'clock at night, in the hall of the association when nearly all the members had left, is void, at least as to persons having knowledge of the facts.—McNaughton v. McLean, 73 Mich. 250.

§ 61. Place of sale and view of property.

Exposure of personalty to view in selling, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, § 52; Comp. L. 1915, § 12867.

¶ 165. An officer cannot sell personal property which is neither within view of the bidders nor within the county.—Baker v. Casey, 19 Mich. 220.

¶ 166. An execution sale of an interest in a growing corn crop, if made half a mile away from the field and out of sight of the corn, is invalid under Comp. L. 1871, § 6106, How. St., § 7691.—Winfield v. Adams, 34 Mich. 437.

¶ 167. A constable's sale of standing wheat, made within sight of the wheat and of the road corners where it was advertised to take place, but 30 or 35 rods therefrom, is substantially at the place appointed.—Perkins v. Spaulding, 2 Mich. 157.

¶ 168. Whether an execution sale of corn growing in separate fields on different sections, and though in view of the fields, yet from 30 to 100 rods distant from them, is valid, quære.—Winfield v. Adams, 34 Mich. 437.

§ 62. Manner, conduct and terms of sale.

Manner and mode of levy, see ante §§ 36-48.
Time and place for sale and view of property at sale, see ante §§ 59-61.
Sale in parcels or in gross, see post § 64.

Invalidity of agreements to suppress competition in bidding, see Contracts § 87.
Manner and place and time for sale of real estate and penalty for selling otherwise, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, §§ 87, 88; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12902, 12903.

Time, place and manner of selling peaches, berries and other perishable property, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, §§ 56, 57; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12871, 12872.
Provisions against sheriff or deputies being purchasers or interested in purchase of real estate, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, § 91; Comp. L. 1915, § 12906.

§ 63. ——Chattel interest in lands.

¶ 169. Chattel interests in lands are to be sold on execution as personal estate. A sale of an estate for years in lands, made in accordance with the statutory provisions for the sale of real estate, is void.—Buhl v. Kenyon, 11 Mich. 249.

§ 64. Sale in parcels or separately.

Sale of mortgaged chattels, see post § 65.
One sale under several writs, see post § 66.
Effect on title of improper sale in gross, see post § 91.
Offer of personalty in lots and parcels, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, § 52; Comp. L. 1915, § 12867.
Provisions for selling real estate in lots or parcels, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, § 92; Comp. L. 1915, § 12907.

¶ 170. It is the duty of a constable to sell property in such lots or parcels as to command the highest price; and if he wilfully sacrifices the property by disregarding his duty he is liable to the party injured; but he has a large discretion. Where three parcels of wheat, separated only by fences, containing twenty-five acres in all, were sold together, and there was no reason to suppose they would have sold better separately, the sale was held valid.—Perkins v. Spaulding, 2 Mich. 157.

¶ 171. Where a man owning two lots has put up a single building covering one of them and a small part of the other, the premises so covered should be sold on execution as one parcel.—Geney v. Maynard, 44 Mich. 578.

¶ 172. When lands are put up in distinct parcels and not sold for want of bidders, the whole may be sold together.—Weed v. Terry, 2 D. 344.

¶ 173. Where an execution has been levied on a large number of detached parcels of land, the sale of the whole in one lot for one bid, after an offer in parcels failed to bring bidders, is not allowable; the owner cannot thus be deprived of his statutory right of redeeming any parcel by itself.—Udell v. Kahn, 31 Mich. 195.

¶ 174. How. St., § 6116, which provides that when real estate offered for sale on execution consists of several known lots, tracts, or parcels of land, such lots, tracts, or parcels shall be separately exposed for sale, contemplates a sale by lot or government subdivisions.—Wolf v. Holton, 117 Mich. 321.

§ 65. ——Mortgaged chattels.

¶ 175. If sale is made of the debtor's interest in chattels mortgaged by him, it must be in gross, subject to the mortgagee's lien, unless the mortgage is first paid.—Worthington v. Hanna, 23 Mich. 530; Harvey v. McAdams, 32 Mich. 472; Haynes v. Leppig, 40 Mich. 602; King v. Hubbell, 42 Mich. 597; Smith v. Menominee Circuit Judge, 53 Mich. 560; Daggett v. McClintock, 56 Mich. 51; Ganong v. Green, 71 Mich. 1.

§ 66. One sale under several writs.

Where several writs are outstanding to different sheriffs, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, § 11; Comp. L. 1915, § 12826.

¶ 176. Where several judgments against the same person are taken at the same time, and are issued, delivered for service and levied at the same time, the sheriff, unless directed otherwise, may offer the premises on which he has levied, to be sold together under all the writs.—Geney v. Maynard, 44 Mich. 578.

§ 67. Amount or interest to be sold.

Quantity of real estate that may be sold, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, § 92; Comp. L. 1915, § 12907.
Mode of sale of franchise of toll taking corporation, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, § 66 et seq.; Comp. L. 1915, § 12881 et seq.

¶ 177. A sheriff has no right to continue to sell goods on which he has levied after the execution is satisfied.—Allen v. Kinyon, 41 Mich. 281.

Rights acquired by purchase of leasehold, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, §§ 142, 143; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12957, 12958.
On sale of franchises of toll taking corporation, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, §§ 68-71; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12883-12886.

¶ 178. An execution purchaser can get no better right than the judgment debtor had at the time of the levy.—Clark v. Stilson, 36 Mich. 482.

¶ 179. A judgment creditor gets no title by levy and sale under execution upon land where defendant had parted with his interest, whether by deed or only by contract before plaintiff became his creditor, and where, after several transfers, the property has been purchased by defendant's wife.—Sorenson v. Sorenson, 69 Mich. 351.

¶ 180. Where there are no words of devise to invest executors with any estate, a sale on execution against them cannot convey title to premises devised.—Crooks v. Whitford, 47 Mich. 283.

¶ 181. A levy under execution and sale of an heir's interest in land under contract of sale by his ancestor conveys no interest in the land and is a cloud on title subject to removal by bill in equity.—Bowen v. Lansing, 129 Mich. 117.

¶ 182. Where it is not possible to grant specific performance of a verbal agreement for the conveyance of land between heirs because the condition for such conveyance has not been fully met, a levy of execution on the interest of the heir agreeing to make such conveyance is subject to the contract rights of the other heir.—Schmidt v. Steinbach, 193 Mich. 640.

¶ 183. A sheriff in making levy and sale merely exercises a power in the interest of a party whose writ is delivered to him for execution; and a purchaser at the execution sale does not stand in the sheriff's right, but is the privy of the party under whose execution the sale was made.—McKay v. Kilburn, 42 Mich. 614.

§ 70. Creditor as purchaser.

See also ante ¶ 137.
Right of execution creditor to redeem from chattel mortgage, see Chattel Mortgages § 113.

¶ 184. An execution creditor, on making sale and becoming the purchaser, may acquire new equities; but until then he stands in the rights of his debtor, and his levy may be defeated by equities which the debtor cannot resist.—French v. De Bow, 38 Mich. 708.

¶ 185. A creditor has a right to assume that land conveyed to members of a firm by deed, which does not indicate that it is deeded to them as partners, is held by them as tenants in common, in the absence of actual notice that it is partnership property.—First Nat. Bank of Cooperstown v. State Sav. Bank of Ionia, 130 Mich. 332.

¶ 186. A purchase of mortgaged lands by a judgment creditor at execution sale covers only the equity of redemption; and if he proposes to contest the mortgage on the ground of fraud, he must make that fact known to the other bidders. Bidders at judicial sales must stand on an equal footing.—Messmore v. Huggard, 46 Mich. 558.

§ 71. Rights between purchaser and lienors or mortgage parties.

Relative and successive rights of redemption, see post § 83.
Estoppel to question title of mortgagee as superior, see also post ¶ 248.
Mode of selling mortgaged chattels, see ante § 65.
Priorities of lien of levy, see ante §§ 32-34.
Filing notice to give priority and effect of actual notice, see ante § 34.
Sale of property in which the dower interest of wife exists, see Dower § 23.
Lien of attorney as affecting land bid off by attorney, see Attorneys ¶ 175.

¶ 187. Where persons have in good faith acquired a lien upon property prior to a levy upon it, there is no such privity between them and the execution debtor at the time of the levy as can in any respect make his rights the measure of theirs as between them and a purchaser under the execution. —Nail v. Granger, 8 Mich. 450.

¶ 188. An execution purchaser who buys land subject to a mortgage can have no equities against the mortgage, and it does not concern him how the owner disposes of it.—Youmans v. Loxley, 56 Mich. 197.

¶ 189. A purchaser at execution sale purchases with constructive notice of a mortgage then on record, and has no greater rights to attack the mortgage than had the mortgagor.—Ismon v. Loder, 135 Mich. 345.

¶ 190. The purchaser at a sheriff's sale of the interest of a grantor of a deed absolute of land, given as a mortgage, need not file a bill in aid of the execution under Comp. L. 1897, § 9167, to determine the equities of the parties, but takes a legal title, subject only to the outstanding mortgage.—Flynn v. Holmes, 145 Mich. 606.

§ 72. Title under alternative judgment in ejectment.

¶ 191. The purchaser at an execution sale, under a judgment in ejectment, takes title with notice that under How. St., § 7822, the judgment may be vacated on the motion of the losing party, as a matter of right, within three years after its rendition, even though the time for redemption has expired.—Cook v. Kent Circuit Judge, 70 Mich. 94.

§ 73. Rights pending redemption or deed; possession.

Right to ore severed from soil, see post § 74.
Possessory rights under the levy, see ante §§ 50-52; and see Sheriffs, IV, G.
Right to accounting or rents and profits, see post § 99.
Right to compensation for use and occupation, see post ¶ 211.
Possessory right under certificate, see also post ¶ 199.

¶ 192. An execution purchaser's legal title or right of possession is not perfected until the time for redemption from the sheriff's sale is over, and he has obtained his deed from the sheriff.—Ryerson v. Eldred, 18 Mich. 490; Cook v. Knowles, 38 Mich. 316.

¶ 193. After sale of mining lands on execution, the debtor, during the fifteen months he is allowed to remain in possession, has no less rights than a tenant for years; he may not open new mines, but the old ones he may work in the customary and reasonable way, and may sell the ore produced.—Ward v. Carp River Iron Co., 47 Mich. 65; Ward v. Carp River Iron Co., 50 Mich. 522.

¶ 194. Where execution is levied on a mine, and sale is made, the judgment debtor is entitled, during the period allowed for redemption, to continue working it in a reasonably prudent manner as measured by the customary working before the execution sale; and he can dispose of the product. But improper, excessive or wasteful mining can be restrained, and the person responsible for it be held liable in damages.—Ward v. Carp River Iron Co., 47 Mich. 65; Ward v. Carp River Iron Co., 50 Mich. 522.

§ 74. ——Timber, crops or rents and profits.

Rights in mines, see ante § 73.
Right to maintain replevin for timber or crops, see Replevin, I.
Necessity of allegation in trover by execution purchaser pending time for redemption that taking minerals was injurious to the freehold, see Conversion ¶ 103.
Actions for waste or trespass by purchaser or creditor during period of redemption, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, §§ 114, 115; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12929, 12930.

¶ 195. Execution purchasers may, under Comp. L. 1871, §§ 4657, 4658 (How. St., §§ 6137, 6138), sue, as if absolute owners, for wood and timber wrongfully severed from the freehold.—Marquette, H. & O. R. Co. v. Atkinson, 44 Mich. 166.

¶ 196. Where an iron mine has been sold on execution, one who buys from the execution debtor ore taken out during the period in which such debtor is allowed to hold possession after sale is not liable in trover to the execution purchaser unless the removal of such ore was an injury to the freehold, and unless he was connected with the injury by having taken part in some act of wrong, or was chargeable with notice of facts that would have divested the execution defendant of his prima facie right to sell.—Ward v. Carp River Iron Co., 47 Mich. 65; Ward v. Carp River Iron Co., 50 Mich. 522.

§ 75. Fees and expenses.

Inclusion in taxed costs commanded to be made by writ, see ante ¶ 26.
Improper retention from proceeds as conversion, see post ¶ 318.
Sheriff's fees and sheriff's right to them, see Sheriffs, III.
Execution fees as taxable costs, see Costs § 62.
Statute fixing the various fees, see Jud. Act, chaps. XLVIII, XLIX; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 13719 et seq., 13725 et seq.

D. CERTIFICATE AND DEED.

§ 76. Certificate of sale.

Certificate of levy on lands, see ante § 43.
Immaterial errors in dates and descriptions, see also post ¶ 229.
Rights and title under the certificate, see ante, VII, C.

Statutory necessity, requisites and sufficiency of certificate of sale of real estate, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, § 93; Comp. L. 1915, § 12908.

¶ 197. It is not the purpose of the certificate to pass the title to the land sold. It is necessary as written evidence to satisfy the statute of frauds, as well as to preserve the evidence which is to entitle the purchaser to a deed when the time for redemption shall have expired.—Gorham v. Wing, 10 Mich. 486.

¶ 198. The rights of an execution purchaser of real estate who has received a sheriff's certificate of sale are inchoate before receipt of sheriff's deed.—Pike v. Halpin, 188 Mich. 447.

¶ 199. The purchase of real estate, at a sheriff's sale, and the receipt of a sheriff's certificate of purchase, do not confer any right to possession or beneficial use of the premises.—Pike v. Halpin, 188 Mich. 447.

¶ 200. A sheriff's certificate of sale of real estate is void where the period of redemption expires before the date Pub. Acts 1901, No. 63, How. St., 2nd ed., § 13066, takes effect and the holder fails to obtain deed within five years from date the act takes effect.—Pike v. Halpin, 188 Mich. 447.

§ 77. Filing certificate and notice thereby.

Provisions as to filing and record of certificate of sale of real estate, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, §§ 94, 95; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12909, 12910.

¶ 201. In absence of a statute a sheriff's certificate of sale on execution was not constructive notice to prior mortgagees, though regularly filed in the register's office.—Woods v. Love, 27 Mich. 308.

¶ 202. Since the passing of Laws 1875, Act No. 123, a properly recorded certificate gives the same record privileges as a conveyance, and operates as constructive notice to subsequent purchasers until the execution purchaser receives his deed.—Atwood v. Bearss, 45 Mich. 469.

¶ 203. An unrecorded certificate of execution sale does not give priority. Whether How. St., § 6119, as amended in 1875, applies to previous execution sales, quære.—Drake v. McLean, 47 Mich. 102.

¶ 204. The sheriff's neglect to file the certificate of an execution sale within the statutory period (Comp. L. 1871, § 4638, How. St., § 6118) cannot affect the purchaser's title unless the execution debtor or innocent third parties have been misled by it to their prejudice.—Taylor v. Gladwin, 40 Mich. 232.

§ 78. Assignment of certificate.

Rights under quitclaim deed from purchaser, see also post ¶ 216.

Assignment to redeeming creditor, see also post ¶ 222.

¶ 205. Where an execution sale was invalid, it was held that an assignment of the certificate of sale carried no interest in the judgment.—McGoren v. Avery, 37 Mich. 120.

§ 79. Deed and its contents.

Time for making deed, see also ante ¶ 200.

Proper grantor or grantee, see post § 80.

Remedy to obtain deed, see post § 98.

General law of deeds, see Deeds.

Certificate of sale and its office and effect, see ante § 76.

Statutory time for deed, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, § 116; Comp. L. 1915, § 12931.

Bar of right to deed by lapse of ten-year period after time for redemption, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, § 119; Comp. L. 1915, § 12934.

Conveyance of leasehold interest sold under levy, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, § 144; Comp. L. 1915, § 12959.

¶ 206. Under R. S. 1838, a sale of lands on execution did not divest the title of the judgment debtor until consummated by deed. And a deed given before the time of redemption expired was void.—Gorham v. Wing, 10 Mich. 486.

¶ 207. As to the nature of the right of an execution purchaser to demand and receive a sheriff's deed after the period for redemption has expired, see Whiting v. Butler, 29 Mich. 122.

¶ 208. A recital that the sheriff who made the levy personally discharged his duty in first seeking to make the money of goods and chattels is not required in a deed of land sold on execution.—Johnson v. Crispell, 39 Mich. 82.

¶ 209. The deed on an execution running against two persons is not made fatally defective by the use of the singular number in a recital; as by stating that "because sufficient goods and chattels of the said last-named person in the said writ could not be found," the real estate was seized.—Johnson v. Crispell, 39 Mich. 82.

§ 80. ——By or to whom made.

To whom deed shall be made after death of person holding certificate or entitled to conveyance, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, § 117; Comp. L. 1915, § 12932.

Necessity of recording assignments to entitle assignee to deed, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, § 127; Comp. L. 1915, § 12942.

¶ 210. Under the Act of 1851 (Sess. Laws 1851, p. 68, amending R. S. 1846, chap. 79, How. St., § 6140) one who had, previous to the passage of the act, become equitably vested with the title which the purchasers at an execution sale acquired by the expiration of the time to redeem, is entitled in equity to a conveyance of the property from the successor of the officer who made the sale.—Whipple v. Farrar, 3 Mich. 436.

§ 81. Construction and effect of deed.

General rule for construction of involuntary deeds, see Deeds § 25.

Effect of deeds as estoppels and doctrine of inurement of after-acquired titles to grantee in general, see Estoppel, II.

¶ 211. The officer's deed relates back to the time of the sale, for the purpose of protecting possession under the title purchased, or for the purpose of supporting a conveyance made by the purchaser or his assignee; but not to give the purchaser or his assignee compensation for the use and occupation of the premises before his own title is perfected. —Whipple v. Farrar, 3 Mich. 436.

¶ 212. An execution defendant's after-acquired title or interest does not pass by virtue of the execution sale and deed.—McArthur v. Oliver, 60 Mich. 605.

E. REDEMPTION FROM SALE AND PURCHASE BY CREDITORS, LIENORS AND OTHER INTERESTED PERSONS.

§ 82. Right in general.

Rights of creditors and lienors to redeem, see post § 83.

Effect of redemption, see post § 89.

Effect of delay in making deed, see also ante ¶ 200.

Statutory provisions for redemption, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, § 96 et seq.; Comp. L. 1915, § 12911 et seq.

Persons entitled to redeem, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, § 97; Comp. L. 1915, § 12912.

Debtor's heir, devisee or cotenant as person entitled, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, §§ 97-99; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12912-12914.

Provisions for redemption of leasehold interests having three or more years to run, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, §§ 145, 146; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12960, 12961.

By toll-taking corporation whose franchise has been sold, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, § 72; Comp. L. 1915, § 12887.

¶ 213. The right to redeem from execution sales is a creature of statute.—Pellston Planing Mill & Lumber Co. v. Van Wormer, 198 Mich. 648.

§ 83. Right of creditors and lienors to redeem.

Waiver by senior creditor, see post § 87.

Right of creditors and junior lienors to redeem on failure of persons having prior right to do so, and right of creditors lower in rank to purchase from those higher in rank who have redeemed or purchased, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, § 102 et seq.; Comp. L. 1915, § 12917 et seq.; and see also Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, § 136; Comp. L. 1915, § 12951.

¶ 214. A purchaser of land is not such a creditor as to enable her to redeem the land sold on execution levied prior to the recording of her deed.—Spring v. Raymond, 134 Mich. 84.

¶ 215. Where a senior levy of execution is discharged after the period of 1 year from the execution sale and within the 15-month period by the acceptance of payment from the execution debtor, all rights of subrogations to the rights of the senior execution creditor by a junior execution creditor are barred.—Pellston Planing Mill & Lumber Co. v. Van Wormer, 198 Mich. 648 (Ostrander, J., dissenting).

¶ 216. After the levy of an execution, the judgment debtor conveyed the land levied upon, and his wife, to whom the grantee executed mortgages upon the land to secure part of the purchase money, joined with her husband in a bond to the grantee conditioned for the payment of the judgment. More than a year but less than fifteen months after the sale of the land on the execution, the obligors in the bond having failed to perform its conditions, the grantee raised upon her indorsed note the money necessary to redeem the land, and paid the same to the purchaser at the execution sale, who, in order to secure the indorser on said note, executed to him a quitclaim deed of the land. Held, that the quitclaim deed conveyed only the rights of the purchaser under the sheriff's certificate of sale, and that the arrangement operated to protect the mortgage interest of the wife of the judgment debtor, and to give her the right to pay, prior to the execution of the sheriff's deed, the amount due on the certificate of sale, and thus discharge the obligation of the bond.—Smith v. Michigan State Bank, 102 Mich. 5.

§ 84. Period for redemption.

¶ 217. The right to redeem from execution sale, in the absence of contract, continues during the period fixed by statute, and no longer.—Pellston Planing Mill & Lumber Co. v. Van Wormer, 198 Mich. 648.

¶ 218. Under Pub. Acts 1915, No. 314, Chap. XXII, §§ 96, 97, the period within which the execution debtor may redeem is fixed at one year from the time of execution sale, and is not extended by § 113, giving execution creditors 15 months to redeem.—Pellston Planing Mill & Lumber Co. v. Van Wormer, 198 Mich. 648.

¶ 219. Subsequent execution creditors may redeem from a prior execution sale within 15 months from the date of the sale by virtue of Comp. L. 1897, § 9185, but when such prior sale is alleged to be illegal and void, a petition to set it aside is the safer remedy. —Campau v. Detroit Driving Club, 130 Mich. 417.

§ 85. Computation of time.

General rules for reckoning time, including rules as to inclusion or exclusion of terminal days, see Time.

Statutory time, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, §§ 96, 101, 102; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12911, 12916, 12917.

Time for making deed, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, § 116; Comp. L. 1915, § 12931.

¶ 220. The time for redemption under R. S. 1838 was to be computed exclusive of the day on which the sale was made.—Gorham v. Wing, 10 Mich. 486.

¶ 221. On sales made by the United States marshal in Michigan, on demands accruing in 1842, for moneys collected by a public officer, or for misconduct or neglect in office, two years' redemption was allowed.—Gorham v. Wing, 10 Mich. 486.

§ 86. Application, showing, terms, and amount required.

Showing required from creditor seeking to redeem from purchaser purchase from prior redemptioners, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, § 112; Comp. L. 1915, § 12927.

Computation of amount for redemption, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, §§ 96, 98 et seq.; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12911, 12913 et seq.

¶ 222. Where judgment creditors redeem from an execution sale, and obtain from a purchaser an assignment of his certificate, it is of no importance that they did not present to him the proofs of their right to redeem. They may still claim both under their judgment and under the sale, and a subsequent creditor redeeming must pay the amount of both.—People ex rel. Austin v. Fralick, 12 Mich. 234.

§ 87. Waiver of rights.

¶ 223. A senior execution creditor waives the statutory period of redemption from execution sale of one year where, after the expiration of such period, and before any junior execution creditor has acquired any rights, he accepts payment of his judgment. —Pellston Planing Mill & Lumber Co. v. Van Wormer, 198 Mich. 648.

§ 88. Bills to redeem.

¶ 224. Equity will not relieve a party who, through gross negligence or ignorance of the law, fails to redeem within the time prescribed.—Campau v. Godfrey, 18 Mich. 27.

¶ 225. A bill of complaint was filed to allow complainant to redeem from a sale of land by a sheriff. The failure to redeem was due to complainant's inability to raise the money necessary to do so, because of complainant's physical infirmities. There was no claim of fraud, or conspiracy or deception, nor did it appear that an unnecessary amount of land was sold. Held, that a demurrer to the bill was properly sustained. —Sielaff v. Woodruff, 171 Mich. 5.

§ 89. Effect of redemption.

Effect of expiration of redemption period to make title complete, see ante § 73.

Effect of redemption by creditor taking assignment from purchaser, see also ante ¶ 222.

General law of subrogation, see Subrogation.

To cut off junior lienor's right to subrogation, see ante ¶ 215.

Transition of right and title by successive redemptions, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, §§ 111, 113; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12926, 12928.

F. DEFECTS IN SALE; OBJECTIONS AND RELIEF OF PARTIES.

Objections to writ or levy, see post, X.

§ 90. Invalidating effect of irregularities and omissions.

Sale at night, see ante ¶ 164.

Effect of delay in selling, see also ante § 59.

Insufficiency of description in certificate of levy on land, see ante § 43.

Irregular or inaccurate recitals in deeds, see also ante § 79.

Effect of failure to file certificate of execution sale, see also ante ¶ 204.

Want of notice of application for issuance of writ, see post ¶ 267.

Failure to sell in parcels and improperly selling in gross, see post § 91.

Fraud or inadequacy in price, see post § 92.

Effect as against bona fide purchasers and takers, see post § 93.

Urging specific objections as estoppel to urge others, see post § 95.

Proper procedure to correct mere irregularities, see post § 102.

Void sale of plank road franchises, see Corporations § 199.

¶ 226. A noncompliance by the sheriff with the requirements of the statute in regard to the levy, advertisement or sale of real estate is a mere irregularity, and must be complained of in due time, by motion, or it will be waived.—Spafford v. Beach, 2 D. 150.

¶ 227. Want of notice of a sheriff's sale may impose a liability on the sheriff, but does not invalidate the title of an innocent purchaser under it.—Cook v. Knowles, 38 Mich. 316.

¶ 228. The title of a purchaser of real estate sold on execution is not affected by the insufficiency of the officer's return to the execution, or in his failure to give notice of the sale. The certificate of sale and the deed are the evidence of his title.—Spafford v. Beach, 2 D. 150; Cook v. Knowles, 38 Mich. 316.

¶ 229. Where complainant in a bill to set aside an execution sale assumes, for the purposes of the case, that the sale itself is valid, such defects in the sheriff's certificate of sale as wrong dates for the issue of execution and of levy are immaterial as between complainant and the execution purchaser.—Vroman v. Thompson, 51 Mich. 452.

¶ 230. The issue of two executions at once upon the same judgment to the sheriffs of different counties is irregular; but in an action of ejectment for premises sold under one of them, the other not being returned, the sale will not necessarily be held void, nor will the officer's omission to return a want of personal property be fatal thereto, especially if there is no showing that there was any.—Atwood v. Bearss, 45 Mich. 469.

¶ 231. Executions ought not to be removed at pleasure from the files by the plaintiffs therein or their counsel, or by a sheriff who has gone out of office. Such a removal, however, is only an irregularity, and does not of itself invalidate a sale on the execution.—Vroman v. Thompson, 51 Mich. 452.

¶ 232. Where an appraisal and sale of land was made under the provisions of the unconstitutional appraisal law of 1841 by virtue of an execution on a judgment upon contract rendered before the act took effect, and the plaintiff in the execution participated in the appraisal and purchased the premises on the sale at a sum exceeding two-thirds their appraised value, held that, the plaintiff's rights not being affected by the appraisal, the sale was valid and conveyed a good title.—Willard v. Longstreet, 2 D. 172.

Effect on title under judicial sale, see also Judicial Sales, III.

Pleading and proof in trover against sheriff for improper sale, see Sheriffs, VI.

¶ 233. Failure to sell separately (How. St., § 6116) two contiguous forty-acre parcels occupied as one farm is no more than an irregularity, and cannot be questioned in an action of ejectment for the premises by the purchaser.—Hoffman v. Buschman, 95 Mich. 538.

¶ 234. Failure to follow the statute and sell in platted parcels or subdivisions cannot be taken advantage of collaterally, but the execution debtor by a motion in the same case may have the sale set aside.—Wolf v. Holton, 117 Mich. 321.

§ 92. ——Fraud or inadequacy of price.

¶ 235. Where a purchaser at a sheriff's sale, by a fraudulent combination with the sheriff and judgment debtor to prevent competition at the sale, is enabled to purchase property at much less than its value, the sale is void as to creditors.—Aldrich v. Maitland, 4 Mich. 205.

¶ 236. Where, after a fraudulent sale, the property was sold by another officer, on an execution in favor of another creditor, and the latter bid it off at an inadequate price, it was held this inadequacy would not defeat the purchase; the cloud cast upon the title by the former sale being a sufficient answer to the objection of inadequacy.—Aldrich v. Maitland, 4 Mich. 205.

¶ 237. Judicial sales which have been open and fair, with nothing done to prevent a sale at a higher price, should not be disturbed on the ground of inadequacy of price; and an execution sale cannot be set aside in a collateral proceeding on the ground of such inadequacy of price. The remedy, if any, is by motion promptly made in the cause itself.—Campau v. Godfrey, 18 Mich. 27.

§ 93. ——As to bona fide purchasers and takers.

Rights under levy alone, see also ante ¶ 132.

What constitutes notice of title or right, and evidence of such notice, see Notice and Record of Title, I.

Superiority of bona fide owner or incumbrancer to new execution for relief of evicted purchaser, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, § 130; Comp. L. 1915, § 12945.

¶ 238. A bona fide purchaser under an execution sale in attachment acquires no title where the record shows a want of jurisdiction, the affidavit for the writ being defective.—Wilson v. Arnold, 5 Mich. 98.

¶ 239. Execution sale of lands omitted from the filed notice of levy is void as to good faith purchasers from debtor.—Campau v. Barnard, 25 Mich. 381; Barnard v. Campau, 29 Mich. 162.

§ 94. Presumptions and evidence as to title or defects.

Presumption as to priority based on record, see ante ¶ 94.

Indorsement as evidence of nature of levy made, see also ante ¶ 110.

Certificate of sale of real estate or record of certificate as prima facie evidence of title and regularity, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, § 95; Comp. L. 1915, § 12910.

¶ 240. An execution sale is presumed regular and made on proper notice if the party attacking it does not make out a prima facie case to the contrary; he cannot, by merely alleging its validity, place upon the execution purchaser the burden of establishing it.—Vroman v. Thompson, 51 Mich. 452.

¶ 241. A judgment in ordinary cases must be presumed to be correct, so far as the title of a good-faith purchaser at an execution sale thereunder is concerned.—Cook v. Kent Circuit Judge, 70 Mich. 94.

¶ 242. Plaintiff brought replevin for 20,000 feet of hemlock lumber, to which he claimed title through one who had purchased at an execution sale. The indorsement of levy and notice of sale described the property as "75,000 feet of lumber, in forty-five piles, consisting of birch, ash, elm, maple, pine, and oak lumber, piled and situated on the mill yard of H. [the execution debtor]." There were six or seven other piles of lumber in the yard at the time of the levy. Before the sale, defendant bought of the execution debtor the hemlock lumber in controversy. Plaintiff claimed that the hemlock was intermingled in the forty-five piles of lumber levied upon and advertised for sale, but the record on error failed to disclose that such was proved to be the case. Held, that plaintiff did not show himself entitled to maintain the action.—Dallavo v. Morse, 114 Mich. 675.

¶ 243. On a judgment levy against a homestead worth more than $1,500 under C. L. 1897, § 10369, How. 2nd Ed., § 13079, where the property sold for more than the appraised value, subject to prior incumbrances, appraisers were presumed to have taken into consideration the existence of such incumbrance.—Lieblien v. Hansen, 178 Mich. 11.

¶ 244. If one after a sale of an undivided interest in one of the parcels owned in common should receive a conveyance from the tenant in common of the lands so sold, he could not maintain a bill to set aside the sale on the ground of its being inadmissible, because if the sale was good it must stand, and if bad, so would the conveyance to him be on the same reasons.—Campau v. Godfrey, 18 Mich. 27.

¶ 245. Attending at an execution sale, and bidding, as if for the property of another, will estop the bidder from claiming title to the property sold, as against a purchaser whom he has thus induced to believe that it was not his.—Wilber v. Goodrich, 34 Mich. 84.

¶ 246. One is estopped as against execution purchasers from questioning the sale except upon the grounds asserted by him at the time of the sale.—Ganong v. Green, 64 Mich. 488.

¶ 247. Upon an execution sale of logs in attachment to enforce a lien, defendant made certain objections, which did not, however, include the objection that jurisdiction in attachment was not acquired because the affidavit was not filed and the writ issued on the same day. The logs were bid in by a purchaser relying on the advice of an attorney whom he had employed to examine the records of the suit, and who reported to him thereon. In replevin for the logs by the execution defendant against such purchaser, it was held that the former was not estopped from raising the jurisdictional objection; since both had knowledge of the facts. —Northern Michigan Lumber Co. v. Lyon, 95 Mich. 584.

¶ 248. A judgment creditor, levying on and selling the debtor's land apparently incumbered by a mortgage, and buying in at the sale, cannot thereafter attack the mortgage as fraudulent as to him and assert the priority of his judgment lien; since that would be unfair to the mortgagee and to other bidders who were entitled to assume that the mortgage was valid as against his lien. —Belcher v. Curtis, 119 Mich. 1.

¶ 249. Irregularities in judgment based on attachment proceedings may be waived by defendant's conduct; so that a sale of property on execution may not be thereafter attacked.—Payment v. Church, 38 Mich. 776.

§ 96. Cure of defects by delay or laches.

Objection after redemption time that levy was excessive, see post ¶ 266.

¶ 250. An execution sale under a judgment void for want of jurisdiction does not enable the purchaser to claim the benefit of the five-year limitation clause of Comp. L. 1871, § 7137, How. St., § 8698, applying where defendant claims title by or through a deed upon a sale by a sheriff, etc.—Millar v. Babcock, 29 Mich. 526.

¶ 251. A motion to set aside an execution for irregularity, made five years after sale under it, comes too late.—Spafford v. Beach, 2 D. 150.

§ 97. New writ, levy or sale.

Resale on refusal of bidder to take and pay for property, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, § 54; Comp. L. 1915, § 12869.

New execution where execution has been satisfied and property afterwards appears not to have belonged to debtor or damages have been recovered as for wrongful levy, see Jud. Act. chap. XXIII, § 64; Comp. L. 1915, § 12879.

Provision for further execution in event of recovery against purchaser because of failure of title purchased, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, § 129; Comp. L. 1915, § 12944.

¶ 252. Abandonment of a sale on execution because of an error in the notice thereof does not necessarily invalidate a subsequent sale or notice if it does not appear that the execution debtor has been prejudiced.—Atwood v. Bearss, 45 Mich. 469.

§ 98. Remedies and relief of purchaser.

Provisions for recovery of amount paid in case of eviction or failure of title in action based thereon, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, § 128; Comp. L. 1915, § 12943.

¶ 253. A party having the legal right to a conveyance under an execution sale can compel the execution of it by mandamus, if refused; but an equitable right only to a deed must be enforced in equity.—Whipple v. Farrar, 3 Mich. 436.

§ 99. Accounting for rents and profits.

Right to rents, profits and issues during period for redemption, see ante §§ 73, 74.

¶ 254. Where one neglects for several years after the time of redemption expires to perfect his title under an execution sale, he waives all right to an account of the rents and profits for the intermediate period. —Whipple v. Farrar, 3 Mich. 436.

§ 100. Procedure under statute to declare interests and equities in land sold.

Statutory provisions for suits to declare equities in land levied on, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 216, amending Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, § 82; Comp. L. 1915, § 12897.

¶ 255. A creditor cannot be allowed to sell land on execution with apparently a valid lien upon it by which its marketable value is affected, and then institute proceedings to set aside the incumbrance as a fraud upon his rights. In such a case he should file his bill in aid of execution before sale.—Marshall v. Blass, 82 Mich. 518.

¶ 256. Where a creditor, ignoring an assignment by his debtor which was preferential and void on its face, took judgment and sold the assigned land on execution, but did not file a bill in aid of such execution, and where the assignees never executed their trust but reconveyed to another assignor, defendant's grantor, held, that parties claiming under the execution sale were entitled to have their title quieted.—Wolf v. O'Conner, 88 Mich. 124, on rehearing, reversing 83 Mich. 301.

¶ 257. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 9167, providing that lands fraudulently conveyed with intent to defeat creditors shall be subject to debts and may be levied upon and sold under execution, and that in case of levy upon the equitable interest of the judgment debtor before a determination of his rights, the judgment creditor may before sale institute proceedings to ascertain the rights of the judgment debtor, and that in case of a sale without such rights having been determined, he shall within one year institute proceedings to ascertain and determine the same, a bill attacking a conveyance as fraudulent must be filed within one year from the date of levy.—Daniel v. Palmer, 124 Mich. 335.

¶ 258. Where a judgment creditor knows at the time of a sale under execution that the legal title to the land levied upon was not in the defendant it is his duty to proceed within a year under Comp. L. 1897, § 9167, and institute proceedings to ascertain and determine the interest and equities of the judgment debtor in the premises levied upon and to settle the rights of the parties in interest.—Tiedemann v. Kroll, 144 Mich. 308.

¶ 259. The limitation of one year after sale of the equitable interest of a judgment debtor for the institution of proceedings in aid of execution by a judgment creditor, under Comp. L. 1871, § 4628, applies only to equitable interests and does not cover legal interests, such as the interest of a judgment creditor in the land of a debtor, fraudulently conveyed.—Orendorf v. Budlong, 12 Fed. 24.

Effect of delay to cure sale as against objecting defendant, see ante § 96.

¶ 260. The execution purchaser cannot bring ejectment unless he has complied with the requirements of How. St., § 6108, and either before the sale or within one year thereafter has instituted proceedings to define the debtor's interest.—Jenison v. Rankin, 57 Mich. 49; and see Messmore v. Huggard, 46 Mich. 558.

¶ 261. If one who has levied execution to reach an equitable interest in land delays more than one year to institute proceedings to determine the judgment debtor's rights and equities, he is guilty of laches (How. St., § 6108), and a bill to remove the cloud caused by such levy may be maintained by the holder of the legal title.—Edsell v. Nevins, 80 Mich. 146.

¶ 263. Complainants owned land and conveyed it by quitclaim deed, taking back a mortgage for a part of the purchase price. After the deed was recorded, but before the recording of the mortgage, defendant took out execution, and levied on the lands as the property of complainant, and purchased the land at a sheriff's sale. Held, that complainant's interest in the land was an equitable one, within the meaning of section 9167, 3 Comp. Laws 1897, and hence defendant, having failed to file its bill in equity within one year after the sale to determine complainant's interest, as required by the statute, took no interest under the levy and sale; and complainant, having taken possession apparently under his mortgage, was entitled to have the levy and sale removed as a cloud upon his title.—Gordon v. Township of Burleigh, 153 Mich. 493.

§ 102. Setting aside sale or other relief.

Motion and notice of motion, see post § 103.
Effect of setting aside sale, see post § 104.

Defects and irregularities sufficient to invalidate sale, see ante §§ 90-93.
Improper sale in gross as ground to set sale aside, see ante ¶ 234.
Mandamus to compel proper action or order, see Mandamus, II, III.
Jurisdictional amount in controversy in suits in equity for relief, see Equity § 17.

¶ 264. Irregularities in a sale under an execution must be corrected by applying to the court out of which the writ issued to set the sale aside. There must be fraud to give equity jurisdiction; it is not sufficient that there is irregularity.—Cavenaugh v. Jakeway, W. 344.

¶ 265. A purchaser of land against which a certificate of levy has been filed may obtain relief against an irregular sale of the interest of the judgment debtor by application to the court wherein the judgment was rendered, but a bill will not lie to set aside the levy and sale as a cloud upon his title.—Rhode v. Hassler, 113 Mich. 56.

¶ 266. The execution debtor who fails to redeem within the time allowed by law cannot afterwards have the sale set aside on the ground that the levy was excessive.—Campau v. Godfrey, 18 Mich. 27.

¶ 267. A sale on execution under an alimony decree will be vacated where the party against whom the execution was issued was not served with notice of the application for execution.—Dewey v. Dewey, 151 Mich. 586.

¶ 267a. A court of equity will not relieve a garnishee from a sale of land belonging to such garnishee under an execution upon a judgment against such land as the property of the principal defendant, because of defects in the original proceedings against the principal debtor, and in the garnishment proceedings, where the creditor acted in good faith, and the garnishee appeared in the garnishee proceedings, which were continued from time to time and had ample opportunity to present any defense which he had.—Lafayette Benev. Society v. Richardson, 188 Mich. 57.

§ 103. Motion and notice of motion to set aside.

Conclusiveness of return on motion to set aside, see post § 111.

General motion practice, see Motions and Orders.

¶ 268. As to the authority of the circuit court to set aside, upon motion, an execution levy or sale for illegalities or in case of an excessive levy, or of a sale for an inadequate price, see Blair v. Compton, 33 Mich. 414.

¶ 269. Notice of proceedings to set aside an execution sale should be given to the purchaser at such sale.—Wilkie v. Ingham Circuit Judge, 52 Mich. 641.

¶ 270. Mandamus to vacate an order setting aside a sale on an execution that had been levied without waiting for the enrollment of the decree was denied, even though no notice of the proceedings to set aside the sale had been given to the purchaser, where (1) the date of the decree, as shown in the execution, was notice of the fact that the execution was prematurely issued; and (2) where the motion to set aside was not made until the time to redeem had expired.—Wilkie v. Ingham Circuit Judge, 52 Mich. 641.

Effect of grant of new trial, vacation or reversal, see post § 124.

¶ 271. When a levy and sale are set aside on motion of the plaintiff on the ground that the property sold did not belong to the defendant in attachment, any claim of the plaintiff to the property or possession acquired by the sale is effectually barred.—Bacon v. Kimmel, 14 Mich. 201.

VIII. SATISFACTION, DISCHARGE AND DISPOSAL OF PROCEEDS.

Statutory duty to discharge real estate levy on record when paid or discharged by redemption, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, § 147; Comp. L. 1915, § 12962.

¶ 272. The rule excusing a judgment creditor buying at an execution sale from paying the amount of his bid applies only where his bid does not exceed the amount due under the execution, and where his bid is in excess of that amount it is his duty to pay it.—Munger v. Sanford, 144 Mich. 323.

¶ 273. One of several defendants in execution, to avoid levy gave plaintiff's attorney a check for the full amount, with no provision that any part of it was to be returned in any event. Her attorney testified that it was given not as payment of the execution but to protect plaintiff's attorneys, the execution to be kept alive. Held that it was a payment of the execution.—Thornton v. Damm, 120 Mich. 510.

§ 106. Set-offs.

Provisions for set-off of executions against each other, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, §§ 15-17; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12830-12832.

¶ 274. A set-off of executions under How. St., § 7708, cannot be made where there has been a bona fide assignment of a part of the sum due on the first execution.—McRoberts v. Lyon, 79 Mich. 25.

¶ 275. That a judgment in the circuit court in a case appealed from justice's court is rendered also against a surety on the appeal bond will not prevent the set-off, against an execution issued on a similar judgment after reversal of an execution for costs on reversal of the former judgment in the supreme court.—Bennett v. Hanley, 91 Mich. 143.

¶ 276. Judgment having been recovered by A. against B. and assigned to C. and thereafter reversed on error, and a new trial having resulted in a judgment similar to the first and execution being issued thereon, B. is entitled to set-off against it an execution for costs awarded him on the reversal.—Bennett v. Hanley, 91 Mich. 143.

§ 107. Payment into court and distribution of proceeds.

Right of grantee by fraud to have surplus after satisfaction of levying creditor, see Fraudulent Conveyances, III.
General law of payments into court for persons entitled and procedure for payment out again, see Payment, I, B, IV.
Disposal of surplus after satisfying debt and expenses, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, § 120; Comp. L. 1915, § 12935.

¶ 277. The failure of the sheriff to pay into court the amount to which the debtor was entitled as homestead exemption, did not invalidate a sale under execution; the debtor's remedy being by citation or an action against the sheriff.—Flynn v. Kalamazoo Circuit Judge, 136 Mich. 23.

IX. RETURNS TO WRIT, AND FILINGS OF PAPERS OF SALE.

To justices' writs, see Justices of the Peace, IV, H.

§ 108. Nature and necessity in general.

Indorsements of receipt by sheriff, see ante § 13.
Certificates of levy and sale, see ante §§ 43, 76.
Alias writ on return of original unsatisfied, see ante § 10.
Necessity of levy before return day, see ante § 45.
Return to attachment, see Attachment, VI, D.
Return to original process, see Process, II, D.
Returns to capias, see Civil Arrest §§ 14, 41.
Issuance and return of writ unsatisfied as basis for creditors' suit, see Creditors' Suits § 12.

§ 109. Time for return.

Time for return on which creditors' suit is based, see Creditors' Suits §§ 14, 17.
Statutory time for return day, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, § 1; Comp. L. 1915, § 12816.

¶ 278. An execution for the purposes of a transcript may lawfully be returned on the sixtieth day from its date—that being the return day—unless that day is Sunday. A return on Sunday is void.—Peck v. Cavell, 16 Mich. 9.

§ 110. Requisites and sufficiency of return.

Time for return, see ante § 109.
Amendments of return, see post § 113.
Effect of omission to return no personalty where sale of land was made, see also ante ¶ 230.
Effect of deficiencies on title of purchaser, see also ante ¶ 228.
Return to writ issued against receiver without leave as tainted with illegality of the writ, see ante ¶ 82.
Necessity and sufficiency of return to support creditors' suits, see Creditors' Suits §§ 12-15.
Specification of articles sold and prices realized, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, § 148; Comp. L. 1915, § 12963.
Return unsatisfied of writ issued on judgment for mortgage debt where other property than that mortgaged does not satisfy writ, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, § 126; Comp. L. 1915, § 12941.
Certificate of doings and return where one officer completes execution begun by another since deceased, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, § 21; Comp. L. 1915, § 12836.

¶ 279. To pass the title to real estate sold on execution under the appraisal law of 1841 it was not necessary that it should appear, from the officer's return to the execution, that either of the appraisers was chosen by defendant, or that he had an opportunity to choose one.—Crane v. Hardy, 1 Mich. 56.

¶ 280. A sheriff's deed on execution sale is not invalid because his return does not show that notices of sale were duly posted; the statute does not require that proof of publishing or posting be made matter of record.—Grand Rapids Nat. Bank v. Kritzer, 116 Mich. 688.

§ 111. Conclusiveness and effect of return.

Appraisal as evidence, see post § 112.
Rebuttal of indorsement of direction by plaintiff to officer to return writ, see post ¶ 291.
Indorsement amounting to abandonment of levy, see ante ¶ 154.
Conclusiveness of returns to other process, see Attachment § 75; Process, II, D.
Conclusiveness of return in bill by creditor based thereon, see Creditors' Suits § 29.
Conclusiveness of sheriff's return against debtor corporation in action against stockholders, see Corporations ¶ 1220.

¶ 281. Whether the sheriff's return to an execution is conclusive upon the defendant therein, and those claiming under him, or only prima facie evidence and liable to be impeached for the sheriff's fraud, quære.—Nall v. Granger, 8 Mich. 450.

¶ 282. The sheriff's return under a judgment levy is conclusive upon the parties.—Lieblien v. Hansen, 178 Mich. 11.

¶ 283. A sheriff's return upon an execution levy against real estate, was conclusive upon a motion to vacate the sale of the real estate, where no effort to amend the return filed before the decision of the circuit judge was made or asked before the rendering of the decision.—Flynn v. Kalamazoo Circuit Judge, 136 Mich. 23.

¶ 284. Where a sheriff made return to an execution that he had made levy on goods on a day named, which was prior to the giving of a mortgage thereon, it was held that the mortgagee was not precluded by this return from showing that in fact the levy was made after the mortgage was given, and that a false return of the time was made by collusion with the purchaser at the sheriff's sale.—Nall v. Granger, 8 Mich. 450.

¶ 285. One who claims rights in property that has been sold on execution can show the real facts as to the validity of the levy and sale, if his own title antedates the levy. —Winfield v. Adams, 34 Mich. 437.

¶ 286. Parol evidence is admissible to show that an execution was actually returned on Saturday, although the sheriff's return thereto is dated as of Sunday, where other parts of the record and the clerk's entry show the return to have been on Saturday.—Macomber v. Wright, 108 Mich. 109.

¶ 287. The sheriff's return nulla bona cannot be questioned in ejectment brought by the grantee in a deed on execution sale of defendant's land.—Luton v. Sharp, 94 Mich. 202.

¶ 288. That an execution regular on its face was returned by the officer nulla bona is evidence tending to show the insolvency of the execution debtor, and a discovery by counsel made years afterwards that had the judgment been attacked it might not have proved valid, does not detract from the evidence furnished by such return.—Riggs v. Whitaker, 130 Mich. 327.

§ 112. Filings and records.

Appraisal as declaration against interest of officer, see Evidence ¶ 2018.

Conclusiveness in evidence against officer of his appraisal to set out exemptions, see also Evidence ¶ 2923.

¶ 289. In an action against the officer the appraisal made under his writ is admissible against him as some evidence of the value of the property levied on.—Worthington v. Hanna, 23 Mich. 530; Hunt v. Strew, 33 Mich. 85; Densmore v. Mathews, 58 Mich. 616.

¶ 290. The appraisal made under the officer's writ is not evidence in his favor.—Dyer v. Rosenthal, 45 Mich. 588.

¶ 291. It seems proper to allow the plaintiff in an execution to dispute the sheriff's indorsement thereon that the plaintiff had directed him to return the execution to the clerk.—Vroman v. Thompson, 51 Mich. 452.

§ 113. Amendments or setting aside returns.

Return nunc pro tunc to cure alias writ, see post ¶ 302.

Of returns to other process, see Attachment § 74; Process, III.

Right of execution defendant to move to set aside false return on which creditors' bill is pending, see also Creditors' Suits ¶ 118.

¶ 292. An amendment to a return of a sheriff as to a matter of fact must be made voluntarily and cannot be compelled by the court.—Flynn v. Kalamazoo Circuit Judge, 138 Mich. 126.

¶ 293. A sheriff after levying execution on real estate made no entry on the writ of such levy, but filed a notice of it as provided for by statute. Held, that at a hearing on a bill in aid of the execution, the sheriff was properly permitted to attach a paper to the execution showing the proceedings he took under it.—Shepard v. Schrutt, 163 Mich. 485.

X. OBJECTIONS TO WRIT AND LEVY; QUASHAL OR OTHER RELIEF.

§ 114. Grounds of objection.

To contents or indorsements, see post § 115.

To alias writs, see post § 116.

Objections made after sale and affecting it, see ante VII, F.

Presumptions as to regularity, see ante § 94.

Issuance during time of stay and delivery to sheriff afterwards, see ante ¶ 10.

Want of seal, see also ante ¶ 24.

Levy accomplished by trespass, see ante ¶ 98.

Excessiveness of levy, see also ante ¶ 107.

Failure to give notice of levy, see ante ¶ 114.

Irregularity in making inventory and appraisal and setting out exemptions, see also ante ¶ 123.

Delay in making sale, see also ante ¶ 162.

¶ 294. It is doubtful whether a levy on chattels can be contested on the inconsistent grounds that the one in possession holds as mortgagee and under a bill of sale.—Haynes v. Leppig, 40 Mich. 602.

¶ 295. A levy upon an undivided half of a portion of partnership property is invalid and the sale will be perpetually enjoined on the application of the partnership.—Krupp v. Adams, 124 Mich. 215.

§ 115. ——Contents of writ or indorsements thereon.

Failure to indorse description of property, see also ante ¶ 27.

Improper command to make execution fees, see also ante ¶ 26.

Failure to indorse date of receipt, see also ante ¶ 29.

¶ 296. An execution issued upon a judgment on a guardian's bond did not state, as required by How. St., § 5998, that it was for the ward's use. Held, that such omission could not, in suit to recover back money paid on the judgment, be urged by the defendant in execution where no levy was made and where the judgment was voluntarily paid.—Kalmbach v. Foote, 86 Mich. 240.

¶ 297. An execution the command of which is general is not invalid because it recites that the action of assumpsit wherein the judgment was rendered was instituted to enforce a mechanic's lien, and also describes the property against which the lien was asserted, although there was only an ineffectual attempt to enforce the lien in such action.—Allured v. Voller, 107 Mich. 476.

¶ 298. A command to collect, in addition to the legal costs, twenty-five cents for the execution, is surplusage, and unwarranted by Comp. L. 1857, § 3790; How. St., § 6951, but does not make void the execution, as the officer is presumed to know that by law it cannot be collected.—Hollister v. Giddings, 24 Mich. 501.

¶ 299. The fact of levy should be indorsed on the execution; but its absence does not invalidate the execution if notice of the levy is duly recorded according to statute (Comp. L. 1871, § 4685; Pub. L. 1875, Act No. 5, p. 3; How. St., § 6173), and its subsequent indorsement is unimportant.—Vroman v. Thompson, 51 Mich. 452.

§ 116. ——Irregular alias or failure to revive writ.

¶ 300. The issue of execution after plaintiff's death without taking steps to revive the suit is only an irregularity, and may be cured by a revivor nunc pro tunc.—Jenness v. Lapeer Circuit Judge, 42 Mich. 469.

¶ 301. An alias fi. fa. issued on return of a previous execution levied upon real estate, which remained unsold for want of bidders, is irregular merely, but not void.—Spafford v. Beach, 2 D. 150.

¶ 302. Levy of an execution upon land was released because the land was not the judgment debtor's and the execution was indorsed nulla bona, but was not returned, and after its life had expired an alias was issued. Held, that such issue was merely irregular, since the court might have directed return nunc pro tunc, and that a levy thereunder was valid.—Miller v. Hanley, 94 Mich. 253.

§ 117. Method of objecting or obtaining relief.

¶ 303. The proper method of attacking a levy of execution is by motion to quash it in the court under whose writ it is made where such court can furnish adequate relief.—Jensen v. Oceana Circuit Judge, 194 Mich. 405.

¶ 304. An excessive levy is not void. The party complaining of it should move the court to set it aside instead of proceeding by bill in equity.—Campau v. Godfrey, 18 Mich. 27.

§ 118. Estoppel and waiver.

To question sale or defects therein or affecting title, see ante § 95.

Of hostile or paramount claimant to question title, see post § 121.

¶ 305. A purchaser of a note secured by a mortgage, who afterwards purchased the mortgagor's interest subject to a levy, is estopped from denying the levy and commits trespass if he seizes the chattels while under the levy.—Nelson v. Ferris, 30 Mich. 497.

¶ 306. One who has recognized the validity of an execution by procuring release of property and giving other in lieu of it, whereon the other has acted, is bound, whether or not he supposed that the judgment was valid or had any knowledge of the truth in that regard.—Payment v. Church, 38 Mich. 776.

¶ 307. By making a specific objection one may become estopped to make different objections that might have been averted; hence a mortgagee who at the time of an execution sale objects thereto on the ground of his mortgage cannot, in trover against the purchaser, raise the objection that the constable's notice of sale did not contain the names of the parties.—Ganong v. Green, 64 Mich. 488.

¶ 308. Defendants claiming title to real estate under execution levies did not waive their rights to enforce such levies by not attacking as fraudulent a subsequent conveyance of such property, since the execution levy was notice to such purchaser of the fraud of her vendor.—Barrett v. Lowrey, 77 Mich. 668.

¶ 309. A levy made during the life of a judgment debtor cannot be cured of any radical defect by proceedings after his death.—Campau v. Barnard, 25 Mich. 381.

XI. ADVERSE AND PARAMOUNT CLAIMS TO PROPERTY TAKEN.

§ 120. Rights and remedies of owner of property taken as another's.

[Note. The right of property under a levy, when the debtor's title is disputed by a third person claiming by paramount or independent title, is usually questioned by actions for Conversion; Trespass; Replevin; Ejectment; Quieting Title. See these topics.]

Levy on property as tenant's as estoppel to assert title as one's own, see also Estoppel ¶ 98.

¶ 311. One who purchases subject to levy is estopped from denying the levy.—Nelson v. Ferris, 30 Mich. 497.

¶ 312. One who disclaimed ownership and advised an attachment of chattels as the property of another, and assented to the levy, is estopped from setting up afterwards a claim of title as against such proceedings.—Sebright v. Moore, 33 Mich. 92.

¶ 313. Where an attaching creditor had induced another creditor to levy an attachment which afterwards became a prior lien by reason of the discontinuance of the first suit, the former is estopped, in so far as the value of the property may be needed for satisfying the latter claim, from asserting that the ownership of the property was in himself.—Vanneter v. Crossman, 42 Mich. 465.

¶ 314. Where a sheriff in good faith levies execution on certain property, a husband and wife are estopped from afterwards claiming that the property was that of the wife when at the time they failed to advise the sheriff of the exact situation and they were cognizant of the fact that the property was being taken as that of the husband.—Zuehlke v. Stone, 148 Mich. 478.

¶ 315. The principle of estoppel is inapplicable to a case where the administrator of an estate had attended a sale and bid upon property sold under an attachment, although he had previously formally notified the sheriff that the property attached belonged to his intestate and an affidavit to that effect was presented at the hearing where the order for sale was made. The administrator is not thereby estopped from suing the sheriff for the value of the property sold.—Major v. Brewster, 148 Mich. 623.

¶ 316. A person who becomes the owner of all or substantially all of the capital stock of a corporation, and who through dummy directors obtains an assignment of all of the corporate assets, cannot thereby defeat the rights of an execution creditor under a levy against the corporation to satisfy it out of such assets, he having relied on the assurance of the assignee that the judgment should be paid.—Lang v. Lundy, 185 Mich. 390.

¶ 317. A sale on execution of personal property belonging to a third person is a conversion, whether the officer making the sale removes it or not.—Scudder v. Anderson, 54 Mich. 122.

¶ 318. Retention of fees from the proceeds of a wrongful levy is a conversion.—Bringard v. Stellwagen, 41 Mich. 54.

¶ 319. A levy on specific partnership chattels of an attachment against one partner only is a trespass.—Haynes v. Knowles, 36 Mich. 407.

¶ 320. A plaintiff received as a gift from her husband a certain lot of goods which were subject to seizure on execution by her husband's judgment creditors. She in good faith, thinking them exempt, admixed them with goods of her own. The defendant officer, in making a levy, asked her to point out her own goods so that he might leave them. This she refused to do. Held, the officer was not liable for seizing the entire lot.—McCausey v. Hoek, 159 Mich. 570.

¶ 321. Where there have been several unlawful sales on executions against the same party, he may treat each as a conversion and recover separately and is not required to consolidate.—Wheeler v. Wallace, 53 Mich. 364.

¶ 322. A client was held liable for the taking of property upon a justice's execution issued at the instance of his attorney after the owner of the property had perfected an appeal.—Foster v. Wiley, 27 Mich. 244.

¶ 323. Where a statute authorizes the deputizing of persons to serve executions, the plaintiff selecting a person to serve the writ thereby makes himself responsible for his acts.—Harvey v. McAdams, 32 Mich. 472.

¶ 324. Express assent is not necessary to render plaintiffs in an execution liable for the unlawful acts in their behalf of one deputed to serve the writ where their acts imply acquiescence; and their keeping for him the property taken on the writ, and purchasing an article at the sale, is evidence of their sanction of what was done, though they asserted disapproval at the time.—Harvey v. McAdams, 32 Mich. 472.

XIII. RIGHTS ON REVERSAL OR OPENING OF JUDGMENT.

Right to award of restitution on reversal of judgment or decree, see Jud. Act, chap. XXII, § 7; Comp. L. 1915, § 12797.

¶ 325. As a general rule, the granting of a new trial or the reversal or vacation of a judgment does not affect the title of a good-faith purchaser at an execution sale; otherwise where judgment in ejectment for value is vacated by defendant's taking new trial within three years pursuant to How. St., § 7822.—Cook v. Kent Circuit Judge, 70 Mich. 94.

¶ 326. Rights that have accrued under an execution of a judgment in trover will be saved, where, on appeal, such execution is recalled and reformed, so as to comply with the proper judgment.—Seymour v. Bruske, 140 Mich. 244.

¶ 327. An action is not barred by the fact that a sale on execution was had under a former judgment that was reversed, where the sale was set aside on such reversal before it became absolute.—Millikin v. Ferguson, 56 Mich. 189.

EXEMPTIONS.

TREATS of the constitutional and statutory right of a debtor to hold certain chattels or money or property of a given amount exempt from execution or other judicial process. It excludes the question whether personalty is of a nature that is susceptible of levy or seizure (see Attachment, III; Executions, IV) and also exemptions from taxation (see Taxes, III). The right to have property or money set apart to a decedent's widow as her widow's allowance is treated in Estates of Decedents, V, D.

¶ 1. Constitutional and statutory provisions exempting property from execution are remedial, and are to be construed liberally and beneficially for the debtor.—Alvord v. Lent, 23 Mich. 369; Stewart v. Welton, 32 Mich. 56; Rosenthal v. Scott, 41 Mich. 632; Wilson v. Bartholomew, 45 Mich. 41; Fischer v. McIntyre, 66 Mich. 681.

¶ 2. Const., art. XVI, § 1, which provides that the personal property of every resident of this state to consist of such property only as shall be designated by law, shall be exempted, to the amount of not less than $500, from sale on execution or other final process of any court, issued for the collection of any debt, was infringed by Pub. Acts 1885, No. 14, § 1 (How. St., § 1717a), limiting the right of exemption to the articles therein enumerated, not exceeding $500 in value, in cases where the execution is issued upon a judgment for personal labor.—Burrows v. Brooks, 113 Mich. 307.

§ 2. Personal nature of right.

¶ 3. The exemption of $250 worth of stock in trade as provided by 2 How. Stat., § 7686, to enable a person to carry on the business in which he is principally engaged is a purely personal privilege which must be exercised by the debtor at the time of levy, and the buyer of a stock of goods obtains no right as against the seller's creditors to the exemption which such seller might have claimed.—J. L. Hudson Co. v. No-Name Hat Co., 174 Mich. 109.

§ 3. Extraterritorial effect.

Effect of nonresidence, see post § 5.
See also generally Conflict of Laws, I.

¶ 4. An exemption follows the debt into another jurisdiction where the debtor himself has not been personally subjected to such jurisdiction.—Drake v. Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co., 69 Mich. 168.

¶ 5. A railroad company doing business in Indiana and owing an employee residing there wages exempt by the local law from garnishment was garnished in Michigan by a resident of the latter state to whom a debt due from said employee and contracted in Indiana had been assigned by the creditor, an Indiana man. Held, that where no jurisdiction had been obtained over the person of the principal debtor, the exemption of his wages was a vested right in rem which followed the debt.—Drake v. Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co., 69 Mich. 168.

Nonresidence or absence of debtor or family, see post § 5.

Occupational exemptions, see post § 6.

Persons entitled to assert right as distinguished from persons entitled to right, see post §§ 29, 30.

¶ 6. A boarding house keeper is entitled to the same exemption of household furniture as any other householder, though such furniture had been procured to carry on his business, and he had abandoned such business; and household furniture purchased for the purpose of keeping the boarding house is exempt to the amount of $250, even as against a judgment for the purchase price.—Vanderhorst v. Bacon, 38 Mich. 669.

¶ 7. A married woman who supports her family or contributes to its support by the employment of a team may claim the benefit of the laws exempting a team from execution.—McHugh v. Curtis, 48 Mich. 262.

¶ 8. A partner need not be an active member of the firm in order to be entitled to his exemption. Nor does each partner's right depend upon the amount he has drawn out of the firm; partnership dealings and adjustments between the partners or between them and creditors cannot be inquired into in a suit by one partner for his statutory exemption.—McCoy v. Brennan, 61 Mich. 362.

¶ 9. Where execution issued upon a claim against a firm that had dissolved and divided its property, the suit having been brought after the division, a partner who continued in the business could retain as exempt from execution $250 in value of the stock received by him on the division. The question of the right of a firm, or of persons in the character of partners, to assert the exemption privilege is not here involved.—Worman v. Giddey, 30 Mich. 151.

¶ 10. Copartners cannot join in trover for their individual exemptions in the partnership property; and if they do, the misjoinder is fatal.—Rogers v. Raynor, 102 Mich. 473.

¶ 13. A resident of Michigan who removes to a foreign state thereby loses the benefit of the Michigan exemption laws as to any property which may be afterwards found within the state.—McHugh v. Curtis, 48 Mich. 262.

¶ 14. The statute (see How. St., § 8032), exempting from garnishment the wages of a "householder having a family" to the amount of $25, applies to a husband residing in this state, and who is supporting his family in Canada from his wages.—Pettit v. Muskegon Booming Co., 74 Mich. 214.

¶ 15. Temporary absence from state owing to unlawful attachment of exempt household effects cannot be construed as nonresidence so as to destroy exemption from seizure on another writ.—Erickson v. Drazkowski, 94 Mich. 551.

¶ 16. Where, because of defendant's unlawful seizure upon attachment of plaintiff's exempt household effects, plaintiff is compelled to seek shelter at her mother's house five miles distant in another state, the point that plaintiff was a nonresident cannot be raised to defend a seizure under a second attachment levied while plaintiff was temporarily in such other state.—Erickson v. Drazkowski, 94 Mich. 551.

¶ 17. A debtor must, under the exemption laws, be conclusively presumed to reside where his family lives with his consent, where there has been no separation between husband and wife, and where they occupy the old home; and it is not otherwise if he be voluntarily absent.—Freehling v. Bresnahan, 61 Mich. 540.

§ 6. ——Occupational exemptions.

Property used in occupation or business, see post §§ 17-23.

Exemption belonging to person by reason of his trade, profession, business, or occupation, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, § 43, ¶¶ 8, 9; Comp. L. 1915, § 12858, ¶¶ 8, 9.

¶ 19. Whether one is a practicing physician within the meaning of the exemption laws is a question relating rather to the business in which he is engaged than to the degree of skill with which he exercises it; though some degree of skill is necessary.—Sutton v. Facey, 1 Mich. 243.

§ 7. Right in more than one capacity or character.

Things exempted to individuals and to householders respectively, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, § 43; Comp. L. 1915, § 12858.

¶ 20. Where a person who had been trading for several years left it off, and devoted his time chiefly to settling his business affairs, for which he was obliged to travel about, and used a horse and wagon for that purpose, as well as for the cultivation of a small tract of land, it was held that both of these were legitimate employments within the exemption law.—Kenyon v. Baker, 16 Mich. 373.

¶ 21. A farmer who is also a householder owning several cows for use on a farm is entitled to an exemption, as a householder, of two cows under Comp. L. 1897, § 10322, subd. 6, even though in addition to this he is entitled to an exemption, as a farmer, of $250 worth of the stock animals described in Comp. L. 1897, § 10322, subd. 8, which would include such cows.—Feenstra v. Tanis, 145 Mich. 409.

§ 8. Joint and common owners.

Right of partner to exemption against chattel mortgage executed by other partner in firm's name, see Partnership, IV, A.

¶ 22. Where execution is levied upon a stock of goods belonging to a firm, each partner is entitled to exemption to the amount of $250.—Skinner v. Shannon, 44 Mich. 86; Waite v. Mathews, 50 Mich. 392; Chipman v. Kellogg, 60 Mich. 438.

§ 9. Rights between husband and wife.

Necessity of wife's consent to selection of what shall be exempt, see post ¶ 95.

¶ 23. A husband who has left his wife cannot replevy from her household goods that would be exempt from execution.—Smith v. Smith, 52 Mich. 538.

§ 10. Subjection to levy for purchase price or labor debts.

Notice of suit and filing of notice, see post § 11.

Nonexemption of occupational chattels (§ 12858, ¶ 8) from purchase money judgment, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, § 44; Comp. L. 1915, § 12859.

¶ 24. In order that a judgment for purchase price of chattels shall be free from exemption, as provided by How. St., § 7716, it is not necessary that the judgment shall recite what it is for; since the statute makes no such requirement.—Lillibridge v. Walsh, 97 Mich. 459.

¶ 25. Property levied upon under attachment for the purchase price is not subject to exemption.—Gottesman v. Chipman, 125 Mich. 60.

¶ 26. The property exempt, under Comp. L. 1897, § 10322, subd. 8, to one by virtue of his trade, profession, occupation, or business, is by reason of section 10324 subject to levy for the purchase price, though it is of the class also exempted to him as a householder under section 10322, subd. 6.—Feenstra v. Tanis, 145 Mich. 409.

¶ 27. The transferee of a note given for the purchase-money of property exempt from execution by How. St., § 7686, subd. 8, cannot claim benefit of exception from exemption provided by How. St., § 7716, since by transferring the note the seller elected to regard the purchase price as paid.—Shepard v. Cross, 33 Mich. 96.

§ 11. ——Notice of suit and filing of notice.

Provisions of statute as to notice of purchase-money action, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, § 44; Comp. L. 1915, § 12859.

¶ 28. Under judgment for purchase-price, How. St., § 7716, as amended by Laws 1885, Act No. 159, § 2, providing that certain personalty otherwise exempt from execution shall be liable to levy under judgment for purchase-price, and avoiding sale made after suit begun and notice filed, does not create a lien upon the property but applies to the remedy for the recovery of the purchase-price: the notice is analogous to a lis pendens, and the statute is not limited to cases in which no security for the debt is taken.—Roberts v. McGur, 82 Mich. 221.

¶ 29. How. St., § 7716, which subjects certain personalty, otherwise exempt, to execution issued on a judgment for the purchase price, and which avoids any sale made by the vendee after commencement of the suit in which judgment is rendered, provided notice be filed, etc., does not make the filing of notice a prerequisite to the right to levy upon the property so long as it remains the property of the judgment debtor, or is in the hands of a fraudulent transferee; but merely restricts the right of alienation to any one after the notice is filed.—Lillibridge v. Walsh, 97 Mich. 459.

¶ 30. The statute denying exemptions where the debt is for the purchase price does not create a lien upon the property, but applies to the remedy merely; and there is no force in the contention that, in the absence of fraud, the vendee is bound by actual notice.—Lillibridge v. Walsh, 104 Mich. 153.

¶ 31. Property otherwise exempt from execution, but subject thereto under How. St., § 7716, for the purchase price, may be seized in the hands of third persons where its transfer to them was made for the purpose of defeating said statutory right of the vendor, although the notice provided for in the statute was not filed prior to said transfer.—Lillibridge v. Walsh, 104 Mich. 153.

§ 12. Levy and subjection of surplus value.

Levy and sale of chattel exceeding exempt value and rendition of surplus to creditors and exempt portion to debtor, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, § 50; Comp. L. 1915, § 12865.

Bond by debtor to release chattel levied on as exceeding exempt value, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, § 50; Comp. L. 1915, § 12865.

§ 13. Waiver or alienation of right.

Loss or waiver of right by offering property for sale, see also post ¶ 49.

Loss of right by conducting business unlawfully, see post § 23.

Loss of right by absconding, see also post ¶ 69.

Waiver of right by failure to make demand, see also post ¶¶ 85, 86.

Waiver of right by contract involving labor to be done on exempt property for which contractors entitled to lien, see also post ¶ 125.

Public policy as to agreements for waiving exemptions, see Contracts § 73.

Power of partner to find copartner by alienation or incumbrance, see Partnership, IV, A.

¶ 32. As between himself and his creditor a judgment debtor can waive his exemption, which is a personal privilege.—Wilson v. Montague, 57 Mich. 638.

¶ 33. The exemption of stock in trade from the levy of execution thereon is under the control of the merchant alone, and his waiver of such exemption need not be signed by his wife to be valid.—Charpentier v. Bresnahan, 62 Mich. 360.

¶ 34. A written consent by a debtor to the public or private sale in bulk of his entire stock of goods on several executions under which it is held, and the application of the proceeds, less the costs of the sale, in liquidation pro rata of the debts of the several plaintiffs, is evidence of a waiver by the debtor of his statutory exemption, unless contradicted or qualified by legitimate evidence tending to break its force.—Rich v. French, 99 Mich. 27.

¶ 35. Plaintiff's husband, one McCausey, and one Sprague were formerly partners. They gave a trust mortgage of their stock of goods for the benefit of creditors. The trustee closed them out after allowing them to select certain goods under the statutory exemption. McCausey turned over his share of the exempted goods to plaintiff. Judgment creditors who never consented to the selection of goods made under the exemption levied on them in the hands of plaintiff, who failed to claim the exemption. Held, that by such failure she waived her right to the exemption.—McCausey v. Hoek, 159 Mich. 570.

¶ 35a. A judgment for defendant in replevin for exempt property taken by him on execution bars trover against him for its conversion unless after the return of the property and before its sale the claim of exemption is plainly made.—McGuire v. Galligan, 57 Mich. 38.

Subsistence for exempt animals, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, § 43, ¶ 9; Comp. L. 1915, § 12858, ¶ 9.

¶ 36. As to whether corn and potatoes lately planted and just emerging from the ground are exempt as "provisions" under Comp. L. 1857, chap. 131, § 27, subd. 6, How. St., § 7686, subd. 6, quære.—King v. Moore, 10 Mich. 538, equally divided court.

¶ 37. Comp. L. 1857, chap. 131, § 27, subd. 9, How. St., § 7686, subd. 9, exempting from execution a sufficient quantity of hay, grain, feed and roots for properly keeping for six months the animals specified as exempt from execution, does not exempt any more of those articles than may be necessary for keeping such of the animals mentioned as the debtor has at the time of the levy.—King v. Moore, 10 Mich. 538.

¶ 38. The exemption from execution of six months' provision for a householder and his family is for the benefit of those of his children who are over age as well as those who are under, if they have no home elsewhere than with their father.—Stilson v. Gibbs, 53 Mich. 280.

§ 16. Household goods and domestic animals.

Householder's exemption of sheep and fleeces, cows, and swine, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, § 43, ¶ 6; Comp. L. 1915, § 12858, ¶ 6.

¶ 39. A piano cannot be classed as "household goods, furniture, or utensils," within the meaning of How. St., § 7686, subd. 7, which exempts to each householder, from levy and sale under any execution, or upon any final process of a court, "all household goods, furniture, and utensils, not exceeding in value $250."—Kehl v. Dunn, 102 Mich. 581.

§ 17. Property used in business or trade.

Use or connection with "business," see post § 18.
Principal business, see post § 19.
Business not yet begun, see post § 20.
Interruption or suspension of business, see post § 21.
Business abandoned, see post § 22.
Business unlawfully conducted, see post § 23.
Persons entitled to occupational exemption, see ante § 6.
Articles exempt by reason of trade, profession, business, or occupation of debtor, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, § 43, ¶¶ 8, 9; Comp. L. 1915, § 12858, ¶¶ 8, 9.

¶ 40. Where an exemption is claimed of articles necessary to enable the debtor to carry on his profession, trade, etc., it is not required that they be absolutely necessary or "essentially requisite." It is sufficient that they be suitable and actually used to enable him to carry on his trade.—Kenyon v. Baker, 16 Mich. 373, impliedly overruling Morrill v. Seymour, 3 Mich. 64.

¶ 41. Sawmill machinery used in a manufacturer's business is exempt under How. St., § 7686, subd. 8.—Wood v. Bresnahan, 63 Mich. 614.

¶ 42. A carpenter may hold lumber exempt though he may intend to use it in building a house for himself.—Hutchinson v. Roe, 44 Mich. 389.

¶ 43. A dentist's tools are exempt under the term "mechanical tools" used in Comp. L. 1857, § 4492, How. St., § 7716.—Maxon v. Perrott, 17 Mich. 332.

¶ 45. Under How. St., § 7686, subd. 8, which exempts from sale on execution the "tools, implements, materials, stock, apparatus, team, vehicle, horses, harness, or other things to enable any person to carry on the profession, trade, occupation or business in which he is wholly or principally engaged, not exceeding in value $250," a farmer can claim such exemption from hay, oats, corn, a yearling steer, a heifer, two spring calves, and a quantity of clover seed and cornstalks on his farm at time of the levy, not exceeding in value said exemption.—Hutchinson v. Whitmore, 90 Mich. 255.

¶ 46. A two-year-old halter-broken colt, kept by a farmer with reference to its use for farming purposes, may be claimed as exempt under How. St., § 7686, subd. 8, giving an exemption to enable one to carry on the business in which he is wholly or principally engaged.—Tunningly v. Butcher, 106 Mich. 35.

¶ 47. A farmer's seed-wheat being necessary to wheat farming is exempt from execution under Comp. L. 1871, § 6101.—Stilson v. Gibbs, 46 Mich. 215.

¶ 48. Pool tables are not exempt as necessary to carry on the business of saloon-keeping.—Goozen v. Phillips, 49 Mich. 7.

§ 18. ——Use or connection with "business."

Use of pool tables in connection with business of saloon-keeping, see also ante ¶ 48.

¶ 49. The mere fact that one having property exempt from execution under Comp. L. 1857, § 4465, subd. 8 (How. St., § 7686, subd. 8), offers it for sale, will not deprive him of the exemptions; but if he buys it and holds it rather for sale and speculation than for the particular use which alone exempts it, and it is not in fact needed or kept for such use, it is not exempt.—O'Donnell v. Segar, 25 Mich. 367.

¶ 50. In replevin for a yoke of oxen claimed as exempt from execution under Comp. L. 1857, § 4465 (How. St., § 7686), the question of plaintiff's occupation relates only to the time of, and previous to, the taking; and his occupation at any subsequent time is immaterial, as is also the question whether subsequent to the taking he had another team which he claimed as exempt, or had recovered a judgment for another team on the ground that they were exempt.—O'Donnell v. Segar, 25 Mich. 367.

¶ 51. A wagon made, during leisure, for sale, by a blacksmith whose principal business is custom work, is exempt under the statute, subd. 8.—Stewart v. Welton, 32 Mich. 56.

¶ 53. A horse and buggy taken in payment by a person engaged in the business of an inventor, and in selling machines made under his inventions, for speculative purposes only, and not necessary in his business, and held by him to sell again, are not exempt under How. St., § 7686, subd. 8, from levy and sale on execution; where on the facts found there was no use of the horse in carrying on any business.—Boyle v. Walsh, 105 Mich. 237.

¶ 54. An unbroken colt not kept or raised with the intention of being used in his business by the owner who has two other horses that are so used is not exempt from levy.—Hogan v. Neumeister, 117 Mich. 498.

§ 19. ——Principal business.

¶ 55. The exemption, under the statute (see How. St., § 7686, subd. 8), of articles to enable the debtor to carry on his profession, trade, etc., can be claimed only for the debtor's principal business, if he is engaged in more than one, unless the articles are used in both.—Morrill v. Seymour, 3 Mich. 64; Kenyon v. Baker, 16 Mich. 373.

¶ 56. In determining which is the principal business, regard is not to be had to profit but to the occupation or business on which the party chiefly relies for a livelihood, and which engrosses the most of his time and attention through the year.—Smalley v. Masten, 8 Mich. 529.

¶ 57. To establish a right of exemption under How. St., § 7686, subd. 8, the business in which the debtor is "wholly or principally engaged" must be shown.—Murphy v. Mulvena, 108 Mich. 347.

§ 20. ——Business not yet begun.

¶ 58. A team of horses taken in part payment for a merchandise stock and intended for use in farming by the person lately the merchant is exempt to him as a farmer, he having bought a farm in another state but not yet having actually engaged in farming.—People ex rel. Fletcher v. Lee, 71 Mich. 493.

§ 21. ——Interruption or suspension of business.

¶ 59. One actually engaged in farming up to the time of his moving does not lose his right to the exemption of his team from execution while moving from one farm in this state to another to resume the same occupation.—O'Donnell v. Segar, 25 Mich. 367.

¶ 60. Property does not lose its exempt character though its owner is removing from the state so that he may engage in the same business elsewhere, if he still continues a resident of Michigan (settling the query on this point in O'Donnell v. Segar, 25 Mich. 367).—Wood v. Bresnahan, 63 Mich. 614.

¶ 61. The statute exempting a tradesman's tools from execution contemplates the exercise of this right of exemption when his loss of all that is not exempt causes at least a temporary breaking up and stoppage of his business.—Harris v. Haynes, 30 Mich. 140.

¶ 62. One who had failed in the hardware and tinning business was held entitled to retain the tinner's tools as exempt from his assignment, even though he had scarcely used them for four months afterwards, it not being shown that he had left his business or gone into any other.—Harris v. Haynes, 30 Mich. 140.

¶ 63. An execution debtor does not lose the benefit of the exemption of a quantity of goods to enable him to carry on his business, by selling them or keeping them until they can be used to the best advantage although he temporarily suspends his business; and they cannot be levied on unless he goes into some new business in which they would be of no material use to him.—Rosenthal v. Scott, 41 Mich. 632.

¶ 64. The exemption of property necessary to enable one to carry on the business in which he is wholly or principally engaged continues while he is moving from one place to another to carry on the same business, or other business in which he is to be similarly engaged and to carry on which the property is necessary.—Miller v. Miller, 97 Mich. 151.

¶ 65. The exemption of horses in favor of one whose principal occupation is farming continues while he is moving from one place to another to carry on that business or other business in which he is to be wholly or principally engaged, and while they are necessary to enable him to carry it on.—Miller v. Miller, 97 Mich. 151.

¶ 66. If the husband abandons the principal business in carrying on which the horses were necessary, they are no longer within the exemption of the statute, and the wife has no interest in them that entitles her to maintain an action for their value against her husband's vendee.—Miller v. Miller, 97 Mich. 151.

¶ 67. The exemption of $250 given by How. St., § 7686, subd. 8, to enable one to carry on the business in which he is wholly or principally engaged, is beyond the control of the debtor's wife, and therefore the wife of a merchant who has abandoned his business, with which she has no connection, cannot maintain an action against an execution creditor of the husband for the value of an exemption in the stock, under How. St., § 6297, C. L. § 8692.—Betz v. Brenner, 106 Mich. 87.

¶ 68. An insolvent merchant, having stated that he would return to his home within a few hours, left for parts unknown. Three days after his departure, his stock was attached. Although no claim of exemption was made, the officer set aside goods to the value of $250 as exempt under How. St., § 7686, subd. 8. Four months thereafter, the goods so selected, having in the meantime remained unclaimed, were seized and sold under execution, and the debtor's wife brought trover for their value. Nothing had been heard from the debtor at the time of the trial, which occurred eight months after his departure. Held, that the debtor had abandoned his business, and hence lost his exemption right, and that verdict should have been directed for defendant.—Betz v. Brenner, 106 Mich. 87.

¶ 69. As against the creditors of the seller of a stock of goods, it is proper to refuse to allow the buyer the benefit of the seller's exemption of $250, provided by How. Stat., § 7686, subd. 8, to enable a person to carry on the business in which he is principally engaged where it appears that the seller absconded and thereby forfeited his right to exemption.—J. L. Hudson Co. v. No-Name Hat Co., 174 Mich. 109.

¶ 70. A partner continuing to run a saloon business licensed in the firm name, but not taking out a new license and paying a tax in his sole name after the firm dissolved, cannot claim an exemption of chattels pertaining to the business so conducted unlawfully.—McCarthy v. Payne, 141 Mich. 571.

§ 24. Building and loan stock.

Of building and loan association stock, see Comp. L. 1915, § 10010.

Exemption of shares in building and loan associations, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, § 45; Comp. L. 1915, § 12860.

¶ 71. A husband occupying a dwelling house owned by his wife is not a person who has a homestead within the meaning of Pub. Acts, 1887, No. 50 (How. St., § 3981 et seq.), which provides that stock issued by corporations organized under it shall be exempt from execution unless held by a person who has a "homestead."—Morley Bros. v. National Loan & Investment Co., 120 Mich. 171.

§ 25. Insurance, benefits or workmen's compensation.

Exemption of life insurance money, see Comp. L, 1915, § 11489.

Exemption of benefit of fraternal beneficiary societies, see Comp. L. 1915, § 9408.

Of payments under Workmen's Compensation Act, see Comp. L. 1915, § 5451.

¶ 72. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 7754, making the money or other benefit, charity, relief, or aid to be paid, provided or rendered by any beneficiary association exempt from "any legal or equitable process * * * to pay any debt or liability of a certificate holder," a wife suing for a divorce cannot by injunction prevent payment to the husband of the money due under a certificate held by and payable to him as beneficiary on the life of his father.—Hunt v. Branch Circuit Judge, 141 Mich. 423.

¶ 73. Under Pub. Acts, 1903, No. 53, § 15, exempting from attachment certain money or other benefits "to be paid," the proceeds of a benefit certificate paid by a fraternal order and deposited in a bank subject to check are not exempt and are liable to attachment or garnishment to pay any debt or liability of the certificate holder or of any beneficiary, or of any person having any rights thereunder.—Recor v. Commercial & Sav. Bank of St. Clair, 142 Mich. 479.

§ 26. Wages.

Exemption of wages spent for support of nonresident family, see ante § 5, ¶ 14.

Amount exempt from garnishment, see Jud. Act, chap. LXXVI, § 5; Comp. L. 1915, § 14365; and see also Jud. Act, chap. XXVIII, § 37, ¶ 3; Comp. L. 1915, § 13158, ¶ 3, which in effect makes the foregoing applicable to garnishment in courts of record.

¶ 74. A householder who took work upon contract, was entitled on garnishment to the benefit of the statute of exemptions, though the labor of others was also covered by the contract price.—Rikerd Lumber Co. v. Chrouch, 135 Mich. 703.

§ 27. Alternative right to money exemption.

¶ 75. A person entitled to a team to carry on his business may select instead any other property to the amount of $250 needed in his business.—Wyckoff v. Wyllis, 8 Mich. 48.

§ 28. Proceeds of sale of exempt property.

¶ 76. If one has disposed of all the property that he had that was subject to execution, for the very purpose of converting the proceeds into that kind of property that was exempt under the statute, it would not deprive him of the exemption so long as his occupation is really such as the statute requires and the particular property is needed in that occupation; nor would it constitute legal fraud.—O'Donnell v. Segar, 25 Mich. 367.

¶ 77. The proceeds of the voluntary sale of exempt personal property, designed for investment in other exempt property, to take the place of that sold, are not subject to garnishment in the hands of the purchaser or to attachment in the debtor's hands.—Cullen v. Harris, 111 Mich. 20.

III. ASSERTION, ENFORCEMENT AND PROTECTION OF RIGHT.

§ 29. Right to assert; who entitled.

Wife's right, see post § 30.

Person entitled to assert right against garnishment, see post ¶¶ 109, 110.

Persons entitled to right as distinguished from persons entitled to assert right, see ante § 4.

Personal nature of right, see ante § 2.

Right of purchaser to assert exemption to which seller entitled, see ante ¶ 3.

¶ 78. Exemption being for the benefit of the family, husband and wife may join in a proper suit in relation to the loss of exempt property.—Shepard v. Cross, 33 Mich. 96.

¶ 79. Plaintiff's husband, one McCausey, and one Sprague were formerly partners. They gave a trust mortgage of their stock of goods for the benefit of creditors. The trustee closed them out, after allowing them to select certain goods under the statutory exemption. McCausey turned over his share of the exempted goods to plaintiff. Held, judgment creditors of the partners were not bound by the latter's selection of goods as to the amount due them under the exemption, and might question the correctness of such selection by having them seized on execution in the hands of plaintiff assignee, who received them without giving consideration.—McCausey v. Hoek, 159 Mich. 570.

Necessity of wife's consent to sale or incumbrance of exempt property, see post § 45.

Right of wife to sue in her own name for exempt property taken on execution against her husband, see Husband and Wife, VI.

¶ 80. A wife may bring trover for the value of an animal belonging to her husband and exempt from execution which is unlawfully sold by a poundmaster.—Ingersoll v. Gage, 47 Mich. 121.

¶ 80a. A married woman who supports her family or contributes to its support by the employment of a team may claim the benefit of the laws exempting a team from execution.—McHugh v. Curtis, 48 Mich. 262.

¶ 81. A married woman, who is a member of a firm, may claim the statutory exemption in firm property, though she resides in a different place from that in which the business is carried on, and is mainly engaged in household duties.—McCoy v. Brennan, 61 Mich. 362.

¶ 82. The exemption being intended as much for the benefit of the wife and family as for that of the husband, her action under Comp. L. 1857, § 3294, How. St., § 6297, cannot be defeated by showing that he turned out the property to be levied on.—King v. Moore, 10 Mich. 538.

¶ 83. The wife's right to sue for an article exempt from execution against her husband is not confined to property that is incumbered by him or that is levied on.—Ingersoll v. Gage, 47 Mich. 121.

§ 31. Notice and demand.

¶ 84. The debtor is not obliged to give notice that he claims an exemption.—Vanderhorst v. Bacon, 38 Mich. 669.

¶ 85. Where no duty of selection is imposed upon the officer seizing the property, the debtor waives his right to exemptions if he fails to make demand therefor.—Williams v. Brown, 137 Mich. 569.

¶ 86. Even if a vendee is entitled to claim the exemption of his fraudulent vendor, the statute imposes no duty upon the attaching or levying officer to make the selection for him, and in the absence of demand the right is waived.—Williams v. Brown, 137 Mich. 569.

§ 32. Selection and setting out.

Debtor's refusal or absence, see post § 33.
"Selection" by mortgaging part of exempt class, see post § 34.
Time for selection, see post § 35.
Choice between several chattels, see post § 36.
Choice of mortgaged or other property, see post § 37.
Several exemptions in same property, see post § 38.
Duty of levying officer to make selection for vendee claiming exemption of vendor, see also ante ¶ 86.
Inventory, appraisal and setting out of exemptions as part of valid levy, see also Executions § 47.
Selection and persons to be appraisers, see Executions § 48.
Appraisal and selection on attachment, see also Attachment §§ 56, 57.
Validity of assignments reserving exempt property, see Assignments for Creditors § 10.
Right to select exemptions after assignment in general terms, see Assignments for Creditors § 19.
Right of defendant, his agent, or levying officer in order named to make selection, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, § 47; Comp. L. 1915, § 12862.
Right of defendant and officer for him to select animals to the number exempt from flock levied on, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, § 49; Comp. L. 1915, § 12864.

¶ 87. The debtor has the right to make his own selections under the statute of such articles as are or may be used in carrying on the business in which he is wholly or principally engaged.—Town v. Elmore, 38 Mich. 305.

¶ 88. How. St., § 7686, providing that "the following property shall be exempt from levy * * * to each householder two cows," etc., reposes the right of selection in a husband where he is the householder and execution debtor.—Harley v. Procunier, 115 Mich. 53.

¶ 89. A sheriff in levying on personalty has no right to exclude the owner from his premises and then select and set aside the property exempt by law from execution.—Bayne v. Patterson, 40 Mich. 658.

¶ 90. It is important to the debtor's business to have the benefit of his exemptions; the officer is bound to act promptly in setting them off to him and must not hinder or impede a selection.—Handy v. Clippert, 50 Mich. 355.

¶ 91. Comp. L. 1897, § 10326, does not require an attaching or levying officer to select exemptions for any other than the debtor.—Williams v. Brown, 137 Mich. 569.

§ 33. ——Debtor's refusal or absence.

¶ 92. The officer levying an execution on property subject to an exemption under How. St., § 7686, subd. 6, may, under section 7690, select the exemption for the debtor, if the latter is absent at the time of the levy.—Murphy v. Mulvena, 108 Mich. 347.

¶ 93. Where it appears that a selection was regularly and legally made by the officer (How. St., § 7690) in the absence of the execution debtor and on refusal of his servant to do so, the error, if any, as to the conclusiveness of his return, that the debtor "refused" to select his exemption, does not call for a determination.—Murphy v. Mulvena, 108 Mich. 347.

Choice of mortgaged property, see post § 37.

¶ 94. How. St., § 7686, subd. 9, providing that any chattel mortgage, bill of sale or lien on exempt property shall be void unless signed by the wife of the mortgagor, does not apply where the mortgagor, having numerous chattels of the class specifically exempt, mortgages some of them leaving enough to satisfy his exemptions; since that in effect makes a selection of the exemptions and a mortgage of those not exempt.—Harley v. Procunier, 115 Mich. 53.

¶ 95. Where a man owns five cows a mortgage upon two of them is valid though not signed by his wife, he having the right, without her concurrence or consent, to select which shall be exempt, and the giving of the mortgage being a selection of those which are not exempt (How. St., § 7686).—Harley v. Procunier, 115 Mich. 53.

§ 35. ——Time for selection.

¶ 96. If a defendant in execution has not been allowed to exercise his statutory right to choose what he is entitled to have exempted, he can elect to take what has been sold under the execution and may sue the levying officer for its value.—Stilson v. Gibbs, 53 Mich. 280.

§ 36. —— Choice between several chattels.

Right to choose for exemption property wrongfully sold by levying officer, see ante ¶ 96.

¶ 97. An execution debtor is not prevented from making his own selection of property exempt from execution by the fact that he has property in another county belonging to the exempt class.—Baldwin v. Talbot, 43 Mich. 11.

§ 37. ——Choice of mortgaged or other property.

"Selection" by mortgaging part of exempt class, see ante § 34.

¶ 98. An execution debtor need not select mortgaged property for his exemptions.—Bayne v. Patterson, 40 Mich. 658; Baldwin v. Talbot, 43 Mich. 11; Ganong v. Green, 71 Mich. 1.

¶ 99. A mortgagee of the debtor may, as against the execution creditor, properly release from his mortgage property selected by the debtor as exempt.—Ganong v. Green, 71 Mich. 1.

¶ 100. No selection so as to bind a mortgagee can be made of a specific portion of chattels belonging to a class that is exempt to a specified amount.—Bayne v. Patterson, 40 Mich. 658.

¶ 101. An execution debtor's right to make his own selection of property exempt from execution is not affected by his having covered his other property not exempt with a fraudulent chattel mortgage.—Baldwin v. Talbot, 43 Mich. 11.

§ 38. ——Several exemptions in same property.

Right of partner to sue for exemptions without joining other partners, see Partnership, VI, A.

¶ 102. If, upon a levy of partnership property, two or more partners, in closing their exemptions, should select the same piece of property, the officer may select for them where they do not agree.—Skinner v. Shannon, 44 Mich. 86; Chipman v. Kellogg, 60 Mich. 438.

¶ 103. In an action on the bond of a constable, arising out of his release of a levy in execution upon the stock in trade—not over $300 in value—of a milliner, who has a partner, her father, a carpenter, working by the day and having few tools according to the testimony, it is error for the court to direct counsel not to argue to the jury that the father's principal business was that of a carpenter, "as there is no evidence that he had any tools of the value of $250"; for if such was his principal business, nothing but the daughter's exemption—$250—could be claimed in the goods.—Coville v. Bentley, 76 Mich. 248.

¶ 104. It is not necessary in levying on a farmer's stock, animals (cows), under a judgment for the purchase price to levy on all the debtor's animals and then allow him to select the exempt ones (Comp. L. 1897, § 10328), since under section 10324 the exempt property described in section 10322, subd. 8, is not exempt from levy for a judgment for the purchase price, and since cows used by a farmer are within that subdivision though they may also be exempt to the debtor, as a householder, under subdivision 6 of the same section.—Feenstra v. Tanis, 145 Mich. 409.

¶ 105. The officer making levy is as much bound to respect exemption, where the property is that of a partnership, as in other cases.—Waite v. Mathews, 50 Mich. 392.

§ 39. Inventory and appraisal.

Inventory and appraisal of exemptions as part of valid levy, see also Executions § 47.

Persons to be appraisers, see also Executions § 48.

Inventory and appraisal provisions, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, § 46 et seq.; Comp. L. 1915, § 12861 et seq.

¶ 106. A mortgagee of chattels upon which a subsequent execution has been levied is not affected by the levying officer's omission to appraise the property and set off to the debtor the amount of his exemption.—Wilson v. Montague, 57 Mich. 638.

¶ 107. A horse that had been seized on execution was replevied as exempt before the inventory was completed from which the selection of exempt property was to be made. Held, that defendant should have been allowed to show that plaintiff had other horses, one only being exempt by law.—Gass v. Van Wagner, 63 Mich. 610.

¶ 108. The statute (How. St., §§ 7687, 7688; Comp. L. 1871, §§ 10325, 10326) provides that, when a levy is made upon property of any class or species which is exempt by law from execution to a specified amount or value, the officer may make an inventory of the property, and cause the same to be appraised, and defendant may thereupon select from such inventory an amount of such property not exceeding, according to such appraisal, the amount of his exemption. Held, that the statute is fully complied with, in case of the seizure of goods under a justice's court attachment, by the service on defendant of the inventory made by the officer of the attached property, and the tender to defendant of the use of the appraisal which the officer has caused to be made of said property, to enable defendant to select his exemption.—Jones v. Peek, 101 Mich. 389.

§ 40. In garnishment proceedings.

Amount of wages exempt from garnishment, see ante § 26.

Exemption from garnishment of proceeds of sale of exempt property, see ante ¶ 77.

Right to exemption from garnishment of wages spent for support of nonresident family, see ante ¶ 14.
Liability of exempt property to garnishment by reason of its assignment or transfer by principal debtor, see post ¶ 117.
Garnishment in general, see Garnishment.
Persons, choses and property subject to garnishment, see Garnishment, II.
Rights, defenses and liability of garnishee towards plaintiff, see Garnishment, IX.
Rights, defenses and liability of garnishee towards defendant, see Garnishment, X.
Release or discharge of garnishee in general, see Garnishment, XII.
Claim and payment to defendant of amount in garnishment which is legally exempt, see Jud. Act, chap. LXXVI, § 10; Comp. L. 1915, § 14370.

¶ 109. Property exempt from execution is also exempt, at the election of the debtor, from process in garnishment.—Wilson v. Bartholomew, 45 Mich. 41.

¶ 110. A garnishee cannot raise the defense that the property in question was exempt property and therefore not subject to garnishment; that point being personal to the debtor or his privies.—Seitz v. Starks, 136 Mich. 90.

§ 41. Actions and suits for protection of exemption.

Evidence and question of fact, see post § 42.
Denial of relief by comity to prevent evasion of exemptions by suing in other state, see Conflict of Laws ¶ 15.
Order in creditors' suit to turn over exempt property, see Creditors' Suits ¶ 134.
Joinder by husband and wife in suit for exemptions, see Husband and Wife, VI.
Pleading in trover for exempt goods sold on execution, see Conversion § 23, ¶¶ 105, 106.
Interest or loss of profits from use, as damages for taking exempt tools of trade, see Damages ¶ 238.

¶ 111. A bill filed by one who has made an assignment for the benefit of creditors, and asking that the assignment should be so corrected as to secure to complainant his rights and exemptions in the property assigned, should specify the rights of exemption relied on, or present a statement of facts showing what they are and to what they apply.—Chandler v. Jenks, 50 Mich. 151.

§ 42. ——Evidence and questions of fact.

¶ 112. A plaintiff in replevin, seeking to hold a yoke of oxen exempt from execution under Comp. L. 1857, § 4465, subd. 8 (How. St., § 7686, subd. 8), must show: 1. That he owns or is entitled to possession of the oxen. 2. That his business calls for the use of a team or yoke of oxen. 3. That he has no other team, or perhaps none which together with this exceeds $250 in value, or, if they do exceed that sum, that he has taken the proper course to select these oxen or has been wrongfully prevented from making such selection.—O'Donnell v. Segar, 25 Mich. 367.

¶ 113. In determining the right of exemptions, testimony of the owner that a part of the stock of merchandise was purchased the previous year as against the testimony of attaching creditors that the goods were all sold by them within sixty days of the levy raises an issue of fact for the jury.—Gottesman v. Chipman, 125 Mich. 60.

¶ 114. In replevin suit the question whether certain articles are exempt from seizure on execution is for the court, where the testimony, as to the facts upon which the claim of exemption is based, is not conflicting.—Fischer v. McIntyre, 66 Mich. 681.

IV. RIGHTS IN THE PROPERTY AND RIGHTS OF THIRD PERSONS.

§ 43. In general.

Alienation and transfer of exempt property, see post §§ 44-45.
Mortgage or lien on exempt goods, see post § 46.
Rights of trustee in bankruptcy to temporary possession, see Bankruptcy § 3.

¶ 114a. The purchaser of goods exempt from execution obtains a title which overrides the lien of any subsequent attachment levy, and indeed of any previous levy unless it be for unpaid purchase money; and the title cannot be destroyed by subsequent admissions or acts of the debtor.—Buckley v. Wheeler, 52 Mich. 1.

§ 44. Alienation and transfer of exempt property.

Necessity of wife's consent, see post § 45.
Right of buyer to seller's exemption, see ante ¶ 69.
Effect on exemption of offering for sale, see ante ¶ 49.
Transfer by debtor of exempt property as a transfer to hinder or defraud creditors, see Fraudulent Conveyances, I, A.
Chattel mortgage on exemptions unsigned by wife as valid mortgage of husband's nonexempt chattels, see Chattel Mortgages § 9.
Construction of mortgage clause excepting exemptions, see Chattel Mortgages, § 15, ¶ 67.

¶ 115. A debtor can do what he pleases with any of his property that is exempt from execution, and his disposition of it cannot subject it to execution or affect the exemption.—Buckley v. Wheeler, 52 Mich. 1.

¶ 116. Exempt property used in the debtor's business and transferred by him to a third person either absolutely or for security is not attachable.—Emerson v. Bacon, 58 Mich. 526.

¶ 117. Garnishment process will not reach personal property assigned by the principal debtor, if in his hands it would have been exempt from execution.—Anderson v. Odell, 51 Mich. 492.

¶ 118. The rule that a sale by the debtor made after a levy is superior thereto, if the chattel is of the exempt class and subject to selection, has no application to property not of the exempt class, though like it in kind, which the debtor's transferee claims to have purchased.—Hogan v. Neumeister, 117 Mich. 498.

§ 45. ——Necessity of wife's consent.

Necessity of wife's joinder to alienate or mortgage exempt chattels except occupational exemptions, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, § 43, ¶ 9; Comp. L. 1915, § 12858, ¶ 9.

¶ 119. Neither sales nor incumbrances of exempt property are valid without the wife's assent in some way manifested.—Snyder v. People, 26 Mich. 106, 110.

¶ 120. The wife's assent need not be in writing when the husband makes an absolute sale of exempt chattels.—Holman v. Gillette, 24 Mich. 414.

¶ 121. A sewing machine, though exempt from levy and sale on execution under How. St., § 7717, is not covered by the ninth subdivision of How. St., § 7686, which declares that any chattel mortgage or bill of sale, executed by a husband, of any of the exempt property described in said section 7686, except subdivision 8, shall be void unless signed by the wife.—Singer Mfg. Co. v. Cullaton, 90 Mich. 639.

¶ 122. One's property—such as a span of horses—exempt from execution because necessary to enable him to carry on the business in which he is wholly or principally engaged, may be sold by him without his wife's consent.—Miller v. Miller, 97 Mich. 151.

¶ 123. The wife's written consent is unnecessary to the validity of her husband's sale of exempt horses used by him in carrying on his occupation of farming (see How. St., § 7686, subds. 8, 9).—Miller v. Miller, 97 Mich. 151.

§ 46. Mortgage or lien on exempt goods.

¶ 124. A chattel mortgagee of the debtor may, as against the execution creditor, properly release from his mortgage property selected by the debtor as exempt.—Ganong v. Green, 71 Mich. 1.

¶ 125. Where partners in a venture involving the publication and sale of a book deliver the paper and electrotype plates to contractors, who are to do the press work and binding, they waive their individual exemptions, and subject the books to the lien of the contractors for their labor.—Rogers v. Raynor, 102 Mich. 473.

¶ 4. The owner of a public park to which the public is invited is bound to keep the same in reasonably safe condition, even though he does not operate it for pecuniary profit.—Blakeley v. White Star Line, 154 Mich. 635.

¶ 5. . Proprietors of public entertainments are not insurers of the safety of patrons, but they must exercise, to prevent disaster, care commensurate to the situation.—Jacobs v. Hagenbeck-Wallace Shows, 198 Mich. 73, 16 N. C. C. A. 535.

¶ 6. The proprietor of a show tent is bound to anticipate, in selecting and erecting the tent, the ordinary and usual storm of the season and latitude and its probable consequences, reference being had to the character of the structure to which the public was invited, and in view of such storm arising and such consequences to use ordinary care in such selection and erection so as to prevent injury to patrons.—Jacobs v. Hagenbeck-Wallace Shows, 198 Mich. 73, 16 N. C. C. A. 535.

¶ 7. The proprietor of a show tent who does not use ordinary care in the selection and erection of the tent, as the result of which a patron is injured in a storm, is liable unless the storm was so violent in character that whether defendant was or was not negligent in such selection and erection the result would have been the same.—Jacobs v. Hagenbeck-Wallace Shows, 198 Mich. 73, 16 N. C. C. A. 535.

¶ 8. In an action to recover damages for personal injuries sustained from the effects of a sudden windstorm while plaintiff was attending defendant's show in defendant's tent, if, as claimed by plaintiff, the storm was an ordinary one, and, as claimed by defendant, the tent was selected and erected with ordinary care, in view of probable storms arising and their consequences, held that there was no duty on the part of defendant to warn its audience of the approach of the storm.—Jacobs v. Hagenbeck-Wallace Shows, 198 Mich. 73, 16 N. C. C. A. 535.

¶ 9. That in the latitude where defendant erected its show tent, summer storms with wind and rain were common, that the wind often attained considerable velocity and did considerable injury, and that such storms often arrived or broke suddenly and were as soon gone, held to be circumstances to be considered by defendant in erecting the tent and by the patrons of the show in attending.—Jacobs v. Hagenbeck-Wallace Shows, 198 Mich. 73, 16 N. C. C. A. 535.

¶ 10. A woman who was injured by catching her foot under a buckled up mat in front of the ticket window of a theater, cannot recover from the proprietor where it does not appear that he was aware of the condition of the mat, or that it had existed for such length of time as to impart constructive notice of the defect.—Holmes v. United Theatres Co., 186 Mich. 548.

Duty of proprietor of place of amusement to maintain safe exit, see note, 2 N. C. C. A. 530-532.

¶ 11. A person injured by the explosion of a firecracker at a circus, cannot be held to have "assumed the risk" of such an explosion because of the fact that he attended a previous exhibition, where no injury was sustained, as the persons attending the performance had the right to assume that the owner of the circus would exercise due care against dangerous explosions, and would use reasonably safe appliances.—Herrick v. Wixom, 121 Mich. 384.

Duty of proprietor of place of amusement to maintain safe exit, see note 2 N. C. C. A. 530-532.
Liability for loss of or injury to articles loaned for exhibition purposes, see note 2 N. C. C. A. 885-886.
Distemper contracted by dogs at dog show, see note 2 N. C. C. A. 385.

§ 3. Contributory negligence.

¶ 12. The defendant, the owner of an amusement resort to which the public were invited, permitted some ball players to play throw and catch outside the baseball diamond, and near a dancing pavilion. Plaintiff was injured by a thrown ball while watching the dance. Held, the defendant owed a duty to keep the grounds reasonably safe, and, the ball game being held out of its proper place, the plaintiff did not assume the risk, and defendant was liable.—Blakeley v. White Star Line, 154 Mich. 635.

¶ 13. A person leaving a moving picture theater through a hallway leading to the place of exit, is entitled to presume that the defendant owner has discharged his duty of having the premises in a reasonably safe condition as to lights and construction.—Branch v. Klatt, 165 Mich. 666.

Evidence, see post § 5.
Jury questions and instructions, see post § 6.

¶ 14. Negligence held to be the gravamen of an action to recover damages for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff while attending defendant's show in defendant's tent by the effect upon the tent of a windstorm, notwithstanding the declaration alleged as inducements to plaintiff to enter the tent an advertisement circulated by the defendant to the effect that the tent was storm-proof and wind-proof and alleged also that plaintiff paid the price of admission asked by defendant.—Jacobs v. Hagenbeck-Wallace Shows, 198 Mich. 73, 16 N. C. C. A. 535.

¶ 15. On a suit by a patron against the owner of a moving picture theater for injuries sustained on stumbling on an unlighted curved step, evidence of prior similar accidents in the same place, the conditions being shown to be the same, is admissible to prove both notice of the defect and negligence, but it is not permissible to show that others stumbled in the same place after the accident.—Branch v. Klatt, 173 Mich. 31.

¶ 16. On a suit by a person against the owner of a moving picture theater, the plaintiff testified that she fell on a curved step in the exit that was unlighted and without a handrail, and her testimony was supported by four witnesses. Seven witnesses for the defense testified that handrails had been provided and that the exit was amply equipped with electric light. There were interested and apparently disinterested witnesses on both sides and the jury viewed the premises. Held, a special finding by the jury at the instance of the defendant that handrails had been provided was not improper.—Branch v. Klatt, 173 Mich. 31.

¶ 16a. In a suit for injuries sustained by plaintiff while riding on defendant's merry-go-round, plaintiff in his direct examination testified that he did not notice guards and would have seen them had there been any.

Held, it was not error in view of this to permit defendant upon his direct examination to state that he had not, in the course of his life, seen a machine with a railing around outside to fence the children in.—Harris v. Crawley, 170 Mich. 381.

Application of doctrine of res ipsa loquitur in action for injuries caused by defective apparatus at place of amusement, see note 5 N. C. C. A. 55.

§ 6. Jury questions and instructions.

¶ 17. Whether the facts upon which the defendant's liability depends were established, in an action to recover damages for personal injuries sustained while plaintiff was attending defendant's show in defendant's tent by the effect of a sudden windstorm breaking upon the tent, held to be for the jury.—Jacobs v. Hagenbeck-Wallace Shows, 198 Mich. 73, 16 N. C. C. A. 535.

¶ 18. Plaintiff in leaving a moving picture theater walked along a dark hallway, which was the only passage to the exit of the theater provided by the defendant owner. While attempting to feel her way down a flight of stairs in said hallway, she fell and was injured. In a suit for personal injuries, held, the trial court was in error in directing a verdict for defendant on the ground of plaintiff's contributory negligence, as such question was for the jury.—Branch v. Klatt, 165 Mich. 666.

¶ 19. An instruction, in an action for injury sustained by a spectator at a circus by an explosion of a firecracker by one of the performers, which attempts to preclude recovery if the spectator was found to be a trespasser, is erroneous, as a trespasser is not beyond the pale of the law, and may recover damages for negligence resulting in injury.—Herrick v. Wixom, 121 Mich. 384.

¶ 20. In an action for injuries sustained on a roller-coaster in an amusement park, where the evidence shows that the place bore the names of the defendants, and that one of them assisted in starting the car in which the plaintiff was injured, an instruction should have been given to the effect that the plaintiff could not recover unless the jury were satisfied by a preponderance of the testimony that the defendants owned, controlled and operated the coaster.—Cichon v. Wolff, 186 Mich. 331.

¶ 21. In an action to recover damages for personal injuries sustained by the effects of a sudden windstorm while plaintiff was attending defendant's show held in defendant's tent, an instruction that, "as applied to this case, an act of God may be defined as a natural cause, such as a storm of wind, whatever its characteristics may be, which cannot be prevented by the exercise of ordinary care and the use of those appliances which the situation of the party renders it reasonable that he should employ," held to be proper.—Jacobs v. Hagenbeck-Wallace Shows, 198 Mich. 73, 16 N. C. C. A. 535.

¶ 22. In an action to recover damages for personal injuries sustained from the effects of a sudden storm while plaintiff was attending defendant's show in defendant's tent, an instruction, that as defendant presumably knew the actual condition of the tent it was its duty to warn its audience of the approach of the storm, held not to be erroneous.—Jacobs v. Hagenbeck-Wallace Shows, 198 Mich. 73, 16 N. C. C. A. 535.

¶ 23. In an action to recover damages for personal injuries sustained from the effects of a sudden windstorm while plaintiff was attending defendant's show in defendant's tent, an instruction, that the burden was upon defendant to show that the storm was so violent that it was the sole proximate cause of plaintiff's injuries, held to be erroneous, as the plaintiff had the burden upon the whole case to prove defendant's negligence was the proximate cause of such injuries.—Jacobs v. Hagenbeck-Wallace Shows, 198 Mich. 73, 16 N. C. C. A. 535.

¶ 24. In an action to recover damages for personal injuries sustained while plaintiff was attending defendant's show in defendant's tent from a sudden windstorm, an instruction, that defendant was not required to contemplate or provide against unusual or extraordinary storms, held proper as proffered without the addition that the storm was of such a character that human care and foresight could not anticipate or guard against it.—Jacobs v. Hagenbeck-Wallace Shows, 198 Mich. 73, 16 N. C. C. A. 535.

¶ 1. A small boy, finding a dynamite cartridge in a common packing box in sawdust, proceeded to crack it on a stone, and maimed himself for life. The boy was rightfully on the premises, and his father was at work hard by. The packing box was on the ground under a rude shed and was marked "Powder," but neither the boy nor his father could read. It had been left exposed by the agent of the landlord. Held, that an action would lie against the landlord for the injury.—Powers v. Harlow, 53 Mich. 507.

¶ 2. One who delivers to another such an article or substance as gasoline for kerosene is liable for injuries resulting therefrom, even though he was ignorant of its noxious character, if, in the exercise of ordinary prudence, he or his servant should have possessed such knowledge.—McLawson v. Paragon Refining Co., 198 Mich. 222.

¶ 3. A mutual understanding between adjoining mining companies that each, in blasting, may throw rock upon the other's premises will be no defense to an action for injury to a person rightfully on such premises.—Beauchamp v. Saginaw Min. Co., 50 Mich. 163.

¶ 4. Where excavations had been in progress within 500 feet of plaintiff's horse shoeing shop for several weeks, and dynamite blasts were of frequent occurrence, defendants were not negligent in failing to apprise him of intended blasts, as they were events which, under the circumstances, he should have anticipated.—Mitchell v. Prange, 110 Mich. 78.

¶ 5. Where an owner permits the employee of another to use his shop for warming and eating dinner and the employee to start the fire uses a can containing volatile oil not painted red and stenciled as required by Pub. Acts 1909, Act 37, How. 2nd Ed., § 2598, the injured person is a licensee.—Molin v. Wisconsin Land & Lumber Co., 177 Mich. 524.

¶ 6. The owner of a shop permitting a licensee to use the premises to warm and eat his dinner, in the absence of a general custom as to using kerosene to start fires, owes no duty to the licensee using a can he supposed contained kerosene to keep a volatile oil in a receptacle painted red and stenciled as required by Pub. Acts 1909, Act 37.—Molin v. Wisconsin Land & Lumber Co., 177 Mich. 524.

Liability for injury to member of fire department by explosion, see note 13 N. C. C. A. 302-306.
Liability for injury from explosive left in building by former owner, see note 4 N. C. C. A. 311-321.
Injuries to children from explosives, see notes 4 N. C. C. A. 349-364; 12 N. C. C. A. 864-880.

§ 3. ——Manufacturer's or seller's liability to user.

Statutory provisions for marking of high explosives, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 7202-7207.

¶ 7. A bottler of charged cider is not liable to his vendee for injuries caused by the explosion of the bottle in his hands in the absence of contract between the parties or knowledge on the defendant's part of the danger.—O'Neill v. James, 138 Mich. 567.

¶ 8. Under Pub. Acts 1899, No. 26, providing for the inspection of illuminating oils, and making it unlawful to sell rejected or condemned oil or oil which has not been inspected, the manufacturer or wholesaler of oil which is not up to the standard is liable to a remote purchaser for injury resulting therefrom, since such act recognizes illuminating oil which is not up to the standard as a dangerous substance.—Stowell v. Standard Oil Co., 139 Mich. 18.

¶ 9. A manufacturer, who knowingly makes and puts upon the market a highly dangerous article which does not contain intrinsic evidence of its dangerous character, e. g., inflammable stove polish, without notice by label or otherwise, is liable in action for personal injuries sustained by a purchaser although the article was purchased from a third party or retailer.—Clement v. Crosby & Co., 148 Mich. 293.

¶ 10. Negligence may be predicated upon the act of a manufacturer in placing on the market, for sale and common domestic use, an explosive compound, without notifying the public, by a proper label or otherwise, of its dangerous character.—Clement v. Crosby & Co., 157 Mich. 643.

¶ 11. When stove polish purchased of a dealer proves to be explosive, and an injury results, an action lies against the manufacturer of the article, and not against the dealer, unless he is guilty of negligence.—Clement v. Rommeck, 149 Mich. 595.

¶ 12. A dealer who buys in the open market, stove polish which purports to be safe and proper for use, and sells it for a purpose for which it is apparently intended, is not liable, in the absence of negligence, if it turns out that the article is not adapted to the use, and causes injury.—Clement v. Rommeck, 149 Mich. 595.

Liability of manufacturer or seller of gasoline or acetylene lighting system for injury to purchaser, see note 12 N. C. C. A. 499-518.

¶ 13. Neither the injured lad nor his father were negligent where the boy, rightfully on defendant's premises, while his father was working hard by, found dynamite in a packing box and tried to crack it on a rock, the box being marked "Powder," but they being unable to read.—Powers v. Harlow, 53 Mich. 507.

¶ 14. The simple act of using kerosene for the starting of a new fire does not preclude the user thereof from recovering, in an action to recover damages for personal injuries resulting from negligent substitution by defendant of gasoline for kerosene, upon the ground that he was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law.—McLawson v. Paragon Refining Co. of Michigan, 198 Mich. 222.

¶ 15. Pouring kerosene directly from a can in relighting a dying fire or kindling a new one, without the party first assuring himself there is no fire in the stove, is negligence per se.—McLawson v. Paragon Refining Co., 198 Mich. 222.

Presumptions and evidence, see post § 6.
Jury questions and instructions, see post § 7.

¶ 16. Where a blacksmith was injured by a kick from a horse which was frightened by an explosion in a sewer trench several hundred feet from the shop, it was error, in an action against the excavators who caused the explosion, to permit a recovery upon the ground that the charge of dynamite was excessive, or that it was not properly covered, when the only ground of negligence set up in the declaration was the failure of defendants to give notice of the blast.—Mitchell v. Prange, 110 Mich. 78.

¶ 17. Under a declaration alleging that certain kerosene was "adulterated" it may be shown that the admixture of other matter was the result of the process of manufacture, as well as that such other substance had been added after manufacture.—Stowell v. Standard Oil Co., 139 Mich. 18.

¶ 18. A declaration in an action against the manufacturer of an article dangerous in character which states that it was manufactured and put on the market by the defendant as a stove polish and that it was defendant's duty to know the property of the goods and that it should not manufacture and sell dangerous and highly inflammable substances as are liable to ignite, explode or spontaneously burn and bring suffering and pain to persons ignorant of the constituent parts which are artfully and deceitfully kept from the knowledge of the purchasing public, is a sufficient allegation of defendant's duty, although there is no allegation that all the defendant's products are of that character.—Clement v. Crosby & Co., 148 Mich. 293.

¶ 19. An allegation in a declaration for damages for the injuries resulting from the sale of a highly dangerous article wherein it was alleged that the constituent part of the product "was and is artfully and deceitfully kept from the knowledge of the purchasing public" necessarily implies scienter on the part of the defendant.—Clement v. Crosby & Co., 148 Mich. 293.

¶ 20. Where a declaration states the manufacture of a dangerous compound and placing it upon the market at the same time charging the deceitful and wilful concealment from the public of its dangerous elements and properties and further stating that these are such as to cause spontaneous combustion, explosion, etc., and that the plaintiff purchased the article without any warning, there is a practical charge of fraudulently and wilfully putting the article upon the market.—Clement v. Crosby & Co., 148 Mich. 293.

Judicial notice of explosiveness and dangerousness of substances, see Evidence § 3.
Negative evidence that warning was not heard, see Evidence § 80.

¶ 21. One excavating a trench for a sewer cannot be said to have been negligent in not refilling it before exploding a dynamite blast, in the absence of evidence to show that such a requirement would be a reasonable one.—Mitchell v. Prange, 110 Mich. 78.

¶ 22. In an action against a manufacturing company for injuries due to negligence in placing on the market a compound for blacking stoves, without a label or notice of its dangerous character, whereby plaintiff, while applying the compound, was injured by its explosion, plaintiff was not bound to aver or prove what caused the compound to ignite, if she used it as directed, and without negligence.—Clement v. Crosby & Co., 157 Mich. 643.

¶ 23. In an action for negligence against the owner of a tank wagon containing explosives where injuries were inflicted upon a young child because of an explosion of the tank while the child was playing thereon, while the tank was left in the street unattended, an ordinance prohibiting the leaving of any wagon or vehicle in the public street when not in actual use is admissible in evidence, having a material bearing on the question of the negligence of the defendant.—Iamurri v. Saginaw City Gas Co., 148 Mich. 27, per McAlvay, C. J., Carpenter, Montgomery and Moore, JJ.

¶ 24. The knowledge of a consulting engineer in employment of the defendant gas company, being chargeable to it, he may be asked on cross-examination after he has stated that the drips pumped out of gas mains are explosive, if it was necessary that a vent on the tank holding such drips ought to have been closed and fastened as a precaution against fire.—Iamurri v. Saginaw City Gas Co., 148 Mich. 27, per McAlvay, C. J., Carpenter, Montgomery and Moore, JJ.

¶ 25. In an action for damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by the explosion of adulterated kerosene, it is not error to permit an expert to give a brief description of the process of producing kerosene from petroleum, since such testimony may have furnished some aid to the jury in determining what the substance sold to plaintiff was.—Stowell v. Standard Oil Co., 139 Mich. 18.

¶ 26. In an action for damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by the explosion of adulterated kerosene sold by defendant, it is competent to show that gasoline would throw off vapor at a lower temperature than kerosene of the legal test standard, and that oil of the legal test would not ignite under the conditions shown to exist but that if mixed with gasoline or other similar substance, it might.—Stowell v. Standard Oil Co., 139 Mich. 18.

¶ 27. The fact that plaintiff's case, in an action for damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by the explosion of adulterated kerosene, rests largely upon inferences drawn from the facts proven, is not fatal where it does not rest upon mere conjecture.—Stowell v. Standard Oil Co., 139 Mich. 18.

Application of doctrine of res ipsa loquitur in action for injuries by explosion, see note 5 N. C. C. A. 53, 54.

¶ 28. In an action for negligent injury resulting from the lack of due precautions in the conduct of one's business, defendant cannot be permitted to answer that the profits on the business are not sufficient to warrant taking them. And the question as to the necessity for the precautions is for the jury. So held where it was a question whether in blasting in an open mine the pit ought not to be covered before firing the blast.—Beauchamp v. Saginaw Min. Co., 50 Mich. 163.

¶ 29. In an action for injury from a mining blast the questions whether any notice was given before the blast was fired, and, if so, whether it was sufficient, are questions of fact; and if there is any conflict in the evidence it must go to the jury.—Beauchamp v. Saginaw Min. Co., 50 Mich. 163.

¶ 30. In an action against a bottler for personal injuries caused by the explosion of a bottle of charged cider in the hands of the plaintiff, a bartender, in the act of serving it to the customer, testimony for the plaintiff that the explosion must have been caused by the bottle having been overcharged, and testimony for the defendant that it was filled in the usual way and that no bottle had ever been charged excessively, raises a question of fact for the jury as to the defendant's negligence.—O'Neill v. James, 138 Mich. 567.

¶ 31. It cannot be said as matter of law that leaving a tank wagon containing explosive liquids in a street with its vent open, so that boys playing thereon after warning exploded it with matches, was not an act imminently dangerous to human life; so as to absolve defendant from liability on the theory that the act of the boys was an intervening human agency, their act not being a responsible cause.—Iamurri v. Saginaw City Gas Co., 148 Mich. 27, per McAlvay, C. J., Carpenter, Montgomery and Moore, JJ.

¶ 32. Whether defendant's agent, in making investigation as to the nature of the contents of a can supposed to contain kerosene to be furnished to plaintiff's decedent who was killed as a result of using same to start a fire, exercised that high degree of care imposed upon him by the fact that he was handling a dangerous and, under certain circumstances, a highly explosive substance, held to be a question for the jury.—McLawson v. Paragon Refining Co., 198 Mich. 222.

Provisions as to liability for expense of arresting and detaining fugitives awaiting requisition, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15891.

¶ 1. The extradition between states of criminals who are said to be fugitives from other states is governed by the constitution and laws of the United States; one state cannot deal with another without the approval of congress, and its policemen have no greater power than the state to which they belong.—Malcolmson v. Gibbons, 56 Mich. 459.

¶ 2. An arrest cannot be made in Michigan for purposes of extradition to another state without compliance with the laws of the United States.—Malcolmson v. Gibbons, 56 Mich. 459.

§ 2. Criminality of offense.

¶ 3. One cannot be extradited between states of the Union except for offenses that are strictly criminal (bastardy is not such), and with which he has been legally charged as a fugitive from justice.—In re Cannon, 47 Mich. 481.

§ 3. Sufficient of indictment, accusation or complaint for crime.

Scope of examination on habeas corpus, see Habeas Corpus.
Arrests and detention for trial for crime in general, see Arrest.
Who is "fugitive from justice" indictable without preliminary examination, see Arrest § 28, ¶ 79.
Proofs of flight and copies of indictment, information, complaint, and other papers to accompany requisition, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15885.

¶ 4. Demand by the governor of one state upon that of another for extradition cannot be made until the offender has been indicted or otherwise complained of in the regular course of justice. U. S. Rev. Stat. § 5278. And in Michigan the complaint must be on oath and must bring the case within the provision of the law; the prisoner is also entitled to bail, and the complaining party must be answerable for costs and charges and his support (How. St., §§ 9623-9626).—Malcolmson v. Gibbons, 56 Mich. 459.

¶ 5. An information is a sufficient basis for extradition.—People v. Stockwell, 135 Mich. 341.

¶ 6. An information for obtaining a note by false pretenses as a basis for extradition, based upon a sworn complaint for conspiracy upon which the respondent was originally apprehended, was not required to charge the same precise offense named in the original warrant of arrest, although a nolle pros. was entered in such original proceeding.—People v. Stockwell, 135 Mich. 341.

¶ 7. A complaint and warrant in a criminal proceeding in another state will be deemed sufficient for purposes of extradition under the Constitution of the United States, art. IV, par. 2, § 2, providing that a person "charged" in any state with treason, felony or other crime, who shall flee from justice, and be found in another state shall, upon demand of the executive of the state to which he fled, be delivered up to the authorities of the state having jurisdiction of his crime, where the fugitive has in fact, however inartificially, been charged with the crime in the state from which he has fled.—Dragisick v. Judge of Recorder's Court, 195 Mich. 112.

§ 4. Privilege of prisoner, detention for other purposes or trials.

Habeas corpus to test legality of detention, see Habeas Corpus.

¶ 8. Courts should refuse, in cases that are entirely free from doubt, to allow any use to be made of extradition proceedings whereby good faith would be plainly violated, and the measures necessary to bring the accused within their jurisdiction would be perverted.—In re Cannon, 47 Mich. 481.

¶ 9. One cannot be detained within the jurisdiction to which he is extradited to answer for some other offense than that for which he was taken, and for which extradition could not be allowed. This is especially so where the first charge cannot be maintained.—In re Cannon, 47 Mich. 481.

I. WHAT CONSTITUTES AND PERSONS LIABLE.

§ 1. Definition and elements of the tort.

Immateriality of probable cause or lack of it, see also post ¶¶ 113, 114.

Element of termination of prosecution and discharge, see post § 2.

Consent to detention or waiver of the wrong, see post § 19.

Persons liable for the wrong and participation therein as making person liable, see post §§ 20-23.

Measure and elements of damages for the wrong, see Damages § 128.

Actionable malicious prosecution and abuse of process, see Malicious Prosecution (and Abuse of Process).

¶ 1. Actual manual arrest of the person is not necessary to constitute false imprisonment. A demonstration of physical violence, which to all appearance can only be avoided by submission, operates as effectually, if submitted to, as if the arrest had been forcibly accomplished.—Brushaber v. Stegemann, 22 Mich. 266.

¶ 2. It is not necessary that the party be restrained after an unsuccessful attempt to escape from custody; it is enough if the restraint be put upon a person either by force or fear.—Moore v. Thompson, 92 Mich. 498.

¶ 3. An arrest and imprisonment exist where a party submits to an arrest without requiring an officer to resort to actual violence.—Josselyn v. McAllister, 25 Mich. 45.

¶ 4. An action for false imprisonment will not lie where the plaintiff has not been arrested, and though his manual seizure is not necessary to an arrest there must be some sort of personal coercion.—Hill v. Taylor, 50 Mich. 549.

¶ 5. Where one is accused of larceny, and is informed that an officer is at hand to arrest her if she does not produce the stolen articles, and where, when she seeks to go out, her accuser stands between her and the door, holding his hand on the knob, and where upon her refusal to go through the streets with an officer she is taken in an omnibus to her house and a search is made there, the restraint upon her liberty is sufficient to warrant an action for false imprisonment.—Moore v. Thompson, 92 Mich. 498.

§ 2. Discharge from arrest and termination of prosecution.

Favorable termination as essential of cause of action for malicious prosecution, see Malicious Prosecution, V.

¶ 6. An action for false imprisonment on an illegal civil arrest may be maintained before the proceedings on which the arrest was had are terminated by a judgment.—Josselyn v. McAllister, 22 Mich. 300.

¶ 7. One making a complaint against another for perjury is not liable to be proceeded against for damages for false imprisonment during the pendency of the criminal proceedings.—In re Kelley, How. N. P. 106.

§ 3. Aggravation and mitigation of the wrong.

Evidence of aggravation or mitigation, see post § 28.

Mitigation and aggravation of damages, see Damages, V.

¶ 8. Night arrests and arrests on the eve of Sunday, or when it is hard to obtain the means for immediate deliverance, are oppressive and unjustifiable except in cases of pressing necessity. And the complaint before a magistrate should be made and supported by sworn testimony as speedily as possible.—Malcolmson v. Gibbons, 56 Mich. 459.

¶ 9. To justify handcuffing a person arrested for felony and en route to jail, it is not necessary that he be unruly, or that he attempt to escape, or that he should be a notoriously bad character.—Firestone v. Rice, 71 Mich. 377.

Direction of verdict where action taken was under other complaint, see post ¶ 157.
Sufficiency of evidence of justification, see post § 29.

¶ 10. To justify, in an action for false imprisonment, the making of a criminal complaint, defendant's information should have been such as, if believed, business men of ordinary care would act upon.—Livingston v. Burroughs, 33 Mich. 511.

Legality of arrest without warrant, see also Arrest, I.
Felonies and misdemeanors distinguished, see also Arrest, I; Crimes § 5.

¶ 11. An officer of justice is bound to know the law, and if he makes an arrest which the facts on which he proceeds would not justify, if true, he is a wrongdoer.—Malcolmson v. Gibbons, 56 Mich. 59.

¶ 12. An officer who, in arresting for felony without a warrant, acts in good faith and after such reasonable investigation as circumstances permit, is not liable.—Filer v. Smith, 102 Mich. 98.

¶ 13. As a prosecution for adultery cannot be instituted except by the injured husband or wife, an officer is not justified in making an arrest without a warrant by his having good reason to believe and by his good faith belief that the person arrested has been guilty of adultery.—Filer v. Smith, 96 Mich. 347.

¶ 14. Arrest without warrant, as for a felony, is legal if the offense is one statutorily punishable by imprisonment in the state prison, unless the statute expressly declares the crime to be a misdemeanor.—Firestone v. Rice, 71 Mich. 377.

¶ 15. The statutory offense of maliciously injuring, etc., any dam, reservoir, etc. (How. St., § 9168), being punishable by imprisonment in the state prison, and not being declared a misdemeanor, is a felony as regards an officer's right to arrest without process.—Firestone v. Rice, 71 Mich. 377.

¶ 16. The crime of seduction is a felony and hence a sheriff may arrest without warrant where facts are placed before him which justify him in believing that the person arrested is guilty.—Friesenhan v. Maines, 137 Mich. 10.

¶ 17. Representations apparently truthful were made to a sheriff that a dam had been cut, and that the informers had tracked two persons to the house of one Z., for whom, and for an unknown person, they had a warrant. At said house the shoes and trousers of Z., and plaintiff, who were the only male occupants, were found to be wet, and the shoes were claimed by informers to correspond with the tracks. A wet spade bearing sand claimed to resemble that of the dam was found in the house. Held, that the sheriff had reasonable cause for arresting plaintiff.—Firestone v. Rice, 71 Mich. 377.

¶ 18. An arrest without a warrant on the ground that a felony had been committed under How. St., §§ 9274, 9275 (concerning malicious obstruction of operation of railroad), was not justified by a newspaper article stating that plaintiff and his companions boarded, while drunk, a street car, refused to pay their fare, and that a fight ensued in putting them off.—White v. McQueen, 96 Mich. 249.

¶ 19. The manner and appearance of a person on being accused of crime do not justify his arrest so as to constitute a defense in an action for false imprisonment.—Somerville v. Richards, 37 Mich. 299.

¶ 20. Arrest for misdemeanor not committed in the officer's presence cannot be made without warrant.—Ross v. Leggett, 61 Mich. 445.

¶ 21. Under How. St., §§ 8596-8598, it is a misdemeanor in all concerned to shift the custody of a prisoner with intent to evade a writ of habeas corpus and in trespass for false arrest it was held error to refuse to so charge.—Malcolmson v. Gibbons, 56 Mich. 459.

¶ 22. A guy-post for a tower of an electric light company, which company was under contract to light the city, and was authorized by the city to put such posts in the streets, was placed in the lawn between the sidewalk and the curb in front of certain premises whose owner forbade its being set therein. Held, that the cutting of such post by such owner was no more than a misdemeanor, if any offense at all; and an arrest as for felony was illegal.—Ross v. Leggett, 61 Mich. 445.

¶ 23. In an action for false imprisonment, where the proceedings for the arrest complained of were in fact criminal in character, but were treated by both parties as civil, whether the court would be justified in holding the plaintiff to the same rules as if they were civil proceedings, quære.—Pardee v. Smith, 27 Mich. 33.

§ 6. ——For breach of the peace or ordinance.

Power by municipal ordinance to authorize arrest without warrant, see Municipal Corporations, IX, E.

¶ 24. Arrest and imprisonment without a warrant are authorized only for offenses committed in the presence of the arresting officer and at the time.—Larson v. Feeney, 196 Mich. 1.

¶ 25. An officer is liable for arresting without a warrant a peddler selling meat without a license, contrary to an ordinance.—Schnider v. Montross, 158 Mich. 263.

¶ 26. An arrest without a warrant is justified only in cases of felony and breaches of the peace; and the president of a village who orders the arrest of a vender of pop-corn and peanuts, because he has no license, makes himself responsible and liable for the consequences, as he has no authority, as conservator of the peace, to imprison citizens in such a summary manner, the act not being malum in se, but only malum prohibitum, there being no danger of escape, and there being no obstruction in the public highway requiring immediate removal for the convenience of the public.—Tillman v. Beard, 121 Mich. 475.

¶ 27. A president of a village organized under Pub. Acts 1895, No. 3, who is made a conservator of the peace and charged with the duty of enforcing ordinances of the village, and who in good faith makes a complaint causing the arrest of a person for violation of an ordinance, is not liable for false imprisonment where the ordinance is afterwards held invalid, as public policy requires that a party who acts in good faith is not required to take the risk of being mulcted in damages if the courts afterwards hold it unconstitutional.—Tillman v. Beard, 121 Mich. 475.

¶ 28. A peace officer may arrest for a breach of the peace committed against himself as well as for those committed against others.—Davis v. Burgess, 54 Mich. 514.

¶ 29. The use of grossly indecent, profane and abusive language towards another person upon the public street, and in the presence of others, is a breach of the peace.—Davis v. Burgess, 54 Mich. 514.

¶ 30. The use of profane, vile and obscene language towards a police officer who inquires into the conduct of plaintiff, a stranger in the city, justifies said officer in making plaintiff's arrest.—Buman v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 168 Mich. 651.

¶ 31. An officer may arrest without a warrant only in cases of felony or breaches of the peace and an arrest without warrant for selling goods without proper license is illegal.—Schnider v. Montross, 158 Mich. 263.

¶ 32. One who refuses to explain why he has been waiting behind a tree, and refuses to state his name or his business, to a police officer, is not guilty of a breach of the peace so as to give such officer authority to arrest him without a warrant.—Cook v. Hastings, 150 Mich. 289.

¶ 33. Mere suspicion that a woman is plying the vocation of a street-walker or common prostitute does not justify an officer in arresting her without a warrant when there is no act indicating that she is upon the street for that purpose.—Pinkerton v. Verberg, 78 Mich. 573.

¶ 34. A policeman is not justified in arresting without a warrant a woman quietly walking on the street at a late hour of the night, even though she may just have come from a disreputable saloon, where there was nothing to indicate that she was intending to ply a prostitute's vocation by solicitation.—Klein v. Pollard, 149 Mich. 200.

¶ 35. The fact that plaintiff in an action to recover damages for illegal arrest and imprisonment without a warrant, was a bad girl, with a jail record, and admitted violations of the same ordinance on other occasions, held not sufficient to justify such arrest and imprisonment without a warrant.—Larson v. Feeney, 196 Mich. 1.

¶ 36. For a woman in passing a man on a public street to cough and say to him "Hello, there, kid," held not to constitute such disorderly conduct in violation of an ordinance as to warrant her arrest and imprisonment without a warrant.—Larson v. Feeney, 196 Mich. 1.

¶ 37. There is no probable cause for the arrest of the owner of a house for the crime of keeping a place for immoral purposes where the person causing the arrest has no information tending to connect such owner with the alleged crime.—Schneider v. Shepherd, 192 Mich. 82.

§ 7. ——Preventive arrest.

Unnecessary detention after arrest, see also post ¶ 64.

¶ 38. A magistrate may order into custody a drunken person committing a breach of the peace in his presence even though so drunk as to be insane; for though an insane person cannot commit crime he may be prevented from doing harm.—Lott v. Sweet, 33 Mich. 308.

¶ 39. Threats or other indications of an intended breach of the peace will not justify an arrest without a warrant, unless the facts warrant the officer in believing it necessary for preventing their immediate execution; as where the threat is coupled with some overt act.—Quinn v. Heisel, 40 Mich. 576.

¶ 40. Arrests without process to prevent threatened breaches of the peace are not justified unless the breach has proceeded far enough to sustain proceedings against the person committing it, without reference to past similar offenses which he may have committed before the officer arrived.—Quinn v. Heisel, 40 Mich. 576.

§ 8. ——Detention or arrest on another's advice or request.

Liability of officer acting in good faith on telegraphic advice, see also post ¶ 88.
Evidence of good faith and belief in arresting unidentified person, see post § 27.
Grounds and propriety of arrest for extradition, see Extradition.

¶ 41. The advice of one who is not an attorney, but who sometimes advises his neighbors for pay, is not admissible as evidence of advice of counsel in an action for false imprisonment.—Livingston v. Burroughs, 33 Mich. 511.

¶ 42. Advice of counsel, though followed in good faith, will not necessarily justify a false imprisonment caused by the client, though it might be admissible upon the question of malice if it showed facts indicating that the party believing them may have acted without improper motives.—Josselyn v. McAllister, 22 Mich. 300.

¶ 43. Where police officers are sued for an assault and battery committed in preventing plaintiff from hindering another, who desired to make a sewer connection for which the codefendant had not obtained the necessary consent from the city council, the secretary of the board of public works, who is not a lawyer, cannot be allowed to testify to opinions given by him to one of the defendant policemen as to the legal right to make the connection.—Zube v. Weber, 67 Mich. 52.

¶ 44. The fact that a police officer acts under the instruction of the prosecuting attorney in arresting and detaining a person suspected of burglary does not constitute a defense to an action for false imprisonment, where the arrest was not authorized; but it has a bearing on the good faith of the officer, and may thus affect the question of damages.—Linnen v. Banfield, 114 Mich. 93.

¶ 45. The marshal of Alpena arrested a man on Saturday evening on the strength of a letter purporting to come from the chief of police of Philadelphia, and signed with his name by some person whose initials only were attached. The letter stated nothing that would constitute a criminal offense in Michigan, but the marshal detained the prisoner as a matter of "official courtesy." Held, that the arrest was illegal.—Malcolmson v. Gibbons, 56 Mich. 459.

¶ 46. Supposition that plaintiff, a foreigner speaking no English, resembled description sent by telegram is not probable cause for directing arrest without inquiry.—Maliniemi v. Gronlund, 92 Mich. 222.

§ 9. Justification by warrant or process.

Necessity of warrant to justify arrest, see ante §§ 5-8; and see Arrest, I.
Warrant not in possession of arresting officer, see post § 10.
Sufficiency of the warrant or process, see post § 11.
Pleading justification, see post § 25.
Burden of proof and presumptions, see post § 26.
Evidence of probable cause to arrest plaintiff as person unknown described in warrant, see post ¶ 121.
Justification as matter of law or fact, see post § 30.
Justification by process or superior command or official duty in general, see Officers, VI, A; Sheriffs, IV.

¶ 47. An action for false imprisonment will not lie where the detention was by virtue of a warrant issued by a court having jurisdiction of the subject-matter, and regular on its face.—Tryon v. Pingree, 112 Mich. 338.

¶ 48. A civil action for damages for trespass to the person will not lie against one who has made a criminal complaint, or against his attorney, in a case where the warrant issued thereon is sufficiently regular on its face to protect the officer who executes it.—Wheaton v. Whittemore, 49 Mich. 348.

¶ 49. A complaint and warrant valid on their face will protect, not only the officer making the arrest and the magistrate issuing the warrant, but the complaining witness as well, from liability for false imprisonment; but the latter might be liable for malicious prosecution.—Schultz v. Huebner, 108 Mich. 274.

§ 10. ——Warrant not in possession of arresting officer.

Manner of making arrests when several officers are participating, see Arrest § 21.

¶ 50. An arrest at one city at the direction of the officer, when the warrant was in the possession of such officer at another city, was illegal.—McCullough v. Greenfield, 133 Mich. 463.

§ 11. ——Sufficiency of warrant or process.

Pleading insufficiency of the warrant, see post § 25.
Presumption of jurisdiction of justice to issue warrant, see post ¶ 112.
Requisites and sufficiency of capias, see Civil Arrest, I-III.
Sufficiency of warrant for crime, see Arrest, IV.

¶ 51. A warrant of arrest, though omitting several statutory elements, was held substantially good as leading to an inference of what the statute required to be made out; and the defects were held to be irregularities and not jurisdictional so as to make the justice liable for false imprisonment.—Pardee v. Smith, 27 Mich. 33.

¶ 52. Technical accuracy in a warrant of arrest is not required. It is enough if the warrant informs the accused of the nature of the accusation and if it recites the substance thereof.—Haskins v. Ralston, 69 Mich. 63.

¶ 53. A complaint made on information and belief and not supported by testimony of other witnesses, does not confer jurisdiction on a justice of the peace to issue a criminal warrant.—Brown v. Hadwin, 182 Mich. 491.

¶ 54. A register in chancery cannot without an order of court issue a precept for the arrest of one ordered to pay money, or, in default of payment, to undergo imprisonment, and such an attachment is no justification in an action for false imprisonment.—Thompson v. Ellsworth, 39 Mich. 719; In re Simons, 49 Mich. 511.

¶ 55. Where attorneys procured an order for a capias from a court having authority to issue process against the person of the defendant, and under which he was arrested, and they were sued in trespass therefor, it was held that, though the order for capias might be erroneous, it was not void, and the attorneys were protected by it.—Ward v. Cozzens, 3 Mich. 252.

¶ 56. One who, as agent of a creditor, has promoted a proceeding under the nonimprisonment act, is not liable in an action for false imprisonment if the warrant of arrest, though sued out with a bad motive, and though irregular or improvidently issued, was not absolutely void; if adequate to protect the magistrate it would protect defendant.—Johnson v. Maxon, 23 Mich. 129.

¶ 57. Where, upon an insufficient affidavit, a capias ad resp. is indorsed with an order to hold to bail, and is issued, the process is valid until set aside by a direct proceeding, and both the officer making the arrest and the affiant are protected.—Johnson v. Morton, 94 Mich. 1.

¶ 58. If an order, to hold to bail upon a capias is based upon an affidavit that upon its face negatives any liability whatever to plaintiff, such order is beyond jurisdiction and void, and constitutes no protection to those instituting the suit against an action for false imprisonment; for an arrest and imprisonment in a civil case upon void process are as if without process, and cannot be justified. So held, where the capias issued in a libel action declaring on an official statement which was absolutely privileged.—Wachsmuth v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 96 Mich. 426.

¶ 59. One making an affidavit for a writ of capias ad respondendum, and the sheriff serving the writ are protected from liability for damages for false imprisonment where the affidavit, although technically defective, discloses actionable misconduct on the part of the person arrested.—Thomas v. Rosecrantz, 193 Mich. 357.

§ 12. Arrest on one ground and justification by another.

¶ 60. An arrest made for one purpose cannot be justified by another, and the arresting officer's belief that the prisoner has violated the laws of Michigan will not excuse the arrest unless it is proposed to prosecute him in Michigan.—Malcolmson v. Gibbons, 56 Mich. 459.

§ 13. Illegal or unreasonable detention after legal arrest.

Unlawful commitment, see post § 16.
Questions of law and fact as to unreasonableness, see post § 30.

¶ 61. If a justice of the peace refuses to accept a recognizance for an appeal, tendered within twenty minutes after the sentence was pronounced, or to have anything to do with it or the sureties, simply on the ground that it is too late to appeal, and directs the officer to imprison the party, he will be liable for the imprisonment. An appeal perfected by the actual giving of proper bail terminates the jurisdiction of the justice, both of the subject-matter and the person, and his mittimus will no longer protect him.—Guenther v. Whiteacre, 24 Mich. 504.

¶ 62. An officer is authorized to detain for a reasonable time only a person arrested without warrant on a charge of felony; and where, after an arrest made on the evening of December 31, the prisoner was detained without bail until the evening of January 2, the delay could not, as matter of law, be held reasonable; when based on the false assumption that no proceedings could have been had on January 1st.—Linnen v. Banfield, 114 Mich. 98.

¶ 63. Where a sheriff makes a legal arrest without any intent to detain the person arrested an unreasonable time or to do him any other wrong, the legality of the arrest is not tainted by a subsequent illegal detention.—Friesenhan v. Maines, 137 Mich. 10.

¶ 64. A motorman was arrested and detained on the ground that the overhead system of the street railway was so out of repair as to be dangerous and had been declared a common nuisance by the common council, and that the running of cars increased the danger, and that he would not promise to desist. The running of cars could have been prevented by cutting the feed wires off from the power house or by disabling the cars. At the time of the arrest, the controller crank had been taken from the motorman and was in the hands of the police officers, and he could not start his car without them. Held that the arrest and detention was not justified and a verdict in favor of the motorman against the mayor and chief of police for false imprisonment was affirmed.—Mumford v. Starmont, 139 Mich. 188.

§ 14. Arrest under unconstitutional statute.

See also ante ¶ 27.

¶ 65. If an officer making arrest actually believes an invalid statute to be constitutional, the case must be a very plain one to make such ignorance of the law culpable. —Hill v. Taylor, 50 Mich. 549.

¶ 66. A justice of the peace is not liable in an action for false imprisonment because he holds an unconstitutional ordinance constitutional, and enforces by the arrest and imprisonment of one who violates it; nor is the officer who executes the warrant of arrest so liable if the warrant is fair on its face.—Brooks v. Mangan, 86 Mich. 576.

§ 15. Existence and sufficient accusation of crime.

Direction of verdict on ground that no offense was shown, see post ¶ 158.

¶ 67. The fact that a party is dishonest and buys goods without intending to pay for them does not excuse his arrest on a criminal charge of obtaining the goods by false pretenses.—Tefft v. Windsor, 17 Mich. 486.

¶ 68. Boarding a street car when drunk, refusing to pay fare, using vile language whereby passengers are annoyed, refusing to get off the car when asked, and showing fight when put off, do not constitute violations of How. St., §§ 9274, 9275, punishing those who wilfully and maliciously by act or intimidation impede or obstruct, or combine to impede or obstruct, the operation of a railroad. —White v. McQueen, 96 Mich. 249.

¶ 69. Where a complaint under the statute (Comp. L. 1871, § 1998) against keeping billiard-tables for gaming alleges that the respondent has "incurred a penalty by the violation of" the statute (specifying it), and that the billiard-table was kept in his house, and was resorted to for play with his knowledge and consent, the complaint is sufficient to give jurisdiction, and not open to attack in a collateral proceeding.—Pardee v. Smith, 27 Mich. 33.

¶ 70. A statement that a certain person named, described as grand-master of a specified lodge in Pennsylvania, has absconded, taking with him the funds of the lodge, charges no crime under our laws. In Michigan the company would have to be incorporated, and the officer hold the funds officially, to make him guilty, as an officer, of embezzlement (How. St., § 9151).—Malcolmson v. Gibbons, 56 Mich. 459.

¶ 71. The fact that the complaining witness who lodged complaint for slanderous words under How. St., § 9315, construed the language used as imputing the commission of a "crime," rather than an "infamous or degrading act," does not render the complaint and warrant void where the words are set out in it. The offense charged is to be determined by the words alleged to constitute it, and not by the inference drawn from them by the affiant.—Schultz v. Huebner, 108 Mich. 274.

¶ 72. A complaint for the sale of liquor in violation of the local option law which does not state the name of the purchaser is bad. —Brown v. Hadwin, 182 Mich. 491.

Evidence as to motive for detention in charitable institution, see post § 28.

Liability or immunity of detention home as governmental agency, see Asylums and Hospitals § 3.

¶ 73. A commitment in a criminal case which is void upon its face does not afford protection to the officer executing it, and he consequently may be liable for damages for false imprisonment.—Larson v. Collins, 195 Mich. 492.

¶ 74. Under a village charter providing for the amount of a fine which it authorizes to be imposed on conviction of certain offenses "to be made of the property of the defendant, if any such can be found," and if not, then imprisonment, a judgment that, in case the defendant did not pay the fine and costs, she should be at once committed to the county jail, is unauthorized. And proceedings resulting such a judgment, and a mittimus void on its face on the same ground, afford no justification to the justice before whom they were taken, or to the officer who executed them, against the action of the person thereby unlawfully imprisoned.—Sheldon v. Hill, 33 Mich. 171.

¶ 75. A conviction under a complaint charging vagrancy in violation of a city ordinance, in general terms without setting out the facts constituting the offense, would not justify detention if release was sought by habeas corpus.—Gardner v. Couch, 137 Mich. 358.

¶ 76. Defendant was convicted of a crime by a justice of the peace, and appealed to the circuit court. He had the plaintiff brought before the circuit court commissioner and there obtained an order that the plaintiff should give a recognizance with a surety for his appearance as a witness to testify in defendant's behalf, and that upon failure to do so he should be committed to prison. Plaintiff refused to comply, and was committed by the justice of the peace. Held, under c. 330, Comp. Laws 1897, § 11856 et seq., as amended by Act No. 177, Pub. Acts 1875, and Act No. 141, Pub. Acts 1879, the justice had no authority to commit to prison, and defendant was liable in an action of false imprisonment.—Bates v. Kitchel, 160 Mich. 402.

¶ 77. Where an action of false imprisonment is predicated upon imprisonment of plaintiff upon his disobedience of an order requiring him to give bail for his appearance as a witness, or in default thereof to stand committed, defendant cannot assert that plaintiff is not entitled to recover for the reason that it was his disobedience of the lawful portion of the order and not the enforcement of the unlawful portion that brought about the injury about which he complains.—Bates v. Kitchel, 166 Mich. 695.

¶ 78. Defendant was instrumental in having plaintiff committed to prison by a justice of the peace for the plaintiff's failure to supply a recognizance and surety for his appearance as a witness in a criminal case in which defendant was on trial. Under the statutes, the justice had no jurisdiction to enter the order. Held, in an action for false imprisonment, the defendant was not excused by the fact that the justice acting in good faith made a mistake in judicial interpretation.—Bates v. Kitchel, 160 Mich. 402.

§ 17. Detention as insane person.

See also ante ¶ 38.

Admissibility of evidence as bearing on insanity of the person, see post ¶¶ 124, 125.

¶ 79. Whether the superintendent of an insane asylum is liable for detaining a sane person whom in good faith he believes to be insane; and whether, in doubtful cases, an inquisition to determine the insanity of a person is prerequisite to confinement in an asylum, quære.—Van Deusen v. Newcomer, 40 Mich. 90.

§ 18. Detention by quarantine.

¶ 80. Local Acts 1893, No. 403, § 11, making it the duty of the Detroit Board of Health to take such measures for the preservation of the public health as they may in good faith deem public safety or health demands, was designed to give such board larger powers than given to other boards in the state and such section 11 clearly fell within the exception of Comp. L. 1897, § 4459, excepting from the general law cities with charters inconsistent with it; and the board had power to make a rule providing that where smallpox should break out in one-half of a double frame house, both halves of the house should be quarantined; and the members of the board are not liable as for false imprisonment of a person so quarantined.—Highland v. Schulte, 123 Mich. 360.

§ 19. Waiver or consent to detention.

Sufficiency of evidence of involuntary detention, see post ¶ 145.

Admissibility of evidence of plea of guilty, see post § 27.

¶ 81. Liability for an illegal arrest was not waived by the failure of the accused to object to the manner of his arrest when arraigned, and pleading guilty to the offense charged in the warrant.—McCullough v. Greenfield, 133 Mich. 463; Larson v. Feeney, 196 Mich. 1.

§ 20. Persons liable.

For commitment of witness to appear as such, see ante § 16.

Justification of officer by process as extending to informant or prosecutor, see ante ¶¶ 49, 55-59.

Coliability of agent with principal, see Agency §§ 52, 85.

Liability of assignor for act of assignee suing out wrongful capias in collecting debt, see also Assignments ¶ 80.

Liability to action as interest allowing custodian of person to review habeas corpus, see Certiorari ¶ 35.

¶ 82. One who in making a criminal complaint merely states the facts and circumstances to the prosecuting attorney, and swears to the complaint drawn by the latter underlying such facts, is not liable for false imprisonment, though the facts sworn to make out no criminal offense.—Murphy v. Walters, 34 Mich. 180.

¶ 83. One who simply lays facts before a magistrate, leaving all determination to that officer, is not liable for false imprisonment unless he takes some part in furthering the arrest or urging the detention of the accused. —Murphy v. Walters, 34 Mich. 180.

¶ 84. A person making complaint can only be liable for false imprisonment where the officer making the arrest is liable, though his animus may aggravate his liability. But his animus will not make him liable if his purpose is not carried out, unless, perhaps, where he seeks to serve the warrant himself. —Hill v. Taylor, 50 Mich. 549.

¶ 85. An arrest upon a justice's warrant delivered by the plaintiff or complaining witness in the case to a constable for service will not sustain an action against such plaintiff or complainant for false imprisonment where there is no showing that he acted maliciously or directed the arrest, or was present when it was made, and where no question was raised as to his good faith or the jurisdiction of the justice.—Love v. Wood, 55 Mich. 451.

¶ 86. If one whose store has been broken into makes complaint in due form for a search-warrant, stating the facts and no more to the officers, he is not liable for such officers' acts in exceeding or departing from the writ, or in arresting and detaining the person suspected.—Linnen v. Banfield, 114 Mich. 93.

¶ 87. Where the plaintiff in an action for false imprisonment, voluntarily sought an interview with the defendant at his office and was not there put under restraint, and where she herself called for a police officer for the purpose of having the defendant reiterate a charge of theft, and where the officer stated in substance that as the defendant accused plaintiff of theft she would have to go to the station, and the plaintiff thereupon returned with the officer, and where it appeared that whatever restraint the officer placed upon plaintiff was not shown to have been at the request of the defendant, held the facts did not constitute false imprisonment.—Shinglemeyer v. Wright, 124 Mich. 230.

¶ 88. One who, without making inquiry, and acting simply on a suspicion that plaintiff, a foreigner speaking no English, resembles a description sent by telegram of a person unknown to him, points out plaintiff to an officer as the person whom the officer is seeking to arrest for larceny, thus causing his arrest and imprisonment, is liable in damages though acting without malice.—Maliniemi v. Gronlund, 92 Mich. 222.

¶ 89. An agent having, in behalf of his principal, begun proceedings by which he has made himself liable for false imprisonment, cannot defend himself by showing that he acted under instructions; nor can he show similar proceedings under similar circumstances elsewhere, in mitigation.—Josselyn v. McAllister, 22 Mich. 300.

¶ 90. The assignor of a chose in action is not liable to an action for false imprisonment where the assignee, suing in the assignor's name, improperly began suit by capias, the affidavit for which was made by the assignor's agent but not in his behalf.—Park v. Toledo, C. S. & D. R. Co., 41 Mich. 352.

§ 21. ——Bystanders called to assist.

¶ 91. One who responds to the call of a person known to him to be an officer to assist in making an arrest is protected against an action for false imprisonment if in his acts he confines himself to the officer's order and direction.—Firestone v. Rice, 71 Mich. 377.

¶ 92. Under How. St., §§ 591, 9250, authorizing the sheriff to call upon citizens to aid him in apprehending or securing any person for felony or breach of the peace, and providing a penalty for refusal, a person is justified in giving such aid without further inquiry when the sheriff calls upon him, and he is not liable to an action for false imprisonment unless his act is in itself wanton and beyond what he is required to do, though the sheriff's acts are without authority.—Firestone v. Rice, 71 Mich. 377.

§ 22. ——Participating officers.

Evidence as to purpose for which another was procured to make arrest, see post ¶ 130.

Liability and immunity of justices and judicial officers in general, see Judges, II; Justices of the Peace, II.

¶ 93. If an arrest by a police officer is in its inception wrongful, other officers who act and assist in the continuance of the wrongful imprisonment are responsible for the entire damage thereby caused to the plaintiff, although they had no knowledge of the unlawfulness of the imprisonment, and intended to act in the strict discharge of their official duties.—Cook v. Hastings, 150 Mich. 289.

§ 23. ——Corporations.

Pleading want of authority of agents and nonparticipation by corporation, see post § 25.

Capacity of corporations for torts, see Corporations § 111.

¶ 94. A corporation may be held liable for false imprisonment even though a malicious intent must be proved.—Wachsmuth v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 96 Mich. 426.

¶ 94a. Where the cashier of a bank instituted an action which was in the bank's name and was commenced by capias issued on his affidavit alleging that he was cashier and agent of the bank, and authorized by it to make the affidavit, and the bank supported the action and bore the expenses of it, it will be presumed in an action against the bank for false imprisonment that he had authority to institute the action.—Wachsmuth v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 96 Mich. 426.

¶ 95. Action by capias by a bank instituted without authority by the cashier's action is ratified by the fact that the attorneys for plaintiff in such action were the regular attorneys of the bank and were paid by it, and that on the quashing of the capias the bank sought to have the order quashing it set aside by mandamus, and paid the expenses of the proceeding.—Wachsmuth v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 96 Mich. 426.

¶ 96. Where a private charitable institution designated by statute as a place to which the courts may commit persons convicted of certain offenses, detains by its agents a girl without such process of law, it is liable for the acts of its agents for such false imprisonment.—Gallon v. House of Good Shepherd, 158 Mich. 361.

¶ 97. Where a private charitable institution designated by statute as a place to which the courts may commit persons convicted of certain offenses, detains a girl without such process of law, it cannot escape liability on the ground that its trust funds would be diverted from their purpose by the payment of damages.—Gallon v. House of Good Shepherd, 158 Mich. 361.

Joining count with counts for slander, malicious prosecution or other causes, see Pleading, II.
Amendment by adding new counts for malicious prosecutions, see Pleading, VI.
Affidavit for capias in action for false imprisonment, see Civil Arrest § 7.

¶ 99. In an action for false imprisonment the warrant of arrest cannot be attacked as bad on its face for insufficient description of the crime charged, where the declaration does not allege that such warrant is bad for any reason.—Haskins v. Ralston, 69 Mich. 63.

¶ 100. In an action for false imprisonment the facts amounting to a justification for the arrest must be pleaded and this is especially true where the arrest has been made without a warrant.—Tubbs v. Haessig, 149 Mich. 185.

¶ 101. Where a sheriff is sued for false imprisonment, the defense that in arresting plaintiff he had reasonable cause to believe him to have been guilty of a felony is inadmissible under the plea of not guilty, but must be specially pleaded.—White v. McQueen, 96 Mich. 249.

¶ 102. A bank when sued jointly with its cashier for false imprisonment in an action instituted by the latter must, in order to avail itself of any alleged want of authority in the cashier, plead the fact; and it is not enough to set forth that the acts, if committed, were committed by such codefendant "acting as the" bank's cashier or agent.—Wachsmuth v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 96 Mich. 426.

¶ 103. Where a declaration avers that an imprisonment of the plaintiff has been effected by means of threats and violence, it is a sufficient averment of malice to permit proof of it and to justify a recovery or an aggravation of damages on that ground.—Brushaber v. Stegemann, 22 Mich. 266.

¶ 104. In an action for false imprisonment, an averment that plaintiff incurred large expense in obtaining his liberation from imprisonment is a sufficient allegation of special damages to sustain proof of the amount of the attorney fee.—Swart v. Kimball, 43 Mich. 443.

¶ 105. The averment in a declaration for false imprisonment that plaintiff, who was required to give a bond for the jail limits, thereby "was greatly hindered and prevented from performing and transacting his necessary business, and from engaging and contracting in business which he might otherwise have embarked in," cannot sustain proof of such special damage as that his business required him to go out of the county, and that he had been applied to to go out of the county on such business.—Fuller v. Bowker, 11 Mich. 204.

§ 26. Burden of proof and presumptions.

Instruction as to burden, see also post ¶ 160.
General law of presumptions and burden, see Evidence, II.

Presumption of knowledge of the law as basis for implication of malice, see also Evidence ¶ 206.
Burden of proving time of accrual of action to start limitations, see Limitations, VII.
Presumptions as to running of limitations, see Limitations, VII.

¶ 107. Plaintiff in an action against a magistrate for false imprisonment is not under the burden of proving all of the papers and proceedings incident to the arrest; but the burden of proving justification is on the magistrate defending.—Stensrud v. Delamater, 56 Mich. 144.

¶ 108. In an action for false imprisonment the burden is upon the defendant to justify the arrest in accordance with his notice.—Tubbs v. Haessig, 149 Mich. 185.

¶ 109. In an action for false imprisonment, the mere fact that the plaintiff has been imprisoned is sufficient, standing alone, to raise the presumption that the imprisonment was illegal; but if the plaintiff shows that such imprisonment was caused by a complaint made by the defendant before a magistrate, the issuance of a warrant thereon, and a trial and conviction under it, and that the chief damages resulted from plaintiff's imprisonment upon such conviction, the burden is upon him to show that the complaint was invalid.—Barker v. Anderson, 81 Mich. 508.

¶ 110. An insured person, after being paid his claim, was prosecuted criminally upon the complaint of the insurance company's state agent for obtaining the money under false pretenses, and upon his discharge he sued the company for false imprisonment. Held, that it could not be inferred from the mere fact of agency that the agent represented the company in instituting the criminal proceedings, and that the burden of proof was upon plaintiff to show affirmatively authorization from defendant.—Travis v. Standard Life & Accident Ins. Co., 86 Mich. 288.

¶ 111. A declaration contained an ordinary count for false imprisonment, and also a count in which plaintiff's arrest under a complaint and warrant was alluded to, but without averment that the papers or proceedings were defective or that there was a lack of jurisdiction. Upon the trial, plaintiff, after showing defendant's connection with the arrest, and the damages, put in evidence the complaint, which stated no offense, and warrant and the proceedings before the justice. Held, that the offering of the papers in evidence, although unnecessary under the first count, did not constitute an election to proceed under the second, but only imposed the additional burden upon the plaintiff of showing that the proceedings were without jurisdiction.—Thompson v. Stoddard, 112 Mich. 687.

¶ 112. That there was a sufficient showing to justify the issuance of a warrant and to confer jurisdiction on a justice of the peace to do so, will be presumed from the recitals of a warrant of the preliminary examination of witnesses.—Brown v. Hadwin, 182 Mich. 491.

¶ 113. In an action for false imprisonment in procuring plaintiff's arrest upon a criminal complaint and warrant, which charged no offense known to the law, it is immaterial, except so far as exemplary damages are concerned, whether defendant had or had not reasonable or probable cause; his good faith could not prevent recovery of actual damages.—Livingston v. Burroughs, 33 Mich. 511.

¶ 114. It is immaterial, in an action for false imprisonment, whether the plaintiff had money with which he might have paid a fine and escaped the imprisonment complained of.—Barker v. Anderson, 81 Mich. 508.

¶ 115. In an action for an illegal arrest for street-walking, specific acts of lewdness on plaintiff's part cannot be shown.—Pinkerton v. Verberg, 78 Mich. 573.

¶ 116. In an action by a woman against a police officer for damages for illegal arrest and false imprisonment, in which the defense was that plaintiff was violating an ordinance of the city relating to soliciting for prostitution, held that the ordinance was improperly excluded as evidence.—Durham v. Feeney, 195 Mich. 318.

¶ 117. In an action by a woman against a police officer for damages for illegal arrest and false imprisonment, where the defense was that plaintiff was violating an ordinance of the city relating to soliciting for the purpose of prostitution, held that the provisions of the charter of the city relating to the duties of police officers were improperly excluded from evidence.—Durham v. Feeney, 195 Mich. 318.

¶ 118. In an action to recover damages for illegal arrest and imprisonment without a warrant, testimony that plaintiff had pleaded guilty to the offense charged in a warrant subsequently issued therefor and served, held not admissible on question of waiver of liability for such arrest.—Larson v. Feeney, 196 Mich. 1.

¶ 119. In an action by a woman, who was arrested by a police officer for the violation by the plaintiff, in his presence, of an ordinance of the city relating to soliciting for prostitution, against such police officer for damages for illegal arrest and false imprisonment, held that the answer of plaintiff that she was guilty, when the police magistrate, upon arraignment, explained to plaintiff that she was charged with soliciting for the purpose of prostitution contrary to the terms of the city ordinance, was admissible as being in the nature of an admission and as tending to characterize plaintiff's understanding of the purpose of her conduct at the time of the arrest.—Durham v. Feeney, 195 Mich. 318.

¶ 120. Testimony of plaintiff's witness in an action for false imprisonment and malicious prosecution, growing out of a dispute over the legal existence of a highway and the arrest of plaintiff for obstructing it, of an arrangement made about the time of such controversy, with plaintiff by witness for the right to haul a quantity of logs over the disputed highway, payment to be made by an order upon defendant, which order defendant subsequently refused to pay, was irrelevant and immaterial.—Thurston v. Wright, 77 Mich. 96.

¶ 121. In an action for false imprisonment and assault and battery committed in arresting plaintiff for a felony under a warrant against an unknown party, statements made by the sheriff's informers before and at the time of the arrest are competent upon the question of probable cause therefor.—Firestone v. Rice, 71 Mich. 377.

¶ 122. In an action for false imprisonment based upon an unlawful arrest, evidence of the advice of attorneys given to defendant after the arrest is inadmissible to justify the arrest; and even though admissible as bearing upon the question of subsequent detention, it should appear that it was predicated upon a full disclosure of all the facts.—Filer v. Smith, 96 Mich. 347.

¶ 123. Where, in an action against an officer for false imprisonment, he having arrested the wrong person, plaintiff has introduced in evidence newspaper articles concerning the arrest, appearing to have been based on information from plaintiff, defendant and the sheriff, testimony in defendant's behalf as to the sources of the information upon which the articles were based, is competent to show that the information was not derived from defendant but from the sheriff.—Filer v. Smith, 102 Mich. 98.

¶ 124. In an action against the superintendent of an insane asylum for the detention of an inmate the broadest latitude should be allowed in showing the jury what the patient said and did and how she appeared when there as facts bearing on the question of her sanity.—Van Deusen v. Newcomer, 40 Mich. 90.

¶ 125. A patient who had been placed in an insane asylum as a pauper sued the superintendent for false imprisonment. Held, that evidence of what happened to the plaintiff before she was received at the asylum was inadmissible; so was evidence as to her worldly circumstances and what had been done with her goods; and it was inadmissible to show what the assistants, attendants or other inmates in the asylum had said or done to the plaintiff, unless it was said or done under the superintendent's directions; or that money sent to the plaintiff had not reached her, unless it is also shown that it came to the defendant or that he was instrumental in depriving her of it.—Van Deusen v. Newcomer, 40 Mich. 90.

¶ 126. In an action for false imprisonment it was shown that defendant had sought to obtain the rearrest of the plaintiff. Held, that the evidence was admissible, and as likely to aid the defendant as to injure him, if it was uncertain whether it was done in malice or in an honest belief of plaintiff's guilt.—Swart v. Kimball, 43 Mich. 443.

¶ 127. In an action by a street car motorman for false imprisonment, the detention being to prevent him from running his car, and to exact a promise not to do so again, it is not error to exclude evidence that he was subsequently complimented by his employer for his effort to run the car.—Mumford v. Starmont, 139 Mich. 188.

§ 28. ——Of malice and aggravation or mitigation.

See also ante ¶ 89.
Advice of counsel as mitigating circumstance, see also ante § 8.
In actions for malicious prosecution, see Malicious Prosecution, VI.

¶ 128. All circumstances tending to show the character and motives of persons who have caused an arrest are admissible to show whether their conduct was malicious or not in an action against them for false imprisonment.—Stensrud v. Delamater, 56 Mich. 144.

¶ 129. The action of defendant magistrate in assuming the dual capacity of magistrate and counsel in making an arrest may be shown not only as evidence of malice but also of his want of jurisdiction.—Stensrud v. Delamater, 56 Mich. 144.

¶ 130. Where plaintiff has introduced evidence to show that defendant caused the arrest complained of at the instance of a third person to get plaintiff out of the way so that he could not testify as a witness in a pending suit, defendant may give evidence as to conversations with such third person as to the arrest, tending to show that he was not induced to make the arrest for any such purpose.—Livingston v. Curtis, 33 Mich. 511.

¶ 131. Where an action for false imprisonment is based upon plaintiff's contention that a proceeding to compel him to give bail to appear as a witness was intended to annoy plaintiff, it is proper to admit evidence tending to prove all of the annoyances, vexations and humiliation suffered by plaintiff from the inception of the proceeding, and the petty nature of the charge made against defendant in the proceeding in which plaintiff was a witness may be shown.—Bates v. Kitchel, 166 Mich. 695.

¶ 132. The demeanor, at the time of his arrest, of a party arrested on a capias for false imprisonment, is not admissible as evidence of his malice at the time he caused the imprisonment. Statements having the effect of admissions bearing on the tortious proceedings would be admissible, but not conduct and language not having such reference or connection.—Josselyn v. McAllister, 22 Mich. 300.

¶ 133. Advice from counsel to client will not, though followed in good faith, necessarily justify a false imprisonment caused by the latter. If it showed facts indicating that the party believing them may have acted upon them without improper motives, those facts would be admissible upon the question of malice. What a party may himself say to his attorney in explanation of his conduct is inadmissible.—Josselyn v. McAllister, 22 Mich. 300.

¶ 134. The advice of one not an attorney, but who sometimes advises his neighbors for pay, is not admissible in evidence as advice of counsel in an action for false imprisonment.—Livingston v. Burroughs, 33 Mich. 511.

¶ 135. In action for false imprisonment evidence of a misunderstanding between plaintiff and a third person, whose claim that plaintiff had stolen certain articles led to acts upon which the action for false imprisonment was based, was inadmissible where it was not claimed that defendant had any knowledge of it; it would not tend to show any malice on his part, and for any malice on the part of such third person he was not responsible.—Moore v. Thompson, 92 Mich. 498.

¶ 136. Evidence that an agent, in defending his principal's possession against a former occupant's attempt to re-enter, drew a revolver on a policeman who approached, was held irrelevant in an action against such agent by such evicted occupant, where the act did not take place in the latter's presence. —Taylor v. Adams, 58 Mich. 187.

¶ 137. In an action for false imprisonment and assault and battery committed in arresting plaintiff for a felony under a warrant against an unknown party, statements made by the sheriff's informers before and at the time of the arrest are competent upon the question of reasonableness of the use of hand-cuffs.—Firestone v. Rice, 71 Mich. 377.

¶ 138. In an action for false imprisonment, it is not error to exclude evidence that it was the custom to search prisoners, which custom was not followed in this case.—Mumford v. Starmont, 139 Mich. 188.

¶ 139. Where plaintiff's ward, a girl, is detained in a charitable institution, it is proper to show the motive for which she was detained by introducing evidence that her relatives tried to find her; that they advertised in the newspapers and employed detectives, and that the institution employed her at labor profitable to itself.—Gallon v. House of Good Shepherd, 158 Mich. 361.

Facts constituting a false imprisonment, see ante, I.

¶ 140. In an action against a magistrate for false imprisonment his own entries are not conclusive in his own favor.—Stensrud v. Delamater, 56 Mich. 144.

¶ 141. A guy-post for an electric light tower was put in front of a man's dwelling-house, upon the lawn between the sidewalk and the curb-stone. The man had unavailingly protested, and being advised by counsel that he had a right to remove the post, he sawed half through it. The president of the light company thereupon had him arrested; and though neither he nor the officer had seen the act, the arrest was made without a warrant. Held, that the act, if an offense at all, was no more than a misdemeanor, and the arrest was therefore illegal.—Ross v. Leggett, 61 Mich. 445.

¶ 142. In an action for false imprisonment against a sheriff and one H, it appeared that plaintiff's husband, father-in-law, and uncle were arrested at their home under a civil warrant issued on complaint of H under the forcible entry and detainer act; that, having served the warrant upon the three men, the sheriff arrested plaintiff without any warrant, and compelled all to accompany him to the office of the justice, three and a half miles distant; that H, who had accompanied the sheriff when the arrest was made, taking advantage of the fact that no one was left to guard the premises, immediately broke into the house and took possession of the same, throwing out and damaging plaintiff's furniture. Held, that the evidence raised a question for the jury as to whether the sheriff connived with H with respect to the acts subsequent to the arrest.—Hendricks v. Haskins, 114 Mich. 291.

¶ 143. In an action for false imprisonment against a sheriff and another, a finding of the jury in favor of the latter is justified where there was testimony tending to show that he stated the facts fully and fairly to the proper officials and asked for protection merely without urging an arrest, though he was present when the arrest was made, this being at his own home.—Love v. Halladay, 139 Mich. 575.

¶ 144. Evidence held sufficient to go to the jury upon the question of whether defendant merchant was sufficiently shown to have been connected with the act of a collector in causing the arrest of plaintiff to be liable in an action for false imprisonment.—Curry v. Traver-Bird Co., 167 Mich. 17.

¶ 145. The plaintiff's ward, a girl, was induced to go to the defendant institution of charity. There was evidence that she was told she would be given employment in a private family; that she did not know the character of the institution when she entered; and that she sought to get away and was detained for a period of years. Held, there was sufficient evidence to go to the jury that she entered the institution involuntarily.—Gallon v. House of Good Shepherd, 158 Mich. 361.

§ 30. Questions of law and fact and instructions.

Sufficiency of evidence to go to jury, see ante § 29.

General law of instructions and province of jury, see Instructions; Trial, VI.

¶ 146. It is a jury question whether defendant's information justified his making a complaint, to wit, whether men of ordinary care would have acted on it.—Livingston v. Burroughs, 33 Mich. 511.

¶ 147. Probable cause, where the facts are conceded, is a question of law for the court. —White v. McQueen, 96 Mich. 249.

¶ 148. It is generally a question of law for the court whether the facts constitute probable cause such as justifies an officer in arresting a person without a warrant on information that a felony has been committed and an assumption that the person arrested is guilty thereof.—Filer v. Smith, 96 Mich. 347.

¶ 149. In an action for damages for false imprisonment where the facts are undisputed what constitutes probable cause is a question for the court.—Schneider v. Shepherd, 192 Mich. 82.

¶ 150. In an action for damages for false imprisonment by an officer where the facts are undisputed, the question of probable cause is a question of law for the court.—Larson v. Collins, 195 Mich. 492.

¶ 151. Whether resemblance to a photograph of the person alleged to have committed a felony sent by another sheriff to defendant was sufficient to justify an arrest without a warrant is a question for the jury in an action for false imprisonment.—Filer v. Smith, 96 Mich. 347.

¶ 152. In an action by a woman against a police officer for damages for illegal arrest and false imprisonment, in which the defense was that he made the arrest for the violation by the plaintiff in his presence of an ordinance of the city relating to soliciting for prostitution, held that it was a question for the jury whether plaintiff was violating the terms of the ordinance in the presence of the officer when the arrest was made. —Durham v. Feeney, 195 Mich. 318.

¶ 153. To the general rule that what constitutes probable cause to justify an arrest without warrant is a question of law for the court, the case of an arrest upon resemblance to a photograph of the person alleged to have committed the offense constitutes an exception.—Filer v. Smith, 102 Mich. 98.

¶ 154. A delay from the evening of Dec. 31 to that of Jan. 2, before giving to one arrested without a warrant on suspicion of felony an opportunity to secure bail, cannot be held as matter of law to be reasonable when based on the false assumption that January 1st is dies non juridicus.—Linnen v. Banfield, 114 Mich. 93.

¶ 155. It is error for the court to direct a verdict for the defendant in a case for false imprisonment where there was evidence on both sides of the question as to whether the plaintiff had committed an assault in the presence of the defendant officer, justifying his arrest without a warrant.—Tubbs v. Haessig, 149 Mich. 185.

¶ 156. Question of probable cause for an arrest for felony held to have been fairly submitted to the jury.—Firestone v. Rice, 71 Mich. 377.

¶ 157. In an action for false imprisonment, where the defendant stated the circumstances of a breach of the peace to a justice, who after consulting with the prosecuting attorney, drew up the complaint which was then signed by the defendant, and where the defendant had nothing to do with locking the plaintiff up, a verdict for the defendant should have been directed, although the warrant was defective, it appearing however that the plaintiff was convicted under a new complaint.—Doty v. Hurd, 124 Mich. 671.

¶ 158. In a suit for false imprisonment for causing plaintiff's arrest for breaking into defendant's barn and taking out goods belonging to defendant, a directed verdict is properly denied to defendant who claims it on the ground that plaintiff admitted he carried away defendant's goods, where plaintiff's testimony taken as a whole shows that he denied that the goods taken belonged to defendant.—De Vos v. Caplan, 165 Mich. 77.

¶ 159. In a false imprisonment case, where the first of two arrests was made within the jurisdiction of the court issuing the process, but not in the presence of the officer having the warrant, and where the accused was subsequently taken into custody by such officer and pleaded guilty under the warrant, it was error to instruct the jury that because the first arrest was invalid the second one was also invalid; and the jury should have been instructed that plaintiff could recover damages only to the time of the lawful arrest.—McCullough v. Greenfield, 133 Mich. 463.

¶ 160. The instruction that the burden of proof was upon plaintiff, in an action for assault and battery, false imprisonment and malicious prosecution, to show that defendant acted without probable cause and with malice, refers to the issue of malicious prosecution, and the jury must have so understood. Such charge, therefore, was not erroneous as laying upon the plaintiff the burden of proof as to the lack of justification for the imprisonment, as well as to the absence of probable cause for making the criminal complaint.—Lansky v. Prettyman, 140 Mich. 40.

FENCES.

TREATS of the law of inclosure of land by fences or other similar structures and of the public regulations concerning fencing or imposing liabilities relating thereto. It excludes the general law of domestic animals and the distraint of animals damage feasant (see Animals) and the statutory duty and liability of railroads or adjoining owners relative to fencing tracks and to animals injured while escaped or at large (Railroads, VIII, E.)

Analysis.

§ 1. In general.
§ 2. Duty to fence and liabilities dependent on fencing.
§ 3. ——Line or division fences.
§ 4. Persons required to fence.
§ 5. Remedies and actions.

§ 6. ——For trespass by animals.
§ 7. Statutory proceedings by fence viewers.
§ 8. ——Equitable relief.

Standards for sufficiency of fences and standard gauge for fence wire, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 2206, 2231-2240.

¶ 1. The word "fence" as used in Comp. L. 1857, chap. 14, § 1, How. St., § 796, must be construed as including a mode of construction that will give the fabric, when completed, such reasonable strength as to confine or turn the animals usually restrained by fences in this country.—Bay City & E. S. R. Co. v. Austin, 21 Mich. 390.

¶ 2. The term "fence" has a well understood meaning, and an ordinary worm or Virginia fence is one that owners of farm lands may lawfully build, though it would require the use of a strip of land from three to five feet wide.—Rose v. Linderman, 147 Mich. 372.

¶ 3. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 2415, defining what shall be deemed legal fences, a stump fence, built in accordance with the common practice of a country or locality is one that may be lawfully built, and a neighbor cannot complain merely because such fence was not within the statute if it should meet the approval of the fence viewers.—Rose v. Linderman, 147 Mich. 372.

¶ 4. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 2415, defining what shall be deemed legal fences, an ordinary worm or Virginia fence, requiring the use of a strip of land from three to five feet wide, is one that owners of farm lands may lawfully build.—Rose v. Linderman, 147 Mich. 372.

¶ 5. A landowner in building his partition fence need not build it altogether on his own land but may build half of it on the land of his adjoining landowner, so long as the fence built is a legal fence within the meaning of the statute.—Rose v. Linderman, 147 Mich. 372.

¶ 6. A partition fence may be built upon the line and may occupy equal portions of land from the adjoining owners; and while an unequal occupancy does not necessarily deprive the structure of the character of a partition fence, a party is entitled to relief in ejectment if the fence occupies a disproportionate share of his land.—Rose v. Linderman, 147 Mich. 372.

Liability dependent on failure to fence, see Comp. L. 1915, § 2227.

¶ 7. At common law one is under no obligation to fence against his neighbor's cattle, and such is the rule in Michigan.—Collins v. Lundquist, 154 Mich. 658.

¶ 8. At the common law one owning land adjoining a public highway was under no obligation to erect and maintain exterior fences, nor was the public, or a company occupying such highway, bound to construct fences along its sides.—Williams v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 2 Mich. 259; Gardner v. Smith, 7 Mich. 410.

¶ 9. The act of March 17, 1847 (Comp. L. 1857, § 628) did not require individuals to fence their lands, but simply precluded damages for injuries done by animals on unfenced lands.—Williams v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 2 Mich. 259; Wood v. LaRue, 9 Mich. 158.

¶ 10. The act of 1847 (Comp. L. 1857, § 628), precluding damages for injury done on unfenced lands, applies to such lands only as are usually fenced.—Williams v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 2 Mich. 259.

Trespass by animals on nonadjoining open lands, see Animals § 6.
Statutory provisions, see Comp. L. 1915, § 2207 et seq.

¶ 11. By the common law one is not bound to fence against another's adjoining close unless by force of prescription or (perhaps) agreement.—Johnson v. Wing, 3 Mich. 163.

¶ 12. The act of 1847 (Comp. L. 1857, § 628) only applied to exterior fences; it made no change or requirement respecting fences between the occupied lands of adjacent proprietors.—Johnson v. Wing, 3 Mich. 163.

¶ 13. Comp. L. 1857, § 606, How. St., § 797 only imposes the duty upon a land-owner to build partition fences for the protection of the adjoining land-owner. Before the duty can become fixed so as to require him to keep in repair any particular portion of the partition fence it must appear, first, that the adjoining proprietor improves his land, and second, that either by consent or by the action of the fence-viewers a portion of the partition fence between them has been assigned to him to keep in repair. Adjoining proprietors, if they see fit, may dispense with any partition fence.—Aylesworth v. Herrington, 17 Mich. 417.

¶ 14. How. St., § 797, regarding maintenance of partition fences, does not apply where adjoining land is a strip used as a private way and not "inclosed" at the ends, though the lands on both sides of such way are improved and "inclosed."—Lantis v. Reithmiller, 95 Mich. 45.

¶ 15. The purpose of Laws 1861, Act No. 179, How. St., § 817, prohibiting recovery of damages for trespass on uninclosed lands, is to compel every person to discharge his duty (see Comp. L. 1857, chap. 14, How. St., §§ 797-800) in regard to partition fences at the peril of such losses as he may suffer from the depredations, committed in consequence of his neglect, by the beasts of those persons to whom the duty is owing.—Aylesworth v. Herrington, 17 Mich. 417.

Duty to fence lands, see ante §§ 2, 3.
Proceedings by fence viewers, see post § 7.
Railroad fences and duty to fence and make crossing guards, see Railroads, VIII, F.

¶ 16. None but the occupants of lands inclosed by fences are required to maintain partition fences between their own and adjoining inclosures.—Aylesworth v. Herrington, 17 Mich. 417.

¶ 17. No one can be held liable for failure to fence unless he is in such possession and control of the lands in question that he has a lawful right to fence them; a husband lodging with his wife on land of which she is the exclusive owner and manager cannot be held.—Carpenter v. Vail, 36 Mich. 226.

¶ 18. R. S. 1846, p. 97, § 2, How. St., § 797, requiring "the respective occupants of lands enclosed with fences" to "keep up and maintain partition fences between their owner and the next adjoining enclosures in equal shares, so long as both parties continue to improve the same," is inoperative until their respective shares or portions of the fence are ascertained either by assignment or according to the other provisions of the statute.—Johnson v. Wing, 3 Mich. 163.

¶ 19. Where the holder of a tax title made an agreement with an adjoining owner that he would build his part of a line fence when the validity of the tax title was settled, and he did not positively agree to build it at that time or at any other time and the tax title was subsequently held void, there was no agreement which would be binding on the owner of the land.—Hammond v. Tuttle, 139 Mich. 699.

Right to repel trespassing animals from unfenced lands, see Animals § 6.
Right to distrain as affected by neglect to fence, see Animals § 7.
Actions and persons liable in actions for recovery of money paid on illegal fence tax, see Taxes, X, C.
Statutory provisions, see Comp. L. 1915, § 2209 et seq.

¶ 20. A party claiming that a line fence should be moved 6 feet over on the land of the adjoining owner who is in possession up to the fence, should bring an action of ejectment rather than attempt by force to move the fence to the line claimed.—F. H. Wolf Brick Co. v. Lonyo, 132 Mich. 162.

¶ 21. A notice of a determination of fence viewers is not inadmissible in evidence in a suit between the parties to the dispute over the fence, on the ground that it has not been properly recorded, where the original notice was properly filed with the clerk and indexed, though not copied on the record, and the party objecting to its admission had actual notice of the determination.—Vincent v. Ackerman, 155 Mich. 614.

§ 6. ——For trespass by animals.

¶ 22. In an action between adjacent owners for trespass by cattle the plaintiff cannot recover if the responsibility for the support of the line fence has been divided under Comp. L. 1871, § 769, How. St., § 797, and the cattle entered in consequence of his failure to keep up his share; but defendant has the burden of proving that such division was made.—East v. Cain, 49 Mich. 473.

¶ 23. The owner of land upon which cattle come from the adjoining premises of a third party may maintain trespass therefor without showing that the partition fence between himself and such third party was of lawful height, or that, if it had been apportioned, he kept up his part.—Aylesworth v. Herrington, 17 Mich. 417.

§ 7. Statutory proceedings by fence viewers.

Relief in equity by setting aside awards, see post § 8.

Police power to make award of fence viewers a lien on the land, see Constitutional Law § 100, ¶ 482.

Under general fence law, see Comp. L. 1915, § 2210 et seq.

Statutory provisions, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 2224-2226, 4599, 4600, 4664.

Appointment in fourth class cities and villages, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 2682, 3028.

¶ 24. Comp. Laws 1897, § 2419, providing for the settlement of controversies regarding partition fences by the determination of a board of fence viewers, is constitutional.—Vincent v. Ackerman, 155 Mich. 614.

¶ 25. A determination by fence viewers, under Comp. Laws, 1897, § 2419, of the rights of the respective parties in a partition fence, is valid although it specifies no time within which the parties shall erect or repair their respective shares, as provided in the statute, as, in such case, it becomes the duty of the parties to comply with the determination within a reasonable time.—Vincent v. Ackerman, 155 Mich. 614.

¶ 26. Comp. L. 1871, §§ 778, 779, How. St., § 807 provides that an adjoining owner who will not build his share of a line fence may be made to pay double the cost of it. But one who seeks to enforce this liability must show the existence of all statutory conditions precedent, such as that the fence viewer, in writing, had assigned defendant a reasonable time for building the fence. And if judgment goes against him on special findings the findings must also show the existence of the requisite conditions.—Carpenter v. Vail, 36 Mich. 226.

¶ 27. How. St., § 799, providing for an adjudication by fence viewers of the sum due one proprietor from another for constructing or repairing a line fence is not invalid for failing to make express provision for notice of the meeting of the viewers; that such notice must be given is necessarily implied.—Gilson v. Munson, 114 Mich. 671.

¶ 28. Proceedings by fence viewers under which the viewers lawfully acted and gave notice of their first meeting was not vacated because one of the parties had no notice of a subsequent meeting at which the apportionment was made; but the viewers were permitted to notify such party and set another day for the hearing.—Scofield v. Haire, 122 Mich. 265.

¶ 29. How. St., § 799, providing for an adjudication by fence viewers of the amount to be contributed to line fences is not invalid for making the award of the viewers a lien upon the land to be collected as a tax.—Gilson v. Munson, 114 Mich. 671.

¶ 30. The jurisdiction of equity to entertain a bill to set aside and cancel a decision and proceedings of fence viewers for want of jurisdiction was passed without question in Scofield v. Haire, 122 Mich. 265.

¶ 31. In a bill to set aside proceedings as fence viewers, on the ground that at the time of the making of the application neither of the farms in question was inclosed with exterior fences and that therefore the proceedings did not come within Comp. L. 1897, chap. 83; evidence that the lands were used as farms, that fences had been maintained between parts of the lands; that the road fences around complainant's land had been taken down some 8 years prior to the application, and that the other farm was mostly inclosed with line and road fences, was sufficient to show an inclosure within the act.—Scofield v. Haire, 122 Mich. 265.

People, 11 Mich. 43.

¶ 3. The authority to establish and regulate ferries is not included in the federal power to regulate commerce; a license under the Act of Congress of a vessel for the coasting and foreign trade does not confer upon it the franchise of a ferry; and the Detroit ordinance prohibiting, under a penalty, the keeping of an unlicensed ferry between the city and the Canadian shore, and charging a license fee, is valid.—Chilvers v. FIRES.

TREATS of the civil duties and liabilities of persons setting fires or suffering them to exist or having or dealing with things or substances conducive to the spread of fire, also of public regulations for fire prevention. It excludes the crime of arson or burning (see Crimes, II; Indictment), the law relating to dangerous combustibles (see Explosives and Combustibles), liabilities of railroads and carriers for fires (see Railroads, VIII, G; Carriers), and insurance against loss by fire (see Insurance). Duties and liabilities of masters towards servants injured by fire are treated in Master and Servant, III.

¶ 1. The setting of fires in this state in the process of fitting lands for cultivation is a lawful and proper act.—Rogers v. Parker, 159 Mich. 278.

¶ 2. Comp. L. 1897, § 11653, which provides for the punishment in a criminal action, and the assessment of penal damages in a civil action against one who negligently or wilfully permits a fire to escape from his premises to those of another to his injury, is not repealed by Pub. Acts 1903, No. 249, providing for the prevention and suppression of forest and prairie fires, and which contains a provision repealing all acts and parts of acts inconsistent therewith; since this act also provides that its enactment shall not affect any right of action for damages.—Allen v. Bainbridge, 145 Mich. 366.

¶ 3. In making use of fire a degree of care corresponding to the danger is required.—Needham v. King, 95 Mich. 303.

¶ 4. The basis of substantially all legal liability for damages caused by fire is negligence.—Alberts v. City of Muskegon, 146 Mich. 210.

¶ 5. One whose building takes fire from another which is negligently set on fire by defendant has an action for the injury.—Lillibridge v. McCann, 117 Mich. 84.

¶ 6. Under Comp. Laws 1897, c. 320, §§ 11653-11658, the owner of lands setting fires thereon to clear them is liable for injuries due to their escape upon adjoining lands only when the facts and circumstances are such as to warn him as a reasonable man of such danger.—Rogers v. Parker, 159 Mich. 278.

¶ 7. Liability for neglect to have fire prevention appliances and watchmen to control fires in any event would not be governed by the practice in other mills at other places, necessarily under different conditions and surroundings.—McNally v. Colwell, 91 Mich. 527.

¶ 8. Where a steam sawmill is run in proximity to inflammable material and buildings, and the chimney is found to emit sparks so as to endanger the surrounding property, the operator must avail himself of such apparatus to arrest their escape as experience has shown to be reasonably adequate for that purpose.—Webster v. Symes, 109 Mich. 1.

¶ 9. The fact that it is not customary to employ spark arresters where there are no artificial drafts will not excuse the owner of a steam sawmill, operated with a natural draft, for his failure to provide them, if common prudence requires their use in the particular case.—Webster v. Symes, 109 Mich. 1.

¶ 10. If fire is liable to originate in a boiler and engine-room and the construction of the mill is such that the surroundings are inflammable, so that the fire is liable to spread rapidly when once ignited, it is incumbent upon the person operating the mill to take care that the fire does not consume the mill and spread to other property. He should keep on hand not only persons to watch the fire and keep it within the furnace, but such appliances for extinguishing it, in case of its accidental escape and communication to the building, as an ordinarily prudent man would provide under like circumstances.—McNally v. Colwell, 91 Mich. 527.

¶ 11. Where a mill is surrounded by numerous wooden buildings which are endangered by the frequent escape of sparks, etc., from its chimney, the owner is bound to use the best well-known device for checking escape of sparks, whether it is expressly adapted to a mill chimney or not, if it can be used upon it; in erecting and operating the mill, he must use such precautions for lessening danger and preventing injury as a prudent man, conversant with the business, the danger, and all the surroundings, would have used, or he will be liable for loss arising from it. The fact that the mill had been used for a long time without doing injury is not of weight.—Hoyt v. Jeffers, 30 Mich. 181.

¶ 12. The owner of a steam tug cannot be held liable for fire set by sparks from the tug, unless the want of the care ordinarily used by careful men in the conduct of such a vessel is shown.—Montgomery v. Muskegon Booming Co., 88 Mich. 633.

¶ 13. Plaintiff sued defendant for negligently permitting sparks to escape from his engine on the highway and thereby destroying complainant's buildings. Plaintiff alleged that defendant failed to use an efficient spark arrester. The defendant denied this. Held, the jury having found this issue for the plaintiff, the failure to use the fire arrester was negligence making defendant liable.—McFarland v. Sayen, 156 Mich. 426.

¶ 14. A trespasser is liable whether negligent or not for damages sustained through the burning of a blacksmith shop and adjoining buildings by a fire started by him in the forge.—Wyant v. Crouse, 127 Mich. 158.

§ 4. Proximate cause.

Pleading the cause, see post § 6.
Inferences as to cause, see post ¶ 34.
Court and jury questions and instructions, see post §§ 8, 9.
General law of proximate cause, see Negligence, III.

¶ 15. Where a fire, caused by the defendant's negligence, actually passes from one to another of the plaintiff's buildings without any contributory negligence on the plaintiff's part, or any fault of a third party, which could be regarded as a proximate cause, and for which the third party could be held liable, it is not error to hold defendant liable for the burning of the second as well as of the first building. If such a rule of damages is ruinous to him by whose negligence fires occur, it is better that he should suffer than that he should be allowed to ruin others who are innocent of neglect or wrong.—Hoyt v. Jeffers, 30 Mich. 181.

¶ 16. If the spreading of fire from a defendant's fire-pit where he consumed mill refuse was caused by the sudden shifting of the wind and its increased violence, he is not liable for the consequences, unless it appears that he did not take the proper precautions to watch and guard the fire to prevent its escape, or that such a wind was blowing as rendered it imprudent to start the fire when started.—Polzen v. Morse, 91 Mich. 208.

¶ 17. The fact that the consequences of one's negligent act (allowing a barn to take fire) were more serious than would have followed under more favorable conditions of the atmosphere, does not relieve him.—Lillibridge v. McCann, 117 Mich. 84.

§ 5. Contributory negligence.

In general, see Negligence, IV.

¶ 18. In an action for injury caused by sparks from a burner contributory negligence cannot be predicated of the erection, in a customary, lawful and proper manner, of buildings constructed of the usual material upon the owner's premises, in the neighborhood of such burner from which there is risk of fire or damage. And the owner of such buildings is not bound to incur the expense of providing his buildings with extra safeguards.—Alpern v. Churchill, 53 Mich. 607.

¶ 19. In an action for the loss of a storehouse and contents destroyed by fire as a result of the negligent operation of a traction engine while being removed from plaintiff's premises, where the negligence relied upon was the propelling of the engine past plaintiff's building without the bonnet on the smokestack and with the damper open, the mere presence of the plaintiff, and his knowledge that the bonnet was off and the damper open, when the engine was first moved, did not amount to contributory negligence unless he was in some way responsible for the absence of the bonnet, or had the danger in mind.—Underwood v. A. W. Stevens Co., 149 Mich. 39.

§ 6. Actions for injuries, pleading.

Actions against railroads for fires, see Railroads, VIII, G.
Subrogation of insurer to cause of action of insured, see Insurance, XIX.

¶ 20. The improper use of proper appliances to prevent the escape of sparks from the smokestack of a steamboat must be distinctly averred in order to be available as a ground of recovery in a suit for the loss of property set on fire, as claimed, by sparks thus emitted.—Cheboygan Lumber Co. v. Delta Transp. Co., 100 Mich. 16.

¶ 21. In an action to recover for damages caused by fire escaping from a smokestack on defendant's saw mill, the declaration which alleged the duty to have used upon the smokestack a spark arrester which would have prevented escape of sparks, and charging a breach of such duty in that the top of the chimney was permitted to remain open without a suitable spark catcher thereon, did not confine defendant's alleged negligence to a failure to equip his mill with a proper arrester.—Wager v. Lamont, 135 Mich. 521.

¶ 22. In an action for the negligent destruction of plaintiff's buildings by fires lighted by defendant or not properly cared for by him, the plaintiff can give evidence of the presence of combustible material upon defendant's premises even though the fact is not counted on in the declaration.—Lucas v. Wattles, 49 Mich. 380.

§ 7. ——Evidence and presumptions.

Evidence of other distinct fires to show want of spark arrester, see Evidence § 95.

Evidence of comparative efficiency of devices on other engines, see also Evidence § 96.

Opinions as to causes of fires, matter for lay or expert witnesses, see Evidence § 242.

Weight and sufficiency of expert testimony as to throwing of sparks, see also Evidence ¶ 2940.

¶ 23. In a landowner's action for damages for loss resulting from a fire set by the defendant on contiguous land, testimony as to the state of the weather during the time the fire existed prior to the injury was competent to enable the jury to determine the degree of care that defendant should have exercised.—Needham v. King, 95 Mich. 303.

¶ 24. Where, in an action for injury caused by sparks from a burner, there was evidence that warranted the inference that the burner was in a defective condition, it was proper to show that when a change had been made after the damage was done the dangerous emission of sparks ceased.—Alpern v. Churchill, 53 Mich. 607.

¶ 25. In an action to recover damages for the spreading of fire by negligence to other property from a burning saw-mill, it is error to admit testimony that a hanger in the boiler-room of the mill was charred by fire some years before.—McNally v. Colwell, 91 Mich. 527.

¶ 26. In an action for damages for the burning of the plaintiff's house because of the defendant's negligence in not having a proper fence around his fire-pit, evidence that after the fire the defendant erected a fence, and that no fire has since spread therefrom, is incompetent to show previous negligence.—Polzen v. Morse, 91 Mich. 208.

¶ 27. In a suit to recover for the loss of property by fire alleged to be due to the negligent driving of defendant's engine near plaintiff's barn, evidence that the same engine, immediately following the first fire, on the same trip and under the same weather conditions, set another fire, is admissible to show the lack of a suitable spark arrester.—Ainsworth v. Hover, 162 Mich. 135.

¶ 28. In a suit to recover for the loss of property by fire alleged to be due to the negligent driving of defendant's engine near plaintiff's barn, testimony that on the following day the defendant put on the stack a screen offered by a witness instead of the spark arrester lying on the water tank, is admissible to show the lack of a suitable arrester at the time of the accident in question.—Ainsworth v. Hover, 162 Mich. 135.

¶ 29. Plaintiff sued defendant for negligently setting a fire to débris in a slashing which spread and consumed plaintiff's pile of wood. Held, that evidence of the defendant's conversation with a third person, in which he stated it would be a good time to burn the débris in said slashing, and that he had been walking around looking at the same, was admissible, with other circumstances, to prove that defendant set the fire.—Howe v. Bregenzer, 161 Mich. 684.

¶ 30. Negligence may be inferred from the fact that defendant went into a barn smoking and laid down and went to sleep without other evidence of how the barn came to burn.—Lillibridge v. McCann, 117 Mich. 84.

¶ 31. The question of diligence or negligence always depends upon the circumstances peculiar to each particular case; the general neglect of mill-owners to use spark-catchers on their chimneys will not excuse such neglect in a particular instance, nor be pertinent evidence in an action for damages caused by sparks from the chimney of one mill, at least without some showing that the other mills were similarly situated.—Hoyt v. Jeffers, 30 Mich. 181.

¶ 32. Evidence of what is done in other mills in the way of providing appliances for extinguishing fire and for preventing the spread of fire is inadmissible in an action to recover damages for the negligent spreading of fire by a burning mill to other property. —McNally v. Colwell, 91 Mich. 527.

¶ 33. In an action to recover damages sustained by reason of fire which spread from defendant's burning mill, evidence that the engineer and fireman of the mill were in the habit of using intoxicating liquor, and were sometimes seen under its influence, is inadmissible, in the absence of proof that such liquor habit, or occasional intoxication, had any bearing whatever upon the origin of the fire or in any way prevented controlling it. —McNally v. Colwell, 91 Mich. 527; Cowley v. Colwell, 91 Mich. 537.

¶ 34. While negligence in providing proper means for the prevention of fires and in the management of the apparatus and fires may be inferred from the size and quantity of sparks or cinders emitted when those things are shown, it will not in any case be presumed from the mere fact of a fire, where the testimony as to its cause is purely circumstantial.—Montgomery v. Muskegon Booming Co., 88 Mich. 633.

Application of doctrine of res ipsa loquitur in action for injuries caused by fire getting beyond control, see note, 5 N. C. C. A. 54.

§ 8. ——Questions for jury or court.

Instructions to the jury, see post § 9.

¶ 35. Defendant's negligence in setting fire to his fallow land, and in maintaining it during a drought and up to the border of plaintiff's land which is covered with combustible matter, so that fire is communicated during a high wind to plaintiff's land, is for the jury.—Needham v. King, 95 Mich. 303.

¶ 36. Putting ashes in a wooden barrel in violation of a municipal ordinance is not negligence per se; it is a question of fact whether it is negligent in a particular case. —Cook v. Johnston, 58 Mich. 437.

¶ 37. It is a question for the jury whether one is negligent who enters a barn while smoking and lies down upon straw or other combustible material; and it is also a question for the jury whether a fire thereafter occurring originated from the lighted pipe. —Lillibridge v. McCann, 117 Mich. 84.

¶ 38. In an action to recover damages for fire alleged to have been communicated, during a violent wind, by sparks from defendant's steam sawmill, the question of whether the drafts in the furnace were open is properly left to the jury, where defendant has testified that sparks could not escape if the drafts were closed, and there is evidence that sparks did escape, and defendant's witness testified that certain drafts were partly open.—Webster v. Symes, 109 Mich. 1.

¶ 39. Where, on a calm morning, when there was a heavy dew on the ground, defendant's servant set fire to some grass, weeds, and brush, cut by him the day before and piled in a depression in defendant's land, which depression, although dry on its surface, was very wet just beneath, and where, three hours after the fire was set, and while the servant was on the ground with a bucket of water watching the fire, the wind began to blow violently, and took up some of the fire, and, carrying it over a furrow which the servant had plowed around the depression, set the stubble on fire, which, despite his efforts and those of others, ran to plaintiff's land and damaged his timber, the question of defendant's negligence in setting the fire was for the jury.—Bolton v. Calkins, 102 Mich. 69.

¶ 40. Where, in an action for damages for fire alleged to have been communicated by a traction engine, the allegations of negligence were that the engine was out of order, and that the spark arrester was not in use, evidence that fire was emitted, that the engine was run with an open damper to a point not far from a straw stack from whence the fire was communicated, and that one of the safety appliances designed to prevent the emission of sparks had been omitted, is sufficient to take the case to the jury.—Rogers v. Fowler, 151 Mich. 485.

¶ 41. In an action on the case brought to recover damages for the loss of a storehouse and contents destroyed by fire as a result of the negligent operation of a traction engine while being removed from plaintiff's premises by defendant who claimed the right of possession thereto by force of a chattel mortgage, held from the evidence that it was open to the jury to find that the plaintiff, on being told that all that was wanted was a chance to take the engine, had a right to go about his other business in the expectation that defendant's agents would use such precautions to prevent damage as were necessary, and that plaintiff was not negligent in failing to instruct them as to necessary precautions.—Underwood v. A. W. Stevens Co., 149 Mich. 39.

¶ 42. In an action to recover for damages caused by fire escaping from a smokestack on defendant's saw mill, testimony from which the escape of sparks in the morning in question might be inferred, presented a question for the jury.—Wager v. Lamont, 135 Mich. 521.

§ 9. ——Instructions and direction of verdict.

General law of instructions, see Instructions; and see also Negligence, V.

¶ 43. It is error to charge that the subsequent making of changes in a spark arrester on defendant's saw mill afforded evidence of its unsafe character in an action for allowing fire to escape.—Wager v. Lamont, 135 Mich. 52.

¶ 44. In an action for the loss of a storehouse and contents destroyed by fire as a result of the negligent operation of a traction engine while being removed from plaintiff's premises, there was no error in stating to the jury that plaintiff's claim was that he supposed that defendant's agents would put on the spark arrester and have the protection afforded by its use, although there was no direct evidence to that effect, where it is manifest from the evidence that he relied upon them to take the usual precautions which would according to the testimony include that.—Underwood v. A. W. Stevens Co., 149 Mich. 39.

¶ 45. An instruction that, if the violence of the wind and the dryness of the surrounding property endangered property by fire from a steam sawmill to the extent that a "prudent" man would have shut down the mill, the failure to do so was negligence, is not erroneous as requiring too high a degree of care,—especially where the jury is subsequently instructed that the operators of steam sawmills are only required to "use ordinary care to protect" surrounding property.—Webster v. Symes, 109 Mich. 1.

¶ 46. In a suit to recover for the loss of property alleged to be due to the negligent driving of defendant's engine near plaintiff's barn, the plaintiff introduced evidence to prove that sparks from the engine caused the fire. The defendant introduced evidence to show that plaintiff was accustomed to smoke in the barn. The court instructed the jury that plaintiff could not recover if the smoking was the cause of the fire, but to reach such result they must find as a matter of fact that the fire originated in that way. Held, the instruction was not erroneous as putting the burden of proof on defendant.—Ainsworth v. Hover, 162 Mich. 135.

¶ 47. In an action for negligently setting fire to plaintiff's property, where the fire was communicated from another fire first set by a spark from defendant's mill, an instruction that defendant is liable if plaintiff's property was burned without her fault, by the negligent operation of the mill, and "the injury was the result of a continuous succession of events, so linked together as to make a natural whole, and flowed naturally from such negligence," even though defendant could not have anticipated such injury, is not misleading as permitting a verdict for plaintiff although defendant could not have anticipated that any injury would result; but means under the circumstances that, even though the defendant's negligence did not, in the first instance, cause plaintiff's property to take fire, yet, if it ultimately did take fire as a result of defendant's negligence, she was entitled to recover. —Webster v. Symes, 109 Mich. 1.

¶ 48. Sparks from a steam-thresher set fire to some hay stored on the premises. The owner of the hay was plowing in the same field, but had made no protest against the use of the thresher. In an action by him for the negligent destruction of the hay, it was held that in the absence of proof that he had any special knowledge of the risk of using such machinery, or of the skill and competency of those who had charge of it, he was entitled to an instruction that if he did not consent to, or participate in, what was done, he was not guilty of contributive negligence.—Moomey v. Peak, 57 Mich. 259.

¶ 49. In an action for damages from the burning of the plaintiff's store and goods resulting from a fire negligently set by defendants upon their premises, on evidence that two of plaintiff's employees on the morning of the injury saw the fire spreading, but no notice was given to the defendants. The jury should not have been instructed that there was no question of contributory negligence in the case.—Richter v. Harper, 95 Mich. 221.

¶ 50. The question of negligence was properly presented to the jury in an action for damages done by fire, where the judge charged the jury that negligence is a "failure on the part of a person to observe, for the protection of another's interest, such care and precaution and vigilance as the circumstances justly demand, and the want of which causes the injury": and that it is a question of fact to be determined by the jury whether the defendant, "while setting fire and burning rubbish on his own premises, did exercise the usual precaution which a prudent man, under like circumstances, having a knowledge of the facts as they existed, and knowing the danger, would and should exercise and use"; and whether or not, under all the circumstances, the preponderance of evidence shows that defendant was careless in setting the fire and allowing it to escape from his premises to those of his neighbor.—Allen v. Bainbridge, 145 Mich. 366.

¶ 51. Plaintiff sued defendant for negligently permitting sparks to escape from his engine on the highway, thereby destroying complainant's buildings. A boy seven years old at the time of the fire testified that the spark arrester or hood was not on the smokestack, and other evidence was submitted to support him. Defendant produced evidence to the contrary. Held, the court properly refused to direct a verdict, as the question whether there was a suitable spark arrester on the engine was for the jury.—McFarland v. Sayen, 156 Mich. 426.

¶ 52. In a suit against an unincorporated driving association for negligently permitting the spread of fire upon the plaintiff's premises, the evidence indicated that defendants took control and possession of the lands where the fires were built, and caused them to be cleared; that the season was the dryest ever known, and great care and caution were necessary to protect and guard against fires; that many of the individual defendants composing the association were personally notified of this danger and requested by plaintiff to exercise care; and that no attention was paid to the warnings given, but the brush and trees were cut, piled and fired when a strong wind was blowing towards plaintiff's property. Held, the court was in error in directing a verdict for defendant on the ground that the plaintiff presented no evidence of defendant's liability.—Inglis v. Millersburg Driving Ass'n, 169 Mich. 311.

FISH AND GAME.

TREATS of the right to fish and hunt, of fish and game regulations, and of the rights of the state and the citizens in wild animals and fish.

Analysis.

§ 1. Right to fish and hunt.
§ 2. ——Rights of landowners.
§ 3. Property in fish and game.
§ 4. Licenses and public regulation.
§ 5. ——As to nets and seines.
§ 6. ——As to size or kind of fish or game.
§ 7. ——Private ponds and preserves.
§ 8. ——As to sale, shipment or transportation.
§ 9. Prosecutions, seizure and confiscation.

Right to fish in navigable waters as justification for trespass, see Trespass, I.

¶ 1. To fish is a privilege accorded by the State, and the question of individual enjoyment is one of public privilege and not a private right.—People v. Collison, 85 Mich. 105.

¶ 2. The right to fish is a public right, like the right to navigate, and extends to all portions of the lakes.—Stuart v. Greanyea, 154 Mich. 132.

¶ 3. Every person has a right of capturing and shooting wild fowl in any place where he has a right to be, if it does not infringe on another's superior rights.—Sterling v. Jackson, 69 Mich. 488.

Trespasses in entering to fish or hunt, see Trespass.

¶ 4. Fish, like other animals feræ naturæ, are open to capture by those who have a right to be where they are captured. Fishing with lines from boats, even in narrow streams, cannot be complained of by riparian owners.—Lincoln v. Davis, 53 Mich. 375.

¶ 5. Prior to the enactment of Laws of 1869, Act No. 94, the riparian rights of abutting proprietors did not include an exclusive right to set nets in the waters included in what are ordinarily denominated riparian waters.—Stuart v. Greanyea, 154 Mich. 132.

¶ 6. The owner of the fee has the exclusive right of fowling in navigable waters overlying his land.—Sterling v. Jackson, 69 Mich. 488.

¶ 7. How. St., § 2172, in protecting the rights of riparian owners along the great lakes and in the adjacent bays and inlets to exclusive fishing with stationary nets for one mile from low-water mark, establishes a valid rule. But beyond that limit one has no right, as riparian owner merely, to interfere with stake-fishing by others.—Lincoln v. Davis, 53 Mich. 375.

¶ 8. Comp. L. 1897, § 5857, making it unlawful to put in waters fronting land where fish are taken by the owner or occupant of the land any seines or trap nets was no doubt designed to protect littoral landowners against the use of nets by other fishermen, and such landowners are plainly entitled to the benefits of the statute.—Hilborn v. Smith, 148 Mich. 474.

¶ 9. Under Pub. Acts 1905, Act No. 122, prohibiting any person, for the purpose of fishing, from driving any stakes or setting or placing any nets in the waters of Saginaw Bay contiguous or adjacent to the shores of Arenac and Iosco Counties, for a distance of two miles from said shores, unless such person is the lawful owner or occupant of the shore frontage opposite to which said stakes are driven or nets set or placed, the rule to be adopted for the purpose of division of rights between shore owners should be the general rule for the ascertainment of access to navigable water, and where shore lands abut upon a bay the shore of which is longer than the distance between the headlands at the entrance thereof, a base line for the purpose of division, and from which the lines shall converge, is to be established by running a line between the headlands; and where there are shore lands from the termini of the boundaries of which lines could not intersect the base line, other base lines should be established by running lines from the termini of the first base line to the center of the shore line of the bay; and in determining the fishing rights, lines from the shore should be run to these inner base lines, striking them at points proportionately the same distance apart as on the shore lines, and the same process repeated in running the lines between the base lines.—Stuart v. Greanyea, 154 Mich. 132.

Police power over, see Constitutional Law § 100.

¶ 10. The ownership of fish in a lake connected with other waters is, by reason of their migratory habits, in the people of the state, and the riparian owner has no property right in them until they have been subjected to his control.—People v. Collison, 85 Mich. 105.

Owing to the multiplicity of statutes on this subject, any attempt to make detailed references would be confusing and unserviceable.]

¶ 11. The right of the state to exclude nonresidents altogether from fishing privileges in its waters is established.—People v. Setunsky, 161 Mich. 624.

¶ 12. If Laws 1855, Act No. 10, to protect fish and preserve fisheries was repealed by Act 61 of 1885, or if it were invalid, Laws 1879, Act No. 208, would be still in force and substantially corresponds with its provisions.—People v. Kirsch, 67 Mich. 539.

¶ 13. Pub. Acts 1897, No. 159, revised and amended the game laws and repealed inconsistent acts, but expressly excepted from the repeal Pub. Acts 1893, No. 196. Pub. Acts 1901, No. 217, again revised and amended the game laws and expressly repealed the Act of 1897. Held that the repeal of the latter act did not repeal the Act of 1893.—People v. Van Pelt, 130 Mich. 621.

¶ 14. The Grand river, three miles up from its mouth and beyond where vessels navigate is not a "harbor" within the meaning of Laws 1885, Act No. 10, and fishing there is within the prohibition of the statute. —People v. Kirsch, 67 Mich. 539.

¶ 15. The Quanicassee river does not come within the enumeration of the waters excepted by Comp. L. 1897, § 5865, prohibiting the taking of fish by nets within certain waters.—People v. Neal, 143 Mich. 271.

¶ 16. Comp. L. 1897, § 5865, prohibiting the fishing with nets "in any of the waters of this state except lakes Michigan, Superior, Huron and Erie, and the bays and harbors connected with said lakes, Saginaw Bay and the Sault Ste. Marie, St. Clair, Saginaw, and Detroit Rivers" permits fishing in the bays and harbors of the Great Lakes mentioned but not in those connected with Saginaw Bay and the rivers mentioned.—People v. Neal, 143 Mich. 271.

§ 5. ——As to nets and seines.

Rights of riparian or littoral owners and others, see ante ¶¶ 5, 7-9.
Use of spears, see post ¶ 28.
Prohibition of use of nets or implements as denial of due process, see Constitutional Law § 167.

¶ 17. Under How. St., § 2197f, declaring that it shall be unlawful for any person to take or catch, or attempt to take or catch, any fish in certain waters by means of nets, "provided that the use of dip nets in catching mullet, redsides, and suckers shall not be unlawful," one who sets a net for the purpose of catching turtles without intent to catch fish is not guilty of a violation of the statute, although fish are accidentally imprisoned therein, they being returned alive to the water so far as possible.—People v. Deremo, 106 Mich. 621.

¶ 18. Pub. Acts 1895, No. 200, § 2, prohibiting the use of "any pound, trap, stake, gill, or set nets or seines, or any device of any kind, for taking fish," etc., uses the words "or any device of any kind" in the sense of any like kind; and does not prohibit fishing entirely, especially in view of other sections of the act which contain special prohibitions rebutting any such general prohibition.—In re Yell, 107 Mich. 228.

¶ 19. The provisions of Pub. Acts 1897, No. 151, prescribing the minimum extension measure of the meshes of nets, and forbidding the use after April 1, 1900, of any but those prescribed, construed as allowing use until 1900 of any net previously lawful, as requiring newly acquired nets to be of prescribed size, and as requiring return to the water of all fish below size in whatever net taken except nets of lawful mesh.—Osborn v. Charlevoix Circuit Judge, 114 Mich. 655.

¶ 20. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 5844, prohibiting the use of nets with mesh less than four inches extension measure "as manufactured," and section 5846 prohibiting the use of nets during certain seasons "provided however, two and one-fourth inch mesh in pots" may be used in certain places, the two and one-fourth inches relates to the net as manufactured and it is not a violation to use such nets though the mesh may be less than two and one-fourth inches due to shrinkage. —People v. Gillingham, 131 Mich. 105.

¶ 21. Under the title "an act to regulate catching of fish in the waters of this state by the use of pound or trap nets, gill nets, seines or other apparatus" Pub. Acts 1899, § 2, declaring it unlawful to market or have in possession fish of various species less than the weights there enumerated, applies also to persons other than fishermen having such fish in possession.—People v. Dornbos, 127 Mich. 136.

¶ 22. Plaintiff, being the owner of fishing nets set in the St. Mary's river, sued the owners of a tug for injuries caused his nets by the tug carelessly running into them. Held, the contention that the plaintiff had no right to fish with these nets in the waters of St. Mary's river, because Comp. L. 1897, § 5865, makes it unlawful to catch fish with pound nets in any waters of the state except those specified in the statute, and the statute names the "Sault Ste. Marie," St. Clair, Saginaw and Detroit rivers, cannot be sustained, the "Sault Ste. Marie" being the St. Mary's river; and it is not to be supposed that the defendants knew of the misnomer, or supposed it to be unlawful to use such nets in those waters.—Bishop v. Baldwin, 147 Mich. 22.

¶ 23. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 5857, making it unlawful for any person to put in any of the waters fronting on land where fish are taken by the owner or occupant of the lands "any species of seines or continuous trap nets" gill nets are held to be within the prohibition of the statute.—Hilborn v. Smith, 148 Mich. 474.

§ 6. ——As to size or kind of fish or game.

See also ante ¶ 21.

¶ 24. Pub. Acts 1899, No. 88, § 2, making it unlawful to have in possession fish under prohibited weights, applies to fish imported from another state.—People v. Dornbos, 127 Mich. 136.

¶ 25. Pub. Acts 1899, No. 88, providing that it shall be unlawful to market or have in one's possession certain kinds of fish weighing less than one pound, is not limited to fish caught in the waters of this state, even though the title of the act is "An act to regulate the catching of fish in the waters of this state."—People v. Lassen, 142 Mich. 597.

¶ 26. Under Pub. Acts 1899, No. 88, § 2, making it unlawful to have in possession fish of prohibited weight "in the round," the weight of the fish at the time they were taken governs and it is unnecessary that they remain "in the round" or uncleaned in the possession of the party charged.—People v. Dornbos, 127 Mich. 136.

¶ 27. Under Pub. Acts 1899, No. 88, § 2, making it unlawful to market or have in possession certain fish of less than a prescribed weight "provided that it shall be lawful to transport or sell any of said described kinds of fish legally caught during any season of the year," fish under the prescribed weight cannot be retained in possession or marketed although they are caught in a net of legal mesh; the proviso refers only to fish above the prescribed weight.—People v. Coffey, 155 Mich. 103.

¶ 28. Spearing fish, with the owner's consent, in a private pond isolated from public waters is not a violation of Comp. L. 1897, §§ 5849-5851 (Pub. Acts 1891, No. 159), making it unlawful to take fish in inland lakes by spear or device other than hook and line.—People v. Conrad, 125 Mich. 1.

¶ 29. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 5849, which prohibits the taking of fish in inland lakes by any other means than hook and line, a person may be punished for taking fish in violation of its provisions from a lake connected with the river at certain seasons of the year so that fish may enter therefrom and return, though the lake is located wholly on defendant's land and he has stocked it with fish from private sources and has posted notices to the public that it was private property, and that no fishing was allowed therein.—People v. Horling, 137 Mich. 406.

§ 8. ——As to sale, shipment or transportation.

Permissible sizes and kinds possessed or offered, see ante § 6.
Possession of fish caught beyond state, see ante ¶ 25.
Privileges and immunities of citizens as to transportation of game, see Constitutional Law § 228, ¶ 983.

¶ 30. Laws 1881, Act No. 251, § 2, prohibits the killing of colin or quail except in November and December, and section 5 prohibits the selling or exposing for sale any of the kinds or species of birds protected by the statute after the expiration of eight days next succeeding the times limited for the killing thereof. Laws 1887, Act No. 68, enacts that in all prosecutions for violations of laws for the protection of game, proof of its possession at any time when the killing, taking or having in possession any such game is by law prohibited, shall be prima facie evidence of a violation of the law. Held, that quail or other wild fowl or birds come within the meaning of the word "game" in the latter statute, and that the former one when construed with it does not prohibit the possessing and exposing for sale at any time quail killed in another state and afterwards brought into this state.—People v. O'Neil, 71 Mich. 325.

¶ 31. A provision in a subsequently enacted statute that packages in which game or game birds are shipped must be marked in a specified way is not inconsistent with an earlier statute prohibiting the shipment of game or game birds out of the state, and the latter is not repealed by a clause in the former repealing all inconsistent acts.—People v. Van Pelt, 130 Mich. 621.

¶ 32. Under Comp. L. 1897, §§ 5754 and 5755, a docket entry reciting that the defendant was arraigned in open court and pleaded guilty to the charge of illegal fishing set forth in the complaint and warrant of arrest, that after hearing the evidence the court finds him guilty as charged and fined him and adjudged that the nets seized from defendant be condemned and confiscated, etc., does not justify the seizure and sale of the nets in the absence of anything to indicate that the defendant had a day in court on the question of unlawful use of the nets, there being no pleading or evidence shown on that matter.—Neal v. Morse, 134 Mich. 186.

[Note. The word "fixtures" is used in the books as having different meanings, to wit, (a) chattels become part of the land by affixation thereto, (b) chattels physically fixed but legally remaining movable, (c) chattels used by merchants in trade usually annexed to the premises for handling and displaying merchandise. In reading the cases these different meanings must be kept in mind.]

¶ 1. To constitute any chattel that has been attached to the freehold a trade fixture, it is only necessary that it be devoted to what is known in the law of fixtures as a trade purpose.—Waverly Park Amusement Co. v. Michigan United Traction Co., 197 Mich. 92.

§ 2. Fixtures as accessions to the property.

Improvements on another's land as accession thereto, see also Accession § 5.

¶ 2. One who makes improvements on the land of a person who has not been in fault about it does it at the risk of losing both his property and his labor; so held where a dealer in gas machines placed one in a house which he afterwards found belonged to the wife of the man who contracted that the machine should be placed there.—Morrison v. Berry, 42 Mich. 389.

¶ 3. Where a person without permission from the owner knowingly enters upon his lands and annexes permanent structures to the freehold, such structures belong to the owner of the soil of which they are annexed or upon which they are erected.—Harrington v. City of Port Huron, 86 Mich. 46.

II. ANNEXATION AND OTHER INDICIA OF CHARACTER AND INTENT.

¶ 4. The controlling principle in determining whether chattels annexed to real estate have become fixtures is the intention of the parties between whom the question arises; and the mode of annexation and manner of use are not necessarily conclusive, but yield to such intent.—Lansing Iron & Engine Works v. Wilbur, 111 Mich. 413.

¶ 5. Whether personal property in use about a mine is a fixture is a question of the intent with which it was annexed to the freehold.—Scudder v. Anderson, 54 Mich. 122.

¶ 6. There is no universal abstract test to determine whether an article is a fixture; it must usually depend on the express or implied understanding of the parties concerned. —Manwaring v. Jenison, 61 Mich. 117; Stevens v. Rose, 69 Mich. 259.

¶ 7. Whether an article attached to a freehold becomes a fixture depends largely upon the intention of the parties.—Aldine Mfg. Co. v. Barnard, 84 Mich. 632.

¶ 8. The intentions of the parties must control in determining the character of the property which is claimed to be a fixture.—First Commercial & Sav. Bank v. Trenton Milling Co., 144 Mich. 188.

¶ 9. Whether or not certain articles used in operating a brewery were covered by a mortgage is to be determined not by the manner in which they were attached to the realty but to the intent of the parties.—Dehring v. Beck, 146 Mich. 706.

¶ 10. Intent, under the law governing fixtures, chiefly determines whether a chattel annexed to the realty for use becomes part of it where it is not shown that it was specially adapted for use there, or that the freehold is injured by its annexation and removal.—Ferris v. Quimby, 41 Mich. 202.

¶ 11. While the intent of the owner is important in determining whether or not a fixture is part of the realty, such intent must relate either to the time of annexation or to some actual or constructive severance, and evidence that the owner had in mind the removal of the fixture at some indefinite time does not affect its character as real property.—People v. Jones, 120 Mich. 283.

¶ 12. B., a purchaser of land under a partly performed parol contract, built a house thereon which he occupied for some years and then rented to a tenant, who was ousted by M. under claim of title. Held, that B. could not at the same time treat the building as realty and personalty; that when he rented it he necessarily rented it as a tenement; and that he could not recover against M. in trover as for a conversion.—Bracelin v. McLaren, 59 Mich. 327.

¶ 13. An intention on the part of a claimant of land, in constructing a building thereon, so to construct it as to permit of its removal as personalty in case his title to the land should be defeated, is immaterial in determining the character of the building, as a part of the realty or otherwise, in a subsequent controversy between adverse claimants under the same chain of title.—Miles v. McNaughton, 111 Mich. 350.

§ 4. Manner or mode of annexation.

Intent rather than manner of annexation as test, see ante § 3.
Of particular buildings or things, see post §§ 5-11.

¶ 14. Ordinarily, that which is permanently attached to the freehold is a fixture, and is to be regarded as a part of the land.—Curtis v. Leasia, 78 Mich. 480.

¶ 15. The mode either of annexation or of use is not always conclusive as to whether an article is a fixture.—Wheeler v. Bedell, 40 Mich. 693; Manwaring v. Jenison, 61 Mich. 117.

¶ 16. Whether a building or other erection is a part of the realty, and a fixture, depends upon no fixed rule; neither the mode of annexation nor the manner of use is conclusive; it must usually depend on the understanding of the parties.—Stevens v. Rose, 69 Mich. 259.

¶ 17. Where permanent annexation to the freehold is intended, an article lawfully annexed becomes a fixture and part of the realty, whether its removal would injure the freehold or not.—Morrison v. Berry, 42 Mich. 389.

¶ 20. Where grates affixed to defendant's house are removable without injury to the building, and defendant, when sued for the price, offers to return them to plaintiff, claiming that they do not meet the latter's warranty, they do not become fixtures as between the parties.—Aldine Mfg. Built-in machinery and power plants, see post § 9.
Court and jury questions, see post § 20.

¶ 21. Ordinary movable office furniture and ordinary vehicles are not fixtures, and the question whether personal property in use about a mine can be so regarded is a question of the intent with which it was attached to the freehold.—Scudder v. Anderson, 54 Mich. 122.

¶ 22. Steam pipes for radiation, arc lights and electric elevator motors installed by a merchant as tenant in a business building are fixtures which the tenant has the right to remove at the expiration of his lease, and do not pass to another tenant under a subsequent lease.—Lovett v. Bermingham-Seaman-Patrick Co., 192 Mich. 372.

¶ 23. Piles in a milldock, to which booms for the storage of logs are attached, are real estate, and a wilful injury to them constitutes a trespass to real property.—John Spry Lumber Co. v. Steam Barge C. H. Green, 76 Mich. 320.

§ 8. Partitions.

¶ 24. A wooden half partition, nailed at the ends to blocks let through the plastering and at the bottom to a strip of board nailed to the floor, put up by a landlord's consent and afterwards sold to him by the tenant, is a fixture and not subject to levy as personalty, nor to replevin as goods and chattels. —McAuliffe v. Mann, 37 Mich. 539.

§ 9. Machinery and power plants.

Machinery installed by one not owner but lessee or licensee, see post § 12.

Machinery installed by purchaser, see post § 14.

Machinery placed by firm on land owned by members as individuals, see also post ¶ 54.

Evidence as to intent of parties and character of the machinery, see post § 19.

Effect of agreements as to character of machinery, see post §§ 21-25.

Effect of chattel mortgage or reservation of title to secure purchase price, see post §§ 22, 23.

Character as affected by lease or other agreement between lessor and lessee, see post § 24.

Making machinery partnership realty by annexation to partnership lands, see Partnership.

¶ 25. Machinery annexed in a substantial manner to a building is not a fixture unless there is such unity of title to the realty and the machinery that a conveyance of the realty would of necessity convey the fixture also. If one owns unlike interests in the land and in the machinery, the latter must be considered personal estate. A thing cannot, as to an undivided interest therein, be real estate, and as to another undivided interest be personalty.—Adams v. Lee, 31 Mich. 440.

¶ 26. Where land and machinery put upon it are held by different titles, and a steam-engine is afterwards put in to run the machinery, the engine partakes of the character of the machinery, and does not become part of the realty.—Robertson v. Corsett, 39 Mich. 777.

¶ 27. Machinery not made expressly for use in the building in which it is placed, but capable of beneficial use if removed or set up in some other building, is personalty or realty according to the intent or understanding fairly deducible from the circumstances.—Robertson v. Corsett, 39 Mich. 777.

¶ 28. Machinery specially adapted for use in connection with the realty, and put up for use and actually used on it and owned in common with the realty, is a fixture, however the parties may regard it. So held where the machinery of a woolen factory, propelled by a water-wheel with shaft and belting, had been included as personal property in a mortgage of the land on which it was placed.—Lyle v. Palmer, 42 Mich. 314.

¶ 29. Machinery was set up in a building as follows: A boiler was erected in a brick arch, an engine fastened on timbers let into the ground and resting on a foundation of masonry, and a saw-mill placed over the engine, connected with it by belts and chains and fastened by bolts or screws to the framework of the building. Held, that the mode and degree of annexation were enough to convert these chattels into realty.—Coleman v. Stearns Mfg. Co., 38 Mich. 30.

¶ 30. A saw-mill and its appointments are prima facie part of the realty and should be so treated if no agreement, understanding or intent is shown to change their character.—Robertson v. Corsett, 39 Mich. 777.

¶ 31. A boiler, engine and saw-mill placed in a building by a tenant and fastened to a floor by cleats or bolts and hooks in such a manner as to be removable without injury to the building does not become part of the realty and is not covered by a mortgage given on the land while the tenant is in possession. —Bartlett v. Haviland, 92 Mich. 552.

¶ 32. Heavy machines used in a foundry and machine shop need not be fastened to the soil or building in order to constitute them fixtures so that they would be covered by a mortgage upon the realty, especially where the parties understand they are so covered.—Smith v. Blake, 96 Mich. 542.

¶ 33. A stationary engine resting on a brick foundation inclosed in a frame building in such way that it cannot be removed without taking out a side of the building, there being unity of title as to the land and the engine both having passed by deed of the land, is real property.—People v. Jones, 120 Mich. 283.

¶ 34. A cupola and crane bricked up, built into and permanently attached to a building by the owner and without which the building would not be in condition for immediate use, it also appearing that the cupola and crane would be injured by their removal, are part of the realty and pass to the purchaser of the premises under foreclosure proceedings.—Lord v. Detroit Sav. Bank, 132 Mich. 510.

§ 10. Fences and materials for fencing.

Fences made by wrongful claimant, see post ¶ 53.

Effect of agreements to fix character, see post § 21.

Estoppel to claim as personalty, see post ¶ 64.

¶ 35. Rails placed in a line fence, but upon the land of the adjoining owner, with no intention of leaving them permanently, are personal property.—Curtis v. Leasia, 78 Mich. 480.

¶ 36. Fence rails piled upon land do not pass by a deed of such land though for 50 years previously they had been part of a fence upon the premises.—Harris v. Scovel, 85 Mich. 32.

§ 11. Manure produced on farm.

¶ 37. Where manure is made not from the products of a farm, but substantially like making it in a livery stable, it belongs to the tenant.—Taylor v. Newcomb, 123 Mich. 637.

¶ 38. As between landlord and tenant, manure made on the farm by the cattle of the tenant, which is made from the products of the farm, and as a result of the consumption of its produce thereon, becomes a part of the realty.—Taylor v. Newcomb, 123 Mich. 637.

¶ 39. Manure belongs to a tenant and he is entitled to remove it from a farm of which he was the former owner and which he sold taking back a lease including buildings, barnyard, etc., and where he had stored hay, cornstalks and straw in the barn, and during the following winter made the manure by feeding such fodder to his stock. In that case it was not a product of the farm.—Taylor v. Newcomb, 123 Mich. 637.

§ 12. Leasehold or partial interest as rebutting intent to annex.

Improvement by life tenant or remainderman, see post § 13.

Effect of reservation of title by seller to husband, where thing is annexed to land owned by entirety, see post ¶ 82.

Right of representative of deceased lessee to value of sawmill frame built by decedent on land sold by lessor, see Estates of Decedents ¶ 281.

¶ 40. Personal property that can be removed from the land cannot be part of the realty when the owner does not also own the land.—Scudder v. Anderson, 54 Mich. 122.

¶ 41. Machinery was put up in a drill-house on another's land for the temporary purpose of boring a salt well, and was removable without injuring the freehold. Held, that it was not a fixture and was not covered by a conveyance of the land.—Bewick v. Fletcher, 41 Mich. 625.

¶ 42. As between landlord and tenant of a mining lease, engines and boilers erected by the tenant on brick and stone foundations, and bolted down solidly to the ground, and walled in with brick arches; and dwellings erected by the tenants for miners to live in, standing on posts or dry stone walls piled together—where such machinery and buildings were intended to be merely accessory to the mining operations under the lease, and when there was no intention in affixing them to the realty to make them accessory to the soil, and where they can be removed without material disturbance to the land—are regarded as "trade fixtures," and may be removed at or before the termination of the lease.—Conrad v. Saginaw Min. Co., 54 Mich. 249.

¶ 43. Where real estate is owned in undivided interests by the individuals who compose a partnership which has only the use of it, trade fixtures set up by the partners do not become realty, and when their occupation ceases the partners may remove them. They are not covered by mortgages on the premises if their owners did not plainly mean them to be so.—Robertson v. Corsett, 39 Mich. 777.

¶ 44. It must be presumed that where a frame building, supported only by posts, with no partitions, and without a cellar, is erected on premises by a tenant from month to month the lessee did not intend that the building should become a part of the realty.—Higginbotham v. Phillips, 192 Mich. 49.

§ 13. ——Improvement by life tenant or remainderman.

Under agreement between parties, see post § 24.

¶ 45. Permanent improvements made by a life tenant inure to the benefit of the remainderman.—Curtis v. Fowler, 66 Mich. 696.

¶ 46. A building erected by the remainderman with the life tenant's consent and with the intention to make it part of the freehold becomes such.—Stevens v. Rose, 69 Mich. 259.

§ 14. Buildings or improvements by vendor or purchaser.

¶ 47. A house erected upon land by one in possession under a contract of purchase is part of the realty.—Hogsett v. Ellis, 17 Mich. 351.

¶ 48. Buildings erected by the grantor after conveying the land belong to the grantee in absence of any agreement.—Kruger v. LeBlanc, 75 Mich. 424.

¶ 49. A house erected upon land under contract of sale becomes part of the realty, and as such the property of the owner of the land, subject only to the vendee's rights therein.—Michigan Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Cronk, 93 Mich. 49.

¶ 50. A house erected upon land under contract of sale does not become a fixture upon a third person's land to which it is tortiously removed.—Michigan Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Cronk, 93 Mich. 49.

¶ 51. A mill and milling machinery placed upon premises held under a contract of purchase become part of the realty and are included in a mortgage of the premises.—Morley v. Quimby, 132 Mich. 140.

¶ 52. Mill machinery ordered by mortgagors in possession of an old mill that had been run 40 years and whose machinery was worn out, which was to be put into the mill for the purpose of increasing its capacity, and negotiated for on the representations of the milling company relying on an agreement with complainant to discontinue foreclosure proceedings and extend the time for payment of the mortgage if improvements were put upon the property, and not to be accepted and paid for until after installation and trial, the title as between seller and purchaser has not passed, and the property cannot be said to have become a fixture and liable for the mortgage.—First Commercial & Sav. Bank v. Trenton Milling Co., 144 Mich. 188.

§ 15. Improvements by persons without title or land interest.

Buildings removed to another's land tortiously, see ante ¶ 50.

¶ 53. Fences built upon, and a cellar built in, another's land, by one who has fraudulently acquired colorable title, were regarded as permanently annexed in his own wrong, and he was refused indemnity therefor.—McCredie v. Buxton, 31 Mich. 383.

¶ 54. Where the individual members of a copartnership owned land used for partnership purposes, and bought as a firm, under a contract of conditional sale, an engine, boilers, and other milling machinery, and annexed them to the realty, there was sufficient unity of title to the land and machinery to support the contention of a mortgagee of the land that the machinery had become fixtures, and was covered by his mortgage.—Wickes Bros. v. Hill, 115 Mich. 333.

§ 16. Severance and restoration of movability.

Intention at time of affixation, see ante § 3.
Agreement with mortgagor in possession for severance, see post ¶ 89.
Chattel mortgage as agreement of severance, see also post ¶ 99.
License to remove by mortgagor in possession after foreclosure, see also post ¶ 97.

¶ 55. A deed or mortgage which specifically mentions buildings or other fixtures in the description does not thereby sever them and make them personalty.—Lyle v. Palmer, 42 Mich. 314.

¶ 56. House erected on land under contract of purchase becomes part of realty, but is personalty when severed, and so remains though wrongfully set upon third person's land.—Michigan Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Cronk, 93 Mich. 49.

¶ 57. A personal character is not impressed on fixtures by chattel mortgaging them, where it was done out of caution lest they should be held to be personalty and therefore not covered by a contemporaneous real estate mortgage.—Studley v. Ann Arbor Sav. Bank, 112 Mich. 181.

¶ 58. If a tenant sell fixtures as personalty and takes back a chattel mortgage on them, he is not thereby invested with any new rights as against his landlord, unless it appears that the latter has waived or relinquished his own right derived from their annexation, or has precluded himself from asserting it against the tenant.—O'Brien v. Kusterer, 27 Mich. 289.

¶ 59. A building so constructed as to be a part of the realty, and which is treated as such by the parties to a real-estate mortgage, will not be deemed to have been severed from the realty, and made personalty, as against the mortgagee, in favor of one who accepts a subsequent mortgage of the premises described in the first mortgage, "together with the building and its appurtenances," merely because the first mortgagee, to make sure of his security, takes, in addition to the real-estate mortgage, a chattel mortgage covering the building.—Miles v. McNaughton, 111 Mich. 350.

¶ 60. A verbal agreement by the agent of the purchaser at a foreclosure sale with the mortgagor just before he yielded possession of the premises, that the mortgagor might remove a certain cupola and crane annexed to the premises, and a later agreement that they might remain and be sold to the incoming tenant, have no legal effect to change property which in its nature is realty, into personalty.—Lord v. Detroit Sav. Bank, 132 Mich. 510.

¶ 61. A verbal agreement by the agent of the purchaser at a foreclosure sale, with the mortgagor just before he yielded possession of the premises, that the mortgagor might remove a certain cupola and crane annexed to the property, and a later agreement that they might remain and be sold to an incoming tenant, do not tend to show that the mortgagees and the purchasers considered the property personalty at the time it was annexed.—Lord v. Detroit Sav. Bank, 132 Mich. 510.

§ 17. Effect of physical severance.

Constructive severance by agreement, see ante § 16.
Injurious effect of severance as indicia of intent to annex permanently, see also ante § 4.
Injurious consequences of removing machinery as index of intent to affix permanently, see also ante ¶¶ 33, 34.

¶ 62. A gang edger in a sawmill was held to be a trade fixture which a tenant who put it in might remove during the term of his lease, but not afterwards against the landlord's consent; and if he left it in the mill and the landlord detached it the tenant did not for that reason recover title to it as a personal chattel.—Stokoe v. Upton, 40 Mich. 581.

§ 18. Estoppel to question affixation or severance.

See also ante ¶ 12.

Estoppel to assert removable character by having witnessed inconsistent mortgage, see also Estoppel § 34.

¶ 63. One who builds a house on land held by him under a partly-performed parol contract for purchase, and who rents it to a tenant, cannot treat it as personalty and bring trover as for conversion against a third party who ousts the tenant under claim of title.—Bracelin v. McLaren, 59 Mich. 327.

¶ 64. A deed describing the premises as the same which were assigned to the grantor by commissioners in partition, together with the hereditaments and appurtenances, does not estop the grantor from claiming, as personal property, rails which at the time of the partition were in a fence on the land, but which before the deed were taken out and piled up.—Harris v. Scovel, 85 Mich. 32.

¶ 65. Plaintiffs sold mill machinery to a millwright, knowing that he had contracted with defendant that the machinery should be attached to defendant's realty. The sale was conditioned so that title should not pass nor should the machinery become a fixture until payment of the purchase price. Without notifying defendant of this retention of title, plaintiffs guaranteed to defendant that the property should be shipped to him upon his paying an amount stated, on the millwright's order. Held, that plaintiffs were estopped from claiming that the title to the property did not pass to defendant under his contract with the millwright.—Jenks v. Colwell, 66 Mich. 420.

¶ 66. The owner of a fixture attached to his freehold, but improperly levied upon as a chattel, is not estopped from claiming it as part of the realty by bidding for it at the execution sale, and allowing it to be struck off to another without giving notice of his ownership or of its character as realty.—McAuliffe v. Mann, 37 Mich. 539.

§ 19. Presumptions and evidence.

Intention as test and manner or mode of annexation as indicia of intent, see ante §§ 3, 4.

Inconclusiveness of evidence afforded by manner of annexation, see also ante § 4.

Sufficiency of evidence to go to jury, see post § 20.

Effect of agreements, mortgages and the like to fix character of the improvement, see post, III.

General law of evidence and presumptions, see Evidence.

Judicial notice as to customary annexation of engines and boilers, see Evidence ¶ 118.

Nonassertion of reserved title as admission against vendor's interest in machinery, see also Evidence ¶ 2076.

¶ 67. Machinery owned by tenants in a mortgaged building was sold with the building by bill of sale apart from the deed of the realty. The assignee of a purchaser removed it after foreclosure but before possession was taken, and the foreclosure purchaser sued him in trover. Held proper to show that it had always been treated as personalty by the owners, who had a right to keep it apart from the realty and free from the mortgage, which was not taken in reliance on it.—Ferris v. Quimby, 41 Mich. 202.

¶ 68. The fact that the owner transferred a certain cupola and crane as personal property after the commencement of foreclosure proceedings against the real estate to which they were annexed is inadmissible as evidence of the intent with which they were so annexed, since if they were part of the realty they became so at the time they were annexed.—Lord v. Detroit Sav. Bank, 132 Mich. 510.

General law of instructions, see Instructions.

¶ 69. Defendant erected a building on mortgaged premises owned by him, and, after default, deeded the property to plaintiff, the mortgagee, in satisfaction of the mortgage, taking back a lease for one year, with an option to purchase. Within the year he removed the building to other land owned solely by him, and, in replevin by plaintiff, claimed that the building was erected for partnership purposes by a firm of which he was a member, and was to be removable at their option. Plaintiff testified that defendant assured her, when the deed was given, that the building would become her property, and that he had first tried to borrow more money because of the additional security. There was also testimony that defendant had made contradictory statements with respect to his reasons for removing the building. Held, that the evidence raised a question for the jury as to whether the building was personal property as claimed by defendant, or was in fact a fixture.—Byrnes v. Palmer, 113 Mich. 17.

¶ 70. Whether ice houses erected for the purpose of carrying on the ice business were trade fixtures, or improvements within the meaning of Comp. L. 1897, § 10995 which permits an unsuccessful defendant in an action of ejectment who has occupied the premises in good faith, to recover for improvements, is properly for the jury under proper instructions.—Thomas v. Wagner, 131 Mich. 601.

III. AGREEMENTS AFFECTING CHARACTER OF THING OR RIGHT TO REMOVE.

§ 21. Agreements in general.

Agreements effecting severance and restoration of movability, see ante § 16.

Subsequent sale as land or chattel as an index of intent, see also ante ¶ 68.
Agreements preserving personal character of machinery as characterizing engine installed to drive it, see also ante ¶ 26.
Rights of vendors and purchasers as to chattels on the land, see Vendors and Purchasers, VIII-X.
Right to value of buildings constructed on land under agreement that land was to be devised as security where will is revoked, see Estates of Decedents ¶ 219.

¶ 71. There is no inflexible rule of law which will make chattels which have been attached to the soil a part of the realty where they are capable of being severed without injury to the freehold. The general rule respecting such annexation is always open to variation by agreement of parties.—Crippen v. Morrison, 13 Mich. 23.

¶ 72. A mortgage of a brewery also covers storage tanks, fermenting tubs, chip casks, kettle, pipes for cooling beer, and for passing beer from the kettle to the casks and from the casks to the storage tanks, because it is impossible to believe that the mortgagor and mortgagee intended to exclude from its operation these articles without which the brewery could not be operated, and which could not be removed except by being taken to pieces.—Dehring v. Beck, 146 Mich. 706.

¶ 73. Fence-rails are not of necessity part of the realty unless they are in a fence, and even then they may remain personalty, if such was the agreement of the parties interested at the time the fence was built.—Harris v. Scovel, 85 Mich. 32.

§ 22. Mortgaging or selling as chattel.

See also ante ¶ 28.
Mortgaging as chattel as effecting conversion to movable, see ante § 16.
Recordation of mortgage, see Chattel Mortgages, I, C, D.
Filing of conditional sale agreement, see Sales, XII.
Bill of sale of building as chattel mortgage in effect, see Chattel Mortgages ¶ 16.

¶ 74. A planing-machine, weighing three tons, introduced through the doorway and fastened to the floor by cleats, bolts, screws and rivets, but removable without injury to the building, was mortgaged as a chattel after a mortgage had been given on the premises, describing them as land without mentioning buildings or referring to its uses. There was nothing which necessarily showed that the mortgagee of the realty had been induced to rely upon the machine as security. Held, that the presumption was that it remained a chattel.—Wheeler v. Bedell, 40 Mich. 693.

¶ 75. A portable sawmill, subject to a chattel mortgage, was moved by its owner upon land held by him under a contract of purchase which provided that the buildings and improvements placed or made on the premises should remain thereon as further security for the execution of the covenants therein contained, unless the removal of such buildings or improvements should be consented to in writing by the owner of the land. It was needed there only to saw the timber on the land, which would last about five years. Held, that it was not annexed to the land, and that its character as personalty was fixed when the mortgage, of which the vendor of the land had notice, was made.—Burrill v. Wilcox Lumber Co., 65 Mich. 571.

¶ 76. Machinery attached permanently to the realty, and intended to be used with the premises, and included in a real-estate mortgage on the land, will be treated as fixtures covered by such mortgage, although a chattel mortgage is given thereon at the same time to insure against any possible contingency that such machinery might be held to be personal property.—Studley v. Ann Arbor Sav. Bank, 112 Mich. 181.

§ 23. Sale with reservation of title.

Rights of seller where title is not reserved, see post § 26.

¶ 77. Machinery in the possession of a vendee under a contract for its purchase, which retains the title in vendor until the machinery is paid for, cannot be attached to a mill by a purchaser from the vendee, before such payment, so as to make it a part of the realty.—Gill v. DeArmant, 90 Mich. 425.

¶ 78. Machinery which, by the terms of a lease, is to be regarded as personalty, continues such though attached to the buildings by masonry, and cannot be considered as a trade fixture removable only during the tenancy.—Lake Superior Ship Canal, R. & I. Co. v. McCann, 86 Mich. 106.

¶ 79. A portable sawmill, paid for only in part and the title of which remains, under the contract of sale, in the vendor until full payment, does not, although fixed to his land by the vendee, become part of such land so as to pass by a conveyance thereof by him.—Lansing Iron & Engine Works v. Walker, 91 Mich. 409.

¶ 80. Plaintiff sold to W an engine and boiler under a contract by the terms of which the title was retained by plaintiff until the property should be fully paid for. W set up the machinery, in a substantial manner, on land held by B under a contract with a land company for its purchase. The engine was bolted to a stone foundation, and the boiler arched over with brick, and connected by rods with the outer walls of the building. B forfeited his contract to the land company, which had previously obtained a bill of sale of the boiler and engine from W. Defendant, who held a chattel mortgage given by W upon the property in question, purchased the realty, supposing that she would thereby acquire title to the machinery as fixtures. Held, that the property retained its character as personalty, the title to which was in plaintiff.—Lansing Iron & Engine Works v. Wilbur, 111 Mich. 413.

¶ 81. Boilers placed in basements of buildings for heating purposes which can be detached without injury to the boilers or to the buildings, and which are sold with reservation of title in the vendor, do not become part of the realty by annexation but remain personalty.—Schellenberg v. Detroit Heating & Lighting Co., 130 Mich. 439.

¶ 82. Boilers purchased by the husband under a contract reserving title in the vendor, and placed in buildings on real estate owned by him and his wife jointly by the entirety, do not become fixtures there being no unity of title in the boilers and the real estate.—Schellenberg v. Detroit Heating & Lighting Co., 130 Mich. 439.

¶ 83. A bona fide purchaser of a farm with a distillery thereon, acquires title to a steam pump attached to the drivewheel and connected with the boiler of the distillery and fastened to a plank resting on timbers set in the ground, all in a permanent building, though the pump had been sold to his vendor on credit, title to remain in the seller until paid for, all of which was unknown to the purchaser of the farm.—Watson v. Alberts, 120 Mich. 508.

§ 24. Between lessor and lessee or life tenant and remaindermen.

Mutual rights of lessor and lessee in fixtures and movables, including right of severance and removal, see Landlord and Tenant, IV, E.

¶ 84. Where the parties to a lease have agreed to treat as personalty machinery attached by the lessee to the realty, the manner of its attachment is immaterial, and it is subject to chattel mortgage by the lessee.—Booth v. Oliver, 67 Mich. 664.

¶ 85. A building erected by the remainderman and others with the life-tenant's consent, for keeping wild animals of a menagerie during the winter, the intention being to make it a part of the freehold when erected, becomes a part thereof, and the tenant cannot remove it.—Stevens v. Rose, 69 Mich. 259.

¶ 86. Where a lease provided that at its expiration the leased premises should be surrendered with all the improvements and erections, "engines, boilers, machinery, tools, implements and other movable personal chattels excepted," the lessor being given a lien upon "all machinery, implements and personal chattels" of the lessee as security for rent, etc., held, that it was the intention of the parties to make the engine and boiler and their attachment personal property; and that under such circumstances it became immaterial how they were fastened to the soil or to buildings.—Lake Superior Ship Canal, R. & I. Co. v. McCann, 86 Mich. 106.

¶ 87. Under mining lease providing that lessees might erect buildings and put in engines and machinery, which should become part of realty, but might be removed within sixty days after termination of lease if conditions had been performed by lessees, but not otherwise, an engine and hoisting drum purchased of the lessors by the lessees were held to have become part of the realty.—Pendill v. Maas, 97 Mich. 215.

¶ 88. A, having bought from B a building erected by the latter upon leased ground under a lease from C which gave B an option of purchasing the land during the term, went into possession with C's knowledge, C agreeing to give him a new lease, which she did when the old one expired. This lease provided that A might remove any buildings at the expiration thereof. Subsequently A sublet the land and building, and C conveyed the land to D, to whom A paid ground rent. In trover by A, who at the expiration of his lease asked permission to remove the building, it was held that the latter never became part of the realty.—Osborn v. Potter, 101 Mich. 300.

¶ 89. The mortgagor being rightfully entitled to the possession of mortgaged land until foreclosure, he may make such arrangements for the use of the property, and for attaching and severing fixtures, as any other person might during his term.—Crippen v. Morrison, 13 Mich. 23.

IV. RIGHTS OF THIRD PERSONS.

§ 26. In general; seller or buyer of affixed chattels.

[Note. The right of a person other than the improver or the person directly opposing him usually depends on whether as between the immediate parties the chattel has become a fixture or remains a movable. As to this see ante, II, III.]

Mortgagee's rights in the affixed chattel, see post § 27.

Rights of land owner as against execution purchaser of the fixture levied on as a chattel, see ante ¶ 66.

Accession of fixture to building belonging to buyer's wife, see ante ¶ 2.

Estoppel to dispute that conditionally sold chattel has become a fixture, see ante ¶ 65.

Rights depending on the validity of chattel mortgages or conditional sales, or on recordation thereof, see Chattel Mortgages, I, D; Sales, XII.

Rights of parties under chattel mortgages and conditional sales, see also Chattel Mortgages, I, II; Sales, XII.

¶ 90. Chattels may be converted into realty by the purchaser, even though he has not paid for them, if they were sold to him without conditions.—Coleman v. Stearns Mfg. Co., 38 Mich. 30.

¶ 91. The rights of a lessor to mining machinery which had become part of the realty before the lessor had any notice of a chattel mortgage on the machinery are superior to those of the chattel mortgagee, though by terms of the lease the lessee may under certain executory conditions become entitled to remove fixtures.—Pendill v. Maas, 97 Mich. 215.

¶ 92. A bar, bar-fixtures, cupboards, bowling alley, ways and racks substantially attached by a tenant to a building occupied by him as a saloon under a lease, are permanent fixtures, so annexed to the freehold as to belong to it and become the property of the landlord, and are not removable by the tenant's vendees.—O'Brien v. Kusterer, 27 Mich. 289.

¶ 93. A lessee of premises may purchase trade fixtures or amusement devices from a sublessee under a prior lease.—Waverly Park Amusement Co. v. Michigan United Traction Co., 197 Mich. 92.

¶ 94. Where a frame building is erected upon premises by a subtenant, but he has the right of removal under an agreement with the owner, and the building is sold to another, who attorns to his landlord, and this purchaser also sells the building, but is thereafter treated as a tenant of the original lessor, the latter refusing to recognize the last purchaser as tenant, and subsequent purchasers of land might have learned, by inquiry, that the building was considered as a chattel by the former owner of the land and by the various purchasers of the building, such last purchaser may remove the building.—Higginbotham v. Phillips, 192 Mich. 49.

§ 27. Rights of mortgagees or subsequent takers.

See also ante ¶ 31.
In machinery placed on land by purchaser, see ante ¶¶ 51, 52.
Effect of chattel mortgage by tenant as affecting landlord's claim of fixtures, see also ante ¶ 58.
Rights of land mortgagee as dependent on whether chattel has become part of the land, see ante, II.

¶ 95. Trover for conversion will not lie against one who without notice has purchased real property, a part of which had been sold to the lessees of his vendor as personalty, with a stipulation that title should not pass until it was paid for, but which had been allowed to be made a part of the realty. So held where a man bought a mill without notice that the water-wheels were subject to such an arrangement.—Knowlton v. Johnson, 37 Mich. 47.

¶ 96. Where, at the time a mortgage is taken, buildings on the land appear to be part of the realty, and the mortgagee—the mortgagor being the owner in reversion and being also in possession of the premises—has no knowledge to the contrary, such mortgagee is in the position of a bona fide purchaser, and a tenant under a life lease must be confined to his record title, and cannot set up any latent equities or parol agreement whereby the buildings are personal property and removable as trade fixtures or otherwise.—Stevens v. Rose, 69 Mich. 259.

¶ 97. After a mortgage had been assigned the mortgagor bought machinery which he affixed to the soil, and went into partnership with his son, who was to have an equal interest with him. The machinery was not paid for, however, and after foreclosure of the premises was decreed, and also after the firm had dissolved, the mortgagor, acting in the firm name, released the firm's interest in the machinery to the vendor, whom he licensed to enter and remove it. Held, that the assignee of the mortgage could insist that the machinery was reduced to realty subject to the mortgage, and unremovable as against his objection.—Coleman v. Stearns Mfg. Co., 38 Mich. 30.

¶ 98. One who puts a steam-engine and its appurtenances in a mill on the land of another, on the agreement that they shall remain his until the owner of the land shall secure him the payment of the price thereof by chattel mortgage, and who receives the mortgage accordingly, is entitled to claim and hold them under such mortgage as against one who held a prior mortgage upon the land.—Crippen v. Morrison, 13 Mich. 23.

¶ 99. Machinery attached to a building and constituting with it a steam stave and heading mill, but being equally adapted for similar use in any other building, was mortgaged as personalty by the owners of the property. Held, that this was in law such a severance as would make the machinery, as between the owners and the mortgagees, personal property, no other person's rights then intervening, and that subsequent execution purchasers of the real estate with notice of the mortgage could claim no rights in the machinery.—Manwaring v. Jenison, 61 Mich. 117.

¶ 100. One who makes an unrecorded conditional sale of milling machinery, knowing that it is likely to be so attached to the realty as to become a part thereof, cannot maintain his title to the property, after it has been so attached, as against a good-faith mortgagee of the land, even though the original contract of purchase expressly provided that the machinery should not become a fixture by reason of its being annexed to the realty.—Wickes Bros. v. Hill, 115 Mich. 333.

¶ 101. A lease of chattels for a given term, at a fixed rental, with an option in the lessee to purchase at a specified price, stands upon the same basis as a contract of conditional sale, so far as the rights of third persons are concerned, where the property has been attached to real estate in such manner as, under ordinary circumstances, to become a part thereof.—Wickes Bros. v. Hill, 115 Mich. 333.

§ 28. Effect of merger of leasehold and fee.

¶ 102. A mortgage included with the real estate the manufacturing establishment and buildings for the purpose to be erected thereon. The lessees of the factory, after putting in machinery, purchased the reversion of the land on which it stood, subject to the mortgage. Held, that they united the title to the realty and fixtures in one person, and the fixtures became subject to the mortgage. —Jones v. Detroit Chair Co., 38 Mich. 92.

§ 29. Retention or use as a conversion.

General law of conversion, see Conversion.

¶ 103. Trover does not lie on the refusal of a landowner to surrender personal property which plaintiff himself has annexed to the freehold intending it to be a fixture. So held where a dealer in gas-manufacturing machines had caused one to be placed in a house which he afterwards found belonged to the wife of the man who contracted that the machine should be placed there.—Morrison v. Berry, 42 Mich. 389.

¶ 104. Where ties were taken and used by the subcontractor for building a railroad, and the road was in use before it was delivered to the company, the owner of the ties, after waiting until they had become realty, cannot bring trover against the company as for their conversion.—Detroit & B. C. R. Co. v. Busch, 43 Mich. 571.

¶ 105. Where machinery is sold to be set up in a mill, but with a stipulation that title shall not pass until it is paid for, and without the vendor's knowledge it is so attached to the realty as to make it, under ordinary circumstances, a fixture, and before it is paid for the property is sold to some person who had sufficient knowledge of the owner's claim to put him on inquiry, trover will lie for the conversion of the machinery.—Ingersoll v. Barnes, 47 Mich. 104.

¶ 1. Local L. 1879, Act No. 351, as amended in 1881 (Local L. 1881, Act No. 419), to prevent the sale of unsound meat or provisions in Detroit, was repealed by the provisions of the city charter of 1883 (Local L. 1883, Act No. 326), relating to the same subject.—People v. Bussell, 59 Mich. 104.

¶ 2. The pure food law (Pub. Acts 1895, No. 193 as amended) is a penal statute and should receive a strict construction.—People v. Jennings, 132 Mich. 662.

¶ 3. A preparation sold as a "food" which is claimed to be a regulator "to be used according to directions, and is not sold as a feeding stuff, nor is it to be fed in place of grain or any other feed," and for which in addition to claims of medicinal properties, it is stated in the labels "It fattens both cattle and hogs quickly, makes them grow larger and healthier, and makes their meat tender, more juicy, and better eating." is subject to regulation under Pub. Acts 1905, No. 12, § 18, which applies to "all condimental stock foods, patented and proprietary stock foods, claimed to possess nutritive properties and all other materials intended for feeding to domestic animals."—Pratt Food Co. v. Bird, 148 Mich. 631.

¶ 4. The Detroit House of Correction is, under Act No. 167, Public Acts 1899, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 3345, subject to inspection by the State Dairy and Food Commissioner, since, by reason of the fact that such institution receives and boards prisoners under contract with various counties of the state, it is a place where "food or drink is made, stored, sold or offered for sale."—People v. Jacobs, 184 Mich. 77. (Equally divided court.)

¶ 5. An agent who in good faith takes an order for pure pepper is not guilty of violation of the pure food law (Pub. Acts 1895, No. 193), because his principal, in filling the order, sends impure pepper.—People v. Morse, 131 Mich. 68.

§ 2. Deceptive form or coloration.

Element of knowledge or intent, see post § 4.

¶ 6. The provision of the pure food law (Pub. Acts 1895, No. 193, as amended), prohibiting the coloring of an article whereby damage or inferiority is concealed, has no application where there was no damage or inferiority and the coloring matter used was not injurious to health in any way.—People v. Jennings, 132 Mich. 662.

¶ 7. The fact that the use of coal-tar dye in the coloring of extract of vanilla was harmless did not excuse respondent in a prosecution for adulteration, where no other object was apparent from such use than to make the article appear of a quality better than it really was.—People v. Hinshaw, 135 Mich. 378.

¶ 8. Pub. Acts of 1913, No. 63, entitled an act to regulate the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine, and defining what constitutes oleomargarine, does not repeal Pub. Acts of 1901, No. 22, How. 2nd Ed., §§ 3232, 3233, entitled an act to prevent deception in the manufacture and sale of imitation butter and prohibiting the manufacture of a compound in which coloring matter is used, as the two acts are not conflicting.—Jasnowski v. Detroit Recorder's Court Judge, 195 Mich. 269.

¶ 9. Pub. Acts 1913, No. 63, entitled an act to regulate the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine, defines what constitutes oleomargarine and excludes coloring matter.—Jasnowski v. Detroit Recorder's Court Judge, 195 Mich. 269.

¶ 10. "Yellow butter," as used in the statute prohibiting deception in the manufacture and sale of imitation butter, means any butter produced from pure, unadulterated milk or cream of the same, having a yellow color.—People v. Phillips, 131 Mich. 395.

¶ 11. Pub. Acts 1901, No. 22, § 1, prohibiting the sale of oleaginous substances in imitation of yellow butter does not apply to the sale of a mixture of oleomargarine and other necessary ingredients without the use of artificial coloring matter and clearly within the permission of Public Acts, 1899, No. 147, § 6, which defines oleaginous products permitted to be sold.—Bennett v. Carr, 134 Mich. 243.

¶ 12. Pub. Acts 1901, No. 22, How. 2nd Ed., §§ 3232, 3233, entitled an act to prevent deception in the manufacture and sale of imitation butter, prohibits the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine which contains coloring matter.—Jasnowski v. Detroit Recorder's Court Judge, 195 Mich. 269.

§ 3. False branding or labeling.

Element of knowledge and intent, see post § 4.

¶ 13. Public Acts 1903, Act No. 123, relating to the sale of corn syrup, construed as not requiring corn syrup to be labeled "glucose."—People v. Harris, 135 Mich. 136.

¶ 14. Where a manufacturer sold syrup under the label of "Maple Syrup and Cane Syrup," the sale is governed by 2 Comp Laws 1897, § 5007, requiring any adulterated maple syrup to be sold under a label specifying the percentage of the adulterant, and the sale is not governed by the Pure Food Law, No. 193, Pub. Acts, 1895, which requires no statement of ingredients in the case of ordinary articles of food.—Pierre Viaus Maple Co. v. Dairy & Food Com'r, 154 Mich. 73.

¶ 15. The word "adulteration" in the title of 2 Comp. Laws 1897, § 5007, relating to the sale of maple sugar, means the mixture of any foreign substance, wholesome or unwholesome, with maple sugar; and in connection with the proviso to section 5012, requires the label to show proportions where mixed with other syrups.—Pierre Viaus Maple Co. v. Dairy & Food Com'r, 154 Mich. 73.

¶ 16. A food mixture composed of beef, pork, veal, water and a cereal may be sold by retailers to consumers without violation of the Pure Food Statute, 2 Comp. Laws 1897, § 5010, provided the retailer labels the product as "sausage with cereal."—Armour & Co. v. State Dairy & Food Com'r, 159 Mich. 1.

¶ 17. In interpreting the meaning of 2 Comp. Laws 1897, § 5010, forbidding the sale of adulterated foods, the term "sausage" is to be taken in the sense understood by the people at large, and not as used by the manufacturers and dealers.—Armour & Co. v. State Dairy & Food Com'r, 159 Mich. 1.

¶ 18. A manufacturer of sausage in Chicago mixed a percentage of cereals therewith and supplied the same in packages to the retailers in Michigan, properly labeled to show the ingredients. The retailers sold to customers in small lots without informing them of the ingredients. Held, such sale by the retailers was in violation of 2 Comp. Laws 1897, § 5010, as being a sale of adulterated food forbidden by the statute.—Armour & Co. v. State Dairy & Food Com'r, 159 Mich. 1.

§ 4. Knowledge or intent as element in offenses.

Nonliability of sales agent for filling of order with impure goods, see ante ¶ 5.

Element of intent in the crime, see also Crimes ¶ 6.

¶ 19. Pub. Acts 1895, No. 193, prohibits the manufacture or sale of adulterated articles of food or drink, and prescribes what shall be deemed adulteration within the meaning of the act. Section 8 forbids any person from knowingly offering for sale cheese which is falsely labeled; this being the only case in which knowledge is expressly made an element of an offense designated by such statute. Held, that proof of guilty knowledge or intent is not essential to the conviction of one who sells adulterated food.—People v. Snowberger, 113 Mich. 86.

¶ 20. Scienter is an ingredient of the offense of selling or offering to sell, in violation of Pub. Acts 1913, No. 207, § 5, any fresh fruits or vegetables in packages which on their shown surfaces give a false representation of their contents.—People v. Frederighi, 192 Mich. 165.

¶ 21. Pub. Acts 1897, No. 71, prohibits the sale and manufacture of vinegar below the standard prescribed, and it is no defense that the manufacturer or seller has no knowledge that the vinegar is not within the standard prescribed.—People v. Worden Grocer Co., 118 Mich. 604.

§ 5. Prosecutions and actions for penalties.

Civil liability and actions, see post § 6.
General law of indictments and prosecutions, see Indictment.
Actions for penalties in general, see Penalties.
Sufficiency of record for review of questions, see Indictment, XVI, C.

¶ 22. A complaint for selling vinegar below standard solid contents under Pub. Acts 1897, No. 71, consisting of two sections, both regulating sale of vinegar, cannot be objected to on the ground that it should have been drawn under the first section of the act, relating to cider vinegar, rather than the second, relating to other vinegars, as the statute as a whole provides that all "fermented" vinegar shall comply with the standard fixed by statute in containing solids, ash, or mineral matter, whether made from fruit or grain.—People v. Worden Grocer Co., 118 Mich. 604.

¶ 23. In a prosecution for selling vinegar below standard in violation of Pub. Acts 1897, No. 71, preventing the adulteration or debasement of vinegar, a contention that the act is unreasonable as providing an arbitrary, unscientific standard of cider vinegar, not calculated to protect the public, will not be considered, as such matters should be addressed to the legislature. It belongs to the legislature to determine primarily what measures are appropriate or needful for the protection of the public morals, health, or safety.—People v. Worden Grocer Co., 118 Mich. 604.

¶ 24. In a prosecution for the violation of Pub. Acts 1897, No. 71, preventing the adulteration of vinegar, by sale of vinegar having less than a standard of solids, a contention that the act is unreasonable, and that the reasonableness is a question of fact to be determined from expert evidence, will not be considered; as the question is neither for the court nor the jury, but for the legislature.—People v. Worden Grocer Co., 118 Mich. 604.

¶ 25. An information charging the colora tion of extract of vanilla to make an inferior article appear better and more valuable than it really was, was sufficient to sustain a conviction in a prosecution for adulteration, under Pub. Acts 1895, Act No. 193, as amended by Pub. Acts 1897, Act No. 118.—People v. Hinshaw, 135 Mich. 378.

¶ 26. Though in an action for violation of the pure food law (Pub. Acts 1895, No. 193, as amended), it is proper to resort to the U. S. Pharmacopœia formula for the manner of determining what lemon extract consists of, it is open to manufacturers to improve thereon where nothing is intermixed so as to lower or depreciate or injuriously affect the strength, quality or purity.—People v. Jennings, 132 Mich. 662.

¶ 27. Under the pure food law (Pub. Acts 1895, No. 193, as amended), which defines adulteration as the substitution of an inferior or cheaper substance, and also that it exists "if any valuable or necessary constituent or ingredient has been wholly or in part abstracted from it," an instruction that if any ingredient of lemon essence as defined by the pharmacopœia was wanting it amounted to an adulteration, is error since if nothing was eliminated except such ingredients as could be dispensed with without injury to it as a food product, there was no adulteration within the meaning of the statute.—People v. Jennings, 132 Mich. 662.

¶ 28. A conviction of a salesman for selling adulterated jelly under Pub. Acts 1895, No. 193, as amended by Pub. Acts 1897, No. 118, as amended by Pub. Acts 1899, No. 117, is not sustained by evidence that the respondent, a traveling salesman, took the order for pure fruit jelly upon which order the wholesale house furnished an adulterated product labeled "Pure Fruit Jelly."—People v. Skillman, 129 Mich. 618.

¶ 29. A conviction under Pub. Acts 1901, No. 22, prohibiting the sale of oleomargarine colored in imitation of yellow butter, will be sustained if the evidence shows there was sufficient coloring matter used to make it look like yellow butter, having any perceptible shade of yellow.—People v. Phillips, 131 Mich. 395.

¶ 30. In a prosecution for adulterating extract of vanilla by using coal-tar dye, testimony that the effect of such dye was to make the article appear of greater value than it really was, and that people would think it stronger that it really was, although weakened on cross-examination, presented a question for the jury.—People v. Hinshaw, 135 Mich. 378.

§ 6. Liability and actions for injuries to consumers.

Prosecutions and penal actions, see ante § 5.
Judicial notice of food qualities of oleomargarine, see Evidence § 3.
Negligence in purveying spoiled meat whereby one handling it contracted blood poisoning, see Negligence, II, B.

¶ 31. In an action for negligently selling spoiled meat whereby plaintiff was made sick, one of defendant's employees may be asked whether he knew of any spoiled meats that were sold by defendant about the time plaintiff bought, and another may testify whether he had seen spoiled meat prepared by defendant for sale about that time.—Craft v. Parker, 96 Mich. 245.

¶ 32. In an action for negligence in selling spoiled meat whereby plaintiff was made sick, it was for the jury to say whether defendant knew or by proper care could have known the condition of the meat.—Craft v. Parker, 96 Mich. 245.

¶ 33. In an action for negligence in selling spoiled bacon whereby plaintiff was made sick, it was for the jury to determine whether he exercised due care in eating the meat after he had smelled peculiar odors while it was cooking.—Craft v. Parker, 96 Mich. 245.

I. THE CAUSE OF ACTION.

§ 1. Nature and object of statutory remedy.

Elements of peaceable possession and forcible disturbance, see post §§ 3-6.
Elements of unlawful detainer, see post § 7.
Complaint, process and practice on trial, see post, II.
Exclusion of issues and trial of title to the land, see post §§ 36, 37.

Identification of property as requisite, see also post ¶ 87.
Possessory remedy of ejectment, see Ejectment.
Remedy for injury to the possession, see Trespass.
Equitable remedy to quiet title, see Quieting Title.

¶ 1. The object of the statute against forcible entries is not to aid men in violating their obligations, and holding what they have no right to hold, but merely to prevent riotous and forcible measures in breaches of the peace.—Marsh v. Bristol, 65 Mich. 378.

§ 2. ——Of summary proceedings.

Grounds for summary proceedings, right which will support the proceeding, and maturity of the right, see post §§ 9-11.
Complaint, process and practice on trial, see post, II.
General nature of statutory proceedings to recover possession in ejectment, see also Ejectment ¶ 5.
Statutory provisions for summary proceedings, see Jud. Act, chap. XXX, § 12 et seq.; Comp. L. 1915, § 13240 et seq.

¶ 2. While, as a general rule, summary proceedings will not lie where a question of title is involved, yet the title must be a legal title, and it must be raised by the evidence offered in the case.—Sayles v. Murphy, 201 Mich. 73.

¶ 3. Summary proceedings may be maintained by a sublessee against one to whom he sold the lease for the recovery of the premises where plaintiff obtained another lease for a further term from the original lessee, of which latter lease defendant was notified and defendant claimed the right of possession under a bill of sale of property, including the lease, dated during the term of plaintiff's original lease, and after the execution of the second lease to plaintiff, from one who erroneously claimed to have purchased the interest of the lessee in the original lease during the term of plaintiff's lease.—Sayles v. Murphy, 201 Mich. 73.

§ 3. "Peaceable possession" of ousted person.

Person entitled to possession as proper complainant, see post § 14.

¶ 4. Where premises are really vacant, a party making a bona fide claim to the right of possession may enter if it can be done without disturbance, and can speedily found such a possession as will be entitled to recognition under Comp. L. 1871, § 6695, How. St., § 8284, which forbids any entry upon lands except peaceably and by law. But "peaceable possession" cannot be based on a nocturnal entry upon premises used and improved at the time and for several months previously under claim of title and with the intruder's knowledge.—Newton v. Doyle, 38 Mich. 645.

¶ 5. Possession of a public billiard room, by a lessee, who has sublet the premises, sought to be acquired by placing several men therein, with directions to remain, which they do until the sublessee's hour for closing, when they are forcibly expelled, is not a sufficient basis for the institution of proceedings for forcible entry against the lessor, who is alleged to have colluded with the sublessee; since if there was collusion there was no forcible entry.—Vincent v. Brant, 101 Mich. 60.

§ 4. Force in the entry.

Forcible repulsion of ousted party attempting to re-enter, see post § 5.
Forcible re-entry after forcible entry, see post § 6.
Unlawful detainer with force, see post § 7.
Allegations of force in complaint, see post § 18.

Statutory right to forcible entry action, see Jud. Act, chap. XXX, § 2; Comp. L. 1915, § 13230.

¶ 6. An entry without other force than that implied in every trespass is not within the forcible entry and detainer statute.—Smith v. Detroit Loan & Building Ass'n, 115 Mich. 340.

¶ 7. If an entry is obtained by stealth or stratagem, or without real violence, and the party entering evinces his purpose in having entered to have been the forcible expulsion of the party in possession, and it is followed up by actual expulsion by means of personal threats or violence, or superior force, this will amount to a forcible entry.—Seitz v. Miles, 16 Mich. 456.

¶ 8. Evidence which shows merely an unlawful entry and detention, without showing that they were accompanied with violence or a breach of the peace, will not support a complaint for forcible entry and detainer.—Davis v. Ingersoll, 2 D. 372; Harrington v. Scott, 1 Mich. 17.

¶ 9. The evidence to sustain a complaint under R. S. 1838, p. 490, ch. 5, § 2, for unlawful and forcible entry and detainer of premises, must show force or violence in making the entry, as well as the subsequent detention.—Latimer v. Woodward, 2 D. 368.

¶ 10. To sustain a complaint for unlawful and forcible entry and detainer there should be proof of such acts of violence as amount to a breach of the peace.—Harrington v. Scott, 1 Mich. 17.

¶ 11. Proof that the defendants (there being only two of them) repaired alone to the premises, and that one of them pounded upon the door and it was opened, whereupon they both entered, is not sufficient to sustain a complaint for forcible entry and detainer. —Harrington v. Scott, 1 Mich. 17.

¶ 12. Unless the tenant, disputing the right to possession with the landlord on a forfeiture of the lease, is driven off either by actual force applied to him, or as the only apparent way of avoiding its use against him at the time, he cannot be regarded as forcibly expelled, and there is no forcible entry.—Marsh v. Bristol, 65 Mich. 378.

¶ 13. Under 3 Comp. Laws 1897, § 11153, prohibiting forcible entries and detainers, it is not necessary that the actual invasion of the premises should be attended by circumstances requisite to give it the character of a forcible entry, or be accompanied by threats, actual force, or violence, or any conduct which would constitute a breach of the peace. —McIntyre v. Murphy, 153 Mich. 342.

¶ 14. Where defendant in forcible entry and detainer entered plaintiff's house accompanied by defendant's husband, his regular hired man, and two other men specially hired for the purpose, and informed the daughter of plaintiff that they intended "to move you folks out of here today," which they proceeded to do, there is a sufficient showing of force calculated to intimidate and terrify the occupants of the premises to constitute a forcible entry.—McIntyre v. Murphy, 153 Mich. 342.

¶ 15. Possession of premises is obtained forcibly by a landlord, in violation of Comp. Laws 1915, § 13229, providing that no person shall make any entry into lands, tenements, or other possessions except where entry is given by law, and in such cases he shall not enter by force, but only in a peaceable manner, so as to warrant the recovery of damages by the tenant, where the wife of the landlord, after termination of the lease, enters under the ruse that she has come to see what is the matter with the water pipes and is followed by two officers and her husband who, falsely representing that they have a valid writ of restitution, proceed to remove plaintiff's goods to a place designated by plaintiff upon his arrival.—Gallant v. Miles, 200 Mich. 532.

§ 5. ——Force to resist re-entry.

Forcible re-entry after forcible entry, see post § 6.
Assaults in defense of possession, see Assault § 18.

¶ 16. M., a tenant holding the premises in arrears of rent and subject to a forfeiture of his lease, concurred with B., an agent of his landlord, in exhibiting the house to a proposed tenant, and then, when B. asserted that he took possession of the house and of plaintiff's goods therein mortgaged to secure the rent and began to put out his goods other than those mortgaged. M. remonstrated and left the house to get assistance. B. shut up the house and ejected M. on his return. Held, that B.'s entry was not forcible and ejecting plaintiff was not a trespass.—Marsh v. Bristol, 65 Mich. 378.

¶ 17. Where a school-district by its teacher had long been in possession of a schoolhouse upon land the legal title whereto was in the authorities of a certain religious body who had recognized the district's possession but who subsequently claimed the school was parochial, not public, the teacher could not legally attorn to such authorities, and the district having peaceably obtained possession could use force against force in retaining it without changing the character of its entry or making that forcible which before was peaceable.—Richter v. Cordes, 100 Mich. 278.

¶ 18. A chattel mortgagee of goods in a store took possession of them, but instead of removing them at the lessee's request took possession of the building, leaving two men in charge, who barricaded the door and refused admission to the lessee. Held, that this was a forcible entry, or at least that the fact of such entry, and, if forcible, who made it, were questions for the jury.—Donovan v. Chappell, 63 Mich. 685.

§ 6. Forcible re-entry after forcible entry.

Force in repelling re-entry, see ante § 5.

¶ 19. Where A. obtained possession of premises occupied by B. by knocking a door open with a hammer in B.'s absence, and B. soon afterwards, in A.'s absence, re-entered by similar violence, it was held that A.'s temporary occupation so acquired was not such quiet and peaceable possession as would entitle him to maintain forcible entry and detainer against B.—Harrington v. Scott, 1 Mich. 17.

Statutory ground for action, see Jud. Act, chap. XXX, § 2; Comp. L. 1915, § 13230.

¶ 20. Every forcible entry is forbidden, but a forcible detainer after a peaceable entry is not forbidden unless the detainer is unlawful, and in neither case is the possessory remedy given to any one not entitled to possession.—Hoffman v. Harrington, 22 Mich. 52; Marsh v. Bristol, 65 Mich. 378.

¶ 21. A proceeding for forcible entry and detainer does not lie against one whose entry was peaceable and without collusion with a tenant.—Farmer v. Hunter, 45 Mich. 337.

¶ 22. There is no forcible detainer where a person in possession uses no force and threatens none, but simply says to one who demands possession that he will not go until put out.—Appleton v. Buskirk, 67 Mich. 407.

§ 8. Right to damages.

¶ 23. Suing for compensation for use and occupation is a waiver of any claim for treble damages on obtaining restitution of the leased premises.—Hogsett v. Ellis, 17 Mich. 351.

¶ 24. A person evicted contrary to the forcible entry and detainer statute cannot recover damages for being disturbed in his possession of the land, but he may recover compensation for any injuries done to himself or his personal property in the course of the eviction.—McIntyre v. Murphy, 153 Mich. 342.

Statutory grounds for summary proceedings, see as follows:

Holding over a demise or executory contract for purchase of lands, Jud. Act, chap. XXX, § 12, ¶ 1; Comp. L. 1915, § 13240, ¶ 1.

Neglect to deliver possession or surrender on demand when rent is overdue, Jud. Act, chap. XXX, § 12, ¶ 2; Comp. L. 1915, § 13240, ¶ 2.

Any person continuing in possession after expiration of time for redemption from foreclosure or execution, or heir or devisee continuing in possession after probate sale for debts, Jud. Act, chap. XXX, § 12, ¶ 3; Comp. L. 1915, § 13240, ¶ 3.

Tenant at will or by sufferance holding over after notice to quit, Jud. Act, chap. XXX, § 12, ¶ 4; Comp. L. 1915, § 13240, ¶ 4.

¶ 25. Summary proceedings may be brought against one who is in possession either as a contract purchaser or as a lessee, and who, being in default, is a tenant at will and liable to be ousted on notice.—Moody v. Seaman, 46 Mich. 74.

¶ 26. Summary proceedings to recover possession from a tenant who holds from year to year and whose rent is payable annually, but who has failed to keep it up, can be instituted if, after written demand of payment and notice to quit has been served upon him, he still neglects for seven days to pay (How. St., § 8295).—Judd v. Fairs, 53 Mich. 518.

¶ 27. How. St., § 8295, which provides for the recovery by summary proceedings of leased premises for nonpayment of rent, does not authorize the commencement of such proceedings before the rent paid has been fully earned.—Barber v. Stone, 104 Mich. 90.

¶ 28. Where a tenant has been legally evicted by a third party, and has attorned, summary proceedings against him by his original landlord to recover the premises are not the proper remedy for determining the title to the land as between the landlord and the third party. The appropriate proceeding is ejectment against such third party.—Foss v. Van Driele, 47 Mich. 201.

¶ 29. Where a sub-lease could not, under the statute of frauds, have been valid for more than one year, summary proceedings instituted the day after the expiration of one year from its date, to recover the possession of the premises covered by it, are not premature.—Fratcher v. Smith, 104 Mich. 537.

¶ 30. A. conveyed by B., by warranty deed, premises of which C. was in possession, having held over for four months after the expiration of his lease from A. On C.'s refusing to surrender, B. leased to A. for a term expiring November 15th, with right to sublet, and A. leased to C. until November 1st, the lease containing a written waiver of notice to quit. Held, that summary proceedings were properly instituted by A. on November 2nd, C. refusing to vacate.—Lewis v. Brandle, 107 Mich. 7.

¶ 31. An agreement by a tenant to surrender the leased premises prior to the expiration of the lease cannot be enforced by summary proceedings to vacate.—Fish v. Thompson, 129 Mich. 313.

¶ 32. How. St., § 8295, providing for the remedy by a summary proceeding cannot be extended by construction, so as to enable an excluded tenant to enter under it against the landlord.—Freeborn v. LaLonde, 118 Mich. 662.

¶ 33. A lessee of lands cannot resort to the remedy by summary proceedings (How. St., § 8295) as to holding over of premises demised, where the owner refuses possession under the lease.—Freeborn v. LaLonde, 118 Mich. 662.

¶ 34. The remedy by summary proceedings (How. St., § 8295) is not available to a lessee of land, where the owner refuses possession under the lease, on the ground that such owner is a tenant at sufferance, it not being shown that the owner is holding over after a determination of his estate by a notice to quit.—Freeborn v. LaLonde, 118 Mich. 662.

¶ 35. Summary proceedings cannot be brought under Comp. Laws 1897, §§ 11164-11166, How. 2nd Ed., §§ 13684-13686, by a lessee against a landlord who refuses possession.—Chylowski v. Steinberg, 193 Mich. 547.

¶ 36. An executory contract of sale provided that in case of default in payment the vendor should be discharged from all obligations, and all payments made should be forfeited, without further notice, as stipulated damages. Possession was given, but the contract contained no express provision for it. On default the vendor proceeded under Comp. L. 1871, chap. 211, How. St., § 8295, which allows summary proceedings to dispossess one who holds contrary to the covenants of any extraordinary contract. Held, that as there were no covenants regulating possession the case was not within the statute.—Rawson v. Babcock, 40 Mich. 330.

¶ 37. Summary proceedings under How. St., § 8295, will not lie for the possession of land where each party claims title under a third person, such claims being hostile and adverse.—Hill v. Olin, 82 Mich. 643.

¶ 38. Since summary proceedings must be based on a legal title in the plaintiff, they cannot lie on a contract whereby plaintiff had bought in a leasehold at execution sale with an agreement that he should reconvey to defendant on being reimbursed, or if not reimbursed that the defendant should be regarded as a tenant holding over without permission, though the purchase was made as agreed and defendant fell in default.—Anderson v. Smith, 103 Mich. 446.

¶ 39. In a former suit a decree was entered against complainant on a land contract, and to carry out such decree he deeded to the defendant a certain warehouse alley, "together with all and singular the hereditaments and appurtenances thereunto belonging or in any wise appertaining." The decree had simply held that defendant was entitled to the alley and left open the question whether the complainant might be entitled to certain sheds located partly on the alley. Held, after the aforesaid deed complainant could not, for the purpose of getting possession of the sheds as personalty bring summary proceedings under 3 Comp. Laws 1897, § 11164, relating to the recovery of land.—Cunningham v. Kenyon, 156 Mich. 428.

¶ 40. The summary remedy under How. St., § 8295, subd. 3, for securing possession of premises "sold by virtue of any mortgage or execution," does not cover chancery foreclosure sales.—Dowling v. Hannant, 78 Mich. 115.

¶ 41. The summary remedy given by Laws of 1840, p. 85, § 5, where premises had been sold on mortgage foreclosure or on execution, applied only where there was privity between the parties, and not where the grantee of a purchaser at an execution sale sought to recover possession from a person holding adversely to the judgment debtor.—Royce v. Bradburn, 2 D. 377.

¶ 42. Where both parties to a summary proceeding to recover possession of lands trace title to the same person, and claim under him, there is sufficient privity of estate between them to sustain the proceeding.—Green v. Gill, 47 Mich. 86.

¶ 43. Summary proceedings to recover possession of land will not lie against the holder of a tax-title antedating the mortgage under which complainant claims as foreclosure purchaser; and there is no rule of law to prevent the holder of the tax-title from fortifying it, if he can, by purchasing other and earlier titles and incumbrances.—Brown v. Martin, 49 Mich. 565.

¶ 44. Summary proceedings before a circuit court commissioner to recover possession, under Comp. L., §§ 6706, 6707 (How. St., §§ 8295, 8296), are maintainable against a builder who refuses to turn over a building at the time fixed by his contract.—Wilkinson v. Williams, 51 Mich. 155.

¶ 45. Prior to the enactment of Laws 1881, Act No. 198 (amended How. St., § 8295, subd. 3), summary proceedings to recover possession would not lie against heirs in possession, peaceably obtained and held, of a testator's land.—Newkirk v. Tracey, 61 Mich. 174.

Termination of tenancies in general, see Landlord and Tenant, II.

Sufficiency of notices to quit in order to terminate tenancies in general, see Landlord and Tenant, II, IV, I.

¶ 46. Under the statute providing for summary proceedings to obtain possession of land before a circuit court commissioner no notice to quit is necessary to tenants holding over.—Smith v. Smith, 144 Mich. 139.

¶ 47. The statute giving a summary remedy against tenants at will or at sufferance, whose estate has been determined, only allows it when such determination has been by notice to quit.—Raynor v. Haggard, 18 Mich. 72.

¶ 48. Oral demand of payment of rent, followed on refusal thereof by a written demand of possession and notice to quit, constitute a sufficient compliance with How. St., § 8295, subd. 2, which requires a demand in writing to deliver possession or pay the rent.—Judd v. Fairs, 53 Mich. 518.

¶ 49. A purchaser in possession and in default under an executory contract, which did not provide for possession and which did stipulate for forfeiture of all payments as liquidated damages and for discharge of the vendor on default, is entitled as a tenant at will to three months' notice to quit.—Rawson v. Babcock, 40 Mich. 330.

¶ 50. The vendor of land in the possession of the vendee under a contract of sale was not entitled immediately to institute summary proceedings to recover possession thereof, upon vendee failing and refusing to pay certain taxes provided for in such contract; where such contract provided that after breach vendor shall have the immediate right to declare the same void, but contained no provision that breach of the contract should at once determine the contract relations; since the tenant was entitled to the notice prescribed by law. (Comp. L. 1897, § 11164.)—Miner v. Dickey, 140 Mich. 518.

¶ 51. Complaint in a summary proceeding to recover possession of land held under a contract of purchase may be made on the day a second notice of forfeiture and to quit was served, where a sufficient notice had been previously served which failed to describe all of the premises.—Patterson v. Hogstein, 183 Mich. 470.

¶ 52. Where summary proceedings to recover possession of land sold under foreclosure are begun within a short time after the expiration of the period of redemption, the defendant is not entitled to three months' notice to quit.—Lieblien v. Hansen, 178 Mich. 11.

¶ 53. When a proceeding to recover possession of land held over after statutory foreclosure is begun promptly after the expiration of the time for redemption, defendant is not entitled to three months' notice to quit.—Gage v. Sanborn, 106 Mich. 269.

¶ 54. Where a land contract does not intend that vendee's possession shall end on default in payment at a specified date (i. e., where there is provision made for interest after that date, and for an election on vendor's part to declare a forfeiture should vendee neglect or refuse to perform his covenants) vendee if allowed to remain several months after default without the exercise of such election cannot be dispossessed by summary proceedings without the three months' notice to quit to which a tenant at will or by sufferance is entitled (How. St., § 5774).—Knight v. Hartman, 81 Mich. 462.

¶ 55. Complainant owned property by virtue of a state homestead deed under Act No. 206, Pub. Acts 1893, § 131, and Act No. 141, Pub. Acts 1901, and asked defendant to surrender possession. Defendant stated he had no rights in the premises, and agreed to vacate within a week. Without serving notice to quit, the complainant started summary proceedings to recover possession. Held, complainant could not recover under either 3 Comp. Laws 1897, § 11154, for forcible entry, or 3 Comp. Laws 1897, § 11164, for summary proceedings. His sole remedy was ejectment.—Duff v. Hall, 158 Mich. 513.

§ 11. ——Service of notice.

Of notices in general, see Notices.

¶ 56. The notice to pay rent or surrender possession required by Comp. L. 1871, § 6707,

How. St., § 8295, providing for summary proceedings to recover the possession of land, may be served by delivery on the premises to a member of the tenant's family of suitable age and discretion, with the request to deliver it to the tenant.—McSloy v. Ryan, 27 Mich. 110.

¶ 57. It is not necessary that a personal demand on the leased premises for payment of the rent due be made to entitle the landlord to the common-law right or re-entry, under Comp. L. 1897, § 11164, which provides a means of terminating a tenancy for nonpayment of rent by a notice to quit or pay rent.—Cockerline v. Fisher, 140 Mich. 95.

§ 12. Waiver and estoppel of rights.

Disclaimer to expectant purchaser as estoppel to have summary possession, see Estoppel ¶ 182.
Estoppels in general, see Estoppel.
Election of remedies in general, see Election and Waiver.

¶ 58. A lease provided for the payment of rent in monthly instalments in advance. The tenant was in arrears for part of a month's rent, and failed to pay the rent for the succeeding month when due. The landlord served the tenant with notice to quit, and on the same day accepted from him a sum of money sufficient to pay the rent which had been earned and part of the instalment due for the succeeding month. After the expiration of the time limited in the notice for the payment of the rent, and before the part of the advance instalment paid had been fully earned, the landlord instituted summary proceedings to recover the leased premises. Held, that it is inconsistent for the landlord to assert a forfeiture and termination of the lease by said notice and action, and at the same time take and retain money, his only right to which is predicated upon the continuance of the tenant's right to occupy under the lease, and a judgment in favor of the tenant is affirmed.—Barber v. Stone, 104 Mich. 90.

¶ 59. An agreement by the purchaser under foreclosure to extend the time of redemption and to permit the mortgagors to continue in occupancy, which expressly preserves all rights, duties and liabilities of the parties, will not prevent summary proceedings to recover possession.—Audretsch v. Hurst, 126 Mich. 301.

Powers of commissioner or officer to subpoena witnesses and enforce orders, see Jud. Act, chap. XXX, § 21; Comp. L. 1915, § 13249.

¶ 60. Jurisdiction of a circuit court commissioner of the proceeding is not ousted by mere filing of plea of title, nor until it appears that question of title is necessarily involved.—Butler v. Bertrand, 97 Mich. 59.

¶ 61. The mere assertion by defendant that the title to the land is in question does not oust the commissioner's jurisdiction.—Barrett v. Cox, 112 Mich. 220.

¶ 62. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 11164, providing when summary proceedings may be commenced where the relationship of landlord and tenant has existed, the court is not divested of jurisdiction because the defendant claims title where the proofs show the occupancy to have been instituted by agreement for compensation and vacation on request and knowledge of the relationship in the present holder.—Chapman v. Nehman, 128 Mich. 295.

¶ 63. A circuit court commissioner is not ousted of jurisdiction of a summary proceeding to recover possession of demised premises on the expiration of a lease, by the lessee attempting to dispute his landlord's title by showing an attornment to a third person who held a tax title at the inception of the tenancy.—Balch v. Radford, 182 Mich. 292.

¶ 64. Where, under 3 Comp. Laws 1897, § 11164, subd. 1, in a summary proceeding to recover land, the defendant in his plea states that the ownership of the land is in his wife, but offers no evidence to that effect, a question of title is not raised so as to deprive the commissioner of jurisdiction.—Tefft v. Tefft, 154 Mich. 239.

Person entitled to make complaint for summary proceedings, see Jud. Act, chap. XXX, § 13; Comp. L. 1915, § 13241.

¶ 65. Proceedings to recover premises will not lie where complainant himself does not show that he is at the time entitled to possession.—McGuffie v. Carter, 42 Mich. 497; Pickard v. Kleis, 56 Mich. 604.

¶ 66. The general rule is that the possession of a tenant is not such a possession as entitles his landlord to bring the action for forcible entry and detainer, when a tenant is disseised; it should be instituted by the tenant.—Vincent v. Brant, 101 Mich. 60.

¶ 67. A lessee cannot prior to expiration of a sublease intrude into possession and maintain forcible entry and detainer against one entering under the sublessee.—Vincent v. Brant, 101 Mich. 60.

¶ 68. A landlord colluding with a subtenant and thus entering has no more rights against the tenant than the subtenant has. —Vincent v. Brant, 101 Mich. 60.

¶ 69. A lessor who, before the termination of the lease, relets the premises to another tenant for a term to commence at the expiration of the former lease, and contracts to put the second lessee into possession, can maintain summary proceedings against the first tenant on the expiration of his term, if he refuses to surrender possession.—Vincent v. Defield, 98 Mich. 84.

¶ 70. A lessor who has not consented to the assignment of a lease may bring action under Comp. L. 1897, § 11164, governing summary proceedings to recover possession of land, to recover possession of premises of which the lessee has assigned the lease contrary to a covenant against assignment without the consent of the lessor.—Marvin v. Hartz, 130 Mich. 26.

§ 15. ——Assignees of vendors or lessors.
Assignment to several in common, see post ¶ 73.

¶ 71. Under Comp. L. 1871, chap. 211, giving a summary remedy against persons holding lands contrary to the conditions or covenants of executory contracts of purchase, an assignee of the vendor may institute the proceedings as well as the vendor himself.—Vos v. Dykema, 26 Mich. 399.

¶ 72. Under R. S. 1838, a suit against a lessee to recover possession of the demised premises on account of the non-payment of rent, etc., was held properly brought by the lessor in his own name, although he had previously assigned the rents to accrue under the lease to a third person.—Chamberlain v. Brown, 2 D. 120.

§ 16. ——Joint and several complaints.

¶ 73. The statutory proceeding to recover possession of land from a tenant cannot be maintained by one of two independent grantees of the lessor under the provision in the lease that the lessor is to have the right of selling the land on certain conditions.—Abeel v. Hubbell, 52 Mich. 37.

¶ 74. The defendant must represent the entire interest; and tenants in common of the whole estate can join in summary proceedings to recover possession.—Moody v. Seaman, 46 Mich. 74.

¶ 75. An intestate's widow and the heirs at law represent the whole possessory estate, and where the widow has the right of possession in behalf of the heirs, and thus represents the whole title, she can bring summary proceedings to recover its possession without waiting for the assignment of her dower to her.—Moody v. Seaman, 46 Mich. 74.

§ 17. Complaint for forcible entry and detainer.

Pleading the damages for the entry, see Damages § 247.
Pleading right to treble damages, see Damages § 260.
Statutory provisions as to complaint, see Jud. Act, chap. XXX, § 3; Comp. L. 1915, § 13231.

¶ 76. A complaint under R. S. 1838, for unlawful and forcible entry into lands, etc., was required to contain the same substantive allegations that would be requisite in an indictment under section 1 of the same chapter; and the complainant should be held to the same proof, substantially, that would be necessary to justify a conviction upon such indictment.—Davis v. Ingersoll, 2 D. 372.

¶ 77. The complaint must show that it is made by the person entitled to the possession, or by his agent or attorney.—Bush v. Dunham, 4 Mich. 339.

¶ 78. The proper forms of complaint under the statute of forcible entries and detainers suggested.—Bush v. Dunham, 4 Mich. 339.

§ 18. ——Allegations of right to possession and entry.

Showing as to person making complaint, see ante ¶ 77.
In summary proceedings, see post § 21.

¶ 79. A complaint under the Forcible Entry and Detainer Act (How. St., § 8286) must allege that the complainant is entitled to the possession of the premises at the time the complaint is made.—Bush v. Dunham, 4 Mich. 339.

¶ 80. The complaint need not set forth the particulars of the complainant's right, or of the forcible entry and detainer; but enough must be set forth to show that the court has jurisdiction.—Bush v. Dunham, 4 Mich. 339.

¶ 81. The general allegation in the complaint that defendant is in possession of the premises and unlawfully holds them against the rights of the plaintiff is sufficient, though possession was taken or held by force (Comp. L., § 6697, How. St., § 8286).—Gault v. Stormont, 51 Mich. 636.

¶ 82. In special proceedings by a guardian to recover possession of the lands of his wards, a complaint was held sufficient which stated that complainant was sole testamentary guardian of certain minors, who were named, being duly nominated as such in their father's last will, which had been duly probated; that at a certain date he was in quiet and peaceful possession of certain described lands; that on that date defendant entered said premises and unlawfully holds them, and holds complainant out of possession by force, contrary to statute; and that at the time of said entry complainant was and ever since has been and still is well entitled to the same, and that he prays to be restored to possession.—Carpenter v. Harris, 51 Mich. 223.

¶ 83. A complaint alleging that complainant is the owner and landlord of the premises therein described; that defendant was a subtenant under complainant and is in possession of such premises, that she holds the same unlawfully and against the right of complainant, and forcibly detains the possession thereof, is sufficient under How. St., § 8286.—Kusterer v. Wise, 59 Mich. 382.

¶ 84. A bill of complaint filed by a tenant of a building with the circuit court commissioner alleging that the defendant landlord owns the premises, of which complainant is lessee, against the rights of such complainant, and that such complainant is entitled to possession of same, and praying that proceedings be taken for the restoration of the possession of such premises to complainant, but failing to allege that force or intimidation was used against complainant to keep him out of the premises, is not sufficient as a complaint under Comp. Laws 1897, §§ 11153-11162, How. 2nd Ed., §§ 13673-13682, providing for the recovery of possession of land which has been entered or detained by force.—Chylowski v. Steinberg, 193 Mich. 547.

¶ 85. Where the complaint alleges an unlawful and forcible entry, and also a detainer by force, the latter allegation may be rejected as surplusage.—Seitz v. Miles, 16 Mich. 456.

§ 19. ——Description of premises.

In summary proceedings, see post § 22.

¶ 86. In proceedings for forcible entry and detainer, the description of the premises must be sufficiently definite to enable the officer executing the writ to restore complainant to possession, and exclude defendant therefrom.—Gardner v. Hickok, 102 Mich. 497.

¶ 87. The complainant, claiming to have been forcibly excluded from the possession of a part of a stable leased of defendant, instituted proceedings for forcible entry and detainer. The premises were described in the complaint as "the following described lands and premises, situate in the village of Allegan, in said county, to wit: The first two stalls at the left of the entrance to the first floor, and standing room on that floor for a buggy, and the north half of the upstairs, of the third entrance, counting from the north side, to the building known as the 'Rink Building,' situate on the east side of Water street, in the village of Allegan, situate on lots 232 and 233." Held, that the description is too indefinite to enable the officer executing the writ of restitution to restore complainant to possession, and exclude the defendant therefrom; and that the only remedy open to complainant is an action for breach of the lease.—Gardner v. Hickok, 102 Mich. 497.

Pleas and objections by defendant, see post § 33.
Statutory requisites of the complaint, see Jud. Act, chap. XXX, § 13; Comp. L. 1915, § 13241.

¶ 88. The complaint is of the nature of a pleading, and the degree of certainty with which it should describe the premises should be measured by the rules of pleading rather than by those which govern contracts.—Clark v. Gage, 19 Mich. 507.

¶ 89. The complaint must show upon its face that it is made by the person entitled to the possession, or by his agent or attorney. —Bryan v. Smith, 10 Mich. 229.

§ 21. ——Right and title of complainant.
In forcible entry and unlawful detainer, see ante § 18.

¶ 90. The complaint may be in general form, without setting forth the particular facts making a case within the statute; but it must show that complainant is entitled to the possession of the premises at the time of the complaint.—Bryan v. Smith, 10 Mich. 229.

¶ 91. In summary proceedings under How. St., §§ 8295, 8296, to recover the possession of land sold on mortgage foreclosure, and held after the time for redemption has expired a complaint alleging that defendant is in possession of the premises therein set forth, and holds the same unlawfully and against the rights of complainant, who is lawfully entitled to the possession of the same, is sufficient.—Gage v. Sanborn, 106 Mich. 269.

¶ 92. A complaint alleged that complainant was the landlord of the premises described, and respondent the tenant thereof; that respondent holds said premises unlawfully and against the right of said complainant, who is entitled to the possession of them in her own right and as guardian of the minor heirs of a designated person. Held sufficient. —Moody v. Seaman, 46 Mich. 74.

¶ 93. A complaint was held insufficient to confer jurisdiction which only showed that complainant became entitled to possession upwards of fourteen months before the proceeding was instituted.—Bryan v. Smith, 10 Mich. 229.

¶ 94. A complaint which sets out that the respondent is in possession of the premises, describing them, and contains the usual allegations of the common printed form, but with the blanks for the names left unfilled, and closes with an allegation that the respondent "therefore holds said premises unlawfully and against the right of this complainant, and that this complainant is entitled to the possession of the same," etc., is sufficient; the printed portion with the unfilled blanks being treated as if erased, and the word "therefore" rejected as surplusage. —Bennett v. Robinson, 27 Mich. 26.

§ 22. ——Description of land.
Amending description, see post ¶ 103.
In forcible entry, see ante § 19.

¶ 95. The following description was held insufficient: "A farm in the town of Quincy in said county, lately occupied by complainant, being the same farm mentioned in the writing executed between the said Clark (defendant) and complainant, and dated November 24, 1866, by which complainant let the said farm to said Clark."—Clark v. Gage, 19 Mich. 507.

¶ 96. In proceedings to obtain possession of land bought on mortgage foreclosure, it is sufficient to follow the description in the mortgage, especially where occupancy by the mortgagor removes all ambiguity.—Cook v. Wiles, 42 Mich. 439.

§ 23. Jurisdictional allegations.
See also ante ¶¶ 80, 93.

¶ 97. The complainant in summary proceeding instituted before a justice need not state the fact that no circuit court commissioner resides in the township. The statute (How. St., § 8296) does not require the affidavit so to state.—Grand Rapids Nat. Bank v. Kritzer, 116 Mich. 688.

¶ 98. Prior to R. S. 1846 the complaint was required to set out all the facts necessary to give the justices jurisdiction of the particular case.—Caswell v. Ward, 2 D. 374; Royce v. Bradburn, 2 D. 377.

¶ 99. A complaint filed with a justice in a proceeding to recover possession of premises is not jurisdictionally defective in omitting the name of the defendant from the body of the instrument if there is enough in it to supply the name.—Olson v. Muskegon Circuit Judge, 49 Mich. 85.

§ 24. Verification.

¶ 100. A complaint, verified as being true "to the best of the knowledge, information and belief" of affiant, is void.—Seitz v. Miles, 16 Mich. 456; Miles v. Goffinet, 16 Mich. 472.

¶ 101. A complaint in a summary proceeding to recover the possession of land may be verified in a county other than that in which the land lies.—Patterson v. Hogstein, 183 Mich. 470.

§ 25. Amendments of pleadings.

Amendments and further pleadings on appeal, see post § 53.

General law of amendments, see Pleadings, VI.

¶ 102. The general statute with reference to amendments, 3 Comp. Laws 1897, § 10268, is applicable to summary proceedings for the recovery of possession of land under 3 Comp. Laws 1897, § 11165.—Gensler v. Nicholas, 151 Mich. 529.

¶ 103. In summary proceedings under 3 Comp. Laws 1897, § 11165, a faulty description of the premises in the complaint is amendable where the statute of amendment permits an amendment either in form or substance, where the object of the amendment is to correct an error in stating the real subject of controversy between the parties, where the parties are in no way misled, and where no question arises under the statute of limitations.—Gensler v. Nicholas, 151 Mich. 529.

¶ 104. Proceedings to recover possession of real estate may be begun by summons instead of by warrant, at complainant's option.—Carpenter v. Harris, 51 Mich. 223.

¶ 105. The summons in a summary proceeding to recover the possession of land need not be issued on the same day that the complaint is verified.—Patterson v. Hogstein, 183 Mich. 470.

¶ 106. A summons in a summary proceeding to recover the possession of land is valid although issued two days after the verification of the complaint.—Patterson v. Hogstein, 183 Mich. 470.

¶ 107. A complaint in a summary proceeding for the recovery of the possession of land was sworn to on one day but the summons not issued until the next. Held, that the proceedings should not have been dismissed on this ground.—Gruler v. McRoberts, 48 Mich. 316.

¶ 108. In a statutory proceeding to obtain possession of land the summons was dated August 29, 1864, while the complaint, itself undated, showed that it was sworn to August 29, 1861. The docket did not show in what year the proceeding was instituted. There was a plea to the complaint. Proof was offered in a collateral proceeding to show that the date of the jurat was, by mistake, written 1861 instead of 1864. Whether such proof was admissible, and whether the proceedings were void for irregularity, quære, the court being equally divided.—Allen v. Carpenter, 15 Mich. 25.

¶ 109. Comp. L. 1857, § 4488, How. St., § 8298 requires two entire days to intervene between the day of service and the return day of summons in summary proceedings.—Sallee v. Ireland, 9 Mich. 154.

¶ 110. Three entire days must intervene between the day of issuing and the day of the return of the summons, under Comp. L. 1857, § 4987, How. St., § 8297, in summary proceedings.—Sallee v. Ireland, 9 Mich. 154.

¶ 111. A justice does not lose jurisdiction of a proceeding to recover possession of land merely because the constable does not make return to the summons until an hour after the time fixed, if the parties are present and remain in attendance without objection.—Olson v. Muskegon Circuit Judge, 49 Mich. 85.

§ 28. ——Substituted service.

¶ 112. Jurisdiction in summary proceedings is not acquired by substituted service of summons before the expiration of the time for personal service.—Crozier v. Allen, 117 Mich. 171.

§ 29. Venire and jury.

¶ 113. Where, under R. S. 1838, a warrant and venire were issued and served, and on the return day the parties and most of the jurors summoned appeared, and the cause was then adjourned to a future day, and the justice thereupon issued a second venire, by which another jury was summoned, before whom the case was tried, held, that the justices had no power to direct the second jury to be summoned, but that they should have required the jurors who appeared in obedience to the first venire to appear on the adjourned day, and if their number was insufficient to complete the panel the deficiency should have been supplied by summoning additional jurors by virtue of the same venire.—Latimer v. Woodward, 2 D. 368.

§ 30. Hour for appearance.

Provision for notation of nonappearance in minutes, see Jud. Act, chap. XXX, § 18; Comp. L. 1915, § 13246.

¶ 114. A circuit court commissioner is not obliged to wait one hour, after the time at which a summons in summary proceedings to recover the possession of land is made returnable, for defendant to appear.—Fowler v. Bredin, 98 Mich. 133.

§ 31. Continuances.

Continuances on appeal with payments on account as discharging sureties for appeal, see post ¶ 205.

Provisions as to adjournments on nonappearance in summary proceedings after return of due service, see Jud. Act, chap. XXX, § 17; Comp. L. 1915, § 13245.

Provisions for adjournments after issue joined, see Jud. Act, chap. XXX, § 19; Comp. L. 1915, § 13247.

Custody of defendant in forcible entry cases during adjournments in default of bond for costs, see Jud. Act, chap. XXX, § 20; Comp. L. 1915, § 13248.

¶ 115. Continuances might have been granted under R. S. 1838, though the power to continue was not expressly conferred; it being incident to the jurisdiction to hear and determine.—Caswell v. Ward, 2 D. 374.

§ 32. Declaration.

Requisites and sufficiency of the complaint, see ante §§ 17-23.

Amendments and further pleadings on appeal, see post § 53.

In action on appeal bond, see post § 62.

¶ 116. No declaration is necessary in these proceedings; the complaint stands in lieu of a declaration.—Caswell v. Ward, 2 D. 374; Bush v. Dunham, 4 Mich. 339.

§ 33. Pleas and objections.

Defendant's pleadings in actions at law in general, see Pleading, III, IV; Justices of the Peace, IV, D.

Statutory provisions as to pleas to complaint for summary proceedings, see Jud. Act, chap. XXX, § 16; Comp. L. 1915, § 13244.

¶ 117. How. St., § 8299, which provides that, upon the return, duly served, of the summons issued in summary proceedings to recover the possession of land, defendant may plead not guilty to the complaint, or, if he neglect or refuse to plead thereto, the officer before whom the proceedings are pending shall enter such plea for him, contemplates a plea of not guilty, simply.—Hill v. Carter, 101 Mich. 158.

¶ 118. Under the statutory plea of not guilty the point that title to the land is involved may be raised.—Butler v. Bertrand, 97 Mich. 59.

§ 34. ——To defects in complaint, process or venire.

Jurisdictional questions open on appeal, see post § 54.

Time for issuance of process, see ante § 26.

Pleading general issue as waiver by appearance of defects in summons and venire, see Appearance § 7, ¶ 21.

¶ 119. The remedy for mere formal defects in a complaint before a justice to recover possession of lands or in return to the process is by motion in the circuit court to which the case went on special appeal and not by mandamus to the supreme court to compel vacation of judgment.—Olson v. Muskegon Circuit Judge, 49 Mich. 85.

¶ 120. Pleading the general issue to the complaint was held a waiver of irregularities in the summons and venire.—Falkner v. Beers, 2 D. 117.

¶ 121. Defendant moved to quash proceedings before a circuit court commissioner for want of due service of the summons. The commissioner took time for giving his decision; the complainant stipulating to submit the motion without argument, if defendant would plead to the complaint, which he did. It was held that defendant did not, by so pleading, waive his objection to the service.—Sallee v. Ireland, 9 Mich. 154.

§ 35. Issues and variance.

Burden of proof on the issues, see post § 39.

Waiver of objections by plea of general issue, see ante § 34.

¶ 122. The complainant, under R. S. 1838, p. 490, chap. 5, and Sess. L. 1840, p. 83, in his evidence is confined to proof of the facts alleged in the complaint.—Caswell v. Ward, 2 D. 374.

¶ 123. On trial of a complaint for forcible entry, evidence of force employed to maintain a possession is not admissible as relating back to the entry in such manner as to make it forcible also. Forcible entry is entirely distinct from forcible detainer.—Hoffman v. Harrington, 22 Mich. 52.

¶ 124. A complaint under the Forcible Entry and Detainer Act, being on oath, the time alleged therein is not immaterial in the sense in which it is so held in indictments. Two distinct occurrences cannot properly be submitted to the jury under one complaint alleging a time different from that proved for either, and if they could, a complainant can no more claim recovery on one upon which the jury has found in his favor than the defendant can claim a discharge because acquitted on the other.—Hoffman v. Harrington, 25 Mich. 146.

¶ 125. Where a suit for forcible entry had twice been brought to the supreme court for review, said court took notice of the fact that on a former trial the complainant sought to recover upon proof of a forcible entry on the day named in the complaint, and held that, having once gone to trial with evidence directed to the events of that precise day, the occurrence would be considered as fixed for that day, and the ground of the complaint could not be changed to an occurrence on another day at the new trial.—Hoffman v. Harrington, 25 Mich. 146.

¶ 126. In an action by summary proceedings to recover possession of premises where the lessee has assigned the lease contrary to a covenant therein against assignment without the consent of the lessor, the pleadings being in compliance with Comp. L. 1897, §§ 11165 and 11166 relating to summary proceedings to recover possession of land, the lessor is not bound to recover by showing forcible entry and detainer because of the fact that his counsel in his opening statement and argument stated that the action was brought for forcible detainer under How. St., chap. 286, in which the title "Forcible entry and detainer" is carried at the head of the entire chapter relating to summary proceedings, which error was corrected in Comp. Laws, 1897.—Marvin v. Hartz, 130 Mich. 26.

§ 36. ——Title to the land.

Under general plea, see also ante ¶ 118.
Ouster of jurisdiction by plea of title, see ante § 13.
Equitable titles and defenses, see post § 37.
Right to show want of title to defeat complainant's right to institute proceedings, see post ¶ 153.

Admissibility of deeds for other purposes than trial of title, see post § 40.
Dismissal when title comes in issue, see post § 46.
Impropriety of summary proceedings where claims are adverse, see also ante ¶ 37.

¶ 127. Title to real estate cannot be put in issue or considered in summary proceedings to recover possession thereof.—Miller v. Havens, 51 Mich. 482; Hoffman v. Clark, 63 Mich. 175.

¶ 128. Ejectment, not summary proceedings, is the proper remedy for determining title as between a landlord and a third party to whom the former's tenant has attorned after a legal eviction by such third party.—Foss v. Van Driele, 47 Mich. 201.

¶ 129. A homestead right, though not strictly an estate, sufficiently involves the question of title to fall within the rule that questions of title are not triable in mere summary proceedings before a circuit court commissioner to recover possession of real estate.—Riggs v. Sterling, 51 Mich. 157.

¶ 130. Boundary lines cannot be tried in a summary proceeding before a circuit court commissioner.—Drake v. Happ, 92 Mich. 580.

¶ 131. Where plaintiff claimed the premises under a sheriff's deed on execution sale, while defendant's deed from a third person covenanted against incumbrances "except a certain levy," describing the one under which plaintiff claimed an inquiry as to whether plaintiff was estopped by the recital in his deed to raise the question of paramount title involved of itself the question of title to land which could not be tried in summary proceedings.—Hill v. Olin, 82 Mich. 643.

¶ 132. In summary proceedings to recover possession of land sold on statutory foreclosure and held after the time for redemption has expired, the question of the validity of the foreclosure, and also the question whether the premises were redeemed, may be tried: This would not be a litigation of conflicting titles to real estate.—Gage v. Sanborn, 106 Mich. 269.

¶ 133. In proceedings instituted by a first mortgagee to gain possession of foreclosed premises, a tenant of a second mortgagee who has foreclosed, and who was not made a party to the foreclosure of the earlier mortgage, may show that the title under the second foreclosure as a defense until such time as the defect in the first is cured.—Walker v. Fisher, 117 Mich. 72.

¶ 134. In summary proceedings against one who holds over after a sale of real estate on execution beyond the statutory period the question of the validity of the title under the sheriff's deed is properly triable.—Grand Rapids Nat. Bank v. Kritzer, 116 Mich. 688.

¶ 135. While a tenant cannot, during the continuance of the tenancy, dispute the title under which he obtained possession, he may show, in summary proceedings to obtain possession of the leased premises, that his landlord's title has been extinguished by a sale of the land for taxes, and that he has attorned to the purchaser at such sale.—Jenkinson v. Winans, 109 Mich. 524.

¶ 136. In a summary proceeding under C. L. 1897, § 11164, How. 2nd Ed., § 13684, to recover possession of land sold under a mortgage foreclosure and execution thereunder after the period of redemption has expired, the commissioner has jurisdiction to determine the validity of the foreclosure proceedings and the validity of the sheriff's deeds. —Lieblien v. Hansen, 178 Mich. 11.

§ 37. ——Equitable titles and defenses.

¶ 137. The question of fraud in the procurement of a deed is triable in a court of equity only, and cannot, therefore, be raised in summary proceedings, to oust the commissioner of jurisdiction.—Gale v. Eckhart, 107 Mich. 465.

¶ 138. In summary proceedings by the holder of the legal title to recover possession of land, defendant cannot set up as a defense an oral agreement made by him with complainant for the purchase of the land, coupled with evidence of part performance on his part, his remedy, if any, being in equity. —Bartlett v. Bartlett, 103 Mich. 293.

¶ 139. In summary proceeding to obtain possession of land leased by the defendant from the plaintiff at an annual rental for several years, after the defendant had deeded the property to the plaintiff with the right to repurchase on a payment of the amount of a debt owing, the defense that the deed was a mortgage is purely equitable and not admissible.—Cottrell v. Moran, 138 Mich. 410.

¶ 140. In summary proceedings to obtain possession of land brought after the expiration of the period of redemption by the assignee of the equitable interests of the purchaser at the foreclosure sale, a mortgagor who has allowed the period of redemption to expire without redeeming cannot set up as a defense that he was induced so to do by the deceit of such assignee, such facts being cognizable only in a court of equity. —Roff v. Miller, 189 Mich. 558; McCrery v. Roff, Id.

¶ 141. Where by a misunderstanding the plaintiff, instead of making a deed to the defendant, made it to his son, who, with the consent of the father, borrowed money from the plaintiff to erect a house on the premises, giving a mortgage on the whole lot as security, which was foreclosed, and possession taken of part of the lot and proceeding taken to get possession of the remainder under Comp. Laws 1897, § 11164 et seq., which was resisted by the defendant on the ground that he was the owner, the court will not consider the case because the question of title cannot be litigated under the sections of the statute referred to.— Northern Michigan Building & Loan Ass'n v. Fors, 171 Mich. 331.

§ 38. Burden of proof.

Presumptions, see post § 39.

¶ 142. Where the proceeding is by the purchaser at a statutory foreclosure of a mortgage, the complainant must prove the regularity of all the proceedings on the foreclosure.—Caswell v. Ward, 2 D. 374.

¶ 143. The issue involved in the statutory proceeding for the possession of lands is not only whether rent is overdue, but whether a proper written demand of payment or possession was made the required length of time before the complaint was made; the rent overdue is that due when the demand was made; and any subsequent case that is tried on a new demand is for a cause that originates with that demand, and is therefore a different case from any based upon a former demand and already passed upon.—McSloy v. Ryan, 27 Mich. 110.

¶¶ 144, 145. In a suit to obtain restitution of premises after expiration of a lease, a verdict cannot be rendered against one who has been joined as a defendant as occupying under the lessee, unless it is affirmatively shown that such person was in possession; and his failure to deny such occupation when testifying will not supply the want of proof thereof.—Canfield v. Burns, 66 Mich. 684.

¶ 146. When complainant shows possession by defendant and title in himself, a presumption of tenancy is raised.—Butler v. Bertrand, 97 Mich. 59.

§ 40. Admissibility of evidence.

Scope of issues, see ante §§ 35-37.

General law of evidence, see Evidence.

Right to give evidence of eviction or detainer when admitted, see also Evidence ¶ 392.

Inadmissibility of testimony that agent serving notice to quit told tenant that it might be ignored, see Evidence ¶ 972.

¶ 147. Adverse titles cannot be tried in the summary proceedings provided by statute to recover possession of lands; but deeds of conveyance may nevertheless become competent evidence in such proceedings, and cannot be objected to for not tending to show privity between the parties, as that need not be shown, and in cases of tenancy by sufferance does not exist.—Bennett v. Robinson, 27 Mich. 26.

¶ 148. Where suit is brought before a justice for a forcible detainer, and the complaint alleges the entry to have been peaceable, defendant can show that he entered under a bona fide claim of title and without collusion with the complainant's tenant.— Farmer v. Hunter, 45 Mich. 337.

¶ 149. In summary proceedings to recover the possession of land, a deed purporting to convey the premises in question to complainant is admissible to show his right of possession.—Gale v. Eckhart, 107 Mich. 465.

¶ 150. In proceeding under the statute for obtaining the possession of lands (Comp. L. 1871, § 6710 et seq., How. St., §§ 8295-8312). evidence of the landlord's breach of covenants to repair and make improvements, which are independent of the covenant to pay rent, is irrelevant; this proceeding is not one in which, even if the amount of rent due be in issue, there can be any deduction of offsets, or by way of recoupment.—McSloy v. Ryan, 27 Mich. 110.

¶ 151. In a summary proceeding by the grantee of the vendor in an executory land contract to recover possession from a vendee holding contrary to the terms of his contract, the warranty deed under which the grantee claims is admissible in evidence; it does not involve the trial of title to real estate, for its validity or sufficiency cannot be questioned as a conveyance of title, but only as a transfer of the title.—Vos v. Dykema, 26 Mich. 399.

¶ 152. In proceedings to dispossess a purchaser on the ground that he held possession contrary to the covenants of an executory contract, the refusal to admit evidence that the vendor had served notice on the purchaser of his election to forfeit the contract is not prejudicial where there had been no covenant relating to possession; it could not put the purchaser in the position of one holding contrary to covenant.—Rawson v. Babcock, 40 Mich. 330.

¶ 153. Where proceedings to recover possession of land are brought against a tenant holding over, the latter may show that the complainant had parted with his title before bringing the proceedings and was no longer entitled to possession.—McGuffie v. Carter, 42 Mich. 497.

Conclusiveness of alimony award in summary proceedings for possession, see Divorce § 175.

¶ 154. Where complainant in a summary proceeding showed the possession of defendants and title in himself, and then rested without showing any relation of tenancy, and where defendants, not seeing fit to rest their case upon complainant's showing, supplied by their evidence the element lacking, complainant's case was established.—Barrett v. Cox, 112 Mich. 220.

¶ 154a. On summary proceedings a verdict cannot be rendered against one joined as defendant as occupying under lessee, unless it is affirmatively shown that he was in possession.—Canfield v. Burns, 66 Mich. 684.

§ 42. Province of court and jury; instructions.

Force in the entry as jury question, see also ante ¶ 18.
General law of instructions, see Instructions.

¶ 155. In special proceedings to recover possession of land the jury are judges of law and fact and do not require instructions.—Chamberlain v. Brown, 2 D. 120; Hart v. Lindley, 50 Mich. 20.

¶ 156. In suits before two justices of the peace, under the statute of forcible entry and detainer (R. S. 1838, p. 490, ch. 5, as amended in 1840), the jury were the judges of both the law and the facts. Misdirection of the court to the jury could not, therefore, be assigned for error. But it might be assigned for error that the verdict was against law.—Chamberlain v. Brown, 2 D. 120.

¶ 157. In a summary proceeding to recover land, under 3 Comp. Laws 1897, § 11164, subd. 1, it appeared that a lease between the complainants and defendant as lessors and lessee, respectively, had expired. Defendant in his plea set up that the land in question belonged to his wife, and was a homestead, but offered no evidence to support the plea. Complainants proved ownership of only a part interest. Held, it was error to direct a verdict for the defendant, since the record revealed the relation of landlord and tenant between complainants and defendant.—Tefft v. Tefft, 154 Mich. 239.

§ 43. Custody, conduct and deliberations of jury.

Presumption on appeal as to harmfulness of irregularity, see post § 55.
In civil trials in general, see Trial, VIII.

¶ 158. In a statutory proceeding by a landlord to recover premises in the tenant's possession the parties are not prejudiced by the fact that the jury were shut up by the commissioner before whom the proceedings were held, instead of by a constable, especially if no objection was made. Nor is it important that at the jury's request the commissioner went into the jury room after telling them that he would give them no instructions.—Hart v. Lindley, 50 Mich. 20.

§ 44. Verdicts and findings.

Direction of verdict, see ante § 42.
Findings on review, see post § 57.
Separate or joint verdict as to codefendant in possession, see ante ¶ 144.

Verdicts and findings in civil cases in general, see Verdicts and Findings.

¶ 159. The finding of the amount due, though required to be stated in the judgment for restitution, is in fact no part of it and does not bind the complainant in an action for the rent.—McSloy v. Ryan, 27 Mich. 110.

¶ 160. A finding "that the relation of landlord and tenant existed between the parties; that the defendant was a tenant at will; that said tenancy was terminated by notice to quit before the commencement of this suit," warrants a judgment for the possession of lands.—Sawyer v. Van Housen, 39 Mich. 89.

¶ 161. Findings that complainant, being in possession of and claiming to own the property described in the complaint, leased the same to a tenant with the right to sublet; that thereupon such tenant sublet three rooms of the premises to defendant, whose real reason for renting the rooms was that she claimed she had a homestead right to the premises, and she wanted to get possession thereof in order to enforce her rights; that subsequently the tenant gave up his lease, and requested defendant to move; that defendant remained and took possession of the entire house; that immediately thereafter the agent of complainant ordered defendant to leave, which order she for some time disregarded; but that before suit commenced, she surrendered up possession and at the time of the trial was not in possession; and that defendant unlawfully withheld such premises, were sufficient to sustain judgment for restitution.—Kusterer v. Wise, 59 Mich. 382.

Provisions as to form and matter of judgment in summary proceedings, including provision for finding and adjudging amount due, if any, see Jud. Act, chap. XXX, § 16; Comp. L. 1915, § 13244.

¶ 162. A judgment against a tenant for possession does not necessarily divest him of his right under the terms of the lease to a share in the crops, and if the judgment is not based on a forfeiture he is at least entitled to his proportion of crops already harvested.—Stancer v. Roe, 55 Mich. 169.

¶ 163. Complainant in summary proceedings to recover possession of land from a tenant who is found to have been wrongfully holding over when the proceeding was begun is entitled to judgment for restitution and to damages and costs; and if, pending appeal by the tenant, the term claimed by him expires and the landlord regains possession, the landlord's right to recover damages and costs upon affirmance of the judgment in his favor is not thereby lost, even though he no longer requires process to restore him to possession.—Peters v. Fisher, 50 Mich. 331.

§ 46. Dismissal when title becomes involved.

Dismissal on appeal on raising issue of title, see post § 56.

¶ 164. A circuit court commissioner should dismiss a summary proceeding brought before him to recover the possession of leased premises when a question of title is raised by defendant's offer to show a sale of the land for taxes to a third party, to whom defendant claims to have attorned.—Jenkinson v. Winans, 109 Mich. 524.

¶ 165. The rule that summary proceedings to recover possession should be dismissed where the question of title is raised, does not apply to a case where the defendant shows an outstanding tax title to a third person to whom he has been paying rent where his arrangement with the complainant was entered into subsequent to the existence of the relationship with the third person and there had been no change of title or condition after possession gained as tenant of complainant.—Meeske v. Miller, 138 Mich. 87.

¶ 166. When action was brought under Comp. Laws 1897, § 11164, to recover possession of land, the trial court should have dismissed the action as soon as it appeared that a question of title was necessarily involved.—Northern Michigan Building & Loan Ass'n v. Fors, 171 Mich. 331.

Provision as to costs on restitution under summary proceedings, see Jud. Act, chap. XXX, § 18; Comp. L. 1915, § 13246.

¶ 167. Costs in proceedings before justices of the peace for forcible entries and detainers are to be taxed by the same rules as when before circuit court commissioners or other officers having jurisdiction in such cases. Comp. L. 1857, § 3779, How. St., § 6940 applies only to cases of which justices have jurisdiction under the justices' act and its amendments.—Dibell v. Brinkerhoff, 22 Mich. 371.

¶ 168. The taxation of costs by the commissioner is presumed regular under Comp. L. 1897, § 11163, providing for taxation for prevailing defendant in the same manner as costs of complainant recovering judgment.—Stuart v. Corlette, 129 Mich. 611.

§ 48. ——On appeal to circuit.

Liability for costs on appeal bond, see post § 58.

Bond or security for appeal, see post § 52.

Statutory provisions as to costs on appeal, see Jud. Act, chap. XXX, § 26; Comp. L. 1915, § 13254.

¶ 169. Under How. St., §§ 7026, 8307, 9004, the allowance of costs upon the trial of an appeal from a circuit court commissioner in summary proceedings to recover the possession of land is within the discretion of the circuit court.—Voight Brewery Co. v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 108 Mich. 356.

¶ 170. Where judgment was rendered in favor of the complainant, in a case where the complaint was insufficient to confer jurisdiction, and an appeal was taken to the circuit court, it was held that that court had jurisdiction, on reversing the judgment, to render judgment against the complainant for costs.—Bryan v. Smith, 10 Mich. 229.

¶ 171. Appeals from proceedings under the forcible entry and detainer act are allowable in the same manner as from judgments of justices of the peace.—Bearse v. Aldrich, 40 Mich. 529.

¶ 172. Discretion to allow appeals, if jurisdictional, is not reviewable.—Bearse v. Aldrich, 40 Mich. 529.

¶ 173. A proceeding to recover possession of lands under the statute of forcible entries, etc., being summary and unknown to the common law, certiorari, only, lies to bring the cause directly into the supreme court.—Parker v. Copland, 4 Mich. 528.

¶ 174. The supreme court, although it has power to review, upon a common-law certiorari, summary proceedings under the statute to recover possession of lands, will dismiss the writ, as the statute provides other remedies.—Farrell v. Taylor, 12 Mich. 113; Smith v. Reed, 24 Mich. 240.

¶ 175. The statute regulating certiorari in cases of forcible entry and detainer tried by a circuit court commissioner is the same that applies to justices' judgments.—Knapp v. Gambsy, 47 Mich. 375.

¶ 176. Certiorari should not be resorted to for the review of statutory proceedings to recover possession unless there is some fair ground for it on which the whole case can be disposed of justly and finally; but if a full review is desired an appeal should be taken.—Wilkinson v. Williams, 51 Mich. 155.

¶ 177. Certiorari will not lie, as a matter of right, to review the action of a circuit court commissioner in denying an application for a continuance in summary proceedings, since complete justice may be obtained by an appeal and a trial on the merits.—McNaughton v. Evert, 116 Mich. 141.

Dismissal or findings and judgment on appeal, see post §§ 56, 57.
For procedure in appealing from justices of the peace, see Justices of the Peace, V.

¶ 178. An affidavit on appeal from a commissioner's judgment in summary proceedings to recover land is sufficient under How. St., § 8307, if it follows the form commonly used on appeals from justices' courts; it need not state the nature of the action, when it arose, or when it was tried.—Hanaw v. Bailey, 83 Mich. 24.

¶ 179. The circuit court has jurisdiction to extend the time for appeals on good cause shown; such as being prevented by severe sickness from taking the appeal.—Bearse v. Aldrich, 40 Mich. 529.

§ 52. Bond or security on appeal.

Dismissal of appeal for failure of sureties to justify, see post § 56.
Obligation and liability on bond and actions or procedure to enforce it, see post §§ 58-62.
Statutory provisions as to bond, see Jud. Act, chap. XXX, § 24; Comp. L. 1915, § 13252.
Bond for certiorari, statutory provisions, see Jud. Act, chap. XXX, § 28; Comp. L. 1915, § 13256.

¶ 180. How. St., § 8307, providing that appeals may be taken in summary proceedings to recover the possession of land in the same manner as in cases of appeals from judgments rendered before justices of the peace, does not restrict the procedure on appeal to those provisions of the justices' act in existence when said section was adopted in the Revision of 1846, but, rather, is intended to furnish a rule for the conduct of appeals, to be ascertained by reference to the laws in force at the time the appeal is sought to be taken. The appeal bond in such case, therefore, may be approved by a deputy county clerk, under How. St., § 7000; but the sureties thereon must justify, as provided by section 7001.—Cole v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 106 Mich. 692.

¶ 181. Security for costs is not required by statute on appeal from summary proceedings before commissioner.—McDowd v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 41 Mich. 551.

¶ 182. Where, on an appeal in summary proceedings, the commissioner accepts the appeal bond and returns it with the appeal papers to the circuit court, it will be presumed in favor of the jurisdiction of that court that the commissioner approved the bond and fixed its penalty according to law.—Hanaw v. Bailey, 83 Mich. 24.

§ 53. Amendments and further pleadings on appeal.

¶ 183. Where a landlord recovers possession from his tenant in summary proceedings, and pending appeal by the tenant the term claimed by him expires, and the landlord immediately lets the premises to tenant's wife, the appellant cannot plead this as a fact puis darrein amounting to surrender by himself and acceptance by the landlord and precluding judgment for the landlord on the appeal.—Peters v. Fisher, 50 Mich. 331.

§ 54. Scope of appeal and questions reviewable.

General law as to matters reached by appeal or writ of error or certiorari, see Appeal, XII; Certiorari § 48 et seq.
Saving questions for review by objections below, see also Saving Questions.
Presumption on error to circuit judgment that commissioner had jurisdiction, see Appeal ¶ 1526.

¶ 184. The appeal, in forcible entry and detainer cases, covers jurisdictional questions as well as those arising on the merits.—Farrell v. Taylor, 12 Mich. 113; Sallee v. Ireland, 9 Mich. 154.

¶ 185. A justice of the peace has the same jurisdiction as a circuit judge in summary proceedings to recover possession; and the judge can decide no question therein that could not have been decided by the justice. (Comp. L. 1875, § 5250, p. 258; 1881, §§ 5825-5333, p. 23.)—Riggs v. Sterling, 51 Mich. 157.

¶ 185a. On error to a judgment of ouster in forcible entry by a guardian to expel an administrator from possession of the land, if the showing of guardianship contains no proof of jurisdiction in the court which granted the letters, it is not a material question whether matters subsequent to the ouster could legalize it, e. g., whether a statute entitling the administrator to possession was retroactive.—Carpenter v. Harris, 51 Mich. 223.

¶ 186. On certiorari to a circuit court commissioner to bring up his proceedings on a complaint of forcible entry and detainer, the objection that he extended the time for giving security for costs does not go to the merits and is of no force.—Knapp v. Gamsby, 47 Mich. 375.

¶ 187. It is error to treat a summary dispossession case upon certiorari from a commissioner, as one to be heard de novo upon the merits, as the decision of the commissioner upon controverted questions of fact is final, and the case can only be reversed for errors of law apparent upon the face of the return.—O'Connor v. White, 124 Mich. 22.

¶ 188. The contention that a lease for five years did not terminate at the end of five years from its date, but at the end of five years from the date when possession was given, cannot be first urged on appeal.—Gensler v. Nicholas, 151 Mich. 529.

§ 55. Presumptions and concluded facts on review.

Changing theory to entry on different day, see also ante ¶ 125.

Presumption in favor of jurisdiction of appeal, see also ante ¶ 182.
Presumptions on error or appeals in general, see Appeal, XII, C.

¶ 189. No harm can be presumed from the commissioners having gone into the jury room after refusing instructions, especially where it does not appear that the jury would have decided otherwise.—Hart v. Lindley, 50 Mich. 20.

¶ 190. On writ of error to the circuit court on reversal of judgment by the circuit court commissioner in favor of the complainant in summary proceeding for possession, the finding by the commissioner on conflicting evidence that the relation of landlord and tenant existed is conclusive and not subject to review.—Meeske v. Miller, 138 Mich. 87.

§ 56. Dismissal of appeal.

Authority to dismiss on hearing and effect of dismissal on judgment below, see post § 57.

¶ 191. The jurisdiction of the circuit court on appeal from a circuit court commissioner is no greater than the commissioner had; and if the title to the land was involved, as it would be if defendant denied the validity of an execution sale under which plaintiff claimed, a motion to dismiss the proceeding should be granted.—Mulder v. Corlett, 54 Mich. 80.

¶ 192. Where a lessee, after appeal from a judgment of restitution in summary proceedings against him, served notice that he would quit the place and requested that the lessor should come and divide the property on the premises at the time and then surrenders possession, such surrender is not ground for dismissing the appeal, for it does not satisfy the judgment or operate as an admission that at the commencement of suit defendant was held unlawfully.—Hanaw v. Bailey, 83 Mich. 24.

¶ 193. Where the sureties upon an appeal bond fail to justify as required by How. St., § 7001, and the appellant does not offer a sufficient bond under section 7018, the appeal is properly dismissed.—Cole v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 106 Mich. 692.

§ 57. Findings and judgment on review.

Effect of failure to find amount due, release of sureties, see post § 59.
Time for issuance of writ of restitution, see post §§ 63, 64.
Judgment on abatement of cause pending appeal by expiration of interest of appellant, see also ante ¶ 163.
Costs on appeal, see ante § 48.

¶ 194. Upon the trial in the circuit, on appeal, there need not be a finding of the amount of rent due. Comp. L. 1871, § 6710 (How. St., § 8299), requiring this finding, and section 6719 (§ 8308), providing "that no writ of restitution shall issue if the defendant shall, within five days after final judgment, pay the amount so found due" and double costs, do not apply to the trial on appeal.—McSloy v. Ryan, 27 Mich. 110.

¶ 195. Where, in summary proceedings to recover the possession of lands, defendants appeal from a judgment for the restitution of the premises, and are ordered by the circuit court to give a bond additional to that approved by the commissioner, and fail to comply with such order, the court has authority to dismiss the appeal, and by so doing the judgment appealed from will stand affirmed, but, there having been no hearing on the merits in the circuit court, no judgment of ouster can be entered.—McMillan v. Felcher, 100 Mich. 341.

¶ 196. Reversal on certiorari in forcible entry proceedings does not secure a new trial, but ends the proceedings. The statute (Comp. L. 1871, § 6718, see How. St., § 8307) provides for an appeal on which a new trial can be had as of right. Whether certiorari is a proper remedy where an appellate court would not know whether the judgment would have been different if the errors complained of had not been made, quære.—Knapp v. Gamsby, 47 Mich. 375.

§ 58. Obligation and liability on bonds for appeal.

Discharge or release of sureties, see post § 59.
Alternative right to enforce bond or sue for trespass, see post § 60.
Execution on principal judgment against sureties without separate action on bond, see post § 61.
Actions on the bond, see post § 62.
Statutory provisions of the bond, see Jud. Act, chap. XXX, § 24; Comp. L. 1915, § 13252.

¶ 197. Until actual restitution and possession have been obtained no right of action accrues upon a bond given on appeal to the circuit court from a commissioner's judgment in a proceeding to obtain restitution of premises under Laws 1861, pp. 466, 467, § 25, How. St., § 8307.—Delashman v. Berry, 21 Mich. 516.

¶ 198. It is no defense to a recovery on a bond to secure rent, given on an appeal in proceedings to recover possession, that the obligee had never obtained restitution under his judgment where he was prevented by order of the court, on motion of the principal obligor in such bond, from getting possession until after the expiration of the term for which he held the premises from his lessor and until after his right to possession had terminated.—Holcomb v. Bonnell, 32 Mich. 6.

¶ 199. In summary proceedings by an execution purchaser for possession where defendant has appealed, if complainant's right to possession ends before restitution can be had, the latter is entitled, the judgment being affirmed on appeal, to recover for rent during his term upon the appeal bond conditioned to pay all rent due if said complainant should obtain restitution.—Estey Mfg. Co. v. Runnells, 67 Mich. 310.

¶ 200. Rent and costs are all that the surety in a bond on appeal in a summary proceeding is answerable for.—Hoffman v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland, 184 Mich. 210.

¶ 201. In an action on a bond given on appeal in a summary proceeding, the landlord may recover from an overholding tenant the actual rental value of the premises from the expiration of his lease, irrespective of the stipulated rental.—Hoffman v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland, 184 Mich. 210.

¶ 202. A surety on a bond on appeal in a summary proceeding is not liable for a charge for light and ice furnished by a landlord under contract with a tenant.—Hoffman v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland, 184 Mich. 210.

§ 59. ——Discharge or release of sureties.

See also post ¶ 212.
General law of suretyship, see Suretyship.

¶ 203. The failure of the court on appeal from summary proceedings before a commissioner to find the amount of rent due as required by How. St., § 8299 does not release the liability of a surety on the appeal bond.—Bauer v. Wasson, 66 Mich. 256.

¶ 204. How. St., § 7030 of the justices' act, making the continuance of the sureties' liability on an appeal bond depend upon the issuing of execution within thirty days after the rendition of the judgment against the appellant, does not apply to appeal summary proceedings to recover possession of land, and therefore has no reference to appeals from circuit court commissioners in such cases though section 8307 likens such appeals to those from justices.—Bauer v. Wasson, 66 Mich. 256.

¶ 205. The sureties on a bond given on appeal from a circuit court commissioner's decision granting restitution under a forfeiture of a land contract are discharged by repeated postponements of the hearing of the appeal consented to by the plaintiff each time upon the receipt of additional payments on the original contract.—Walker v. Archer, 128 Mich. 608.

§ 60. ——Alternative and elective remedies of plaintiff.

¶ 206. Plaintiff brought proceedings under Comp. L. 1897, chap. 308, to obtain possession of premises which had been leased to defendant and obtained judgment before a circuit court commissioner. Defendant appealed and plaintiff had judgment of restitution in the circuit court. Plaintiff sued on the appeal bond under section 25 which provides that he might sue on the bond, or bring action for treble damages under section 24, and recovered judgment for the rental value up to the time of restitution. Held that he could not thereafter sue under section 24 for items of damages which could not be, and were not, recovered in the action on the bond.—Schellenberg v. Frank, 139 Mich. 183.

¶ 207. Where a landlord has elected to sue upon the appeal bond under Comp. L. 1897, chap. 308, § 25, which permits him to elect between suing on the bond and suing for damages under section 24, he can recover neither treble nor single damages under section 24 upon items for which he could not, and did not, recover in the action on the bond, since, having made his election, he is precluded from pursuing the alternative remedy.—Schellenberg v. Frank, 139 Mich. 183.

§ 61. ——Execution against sureties on principal judgment.

Judgment against sureties without separate action and execution on the judgment on appeal or for security for costs, see Appeal § 573; Certiorari § 64; Security for Costs, III.

¶ 208. The amount of rent found due in a summary proceeding appealed to the circuit constitutes no part of the judgment, and for that reason it cannot be enforced by execution against either principal or surety in the appeal bond.—Bauer v. Wasson, 66 Mich. 256.

§ 62. ——Actions on bonds, and procedure and proof therein.

Election between action on bond and suit in trespass for treble damages, see ante § 60.
See also Appeal, XVI; Bonds §§ 6-8.
Limitation applicable in action on bond, see Limitations, II.

¶ 209. Where judgment of restitution of leased premises was rendered against two defendants as partners, and one alone appealed to the circuit court and gave bond conditioned upon the payment of the rent "if the plaintiff obtained restitution," and whereupon judgment of restitution being and rendered by that court in form against both defendants, action on the bond was begun against only the defendant who gave the bond, and the declaration alleged that the bond was one given by such defendant alone, and that the breach consisted in the partners not having paid rent; the assignment of the breach corresponded to the condition of the bond with sufficient certainty to enable plaintiff to recover for the breach.—Grashaw v. Wilson, 123 Mich. 364.

¶ 210. In an action for rent based on the condition of the appeal bond in proceedings for the recovery of the land, it was held that proof of the writ of restitution was proper if it was served, and immaterial if complainant got possession without it.—Hecht v. Ferris, 45 Mich. 376.

¶ 211. An action for rent was brought on the condition of the appeal bond in proceedings to recover land from a tenant. In bar of a recovery proof was offered of an execution sale of the property against one of the lessors in favor of one of the sureties, and of a judgment in favor of the same surety in summary proceedings against the same lessor and the lessee for the possession of the same premises. But the lessee had enjoyed the premises for a certain period, and neither he nor his lessor had been ousted. Held, that the proof was properly ruled out. —Hecht v. Ferris, 45 Mich. 376.

¶ 212. In an action for rent against the sureties on an appeal bond bringing up proceedings for the recovery of the premises leased by a man and his wife, an order payable out of the rent, signed by the man but not by his wife, and drawn upon the tenant, was held inadmissible where there was no assignment of the lease of both lessors.—Hecht v. Ferris, 45 Mich. 376.

¶ 213. In an action on an appeal bond given by one defendant on appeal from a judgment of restitution of leased premises against such defendant and another, it is not error to admit in evidence the files and records in the action for restitution.—Grashaw v. Wilson, 128 Mich. 364.

¶ 214. In an action on an appeal bond from a judgment of restitution of premises, where plaintiff delayed 14 days after the judgment without suing out a writ of restitution, it was not error to refuse to charge that plaintiff, having failed to prove that restitution was obtained by virtue of the restitution proceedings, could therefore not recover, it appearing that although no writ issued, the defendants voluntarily surrendered possession.—Grashaw v. Wilson, 123 Mich. 364.

III. WRIT OF POSSESSION AND RESTITUTION.

§ 63. Writ and execution of it.

Sufficiency of description of land in complaint to sustain writ, see ante §§ 19, 22.
Withholding writ for period to allow payment, see also post § 64.
Payment or tender to avoid execution of writ, see post § 64.
Time for issuance of final process to hold sureties on appeal bond, see ante ¶ 204.
Restitution as maturing liability on appeal bond, see ante § 58.
Voluntary surrender without writ as maturing liability on bond, see also ante ¶ 214.
Provisions as to issuance of precept on judgment of guilty in forcible entry, see Jud. Act, chap. XXX, § 10; Comp. L. 1915, § 13238.
Provisions for withholding writ of restitution if payment of sum found due be made within five days, see Jud. Act, chap. XXX, § 25; Comp. L. 1915, § 13253.
Provisions for withholding writ of restitution for five days and thereafter during pendency of appeal, if any, see Jud. Act. chap. XXX, § 25; Comp. L. 1915, § 13253.
Writ of possession on judgment on appeal, statutory provisions, see Jud. Act, chap. XXX, § 26; Comp. L. 1915, § 13254.

¶ 215. Under a circuit court judgment for restitution in summary proceedings to recover the possession of land, a writ of restitution may be issued by the clerk in vacation as well as in term.—Christler v. Locke, 103 Mich. 86.

¶ 216. This writ in forcible entry cases must follow the judgment, and consequently the complaint, in describing the premises.—Clark v. Gage, 19 Mich. 507.

¶ 217. Whether an officer executing a writ of possession can handcuff a tenant who resists him, quære.—Sutherland v. Ingalls, 63 Mich. 620.

¶ 218. The court in setting aside a writ of possession which has been executed may order the possession restored.—Campau v. Coates, 17 Mich. 235.

§ 64. Payment or tender to stop proceeding.

¶ 219. Writ of restitution cannot issue upon a judgment of a circuit court commissioner, in a proceeding brought under Comp. L. 1897, §§ 11164-11181, for the recovery of possession of land because of nonpayment of instalments due under a contract for its purchase, where within 5 days after the judgment, defendant paid to the commissioner the amount found due and double the amount of costs awarded, since section 11177 expressly provides that no writ of restitution shall issue in such case.—Lambton Loan & Inv. Co. v. Adams, 132 Mich. 350.

¶ 220. A subtenant was a stranger to summary proceedings instituted by the landlord against the lessee for nonpayment of the rent, and could not compel such landlord to accept such payment; since there was no privity of contract between the landlord and such subtenant.—Wray-Austin Machinery Co. v. Flower, 140 Mich. 452.

¶ 221. The provision in Comp. L. 1897, § 11177, giving a defendant tenant in summary proceedings for possession five days after judgment of restitution in which to pay the amount due, before a writ of restitution shall issue, applies only to prpceedings before the commissioners and in the circuit court, and defendant is not entitled to such right after the judgment of restitution has been affirmed against him in the supreme court.—Smith v. Nelson, 165 Mich. 438.

¶ 222. Where a vendee on notice of forfeiture of a land contract, surrenders possession to his vendor, a subsequent forcible entry and retention of possession by the former will not permit him in an action by the vendor to recover possession, to claim the benefit of §§ 11168, 11177, Comp. Laws 1897, How. St., 2nd ed., §§ 13688, 13697, permitting the discharge of contractual obligations after judgment of restitution.—Kennedy v. Ford, 183 Mich. 481.

¶ 1. In Michigan mortgages can only be foreclosed by statutory publication or a foreclosure suit in chancery.—Kollen v. Sooy, 172 Mich. 214.

¶ 2. Foreclosure is not barred by the existence of another mortgage as prior security.—Connerton v. Millar, 41 Mich. 608.

¶ 3. One who holds several securities for the same debt may foreclose either of them at his option until his debt is satisfied.—McKinney v. Miller, 19 Mich. 142.

¶ 4. Where one holds a chattel mortgage as security for the payment of a note, and afterwards takes a mortgage on real estate conditioned in the usual form for the performance of the condition of the note, he is not obliged to resort to the chattel mortgage before foreclosing that upon real estate.—Davis v. Rider, 5 Mich. 423.

¶ 5. Where the grantee in a deed of certain land agreed to pay a mortgage on the land which also included other land owned by the grantor, a bill by the latter to have the mortgage foreclosed and satisfied first out of the property conveyed, will not be denied on the ground that he had an adequate remedy at law by recovering compensation, since he had a right to resort to equity to preserve his own property.—Mowry v. Mowry, 137 Mich. 277.

¶ 6. A father bought land, making the first payment with his own money, and gave in his own name a purchase-money mortgage for the balance. In the deed to him, following the description, was a statement that the land was conveyed to him in trust for his minor son. Held that, as against the mortgagee, the minor had no equitable rights, and that such mortgagee had at least a vendor's lien upon the premises for the unpaid purchase-money.—Strong v. Ehle, 86 Mich. 42.

§ 2. Persons entitled to foreclose.

Persons entitled to remedy of statutory foreclosure and persons bound thereby, see post § 19.
Parties complainant in suit in equity for foreclosure, see post §§ 60-63.
Establishing right to foreclose by showing bona fides where holding from fraudulent assignor, see Notice and Record of Title, I.
Persons entitled to subrogation on foreclosure, see Subrogation, I.
Mortgages executed to invalid or irregular banks, see Banking § 48.

¶ 7. A mortgage conditioned for the support of the mortgagee by the mortgagor during her lifetime cannot be foreclosed for the benefit of persons who had boarded the mortgagee at the mortgagor's request. Such a mortgage is for the benefit of the mortgagee, and not for the benefit of those who may, at the request of the mortgagor, furnish her with support.—Daniels v. Eisenlord, 10 Mich. 454.

§ 3. Grounds and maturity of right.

Elective right to treat whole sum due on any default, see post § 4.
Mortgages to secure conditional or collateral liability, see post § 5.
Validity, construction and effect of mortgages in general, see Mortgages, III.

¶ 8. A foreclosure bill will not lie until the debt secured by the mortgage under foreclosure falls due.—Kelly v. Bogardus, 51 Mich. 522.

¶ 9. The only effect of an omission, before filing a foreclosure bill, to demand payment at the place stipulated in the mortgage, would be to prevent a recovery of costs. It would not defeat foreclosure.—Norton v. Ohrns, 67 Mich. 612.

¶ 10. Where a debt is made payable after several years, but the interest is payable annually, a bill to foreclose the mortgage which secures it may be properly filed after the expiration of the year, if interest is in arrears.—Dederick v. Barber, 44 Mich. 19.

¶ 11. A mortgage payable absolutely at a specified time, given to secure the payment of another incumbrance on land conveyed to the mortgagee, may be foreclosed by him upon default, without first paying off such incumbrance.—Raffel v. Epworth, 107 Mich. 143.

¶ 12. A condition in a mortgage that the mortgagor "shall promptly pay and discharge all notes and papers of his upon which the mortgagees shall become indorsers or acceptors, together with all the interest, costs and charges accruing thereon, so as to save said mortgagees harmless by reason of their connection with such paper," is broken at once on a failure to pay the paper at maturity, and a right to foreclose accrues, without further action of the mortgagees.—Butler v. Ladue, 12 Mich. 173.

§ 4. ——Elective right to treat whole sum due on any default.

¶ 13. It seems that formal notice of an election to foreclose for the whole debt, if an instalment is overdue, is unnecessary, and a declaration in the bill, of such election, is enough.—Johnson v. Van Velsor, 43 Mich. 208.

¶ 14. Whether a formal notice of an election by the mortgagor to treat the whole amount as due for the nonpayment of interest is necessary before commencing foreclosure, or whether the want of such notice affects anything more than the question of costs, quære.—English v. Carney, 25 Mich. 178.

¶ 15. Where a mortgage provides that a default in the payment of interest for a specified time shall render the whole amount of principal, as well as interest, due, and an insufficient tender is made, the mortgagor may declare the entire amount due and foreclose therefor.—First State Bank of Decatur v. Day, 188 Mich. 228; O'Dell v. First State Bank of Decatur, Id.

¶ 16. A foreclosure for one instalment due on a mortgage debt and in default without any election therein to treat the whole debt as due according to an option in the mortgage is not an election not to do so, or a waiver of that right, in the case of a subsequent default; and either the mortgagee or his assignee may thereafter so elect.—Brand v. Smith, 99 Mich. 395.

¶ 17. Where a mortgage covenanted that, on default in payment of interest, the whole amount of the debt should become due if the holder so elected, the mortgagee, who had assigned the mortgage and indorsed the notes secured by it, was held not to be so far interested in the question of election as to be entitled to disturb a decree against him as indorser on the ground that notice to him of such election was not alleged or proved.—English v. Carney, 25 Mich. 178.

¶ 18. Proceeding by notice and advertisement to foreclose is a sufficient election to treat the mortgage debt as due and in default pursuant to a clause in the mortgage, and no prior notice is requisite.—Hawes v. Detroit Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 109 Mich. 324.

¶ 19. Where a complaint in a mortgage foreclosure reciting the terms of a mortgage states that the mortgagor covenanted to pay the taxes within 40 days after they became due and in case of default the mortgagee could pay them and such payment would become a further lien on the premises and payable forthwith to the mortgagee with interest, and if the principal, interest, or taxes, or insurance premiums are not paid when the same become payable as provided in the mortgage and remain unpaid for 30 days then the option to declare the whole sum due, an averment of default in the nonpayment of the taxes is insufficient and an action of foreclosure cannot be brought until 30 days after the mortgagee has himself paid the taxes.—Union Trust Co. v. Grant, 148 Mich. 501.

§ 5. ——Mortgages to secure conditional or collateral liability.

Averments in bill for foreclosure as to conditions and contingencies, see post § 74.

(3 Mich. Dig. 53)

Sufficiency of proof to enforce mortgage securing contingent liability, see post ¶ 358.

¶ 20. A mortgage securing an agreement, conditioned on the success of a pending suit, cannot be foreclosed if the suit fails.—Lamb v. Scullen, 61 Mich. 280.

¶ 21. Where a conveyance was made as security for a debt upon the express condition that the grantee shall save the grantor harmless from certain debts there is no breach of the condition until the grantor is actually damnified; a failure to pay the debts, by reason of which the grantor is threatened with suit, is not a breach.—Michigan State Bank v. Hastings, 1 D. 225.

¶ 22. A mortgage given as collateral security for the notes of third parties, does not require the mortgagee to first attempt to collect the notes from the makers and indorsers before resorting to a foreclosure of such mortgage.—Clare County Sav. Bank v. Goodman, 119 Mich. 338.

¶ 23. Mortgagees who hold their mortgage for security of a bond given by the mortgagors conditioned to pay certain notes within a time certain after they mature, the mortgagors and mortgagees being respectively principals and sureties on said notes, may at the stipulated time sue to foreclose, although they have not then been compelled as such sureties to pay the notes; since the bond is absolute and not by way of indemnity.—Hall v. Nash, 10 Mich. 303.

¶ 24. A purchase-money mortgage given upon condition that should the vendor die before perfecting title by procuring a discharge of a prior mortgage and an undertaking to save harmless against any claim for rents and profits, the mortgage is to be fully discharged, cannot be foreclosed unless it can be shown that the prior mortgage was discharged and an acquittance of any claim for use and profits obtained.—McCrath v. Myers, 126 Mich. 204.

¶ 25. A condition in a mortgage that if at the expiration of the time limited for the payment of the instalments there should remain due on the mortgage a specified sum, the mortgagor might have the privilege of paying the amount due by giving therefor his note, secured by mortgage on other real estate, does not prevent the instalments from falling due at the time stipulated, nor prevent a sale under the mortgage to satisfy them when they fall due, though the mortgagor may in such case stop the sale by insisting on and complying with the terms of the condition.—Bacon v. Northwestern Mut. Life Ins. Co., 131 U. S. 258, 33 L. ed. 128, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 787.

¶ 26. On a bill to foreclose a real estate mortgage where the note for which it was security was made a part of the defeasance clause, and contained a distinct and unequivocal promise to pay the principal sum on or before a specified number of years after date together with interest of a specified rate, but further stipulated that the note should become void and canceled at the death of the payee, provided the interest was fully paid at the time specified, and a later section of the defeasance clause provided that if the maker should pay the interest on the principal to the payee or his assigns when the same fell due, and the mortgage and note should become void upon the death of the payee, otherwise to remain in full force and effect, and the payee was living after the maturity of the note and the interest was not fully paid as therein provided, held that the mortgage was not intended as security for the payment of interest only but also for the principal, and that the complainant was entitled to a decree for both principal and interest, and that the land should be sold and the proceeds applied to satisfaction of the same.—Engler v. Engler, 192 Mich. 361.

§ 6. Pending actions and process for the debt.

Garnishment by mortgagee's creditors, see post § 7.

Right to commence statutory foreclosure proceedings during pendency of "proceedings at law," see post § 18.

Effect of bankruptcy on pending foreclosures, see Bankruptcy § 17.

Statutory provisions as to pending actions or process for debt, see Jud. Act, chap. XIX, §§ 27, 28; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12681, 12682.

¶ 27. Complainant, a holder of notes secured by mortgage took a judgment on them at law, and allowed the statute to run on said judgment. Section 521, Comp. Laws 1897, requires a holder taking judgment at law to levy execution and have the same returned unsatisfied before bringing a bill to foreclose. Held, complainant's bill to foreclose would not lie.—Stegeman v. Fraser, 161 Mich. 35.

¶ 28. No proceeding can be had on a bill to foreclose a mortgage, if it appear that any judgment has been obtained in a suit at law for the debt, or any part thereof, unless to an execution against the property of the defendant in such judgment the sheriff shall have returned the execution unsatisfied in whole or in part, and also returned that defendant has no property to satisfy the execution except the mortgaged premises (R. S. 1838, p. 377, § 109, How. St., § 6706).—Dennis v. Hemingway, W. 387.

¶ 29. Where bill was filed to foreclose a mortgage given to secure the payment of three notes, and the bill stated that a judgment had been recovered on the first note, which had been nearly paid, but did not show that an execution had been issued on the judgment and returned unsatisfied in whole or in part, nor distinctly claim a decree for the amount of the other two notes only, nor waive the right to the mortgage security as to the judgment, it was held that the bill could not be maintained (Comp. L. 1857, § 3569, How. St., § 6706).—Cooper v. Bresler, 9 Mich. 534.

¶ 30. To prevent proceedings on a foreclosure bill, it is not necessary that judgment shall have been rendered on the bond or note accompanying the mortgage, but for the money for which the mortgage was given.—Dennis v. Hemingway, W. 387.

§ 7. ——Garnishment by mortgagee's creditors.

¶ 31. An assignee of a mortgage is not entitled to foreclose it pending garnishment proceedings begun against the mortgagor, before the assignment, by the mortgagee's creditor.—Gemberling v. Spaulding, 104 Mich. 217.

§ 8. Express powers of sale and implied rights.

Sufficiency of power of sale in general, see post § 21.

¶ 32. In a mortgage with the condition to save harmless from liability incurred by indorsing paper, the power of sale was limited to the case of the mortgagees being damnified by paying the debts. It was held that the power of sale need not be coextensive with the condition of the mortgage, and that the remedy in equity was open for every breach of the condition, whether the parties had seen fit to provide for such a breach in the power of sale or not.—Butler v. Ladue, 12 Mich. 173.

§ 9. Defenses, objections or bar of right.

Failure of consideration or defective title, see post § 10.

Payment or tender, see post § 11.

Defense of discharge of mortgage as inuring to defaulted defendants, see Defaults ¶ 53.

Objections to representative's mortgage available on foreclosure, see Estates of Decedents § 256.

¶ 33. Proof in a foreclosure case that the note which is the basis of the proceedings does not belong to the complainant, but to other parties who use complainant's name for the purposes of the suit, does not affect the proceeding any further than to entitle defendants to the benefit of any defense they might have against the real owners.—Spear v. Hadden, 31 Mich. 265.

¶ 34. Where a complainant parted with his interest in a mortgage before answer, it was held a good objection to his foreclosure suit.—Wallace v. Dunning, W. 416.

¶ 35. The fact that pending a foreclosure suit the complainant borrowed money from a third person on the mortgage on the understanding that the suit was to go on and the money be repaid with interest, if it succeeded, is no defense to the foreclosure.—Chase v. Brown, 32 Mich. 225.

¶ 36. It is no defense to a bill for foreclosure by the assignee of a mortgage that the assignment to him was without consideration. The mortgagor has no interest in the question whether the assignment was for or without consideration, except as the want of it may enable him to make available any defense he might have had as against the mortgagee.—Adair v. Adair, 5 Mich. 204.

¶ 37. It is no defense to a suit to foreclose a purchase-money mortgage that knowledge of an outstanding incumbrance was withheld from the vendee, where the vendor had at the time arranged for its release, and it was so released after the filing of the bill, and before damage had resulted to defendant.—Raffel v. Epworth, 107 Mich. 143.

¶ 38. Where the purchaser of a newspaper has been deceived by misrepresentations of the seller as to the amount of circulation, so as to have a good defense against the seller in a suit by him for the purchase price, it is held the purchaser may interpose such a defense against the seller's cross-bill in equity to foreclose the mortgage securing the purchase price.—Smith v. Werkheiser, 152 Mich. 177.

¶ 39. The good faith of a second mortgagee in taking his mortgage on the strength of a forged discharge of the former one is no defense to the foreclosure of the earlier mortgage if the holder had nothing to do with deceiving the later mortgagee.—Keller v. Hannah, 52 Mich. 585.

¶ 40. A release of part of mortgaged lands at the instance of the mortgagor is no defense to a foreclosure of the rest if there is nothing to indicate that the release was against the rights of any of the defendants.—Botsford v. Botsford, 49 Mich. 29.

§ 10. ——Failure of consideration or defective title.

¶ 41. A note and mortgage given for a fixed sum and payable absolutely, but with no consideration except an undertaking to furnish goods which the mortgagees afterwards failed to furnish, cannot be enforced where the holder is not a bona fide holder for value.—Fisher v. Meister, 24 Mich. 447.

¶ 42. Where upon an executor's bill for the foreclosure of a mortgage found in testator's safe, and which the mortgagor claimed was given as indemnity for the indorsement of a note finally paid after renewals, it appeared that the mortgagee never had money to lend, and that he never called upon the maker of the note for payment but permitted it to outlaw in his hands, the bill was properly dismissed.—Saenger v. Von Der Heide, 80 Mich. 152.

¶ 43. How far the rule debarring a mortgagor, holding by warranty deed and not ousted or disturbed, to set up an outstanding title by way of defense to a foreclosure should be applied, quære.—Powell v. Conant, 33 Mich. 396.

¶ 44. Where a defendant in foreclosure obtains delay in the foreclosure by promising to pay the amount of the decree, both parties supposing that his title to the mortgaged land is good, he cannot, on finding it to be defective, defend against payment on that ground.—Tenney v. Hand, 32 Mich. 63.

¶ 45. An adverse tax title cannot be pleaded as a defense to a purchase-money mortgage where no claim under it has been made against the mortgagor.—Smith v. Fiting, 37 Mich. 148.

¶ 46. One who has purchased land from a claimant under tax deeds cannot defend a suit to foreclose a purchase-money mortgage given by him upon the ground that it was his duty, as an administrator in possession, to discharge the taxes for the nonpayment of which the deeds were executed, and that, therefore, he acquired no title and the mortgage could convey none.—Judson v. Miller, 106 Mich. 140.

§ 11. ——Payment or tender.

Pleading and proof of payment or tender, see Payment, V.

¶ 47. Part payments on a mortgage, made after foreclosure by advertisement, and received with the clear understanding that the redemption was to be completed by paying the whole sum necessary for that purpose within the year allowed by the statute, are in affirmance and not in avoidance of the sale, and their acceptance does not operate as a waiver of the foreclosure in subsequent suit in equity for foreclosure.—Cameron v. Adams, 31 Mich. 426.

¶ 48. On a bill to foreclose two mortgages and on a bill to enjoin the foreclosure of a third mortgage by advertisement, the two cases being consolidated, held that the decree for foreclosure of the first two mortgages and the decree dismissing the injunction should not be reversed because of an alleged tender made by mortgagor where such tender was made to cover principal and interest on all the mortgages and notes and was insufficient.—First State Bank of Decatur v. Day, 188 Mich. 228; O'Dell v. First State Bank of Decatur, Id.

Statute of limitations on foreclosure, see Limitations of Actions, I.

Laches in suing to foreclose after maturity of debt, see also Equity ¶ 173.

[Note. How. St., § 8709 (Pub. Acts 1879, No. 204) requires suits or proceedings to foreclose mortgages on real estate to be commenced within fifteen years from the time when the mortgage became due or within fifteen years after the last payment made thereon; with a saving clause of five years as to mortgages that would otherwise have been barred at once (Pub. Acts, 1879, p. 186). See this statute commented on in cases cited below. For decisions applying this statute of limitations, see Limitations of Actions.]

¶ 49. A mortgage on lands given to secure notes that have been allowed to run after maturity may be foreclosed at any time within the period of the limitation of actions for the recovery of real estate.—Detroit Savings Bank v. Truesdail, 38 Mich. 430.

¶ 50. Foreclosure in equity may take place at any time before a presumption of payment arises by the lapse of twenty years.—Michigan Ins. Co. of Detroit v. Brown, 11 Mich. 265.

¶ 51. The fact that an action at law upon the debt or obligation secured has become barred by the statute of limitations or by bankruptcy does not prevent foreclosure, or affect the validity of the mortgage.—Michigan Ins. Co. of Detroit v. Brown, 11 Mich. 265; In re Goodrich v. Leland, 18 Mich. 110; Powell v. Smith, 30 Mich. 451; Webber v. Ryan, 54 Mich. 70; Damon v. Deeves, 57 Mich. 247.

¶ 52. Lapse of time, in connection with nonpayment of interest, and continued possession of the mortgagor, unaccompanied by any effort on the mortgagee's part to enforce payment, is not a legal but an equitable or presumptive bar, and the presumption may be rebutted by circumstances. What circumstances will rebut the presumption must depend upon the facts in each particular case.—Abbott v. Godfroy's Heirs, 1 Mich. 178; Baent v. Kennicutt, 57 Mich. 268.

¶ 53. Foreclosure of a mortgage dated in 1855 was not barred in 1878 where there was proof of payments made as late as 1866 by the mortgagor as agent for his wife, who held the mortgaged interest under an assignment from a mesne purchaser.—Butler v. Hogadone, 45 Mich. 390.

¶ 54. The dismissal of a foreclosure bill was affirmed where the mortgage was never recorded, and the mortgagee had died twenty-nine years before suit, and no attempt to procure administration on the estate or to enforce the mortgage was made until after the mortgagor's death, and there were indorsements indicating that nearly the whole sum had been paid, and some evidences of a counterclaim that would have extinguished the rest of it.—Burrow v. Debo, 47 Mich. 242.

¶ 55. A delay of twelve years from the maturity of the postponed mortgage, and six years after such foreclosure, and the postponement of suit until the original mortgagor was dead and the foreclosure title vested in his heirs, should in a case of doubt put complainant to the necessity of making out a plain case.—Burdick v. Wheelock, 48 Mich. 289.

¶ 56. A mortgagee delayed foreclosure four years after an assignment of the mortgage had been obtained and after the assignee had discharged the mortgage upon a small payment by the then owner of the equity of redemption. But the assignee had paid no consideration for the assignment and had not received the collateral securities, and as their nondelivery should have put the owner of the equity upon inquiry as to whether he was dealing with the actual owner of the mortgage, it was held that he had not acquired any rights in good faith, and that the mortgagee was not estopped from foreclosing by the delay.—Fletcher v. Carpenter, 37 Mich. 412.

¶ 57. A., upon the receipt of a second mortgage on the M. estate, agreed to look to it before resorting to a mortgage on the L. estate, which he subsequently discharged in consideration of a mortgage upon the N. estate. A., being enjoined from proceeding to sell the M. estate, took no steps to dissolve the injunction, and two years elapsed before the injunction suit was dismissed. Meanwhile, the M. estate had been sold on the first mortgage upon it, and the time for redemption had expired. Held, that A. could not, because of his laches, foreclose his mortgage on the N. estate.—Thompson v. Jarvis, 39 Mich. 689.

¶ 58. Foreclosure of a mortgage not under seal is not barred in less time than would bar a sealed one.—McKinney v. Miller, 19 Mich. 142.

¶ 59. The lapse of less than twenty years before filing the bill did not (prior to the enactment of How. St., § 8709) bar the foreclosure of a mortgage given for either indemnity or payment.—Shelden v. Warner, 45 Mich. 638.

Consent to prompt sale as consideration for promise of reduction, see Contracts ¶ 512.

Consideration for promises between mortgagor and mortgagee as to crops during pendency of foreclosure suit, see Contracts ¶ 443.

¶ 60. A man held mortgages on the farm of his half-brother. The latter died intestate, and his son thought of going away, but his uncle, the mortgagee, persuaded him to stay and take care of the family, promising that the mortgages should never be enforced. It was held that the mortgagee was estopped by his promise from taking any steps to foreclose the mortgage, when several years had elapsed, during which the son had cultivated the farm and cared for the family, and the land had grown valuable under his tillage.—Faxton v. Faxon, 28 Mich. 159.

¶ 61. A representation honestly made to a subsequent purchaser of the land that the land was clear of taxes, did not preclude a mortgagee from foreclosing his mortgage, and even if such representation had amounted to a guaranty, it would have affected his claim only to the extent of the amount paid by such purchaser for a tax title.—Brown v. Avery, 119 Mich. 384.

¶ 62. Where a mortgage given by a vendee stipulated that it should not be foreclosed until the mortgagee had removed all clouds from the title, the mortgagor was estopped from setting up this stipulation against a foreclosure where he had himself prevented the removal of a cloud.—Haney v. Roy, 54 Mich. 635.

Sufficiency of record of assignment of mortgage to entitle assignee to foreclose, see Notice and Record of Title, II.

¶ 63. The assignment of a note and mortgage after beginning foreclosure cannot affect the decree or sale thereunder if it neither appears of record nor is brought to the knowledge of the court.—Bigelow v. Booth, 39 Mich. 622.

¶ 64. An assignment pending the foreclosure proceedings puts an end to them, and a sale afterwards made under an advertisement in the name of the assignor does not cut off the equity of redemption.—Niles v. Ransford, 1 Mich. 338.

§ 15. Successive foreclosures for instalments.

Propriety of foreclosure by advertisement on default in instalment, see post § 22.

Equity proceedings for further decree on instalments, see post § 100.

Rights of purchaser on foreclosure for instalment, see post § 138.

¶ 65. How. St., § 8498, subd. 4, providing that in cases of mortgages to secure payment of money in instalments each instalment after the first shall be deemed to be a separate mortgage, and that each may be foreclosed as if separate mortgages were given and redeemed from sale with like effect, includes instalments of interest as well as of principal, so that a mortgage is not extinguished by a statutory foreclosure of sale for an instalment of interest, and by a redemption by the mortgagor's grantee.—Edgar v. Beck, 96 Mich. 419. Limiting and disapproving language to the contrary in Miles v. Skinner, 42 Mich. 181.

§ 16. Foreclosing by ejectment.

Ejectment as remedy to cure or avoid foreclosure, see post § 161.

Ejectment by mortgagee to recover premises occupied as homestead, see Homestead, IX.
Statute forbidding ejectment before foreclosure has no application to mortgages given before its enactment, see Statutes, VI.
Statutory prohibition against ejectment until title absolute upon foreclosure of mortgage, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIX, § 54; Comp. L. 1915, § 13221.

¶ 66. Where the mortgage was made after the Act of 1843, forbidding ejectment by the mortgagee before foreclosure, the mortgagee cannot bring ejectment before foreclosure becomes absolute.—Baker v. Pierson, 5 Mich. 456; Caruthers v. Humphrey, 12 Mich. 270; Crippen v. Morrison, 13 Mich. 23; Newton v. Sly, 15 Mich. 391; Wagar v. Stone, 36 Mich. 364; Lee v. Clary, 38 Mich. 223; Hazeltine v. Granger, 44 Mich. 503; Morse v. Byam, 55 Mich. 594; and see Livingston v. Hayes, 43 Mich. 129.

¶ 67. The mortgagee in a mortgage executed prior to the act of March 8, 1843, forbidding ejectment by him before foreclosure (How. St., § 7847), may maintain ejectment after the mortgagor's default if not before.—Stevens v. Brown, W. 41; Mundy v. Monroe, 1 Mich. 68; Dougherty v. Randall, 3 Mich. 581; Blackwood v. Van Vleet, 11 Mich. 252; Todd v. Davis, 32 Mich. 160; Baldwin v. Cullen, 51 Mich. 33.

¶ 68. The grantee in a deed absolute in form but intended as a mortgage may bring ejectment; the statute prohibiting mortgagees to bring ejectment does not apply.—Jeffery v. Hursh, 42 Mich. 563; Bennett v. Robinson, 27 Mich. 26; Wetherbee v. Green, 22 Mich. 311; Morse v. Byam, 55 Mich. 594.

II. BY ADVERTISEMENT AND SALE UNDER POWER.

A. THE POWER AND RIGHT TO SELL.

§ 17. In general.
Effect of pending "proceedings at law" on right to sell, see post § 18.
Foreclosure by suit in equity, see post, III.
Presumption that mortgage contains power of sale, see post ¶ 592.
Necessity of strict conformity to statute, see post § 25.
Validity of oaths administered by mortgagee's attorney in statutory foreclosure proceedings, see Oaths.
Statutory provisions for foreclosure by advertisement, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 14949-14968.
Statutory prerequisites to statutory foreclosure, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14950.

¶ 69. The statutory provisions for foreclosure are to be treated as a part of every mortgage with a power of sale executed under the statute; and the sale under the power is a distinct exercise of authority under the terms of the contract.—Hoffman v. Harrington, 33 Mich. 392.

¶ 70. The statutes regulating statutory foreclosures were made to enlarge, not to cut down, the rights of mortgagors.—Bacon v. Northwestern Mutual Life Ins. Co., 131 U. S. 258, 33 L. ed. 128, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 787.

¶ 71. Statutory foreclosure proceedings are not adapted to cases in which there are conflicting equities; such equities can be considered only in equity.—Covey v. Leslie, 144 Mich. 165; Flax v. Mutual Bldg. & Loan Ass'n of Bay County, 198 Mich. 676.

¶ 72. A foreclosure by advertisement of mortgages given simultaneously cannot settle the relative rights of the mortgagees or of the foreclosure purchasers. A bill in equity is necessary for this and to marshal the assets.—Van Aken v. Gleason, 34 Mich. 477.

¶ 73. Statutory foreclosure is not allowable in cases where there are conflicting equities that can only be worked out and protected in a court of chancery, as where the ownership of the security is so uncertain that the value of the equity of redemption must be greatly depreciated by permitting a foreclosure at law. So held where, after the legal title to a note and the record title to the mortgage by which it was secured had passed out of the creditor's hands by assignment and delivery, and his assignee had again assigned them to one who had previously bought the mortgaged premises, the original creditor had again assigned an interest which he still claimed in the mortgage, and the assignee had sought to foreclose against the purchaser of the land.—Olcott v. Crittenden, 68 Mich. 230.

¶ 74. Where a mortgage of lands by a third person is simply collateral to a purchase-money mortgage given by the vendee of chattels to the vendor and to a mortgage of land by the vendee's wife, it should not be foreclosed by advertisement after the mortgagee has appropriated and sold the chattels without regularly foreclosing the mortgage on them; but resort should be had to chancery to determine the conflicting equities of the parties.—Drayton v. Chandler, 93 Mich. 383.

¶ 75. Where, by a decree of the supreme court, one of several mortgages is allowed to stand as a valid security for the amount which the court finds the mortgagor has been benefited, but the time for payment and the rate of interest are changed, and the mortgagee enjoined from foreclosing until he has discharged the other mortgages, which are declared void, and surrendered the accompanying notes, the only method of foreclosing the lien created by the decree is by a proceeding in chancery, in which a compliance with the terms of the decree must be alleged and proved, and a foreclosure by advertisement is improper.—Strong v. Tomlinson, 88 Mich. 112.

¶ 76. A tenant in common in possession who has three past-due mortgages on his cotenant's interest cannot foreclose them by separate advertisements, but must foreclose in equity, where all the rights of the parties can be determined and protected.—Dohm v. Haskin, 88 Mich. 144.

§ 18. Pending "proceedings at law."

Effect on cause of action and right to foreclose of pending actions or process for the debt, see ante § 6.

Effect of proceedings at law on right to statutory foreclosure, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14950.

¶ 77. The statute forbidding the beginning of a statutory foreclosure if any "suit or proceeding shall have been instituted at law to recover the debt," etc., refers to suits on the debt, and not to previous foreclosure proceedings.—Lee v. Clary, 38 Mich. 223; Larzelere v. Starkweather, 38 Mich. 96.

¶ 78. Proving a claim that is secured by mortgage before the commissioners on an estate is not such a proceeding at law as is contemplated by Comp. L. 1871, § 6913, How. St., § 8498, forbidding a foreclosure by advertisement while a proceeding at law is pending to recover the debt. The proceedings referred to are those in which judgment may be rendered and execution issued against the debtor's property.—Larzelere v. Starkweather, 38 Mich. 96.

§ 19. Persons entitled to remedy and persons bound.

Assignment and rights of assignees, see post § 20.

Persons entitled to foreclose, see ante § 2.

Person from whom notice of sale must purport to emanate, see post ¶ 100.

Power of bank to foreclose mortgages by advertisement, see Banking ¶ 150.

¶ 79. None but the legal holder of a mortgage can foreclose by advertisement; the owner of the debt secured is such holder and he can foreclose for the benefit of any one interested.—Lee v. Clary, 38 Mich. 223.

¶ 80. A statutory foreclosure by advertisement under Comp. L. 1897, § 11133 et seq., if regular, is binding on minor heirs of the deceased mortgagor.—Jobert v. Wagner, 147 Mich. 409.

§ 20. Assignment and rights of assignees.

Effect of assignment on right to foreclose, see ante § 14.

Assignment improperly executed in another state and illegally recorded as ground for setting aside sale by assignee, see post ¶ 607.

Assignment or transfer of mortgage or debt secured by it, see Mortgages, VI.

¶ 81. The mortgage assignments which How. St., § 8498 requires to be recorded before the mortgage can be foreclosed at law are those only that are voluntary; such transfers as result from the operation of law need not be recorded. The executor or administrator of an owner of a mortgage can therefore execute the power of sale as owner of the legal title therein.—Miller v. Clark, 56 Mich. 337.

§ 21. Character of the mortgage and sufficiency of power of sale.

Propriety of remedy on default in single instalment, see post § 22.

Propriety of remedy on default in building and loan mortgages, see post § 23.

Power of sale as distinguished from right to foreclose for breach of condition of mortgage, see ante § 8.

Mortgages which may be foreclosed by advertisement, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14949.

¶ 82. A foreclosure of a mortgage by advertisement is valid only where the mortgage contains a power of sale.—Bradway v. Miller, 200 Mich. 648.

¶ 83. A power of sale in a mortgage is a prerequisite to a right to foreclose the mortgage by advertisement.—Bryan v. Straus Bros. & Co., 157 Mich. 49.

¶ 84. The right to foreclose by advertisement is confined to mortgages containing a power of sale.—Doyle v. Howard, 16 Mich. 261; Hebert v. Bulte, 42 Mich. 489.

¶ 85. Where the words, "In case of nonpayment," were omitted before the words, "of the principal sum, or of the interest thereof," in the provision of a mortgage by which a power of sale was sought to be conferred, foreclosure by advertisement was unauthorized.—Lariverre v. Rains, 112 Mich. 276.

¶ 86. Whether, if a trustee's mortgage is valid as an equitable charge, it is capable of statutory foreclosure, as there can be no legal power of sale, seems doubtful.—Weaver v. Van Akin, 71 Mich. 69.

§ 22. On default in single instalment.

Successive foreclosures for instalments, see ante § 15.

Equity proceedings for further decree on instalments, see post § 100.

Rights of purchaser on foreclosure for instalment, see post § 138.

Presumption that sale for default in single instalment was made subject to other instalments, see post ¶ 595.

Right of purchaser to resort to power of sale on default of further instalment, see post ¶ 564.

Sale subject to payment of further instalments, see post ¶ 560.
Statutory foreclosure on instalment mortgages, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14950.

¶ 87. Under Comp. L. 1871, § 6913, How. St., § 8498, a mortgage payable in instalments stands upon the same basis as to foreclosure as if each instalment were secured by a separate and independent mortgage, neither having priority over any others, and a foreclosure under the power of sale for an instalment simply is entirely unsuited to the enforcement of the respective liens or the adjustment of the respective interests.—McCurdy v. Clark, 27 Mich. 445.

§ 23. On default in building and loan mortgages.

¶ 88. There is nothing in Comp. Laws 1915, § 10007, which forbids the foreclosure of a building and loan association mortgage by advertisement, and such right is expressly granted by the general statute, Comp. Laws 1915, § 14949, relating to foreclosures by advertisement, where there is a power of sale.—Flax v. Mutual Bldg. & Loan Ass'n of Bay County, 198 Mich. 676.

¶ 89. Whether there are conflicting equities in the matter of the foreclosure of a building and loan association mortgage by advertisement involves the entire question as to the propriety of the exercise of that remedy by the association.—Flax v. Mutual Bldg. & Loan Ass'n of Bay County, 198 Mich. 676.

§ 24. Several parcels under same mortgage.

¶ 90. A release of a parcel of land from a mortgage does not defeat the right to sell the rest of the mortgaged premises under a power of sale.—Durm v. Fish, 46 Mich. 312.

§ 25. Conformity to statute; strictness required.

Necessity of conformity to statute of foreclosure notice, see also post ¶¶ 96, 97.
Nature and scope of statutory provisions in general, see also ante ¶¶ 69, 70.
Statutory provisions for foreclosure by advertisement, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 14949-14968.

¶ 91. The statutory provisions as to the right to foreclose by advertisement must be followed strictly.—Dohm v. Haskin, 88 Mich. 144.

¶ 92. Foreclosure by advertisement must comply substantially with statutory requirements.—Grover v. Fox, 36 Mich. 461; Miller v. Clark, 56 Mich. 337.

¶ 93. Statutory foreclosures are matters of contract authorized by the mortgagor, and ought not to be hampered by an unreasonably strict construction of the law.—Lee v. Clary, 38 Mich. 223.

¶ 94. The statutory proceeding, being ex parte, must conform in all matters to the conditions expressed by the legislature.—Lee v. Mason, 10 Mich. 403.

¶ 95. Unreasonable restrictions and intendments against statutory foreclosures should not be favored.—Gage v. Sanborn, 106 Mich. 269.

Notice of sale in equity foreclosure, see post §§ 108, 109.
Notice in statutory foreclosure, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 14951, 14952.

¶ 96. The notice of a statutory foreclosure must conform to the statutory requisites; but if it contains all that the statute requires it will not be void for errors in other respects which are not misleading.—Reading v. Waterman, 46 Mich. 107.

¶ 97. A substantial compliance with the provisions of Comp. Laws 1897, § 11136, How. 2nd Ed., § 13931, as to the contents of a notice of foreclosure of a real estate mortgage by advertisement is necessary.—Lau v. Scribner, 197 Mich. 414.

¶ 98. The notice of foreclosure sale by advertisement need not allege the existence of prior mortgages.—Flax v. Mutual Bldg. & Loan Ass'n of Bay County, 198 Mich. 676.

¶ 99. Where the notice of the foreclosure sale by advertisement under a building and loan association mortgage and the sheriff's deed covered both the land and its appurtenances, they were sufficient to include an easement appurtenant to the land without a specific sale and description thereof.—Flax v. Mutual Bldg. & Loan Ass'n of Bay County, 198 Mich. 676.

¶ 100. The notice of sale, in foreclosure by advertisement, must purport to emanate from the owner of the legal title to the mortgage.—Niles v. Ransford, 1 Mich. 338; Lee v. Clary, 38 Mich. 223.

¶ 101. A notice of foreclosure of a mortgage on real estate by advertisement is in substantial compliance with Comp. Laws 1897, § 11136, How. 2nd Ed., § 13931, although it does not give the date of recording where the date of the mortgage, the names of the mortgagors and mortgagees, and the volume and page of the record are correctly given.—Lau v. Scribner, 197 Mich. 414.

¶ 102. The only things absolutely required in a notice of foreclosure sale by advertisement under Comp. L. 1871, §§ 6912, 6913, 6914, 6915, are the names of the parties, original or by assignment, the date of the mortgage and of its record, the amount claimed to be due, and a description substantially agreeing with that in the mortgage.—Bacon v. Northwestern Mutual Life Ins. Co., 131 U. S. 258, 33 L. ed. 128, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 787.

¶ 103. A notice which states that the premises will be sold, "or so much thereof as may be necessary," is in the usual and proper form, and is not objectionable as not designating the precise parcels to be sold; and if it describes the land in two government subdivisions it is presumptively desirable to sell them separately, though if they are in one connected estate it may be proper to sell them together; and the expression "I will sell" in a notice signed by the mortgagee does not preclude the sheriff from making the sale.—Snyder v. Hemmingway, 47 Mich. 549.

¶ 104. Where the notice says that the sale will be at public auction, it need not say that the sale will be made to the highest bidder; the term "auction sale" implies a sale to the highest bidder, and it will be presumed that a sale, made pursuant to a notice that the premises would be sold at public auction, was made to the highest bidder.—McCammon v. Detroit, L. & N. R. Co., 103 Mich. 104.

¶ 105. The place where sale is to be made is sufficiently described as "at the court house in the village of Mason, Ingham County" within Comp. Laws 1871, § 6915, regulating notice of foreclosure sales and requiring that they be "at the place of holding the circuit court within the county," etc. —McCammon v. Detroit, L. & N. R. Co., 103 Mich. 104.

¶ 106. Two mortgages, one of which contains land not covered by the other, cannot be combined in one advertisement.—Morse v. Byam, 55 Mich. 594.

§ 27. Specifications and descriptions in notice.

Names and descriptions of parties, see post § 28.

Dates, see post § 29.

Matters to be specified in notice on statutory foreclosure, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14952.

¶ 107. The notice of a statutory foreclosure cannot be held void for not containing what the statute does not require.—Lee v. Clary, 38 Mich. 228.

¶ 108. A trifling mistake in the notice of a foreclosure by advertisement sale of real estate, not of such a nature as to mislead or injure any one, may be corrected in the subsequent publications of the notice without affecting the validity of the proceedings. —First State Bank of Decatur v. Day, 188 Mich. 228; O'Dell v. First State Bank of Decatur, Id.

¶ 109. Defects in a notice of a foreclosure sale by advertisement will not defeat the title acquired at the sale where they are not sufficient to deceive any one.—Bacon v. Northwestern Mut. Life Ins. Co., 131 U. S. 258, 33 L. ed. 128, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 787.

¶ 110. Including in a notice of statutory foreclosure sale a larger amount than is actually due—e. g., an instalment of interest not due until a few days after the date of the notice—will not render the foreclosure void.—Huyck v. Graham, 82 Mich. 353.

¶ 111. Where a notice of foreclosure sale by advertisement in stating the amount claimed to be due included a sum due a day after its date, but was not published until several days thereafter, it not appearing that there was bad faith or that any one was misled, the sale was held valid.—Cook v. Foster, 96 Mich. 610.

¶ 112. In the record of a sheriff's foreclosure sale and deed where the notice gives the date of an assignment of the mortgage, and the date of record thereof, the omission to give the book and page of registry is not fatal, it not being required by the statute.—McCammon v. Detroit, L. & N. R. Co., 103 Mich. 104.

¶ 113. The notice of a statutory foreclosure need not state the hour and minute when the mortgage was recorded.—Lee v. Clary, 38 Mich. 223.

¶ 114. The notice of a statutory foreclosure need not state the commencement and discontinuance of previous foreclosure proceedings.—Lee v. Clary, 38 Mich. 223.

¶ 115. Where the notice of a mortgage foreclosure by advertisement described the land as being in section 35, when in fact it was in section 25, and the sheriff's deed followed the notice, there was no foreclosure of the mortgage on the lands in section 25.—Woodruff v. Coffman, 139 Mich. 634.

¶ 116. A sale under a mortgage given by a married woman—her husband joining therein—upon her own land is not void because the notice of sale describes her as his wife.—Yale v. Stevenson, 58 Mich. 537.

¶ 117. It seems that excessiveness in the amount claimed in the notice of foreclosure sale by advertisement will not necessarily invalidate the sale provided the claim was made in good faith.—Flax v. Mutual Bldg. & Loan Ass'n of Bay County, 198 Mich. 676.

§ 28. ——Names and descriptions of parties.

¶ 118. If the notice of statutory foreclosure does not give the mortgagor's name the sale will be void.—Lee v. Clary, 38 Mich. 223.

¶ 119. A notice which gives the Christian name of one of the mortgagors as Julia instead of Tofila, is fatally defective.—Zlotoeciszki v. Smith, 117 Mich. 203.

¶ 120. A notice that identifies a mortgage by date and parties, and that accurately describes the time and place of its record, is not rendered invalid for calling the mortgagee Dixon instead of Dickson, or for once giving inaccurately the date of the mortgage.—Bacon v. Northwestern Mut. Life Ins. Co., 131 U. S. 258, 33 L. ed. 128, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 787.

¶ 121. The notice of statutory foreclosure is not bad for calling the mortgagee "Dixon" instead of "Dickson," where it otherwise identifies the mortgage by date and parties.—Reading v. Waterman, 46 Mich. 107.

¶ 122. If the notice of foreclosure by advertisement, purports to be signed by the party foreclosing, it is not fatally defective for being signed in the wrong name; if the true name is specified in the body of the notice, the party is not required to sign it (Comp. L. 1871, § 6915).—Michigan State Ins. Co. v. Soule, 51 Mich. 312.

§ 29. ——Dates.

Sufficiency of notice which omits date of recordation, see also ante ¶ 101.

¶ 123. A notice published for the proper time and giving the proper time and place of sale is not invalidated by a palpable error of date.—Bacon v. Northwestern Mut. Life Ins. Co., 131 U. S. 258, 33 L. ed. 128, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 787.

¶ 124. It is not bad for misstating the date of the mortgage if it accurately refers to the record, thereby giving the means of correction.—Reading v. Waterman, 46 Mich. 107.

¶ 125. The notice is not void, though erroneously dated, if published for the proper time and giving the proper time and place of sale.—Reading v. Waterman, 46 Mich. 107.

¶ 126. Where a notice of a foreclosure sale of real estate by advertisement contains a discrepancy between the day of the week and the date, the latter controls, especially where there is no claim that the party complaining was misled.—First State Bank of Decatur v. Day, 188 Mich. 228; O'Dell v. First State Bank of Decatur, Id.

¶ 127. A notice of foreclosure by advertisement under Comp. L. 1897, § 11136, subd. 2, requiring the date of the mortgage and when recorded is not invalid because of a mistake in the date of the mortgage where it contains the correct date of recording, the volume and page where recorded and otherwise identifies the mortgage.—Brown v. Burney, 128 Mich. 205.

§ 30. Publication.

Affidavits and proofs, see post § 31.

Legality of newspaper for publication of notice, see Newspapers.

Publication of notice in statutory foreclosure, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14950.

¶ 128. A notice of twelve weeks, excluding the day of the first publication and including the day of sale, is sufficient on a statutory foreclosure sale.—Gantz v. Toles, 40 Mich. 725.

¶ 129. The notice of a statutory foreclosure sale must be published not merely twelve times, once a week, but once a week for twelve successive weeks; and a sale is invalid if made on a notice which, although published twelve times in separate weeks, provided for selling on a day less than twelve weeks from the first publication.—Bacon v. Kennedy, 56 Mich. 329.

¶ 130. A statutory foreclosure is not invalidated by a change in the name of the newspaper in which the foreclosure advertisement is published, and by the removal of the publication office to another place in the same county, if the paper otherwise preserved its identity.—Perkins v. Keller, 47 Mich. 53.

¶ 131. Comp. Laws 1897, § 11135, How. 2nd Ed., § 13930, providing that the notice of the foreclosure of a real estate mortgage by advertisement shall be published in a newspaper in the county where the premises are situated is complied with, and the sale is effected without fraud where the property is located in a large city and the advertisement is inserted in a newspaper in a small town twenty miles away in the same county, and, although the property is sold for one-half of its value, and the mortgagor has no actual notice of the sale until after the expiration of the year for redemption, it is purchased by the mortgagee for the amount of the principal, interest, taxes and costs, the county records being open for inspection.—Lau v. Scribner, 197 Mich. 414.

§ 31. ——Affidavits and proofs.

See also post ¶ 191.

¶ 132. The production of copies of the newspaper in which a notice of sale was published, showing its publication for thirteen consecutive weeks prior to the sale, is sufficient proof of the publication required by the statute on foreclosure by advertisement and it is not necessary for the sheriff at the time of the sale to have an affidavit of such publication before him.—McCammon v. Detroit, L. & N. R. Co., 103 Mich. 104.

¶ 133. An affidavit of publication of notice of sale on statutory foreclosure made between seven and eight years after the sale took place, was held not presumptive evidence of the facts therein stated, under R. S. 1838, p. 501, § 9.—Mundy v. Monroe, 1 Mich. 68.

¶ 134. An affidavit of publication which states that the newspaper in which the notice of statutory foreclosure was published was printed and published weekly and every week, and that the publication was for thirteen successive weeks, the first being Nov. 26, 1879, and the last Feb. 18, 1880, is explicit that the notice was published once in each week.—Snyder v. Hemmingway, 47 Mich. 549.

¶ 135. Notice of a foreclosure sale is indispensable to its validity, and as it is the act of the party, and not of the officer making the sale, the presumption of the performance of official duty does not apply for the purpose of making out a valid foreclosure without actual proof of notice.—Sinclair v. Learned, 51 Mich. 335.

¶ 136. In ejectment by a purchaser on foreclosure the original affidavit of publication showed that the notice of sale was insufficient, but another affidavit was produced, correcting the first, and the publisher gave evidence tending to show that the sale was regularly advertised, and that the original affidavit was incorrect. Held, that the testimony was admissible, but that it was for the jury to pass on, and could not be treated as conclusive by the court.—Wyman v. Baer, 46 Mich. 418.

C. SALE AND INCIDENTS THEREOF.

§ 33. ——Persons qualified to sell.

Sale by unauthorized person as ground for setting aside, see post ¶ 606.
Right of sheriff to sell where notice of sale states that mortgagee will sell, see ante ¶ 103.

¶ 137. A sheriff's deputy may, under How. St., § 8501, sell on foreclosure by advertisement.—Heinmiller v. Hatheway, 60 Mich. 391.

¶ 138. At the foreclosure sale the sheriff may sell though the notice of sale says that the mortgagee will sell.—Snyder v. Hemmingway, 47 Mich. 549.

§ 34. Persons entitled to bid and buy.

Transfer of bid on foreclosure sale as ground for avoiding sale, see post ¶ 608.
Right of mortgagee to purchase, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14956.

¶ 139. Where a man and his wife have given, to secure their joint note, a mortgage on her land, it is presumable from the record that the debt was hers and not his; if so, he has as much right as any one to bid on the premises on a foreclosure by advertisement.—Lucas v. Parks, 84 Mich. 202.

¶ 140. The fact that, in a deed executed as security only, the grantee assumes and agrees to pay a prior mortgage, will not necessarily preclude him from acquiring title under a sale of foreclosure of such mortgage.—Gage v. Sanborn, 106 Mich. 269.

§ 35. Sale in parcels or in gross.

Tracts subdivided or severed after mortgage, see post § 36.
Order of sale of parcels, see post § 37.
Sale in parcel or in gross in equity foreclosure, see post §§ 113-115.
Relief on setting aside sale on ground that it was not made in parcels, see post ¶¶ 679, 680.
Burden of proving that premises sold on foreclosure as one parcel were not occupied as such, see post ¶¶ 684, 685.
Sale in bulk as ground for avoiding foreclosure, see post ¶¶ 610, 611.
Sales to be made in parcels, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14955.

¶ 141. A mortgage sale of several lots which were fenced and used as one parcel when the mortgage was given and had continued so was not void under Comp. L. 1871, § 6918 (see How. St., § 8503).—Yale v. Stevenson, 58 Mich. 537.

¶ 142. Whether, where mortgaged premises are made up of contiguous parcels occupied together as a single farm, a sale in parcels is essential to a valid foreclosure, quære.—Grover v. Fox, 36 Mich. 461.

¶ 143. Comp. L. 1871, § 6918, How. St., § 8503, providing that, where mortgaged premises consist of distinct farms, tracts or lots, they shall be sold separately, does not apply to a tract divided by a highway or by section lines, but occupied as one farm and mortgaged in one parcel.—Larzelere v. Starkweather, 38 Mich. 96.

¶ 144. "Occupancy," within the meaning of How. St., § 8503, authorizing the sale together, on a mortgage foreclosure by advertisement, of separate lots occupied as one parcel, does not require that all of the land be fenced or improved. The actual inclosure of part carries with it the occupancy of the remainder, which is used, or intended to be used, as part of one farm.—Harris v. Creveling, 80 Mich. 249.

¶ 145. Mortgaged premises consisting partly of unplatted land, and partly of land platted by the mortgagor for the purpose of selling it as lots, which plat was recognized by the mortgagee, though not recorded, and referred to for description by the mortgage, cannot be said to constitute a single farm; and a sale thereof as a single parcel, on foreclosure of the mortgage, is irregular.—Hawes v. Detroit Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 109 Mich. 324.

¶ 146. A mortgage foreclosure will not be set aside as against a purchaser who has paid approximately the full value of the property, where there is no evidence of fraud, upon the mere showing that the mortgagee's attorney was mistaken as to the lot lines, and had permitted the two lots covered by the mortgage to be bid in for the same amount, supposing that a store building was upon both lots, whereas it stood entirely upon one.—Marx v. Smith, 111 Mich. 125.

¶ 147. A foreclosure sale in two parcels under a mortgage covering two farms, was in compliance with How. St., § 8503, requiring distinct farms to be sold separately, although there was a prior mortgage.—McIntyre v. Wycoff, 119 Mich. 557.

¶ 148. In view of the facts, namely, separate use, etc., and the statutory provisions, held that the separate sale of contiguous pieces of land, under foreclosure of a building and loan association mortgage by advertisement was proper.—Flax v. Mutual Bldg. & Loan Ass'n of Bay County, 198 Mich. 676.

¶ 149. Whether, on foreclosure of a building and loan association mortgage by advertisement, contiguous pieces of land should have been sold as one parcel, involves a question of fact.—Flax v. Mutual Bldg. & Loan Ass'n of Bay County, 198 Mich. 676.

¶ 150. Where a first mortgage covering two parcels, with the exception of one acre from one of the parcels was given, and upon nonpayment a second mortgage was given on the same tracts, but including the one acre, and the mortgagor gave a warranty of title under the second mortgage, it was not necessary to except the one acre from the sale of the second tract and sell the tract in two parcels.—McIntyre v. Wycoff, 119 Mich. 557.

§ 36. ——Tracts subdivided or severed after mortgage.

¶ 151. Mortgaged premises may be sold as a single parcel where they were so mortgaged, even though they have been since subdivided by the mortgagor but without the mortgagee's concurrence; but where the parties have joined in obtaining the release of a parcel so situated as to leave the rest in distinct parcels and thus affect the security, the sale is void if not made in parcels.—Durm v. Fish, 46 Mich. 312.

¶ 152. Where by release of part the remainder of mortgaged land is severed into separate and distinct parcels, they must, under How. St., § 8503, be sold separately on statutory foreclosure.—Keys v. Sherwood, 71 Mich. 516.

¶ 153. The mortgagee of a lot mortgaged as one parcel may so sell on statutory foreclosure, though aware that part of the lot has been conveyed by the mortgagor to a grantee assuming the mortgage, and that the rest has been conveyed to some one else. The latter, if he wishes his part sold last, should file a bill in equity before the sale.—Long v. Kaiser, 81 Mich. 518.

§ 37. ——Order of sale of parcels.

Selling in equity foreclosure in inverse order of alienation to marshall assets, see post § 116.

Doctrine of marshalling assets in general, see Marshalling Assets.

Between what persons doctrine of marshalling assets is to be applied, see Marshalling Assets.

¶ 154. Sale on foreclosure by advertisement is to be made in the inverse order of alienation or incumbrance of the parcels.—Sager v. Tupper, 35 Mich. 134.

§ 38. Amount and extent of sale.

¶ 155. Where a foreclosure sale is made in parcels, the power of sale is exhausted when enough parcels have been sold to satisfy the mortgage debt and all costs and expenses, and it then affords no authority to make further sales of the remaining parcels.—Grover v. Fox, 36 Mich. 461.

§ 39. Sale under diverse mortgages.

Right to include two or more mortgages in one notice of foreclosure, see also ante ¶ 106.

¶ 156. A foreclosure sale by advertisement is void if one advertisement is made to cover two mortgages in which the descriptions were not identical, and if both parcels are sold on one bid and for one gross sum.—Morse v. Byam, 55 Mich. 594.

§ 40. Validity of sale; grounds for avoidance.

Excessive sale or claim of excessive amount, see post § 41.

Inclusion of improper fees or expenses, see post § 42.

Reopening sale or resale, see post § 43.

Objections to sale in equity foreclosure, see post § 121.

¶ 157. Inadequacy of price cannot vitiate a statutory foreclosure sale otherwise fair and regular; for the owner of the equity of redemption cannot be prejudiced thereby, since he may always redeem within the year by refunding the amount paid, with interest at the rate fixed by the statute.—Cameron v. Adams, 31 Mich. 426.

¶ 158. Where the mortgages were all of record, the fact that, on foreclosure sale under one of them by advertisement, no information was given of prior mortgages, does not impeach the fairness and good faith of the sale.—Flax v. Mutual Bldg. & Loan Ass'n of Bay County, 198 Mich. 676.

¶ 159. A tenant in common, at a statutory foreclosure sale under a mortgage on his cotenant's undivided half of the realty, insisted on the validity of a chattel mortgage held by him on his cotenant's interest in certain machinery upon the premises, threatened to foreclose such chattel mortgage, and bought in the property. Held, that the cotenant was entitled to have the sale declared void.—Dohm v. Haskin, 88 Mich. 144.

§ 41. ——Excessive sale or claim of excessive amount.

¶ 160. A sale to a mortgagee upon statutory foreclosure for an amount in excess of that legally demandable, but claimed by him to be due, is not invalid, in the absence of proof that the surplus was not paid to the officer.—Gage v. Sanborn, 106 Mich. 269.

§ 42. ——Inclusion of improper fees and expenses.

Disposal of surplus arising from inclusion of attorney fees, see post § 53.
Effect of inclusion of improper fees on title of purchaser, see post ¶ 551.
Effect of failure to pay to officer making sale amount of illegal attorney fee, see post ¶ 199.

¶ 161. A mortgage sale is not necessarily invalid for being made for more than was in fact due; the excessive claim becomes important only when it is attempted to redeem from the sale, and its importance depends upon its magnitude or apparent want of good faith.—Millard v. Truax, 50 Mich. 343.

¶ 162. A foreclosure having taken place by advertisement, and land having been struck off for the amount claimed to be due, which included a considerable sum not allowable as costs, and the owner of the mortgage having become the purchaser without paying to the officer making the sale the amount of the bid less what was legally demandable, held, that the same was incomplete, and that he could not claim title under it.—Louder v. Burch, 47 Mich. 109.

¶ 163. A statutory foreclosure sale is not necessarily invalid because the mortgagee claimed in his notice of sale an attorney's fee to which he was not legally entitled, and made the purchase for a sum which included such fee.—Millard v. Truax, 47 Mich. 251; Kennedy v. Brown, 50 Mich. 336.

¶ 164. A foreclosure by advertisement is not void merely because an attorney fee is in good faith included in the sum for which sale is made; that is only an irregularity of which one who is guilty of laches in moving to redeem cannot complain.—Emmons v. Van Zee, 78 Mich. 171.

§ 43. Reopening sale or resale.

Reopening sale for inadequacy of price, see also post ¶¶ 626, 628, 629.
Reopening sale on ground of surprise, see also post ¶ 632.

¶ 165. If a bidder at a statutory foreclosure sale withdraws his offer while the other bidders are still present, the sale should be reopened, especially if some other person promises a higher bid.—Miller v. Miller, 48 Mich. 311.

¶ 166. The Foreclosure Statute (Comp. L. 1871, ch. 218), contemplates that every opportunity shall be given to bidders so that premises may be sold at the best price obtainable, and to that end authorizes the sale to be postponed from time to time. And it does not contemplate legal proceedings to enforce payment of a bid if the bidder is irresponsible or refuses to pay it. The sale should be reopened.—Miller v. Miller, 48 Mich. 311.

¶ 167. Subsequent purchasers cannot resist the reopening of a mortgage sale if the successful bidder takes back his offer immediately after acceptance, and while competing bidders are still present.—Miller v. Miller, 48 Mich. 311.

D. DEED, AND FILINGS AND RECORDS.

§ 44. Form and requisites of deed in general.

Necessity of setting out price of separate parcels, see post § 45.
Deed in foreclosure by suit in equity, see post § 122.
Deputy's deed acknowledged before sheriff, see Acknowledgments ¶ 9.
Statutory provisions as to deed on foreclosure by advertisement, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 14957, 14958.

¶ 168. The deed must be acknowledged; a falsely antedated deed and certificate of acknowledgment are invalid.—Grover v. Fox, 36 Mich. 461.

¶ 169. While it is not necessary to express in the sheriff's deed the rate of interest borne by the mortgage, yet where such rate is expressed therein, payment of the principal with interest at that rate is sufficient to effect a redemption.—Dodge v. Kennedy, 93 Mich. 547.

¶ 170. A sheriff's deed on foreclosure is not made invalid by an error in setting forth the date of a mortgage, which is so described otherwise as to be clearly identified. The statute does not prescribe the form of such a deed.—Reading v. Waterman, 46 Mich. 107.

§ 45. ——Necessity of setting out price of separate parcels.

¶ 171. A deed which represents the lands as sold as a single tract and for one gross sum, when in fact the sale was in parcels, is erroneous.—Grover v. Fox, 36 Mich. 461.

¶ 172. Under Comp. L. 1857, § 5183, How. St., § 8503, if the premises consist of several parcels not adjoining each other, the sale of the parcels must be separate; and in order to admit of redemption under the statute the deed given in pursuance of the sale must show the price at which each parcel was sold.—Lee v. Mason, 10 Mich. 403.

§ 46. Indorsements on deed.

¶ 173. The provision requiring the officer to indorse upon the deed the time when it will become operative is directory merely.—Johnstone v. Scott, 11 Mich. 232; Doyle v. Howard, 16 Mich. 261.

¶ 174. The foreclosure is not void by reason of the sheriff erroneously stating the time of redemption, in his certificate indorsed upon the deed, as one year instead of two. To avoid the foreclosure it must be shown that a tender of the redemption money was actually made within the two years.—Johnstone v. Scott, 11 Mich. 232.

¶ 175. The statute fixes the time for redemption, and a sheriff's certificate fixing an impossible time does not invalidate the foreclosure.—Reading v. Waterman, 46 Mich. 107.

§ 47. Proper maker or grantor and grantee.

¶ 176. Under the act of April 19, 1833, the deed could lawfully be made by the person selling, or his executors, whether in or out of office.—Hoffman v. Harrington, 33 Mich. 392.

¶ 177. Where statutory foreclosure sale was made by the under-sheriff, a deed executed by him and acknowledged by the sheriff, acting as notary, was good since as notary he did not act as sheriff.—Cook v. Foster, 96 Mich. 610.

¶ 178. A sheriff has no right to execute deeds to purchasers on foreclosure if he has previously, to the knowledge of competing bidders, sent a notice of the reopening and postponement of the sale for publication.—Miller v. Miller, 48 Mich. 311.

§ 48. Operation and effect.

¶ 179. How. St., § 8506, in declaring that a sheriff's deed on foreclosure shall vest in the grantee all the interest which the mortgagor had at the time of executing the mortgage, or at any time thereafter, does not enlarge any estate definitely limited in the mortgage, but as between original parties may bind a subsequently acquired interest.—Brayton v. Merithew, 56 Mich. 166.

¶ 180. Notwithstanding How. St., § 8506, a sheriff's deed, though time for redemption has passed, does not operate to vest in the grantee an after-acquired title where the mortgage was void in its inception; e. g., where a wife for her husband's debt mortgaged land owned by both in the entirety.—Naylor v. Minock, 96 Mich. 182.

¶ 181. A mortgagee bid in the property at a foreclosure sale, but afterwards extended the time of payment and made such arrangements with the mortgagor as rendered the sale ineffective. The mortgagor defaulted again in payment and the mortgagee then recorded the sheriff's deed, assigned the mortgage, and quitclaimed the land. Held, that the sheriff's deed was then of no force, because the proceedings on which it depended had been invalidated.—Dodge v. Brewer, 31 Mich. 227.

§ 49. Filing and record or delivery to purchaser.

Evidence and proof of filing, see post § 50. Statutory provisions as to recordation of deed, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14957.

¶ 182. The sheriff's deed on foreclosure at law should be filed immediately after sale, and where this is done without unreasonable delay, the year for the redemption of the premises runs from the date of the filing.—Lilly v. Gibbs, 39 Mich. 394.

¶ 183. Whether there may not be so long a delay in filing the sheriff's deed on foreclosure as to render the whole proceeding as one of foreclosure void, quære.—Lilly v. Gibbs, 39 Mich. 394.

¶ 184. It seems that a brief delay in filing the sheriff's deed on foreclosure while it might subject the sheriff to a mandamus requiring him to perform his duty, ought not entirely to destroy the foreclosure.—Doyle v. Howard, 16 Mich. 261.

¶ 185. A sheriff's deed, which (as appears by the original record) was filed on the day of the sale, but not acknowledged by the sheriff until five days afterwards, was notice to the mortgagor, and he was not deprived of the right of redemption.—McCammon v. Detroit, L. & N. R. Co., 103 Mich. 104.

¶ 186. In a statutory foreclosure of mortgage neglect to file the sheriff's deed within twenty days after the sale does not of itself invalidate the foreclosure, but extends the time for redemption by the period of the delay.—Perkins v. Keller, 43 Mich. 53.

¶ 187. A statutory foreclosure is not invalidated by neglect for more than twelve years to record the sheriff's deed; for if redemption is not made within one year from the date of the sale and deposit of the deed all rights are barred.—Sanford v. Cahoon, 63 Mich. 228.

¶ 188. Under Comp. L. 1871, chap. 157, § 9, requiring the sheriff on a foreclosure by advertisement to deliver to the purchaser "forthwith" a deed to the premises, specifying when the deed shall become operative if not redeemed, a delay of more than a year was held to invalidate the foreclosure.—Doyle v. Howard, 16 Mich. 261.

§ 50. Evidence and proof of sale and filing.

Sheriff's deed as evidence, see post § 51.
Necessity of proof of mortgage and power of sale to support purchaser's title, see also post ¶ 597.
Perpetuating evidence of sale, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 14963-14966.

¶ 189. The presumption of law that a public officer performs his duty applies where the question is whether a sheriff's deed on foreclosure was immediately filed by him, as required by Comp. L. 1871, § 6920, and, unless the circumstances of the case overturn it, prevails so far as to throw the burden of proof upon the party who questions the fact.—Sinclair v. Learned, 51 Mich. 335.

¶ 190. Even if it did not appear by the printed record that the sheriff's deed was filed with the register of deeds, it will be presumed that the deed was so filed as a performance of official duty.—McCammon v. Detroit, L. & N. R. Co., 103 Mich. 104.

¶ 191. The affidavits of publication of notice of sale, and of the fact of sale pursuant thereto, required by Comp. L. 1871, § 6926, relating to foreclosure by advertisement, do not, by themselves, prove a valid foreclosure.—Hebert v. Bulte, 42 Mich. 489.

¶ 192. The affidavits of publication of notice of sale are not required to be recorded, and the proof of sale may be made by oral testimony.—Doyle v. Howard, 16 Mich. 261; Lee v. Clary, 38 Mich. 223.

§ 51. ——Sheriff's deed as evidence.

Estoppel to deny recitals in sheriff's deed as to terms of mortgage, see Estoppel ¶ 27.

¶ 193. The sheriff's deed on a statutory foreclosure is no evidence that the foreclosure was legal.—Bryan v. Straus Bros. & Co., 157 Mich. 49.

¶ 194. A sheriff's deed by itself is no evidence of a regular foreclosure of mortgage by advertisement under the statute.—Barman v. Carhartt, 10 Mich. 338; Hebert v. Bulte, 42 Mich. 489.

¶ 195. The recital in the sheriff's deed that a mortgage foreclosed by advertisement contains a power of sale is no evidence of the fact.—Bradway v. Miller, 200 Mich. 648.

E. DISPOSAL OF PROCEEDS; FEES AND EXPENSES.

§ 52. In general.

Surplus arising from inclusion of attorney fees, see post § 53.
Petition and proceedings to obtain surplus, see post § 54.
Presumptions and evidence as to disposal of proceeds, see post § 55.
Fees and expenses, see post § 56.
Disposal of proceeds of sale in equity foreclosure, see post, III, G.
Right of dowress to dower in surplus on foreclosure sale, see Dower § 13.
Application of proceeds of mortgage foreclosure where mortgage given to secure several items, see Marshalling Assets.

¶ 196. Where, upon a foreclosure sale, the mortgagee bids in the property for a greater amount than that for which the lien exists, the surplus is due at once to the owner of the equity of redemption.—Kennedy v. Brown, 50 Mich. 336; Millard v. Truax, 50 Mich. 343.

¶ 197. A mortgagee who, on foreclosure, bids off the premises at a sum exceeding the debt and legal charges, is estopped, at least in the absence of evidence, from claiming that he did not have to bid the surplus sum to obtain the land, and he cannot repudiate that part of his bid as fictitious. Nor can he deny that he is liable for the surplus to the owner of the equity of redemption on the ground that he has not paid it over to the sheriff for the latter's benefit.—Kennedy v. Brown, 50 Mich. 336.

¶ 198. Nonpayment by the sheriff to the mortgagor of the surplus received on foreclosure sale does not defeat the sale, for the sheriff must account for the money to the mortgagor even though he fails to obtain it, and if the mortgagor redeems without getting it he still has an unquestionable right to have it taken into account.—Sinclair v. Learned, 51 Mich. 335.

¶ 199. In the absence of fraud or oppression the mere failure to pay over the proper surplus to the officer who makes the sale—the amount of an illegal attorney fee being retained—does not render the sale ineffectual to pass the title if no steps are taken to redeem.—Damon v. Deeves, 62 Mich. 465.

§ 53. Surplus arising from inclusion of attorney fees.

See also ante ¶ 199.
Inclusion of improper attorney fee as ground for avoidance, see ante § 42.
Rights in surplus arising from statutory sale of foreclosure, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14962.

¶ 200. It is illegal to include an attorney's fee in the statutory foreclosure of a mortgage executed prior to the enactment of How. St., § 8515a; and such a fee if deliberately included in the amount for which sale is made, and if retained by the mortgagee's attorney, will be regarded as a surplus, and as belonging to the owner of the equity of redemption, who, if there has been no redemption, may sue the mortgagee therefor.—Wilkinson v. Baxter's Estate, 97 Mich. 536.

¶ 201. The owner of a levy upon the equity of redemption at whose request a sale on statutory foreclosure has been allowed to ripen into a title, which he has purchased of the mortgagee in hostility to the mortgagor's title, stands in the mortgagee's shoes, and cannot recover the surplus arising from the inclusion of an illegal attorney's fee.—Wilkinson v. Baxter's Estate, 97 Mich. 536.

§ 54. Petition and proceedings to obtain surplus.

Presumptions and evidence as to disposal of proceeds, see post § 55.

Procedure for distribution and disposal of proceeds of sale in equity foreclosure, see post § 126.

Statutory proceedings to obtain surplus, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14962.

¶ 202. How. St., § 8510, provides that on foreclosure sale any claimant to the surplus may file his claim with the officer making sale, and that a reference to a commissioner to take proofs may be ordered by the court. Held, that—apart from any question as to the validity of this statute—a petition for such reference is fatally defective if it does not establish a prima facie right to a part of the surplus; and it does not do this if it does not show how the parties cited are related to the mortgaged lands. And in the proceedings before the commissioner all parties interested in the equity of redemption must have notice so that they may produce any defense that they have.—Allen v. Wayne Circuit Judges, 57 Mich. 198.

§ 55. Presumptions and evidence as to disposal of proceeds.

¶ 203. In the absence of any averment or proof on the subject it is not a presumption of law that the mortgagee making a purchase at a sale under foreclosure proceedings by advertisement did not pay over to the officer any surplus to which the mortgagor would be lawfully entitled. Therefore it cannot be presumed that he retained any illegal allowance which had been claimed by him.—Millard v. Truax, 47 Mich. 251.

¶ 204. The burden of proof in ejectment by a foreclosure purchaser is not upon the party claiming under a statutory foreclosure to show that he made payment after the sale of the surplus over the amount due.—Damon v. Deeves, 62 Mich. 465.

§ 56. Fees and expenses.

Costs, fees and expenses in equity foreclosure, see post, III, H.

Mode of taxing fees of foreclosure by advertisement, see Jud. Act, chap. XLVII, § 33; Comp. L. 1915, § 13714.

Statutory provision for attorney fee in foreclosure by advertisement, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14968.

¶ 205. Printers' fees cannot be charged on statutory foreclosure if the advertisement is withheld from publication and payment is tendered on the mortgage meanwhile.—Myer v. Hart, 40 Mich. 517.

III. BY SUIT IN EQUITY AND JUDICIAL SALE.

A. IN GENERAL.

§ 57. Jurisdiction and grounds for suit.

Rights after abortive and void foreclosure by advertisement, see post § 58.

Foreclosure by advertisement, see ante, II.

Right to foreclose by equity suit where power of sale in mortgage does not give right, see ante § 8.

Protection and assertion of homestead right in foreclosure, see Homesteads, IX.

Amount necessary to jurisdiction in equity, see Equity § 16.

Jurisdiction and necessity of leave to sue for foreclosure against bankrupt's property, see Courts § 97.

Foreclosure as affirmative relief to defendants on bill for other purpose, see also Equity § 212.

Dismissal of bill to foreclose mortgage for immoral consideration, see Contracts ¶ 180.

Applicability of foreclosure practice in suits on liens for alimony, see Divorce § 189.

Declination of equity to try question of forgery of title anterior to mortgage, see also Equity ¶ 112.

Revival of suit on death of parties, see Abatement § 20; Equity § 233.

Foreclosure of mortgages in equity, see Jud. Act, chap. XIX, §§ 22-38; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12676-12692.

Courts having jurisdiction over equity foreclosure, see Jud. Act, chap. XIX, § 22; Comp. L. 1915, § 12676.

¶ 206. The jurisdiction of equity in foreclosure proceedings in Michigan is purely statutory.—Kollen v. Sooy, 172 Mich. 214.

¶ 207. A mortgagee cannot maintain a foreclosure bill as a proceeding auxiliary to an ejectment suit.—Livingston v. Hayes, 43 Mich. 129.

§ 58. After abortive and void foreclosure by advertisement.

See also post ¶ 601.

Right of purchaser on irregular statutory foreclosure to foreclose in equity, see also post ¶¶ 231, 232.

Foreclosure de novo to cure defects, see post § 147.

¶ 208. The holder of a second mortgage began a foreclosure suit without making the prior incumbrancer a party. Pending foreclosure the first mortgage was assigned, and the assignee foreclosed at law and bid in the premises. Part of the description was left out of the foreclosure notice and omitted also from the sheriff's deed by a mistake for which the assignee was not to blame. Afterwards the holder of the second mortgage perfected his foreclosure, and he also bid in the premises. No new rights arose meanwhile. Held, on a bill by the assignee, that the statutory foreclosure might be set aside and a new foreclosure allowed in equity.—Vary v. Chatterton, 50 Mich. 541.

¶ 209. A chancery bill for the foreclosure of a mortgage will be sustained though there had been an attempted foreclosure by advertisement which was void for failure to describe the premises, and complainant purchased the premises at such sale and went into possession thereunder and had remained in possession until the chancery proceeding was brought.—Woodruff v. Coffman, 139 Mich. 634.

B. PARTIES.

§ 59. In general.

Parties complainant, see post §§ 60-63.
Parties defendant, see post §§ 64-69.
Propriety of joinder or dismissal, see post § 70.
Abatement, revival and substitution, see post § 71.
Necessity of foreclosure by suit in equity where there are conflicting equities, see ante ¶¶ 71-76.

¶ 210. Where the complainant in foreclosure dismissed his bill as against one made a party under the general allegation that he claimed some interest in the premises, as subsequent incumbrancer or otherwise, the mortgagor, appealing to the supreme court from the decree in the case, cannot complain of the dismissal, since it in no respect affects his rights.—Martin v. McReynolds, 6 Mich. 70.

§ 60. Parties complainant.

Partners and persons jointly entitled, see post § 61.
Trustees and beneficiaries, under trusts, see post § 62.
Assignees, transferees and purchasers of mortgagee, see post § 63.
Persons entitled to foreclose, see ante § 2.

¶ 211. One holding the equitable title only to a mortgage may foreclose it in chancery.—Martin v. McReynolds, 6 Mich. 70.

¶ 212. One who is not entitled to receive payment or grant acquittances on a mortgage or its accompanying notes, but is simply bound to release the securities when paid or otherwise discharged, is not the proper person to file a foreclosure bill.—Briggs v. Hannowald, 35 Mich. 474.

¶ 213. A widow, to whom her husband has bequeathed the life interest in a mortgage, can foreclose it without its being assigned to her by probate order as a specific legacy; it is enough that she distinctly avers her ownership, and that she acts with the assent of the remainderman, which may be inferred from circumstances. And where the remainderman is her coexecutor his assent to her possession may be inferred likewise.—Proctor v. Robinson, 35 Mich. 284.

¶ 214. One who, having received a deed as security for the payment of a note, has transferred the note and has subsequently received delivery of a note and mortgage running to the owners of the equity of redemption under such deed, as collateral to the debt secured by the deed, has not such an interest or title as authorizes him to file a foreclosure bill in his own name without making the holder of the original demand a party.—Briggs v. Hannowald, 35 Mich. 474.

§ 61. ——Partners and persons jointly entitled.

¶ 215. Partners need not be joined as complainants in the foreclosure of a mortgage given to only one of the firm as trustee for the partnership.—Shelden v. Bennett, 44 Mich. 634.

¶ 216. A mortgage was given to three persons to secure a debt due to them jointly. Two having died, held, that the survivor could file a foreclosure bill alone.—Cote v. Dequindre, W. 64.

¶ 217. The survivor of two assignees of a mortgage may foreclose it, and it is not necessary for him to join the personal representative of the deceased assignee.—Martin v. McReynolds, 6 Mich. 70.

¶ 218. It is immaterial in a suit to foreclose an indemnity mortgage to reimburse the payers of debts that the payment of the debts was by part of the complainants only, and not by all jointly.—Dye v. Mann, 10 Mich. 291.

§ 62. ——Trustees and beneficiaries under trusts.

¶ 219. A trustee may, in equity, foreclose a mortgage for the benefit of his cestuis que trust.—Bennett v. Clark, 181 Mich. 690.

¶ 220. A trustee, holding a mortgage as such, need not make his cestuis que trust parties to a bill to foreclose it.—Sill v. Ketchum, H. 423.

¶ 221. To a suit for the foreclosure of a mortgage held by a trust company, the bondholders of the company are not necessary parties; they are represented by their trustee, and are bound by the decree so long as it stands unreversed.—Richter v. Jerome, 123 U. S. 233, 31 L. ed. 132, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 106.

¶ 222. On the foreclosure of a trust mortgage to secure numerous creditors, one who did not previously accept its terms may be allowed to come in by meeting its conditions and depositing his notes on the hearing and before the decree, if no inequity be thereby done to other claimants under a mortgage junior in time but previously accepted under knowledge, however, that the notes so deposited were among the debts secured by the prior mortgage.—Gillam v. Barnes, 123 Mich. 119.

§ 63. ——Assignees, transferees and purchasers of mortgagee.

Effect of assignment on right to foreclose, see ante § 14.
Averment of assignment, see post § 75.
Assignment of rights under purchase, see post §§ 141, 142.
Substitution of assignee as party complainant in foreclosure suit, see post ¶¶ 277, 278.
Necessity of making assignor party defendant in suit by assignee, see post ¶ 237.
Assignment or transfer of mortgage or debt secured by it, see Mortgages, VI.

¶ 223. The assignee of a mortgage held to be the equitable holder thereof and, as such, entitled to file a bill to foreclose.—John Schweyer & Co. v. Mellon, 196 Mich. 590.

¶ 224. An assignee of a mortgage may sue upon it in equity in his own name where the assignors have intentionally vested him with full title and authority, and there is no conflict between them as to whether the title is absolute or in trust.—Fisher v. Meister, 24 Mich. 447.

¶ 225. Where the assignee of a mortgage files a bill to foreclose it, and the court finds that the assignment was taken as security only, this will not affect the complainant's right to maintain his bill on the case he has stated, but goes only to the amount of the decree.—McKinney v. Miller, 19 Mich. 142.

¶ 226. Even though there has been no written assignment the assignee of a mortgage is entitled to foreclose in equity on proof of his purchase.—Cooper v. Ulmann, W. 251; Dougherty v. Randall, 3 Mich. 581; Martin v. McReynolds, 6 Mich. 70; Pease v. Warren, 29 Mich. 9.

¶ 227. The notes secured by the mortgage need not be indorsed to the assignee of the mortgage to enable him to foreclose.—Pease v. Warren, 29 Mich. 9.

¶ 228. A. gave to B., who had backed a note for A.'s accommodation, a mortgage on real estate to indemnify him, and on A.'s failing to pay the note at maturity B. paid it, and entered up the amount in his general account against A. as a charge against him. B. afterwards assigned the note and mortgage to C. in payment of a debt. Held, that C. was entitled to foreclose the mortgage and to take a decree for deficiency against A.—Bendey v. Townsend, 109 U. S. 665, 27 L. ed. 1065, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 482.

¶ 229. Where one seeks, as assignee, to foreclose a mortgage securing a non-negotiable note, but gives no evidence of title to the debt beyond the mere possession of the note, and of an assignment for certain interests which are not shown to include the debt secured, his bill must be dismissed.—Lashbrooks v. Hatheway, 52 Mich. 124.

¶ 230. W. owned the equity of redemption in land mortgaged to D., but deeded the land to S. in exchange for certain other property, and to equalize the trade and sustain his covenant of title he agreed to pay a certain portion of the amount due on D.'s mortgage, and gave S. a mortgage on the property he received to secure this agreement. S. afterwards quitclaimed the land to a third person subject to D.'s mortgage, which the grantee assumed as part of the purchase price. Held, that on W.'s failure to pay D. what he had agreed to pay on D.'s mortgage, S. was entitled to foreclose the later mortgage given to him to compel such payment to be made to himself.—Stuart v. Worden, 42 Mich. 154.

¶ 231. Where there has been an irregular statutory foreclosure, the purchaser thereat, or his grantee, not the mortgagee, is the proper party to file a foreclosure bill in chancery.—Gilbert v. Cooley, W. 494.

¶ 232. The grantee of the purchaser on an irregular statutory foreclosure is entitled to foreclose in equity if occasion requires.—Morse v. Byam, 55 Mich. 594.

§ 64. Parties defendant.

Assignees and persons claiming under mortgagor, see post § 65.
Representative of deceased mortgagor, see post § 66.
Sureties, guarantors and indorsers of mortgagor, see post § 67.
Persons claiming interest in equity of redemption, see post § 68.
Adverse claimants or prior incumbrancers, see post § 69.
Right of disclaiming party to costs, see post § 128.
Persons concluded by decree and rights of parties not asserting their claim or defense in foreclosure proceedings, see Former Adjudication, V.
Propriety of making other persons than mortgagor parties defendants, see Jud. Act, chap. XIX, § 26; Comp. L. 1915, § 12680.

¶ 233. The holder of the legal title to the mortgage is a necessary party where the holder of the equitable title files a bill to foreclose.—Martin v. McReynolds, 6 Mich. 70.

¶ 234. The mortgagor is a necessary party to a foreclosure bill, notwithstanding the personal remedy against him is barred.—Michigan Ins. Co. of Detroit v. Brown, 11 Mich. 265.

¶ 235. Where no relief is sought against him personally, the mortgagor is not a necessary defendant to a bill to foreclose a mortgage assumed by the grantee of the premises.—Miller v. Thompson, 34 Mich. 10.

¶ 236. Minors whose guardian has assigned a mortgage which he held for them are not necessary parties to a bill by the assignee to foreclose the same.—Livingston v. Jones, H. 165.

¶ 237. A foreclosure by an assignee whose assignment is not absolute requires that the assignor should be made a party defendant.—Cooper v. Smith, 75 Mich. 247.

¶ 238. The cashier of a bank to whom as such officer a mortgage has been assigned as security for an indebtedness to the bank is not a necessary party in a foreclosure by the bank.—Michigan State Bank v. Trowbridge, 92 Mich. 217.

¶ 239. In foreclosure by an assignee of a mortgage the maker of the mortgage and of its accompanying note cannot complain because the payee of a note is not made a party.—Michigan State Bank v. Trowbridge, 92 Mich. 217.

¶ 240. A bill to foreclose a mortgage given to secure a joint and several note is defective for want of parties if filed against only one of the makers of the note, though the mortgage was given by him only. This is especially so where the mortgage has been assigned, and if the defense to the note could only have been enforced by a joint cross-action for damages.—Dederick v. Barber, 44 Mich. 19.

¶ 241. Where a mortgage is made subject to a life estate already vested in a third person, or where a third person had an undivided interest in the property before the mortgage is given, a foreclosure bill should be dismissed as to him.—Pool v. Horton, 45 Mich. 404.

¶ 242. Whether, where an assignee in bankruptcy has proceeded to decree in the federal court on a bill to foreclose a subsequent mortgage, it is competent, without permission of the bankruptcy court, to make him a defendant in a bill to foreclose a prior mortgage, so as thereby to affect his rights under the subsequent mortgage, quære.—Avery v. Ryerson, 34 Mich. 362.

¶ 243. In foreclosing a real-estate mortgage second mortgagees of chattels that were mortgaged as additional security to the mortgage in suit need not be made defendants.—Grand Rapids Savings Bank v. Denison, 92 Mich. 418.

¶ 244. The fact that defendants in a foreclosure suit have deeded away their equity of redemption does not prevent them from defending against the note and mortgage.—Davis v. Wardowski, 164 Mich. 561.

§ 65. ——Assignees and persons claiming under mortgagor.

Transfer of mortgagor's title or estate and assumption of debt, see Mortgages, VI.

¶ 245. Where, to secure performance of the conditions of a lease, a real estate mortgage has been given, to be discharged when certain furniture on the leased premises shall have been fully paid for by the lessee, an assignee of the lease and of the lessee's interest in the furniture is not a necessary party in a suit to foreclose the mortgage.—Wineman v. Phillips, 93 Mich. 223.

¶ 246. A purchaser of mortgaged premises at an execution sale is a proper party defendant in a suit for the foreclosure of the mortgage.—Hayward v. Kinney, 84 Mich. 591.

¶ 247. The fraudulent grantee of a title which is equitably subject to the mortgage is a proper party defendant to a suit to foreclose the mortgage.—Adams v. Bradley, 12 Mich. 346.

¶ 248. The effect of How. St., § 7847, providing that no action of ejectment shall be maintained by a mortgagee or his assigns or representatives for the recovery of the mortgaged premises until the title thereto shall have become absolute upon a foreclosure of the mortgage is merely to take away the remedy of the mortgagee by entry or ejectment, but it does not in any way effect his rights against those claiming an interest in the premises under the mortgagor, and when the mortgagee acquires possession of the mortgaged land by foreclosure sale, the effect of his possession upon one claiming an easement under the mortgagor is just as complete to avoid its rights and interest as was entry or ejectment at common law, and it is immaterial that the holder of the easement was not made a party to the foreclosure suit.—Western Union Tel. Co. v. Ann Arbor R. Co., 90 Fed. 379, reversed in 178 U. S. 239, 44 L. ed. 1052, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 867.

§ 66. ——Representative of deceased mortgagor.

Sufficiency of averments in bill by representative, see post ¶ 298.

¶ 249. The personal representatives of a deceased mortgagor are not necessary parties to a suit to foreclose the mortgage against the heirs unless the personal estate is sought to be charged with any deficiency.—Abbott v. Godfroy's Heirs, 1 Mich. 178.

¶ 250. The representatives of a defendant in foreclosure who died before the bill was filed need not be brought in where decedent's only interest in the mortgaged premises was a right of dower.—Miller v. Miller, 48 Mich. 311.

§ 67. ——Sureties, guarantors, and indorsers of mortgagor.

¶ 251. Sureties who have undertaken, not for the payment of the mortgage debt, but that the mortgagor shall provide a sinking fund in certain specific securities for its payment, cannot be joined as defendants in a suit to foreclose the mortgage under Comp. L. 1857, § 3567, How. St., § 6704.—Joy v. Jackson & M. Plank Road Co., 11 Mich. 155.

¶ 252. The guarantor of the collection of a debt secured by mortgage should not be made defendant in the foreclosure.—Johnson v. Shepard, 35 Mich. 115.

¶ 253. One who has guaranteed the payment of bonds secured by a mortgage is not, it seems, a necessary party to a suit to foreclose.—Owen v. Potter, 115 Mich. 556.

¶ 254. Under How. St., § 6704, guarantors of bonds secured by the mortgage sought to be foreclosed, may be joined with the principal debtor as defendants.—Union Trust Co. v. Detroit Motor Co., 117 Mich. 631.

¶ 255. Under How. St., § 6704, providing that where a mortgage debt is secured by the obligation of any third person, such person may be made a party to the bill to foreclose, an indorser of a note secured by the mortgage may be joined as defendant; but the statute is not mandatory.—Steele v. Kent Circuit Judge, 109 Mich. 647.

¶ 256. Indorsers of a mortgage note which has been duly protested for nonpayment can be joined as defendants in a foreclosure.—Michigan State Bank v. Trowbridge, 92 Mich. 217.

¶ 257. Those who after a mortgage note has been made have indorsed it by way of additional security to a subsequent taker may be joined as defendants in a foreclosure.—Michigan State Bank v. Trowbridge, 92 Mich. 217.

¶ 258. An indorser on a note secured by a mortgage may be made a party to a bill to foreclose.—Steele v. Kent Circuit Judge, 109 Mich. 647.

¶ 258a. A guarantor of the collection of a note secured by mortgage is not a proper party to the foreclosure of the mortgage, and a decree against him for deficiency in the first instance is erroneous, though, if he has not objected to being made a defendant, it may be that a contingent decree against him would be permissible.—Johnson v. Shepard, 35 Mich. 115.

§ 68. ——Persons claiming interest in equity of redemption.

¶ 259. Where one claims an interest in the equity of redemption, it is proper in a foreclosure suit, to make him a party for the purpose of foreclosing such interest, notwithstanding he also claims the land by tax title.—Horton v. Ingersoll, 13 Mich. 409; Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank of Michigan v. Bronson, 14 Mich. 361.

¶ 260. A mortgagee who files a bill of foreclosure is not bound to bring in parties interested in the equity of redemption, unless where he has actual or constructive notice of their claims, and where he has no such notice they are barred by the foreclosure.—Woods v. Love, 27 Mich. 308.

¶ 261. One may foreclose without reference to subsequent incumbrances if he care only to reach the equity of redemption held by the party whom he has made defendant.—Avery v. Ryerson, 34 Mich. 362.

§ 69. ——Adverse claimants or prior incumbrances.

Priority of adverse claims as issue litigable in foreclosure suit, see post ¶¶ 330-337.
Protection and assertion of right of homestead in foreclosure suit, see Homesteads, IX.

¶ 262. Persons whose claims are prior and adverse to a mortgage are not proper parties to a foreclosure thereof.—Dickerson v. Uhl, 71 Mich. 398.

¶ 263. Adverse claimants or prior incumbrancers cannot be made parties to a foreclosure suit for the purpose of litigating their titles. The only proper parties are the mortgagor and the mortgagee, and those who have acquired rights and interests under them subsequent to the mortgage.—Chamberlain v. Lyell, 3 Mich. 448; Horton v. Ingersoll, 13 Mich. 409; Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank of Michigan v. Bronson, 14 Mich. 361.

¶ 264. In a suit by a junior mortgagee to foreclose a mortgage, prior mortgagees are not necessary parties.—Jerome v. McCarter, 94 U. S. 734, 24 L. ed. 136.

¶ 265. A wife in actual occupancy of a homestead has such a right therein as entitles her to be made a party to the foreclosure of a mortgage thereupon.—Haviland v. Chase, 116 Mich. 214.

¶ 266. In a foreclosure suit a third person claiming a right of dower in the premises cannot be made a party.—Ligare v. Semple, 32 Mich. 438.

¶ 267. The wife of a mortgagor, even though she claims a homestead right in the premises, is not a necessary party to a bill to foreclose a purchase-money mortgage given by the husband alone at the time of his purchase.—Amphlett v. Hibbard, 29 Mich. 298.

¶ 268. A man mortgaged an undivided two-thirds of certain land without inserting covenants of title or warranty. His wife afterwards acquired the other undivided third, to which he had no title when he gave the mortgage. Held, that she could not be made a defendant to a foreclosure bill.—McClure v. Holbrook, 39 Mich. 42.

¶ 269. There is no reason for making the holder of a tax title on mortgaged premises a defendant in a suit for the foreclosure of the mortgage, and where complainant fails to show any other claim on his part the bill will be dismissed, with costs, as to such a defendant.—Hayward v. Kinney, 84 Mich. 591.

¶ 270. The description of premises in the mortgage was erroneous in one particular. To a bill to foreclose it and correct the error a person is not a proper party who owns lands which would be affected by the erroneous description, but who has never been owner or incumbrancer of any portion of the mortgaged premises as identified by the proofs.—Ramsdell v. Eaton, 12 Mich. 117.

¶ 271. An attaching creditor is a proper party to foreclosure proceedings of a mortgage existing upon the property but unrecorded at the time of the attachment levy.—Campbell v. Keys, 130 Mich. 127.

¶ 272. A subsequent attachment lien holder was a proper party to proceedings to foreclose a mortgage, under allegations of the bill that he had notice, prior to the levy of his attachment, of the existence of the mortgage and knew that it was a valid and subsisting lien on the premises.—Campbell v. Bane, 119 Mich. 40.

§ 70. Propriety of joinder or dismissal.

See also post ¶ 344.

Necessity of averment as to defendant's interest to show propriety of joinder, see post § 77.

Right of mortgagor to complain of dismissal as to adverse claimant, see also ante ¶ 210.

¶ 273. It is not indispensable to a bill to foreclose several mortgages, given by the same mortgagor on several parcels of land, that all of the defendants should be equally interested in all the matters involved, it is sufficient if each is intended in some material matters set forth in the bill.—Michigan Nat. Bank v. Hill, 181 Mich. 7.

¶ 274. A defendant in foreclosure whose connection with the mortgage or the equity of redemption is not shown by the bill is not a proper party, and is entitled, so far as he is concerned, to have the bill dismissed with costs.—Havens v. Jones, 45 Mich. 253.

¶ 275. The wife of a defendant in foreclosure is properly made a party because she is interested in the question whether the mortgage was for purchase money so that its foreclosure would cut off her right of dower. But if the subpoena served on her has no underwriting to let her know the purpose of the suit (Chancery Rule 122), and if, in consequence, she appears and disclaims, and replication is filed to her disclaimer, she is entitled to the costs of a solicitor's fee on the dismissal of the suit as to her, and, if it is not allowed, to a solicitor's fee on appeal.—Haldane v. Sweet, 55 Mich. 196.

§ 71. Abatement, revival and substitution.

Revivor of suit, see post § 82.

Bringing in new parties on revival, see Abatement § 20.

Abatement of suit by death or transfer of title, see generally Abatement.

Effect of payment after decree for instalment to abate entire suit, see also Abatement ¶ 54.

¶ 276. Where a foreclosure suit, based on default in one instalment, has abated by complainant's death no further proceedings can be had until the rights of the one to whom his administrator has assigned the decree are brought before the court.—Brand v. Smith, 99 Mich. 395.

¶ 277. An assignee of a foreclosure decree based on one instalment and a default therein may under First Chan. Rule 125, be substituted as complainant in the original suit.—Brand v. Smith, 99 Mich. 395.

¶ 278. Under First Chan. Rule 125, providing for the substitution of the assignee of a chose in action as complainant in a chancery suit instituted by his assignor prior to the assignment, a junior mortgagee who becomes an equitable assignee, on paying to the prior mortgagee the amount of the decree obtained by him in a suit to foreclose his mortgage, is entitled to be substituted as complainant in such suit, although he was originally made a defendant therein, and although the decree has been enrolled.—Codd v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 109 Mich. 120.

C. PLEADINGS, EVIDENCE AND TRIAL.

§ 72. Bills in general; multifariousness.

Averment of mortgage and right to foreclose, see post § 73.

Averments as to conditions and contingencies, see post § 74.

Averment of assignment and secession in right, see post § 75.

Description of mortgaged premises, see post § 76.

Averments as to defendant's interest, see post § 77.
Necessity and sufficiency of prayer, see post § 78.
Sufficiency of averments in bill for deficiency decree, see post § 172.
Variance between proof and pleadings, see post § 84.
Effect of prayer for deficiency judgment as rendering foreclosure bill multifarious, see also post ¶ 306.
Joinder of distinct foreclosures as multifariousness, see also Equity §§ 73, 75.
Multifariousness of bill joining subsequent grantees, etc., see also Equity ¶ 270.
Multifariousness of bill praying other incidental relief, see also Equity § 76.
Matters to be stated in bill for foreclosure, see Jud. Act, chap. XIX, § 27; Comp. L. 1915, § 12681.

¶ 279. A bill to foreclose several mortgages given by the same mortgagors on different pieces of property, is not multifarious, where such mortgages grew out of a continuous business transaction, extending over a long period of time.—Michigan Nat. Bank v. Hill, 181 Mich. 7.

¶ 280. Multifariousness is not necessarily imputable to a bill to foreclose four mortgages, held by the complainant as owner and given by one mortgagor, although other persons than the mortgagor, whose interests under the different mortgages are various, were made defendants, a personal decree being asked only against the mortgagor.—Torrent v. Hamilton, 95 Mich. 159.

¶ 281. A bill to enjoin the prosecution of an action at law cannot be treated as a bill for foreclosure where there is nothing in existence on which to enforce a lien.—Michigan Sugar Co. v. Moffett, 183 Mich. 589.

¶ 282. A foreclosure bill that makes certain parties defendants as subsequent purchasers or incumbrancers is not multifarious in alleging that such defendants claim some adverse interest.—Wilkinson v. Green, 34 Mich. 221.

§ 73. ——Averment of mortgage and right to foreclose.

Sufficiency of averments in bill as to pending action for the debt, see also ante ¶ 29.

¶ 283. In a foreclosure bill it is sufficient to set out the condition of the mortgage according to its legal effect.—Jerome v. Hopkins, 2 Mich. 96.

¶ 284. The allegation that the mortgage debt is due is material in a foreclosure suit. —Morris v. Morris, 5 Mich. 171.

¶ 285. Where a foreclosure bill did not state that anything was due on the note executed with the mortgage, or state whether any proceedings had been had at law for the recovery of the debt, it was held demurrable.—Bailey v. Gould, W. 478.

¶ 286. An allegation that no part of the mortgage debt has been collected or paid, when the bill sets out fully the mortgage, and shows the amount of the several instalments, and when they became due, sufficiently shows the amount due.—Martin v. McReynolds, 6 Mich. 70.

¶ 287. An allegation that a deed absolute in form was given the complainant as security for a debt due a copartnership, the members of which were made parties to the proceeding, that the suit was authorized by them, but the debt had not been paid nor any proceeding at law taken to collect it, is sufficient as a bill by a trustee to foreclose a mortgage.—Bennett v. Clark, 181 Mich. 690.

¶ 288. A bill to foreclose a mortgage given by Alexander Eaton, junior, to O. P. Ramsdell, was filed by Orrin P. Ramsdell against Alexander Eaton. The bill was in the usual form, but contained no direct averment that the parties to the suit were identical with the parties to the mortgage. Held, sufficient on pro confesso. The question of identity would have been open to proof if disputed.—Ramsdell v. Eaton, 12 Mich. 117.

§ 74. ——Averments as to conditions and contingencies.

Right to foreclose on mortgages to secure conditional liability, see ante § 5.

¶ 289. Where complainant's right to foreclose a mortgage depends upon the performance of conditions precedent his bill should aver such performance.—Curtis v. Goodenow, 24 Mich. 18.

¶ 290. Where a mortgage is given to secure the sureties on an official bond, it is immaterial that a bill to foreclose it does not correctly state the date of the appointment to the office, if it correctly recites the mortgage and the breach, and the testimony makes out full ground of suit.—Shelden v. Warner, 45 Mich. 638.

¶ 291. Bill by persons who had guaranteed the performance of a covenant to pay certain debts to foreclose an indemnity mortgage. They averred that they had paid on the debts $1,000, "as they were obliged to do by the terms and legal effect" of the covenant, "on account of the default" of the covenantor. It was held that this was a sufficient statement that they had paid after their liability accrued, and that it was not necessary to set forth in the bill the particular sums paid.—Dye v. Mann, 10 Mich. 291.

¶ 292. Where a mortgagee's right to certain money depended upon the title to the premises named in the mortgage being perfected in the two particulars mentioned in the mortgage, it was held that a bill to foreclose should contain distinct averments in the stating part of the bill of the performance of the two conditions precedent. A bill in the ordinary form, as in case of a mortgage for the payment of money unconditionally, except that in stating the pretenses of defendant to excuse his nonpayment it states that he pretends a noncompliance by complainant with such conditions, and avers that such pretense is unfounded, is not sufficient.—Curtis v. Goodenow, 24 Mich. 18.

§ 75. ——Averment of assignment and succession in right.

Effect of assignment of right to foreclose, see ante § 14.

Rights of assignees as parties complainant, see ante § 63.

¶ 293. In stating an assignment of the mortgage it is sufficient to set it forth according to its legal import and effect, without reference to its form or phraseology.—Martin v. McReynolds, 6 Mich. 70.

¶ 294. The averment in a foreclosure bill that the owner of a bond and mortgage assigned the same to the complainants in consideration of one dollar, and that on the same day the assignment was duly acknowledged before a commissioner of deeds according to the laws of New York, where the same was executed, is sufficient on demurrer. —Livingston v. Jones, H. 165.

¶ 295. A foreclosure bill filed by an assignee of the mortgage stated that the mortgage was executed in May, 1839, and that the mortgagee afterwards, to wit, Feb. 25, 1839, assigned to complainant. It then stated that the assignment was acknowledged Feb. 25, 1841. Held, that the date 1839 was a clerical error, and might be rejected as surplusage.—Bailey v. Murphy, W. 424.

¶ 296. A foreclosure bill filed by an assignee whose assignment shows upon its face that it is not absolute should set forth the existence and amount of the notes to secure which he holds it.—Cooper v. Smith, 75 Mich. 247.

¶ 297. A foreclosure bill filed by an assignee who claims to be the owner of one of four mortgage notes should account for the remaining notes, but, if their payment is shown on the hearing, the defect, as one of pleading, may be disregarded.—Cooper v. Smith, 75 Mich. 247.

¶ 298. A foreclosure bill by persons describing themselves as executors of the last will of a mortgagee cannot be sustained where it does not set out his death or in any way allude to the probate of the will.—Middlesworth v. Nixon, 2 Mich. 425.

¶ 299. It is not ground of demurrer to a foreclosure bill by an assignee that it does not give the date of the assignment of the bond and mortgage.—Sill v. Ketchum, H. 423.

§ 76. ——Description of mortgaged premises.

¶ 300. It is unimportant that a foreclosure bill describes the premises in different terms from those used in the mortgage if the mortgage is sufficiently identified and the premises described in both are substantially the same. If either party wants a judicial settlement of the question what precise parcel the description belongs to, a proper case should be made therefor with proper proof.—Shepard v. Shepard, 86 Mich. 173.

¶ 301. A foreclosure bill may properly describe the mortgaged land with accuracy even though such description varies from that in the mortgage in details that may be rejected as surplusage.—Slater v. Breese, 36 Mich. 77.

¶ 302. A foreclosure bill which describes the mortgaged premises as "Lot No. 6 of Backus' Subdivision of Out-lot No. 8 of the Woodbridge Farm," when the number of the out-lot should have been given as 87, and which fully identifies the property involved, is not fatally defective as to description.—Stevenson v. Kurtz, 98 Mich. 493.

§ 77. ——Averments as to defendants' interest.

Right to dismissal where bill does not show defendant's interest in foreclosure suit, see ante ¶ 274.

Averments in bill for foreclosure as to interest of defendants claiming as subsequent purchasers or incumbrancers, see 1916 C. C. Rule 58, § 1.

¶ 303. The general allegation in a foreclosure bill, that a defendant "has or claims to have rights and interests in the mortgaged premises as subsequent purchaser, incumbrancer or otherwise," is not sufficient to put in issue any right of such defendant which he holds paramount to the mortgage, and a disclaimer is all that is necessary to protect such rights.—Comstock v. Comstock, 24 Mich. 39.

¶ 304. Whether a bankrupt's assignee can be impleaded on foreclosure as representing the bankrupt's interests as a subsequent incumbrancer, by alleging that, "as assignee of A. B. [the bankrupt], he has or claimed to have rights and interests in the premises, * * * or in some part or parts thereof, as subsequent purchaser, incumbrancer or otherwise," quære.—Avery v. Ryerson, 34 Mich. 362.

¶ 305. Bill was filed to foreclose a mortgage, which made persons other than the mortgagor parties, charging that one of them had given a prior mortgage on the same premises, which had been since paid, but caused to be assigned to one of the other defendants for the purpose of keeping it alive against complainant's mortgage; and asking that it be decreed to be satisfied; but the bill did not show any privity of title to the land between the parties to the first and the parties to the second mortgage, or what was the state of the title at any time, or any obligation on the part of the first mortgagor which would entitle the second mortgagor or his assigns to require him to pay or remove such first mortgage. Held, that the bill showed no title to relief as against the parties to the first mortgage.—Wright v. Dudley, 8 Mich. 115.

§ 78. Necessity and sufficiency of prayer.

¶ 306. A prayer for a deficiency judgment does not render a foreclosure bill multifarious.—Bennett v. Clark, 181 Mich. 690.

¶ 307. Where the bill charges an instrument to be a mortgage, asks to have it foreclosed as such, and contains a prayer for other or further relief, the court may declare it to be a mortgage, although there be no special prayer for that purpose in the bill.—Abbott v. Godfroy's Heirs, 1 Mich. 178.

§ 79. Answer and other pleadings to the bill.

See also post ¶ 319.

Defenses, objections or bar of right, see ante §§ 9-12.

Cross-bills and counterclaims, see post § 80.

Propriety of demurrer, see also ante ¶ 285.

Right of disclaiming party to costs, see post § 128.

Admissions by answer calling plaintiff to prove case, see also Equity ¶ 609.

¶ 308. Defense that foreclosure is barred by statute may be raised by answer as well as by demurrer.—Highstone v. Franks, 93 Mich. 52.

¶ 309. Where the defense to the foreclosure of a mortgage depends on new matter by way of avoidance the defendant must allege it circumstantially and prove it as alleged.—Post v. Springsted, 49 Mich. 90.

¶ 310. Where a mortgage permits the mortgagor to make payment before the debt falls due, at his option, he must distinctly and affirmatively elect to do so, and, if he relies upon such election in defending against a foreclosure, he must not only prove it but allege it in his answer.—Post v. Springsted, 49 Mich. 90.

¶ 311. Where a defense to a mortgage foreclosure is based on an alleged agreement between the complainant's assignor and the defendant the agreement must be clearly set out in the answer. Where both answer and proofs are vague such defense will fail.—Suhr v. Ellsworth, 29 Mich. 57.

¶ 312. The defense that one who is made a party defendant in a bill to foreclose a mortgage, as claiming to have an interest in the mortgaged premises as "subsequent purchaser, incumbrancer, or otherwise," claims title in fee by virtue of a tax deed, may be set up by plea as well as by filing a disclaimer.—Shafer v. Thompson, 109 Mich. 406.

¶ 313. Where a foreclosure bill calls for an answer under oath, the existence and consideration of the debt and securities is put in issue, and anything is responsive that explains the transaction. The defendant is called on to answer the whole series of material averments as well as the special interrogatories.—Matteson v. Morris, 40 Mich. 52.

¶ 314. A junior incumbrancer joined as defendant in foreclosure, and claiming the benefit of the doctrine of marshalling assets, should allege and establish such facts as would entitle him thereto.—Detroit Savings Bank v. Truesdail, 38 Mich. 430.

¶ 315. Where the answer in a foreclosure suit, fairly construed, avers that the amount of the note and mortgage has been reduced by payments, evidence of such payments is admissible against an objection of lack of affirmative averments thereof.—Stabler v. Clark, 155 Mich. 26.

§ 80. Cross-bills and counterclaims.

Cross relief and set-offs, see post §§ 97, 98.

Defenses, objections or bar of right, see ante §§ 9-12.

Burden of proof on cross-bill, see post ¶ 352.

Sufficiency of proof of set-off against mortgage, see post ¶ 365.

Pleading of set-offs in general, see Set-offs. IV.

Foreclosure as proper cross relief in rescission suit, see Rescission and Cancellation, VI.

¶ 316. A portion of the land covered by a mortgage having been conveyed subject to the payment of the entire mortgage by the grantee, the purchaser of another parcel is not obliged to file a cross-bill in the foreclosure suit to protect his rights, but may set out the facts in his answer, and the court, where it can be done without prejudice to the complainant, should make decree protecting his priority.—Caruthers v. Hall, 10 Mich. 40.

¶ 317. Where a mortgagee who is himself in debt has assigned to his creditor as security the note secured by the mortgage, and then seeks to foreclose the mortgage, the creditor also can file a cross-bill to protect his equities. And on such cross-bill the mortgagee can be held personally liable to the creditor for any deficiency, even though he has not indorsed the note assigned.—Wilcox v. Allen, 36 Mich. 160.

¶ 318. Where in a foreclosure suit a defendant sets up an equitable mortgage on the land as a prior lien to the mortgage in suit, such claim is proper subject for a cross-bill.—Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank v. Bronson, 14 Mich. 361.

¶ 319. A second mortgagee, after instituting foreclosure proceedings to which he made a subsequent mortgagee a defendant, took a quitclaim from the mortgagors and acquired the first mortgage. Whether the subsequent mortgagee, in setting up these facts as a defense, could do so in an answer, or should set them up by plea or cross-bill, quære.—Tower v. Divine, 37 Mich. 443.

¶ 320. Where there were two mortgages on the same property and the second mortgage had already been foreclosed, in a suit to foreclose the first mortgage the mortgagor cannot have a cross-bill filed by the second mortgagee dismissed and have him relegated to his own decree.—Redfield v. Reid, 148 Mich. 545.

¶ 321. In a suit to foreclose a purchase-money mortgage, a counterclaim by vendees for a defect in title to part of the land was denied where it appeared that they had not been ousted, that the record title had not been perfected, that the vendor was entirely solvent, and that if any defect in the title existed in fact there was a perfect remedy against the vendor on the covenants of his deed.—Pfirrman v. Wattles, 86 Mich. 254.

¶ 322. A purchase-money mortgagor, pleading set-off, does not show that he is damnified by setting up the foreclosure in chancery of an incumbrance and the sale of the mortgaged premises, but without alleging that he was a party to the suit or in any way bound thereby.—Griggs v. Detroit & M. Ry. Co., 10 Mich. 117.

¶ 323. In a suit to foreclose a mortgage given to secure an accommodation indorser, a partnership accounting between the parties cannot, if not connected with the case, be brought into it except by setting up such facts in the answer or by cross-bill as would entitle the defendant to the benefit of an equitable set-off.—Hess v. Final, 32 Mich. 515.

§ 81. Amendments and supplemental pleadings.

Amendments and corrections of decree, see post § 104.

Effect of amendment of bill for foreclosure on time of sale, see post ¶ 458.

Amendment of bill to set up other subsequent mortgages held by complainant, where they are drawn in by answers, see Equity ¶ 541.

¶ 324. A mortgage containing an erroneous description having been replaced by one describing the premises correctly, the mortgagee sought to foreclose it against a subsequent purchaser, but, by mistake, gave his solicitor the original instead of the corrected mortgage, and the solicitor filed a bill to correct the description and foreclose. Defendant answered, admitting his purchase under the mortgage, but averring that the mortgage had been fully paid and discharged. Complainant explained his mistake in an affidavit, and filed an amended bill setting up the new mortgage and asking for its foreclosure. The court struck the amended bill from the files. Held error. Complainant was entitled to amend, and defendant having admitted the purchase subject to the mortgage was not in position to object. The second mortgage could properly be construed as given to correct the mistake in the first without destroying the identity of the debt, and to bring out the real equity which defendant must have known was the cause of action.—McMann v. Westcott, 47 Mich. 177.

¶ 325. Failure to allege that a deceased mortgagor's children, joined as defendants in a suit to foreclose the mortgage under an allegation that they claim rights as subsequent purchasers, incumbrancers or otherwise, are heirs at law, may be supplied by amendment on appeal, and cannot be taken advantage of on appeal by the mortgagor's widow.—Gray v. Franks, 86 Mich. 382.

¶ 326. Where a bill to foreclose a mortgage is taken as confessed, and the same day complainant receives from defendant a payment in consideration of which it executes a discharge of the mortgage as to part of the mortgaged premises, it is not necessary that complainant file a supplemental bill in order to prevent a dismissal of the mortgage suit.—Commercial Nat. Bank v. Gaukler, 165 Mich. 403.

¶ 327. Where a bill to foreclose a mortgage is taken as confessed, and the same day complainant receives from defendant a payment in consideration of which it executes a discharge of the mortgage as to part of the mortgaged premises, no ground is thereby given upon which defendant may insist on his motion to dismiss the bill, complainant having meanwhile filed without service a supplemental bill in all respects like the original bill, except that it sets out the fact of the partial discharge.—Commercial Nat. Bank v. Gaukler, 165 Mich. 403.

¶ 328. A defendant in a foreclosure decree who has a residuary interest in the mortgage foreclosed after complainant's demand is satisfied may file a bill to have the benefit of that decree, and also to foreclose the mortgage against the defendants who were not, but should have been, parties to the first suit. Such a bill is not objectionable. It is an original bill as to those who were not parties to the first bill, and a supplemental bill as to those who were.—Griggs v. Detroit & M. Ry. Co., 10 Mich. 117.

¶ 328a. Where a mortgage provides for the payment of taxes, it is not necessary to file a supplemental bill showing the payment of taxes after the filing of the original bill of foreclosure, in order to include such taxes in the decree.—Commercial Nat. Bank v. Gaukler, 165 Mich. 403.

§ 82. Revivor of suit.

Substitution of parties complainant in revived suits, see ante § 71.

Revival of suit on death of parties, see Abatement § 20; Equity § 233.

Personal representative as proper party to revive suit on death of complainant, see Abatement ¶ 103.

Appearance to petition for revivor as appearance to foreclosure suit, see Appearance ¶ 32.

¶ 329. In case of a mortgagor's death after payment of the first decree upon a foreclosure for an instalment due on the mortgage, and before proceedings for a further decree on an additional instalment, held, that if a bill of revivor is not absolutely essential, averments of equivalent import, by way of the statutory petition, are at least requisite.—Brown v. Thompson, 29 Mich. 72.

§ 83. Issues and matters litigable.

¶ 330. Prior adverse claims cannot be litigated on foreclosure.—Dickerson v. Uhl, 71 Mich. 398.

¶ 331. Foreclosure is not a proceeding in which to litigate the adverse and paramount title of a defendant who claims under the foreclosure of a previous mortgage from which the complainant does not seek to redeem.—Bell v. Pate, 47 Mich. 468.

¶ 332. A title that is adverse and paramount to that of both mortgagor and mortgagee cannot be litigated in a foreclosure suit; but the question whether an asserted claim is such an adverse one as to come within this rule depends, not upon what is set up in the answer in regard to it, but rather upon what the bill charges and the proofs show to be its real character.—Wilkinson v. Green, 34 Mich. 221.

¶ 333. The dower right of a third party cannot be litigated in foreclosure; but its existence may be passed upon when material to the case.—Ligare v. Semple, 32 Mich. 438.

¶ 334. The holder of a mortgage dated and recorded before a deed of the same property is entitled to treat all subsequent rights as subordinate; and on his bill of foreclosure such rights need not be litigated.—Shelden v. Warner, 45 Mich. 638.

¶ 335. It is not admissible in a foreclosure suit, whatever the pleadings, to proceed to litigate and settle the right of a party who sets up a legal title, which, if valid, is adverse and paramount to the title of both mortgagor and mortgagee, and if it were, a bill which simply brings in the adverse claimants under the usual allegation in foreclosure bills against subsequent purchasers and incumbrancers, i. e., as claiming subordinate interests, is not properly framed to raise such an issue or to support a decree upon the title of such adverse claimants.—Summers v. Bromley, 28 Mich. 125.

¶ 336. Where a foreclosure bill is filed against subsequent purchasers from a grantee whose deed was not recorded until after the mortgage, complainant is not concerned with the good faith of their grantor, and need not investigate the merits of subsequent interests.—Shelden v. Warner, 45 Mich. 638.

¶ 337. Whether the title obtained by one who buys from the purchaser on statutory foreclosure after the time for redemption has expired can be passed upon in a foreclosure proceeding for a second instalment under the mortgage, quære.—Miles v. Skinner, 42 Mich. 181.

¶ 338. The failure by foreclosing assignees of a mortgage to produce mortgage notes or to account for their nonproduction cannot be complained of by the assignor; the only question which he can contest being the superiority of complainant's rights to his.—Moreland v. Houghton, 94 Mich. 548.

¶ 339. By agreement between a mortgagee of land and a third person who owned certain personalty thereon, the mortgagee was to sell the personalty and apply $1,000 of the proceeds on the mortgage debt, which was done. On foreclosure for the balance due it was held that neither the mortgagor nor his grantees could inquire into the disposition of the amount received above the $1,000 which in fact belonged to the third person.—Hayes v. Stockwell, 73 Mich. 366.

¶ 340. Damages sustained by complainant from a third person's failure to perform his agreement to purchase the mortgage cannot be litigated in foreclosure.—Winsor v. Ludington, 77 Mich. 215.

¶ 341. The question whether a discharge of the mortgage sought to be foreclosed by suit was forged, as alleged, is for the chancery court as an incident of the suit and is not to be sent to a jury.—Keller v. Hannah, 52 Mich. 535.

¶ 342. In an action to foreclose a mortgage, where the answer asserts want of consideration, the defense that the transactions upon which the mortgage was issued were founded upon an illegal consideration is within the issues, and proof thereof may be made.—Dierkes v. Wideman, 143 Mich. 181.

§ 84. Variance between proof and pleadings.

See also ante ¶ 315.

¶ 343. The allegation under Chancery Rule 91 that a defendant claims an interest in the mortgaged premises "as subsequent purchaser, incumbered or otherwise" will not entitle the complainant to show that a deed to such defendant subsequent to the mortgage, but recorded first, is fraudulent. If he claims the deed to be fraudulent he must set forth in the bill the facts which show the fraud.—Wurcherer v. Hewitt, 10 Mich. 453.

¶ 344. A note given by two persons was secured by a mortgage from only one of them. The foreclosure bill described the note as given by the mortgagor, but no objection was made for nonjoinder, and the bill made profert of the note and mortgage, and described the mortgage by its record. Held, that this was not a case of misdescription, and therefore not one of fatal variance; and the nonjoinder is unimportant unless as bearing upon personal responsibility.—Botsford v. Botsford, 49 Mich. 29.

¶ 345. A foreclosure suit can be defended only on the grounds set up in the answer.—Higman v. Stewart, 38 Mich. 513.

¶ 345a. Bill to purchase a mortgage collateral to a bond conditioned to pay certain joint notes of complainants and defendants, the former being sureties, the latter principals. Defense, that defendants had empowered complainants to take and sell goods of the defendants until their claim was satisfied, and that complainants had done so. Held, that under such pleadings complainants might show that these goods had been attached by creditors of the defendants, and that in replevin they had been unable to hold them for want of sufficient interest in themselves to take them from the sheriff, as these facts were not in avoidance merely, but entirely disproved and negatived the defense set up that the mortgage was discharged.—Hall v. Nash, 10 Mich. 303.

§ 85. Presumptions and burden of proof.

¶ 346. The burden of proving fraud alleged as a defense to a mortgage is on the mortgagor.—Perrett v. Yardsdorfer, 37 Mich. 596.

¶ 347. The burden of proving the consideration and genuineness of mortgages for the foreclosure of which suit is brought rests on the complainant, where the defendant files an answer under oath denying positively the execution of the mortgages and the existence of any consideration for them.—Matteson v. Morris, 40 Mich. 52.

¶ 348. The burden of showing that a mortgage sought to be foreclosed was only given as security for certain book accounts is upon defendant.—Coon v. Bouchard, 74 Mich. 486.

¶ 349. The holder of one of several notes secured by a mortgage that is discharged of record, in foreclosing against the present owner of the premises, can introduce proof to disturb the discharge without setting out the invalidating facts in the bill; he must show a prima facie title as assignee, and if the defendant relies on a discharge he must allege and prove it.—Spear v. Hadden, 31 Mich. 265.

¶ 350. On foreclosure by assignee the mortgagee was sworn as a witness and testified that the mortgage was made to him and assigned to complainant at the request of one of the mortgagors, without any consideration moving from or to him for the mortgage or assignment. Held, that this evidence cast upon complainant the burden of proof to show a consideration for the mortgage.—Bishop v. Felch, 7 Mich. 371.

¶ 351. The burden of showing that the amount due on a mortgage under foreclosure is less than the amount secured or than what remained unpaid on balance of accounts is on the defendant.—Lyon v. McDonald, 51 Mich. 435.

¶ 352. Where a foreclosure case is tried on a bill and cross-bill, and the defendant, on information and belief, alleges in the cross-bill that the amount called for in the original bill is too much, it is for the defense to prove the allegation if opportunity is given. If no proof is offered the complainant is not obliged to tender evidence to disprove it.—Johnson v. Van Velsor, 43 Mich. 208.

¶ 353. The defendant in a suit to foreclose a mortgage has the burden of proving that the consideration therefor was less than appears therein if complainant claims that amount, and it is against him if his own theory of computation is as favorable to complainant as to himself.—Wiswall v. Ayres, 51 Mich. 324.

§ 86. Admissibility and sufficiency of evidence.

On default or confession, see post § 87.

Right to prove against complainant defenses available against party in whose behalf complainant sues, see ante ¶ 33.

Sufficiency of evidence on appeal, see Appeal § 431.

Parol evidence as to obligation and terms of mortgage, see Evidence, V.

¶ 354. Complainant must produce the mortgage and the accompanying securities, if any, or must adequately excuse nonproduction, and show that they are still in force.—Bailey v. Gould, W. 478; Bassett v. Hathaway, 9 Mich. 28; Young v. McKee, 13 Mich. 552; Hungerford v. Smith, 34 Mich. 300; Mickle v. Maxfield, 42 Mich. 304; George v. Ludlow, 66 Mich. 176.

¶ 355. A very strong showing of the continuing obligation of a mortgage should be required, if the securities cannot be produced, where the mortgagor is dead, and the defendant is an alleged subsequent purchaser, and nearly twenty years have passed since the debt matured.—Hungerford v. Smith, 34 Mich. 300.

¶ 356. Complainant's failure, in a foreclosure case, to make out a complete title to the mortgage as a valid security bars relief.—Cooper v. Smith, 75 Mich. 247.

¶ 357. Where a mortgagor is an employee of the mortgagee, and the latter's agent keeps the accounts, and it is understood that moneys coming through him to the mortgagor are to be applied on the mortgage, the mortgagee, to entitle himself to a decree on foreclosure, must make a clear case and a full exposition of the accounts, especially if several years have been allowed to pass without attempting to enforce payment, or to secure it except by labor.—Webber v. Ryan, 54 Mich. 70.

¶ 358. In action to enforce a mortgage contingently securing an accommodation party, evidence that an execution issued against the maker and was returned unsatisfied and testimony by the maker himself that when he was sued he was not financially able to pay and has not been since that time, is sufficient to show insolvency.—Albion State Bank v. Knickerbocker, 125 Mich. 311.

¶ 359. When the answer does not admit that the mortgage debt is due, any proof is receivable to disprove it which would be receivable under the general issue at the common law.—Morris v. Morris, 5 Mich. 171.

¶ 360. Evidence showing that a second mortgage was intended to be applied as a payment upon a prior one is admissible in a suit to foreclose both.—Blair v. Carpenter, 75 Mich. 167.

¶ 361. Where a defense to a mortgage foreclosure is based on an alleged agreement between the complainant's assignor and the defendant, the agreement must be shown by the proofs to be a legally binding contract.—Suhr v. Ellsworth, 29 Mich. 57.

¶ 362. The fact that a mortgage was assessed for taxation for the exact amount of the principal has no tendency to show that no interest was due at the time of the assessment, especially where it appears from the testimony of the local officers that all mortgages were customarily so assessed, and that it was too.—Rose v. Lockerby, 116 Mich. 277.

¶ 363. A defense to a foreclosure suit, that the defendant was entitled to credit to the amount of a certain mortgage which had figured in dealings between the parties in question, was not entertained where settlement had been made beginning 30 years prior to the filing of the bill, and where the person who mostly knew of vital matters had died.—Northrup v. Gray, 122 Mich. 700.

¶ 364. On an appeal from an accounting for the use of land by a grantee in possession under a deed intended as a mortgage, the charges for annual rental were increased fifty per cent from an allowance of $200.00 where numerous witnesses estimated it from nothing to $720.00 and defendant's witnesses averaged $136.00 while plaintiff's averaged $641.00.—Miller v. Peter, 184 Mich. 142.

¶ 365. Where a grantee with warranty who has given a purchase-money mortgage claims, on foreclosure, deduction of the amount of a valid subsisting prior mortgage, such equitable set-off must be clearly proved and the amount to be deducted must be certain.—Smith v. Fiting, 37 Mich. 148.

Taking proofs on default, see Defaults § 23.

Impropriety of dismissal of bill confessed by all defendants in interest, see Defaults ¶ 55.

Procedure on bill being taken as confessed or right of plaintiff admitted in answer, see 1916 C. C. Rule 58, §§ 2, 4.

¶ 366. Upon a default by a defendant brought in by publication there can be no decree without proofs; and the complainant should also be sworn as to payments.—Brown v. Thompson, 29 Mich. 72.

¶ 367. On a bill standing admitted which alleges the amount due and unpaid to date of the bill, but where complainant thereafter paid taxes, it is necessary to take proofs in the regular way of the amount of such tax payments and interest thereon.—Hoock v. Sloman, 145 Mich. 19.

¶ 368. On a bill taken as confessed by a part of the defendants, the evidence taken on trial of the issues by the others is available against the defaulted ones; and a reference to take such proofs against them is not necessary.—Michigan Ins. Co. v. Whittemore, 12 Mich. 427.

¶ 369. A mortgage was given to secure the payment of judgments confessed by the mortgagor, but which were void for want of compliance with the statute. Bill being filed to foreclose, and no proof made of any indebtedness, the bill was dismissed.—Austin v. Grant, 1 Mich. 490.

¶ 370. The court may dispense with a reference to compute the amount due in a foreclosure case, and make its own computation if it sees fit.—Ireland v. Woolman, 15 Mich. 253; Vaughn v. Nims, 36 Mich. 297.

§ 89. Appearance of defendants not personally served.

Necessity of jurisdiction in personam for obtaining deficiency judgment, see post § 171.

Statutory provision for appearance of defendants not personally served with process, see Jud. Act, chap. XIX, §§ 2-7; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12656-12661.

¶ 371. Two things only are required by R. S. 1838, p. 373, § 89, How. St., § 6685, of nonresident defendants to entitle them to appear and defend in mortgage cases; appearance before the premises are sold under a decree, and payment of such costs as the court shall direct. The costs only are discretionary with the court.—Bailey v. Murphy, W. 305.

¶ 372. R. S. 1838, p. 373, § 89, How. St., § 6685, providing for appearance of nonresident defendants in suits for mortgage foreclosure extends to all nonresident defendants and makes no distinction between mortgagors and subsequent incumbrancers.—Bailey v. Murphy, W. 305.

¶ 373. A nonresident defendant was let in to defend by answer after a sale had been made, the sale being ordered to stand until final hearing. Held, that the case admitted of all rights of defense which might be established by answer, including that of redemption.—Stone v. Welling, 14 Mich. 514.

¶ 374. Comp. L. 1897, §§ 516, 522 and 523, providing respectively for the contents of a decree of foreclosure and sale of mortgaged premises, the manner of the sale, and the form of the deed, should be construed together and the decree should follow the provisions in force at the time it was entered and form the basis of the sale.—Lachman v. Ottawa Circuit Judge, 125 Mich. 27.

¶ 375. The ordinary allegations of a foreclosure bill do not authorize a decree declaring chattels upon the mortgaged premises to belong to the realty.—Crippen v. Morrison, 13 Mich. 23.

¶ 376. A decree that directed land mortgaged as a whole to be sold in separate undivided interests, each to satisfy the same principal, with interest at different rates, was set aside.—Spear v. Hadden, 31 Mich. 265.

¶ 377. A foreclosure decree authorizing a sale of the premises at any time after thirty-two days after such decree unless the amount found due shall be paid, is not invalid as not allowing a reasonable time for redemption, where the mortgage was wholly due nearly two years before the decree was rendered, and where the suit was brought twenty-one months prior to the decree.—Fifth National Bank v. Pierce, 117 Mich. 376.

¶ 378. Where in a foreclosure suit a settlement is made between complainant and one or more defendants, and by written stipulation filed in the cause the controversy is adjusted as to a portion of the premises so that it is not to be affected by the decree, the court has no jurisdiction to make a decree affecting such portion.—Thayer v. McGee, 20 Mich. 195.

§ 91. ——Instalments and charges to accrue or accrued since suit.

¶ 379. It is proper to include in the decree a sum which has fallen due on the mortgage since the commencement of suit and which remained unpaid.—Howe v. Lemon, 37 Mich. 164.

¶ 380. The decree on foreclosure may properly cover all amounts due at the date when it is granted, even though there has to be a new inquiry into any instalments that accrue after decree.—Vaughn v. Nims, 36 Mich. 297.

¶ 381. Foreclosure decree is given for everything due when it is granted, though suit was begun when only an instalment of the debt had matured.—Johnson v. Van Velsor, 43 Mich. 208.

¶ 382. Where a mortgage securing two notes is foreclosed before one of them has fallen due its amount may nevertheless be included in the decree if it falls due before the decree is rendered.—Hanford v. Robertson, 47 Mich. 100.

¶ 383. Upon a bill filed to foreclose a mortgage payable in instalments at a time when only one instalment had become due and remained unpaid, and which seeks a foreclosure for that payment only, the decree cannot include other instalments not due when the bill was filed and concerning which no issue was made.—Smith v. Osborn, 33 Mich. 410.

¶ 384. Where guarantors of the principal and interest of bonds secured by a mortgage are sued in foreclosure before the maturity of the principal, such principal, if maturing pending the suit, may be included in the decree.—Union Trust Co. v. Detroit Motor Co., 117 Mich. 631.

§ 92. ——Taxes and other disbursements.

¶ 385. Where an assignment of a mortgage contains an agreement that the mortgagee and assignor shall pay all taxes thereafter assessed upon the mortgaged land, and that on his default the assignee may pay them, the latter, on a foreclosure of such agreement, cannot have a decree for the amount paid by him in clearing the land from tax liens accruing before the assignment.—Macomb v. Prentis, 78 Mich. 255.

¶ 386. Taxes and insurance moneys paid after the commencement of foreclosure proceedings, and before the decree therein, are properly included in the amount for which foreclosure is awarded, where the mortgage provides for their payment, and that the amount so paid shall be a lien.—Jehle v. Brooks, 112 Mich. 131.

¶ 387. The amount paid by a mortgagee for taxes and his reasonable attorney fees, are properly included in a decree of foreclosure, where the mortgage expressly provides for such charges.—Farwell v. Bigelow, 112 Mich. 285.

¶ 388. A decree of foreclosure and sale was filed in the supreme court January 7, 1911, ordering the mortgagee to pay all taxes, assessments, etc., due and unpaid. The taxes paid by the mortgagee after the decree and before the sale were added to the amount decreed. If the mortgagee had not paid these taxes by May 1, 1911, its right of redemption from the tax sale would have been lost. Held, the decree authorized the addition of the sum paid for said taxes to the amount of the decree.—Union Trust Co. v. Electric Park Amusement Co., 168 Mich. 574.

¶ 389. Where a mortgagee has taken a tax-title for the purpose of protecting the mortgage, it is proper in decreeing payment on foreclosure to provide that, on payment of the cost of the tax title with suitable interest, the certificate of the tax purchaser shall be assigned to defendant.—Baker v. Clark, 52 Mich. 22.

¶ 390. Where a mortgagee pays taxes on the land, he succeeds to the lien therefor on the land, and in equity is entitled to reimbursement out of any surplus on foreclosure sale.—Union Trust Co. v. Electric Park Amusement Co., 168 Mich. 574.

¶ 391. The mortgagor remaining in possession paid no taxes or interest or anything on the principal, allowed the bill of foreclosure to be taken as confessed and made no tender or offer to pay and redeem. The decree of foreclosure included all taxes paid by the mortgagee whether the same were contracted before or after the date of the mortgage. Defendant objected to the inclusion in the decree of the taxes incurred prior to the date of the mortgage. Held, under the equities of the case it was within the power of the chancery court to declare such taxes an equitable lien to be added to the amount of the mortgage.—Hopkins v. Saunders, 172 Mich. 227.

§ 93. ——Interest.

Right to interest in general, see Interest, I.
Determination and computation of interest rate in foreclosure decree, see Interest. II.
Rate and computation of interest allowable on judgments, see Interest.

¶ 392. Where land which was under lease for a term was sold, and a mortgage taken back for the purchase price, and it was agreed between the parties that during the leasehold term the mortgagee should pay to the mortgagors the interest on the purchase price, held, that on a foreclosure of the mortgage the amount of this interest should be deducted from the amount due on the mortgage, and a sale be decreed for the balance only.—Disbrow v. Jones, H. 102.

¶ 393. Where a mortgagor has made a tender of payment which was not accepted and which he had not kept good, and the mortgagee afterwards tendered a conveyance and demanded payment, it was decreed on foreclosure that the mortgagor pay the principal of his debt with simple interest to the time of payment, less the period that intervened between the dates of the tender and of the mortgagee's subsequent offer to reconvey; and that the mortgagor's costs of both courts be deducted.—Ferguson v. Popp, 42 Mich. 115.

¶ 394. In a foreclosure suit by an executor, a personal decree cannot be rendered for interest against which the statute of limitations had run prior to the testator's death.—McIntire v. Conrad, 93 Mich. 526.

§ 94. Production, discharge and filing of notes and mortgage or indemnity instead.

¶ 395. Where a case was contested on the sole ground that the mortgage and notes were of no original validity, and they were not put on file, the supreme court declined to reverse the decree for complainant on that ground, but required them to be produced and filed, or their absence accounted for by affidavit, before affirming it.—Young v. McKee, 13 Mich. 552.

¶ 396. Where the notes secured by a mortgage were missing, and a foreclosure decree was allowed upon the theory that they were still in existence, complainant was required to indemnify defendant against their enforcement in case they reappeared in the hands of strangers.—Yerkes v. Blodgett, 48 Mich. 211.

¶ 397. Where it is shown that accompanying the mortgage sought to be foreclosed there was a note signed by the mortgagors, which is not produced, a defendant who purchased the premises from his codefendants subject to the mortgage, which latter he orally agreed to pay, is entitled to indemnity in substantial compliance with How. St., §§ 7518, 7519.—Walker v. Gillett, 98 Mich. 59.

¶ 398. On foreclosure of a trust mortgage to secure creditors by consolidating outstanding indebtedness into new note to be substituted for the old debts, some of which were represented by notes in the hands of indorsees of an insolvent bank creditor, where the mortgage contemplated that the notes could not be presently substituted but that substitution might be had when the bank's receiver could get them in from the indorsees, and where it was a consideration of the mortgage and a condition of it, though not a precedent one, that the old notes should come back to the mortgagor in order to protect him from liability thereon as an indorser, decree in favor of the insolvent for its share of the proceeds should be made with a provision that the notes be surrendered to the mortgagor lest they be not paid from the proceeds so decreed and the mortgagor be left liable personally.—Gillam v. Barnes, 123 Mich. 119.

§ 95. Adjudications as to title and priorities.

¶ 399. Where several notes of the same date but falling due at different times are secured by one mortgage, a foreclosure decree cannot give priority to any of them.—Wilcox v. Allen, 36 Mich. 160.

¶ 400. Where a subsequent purchaser of land from a mortgagor thereof has procured quitclaims from the mortgagor's grantors for the purpose of perfecting his title of record, but under such circumstances as would make it fraudulent for him to set them up as establishing an adverse and paramount title, the mortgagee, on proper allegations in his foreclosure bill, may have such adverse title declared null.—Wilkinson v. Green, 34 Mich. 221.

¶ 401. A grantee took a warranty deed of the premises from grantors whose title was defective, and on the strength of it he obtained from others for next to nothing some quitclaims by which his title was perfected. The property had been mortgaged, but he had assumed the mortgage and reserved from the purchase price enough to pay it. Both mortgage and deed purported to cover the whole title. Held, that on foreclosure it was not inequitable that the decree also should cover the whole title, including the interests which had been quitclaimed.—Taylor v. Whitmore, 35 Mich. 97.

¶¶ 402, 403. A man gave two promissory notes, dated alike and secured by a mortgage, though one of them was also secured by surety. Held, on foreclosure, that the one secured by the mortgage only must be first satisfied before the proceeds of a sale of the land could be applied to the payment of the other.—Hanford v. Robertson, 47 Mich. 100.

§ 96. Decree where building removed from mortgaged premises.

¶ 404. A bill to foreclose a mortgage on land from which the buildings had been removed, and which before such removal had been covered by the lien of the mortgage, will warrant a decree that the buildings be ordered sold if the lot did not bring enough to satisfy the mortgage; and the decree so ordering cannot be said to be made in litigation of the title to property, which cannot be done in foreclosure proceedings.—Partridge v. Hemenway, 89 Mich. 454.

¶ 405. In case of the removal of buildings from mortgaged premises to other lands, which are embraced in a later mortgage, the decree should direct that the land covered by the prior mortgage should first be sold, and, if enough money is not realized from the sale to pay the mortgage, the buildings should be sold, and from the proceeds the balance of such mortgage be first paid, and the surplus, so far as is necessary, applied to the payment of the later mortgage. —Johnson v. Bratton, 112 Mich. 319.

§ 97. Cross reliefs and set-offs.

Defects in title and damages on covenants, see post § 98.
Cross-bills and counterclaims, see ante § 80.
General law of set-off, see Set-off.
Right of mortgagee to avail of mortgagor's set-off against superior lien of codefendant, see Set-off, II.
Bill after decree to allow set-off, see Set-off, IV.

¶ 406. On foreclosure of a mortgage given to secure indorsements not connected with partnership dealings, an accounting as to partnership matters between the parties cannot be had to raise a counterclaim when no special equities are set up entitling defendants to the benefit of an equitable set-off.—Hess v. Final, 32 Mich. 515.

¶ 407. Three persons who had held land in partnership sold it, and gave separate conveyances to the purchaser, who, in pursuance of an arrangement to that effect, gave back a mortgage for the purchase price to one of them. The purchaser afterwards bought up a mortgage given by one of them on an undivided one-third of the land, and sought to make a set-off of this in a suit to foreclose his own mortgage. But the set-off was refused, the court holding that claims under that mortgage could be better litigated in a separate suit; and the decree was so framed as to leave that mortgage untouched.—Adams v. Bradley, 12 Mich. 346.

§ 98. ——Defects in title and damages on covenants.

¶ 408. One who receives a conveyance of lands with covenant against incumbrances and gives back a mortgage for the purchase price is not confined to his remedy upon the covenant, but may set off the amount of a prior mortgage which he has paid against his own mortgage when suit is brought to foreclose the latter.—Detroit & M. R. Co. v. Griggs, 12 Mich. 45.

¶ 409. A mortgagor for the purchase price cannot set off the amount of prior incumbrances which he has neither paid nor shows that he has been or is in danger of being damnified by.—Griggs v. Detroit & M. Ry. Co., 10 Mich. 117.

¶ 410. The grantee of land was allowed to withhold part of the consideration for a specified time in order to take up an outstanding title, and to secure the money withheld he gave a mortgage. Held, that it was no defense to its foreclosure that to perfect his title he had paid the amount withheld to a person who claimed to have obtained a quitclaim of the outstanding title, when it was neither averred in the answer nor shown by the proofs that the latter claim was valid or truthful.—Richardson v. Tolman, 44 Mich. 379.

¶ 411. Certain land that had been sold for unpaid taxes of 1856 was conveyed in 1872 with a warrant against incumbrances, and the grantees returned a purchase-money mortgage. A purchaser under the tax title had also mortgaged the premises, and the grantees claim to have been put to expense to perfect their title in other respects. On foreclosure of the purchase-money mortgage, the existence of the adverse tax title and the antecedent mortgage was alleged as a defense, and the right was claimed to detain the purchase money to the extent of which damages would be recoverable upon the covenants. Held, that if the grantees were entitled to any such damages, they must resort to the covenants in their deed.—Smith v. Fiting, 37 Mich. 148.

¶ 412. In a foreclosure of a purchase-money mortgage the defending vendees were held not entitled to an equitable offset for a defect in title to part of the land, where it appeared that they had not been ousted, that the record title had not been perfected, that the vendor was entirely solvent, and that if any defect in title existed in fact there was a perfect remedy against the vendor on the covenants of his deed.—Pfirrman v. Wattles, 86 Mich. 254.

¶ 413. In a suit to foreclose a purchase-money mortgage, a set-off by way of damages for the failure of the vendor to execute a bond indemnifying the vendee against any legal claim of title, as provided in the contract of purchase, will not be allowed, where it does not appear that the vendee has been disturbed in his possession, nor that any adverse title has been set up.—Sturgis Nat. Bank v. Levanseler, 115 Mich. 372.

¶ 414. R., after conveying part of a lot, conveyed the entire lot by warranty to W., who, knowing not of the former conveyance, supposed he was getting title to the entire lot, which he mortgaged to R. to secure payment of part of the purchase price. Upon a bill filed by R. to reform the deed and mortgage so as to restrict them to the part of the lot owned by him when he made the deed, and to foreclose the mortgage so reformed, it appeared that W. had made improvements on the part of the lot obtained by him, and that R. was financially unable to take a conveyance and place W. in statu quo; and a foreclosure decree reducing the mortgage debt by the amount of damage sustained by W. through his failure to get title to the entire lot was held proper.—Rockwell v. Wells, 104 Mich. 57.

¶ 415. The defendant owner had mortgaged his land to C. and afterwards mortgaged it to M. with an agreement that M. should withhold enough to pay and discharge the C. mortgage. M. did not do it, but foreclosed his mortgage and therein the owner made the defense that such payment had not been made. It was not sustained and the M. mortgage was foreclosed for the full amount. Subsequently plaintiff, an assignee, came into possession of a mortgage subject to the equities of the C. and M. mortgages as they existed between the owner and plaintiff's assignor. The owner had sold and had repurchased the land from plaintiff's assignor on the representation that the lands were unincumbered and had given a purchase-money mortgage, which was the one assigned. Held that on foreclosure of the purchase-money mortgage credit for the amount of the C. mortgage should be given, since in making the defense on the former foreclosure defendant owner, the present plaintiff being then a codefendant, had been diligent to protect his rights.—Cooley v. Harris, 92 Mich. 126.

¶ 416. A mortgagee shortly before his death without consideration transferred the mortgage to his son for the purpose of defeating his creditors. Complainant assignee after the death of the mortgagor filed a bill to foreclose. Defendant mortgagor filed a cross-bill setting up a claim of set-off against the mortgagee and demanding that the administrator of the mortgagee be brought in as a party for the purpose of enforcing against complainant assignee the rights of the mortgagee's estate against the property assigned to complainant. The administrator filed an answer in the nature of a cross-bill asking that the property in complainant assignee's hands be held to have been taken subject to the right of claimants against the mortgagee's estate and the costs of administration. The administrator took no steps at law in the matter and the cause went to hearing on the merits without objection. Held, the court had jurisdiction in the proceeding to enter a decree allowing the mortgagor's claim of set-off in fixing the terms upon which he should be allowed to redeem; to decree to the administrator the sums claimed by him; and to order the balance paid over to complainant assignee.—Terry v. Terry, 170 Mich. 330.

§ 99. Supplemental and further decrees.

Proceedings for further decree on instalments, see post § 100.

¶ 417. One of the defendants in a foreclosure decree, who had a residuary interest in the mortgage foreclosed after complainant's demand should be satisfied, filed a bill, the object of which was to have the benefit of that decree, and also to foreclose the mortgage against parties who were not but should have been parties to the first suit. A decree was made in the case, in the ordinary form of foreclosure decrees, and it was held not objectionable, it appearing that since the original decree payments had come due as well on the mortgage as on complainant's debt secured by it.—Griggs v. Detroit & M. Ry. Co., 10 Mich. 117.

§ 100. Proceedings for further decree on instalments.

Sale for default of instalments, see post § 118.

Propriety of foreclosure by advertisement of instalment mortgage on default of single instalment, see ante § 22.

Rights of purchaser on foreclosure for instalment, see post § 138.

Default to foreclosure of one instalment as admission limited to that one only, see Defaults § 17.

Effect of payment after decree for instalment to abate entire suit, see also Abatement ¶ 54.

Statutory provisions for decree on subsequent defaults on instalments, see Jud. Act, chap. XIX, § 36; Comp. L. 1915, § 12690.

Dismissal of bill as to instalments not yet accrued where amount accrued with costs is paid before decree, see Jud. Act, chap. XIX, § 33; Comp. L. 1915, § 12687.

Decree of court for foreclosure to be enforced in case of default in subsequent instalments where decree stayed as to instalments due by payment, see Jud. Act, chap. XIX, § 34; Comp. L. 1915, § 12688.

¶ 418. Where after decree in a foreclosure suit another instalment falls due on the mortgage, and a petition is presented under R. S. 1838, p. 376, § 117, How. St., § 6714, for a further order of sale, the petition should set forth briefly all the facts necessary to enable the mortgagor, as well as the court, to understand its object.—Albany City Bank v. Steevens, W. 6.

¶ 419. A copy of the petition for a further decree upon an additional instalment due, with notice of the time of presentation to the court, must be served on the mortgagor, or if it cannot be served personally by reason of his absence from the state, it should be served on his solicitor.—Albany City Bank v. Steevens, W. 6.

¶ 420. The dictum in Albany City Bank v. Steevens, Walk. Ch. 6, to the effect that a copy of the petition for a further decree on an additional instalment after payment of a prior decree need not be served on defendants made parties as subsequent incumbrancers, is incorrect. Such proceeding is essentially a new suit, except in form, and notice must be given to every person whose interests are to be affected by the decree as in the original suit.—Brown v. Thompson, 29 Mich. 72.

¶ 421. In case of default in payment of a subsequent instalment of the mortgage debt, one to whom the mortgagee's administrator has assigned the mortgage and decree of foreclosure for the first instalment, may, under the interest clause in the mortgage, declare the entire debt due and payable; and the court has power, upon the assignee's petition, to direct by further order founded upon the first decree, a sale of the mortgaged premises to satisfy the rest of the mortgage debt. —Brand v. Smith, 99 Mich. 395.

¶ 422. When a decree is for the payment of a sum by instalments, a sale cannot be ordered for default in paying one of them until an opportunity has been afforded the party to contest the alleged default, and a decree upon one hearing will not authorize a sale for a subsequent instalment, without a new hearing and adjudication.—Perkins v. Perkins, 16 Mich. 162.

¶ 423. Where a mortgage is payable in instalments, each is so far separate from the rest that in a foreclosure suit upon an instalment a payment before decree of the amount due ends the suit (Comp. L. 1871, § 5157, How. St., § 6711), and it is only by virtue of the ensuing section that such a payment after decree does not have the same effect.—Brown v. Thompson, 29 Mich. 72.

Granting relief for amount due on bill to restrain foreclosure, see also Equity ¶ 822.

¶ 424. Where a bill was filed for the sole purpose of foreclosing a mortgage, which mortgage failed, it was held that though complainant retained a vendor's lien upon the premises it could not be enforced in that suit.—Converse v. Blumrich, 14 Mich. 109.

¶ 425. Where a former employee of an insolvent corporation intervened with a labor claim in foreclosure proceedings against such corporation after the rendition of a decree for the sale of the mortgaged property, and of certain accounts and bills receivable transferred to the mortgagee, after the labor for which the intervener claimed had been performed, the intervener's claim may be allowed without opening the decree, where it directs that one holding a junior claim be paid out of the proceeds a specified sum, exceeding in amount the intervener's claim; his debt could properly be made a charge upon the fund apportioned to such junior claimant. —Michigan Trust Co. v. Grand Rapids Democrat, 113 Mich. 615.

¶ 426. A., who held a mortgage under circumstances that made him B.'s trustee, brought a foreclosure suit. Held, that the owner of the equity of redemption could not, in such suit, be heard to assert that the money to be derived from the sale should be secured in some way for B.'s benefit; that the matter was not germane to the suit.—Nugent v. Nugent, 50 Mich. 377.

§ 102. Appointment of receiver.

General grounds for receivership, see Receivers, I.

Procedure for appointment of ancillary or pendente lite receivers and sufficiency of main pleadings to support appointment, see Receivers, II, A.

Administration and management of property by receiver, see Receivers, IV.

Procedure for appointment of ancillary or pendente lite receivers and sufficiency of main pleadings to support appointment, see Receivers, II, A.

Receivership ancillary to foreclosure of corporate mortgage, see Corporations § 237.

¶ 427. Since the passage of the statute prohibiting the mortgagee from bringing ejectment, it is questionable whether a clause in a mortgage which gives the mortgagee, in case of default, the right to take possession, in person or by attorney, of the mortgaged lands, and to operate, or cause to be operated, the works and mines thereon, can be carried into effect by the appointment of a receiver; it certainly cannot be done until after default, which, unless admitted, could not be determined on a motion to appoint a receiver.—Beecher v. Marquette & P. Rolling Mill Co., 40 Mich. 307.

¶ 428. Under the practice existing when the mortgagee of real estate had a possessory right, equity would not interfere to grant a receiver unless the premises were scanty security and the mortgagor was insolvent.—Brown v. Chase, W. 43; Hazeltine v. Granger, 44 Mich. 503.

¶ 429. A mortgagee is not entitled to have a receiver of the property appointed pending foreclosure, even though it appears that the mortgagor's grantee does not intend to apply the rents and profits to the payment of the incumbrance.—Fifth Nat. Bank v. Pierce, 117 Mich. 376.

¶ 430. The mortgagor being entitled to possession until his title is divested by complete foreclosure, a receiver cannot be appointed in the foreclosure suit to take charge of, harvest and market a growing crop of wheat and to apply the proceeds on the mortgage debt.—Wagar v. Stone, 36 Mich. 364.

¶ 431. The right of a mortgagee to a receiver pending the foreclosure of the mortgage, depends upon whether there is danger of ultimate loss to bondholders by permitting the property to remain in possession of its owners until the final decree and sale. —Union Trust Co. v. Charlotte General Elec. Co., 152 Mich. 568.

¶ 432. A neglect to apply for a receiver within a reasonable time, to take possession of mortgaged premises, is construed as a waiver of the right to make the application. —Brown v. Chase, W. 43.

§ 103. Construction and effect of decrees.

Titles and rights taken by sale under decree, see post, IV, V.
Effect as res adjudicata, see Former Adjudication.
Effect against collateral attack, see Judgments, VII.

¶ 433. A. held a second mortgage on one parcel, which also covered additional lands over which it was prior to an incumbrance held by the party claiming the first parcel under the first mortgage; on the foreclosure of the junior incumbrance, A. was made a party to the suit under the general allegation that he held or claimed some interest in the premises, etc. Held, that he had a right to treat this averment as relating only to his interest which was subject to the mortgage being foreclosed, and that his further interest would not be affected by the decree in that suit.—Dawson v. Danbury Bank, 15 Mich. 489.

¶ 434. It is the practice on foreclosure to allow a reasonable time for payment, definitely fixed by the decree.—Detroit Savings Bank v. Truesdail, 38 Mich. 430.

¶¶ 435, 436. Where a decree in a foreclosure suit refuses to determine the priority of right between the mortgagee and a defendant claiming under a deed alleged by him to be paramount to the mortgage, and leaves it open to action, it is in effect a dismissal of the bill as to such defendant.—Comstock v. Comstock, 24 Mich. 39.

§ 105. Assignment of decree and rights thereunder.

Effect of assignment of mortgage, see ante § 14.
Sale under assigned decree, see post § 119.
Assignment of rights under purchase, see post § 141.
Assignment of deficiency decree, see post § 177.

¶ 437. Where, after a mortgage has been foreclosed for one instalment of the debt, a complainant dies, and the amount due on the decree is paid to his estate, the decree is personalty, and may be sold and assigned by his administrator, and the assignment will carry with it the mortgage and the accompanying note; and by such assignment the assignee stands in all respects in the same position as complainant stood, and with the same right to enforce the decree as to future instalments.—Brand v. Smith, 99 Mich. 395.

¶ 438. A husband, after separating from his wife, assigned a foreclosure decree covering her land, which he had purchased before their marriage under an agreement with her to hold it until, by the sale of the land, she could repay him the money paid for the decree. The assignee paid no consideration for the assignment. Held, that he took it subject to the wife's equities.—Moore v. Smith, 103 Mich. 387.

¶ 439. Defendants contending that the purchase of the mortgaged premises was made by complainant in the interest of her infant ward, held, that the relations between complainant and her ward did not concern defendant; that the deed of the land was made to complainant, and decedent's agreement to purchase the decree, and hold it, was made with her personally, and not as guardian.—Moore v. Smith, 103 Mich. 387.

¶ 440. A widow sued to set aside a foreclosure by her husband's assignee of a foreclosure decree and to have an accounting from her husband's administrator for services rendered by her to her husband before their marriage and respecting her interest in the mortgaged premises. She had bought the premises subject to the decree and before the marriage and he had taken an assignment of the decree and agreed with her, according to her testimony, that he would pay off the mortgage and hold the place for her and that she might sell it by repaying him what he had expended. At the time of the assignment her services were worth at least $1,000.00 by her testimony while he paid but $500.00. Held not to raise an inference that she was to pay him the amount of the decree absolutely and without set-off of his debt to her.—Moore v. Smith, 103 Mich. 387.

¶ 441. A mortgage foreclosure suit having gone to decree, the mortgagor applied to B. for $3,000 to purchase the decree. B. paid that amount to the mortgagee, and one of the foreclosure codefendants paid the balance, and B. took from the mortgagee an assignment of the mortgage and decree. No agreement was made as to when the $3,000 should be repaid, or extending time for sale under the decree or limiting the right of B. in any way to enforce the decree. No obligation whatever was taken from the codefendant who paid the balance. Held, that this did not amount to the making of a new mortgage, so as to require a new decree before sale.—Walker v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 112 Mich. 384.

E. SALE.

§ 106. In general; propriety.

Direction or order to sell, see post § 107.
Notice and proof of notice, see post §§ 108, 109.
Time and conduct of sale and bidding, see post §§ 110-112.
Sale in parcels or in gross, see post §§ 113-115.
Selling in inverse order of alienation, see post §§ 116, 117.
Sale for default of instalments or under assigned decree, see post §§ 118, 119.
Sale in statutory foreclosure by advertisement, see ante, II, C.

¶ 442. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 11020, a mortgagee may sell the mortgaged property though partition proceedings are pending and upon failure to redeem to become a party to the proceedings and succeed to the rights of the mortgagor.—O'Connor v. Keenan, 132 Mich. 646.

§ 107. Direction or order to sell.

Reference to commissioner for report as to situation of mortgaged premises, see Jud. Act, chap. XIX, § 35; Comp. L. 1915, § 12689.

¶ 443. The direction in a decree of sale that notice of sale be given "according to the course and practice of the court" intends same notice as on a sheriff's sale and is sufficiently clear.—Ireland v. Woolman, 15 Mich. 253.

§ 108. Notice and advertisements or posting.

Affidavits or proof of notice and publication, see post § 109.
Notice of sale in statutory foreclosure by advertisement, see ante, II, B.
Lack of notice as ground for objection to confirmation, see post ¶ 495.
Notice of sale, see 1916 C. C. Rule 58, § 5.

¶ 444. A foreclosure sale is illegal if made without a notice to defendants before the date fixed by the decree for the payment, in default of which sale may be made.—Shier v. Prentis, 55 Mich. 175.

¶ 445. Notice of sale under decree of foreclosure need not be personal.—Sanford v. Haines, 71 Mich. 116.

¶ 446. A notice of sale of mortgaged premises is sufficient if published in a "weekly newspaper of legal and business information," which has been for many years a medium for the publication of legal advertisements; publication in a daily newspaper of general circulation is not necessary.—Hoock v. Sloman, 155 Mich. 1.

¶ 447. The omission to state in an advertisement of a mortgage sale that only an undivided portion will be offered instead of the entire parcel is not a jurisdictional defect that can be objected to in a collateral proceeding, but an irregularity that should be complained of in the same case.—Brown v. Phillips, 40 Mich. 264.

¶ 448. Whether the practice of beginning publication of notice of sale before default in payment as provided by the decree is permissible, quære.—Perrien v. Fetters, 35 Mich. 233.

¶ 449. Where a sale that has been duly advertised is put off until another time, with a notification to those in attendance that it will be thus held open, a second formal advertisement of it is not needed to make it valid if it takes place at the adjourned date.—Isbell v. Kenyon, 33 Mich. 63.

¶ 450. Under How. St., §§ 6109, 6747, relating to posting notices of mortgage sale, such a sale in another township than that in which the premises are is invalid if the affidavit of posting shows that the notices were posted only in the township where the sale was made.—New York Baptist Union v. Atwell, 95 Mich. 239.

§ 109. ——Affidavits or proofs of notice and publication.

Curing defects in affidavits of notice by recital in report of sale, see post ¶¶ 622, 623.
Affidavits and proof of notice in statutory foreclosure by advertisement, see ante § 31.

¶ 451. Due notice of sale is indispensable in foreclosure cases, and is a step in the nature of execution. Strict proof of it should always be made and put on record, and this should be unambiguous on its face.—Perrien v. Fetters, 35 Mich. 233.

¶ 452. An affidavit of publication of notice of sale annexed to a report of sale under a foreclosure decree and therein referred to must be considered as proof of the facts therein stated.—Perrien v. Fetters, 35 Mich. 233.

¶ 453. An affidavit which shows publication in a daily newspaper "once in each week for seven successive times," and gives the date of the first publication, is not sufficient to prove compliance with the requirement that publication be made once in each week for six successive weeks.—Perrien v. Fetters, 35 Mich. 233.

§ 110. Time for sale.

Statute shortening time within which sale might be ordered and adding right of redemption after sale applies to foreclosure suits begun before enactment, see Statutes, VI.

Statutory provision for time of sale in equity foreclosure, see Jud. Act, chap. XIX, § 23; Comp. L. 1915, § 12677.

Time for sale, see 1916 C. C. Rule 58, § 5.

¶ 454. A foreclosure sale cannot be allowed to take place within less than a year from the time when all defendants have been properly brought in.—Burt v. Thomas, 49 Mich. 462.

¶ 455. The one year and six weeks that must elapse before the sale on foreclosure may be computed from the date of taking out the subpoena, if it is taken out with the intention in good faith of serving it as soon as possible, and there is no laches in obtaining service.—Culver v. McKeown, 43 Mich. 322.

¶ 456. Whether or not Comp. L. 1871, § 5147, How. St., § 6701, strictly requires a year's interval between the service of subpoena and sale in foreclosure, its purpose is certainly to give the mortgagor time to make payment and save the lands, and that purpose is not served by allowing a sale within six months after he first has notice that a bill has been filed, even though it has been on file for six months previous; the court has discretion to postpone the sale until the expiration of a year from service of subpoena.—Detroit Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Renz, 33 Mich. 298.

¶ 457. Where a party brought in by an amended bill as defendant in foreclosure is charged with a personal liability, the year allowed before foreclosure sale should run from the date of filing the amended bill.—Canfield v. Shear, 49 Mich. 313.

¶ 458. Where a foreclosure bill has been amended by adding new parties, and again by correcting the last name of one of the added parties from Hamlin to Hammond, a sale cannot be decreed until one year after filing of the last amendment (How. St., § 6701).—Gray v. Federal Bank of Canada, 83 Mich. 365.

¶ 459. Where there were two mortgages on the same premises and the second mortgagee forecloses first neither the mortgagor nor the court can say when the mortgagee under his decree shall sell, and he may properly await the foreclosure of the first mortgage.—Redfield v. Reid, 148 Mich. 545.

¶ 460. Eleven days after decree foreclosing a first mortgage before sale thereunder is not an unreasonably short time, where there had previously been a decree entered on foreclosure of a second mortgage with ample time for redemption under it and where the land was worth less than enough to satisfy both decrees.—Redfield v. Reid, 148 Mich. 545.

§ 111. Sale and bids.

Necessity for bidder to make immediate payment of amount bid, see post ¶ 638.

Apparent authority of attorney to bid in for client, see Attorneys ¶ 64.

Agent's buying in adversely to principal, see Agency § 92.

Recovery back of overpayments, see Payment, VI.

Statutory provisions as to manner and conduct of sale in equity foreclosure, see Jud. Act, chap. XIX, § 20; Comp. L. 1915, § 12683.

¶ 461. Every one will be conclusively presumed to understand that bidders at a chancery foreclosure sale stand on equal terms.—Ledyard v. Phillips, 32 Mich. 13.

¶ 462. How. St., § 6750, providing for a resale if the highest bidder at a chancery sale objects or refuses to make immediate payment, does not contemplate that each bid shall be accompanied with the amount thereof, and time may be allowed within which to produce the amount.—Converse v. Clay, 86 Mich. 375.

§ 112. Agreements as to bidding or buying in.

Transfer of bid on foreclosure sale as ground for avoiding sale, see post ¶ 608.

Necessity for agreement for increased bid to secure resale on objection made to price at confirmation, see post ¶ 498.

Invalidity of agreements to suppress competition in bids, see Contracts § 87.

Fraudulent breach of agreement to buy in and hold title for debtor or another, see also Fraud; Trusts.

¶ 463. An agreement between a complainant and defendant in foreclosure by which the former is to bid in the premises and convey them to the latter for the amount of his claim does not preclude any other person interested from paying the decree and defeating the arrangement.—Detroit Savings Bank v. Truesdail, 38 Mich. 430.

¶ 464. In a suit by an assignee of a mortgagee to foreclose mortgages assigned to him and also a mortgage on another tract given direct by the assignor a previous agreement, whereby some of the mortgages were foreclosed and the premises bid in by the assignee with the understanding that the amount bid was not to bind the assignee on his claim and he was not to take the premises as against the mortgagee, is good against a defendant in the foreclosure suit who had purchased the tract which was mortgaged direct to the complainant under an agreement that the mortgagor would assume the mortgage; but the defendant is entitled to have the other properties sold first.—Holliday v. Snow, 129 Mich. 494.

§ 113. Sale in parcels or in gross.

Of undivided interests, see post § 114.
Mortgages covering both realty and personalty, see post § 115.
Sale in parcel or in gross in foreclosure by advertisement, see ante §§ 35-37.
Burden of proving that premises sold on foreclosure as one parcel were not occupied as such, see post ¶¶ 684, 685.
Sale of property in bulk as ground for avoiding foreclosure, see post ¶¶ 610, 611.
Direction that sale be in gross, see Jud. Act, chap. XIX, § 37; Comp. L. 1915, § 12691.
Direction that sale be in parcels, see Jud. Act, chap. XIX, § 35; Comp. L. 1915, § 12689.

¶ 465. Sale on foreclosure in equity may be made as an entirety or in parcels, as the court may think most likely to bring the highest price.—Macomb v. Prentis, 57 Mich. 225.

¶ 466. A decree allowing a sale as an entirety will not be disturbed for that reason where the land was originally described as one lot, and there is no showing that it should be sold in parcels.—Vaughn v. Nims, 36 Mich. 297.

¶ 467. A foreclosure sale as an entirety of property which consists of a number of distinct lots held by different owners is a violation of section 11139, Comp. L. 1897, How. 2nd ed., § 13934, and is invalid.—Walker v. Schultz, 175 Mich. 280.

¶ 468. A mortgage foreclosure sale of "Lots 17, 18, and the southerly 40 feet of lot 16" as one parcel is void under Comp. L. 1897, § 11139, which requires that distinct tracts shall be sold separately and no more sold than necessary to satisfy the amount due, where such lots were occupied separately and by different tenants, and were worth much more than the amount of the mortgage debt, and there was nothing to show that they could not be sold to advantage separately.—O'Connor v. Keenan, 132 Mich. 646.

§ 114. ——Of undivided interests.

¶ 469. Land mortgaged as a whole cannot on foreclosure be sold in separate undivided interests.—Dalrymple v. Sheehan, 20 Mich. 224; Spear v. Hadden, 31 Mich. 265.

§ 115. ——Mortgages covering both realty and personalty.

Necessity for resort to chattel mortgage before foreclosure of mortgage on realty, see ante ¶ 4.

¶ 470. Upon the foreclosure of a mortgage covering a hotel and the furniture used therein, the court may direct that the personal property be sold separate and apart from the realty though at the same time.—Anderson v. Smith, 108 Mich. 69.

§ 116. Selling in inverse order of alienation to marshal assets.

Persons entitled to require, see post § 117.
Sale of parcels in inverse order of alienation in foreclosure by advertisement, see ante § 37.
Doctrine of marshalling assets in general, see Marshalling Assets.
Between what persons doctrine of marshalling assets is to be applied, see Marshalling Assets.
Exhausting securities of debtor before resort to foreclosure of mortgage given by debtor's wife, see Marshalling Assets.
Proof of order of sale of parcels on foreclosure, see Marshalling Assets.

¶ 471. Where nothing appears to show the propriety of any other disposition, a sale of mortgaged premises should be made in the inverse order of their alienation or incumbrance by the mortgagor.—Mason v. Payne, W. 459; Cooper v. Bigly, 13 Mich. 463; Ireland v. Woolman, 15 Mich. 253; McKinney v. Miller, 19 Mich. 142; Payne v. Avery, 21 Mich. 524; Sibley v. Baker, 23 Mich. 312.

¶ 471a. In marshalling securities covering several parcels, the land may be sold in such order as will best carry out the principles of equity.—Dalrymple v. Sheehan, 20 Mich. 224.

¶ 472. Where a part of the mortgaged premises has been alienated by the mortgagor subsequent to the mortgage, the rule in equity, on a foreclosure and sale, is to require that part of the premises in which the mortgagor has not parted with the equity of redemption to be first sold, and then, if necessary, that which has been alienated.—Mason v. Payne, W. 459; Gantz v. Toles, 40 Mich. 725.

¶ 473. On a bill to foreclose a mortgage where it appeared that the mortgaged land embraced four separate parcels, upon one of which stood a dwelling house, the decree below was modified so as to direct that the same should be sold in parcels, the parcel upon which the dwelling house was situated to be sold last and only in case the others did not sell for enough to satisfy the decree and costs.—Strong v. Ehle, 86 Mich. 42.

¶ 474. Where a husband mortgaged his farm to secure his debt, and afterwards conveyed the north forty-five acres, which included the homestead, to his wife, with the usual covenants of warranty, which deed was duly recorded, after which he mortgaged the south thirty-five acres to secure a debt of his own, his wife joining in both mortgages, in a contest between the two mortgagees and the wife, growing out of the attempted foreclosure of both mortgages, the general rule will be applied, and the south thirty-five acres sold before resorting to the north forty-five acres.—J. I. Case Threshing Machine Co. v. Mitchell, 74 Mich. 679.

¶ 475. A. had a first and B. a second mortgage on land over which a railroad company had a right of way, subject to both mortgages, and at a foreclosure sale by advertisement under A.'s mortgage the premises were offered in two parcels, the part exclusive of the railroad's way being sold first and being bought by B.'s administrator for enough to satisfy the first mortgage, the strip remaining unsold. The company was represented at the sale. Held, on a foreclosure in equity of the second mortgage, that B. could have the railroad parcel sold.—Watson v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co., 91 Mich. 198.

§ 117. ——Persons entitled to require.

¶ 476. Where a portion of the land covered by a mortgage is conveyed subject to the payment of the entire mortgage by the grantee, the subsequent purchaser of another parcel has a right to insist that the parcel so before conveyed shall be first sold to satisfy the mortgage before resort is had to the parcel so purchased by himself.—Caruthers v. Hall, 10 Mich. 40.

¶ 477. An exception of the mortgage from the covenants of warranty contained in a subsequent deed of the lands could not affect the grantee's equitable rights in reference to the order of sale of the property covered by said mortgage.—Cooper v. Bigly, 13 Mich. 463.

¶ 478. Where part of mortgaged premises is covered by a second mortgage held by complainant in foreclosure and another part by a third mortgage held by a defendant, the latter cannot complain that the foreclosure decree provides for the sale first of the parcel covered by the second mortgage, but requires the sale of that parcel to be subject to the payment of the second mortgage.—Slater v. Breese, 36 Mich. 77.

¶ 479. One of two joint mortgagors who takes in payment for land sold to the mortgagee an assignment of a part interest in the mortgage is entitled, as between himself and his assignor, to have his interest in the mortgage first satisfied on foreclosure.—Quinnin v. Brown, 72 Mich. 304.

¶ 480. In foreclosing a mortgage upon several parcels of land, including a homestead, the homestead can only be sold to pay the deficiency remaining after a sale of all the other parcels; and a second mortgagee of the others cannot require it to be first sold.—Armitage v. Toll, 64 Mich. 412.

¶ 481. A mortgagor of two parcels of land who has parted with the equity of redemption of one of them which has been extensively improved by the present owner, cannot force the mortgagee to sell the one parcel under a decree of foreclosure so as to profit by the enhanced value and reduce the lien upon the other parcel.—Leonard v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 126 Mich. 377.

¶ 482. One who joins in a mortgage of his own and of another's property to secure the other's debt is entitled to have the other's lands sold first to satisfy the debt.—Carley v. Fox, 38 Mich. 387.

¶ 483. A wife who includes her separate property with her husband's homestead in a mortgage to secure the husband's debt, does not thereby make it the primary fund out of which the debt should be satisfied, and her land should be sold only in case the husband's land is insufficient.—Graham v. Lamb, 120 Mich. 577.

¶ 484. A second mortgagee cannot insist that on the foreclosure of a prior mortgage resort shall first be had to a parcel of land not covered by his mortgage, and which the mortgagor had aliened after the first but before the second mortgage; such land is not to be sold until after that covered by the second mortgage.—Sager v. Tupper, 35 Mich. 134.

¶ 485. Lands conveyed by a husband to his wife were by her mortgaged to secure his debt, and at the same time he gave his creditor a mortgage on his stock in trade. It was not shown that the deed to the wife was without a bona fide consideration. Held, that a second mortgagee of the stock in trade, who in bidding in the property recognized the first chattel mortgage and took the property subject to it, could not claim an equity in the land superior to the wife's, though the debt secured by his mortgage was contracted prior to the husband's deed to the wife and though credit was given to the husband on the faith of his owning the land.—Grand Rapids Savings Bank v. Denison, 92 Mich. 418.

¶ 486. On the foreclosure of a first mortgage conveying three parcels of land, on the first and second of which a second mortgage, and on the second and third of which a third mortgage, has been given—the second mortgage having been before foreclosed, and both the first and second parcels sold subject to the first mortgage, the second parcel being, at the instance of the third mortgagee, sold last—the third mortgagee has no right to demand that the parcel not covered by his mortgage (the first parcel) shall be sold first. The purchaser under the prior foreclosure of the first and second parcels, has a right to insist that the third parcel shall be first sold. Where the purchaser under said prior foreclosure sale purchased subject to the first mortgage, but with an agreement with the complainant, who then owned both the first and second mortgages, that when the first mortgage was foreclosed said third parcel should be first sold, his right to have the sale on such foreclosure made according to this agreement, which is the order of sale established by law in the absence of any agreement, would not be affected thereby.—Sibley v. Baker, 23 Mich. 312.

§ 118. Sale for default of instalments.

Proceedings for further decree on instalments, see ante § 100.

¶ 487. It seems that equity will not interfere to prevent a foreclosure and sale of the whole premises for a single instalment.—Disbrow v. Jones, H. 48.

§ 119. Sale under assigned decree.

Assignment of decree and rights thereunder, see ante § 105.

Assignment or transfer of mortgage or debt secured by it, see Mortgages, VI.

¶ 488. Before the assignee of a foreclosure decree can proceed to a sale of the mortgaged premises, he must present a petition to the court setting forth the assignment, and ask for a sale under the decree, and a sale made without such a petition is void.—Moore v. Smith, 103 Mich. 387.

F. REPORT OF SALE, CONFIRMATION AND DEED.

§ 120. Report of sale.

Confirmation and objections, see post § 121.

Necessity for report of sale to show deficiency before decree therefor, see post ¶ 717.

Curing defects in affidavit of posting notice by recital in report of sale, see post ¶¶ 622, 623.

¶ 489. Although by operation of an order nisi, a foreclosure sale has been confirmed, a clerical error in the report may be corrected.—Walsh v. Colby, 153 Mich. 602.

¶ 490. An error in reciting the date of a foreclosure decree in the commissioner's report of sale is immaterial where the record furnishes the means of correcting it.—Ruggles v. First Nat. Bank, 43 Mich. 192.

§ 121. Confirmation, objections.

Necessity of confirmation to make title of purchaser absolute, see also post ¶¶ 540, 541.

Grounds for avoidance of statutory sale by advertisement, see ante §§ 40-42.

Validity of delayed confirmation made without notice, see also post ¶ 586.

¶ 491. Our statutes do not dispense with the practice of obtaining an order confirming sales.—Demaray v. Little, 17 Mich. 386.

¶ 492. A foreclosure sale cannot be made absolute so long as objections duly taken to the report of the commissioner have not been passed on.—Howard v. Bond, 42 Mich. 131.

¶ 493. An order allowing a writ of assistance, and reciting that the defendant had been served with a certified copy of the order confirming the report of sale, will not, of itself, amount to an order of confirmation.—Richards v. Morton, 18 Mich. 255.

¶ 494. The usual order nisi is a sufficient order of confirmation in a chancery foreclosure sale, if any order is needed where the defendant has not appeared.—Torrans v. Hicks, 32 Mich. 307.

¶ 495. Confirmation of a foreclosure sale cannot be objected to on the ground that the sale was effected secretly and without notice, where defendant had notice. It was his duty to inform his solicitor.—Farmers' Bank v. Quick, 71 Mich. 534.

¶ 496. It is not good practice, in directing the correction of a commissioner's report of a foreclosure sale, to order that on filing the corrected report "the said sale be and the same is hereby in all respects confirmed." But it does not make the proceedings void. —Ruggles v. First Nat. Bank, 43 Mich. 192.

¶ 497. In a foreclosure suit a decree of sale was entered in 1891. The order confirming the report of sale was not entered or the decree enrolled until 1910, when upon ex parte hearing a nunc pro tunc order was entered enrolling the decree and an order nisi entered confirming the report of sale. At said time the complainant in said foreclosure suit and one of the original solicitors were dead. Held, said orders were properly entered and validated the foreclosure proceedings so as to protect plaintiff holding title under the foreclosure sale, with respect to the rights of parties in an ejectment suit in which defendant's sole claim to title was through tax deeds cutting off plaintiff's title. —Powell v. Pierce, 168 Mich. 427.

¶ 498. On appeal from an order confirming a foreclosure sale, a contention by defendant that the mortgaged premises are worth more than the sum for which they were sold, is untenable where defendant's petition contains no offer to increase the bid if a resale is ordered, and complainant offers to accept the amount due, with interest and costs.—Hoock v. Sloman, 155 Mich. 1.

§ 122. Deed and recordation.

Deed and recordation in statutory foreclosure by advertisement, see ante, II, D.

Deed in statutory foreclosure by advertisement, see ante, II, D.

Statute requiring deed to issue if premises not redeemed within six months from date of sale as applied to foreclosure decree entered prior to its enactment, see Statutes, VI.
Commissioner's deed as prima facie title, see also Evidence ¶ 2902.
Statutory provisions as to deed and recordation in equity foreclosure, see Jud. Act, chap. XIX, § 30; Comp. L. 1915, § 12684.

¶ 499. Since a decree of foreclosure should follow the statute in force when the decree was entered, and the sale must follow the decree, an indorsement on the resultant deed of terms of redemption fixed by a statute not yet in effect when the decree was entered is improper and is properly expunged from such deed.—Lachman v. Ottawa Circuit Judge, 125 Mich. 27.

¶ 499a. A circuit court commissioner's deeds recorded on the same day as his report are conformable to Pub. Acts, 1899, No. 200, providing that he shall upon sale execute deeds, indorsing thereon the time when the sale shall become effective, and shall within 20 days after such sale deposit the same with the register of deeds.—Miller v. Walker, 141 Mich. 433.

¶ 500. Where a second deed is ordered to be executed for the purpose of correcting a clerical error in a first deed executed to a purchaser at foreclosure sale, such order is not void because of the provision requiring that a deed upon foreclosure sale shall be filed with the register of deeds within twenty days after the sale, and indorsed when same shall become operative.—Walsh v. Colby, 153 Mich. 602.

G. DISPOSAL OF PROCEEDS; PAYMENTS.

§ 123. In general; rating and rank of liens.

Right in surplus moneys, see post § 124.
Payment into court, see post § 125.
Application and procedure for distribution, see post § 126.
Disposal of proceeds of sale in statutory foreclosure by advertisement, see ante, II, E.
Application of process of mortgage foreclosure where mortgage given to secure several items, see Marshalling Assets.
Recovery of illegal or mistaken payment, see Payment, VI.
Application of proceeds, see Jud. Act, chap. XIX, § 38; Comp. L. 1915, § 12692.
Statutory provisions as to disposal of proceeds of sale in equity foreclosure, see Jud. Act, chap. XIX, § 31; Comp. L. 1915, § 12685.
Reference to commissioner to determine rights and priorities in surplus arising from sale of mortgaged premises, see 1916 C. C. Rule 58, § 6.

¶ 501. Under Comp. L. 1871, § 6913, How. St., § 8498, where several distinct payments or notes are secured by the same mortgage, no one of them has any preference over the others in consequence of its falling due sooner; but all, whether held by the same or different persons, have equal claim to be paid ratably out of the land.—English v. Carney, 25 Mich. 178; McCurdy v. Clark, 27 Mich. 445.

¶ 502. On foreclosure of simultaneous mortgages a ratable application of the proceeds of the sales thereunder should be decreed if there is not enough to pay both.—Van Aken v. Gleason, 34 Mich. 477.

¶ 503. The fact that a mortgagee who has assigned his mortgage has indorsed one of the notes secured by it in blank, and the other without recourse, does not affect the equal security afforded by the mortgage to the notes pro rata. The sum realized from a foreclosure sale, therefore, should be applied upon the pro rata principle, and such indorser need pay only his proportionate share of any deficiency, instead of paying the whole amount of the note indorsed in blank.—English v. Carney, 25 Mich. 178.

¶ 504. Where there are several notes falling due at different times, the fact that one note becomes due first will not, of itself, give it a preference over the rest, where the mortgaged premises are insufficient to pay the whole.—Cooper v. Ulmann, W. 251.

¶ 505. Where three banks as parties in interest under a trust mortgage, had agreed in substance that they would protect the property by payment of taxes and interest, and if the first mortgage should be foreclosed they would bid the premises in at the amount necessary, and pay pro rata the expense incident thereto, and where, after making one payment, one of the banks went into the hands of a receiver who subsequently refused to bid in the property and the same was thereupon purchased by the other two banks, the receiver was not entitled to a first lien on the property for the amount advanced by the bank to protect the property; but the proceeds of any sale over the amount required for the first mortgage were directed to be applied to the payment of the sums advanced to protect the property, before anything was paid upon the second mortgage.—Noeker v. Howry, 119 Mich. 626.

§ 124. Rights in surplus moneys.

Right of dowress to dower in surplus on foreclosure sale, see Dower § 13.
Rights in surplus moneys, see Jud. Act, chap. XIX, § 31; Comp. L. 1915, § 12685.

¶ 506. A person acquiring the equity of redemption and redeeming a mortgage is entitled to any surplus received at the mortgage sale. Union Trust Co. v. Electric Park Amusement Co., 168 Mich. 574.

¶ 507. Where the assignee of a mortgage assigns it as security for a debt that is less than the amount due on the mortgage, he is entitled to the excess, and in a suit by his assignee to foreclose the mortgage, the decree should provide for the payment to him of the surplus, if any, arising on the sale of the mortgaged premises, to the amount of his claim.—Moreland v. Houghton, 96 Mich. 346.

¶ 508. A junior incumbrancer who, to protect his interest, buys on chancery foreclosure, paying, because illegal solicitor's fees are included, more than the amount due, cannot claim the excess, but the latter belongs to the person entitled to any surplus on the sale.—Macomb v. Wilkinson, 83 Mich. 486.

¶ 509. An assignee of a second mortgage who took it with notice of its invalidity, and who is unable to produce it or the accompanying note, or give any proof of its validity, cannot claim the surplus realized on the foreclosure of the first mortgage.—Kent v. Mellus, 69 Mich. 71.

¶ 510. A levy of execution on the mortgaged lands, made at a time when the mortgagor (and judgment debtor) had no title to it, and not followed by any sale by virtue of it, will not entitle the judgment creditor to the surplus moneys after foreclosure, notwithstanding the mortgagor, pending the foreclosure proceedings, became vested with the title to the land subject to the mortgage.—Smith v. Smith, 13 Mich. 258.

¶ 511. The surplus arising from a foreclosure sale was claimed by the mortgagor's divorced wife and by an execution creditor. Held, that, as the record did not show the cause of divorce, the nature of the wife's interest could not be ascertained, and the supreme court could not award the surplus as dowable property under How. St., § 6246.—Bowles v. Hoard, 71 Mich. 150.

¶ 512. Bill by the mortgagee, who had become purchaser at foreclosure sale at a sum exceeding the amount due on the decree, to be relieved from payment of the surplus on the ground that he was equitable owner of the fee, and that the bids had been run up by fraudulent combination. Bill dismissed as not supported by the proofs.—Buchos v. Walker, 19 Mich. 224.

§ 125. Payment into court.

Right to interest on surplus where left with court for longer than three months, see Jud. Act, chap. XIX, § 32; Comp. L. 1915, § 12686.

¶ 513. Where a third mortgagee, at the prior foreclosure of a second mortgage, bids a sum greater than the amount due on the decree in such foreclosure, the surplus is to be paid into court and to be applied on some one of the securities on the proper petition being presented.—Sibley v. Baker, 23 Mich. 312.

¶ 514. In foreclosure of a mortgage securing several creditors, all of whom are brought in by service or publication, but some of whom do not appear, it is not the proper practice to decree that the proceeds of sale be held in court to await proofs of the interests of the other parties.—Shelden v. Erskine, 78 Mich. 627.

¶ 515. Equity will require the proceeds of a foreclosure sale of a first mortgage on real estate of insolvent decedent to be paid to the register of the circuit court instead of to the holder of such mortgage, and to be held by such register, subject to the order of the court, for such period of time as may be required to allow the general creditors of decedent's estate to assert their claims against such proceeds, where such mortgagor for the purpose of defrauding his creditors, while insolvent furnished his daughter money with which she secured an assignment of such mortgage to herself; even though she was not the holder at the time of such foreclosure.—Hatch v. Daugherty, 145 Mich. 569.

¶ 516. Where in a suit to foreclose a land contract, the rights of different classes of bondholders holding liens inferior to the complainant's are not presented, the foreclosure decree should provide that moneys received on the sale of the property in excess of the complainant's claim should be paid into court to abide a determination of the rights of the bondholders.—Schmidt v. Gaukler, 156 Mich. 243.

§ 126. Application and procedure for distribution.

Petition and proceedings to obtain surplus on statutory sale by advertisement, see ante § 54.

Payment, release and satisfaction of mortgages and subrogation to rights thereby, see Mortgages, VIII.

Application and procedure for securing surplus moneys arising from sale of mortgaged premises, see 1916 C. C. Rule 58, § 6.

¶ 517. All the parties to a foreclosure suit are entitled to notice of an application for surplus moneys after foreclosure and sale, that they may appear and contest the right of the applicant and assert their own; and an order for the payment of the moneys to the petitioner without such notice, or the appearance of the parties, is erroneous.—Smith v. Smith, 13 Mich. 258.

¶ 518. If the owner of the equity of redemption dies after sale the surplus moneys are personal estate; and his personal representatives should be made parties to a petition to obtain them.—Smith v. Smith, 13 Mich. 258.

¶ 519. The remedy of a purchaser at a foreclosure sale who has paid a surplus to the administrator of the estate of the deceased mortgagor and who subsequently finds a party in possession of part of the purchased premises, and seeks to recover the surplus, is to be sought in the court having jurisdiction of the foreclosure proceeding and not in a separate proceeding in equity.—Chandler v. Graham, 123 Mich. 327.

H. COSTS, FEES AND EXPENSES.

§ 127. Cost and expenses in general.

Disclaiming parties, see post § 128.
Items and costs, see post § 129.
Fees and expenses in statutory foreclosure by advertisement, see ante § 56.
Costs on appearance of defendants not personally served, see ante ¶ 371.
General law of costs and procedure to determine, tax or enforce payment, see Costs.
Necessity of tender or offer to carry costs on decree for redemption, see Costs § 33.
Costs to appellee on affirmance releasing his personal liability, see Costs ¶ 284.
Decree reserving question of personal liability as final decree for cost purposes, see Costs ¶ 399.
Allowance to defendant personally of costs on appeal without charging on property, see also Costs ¶ 546.
Costs unnecessarily incurred in proceedings to determine rights and priorities in surplus arising from foreclosure sale, see 1916 C. C. Rule 58, § 6.

¶ 520. Costs of foreclosure are usually paid out of the proceeds of the sale.—Botsford v. Botsford, 49 Mich. 29.

¶ 521. Where complainant has a sale adjourned he should pay the expense of adjournment himself.—Hart v. Lindsay, W. 72.

¶ 522. Costs on granting a new foreclosure should be given to and not against the opposing party where the occasion for allowing the foreclosure arose out of a mistake in the complainant's proceedings.—Vary v. Chatterton, 50 Mich. 541.

¶ 523. Where both parties were at fault in a foreclosure suit in litigating needless questions not within the pleadings, costs were denied to both.—Summers v. Bromley, 28 Mich. 125.

¶ 524. Where a subsequent purchaser contests the amount due in a foreclosure suit, and fails, the decree may require him to pay costs if the mortgaged premises prove insufficient.—Ireland v. Woolman, 15 Mich. 253.

¶ 525. The grantee of a portion of mortgaged premises, who is made a defendant in a suit to foreclose a second mortgage on the remainder of the land, in which complainant seeks to subject the land so sold to sale under the first mortgage before resorting to the unsold portion, and who claims a contrary order of sale in her answer, which is decreed, is entitled to reasonable costs.—J. I. Case Threshing Machine Co. v. Mitchell, 74 Mich. 679.

¶ 526. Where a defendant in foreclosure is brought in under the general clause as a party interested in the equity of redemption, and neither disclaims nor sets up any title that would give him a definite interest in the litigation, but actively defends and puts the complainant to the trouble of producing or meeting proofs that he has no concern with, he makes himself personally liable for costs.—Botsford v. Botsford, 49 Mich. 29.

¶ 527. A tender which did not comply with all the requirements necessary to discharge the mortgage, yet showed willingness on the mortgagor's part to make such payment as would discharge the mortgage at any time when it would be received without suit, warrants denial of costs to complainant in foreclosure.—Castle v. Castle, 78 Mich. 298.

§ 128. ——Disclaiming parties.

¶ 528. A defendant unnecessarily made a party as a subsequent incumbrancer should have the bill dismissed as to him with costs on disclaimings.—Ramsdell v. Eaton, 12 Mich. 117.

¶ 529. The mortgage covered two parcels of land. A defendant answered, claiming one of them by paramount title, and disclaiming as to the other, and as to the last a decree was taken. It was held that the bill should have been dismissed as to this defendant with costs, as he was under the necessity of appearing and answering to protect his interest in the parcel claimed by him.—Gregory v. Stanton, 12 Mich. 61.

¶ 530. In a foreclosure suit against the mortgagor and his tenant, where the latter appears and disclaims, he cannot recover costs against the mortgagor who did not appear, since if he was entitled to costs it was against the complainant and not against his codefendant.—Halpin v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 132 Mich. 54.

§ 129. ——Items and amount.

¶ 531. Charges for complainant's traveling expenses and for sundry expenses not specified cannot be included in the legitimate costs of a foreclosure suit which a defendant let in to defend must pay.—McDonald v. McDonald, 45 Mich. 44.

¶ 532. On a second mortgagee's bill to foreclose and incidentally to restrain another mortgagee who is lawfully proceeding to a foreclosure by advertisement of a part of the land, the expenses incurred in such advertising, which have been lost by reason of the injunction suit, are allowable to defendant, the prior mortgagee, as costs.—J. I. Case Threshing Machine Co. v. Mitchell, 74 Mich. 679.

¶ 533. Rule for computing costs and commissions on mortgage sales laid down.—Hart v. Lindsay, W. 72.

§ 130. Attorney fees.

Right under stipulation in mortgage, see post § 131.

Determination and taxation of amount, see post § 132.

Right to surplus arising from inclusion of illegal attorney fees, see ante ¶ 508.

¶ 534. Attorney's fees cannot be allowed for an imperfect foreclosure.—Collar v. Harrison, 30 Mich. 66.

¶ 535. Unless a sale has actually been made, an attorney's fee cannot be allowed on foreclosure.—Myer v. Hart, 40 Mich. 517; Canfield v. Conkling, 41 Mich. 371.

§ 131. ——Right under stipulation in mortgage.

Validity and effect of stipulation for attorney's fee in foreign mortgage, see Conflict of Laws ¶ 10.

Effect of fee clause on negotiability of note, see Negotiable Instruments, II.

¶ 536. As all allowances in the nature of fees depend upon statutory authority, a stipulation in a mortgage for an attorney fee in event of proceedings to foreclose is void, in the absence of legislation.—Vosburgh v. Lay, 45 Mich. 455; Parks v. Allen, 42 Mich. 482; Louder v. Burch, 47 Mich. 109; Millard v. Truax, 47 Mich. 251; Millard v. Truax, 50 Mich. 343; Kennedy v. Brown, 50 Mich. 336.

¶ 537. Where the power of sale in a mortgage stipulates for the payment of an attorney's fee in case of foreclosure, such provision must be held to refer only to foreclosure, under the power, and the fee cannot be allowed in a chancery foreclosure.—Sage v. Riggs, 12 Mich. 313; Hardwick v. Bassett, 29 Mich. 17; Van Marter v. McMillan, 39 Mich. 304; Botsford v. Botsford, 49 Mich. 29; Damon v. Deeves, 62 Mich. 465.

¶ 538. Chancery will not enforce an agreement in a mortgage for the payment, in case of foreclosure in that court, of a specified sum of money as a reasonable solicitor's or attorney's fee therefor, in addition to all other legal costs; where such agreement is illegal and beyond the sanction of the statutes and rules of court regulating such fees.—Kittermaster v. Brossard, 105 Mich. 219.

§ 132. Determination and taxation of amount.

¶ 539. In fixing fees for complainant's solicitors in a foreclosure proceeding, the circuit judge declined to hear testimony as to the details of the services rendered, and fixed the fee on the affidavit of the solicitors that they believed their services were worth a certain sum. Held, the case should be remanded and the trial court was instructed to take such detailed testimony as would enable him to arrive at a proper fee.—Union Trust Co. v. Electric Park Amusement Co., 163 Mich. 687.

IV. TITLES AND RIGHTS OF PURCHASERS.

§ 133. In general.

Doctrine of "relation back" to date of mortgage, see post § 134.

After redemption barred, see post § 135.

Right to growing crops, see post §§ 136, 137.

Purchaser on foreclosure for instalment, see post § 138.

Mortgagee as purchaser, see post § 139.

Purchase by mortgagor or his agent, see post § 140.

Assignment of rights under purchase, see post §§ 141, 142.

Estoppel to question title, see post § 143.

Procedure to obtain possession, see post § 144.

Presumptions and evidence of title, see post § 145.

Necessity of notice of sale as element in title of purchaser, see ante ¶ 451.

Right of purchaser to suit to secure proper marshalling of securities, see Marshalling Assets.

General doctrine of notice and bona fide purchaser, see Notice and Record of Title, I.

Rights of purchaser against mortgagee acquiring rights after lis pendens filed, see Lis Pendens.

Right of life tenant as foreclosure purchaser adverse to remainderman, see Life Estates, II.

Parol contracts to purchase and hold in trust or to reconvey, see Frauds, Statute of, I, G; Trusts, III.

Title and rights of parties in mortgage, see Mortgages, IV.

Effect of license by mortgagor in possession after decree to seller of fixture to remove it, see Fixtures ¶ 97.

Right of purchaser to require mortgagee to resort first to parcel covered by mortgage and previously sold where sale was unrecorded, see Notice and Record of Title, I.

Right of tenant in common as purchaser on foreclosure on property held in common, see Tenants in Common, II.

Agreement with mortgagor in possession as preserving personal character of thing annexed to land, see Fixtures ¶ 89.

Inurement of foreclosure title to earlier grantee from purchaser, see Estoppel § 21.

Inurement of after-acquired title to perfect foreclosure deed, effect of invalidity of mortgage, see Estoppel ¶¶ 52, 53.

Effect of foreclosure on rights and title under tax deeds taken in another's name for benefit of owner of equity, see Mortgages, V.

¶ 540. No right becomes fixed in the purchaser until the sale becomes absolute by confirmation.—Demaray v. Little, 17 Mich. 386.

¶ 541. A purchaser on foreclosure cannot demand possession until the commissioner's report of sale is confirmed.—Howard v. Bond, 42 Mich. 131.

¶ 541a. A widow buying in at a foreclosure of a mortgage given by her husband, paying the sale price out of the estate, and taking title in her own name, holds the land as against her infant son in the same manner and right as if there had been no foreclosure and the payment had been made out of the same moneys on the mortgage debt.—Terry v. Tuttle, 24 Mich. 206.

¶ 542. Statutory foreclosure proceedings cannot operate to change or reverse priorities.—Covey v. Leslie, 144 Mich. 165.

¶ 543. The possessory rights of one who receives a deed of mortgaged premises prior to the filing of lis pendens in foreclosure, and who was not made a party, are not affected by the foreclosure proceedings.—Thompson v. Smith, 96 Mich. 258.

¶ 544. In so far as Baker v. Pierson, 6 Mich. 522, may have been understood as holding that on a purchase by a second mortgagee of the title passing under foreclosure of mortgages prior and junior to his, he took title to all of the liens, it should be corrected and the rule confined to a holding that such a decree neither binds nor avails an omitted party, leaving open the question as between the other parties to the decree whether the transfer of the title of the first mortgagee to one of the others passes their liens covered by the decree or lets them stand enforceable in their hands.—Walsh v. Robinson, 135 Mich. 16.

¶ 545. Equities which, if they existed, were proper subjects for adjudication in a foreclosure suit, and which formed part and parcel of the security which was therein enforced, passed by the foreclosure sale if not excepted from it.—Richter v. Jerome, 123 U. S. 233, 31 L. ed. 132, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 106.

¶ 546. A purchaser of real estate at a statutory mortgage sale acquires an inchoate title, subject to be defeated by redemption; and when his title becomes absolute by the failure to redeem, it relates back to the time of the purchase.—Stout v. Keyes, 2 D. 184.

¶ 547. Legal title to mortgaged real estate does not vest at once in the purchaser at the sale on statutory foreclosure, but only at the end of the period of redemption, during which period the proceedings may be abandoned, or a subsequent mortgagee may demand an assignment of the mortgage.—Roff v. Miller, 189 Mich. 558; McCreery v. Roff, Id.

§ 134. Doctrine of "relation back" to date of mortgage.

See also ante ¶ 546.

¶ 548. Title by foreclosure dates from the giving of the mortgage and not from the completion of the foreclosure.—Gamble v. Horr, 40 Mich. 561.

¶ 549. The title of a purchaser on valid foreclosure of a mortgage regularly recorded relates back to the delivery of the mortgage as against all intervening purchasers and incumbrancers who are made parties or who become interested pendente lite.—Ruggles v. First Nat. Bank, 43 Mich. 192.

§ 135. After redemption barred.

¶ 550. Comp. L. 1871, § 5154, How. St., § 6708, declaring that the commissioner's deed in a mortgage sale shall be an entire bar against the mortgagor and mortgagee, does not mean to give the purchaser title by barring the true owner, when neither mortgagor nor mortgagee had any title.—Summers v. Bromley, 28 Mich. 125.

¶ 551. A foreclosure purchaser whose title has become absolute may fix his own price for a conveyance, and it is immaterial that he includes invalid attorney fees in the consideration.—Macomb v. Wilkinson, 83 Mich. 486.

§ 136. Right to growing crops.

Effect of collateral agreement, see post § 137.

¶ 552. The purchaser at a foreclosure sale in chancery becomes the owner of the crops then growing on the premises.—Scriven v. Moote, 36 Mich. 64; Ledyard v. Phillips, 47 Mich. 305.

¶ 553. Growing crops pass with the soil under foreclosure deed, and on proper application the court may perhaps provide for their preservation until possession is given to the purchaser.—Ruggles v. First Nat. Bank, 43 Mich. 192.

¶ 554. The confirmation of a foreclosure sale covering growing crops relates back to the sale, and entitles the purchaser to control the crops from that time if no equities prevent, and after due notice to interested parties.—Ruggles v. First Nat. Bank, 43 Mich. 192.

¶ 555. Unharvested crops on the mortgaged premises ordinarily pass with the sale in the absence of any agreement otherwise.—Dayton v. Dakin's Estate, 103 Mich. 65.

§ 137. ——Effect of collateral agreement.

¶ 556. The mortgagor of land cannot claim crops growing on it at the time of foreclosure sale, on the strength merely of an alleged parol agreement with the purchaser, who before foreclosure held an execution title to the land, that the latter would reconvey on payment of his advances with interest; even a mortgagee, unless estopped, could buy in the title and hold it like any other purchaser, and any previous equities would be cut off by the sale.—Scriven v. Moote, 36 Mich. 64.

¶ 557. An agreement whereby the mortgagor transfers to the mortgagee all the crops growing on the mortgaged premises, except enough to pay for harvesting and other running expenses, does not preclude the mortgagee, in case he becomes the purchaser on foreclosure, from taking the entire interest sold under the mortgage, without any reservations in the mortgagor's favor.—Ledyard v. Phillips, 47 Mich. 305.

¶ 558. A parol agreement between a mortgagor and the mortgagee of land in process of foreclosure, that the mortgagee might enter and plant a crop before his right to possession was complete upon consideration that the mortgagor might take his share in a certain crop then growing, is binding; and the subsequent sale of the land on foreclosure to the mortgagee will not carry the crop as an incident thereof contrary to such agreement, though ordinarily it would do so. —Dayton v. Dakin's Estate, 103 Mich. 65.

§ 138. Purchaser on foreclosure for instalment.

Successive foreclosures for instalments, see ante § 15.
Right to foreclose by advertisement on default in single instalment, see ante § 22.
Proceedings in equity for further decree on instalments, see ante § 100.
Presumption that sale for default on single instalment was made subject to other instalments, see post ¶ 595.
Title of purchaser on statutory foreclosure as matter litigable in foreclosure suit for second instalment, see ante ¶ 337.

¶ 559. Where one who forecloses for one of several instalments owing upon his mortgage sells subject to the other instalments, the purchaser takes the land charged with the payment of the subsequent instalments. —McCurdy v. Clark, 27 Mich. 445.

¶ 560. In foreclosing by advertisement a mortgage securing separate notes, the mortgagee can preserve his lien for subsequent foreclosures by selling the premises subject to the payment of the principal indebtedness; if he sells them discharged from further incumbrance he can depend on the mortgagor's personal liability.—Miles v. Skinner, 42 Mich. 181.

¶ 561. Where a foreclosure by advertisement for the first instalment due on a mortgage and for interest on the other instalments has become absolute, and the land has been bid off and not redeemed, the mortgagor's wife may, with her own money, buy it from the purchaser on foreclosure, and if the sale was not made subject to succeeding instalments, she acquires full title.—Miles v. Skinner, 42 Mich. 181.

¶ 562. Where a mortgage is foreclosed for an instalment only it remains in force as to notes secured by subsequent instalments; and indorsers of such notes may look to the security for indemnity if called on to pay them.—Bridgman v. Johnson, 44 Mich. 491.

¶ 563. Under R. S. 1838, p. 501, ch. 8, a foreclosure sale by advertisement of mortgaged premises for one of several instalments, unless made subject to the lien of the other instalments, forever freed the premises from the mortgage.—Kimmell v. Willard's Adm'rs, 1 D. 217.

¶ 564. Where a purchaser on foreclosure, by way of keeping good his lien during the period of redemption, pays taxes and insurance which, under the mortgage, the mortgagor himself was bound to pay, he cannot, when further instalments fall due, again resort to the power of sale for the purpose of securing repayment; since the payments are regarded as made for the purchaser's benefit.—Walton v. Hollywood, 47 Mich. 385.

¶ 565. A mortgagee may protect himself against the loss of the mortgage security on a statute foreclosure for one of several instalments, either by bidding off the premises for the whole sum secured by the mortgage, or by having them exposed to sale, charged expressly with the payment of the future instalments.—Kimmell v. Willard's Adm'rs, 1 D. 217.

¶ 566. Where one who forecloses for a single instalment upon his mortgage neglects to sell subject to the other instalments, his foreclosure may bar the equity of redemption of the mortgagor, and of subsequent purchasers and incumbrancers, but, as between him and the purchaser at the sale, the latter has purchased only an instalment of the mortgage, and the remaining instalments retain their relative positions; a subsequent foreclosure for another instalment would do nothing towards an adjustment of the respective interests of the parties; if each bid off the whole land neither would become owner of any particular part of it or of any definite undivided interest in it, but each would still have a lien, which, though foreclosed as to those holding subordinate rights, would remain, as to the other, a mere lien; neither could redeem from the other, and neither could gain nor lose precedence or position by the foreclosure sale. —McCurdy v. Clark, 27 Mich. 445.

¶ 567. A statutory foreclosure by the assignee of two instalments of a mortgage which, though maturing earlier, do not have priority, cannot affect the relative rights of the assignee and of the mortgagee who still holds a third instalment.—Jennings v. Moore, 83 Mich. 231.

§ 139. Mortgagee as purchaser.

¶ 568. A mortgagee as purchaser under a foreclosure sale stands in the same position as any other purchaser.—Hogsett v. Ellis, 17 Mich. 351.

¶ 569. One who has received the mortgage title to lands under an arrangement which, in legal effect, makes his rights no more than those of a mortgagee, is not thereby precluded from becoming a purchaser at a chancery sale on the foreclosure by a third person of another mortgage, and holding the title like any other purchaser; and such a purchase would cut off all previous equities of the other party.—Moote v. Scriven, 33 Mich. 500.

¶ 570. At a foreclosure sale the complainant mortgagee has the same rights, in bidding, as any third person, and takes the same interest if he becomes a purchaser.—Ledyard v. Phillips, 47 Mich. 305.

¶ 571. A foreclosure deed to the mortgagee gives him the same estate as a foreclosure of the equity of redemption, and is as effective as against the owner of the equity as if executed by such owner.—Ruggles v. First Nat. Bank, 43 Mich. 192.

§ 140. Purchase by mortgagor or his agent.

Passing title to mortgagor and merger of mortgage, see Mortgages, VII, D.

Inurement to benefit of second mortgagee of title acquired by mortgagor by repurchase from purchaser at foreclosure of first mortgage, see Mortgages, VII, D.

¶ 572. A legal title acquired by virtue of a foreclosure sale cannot be attacked in an action at law on the ground that the party purchasing thereunder acted as agent for one whose duty it was to pay the mortgage, and that, therefore, the transaction amounted merely to a redemption.—Gage v. Sanborn, 106 Mich. 269.

§ 141. Assignment of rights under purchase.

Under invalid foreclosure, see post § 142.

Assignment of mortgage and its effect, see ante § 14.

Assignment of decree and rights thereunder, see ante § 105.

Assignment or transfer of mortgage or debt secured by it, see Mortgages, VI.

Sufficiency of quitclaim deed to pass equitable title of purchaser during time for redemption, see Deeds § 33.

¶ 573. A purchaser at a sale under foreclosure by advertisement ordinarily acquires an equitable interest in the land which he may transfer in full to an assignee during the period of redemption, in which case the assignee, if there is no redemption, will take the legal title when it matures as the original purchaser would have done.—Roff v. Miller, 189 Mich. 558; McCreery v. Roff, Id.

¶ 574. A purchaser of land at a sale on mortgage foreclosure acquires an equitable interest in the premises, which he may convey by quitclaim deed prior to the expiration of the redemption period, and which, when so conveyed, will ripen into a legal title in his grantee, if the land is not redeemed.—Gage v. Sanborn, 106 Mich. 269.

¶ 575. A mortgagor's wife who has joined in the mortgage to release her dower loses her original right by foreclosure, and has as good a right as any one to buy in the property from the foreclosure purchaser after the foreclosure becomes absolute.—Gantz v. Toles, 40 Mich. 725.

¶ 576. A foreclosure purchaser of land which was mortgaged with the consent of the contract purchaser is entitled to possession as against the latter, and the grantee of the purchaser on foreclosure is equally entitled to possession so far as relates to all matters preceding the sale.—Ketchum v. Robinson, 48 Mich. 618.

¶ 577. The assignment of a mortgage after a sale has been made on statutory foreclosure, though before the period for redemption has expired, will not operate to annul the proceedings.—Gage v. Sanborn, 106 Mich. 269.

§ 142. ——Under invalid foreclosure.

Defective foreclosures, see post, V.

¶ 578. Void proceedings having been taken to foreclose a mortgage, and the holder of the mortgage having bid in the premises, he afterwards sold them and gave a warranty deed thereof. It was held that this deed conveyed his mortgage interest in the lands.—Niles v. Ransford, 1 Mich. 338.

¶ 579. Although a statutory foreclosure be irregular, so as to be no bar to the equity of redemption, yet the purchaser succeeds to all the interest of the mortgagee.—Gilbert v. Cooley, W. 494; Hoffman v. Harrington, 33 Mich. 392.

¶ 580. The purchaser under an irregular statutory foreclosure succeeds to all of the rights of the mortgagee including, in the case of a mortgage executed prior to 1843, the right of possession.—Hoffman v. Harrington, 33 Mich. 392.

¶ 581. A purchaser under a defective foreclosure of a mortgage made since 1843 is only in the position of a mortgagee, and can only recover possession by new foreclosure proceedings.—Nims v. Sherman, 43 Mich. 45.

¶ 582. The rights of the grantee of a purchaser at an irregular foreclosure are simply those of a mortgagee.—Morse v. Byam, 55 Mich. 594.

¶ 583. The purchaser under a defective sale becomes vested with the rights of the mortgagees in the mortgage.—Richards v. Morton, 18 Mich. 255.

¶ 584. A purchaser under a foreclosure by advertisement whose title fails because of the insufficiency of the power of sale in the mortgage, succeeds to all the mortgagee's rights.—Lariverre v. Rains, 112 Mich. 276.

¶ 585. There having been no right to foreclose upon a mortgage upon which nothing was due when it was foreclosed, no legal title was obtained by the foreclosure.—Bowen v. Brogan, 119 Mich. 218.

¶ 586. A decree of foreclosure was granted and sale made in 1861 to complainant's solicitor. In 1866, thirty odd days after the mortgagor's death, and without making his representatives parties, a report of sale was filed, an order nisi of confirmation entered, and conveyance made by the commissioner who had made the sale. Held, in an action of ejectment that the purchaser's title was good against one claiming under the deceased mortgagor.—Hochgraef v. Hendrie, 66 Mich. 556, affirming lower court by equal division.

§ 143. Estoppel to question title.

General principles of estoppel, see Estoppel.
Estoppel of purchaser of equity of redemption in possession under his purchase to question title of mortgagor, see Mortgages, VII.

¶ 587. One who indemnifies a mortgagee against a tax title cannot afterwards set up the tax title against his title as purchaser on foreclosure.—Wyman v. Baer, 46 Mich. 418.

¶ 588. An assignee of a decree of foreclosure who, without giving notice of the assignment, permits a sale under the decree and is present and bids at such sale, and receives and retains the proceeds of the sale, is estopped from questioning the regularity of the sale.—Farr v. Lachman, 130 Mich. 40.

¶ 589. S. bought land from W., who claimed it under a defective foreclosure, and after consulting N., who was in possession. N. did not tell S. that he owned the equity of redemption or that he held other than as a tenant of W., and on the other hand gave S. to understand that he would give up possession without foreclosure. Held, that although S. purchased on this understanding N. was not estopped from afterwards insisting on his legal title; since it could not pass by parol.—Nims v. Sherman, 43 Mich. 45.

§ 144. Procedure to obtain possession.

Summary proceedings to put purchaser in possession, see Forcible Entry.
Grounds for summary proceedings to put purchaser in possession, see Forcible Entry § 9.
Writ of assistance to put purchaser in possession, see Assistance, Writ of § 1.
Writ of assistance against stranger coming in after decree, see Assistance, Writ of § 4.
Necessity and character of notice and demand required to sustain summary proceedings for possession by purchaser, see Forcible Entry §§ 10, 11.
Effect of agreement as to continuance of occupancy as a bar to summary proceedings, see Forcible Entry § 12.
Exclusion from summary proceedings of issues as to validity of the foreclosure, see Forcible Entry § 36.
Inadmissibility in summary proceeding by purchaser of defense by mortgagor that by fraud his redemption was defeated, see Forcible Entry ¶ 140.
Court decree to compel surrender of possession of premises to foreclosure purchaser, see Jud. Act, chap. XIX, § 24; Comp. L. 1915, § 12678.

§ 145. Presumptions and evidence of title.

Presumptions and burden of proof in equity foreclosure, see ante § 85.
Evidence in equity foreclosure, see ante §§ 86, 87.

¶ 590. It will be presumed that a foreclosure sale was made in accordance with the statute.—Walsh v. Colby, 153 Mich. 602.

¶ 591. A mortgagor in possession under color of title is presumed in the absence of evidence to the contrary to be owner of the inheritance, and a purchaser on valid foreclosure acquires the same interest which he holds.—Wyman v. Baer, 46 Mich. 418.

¶ 592. The presumption that a public officer has done his duty can only apply to such acts of a sheriff as are required by law; hence, where mortgaged premises are sold in foreclosure proceedings, there is no presumption that the mortgage contained a power of sale.—Bryan v. Straus Bros. & Co., 157 Mich. 49.

¶ 593. When the mortgage is shown and a sale effected apparently in accordance with its terms, a presumption arises that will protect purchasers whose rights are collaterally attacked.—Snyder v. Hemmingway, 47 Mich. 549.

¶ 594. A title obtained under a foreclosure of the first mortgage is presumptively prior in right to a subsequent mortgage, and its validity cannot be assailed in a suit to foreclose the latter without special averments showing why it ought to be postponed.—Dawson v. Danbury Bank, 15 Mich. 489.

¶ 595. A foreclosure sale for instalments due on a mortgage is not presumed to have been made subject to other instalments.—Millard v. Truax, 50 Mich. 343.

¶ 596. Parties claiming under a purchase at a mortgage sale need not, in support of their title, produce the note secured by the mortgage.—Snyder v. Hemmingway, 47 Mich. 549.

¶ 597. The mortgage and the power of sale must be proved in order to support the title of a purchaser at the mortgage sale.—Hebert v. Bulte, 42 Mich. 489; Snyder v. Hemmingway, 47 Mich. 549.

V. DEFECTIVE FORECLOSURES, AND CURING OR AVOIDING SAME.

§ 146. In general.

Foreclosure de novo to cure defects, see post § 147.
Occasion and grounds to set aside sale, see post §§ 148-151.
Equities of applicant and doing equity as condition, see post §§ 152, 153.
Diligence and laches or waiver and estoppel, see post §§ 154, 155.
Mode of procedure, motion, petition or original suit, see post §§ 156-160.
Ejectment as remedy to cure or avoid foreclosure, see post § 161.
Presumptions, burden of proof and evidence as to regularity, see post § 162.
Assignment of rights under invalid foreclosure, see ante § 142.
Sufficiency of confirmation of foreclosure sale after delay of twenty years to validate foreclosure proceedings, see ante ¶ 497.
Suit to compel proper marshalling as condition precedent to valid foreclosure, see Marshalling Assets.
Remedies and rights of persons injured by fraud in foreclosure, see Fraud, III.

¶ 598. Those who conduct the foreclosure must observe good faith and pay a proper regard to the interests of all who may be affected by the proceedings; and no defect or misstep in matters of substance will be cured or excused by any proof that it happened by mistake and was not induced by a bad purpose.—Grover v. Fox, 36 Mich. 461.

¶ 599. A trustee's sale under power not purporting to be under the foreclosure statute (How. St., § 7847), and the trust being one to sell and pay a debt and account for surplus proceeds, is on its face imperfect, even if regarded as an attempted foreclosure and does not cut off equity of redemption, or give right of entry.—Pierce v. Grimley, 77 Mich. 273.

§ 147. Foreclosure de novo to cure defects.

See also post ¶ 609.
Equity foreclosure after abortive and void foreclosure by advertisement, see ante § 58.

¶ 600. Where in a statutory foreclosure a mistake occurs which renders the proceedings irregular and voidable, the mortgagee may waive the proceedings and commence de novo either by advertisement or in equity.—Atwater v. Kinman, H. 243.

¶ 601. Delay for nearly twenty years after the maturity of a mortgage in seeking chancery foreclosure was excused where, in ignorance of the fact that the mortgage contained no power of sale, a foreclosure by advertisement had been carried through and ejectment on the sheriff's deed had been prosecuted to judgment.—Hayward v. Kinney, 84 Mich. 591.

§ 148. Occasion and grounds to set aside sale.

Lack or imperfection of notice, see post § 149.
Inadequacy of price, see post § 150.
Surprise, mistake or fraud, see post § 151.

¶ 602. A much stronger case must be made to set aside the sale after confirmation of report of sale than before.—Bullard v. Green, 10 Mich. 268.

¶ 603. Special circumstances, appealing to equitable considerations, must always exist, where the sale is not void, to justify an order for the resale.—Page v. Kress, 80 Mich. 85.

¶ 604. Reopening a foreclosure sale is so far within the discretion of the lower court that the supreme court is not disposed to disturb an order permitting it, where the discretion has not been abused.—Nugent v. Nugent, 54 Mich. 557.

¶ 605. It seems that a foreclosure sale is not necessarily invalidated by neglect to reengross the foreclosure bill after amending it by adding a new party defendant.—Carpenter v. Ingersoll, 43 Mich. 433.

¶ 606. A foreclosure sale will be set aside where it is advertised to be made by the mortgagee and not by the sheriff, but the sheriff assumed the authority and made the sale without authority from the mortgagee.—Watson v. Lynch, 127 Mich. 365.

¶ 607. A statutory foreclosure by an assignee of a mortgage, the assignment of which was executed in another state and was not so certified as to entitle it to be recorded here, although actually recorded, is void.—Dohm v. Haskin, 88 Mich. 144.

¶ 608. Transfer of a bid made on foreclosure sale will not be ground for ordering a new sale.—Culver v. McKeown, 43 Mich. 322.

¶ 609. A foreclosure was had for an instalment of interest. The owner of the equity of redemption disputed the validity of the proceedings and filed a bill to have them annulled. While this bill was pending the owner of the mortgage foreclosed by advertisement for the principal. The owner of the equity when the second foreclosure was begun filed his supplemental bill, setting up a tender in full of the mortgage. The foreclosure proceedings nevertheless went on to a sale. The chancery court having found the tender, held, that it was proper to set aside the foreclosure proceedings with costs to complainant.—Louder v. Burch, 47 Mich. 109.

¶ 610. The sale of two lots as one parcel in foreclosure proceedings will not be set aside where, from the circumstances, it is shown that a single ownership and holding of the property was desirable.—Butters v. Butters, 153 Mich. 153.

¶ 611. A foreclosure sale cannot stand as a valid sale in bulk, if, having been made in parcels, it is incapable of being sustained as a sale in parcels; a sale must be contemplated as it was.—Grover v. Fox, 86 Mich. 461.

¶ 612. Resale ordered on condition that the bid of the purchaser be advanced to a specified sum, and that he be paid the amount with interest and counsel fee.. A bid was obtained on the resale for the sum specified, but the amount actually paid was only sufficient to satisfy the first purchaser; payment of the balance being delayed by consent of the mortgagor until confirmation of sale. Held, that this delay was no ground for setting aside the second sale.—Demaray v. Little, 19 Mich. 244.

¶ 613. In foreclosure against a nonresident brought in by publication complainant failed to offer testimony or to be sworn as to payments made on the mortgage. Held, that such failure did not oust the court of jurisdiction to pronounce a decree, and could not be collaterally made use of.—Colton v. Rupert, 60 Mich. 318.

¶ 614. The owner of a mortgage agreed, in writing, with the widow of the owner of the equity of redemption, that he would bid the property in on foreclosure and pay her a certain amount, less the sum then due on the mortgage. Instead of doing so he allowed the property to be struck off to another person for much less than its value and for less than half of what he had agreed to pay her, and took a conveyance of it from the purchaser. The sale was not such a public sale, with competition, as the law contemplates. Held, that the widow and heirs of the owner of the equity of redemption were entitled to have the sale vacated; and as this was not a proceeding to enforce the agreement with the mortgagee or to determine who would have been entitled to the moneys which he was to have paid to the widow, the question whether the agreement was not a fraud upon the rights of the heirs or of creditors does not arise.—Fix v. Loranger, 50 Mich. 199.

§ 149. ——Lack or imperfection of notice.

See also post ¶ 659.

Notice of foreclosure in statutory proceedings, see ante, II, B.

Notice in equity foreclosure proceedings, see ante §§ 108, 109.

¶ 615. A foreclosure sale may be set aside for want of notice of the order for sale or of the confirmation thereof.—Nugent v. Nugent, 54 Mich. 557.

¶ 616. Where a foreclosure sale was so managed that advantage was taken of the absence of one who had a lien on a portion of the land, and who had no notice of the proceedings, and the remainder of the land, though it would have abundantly satisfied the whole debt, was bid in at nominal prices, and the portion on which he had a lien was bid in at its full value in order to cut off his equities, it was held that equity would relieve, and that the sale should be reopened on petition of the incumbrancer upon his compliance with proper terms, as by giving security that on a resale he would bid for the parcels first charged with the satisfaction of the demand a sum equal to its amount, and repay to the foreclosure purchaser all sums spent by him in improving the land since its purchase, less a reasonable rent for that time.—Gilbert v. Haire, 43 Mich. 283.

¶ 617. A foreclosure by advertisement without effort to find mortgagor in the same town where but a small instalment of interest was due, without any actual notice to the mortgagors, who were unable to read English, that the mortgagee had elected to declare the principal sum due, and without any statement in the notice of sale that he had so elected, severely criticized; and the foreclosure and deeds thereunder were set aside for a misnomer in the notice of sale.—Zlotoeczski v. Smith, 117 Mich. 208.

¶ 618. The action of the circuit court in setting aside a foreclosure sale for want of notice to the mortgagor, the notice of sale having been published in a paper which had no circulation in his neighborhood, and for inadequacy of the price realized, is within its discretionary powers, and will not be interfered with unless the discretion is abused.—Brewer v. Landis, 111 Mich. 217.

¶ 619. If the notice of sale on statutory foreclosure is insufficient the consequence will be the continuance of the right of redemption until foreclosure by lapse of time or in equity.—State Bank of Bay City v. Chapelle, 40 Mich. 447.

¶ 620. A mortgagee cannot set aside a foreclosure sale on the ground that no notice of sale was posted and that the sale was not made by any one authorized by the decree where he and his attorney had entire charge of the sale.—Mallar v. Mallarian, 138 Mich. 345.

¶ 621. On a bill to review a foreclosure decree on the ground that complainant had no notice of the proceedings until served with a petition for execution for the deficiency, although the officer's return showed service, where complainant was given an opportunity to appear and introduce any defense he might have, but made no defense, and did not avail himself of an offer to have the entire mortgaged property transferred to him upon payment of the mortgage debt, and did not ask for a resale, the decree was not vacated on the ground merely of such want of notice.—Dickerson v. Corning, 122 Mich. 631.

¶ 622. A defect in the affidavit of posting of notice of foreclosure sale, which fails to prove posting of notice in the township in which the premises are situated, is not cured by a recital in the commissioner's report of the sale, nor can it be cured by parol.—New York Baptist Union v. Atwell, 95 Mich. 239.

¶ 623. Defects in the printer's affidavit of the due publication of notice of a foreclosure sale are not cured by the fact that the officer who conducted the sale has stated in his report thereof that due publication was had of the notice of sale.—Perrien v. Fetters, 35 Mich. 233.

§ 150. ——Inadequacy of price.

See also ante ¶ 618.
See also post ¶¶ 648, 650.

¶ 624. Inadequacy of price is not ground for setting aside a foreclosure sale where there is no showing that a larger or even as large a price could be obtained on a new sale.—Farmers' Bank v. Quick, 71 Mich. 534.

¶ 625. A foreclosure sale may properly be reopened for gross inadequacy of price, especially if the petitioner for a resale gives bonds to produce a purchaser at a higher price.—Nugent v. Nugent, 54 Mich. 557.

¶ 626. Where a mortgagee is the purchaser on foreclosure, and the sale is objected to for inadequacy of price, an order reopening the sale will not be disturbed on appeal.—Nugent v. Nugent, 54 Mich. 557.

¶ 627. A sale of $350 will not be set aside on the ground of inadequacy of consideration when the petition states the premises to be worth $700, and the evidence is that they have since been sold by the purchaser at that price on long time, but that for cash they would not sell for over $400.—Bullard v. Green, 10 Mich. 268.

¶ 628. A resale will not be ordered where mortgaged property, the fair value of which was shown not to exceed $900, was sold on foreclosure for $890, and where one who was present at the first sale was subsequently willing to pay $1,000.—Page v. Kress, 80 Mich. 85.

¶ 629. A resale of property under foreclosure will not be ordered upon an offer of increase of price alone, when the property has not been sold at a sacrifice.—Page v. Kress, 80 Mich. 85.

§ 151. ——Surprise, mistake or fraud.

See also post ¶ 648.

¶ 630. The sale will not be set aside on the ground of surprise when the surprise springs from the negligence and inattention of the party himself who complains of it.—Bullard v. Green, 10 Mich. 268.

¶ 631. Sale set aside on the ground of surprise where defendant had obtained an agreement from complainant to postpone it, upon which he relied, but the instructions to postpone were not received by the solicitor in season, and the sale was made at much less than the value.—Demaray v. Little, 19 Mich. 244.

¶ 632. The equities must be clear and strong to warrant setting aside a chancery sale at the instance of a purchaser on the ground of misapprehension of his rights, where the premises sold were farming lands, and the amount bid was large, and the next highest bid was within one hundred dollars of that on which the premises were struck off, and was made with full knowledge, and where, therefore, the probabilities of serious loss are great if the sale should be reopened.—Ledyard v. Phillips, 32 Mich. 13.

¶ 633. A falsely antedated deed and certificate made ten months after sale will not cure defects in a deed made at the time of the sale.—Grover v. Fox, 36 Mich. 461.

¶ 634. A master's deed following the decree in that it included lands discharged from the mortgage by a stipulation filed in the suit is void as to persons aware of the facts.—Thayer v. McGee, 20 Mich. 195.

§ 152. Equities of applicant and doing of equity as condition.

Tendering or depositing amount due to redeem, see post § 153.

¶ 635. A mortgagee who bids off land at a foreclosure sale upon a decree granted him for the amount due, and who, having prior incumbrances thereon, pays more than the amount due under the decree, supposing that the surplus will be returned to him to apply on his prior incumbrances, but who gives out at the sale that whoever purchases must take the land subject to these prior incumbrances, has no equities that will support his application to have his purchase set aside on the ground that he has been misled as to his right to have the surplus money returned to him.—Ledyard v. Phillips, 32 Mich. 13.

¶ 636. Where one who had been made a party to a foreclosure suit as a subsequent purchaser sought to set aside the sale on the ground that he had failed earlier to appear and defend because he supposed complainant's attempt was to reach the interest of one of the mortgagors and not that of the remaining mortgagor and himself, his claim was regarded as inconsistent with the fact that the deed to him was expressly subject to the mortgage.—Montague v. Haviland, 101 Mich. 80.

¶ 637. Where, upon a long-delayed petition to set aside sale the only question was whether the decree included some interest that was also included in a mortgage to complainant by petitioner's wife, the decree should not have been set aside, nor should the sale have been vacated except upon such conditions as would finally settle all the rights of the parties, and an accounting was therefore ordered to find and charge the amount due.—Montague v. Haviland, 101 Mich. 80.

¶ 638. Where two parcels were struck off to a certain bidder upon whose failure to produce the money on the spot they were sold to another, the amount of the first bid, tendered soon after, being refused, held, that a resale was properly ordered, but that it was unreasonable to require as a condition thereof that the first bidder should deposit with the register within ten days a sum equal to the amount of his two bids and a bond conditioned that the premises should on the resale bring the amount of the prior sale together with all the costs of the cause and the resale.—Converse v. Clay, 86 Mich. 375.

¶ 639. A mortgagee who deliberately buys property on foreclosure for a grossly inadequate price cannot have the sale set aside and resale had because of the defendant's redeeming and immediately reselling the property so as to avoid a deficiency decree. —Mallar v. Mallarian, 138 Mich. 345, Hooker, J., dissenting.

¶ 640. A husband, after the death of his wife who had mortgaged her land for his debt, entered into a collusion agreement with a third person by which the mortgage was foreclosed by advertisement, the foreclosure purchaser paying part of the price by executing to the mortgagee a new mortgage for the principal secured by the old one, the husband paying the rest. Subsequently the substituted mortgage was paid by the grantee of the purchaser's assignee in bankruptcy. Held, upon a bill filed by the wife's heirs, on coming of age, to set aside the foreclosure sale, that the entire transaction of substituting the second mortgage for the first should be taken together, and it would be inequitable to grant the relief asked, without at the same time reviving the mortgage extinguished by the sale complained of.—DeMey v. Defer, 103 Mich. 239, writ of error dismissed in 168 U. S. 703, 42 L. ed. 1211, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 941.

§ 153. ——Tendering or depositing amount due to redeem.

Procedure and method of payment on redemption, see post § 188.

¶ 641. Where a party comes to have a foreclosure set aside and for leave to redeem he must bring into court the amount admitted to be due. The deposit will only be dispensed with where there is uncertainty as to the amount due.—Schwarz v. Sears, H. 440.

¶ 642. Where no fraud is alleged in a bill filed to set aside a statutory foreclosure sale, and the only irregularity charged is that the amount claimed to be due on the notice of sale is excessive, the mortgagor must be prepared to do equity by paying the amount actually due, or by submitting to a resale.—Huyck v. Graham, 82 Mich. 353.

¶ 643. Complainant in a bill to set aside as irregular for want of sale in parcels a deed on statutory foreclosure, must be prepared to make payment of the amount actually due, or, in default thereof, a resale in parcels will be decreed.—Hawes v. Detroit Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 109 Mich. 324.

¶ 644. Petition being filed to set aside a sale under a decree in chancery on the ground of inadequate consideration, and the complainant—who was the purchaser—not having sought to take advantage of petitioner's embarrassments, and not appearing to have been at any time unwilling to receive the amount due upon the decree and the amount paid to redeem from prior sales, and to transfer to petitioner all rights acquired by the purchase, it was held that, under these circumstances at least, it was a fatal objection to the petition that it did not offer to pay the decree, or to increase the bid if a resale was ordered.—Leonard v. Taylor, 12 Mich. 398.

§ 154. Diligence and laches of applicant.

See also ante ¶ 601.

¶ 645. Defendants seeking to set aside a sale in a foreclosure case must move promptly after they become aware of the facts of which they complain.—Lyon v. Brunson, 48 Mich. 194.

¶ 646. A party claiming to be aggrieved by a sale in chancery which has been duly confirmed will not be relieved on an allegation of irregularity in the sale, where there is unreasonable delay in applying for relief, and it is not clearly shown that he has a substantial and meritorious ground of complaint.—Goodwin v. Burns, 21 Mich. 211.

¶ 647. A mortgagor relying on irregularities of procedure to invalidate a foreclosure and sale must act with the utmost promptness in order to obtain relief.—Union Trust Co. v. Electric Park Amusement Co., 168 Mich. 574.

¶ 648. A foreclosure sale in chancery will not be set aside on the ground of surprise and inadequate consideration, after a long unexcused delay, which has continued until an execution has been issued for a deficiency, and a sale made under which third persons have acquired vested interests, and the complainant has made payments to redeem from former sales.—Leonard v. Taylor, 12 Mich. 398.

¶ 649. A sale was made January 28th and confirmed April 13th. Another sale, upon another mortgage of the same property, was made January 21st, and confirmed February 1st, all in the same year. The party complaining knew of the sales at or about the time they took place, and he had knowledge of all the facts on which his claim for relief was based in June. In October he filed his petition to set the sales aside. Held too late. —Goodwin v. Burns, 21 Mich. 211.

¶ 650. Although the price was shown to have been inadequate, the sale would not be set aside on a petition presented six months after the sale, and which does not sufficiently excuse this delay.—Bullard v. Green, 10 Mich. 268.

¶ 651. A delay of fourteen years in taking steps to redeem from a statutory foreclosure claimed to be void by reason of including in the sum the land sold for an attorney fee and unpaid taxes, amounts to gross laches, defeating complainant's right to redeem.—Emmons v. Van Zee, 78 Mich. 171.

¶ 652. Where in a foreclosure sale a number of lots are sold as an entirety to the mortgagee and complainants who have derived title from the mortgagor seek to assert title against defendant who claims title through a quitclaim deed from the mortgagee after foreclosure, neither party having attempted to perfect title for a period of years, no paramount laches arises which impairs the rights of either party as they existed at the time of the invalid foreclosure, and a decree is entered allowing complainants to redeem by paying the mortgage debt on each lot with accrued interest since the date of the mortgage.—Walker v. Schultz, 175 Mich. 280.

¶ 653. A delay of five years in filing a bill to review foreclosure was prejudicial to the consideration of a claim for credits based upon the unsupported testimony of the complainants, even though the secretary of the building and loan association in question to whom the payments were claimed to have been made, and who at the time of the trial was at a distant place, was shown to have been dishonest; but where the books had always been open to complainants.—Dailey v. Saginaw Bldg. & Loan Ass'n, 133 Mich. 403.

¶ 654. A delay of five years in the filing of a bill by a husband and wife to review foreclosure, was prejudicial to the consideration of a claim to certain credits, based upon the unsupported testimony of the complainants, where the bill recited that upon discovery of certain receipts an investigation and adjustment were made, and where a release of all claims against the building and loan association given by the husband was recognized by the bill.—Dailey v. Saginaw Bldg. & Loan Ass'n, 133 Mich. 403.

¶ 655. A mortgage was given in 1888 and foreclosed in 1892. Held, that after the death and disability of many of the parties the decree of foreclosure could not, for laches, be attacked by bill in 1906.—Miller v. Peter, 158 Mich. 336.

§ 155. Estoppel and waiver of objections.

Estoppel by disclaimer to question irregular foreclosure, see also Estoppel ¶ 181.

¶ 656. A nonresident mortgagor who accepts after foreclosure sale the surplus due him, and who takes no steps to have the proceedings set aside within the time allowed by law, waives all irregularities and sanctions the validity of such proceedings.—Colton v. Rupert, 60 Mich. 318.

¶ 657. Where a purchaser at a chancery foreclosure sale takes possession of the premises, pays laborers for work done thereon at the time of the sale, and makes arrangements and advances money to have a wheat crop sown for the following year, he so far affirms the sale as to preclude himself from insisting that it is still inchoate, and that an order granted afterwards for opening it is therefore discretionary and not subject to appeal.—Ledyard v. Phillips, 32 Mich. 13.

¶ 658. A mortgagor's petition for a resale of the premises, which were bid in by the mortgagee upon foreclosure, will be denied, notwithstanding the latter promised to redeed to the mortgagor upon payment being made within a specified time after sale, or to give still further time for redemption on payment of a specified sum, where it appears that the mortgagor made no offer of payment within the period limited, nor requested further time, but talked and acted as though he had abandoned his purpose to redeem, in reliance upon which the mortgagee paid prior incumbrances and taxes upon the land, and went to a considerable expenditure of money, time, and trouble.—Stebbins v. Heath, 115 Mich. 661.

¶ 659. The right of defendant in foreclosure to all the time the decree allows him for making payment cannot be presumed waived in order to sustain a sale prematurely made without notice to him.—Shier v. Prentis, 55 Mich. 175.

¶ 660. The requirement that a foreclosure sale be made in parcels is in the redemptioner's interest and for the protection of his right to redeem each parcel separately; but where, for a valuable consideration, one has waived his right to redeem, in advance, he cannot object that sale was not made in parcels; the objection cannot be raised by the mortgagee as against his own proceedings, when no one else is in position to raise it.—Clark v. Stilson, 36 Mich. 482.

Presumptions, burden of proof and evidence as to regularity, see post § 162.
Occasion and propriety of bill of review, see Equity § 240.

¶ 661. One who attacks a judicial sale as invalid after strangers have acquired rights under it must do so by some original proceeding in which an issue can be formed and tried in the ordinary way and the persons concerned brought in as parties. And this applies to a motion to set aside a foreclosure sale after complainant's death and after a stranger has occupied the land.—Crawford v. Tuller, 35 Mich. 57.

¶ 662. When it appears that third parties have acquired rights in the premises under the foreclosure sale sought to be set aside, it is necessary to bring an original proceeding in which the persons concerned may be brought in as parties and afforded an opportunity to be heard.—Lawrence v. Jarvis, 36 Mich. 281.

¶ 663. An order setting aside a foreclosure sale and opening the case cannot be made without instituting an original proceeding and thereby bringing in such third persons as have acquired rights under the sale.—Jewett v. Morris, 41 Mich. 689.

¶ 664. The defendant in a foreclosure suit may proceed by petition to have the sale set aside for alleged irregularities in the proceedings, although the rights of third persons have intervened.—Brewer v. Landis, 111 Mich. 217.

¶ 665. Where the original parties to the suit and the purchaser have notice, and opportunity to be heard, and new rights have not intervened, the manner in which an objection to a foreclosure sale is brought to the attention of the court is not of particular importance where the decree stands and only the sale is attacked; and either bill or petition will suffice.—Butters v. Butters, 153 Mich. 153.

§ 157. Motions or petitions and hearing and relief thereon.

Hearing and relief on original bill, see post § 160.
Propriety of petition to set aside sale, see also ante ¶ 664.

¶ 666. On application by petition to set aside a sale the court cannot inquire into the regularity of the proceedings resulting in the decree, nor whether the decree was for a greater or less sum than it should have been.—Bullard v. Green, 10 Mich. 268.

§ 158. Kind and sufficiency of bill required or proper for relief.

Necessity of original proceedings to set aside sale as defective, see also ante ¶¶ 661-663.
Bills to redeem and for accounting, see Mortgages, IX.

¶ 667. If a mortgagor wishes to test in the court of chancery the validity of a statutory foreclosure he must file a bill to redeem. He cannot file a bill to set aside the sale and have the property resold, although the mortgagee may have abused the power to sell and purchased the property himself.—Schwarz v. Sears, W. 170.

¶ 668. A mortgagee may not so execute the power of sale contained in his mortgage as to compel the mortgagor to pay more than he owes or forfeit his estate; and if it is attempted, either through mistake or fraud, a court of equity, if appealed to properly and in season, will prevent the forfeiture by allowing the party to pay the true sum in redemption of the estate.—Sanford v. Flint, 24 Mich. 26.

¶ 669. A bill attacking a foreclosure decree and sale, and seeking leave to redeem, is in effect a bill in the nature of a bill of review; and where it is filed after long delay, and without security, and is neither verified nor accompanied by a sworn showing, should be dismissed.—Sanford v. Haynes, 71 Mich. 116.

¶ 670. A bill to set aside a foreclosure and to foreclose a second mortgage will be treated as a bill to redeem and the complainant be permitted to redeem where the foreclosure is held valid but the delay and evasion of the purchaser has prevented the complainant from redeeming during the statutory period.—Brown v. Burney, 128 Mich. 205.

¶ 671. Where a mortgagor files a bill to set aside a foreclosure sale, where a number of lots were sold as an entirety, it is treated as a bill to redeem and the mortgagor is required to pay the debt secured by the mortgage before the security pledged for the debt is released to him.—Walker v. Schultz, 175 Mich. 280.

¶ 671a. A foreclosure under the power of sale, if made for an excessive amount, may be set aside before the proceedings under it are perfected, on a bill filed by the debtor for leave to redeem on paying the amount due.—Schwarz v. Sears, H. 440.

¶ 672. A bill to set aside a sheriff's deed upon statutory foreclosure and to have the foreclosure proceedings declared void, and praying general relief, may, if the facts permit, be sufficient as a bill to redeem.—Drayton v. Chandler, 93 Mich. 383.

¶ 672a. A bill filed to set aside a statutory foreclosure sale for irregularities must be considered as a bill to redeem, whether redemption is prayed for or not.—Huyck v. Graham, 82 Mich. 353.

¶ 673. A second mortgagee has an absolute right, at any time after a prior incumbrance comes due, to redeem from and be subrogated to it until his own mortgage, as well as the former, shall be paid up and his whole claim refunded. And where a statutory foreclosure has been had that is void for irregularities, and the purchaser's assignee refuses to recognize his right to redeem, he can maintain a bill against such assignee for an accounting as to the amount due and for the removal of the apparent cloud caused by the foreclosure and for leave to redeem on equitable terms.—Sager v. Tupper, 35 Mich. 134.

¶ 674. A bill by the minor children of a decedent alleged that their father was possessed of certain real estate at the time of his decease, which was free from incumbrance; that an instrument purporting to be his will, by the terms of which all of his property was left to his wife, was admitted to probate, and a distribution made in accordance therewith; that complainants were not represented by a guardian ad litem, or otherwise; that the instrument was not decedent's will, but was obtained by fraud; that the widow had executed a real estate mortgage to defendant, and that the latter had foreclosed the same, and had himself purchased at the sale. The prayer was that the mortgage and sale be set aside so far as the complainants' interests were affected thereby. The bill contained no averments of the value of decedent's estate, of complainants' interest in the mortgaged premises, or of damage to them resulting from the sale. The widow and older children were not joined as parties to the litigation. Held, that a demurrer was properly sustained.—Stille v. Hess, 112 Mich. 678.

¶ 675. Mortgagor's wife is a necessary party to a bill to set aside a sale made on the statutory foreclosure of a mortgage for irregularity in not selling the land in parcels.—Hawes v. Detroit Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 109 Mich. 324.

§ 160. Hearing and decree on bill for relief.

Hearing and relief on petition or motion in foreclosure suit, see ante § 157.

¶ 676. A foreclosure sale ought not to be set aside on merely disposing of the plea to the bill of review filed to set it aside.—Thomas v. Burt, 52 Mich. 489.

¶ 677. Where the bill attacking the foreclosure sale by advertisement under a building and loan association mortgage does not ground the claim, that the amount stated in the notice of sale was excessive, on improper methods of computation, but on failure to note proper credits, it is within the discretion of the trial judge to permit, on argument, the submission of sworn computations by counsel.—Flax v. Mutual Bldg. & Loan Ass'n of Bay County, 198 Mich. 676.

¶ 678. On a bill to annul a foreclosure for an instalment, pending which the mortgagee proceeds to a second foreclosure for the principal, the court has power to adjust the whole controversy in its decree.—Louder v. Burch, 47 Mich. 109.

¶ 679. On setting aside a foreclosure by advertisement because sale was not made in parcels, a decree was directed that a necessary party be joined as complainant within 30 days or the bill would be dismissed, that on such joinder complainant might be allowed to pay the amount due on the mortgage within 60 days, and in default thereof that sale should be decreed to be made in parcels.—Hawes v. Detroit Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 109 Mich. 324.

¶ 680. Where a mortgage sale, pending partition proceedings, has been held void for failure to sell in separate parcels, the mortgagor was given 60 days within which to pay the debt, and upon failure to do so, the mortgagee might proceed to hold another sale.—O'Connor v. Keenan, 132 Mich. 646.

§ 161. Ejectment as remedy to cure or avoid foreclosure.

Foreclosing by ejectment, see ante § 16.

¶ 681. Ejectment by the purchaser at a defective foreclosure would lie, where the mortgage antedated the statute forbidding its use for foreclosing mortgages.—Mundy v. Monroe, 1 Mich. 68; Todd v. Davis, 32 Mich. 160; Hoffman v. Harrington, 33 Mich. 392; Baldwin v. Cullen, 51 Mich. 33.

¶ 682. Where land has been regularly sold under a mortgage the mortgagor cannot, in an action of ejectment for it, attack the mortgage as fraudulent, or as discharged before foreclosure. The remedy for such defects, if not lost by laches, would be in equity.—Yale v. Stevenson, 58 Mich. 537; Damon v. Deeves, 66 Mich. 347.

§ 162. Presumptions, burden of proof and evidence as to regularity.

Proof of mistake or good purpose, see also ante ¶ 598.

¶ 683. On collateral attack regularity is presumed in foreclosure proceedings if the reverse is not shown.—Ruggles v. First Nat. Bank, 43 Mich. 192.

¶ 684. One who attacks the validity of a foreclosure sale on the ground that the lands were sold as one parcel has the burden of proving that they were not so occupied, unless that fact is apparent from the description in the mortgage.—Gage v. Sanborn, 106 Mich. 269.

¶ 685. A complainant in suit to set aside a foreclosure sale who claims that the mortgage sale by advertisement is void because separate lots were sold in one parcel, has the burden of proof to show that they were not occupied as one parcel; and it is not sufficient to show that part of one lot was fenced and cultivated, and that the adjoining lot was unfenced.—Harris v. Creveling, 80 Mich. 249.

Amount of appeal bond, inclusion or exclusion of possible deficiency, see Appeal § 83.

¶ 686. A man and his wife conveyed certain lands in consideration of the payment, by the grantees, of the husband's debts. The grantees gave back a written agreement to the wife that the lands should be reconveyed to her alone on repayment of their advances. This agreement purported to make the wife covenant to pay the advances, but she did not sign it. The transaction was conceded to be a mortgage. Held, that under Comp. L. 1871, § 4208, How. St., § 5656, declaring that no mortgage shall be construed as implying a covenant for the payment of the sum secured thereby, the wife could not be held personally liable for any deficiency on foreclosure sale.—Howe v. Lemon, 37 Mich. 164.

¶ 687. In foreclosing a lien for redemption from a statutory foreclosure, no personal decree can be made against the original mortgagors for any deficiency, as the lien is confined to the land, and does not revive their personal liability extinguished by such foreclosure.—Powers v. Golden Lumber Co., 43 Mich. 468.

¶ 688. On a bill to foreclose as against the owner of the equity of redemption, omitted from a former foreclosure, the first mortgage, which complainant had bought, and the second mortgage, which he owned, a deficiency judgment against the original first mortgagor was improper; where the first foreclosure sale produced the full amount owing on the first mortgage. [Note. Official syllabus 5 states that the full amount was obtained, but this fact does not appear in the opinion.]—Walsh v. Robinson, 135 Mich. 16.

¶ 689. A person who attached real property which was mortgaged and agreed to buy such mortgage, could not be held liable for a deficiency decree on foreclosure under How. St., § 6704, since he was not a purchaser of such property subject to the mortgage, his only interest therein being by virtue of his attachment lien, and such lien being liable to be defeated at any time by redemption.—Winsor v. Ludington, 77 Mich. 215.

§ 164. ——Form and requisites of mortgage and debt.

¶ 690. A decree for deficiency cannot be granted where the mortgage does not purport to secure a written promise.—Shelden v. Erskine, 78 Mich. 627.

¶ 691. It is only where a personal decree is sought against sureties or other persons than the mortgagor that a personal decree must be based on some written obligation (How. St., § 6704).—Shelden v. Warner's Estate, 59 Mich. 444.

¶ 692. Payment by a mortgagor of a deficiency under How. St., § 6702, cannot be decreed where there are several mortgagees who are not jointly interested in the mortgage.—Shelden v. Erskine, 78 Mich. 627.

§ 165. ——Debt extinguished or barred or revived.

Bar of cause of action or right to foreclose, see ante § 12.

Inclusion in foreclosure decree of interest barred by statute of limitations, see ante ¶ 394.

Discharge in bankruptcy as defense to decree for deficiency, see Bankruptcy §§ 10-13.

Limitations against decree as barring execution for deficiency, see Executions § 6.

¶ 693. Where the right of action for a debt is barred, there can be no personal decree on foreclosure of the mortgage that secures it.—Michigan Ins. Co. of Detroit v. Brown, 11 Mich. 265; Baent v. Kennicutt, 57 Mich. 268.

¶ 694. At the request of the administrator of a mortgagor's estate, the mortgagee, who had secured a decree in foreclosure proceedings, consented to postpone the sale as long as the administrator should keep the yearly interest paid and take good care of the premises. Two years later, the administrator found himself unable to pay the interest, and an arrangement was made whereby the heirs of the mortgagor quitclaimed the premises to the mortgagee, and the latter leased the same to the administrator under an agreement that the estate should be entitled to a deed upon payment of the amount due under the decree, with interest, taxes, and insurance. A year later, the administrator, being unable to make the payment, voluntarily surrendered possession to the mortgagee. Upon the final account of the administrator, the amounts paid as interest money were disallowed, and these payments were thereafter recovered back in an action instituted on behalf of the estate. Subsequently the heirs of the mortgagor filed a bill in equity to declare the foreclosure decree satisfied by reason of their quitclaim to the mortgagee. Held, that complainants' contention was inequitable; that the mortgagee, having been obliged to refund the interest money, the payment of which by the administrator was an essential part of the transaction, should be permitted to pursue his remedy under his decree, and to enforce against the estate a claim for a deficiency arising after sale.—Quick v. Raymond, 116 Mich. 15.

§ 166. ——Estoppel to enforce deficiency judgment.

¶ 695. Where persons interested in a chancery foreclosure sale interfere to prevent a fair sale to the highest bidder, as by arranging with persons intending to bid, to protect their interests, whereby such persons are deterred from bidding, they are estopped from claiming a deficiency on the sale, and will be enjoined from proceeding at law to recover it.—Innes v. Stewart, 36 Mich. 285.

¶ 696. A bank foreclosed a mortgage on some mill property and obtained a decree for sale. In order that the property might be leased and made profitable as soon as possible, the mortgagor's assignee, believing that nothing could be realized beyond the debt, proposed to the bank to anticipate the date fixed for the foreclosure sale, provided he could be sure of a bid high enough to cover expenses. The bank promised to bid, and at the sale the property was bought in its interest, subject to the mortgage. It was afterwards sold, however, under the foreclosure decree at a sum much below the mortgage debt, and the bank thereupon notified the assignee that payment of the deficiency would be claimed out of the assets which he held. On his petition an order was made satisfying the decree by the property sold, and on appeal this order was affirmed on the ground that, in arranging with the bank to anticipate the sale, the assignee was left to suppose that the bank, by taking title, would have no further claim against him.—East Saginaw Savings Bank v. Grant, 41 Mich. 101.

§ 167. Persons liable for deficiency.

Agreements or promises collateral to the debt, see post § 168.

Liability of guarantors of mortgagor, see also post ¶ 742.

Liability of married woman for deficiency where she signed mortgage note with her husband, see post ¶ 745.

Liability of mortgagor's sureties, see also ante ¶ 691.

Liability of mortgagor's wife, see also ante ¶ 686.

Remission of part of decree to avoid bill of review by persons liable for deficiency, see Appeal ¶ 2154.

¶ 697. There may be a personal decree for deficiency after sale against a subsequent grantee of mortgaged premises who has assumed the mortgage, if he has been made a party and is found in the jurisdiction.—Crawford v. Edwards, 33 Mich. 354; Miller v. Thompson, 34 Mich. 10; Taylor v. Whitmore, 35 Mich. 97; Carley v. Fox, 38 Mich. 387; Winans v. Wilkie, 41 Mich. 264; Booth v. Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co., 43 Mich. 299; Unger v. Smith, 44 Mich. 22; Canfield v. Shear, 49 Mich. 313.

¶ 698. A personal decree may be rendered in a foreclosure case against a grantee of the mortgagor, who has accepted a deed stating that it is subject to the mortgage, which the grantee assumes and agrees to pay.—Corning v. Burton, 102 Mich. 86.

¶ 699. A grantee of a mortgagor who is liable because of having assumed mortgage and agreed to pay it cannot escape liability by inserting in his deed of the mortgaged premises a like agreement by his grantee to pay the mortgage debt.—Corning v. Burton, 102 Mich. 86.

¶ 700. A personal deficiency decree will not be entered against a grantee of land where it appears that the mortgagor conveyed the mortgaged premises as security, the grantee separately agreeing to pay the mortgage if demanded, the mortgagee not being a party to such pledge agreement, as in such case there is no equity between the mortgagor and the grantee under the pledge. A court of chancery has the power under the statute to enter a deficiency decree against one who equitably owes the debt through an assumption of the mortgage debt as part of the purchase price of land, but such action is always dependent upon an existing equity either between the person and the mortgagee or more frequently between him and the mortgagor.—Webber v. Lawrence, 118 Mich. 630.

¶ 701. No personal decree against a wife can be rendered in proceedings foreclosing a mortgage where she joined in the note and the mortgage solely for the purpose of waiving her dower rights, she having no other interest in the property.—Simons v. McDonnel, 120 Mich. 621.

§ 168. ——Agreements or promises collateral to the debt.

¶ 702. Absolute personal decrees against parties claimed to be collaterally liable for a mortgage debt cannot be granted in the original foreclosure decree.—Johnson v. Shepard, 35 Mich. 115; Vaughan v. Black, 63 Mich. 215.

¶ 703. In order to authorize a decree for deficiency against a third party, under How. St., § 6704, providing that "if the mortgage debt be secured by the obligation or other evidence of debt of any other person besides the mortgagor, the complainant may make such person a party to the bill," the obligation or evidence of debt of such party must be one upon which he can be sued at law to recover the mortgage debt.—Winsor v. Ludington, 77 Mich. 215.

¶ 704. Complainant in foreclosure is a stranger to any agreement binding an infant defendant to the other defendants, or to any settlement of accounts between them, and cannot sue upon such an agreement or settlement in order to obtain a personal decree against the infant for a deficiency.—Wood v. Truax, 39 Mich. 628.

¶ 705. The liability of a surety on bonds of a corporation, for a deficiency, can be adjudicated, on a bill to foreclose a trust mortgage, where the question was raised by the pleadings and has been litigated by the parties.—Michigan Trust Co. v. Lansing Lumber Co., 121 Mich. 488.

§ 169. Power of chancery to make deficiency decree; statutory provisions.

Petitions or suits to set aside or relieve from deficiency decrees, see post § 178.

Statutory provision for deficiency decree, see Jud. Act, chap. XIX, § 24; Comp. L. 1915, § 12678.

¶ 706. Under the original equity jurisdiction there was no power to enter a personal decree even against the mortgagor himself, the conferring of such power being a statutory innovation.—Kelly v. Gaukler, 164 Mich. 519.

¶ 707. A decree in personam against the mortgagor is a statutory innovation, as is also the enforcement, on foreclosure, of collateral obligations of third persons. But the statutory jurisdiction over this latter class of persons is permissive only, and not obligatory, and will not be enforced to their prejudice.—Johnson v. Shepard, 35 Mich. 115; Gage v. Jenkinson, 58 Mich. 169.

¶ 708. The provision authorizing the enforcement of payment for deficiency is statutory, and cannot be enlarged.—Shelden v. Erskine, 78 Mich. 627.

¶ 709. The right to a personal decree for a deficiency in a mortgage foreclosure proceeding is purely statutory.—Prentis v. Richardson's Estate, 118 Mich. 259.

¶ 710. Under the original equitable jurisdiction, and prior to the act of April 23, 1833, there was no power to make a personal decree against even the mortgagor. His personal obligation could be enforced only in a suit at law.—Johnson v. Shepard, 35 Mich. 115.

¶ 711. The power to make a personal decree against the maker of a mortgage upon real estate or against others charged with its payment comes entirely from the statute providing for chancery foreclosure.—Kollen v. Sooy, 172 Mich. 214.

¶ 712. If a mortgage is collateral to any actual personal obligation, however shaped, that could be enforced at law, it may be enforced in foreclosure proceedings and a personal decree obtained, and if the mortgagor dies his estate is liable for the deficiency (How. St., § 6702).—Shelden v. Warner's Estate, 59 Mich. 444.

§ 170. Procedure for obtaining deficiency judgment and execution thereon.

[Note. The simplification of procedure by the Judicature Act has made many of the earlier decisions relating to the taking of deficiency judgments and executions obsolete. They have nevertheless been collated here in order that the digest may be complete and may show the decisions on former as well as present practice. Editor.]

Sufficiency of averments in bill and notice, see post § 172.

Sufficiency and requisites of decree, see post § 173.

Equity suits to enforce personal liability, see post § 182.

Mode of service of notices, see Notices; Process, II.

Necessity of verification of petition for deficiency judgment, see also Equity § 67.

Supplementary proceedings at law to subject property to deficiency judgment, see Creditors' Suits § 21.

¶ 713. The proceeding for execution for deficiency on a foreclosure decree is substantially a new one, equivalent to the legal process of scire facias. It cannot be sought against persons not properly charged in the bill, and it cannot be adjudicated except upon the occasion of a deficiency reported. Parties not properly charged have every defense open to them, and they are not called on to defend unless cited.—Vaughan v. Black, 63 Mich. 215.

¶ 714. The setting forth of a personal liability in the decree of foreclosure is always provisional, and until a deficiency arises and the defendants are called in to answer for it, they are not bound to pay it even if responsible.—Powers v. Golden Lumber Co., 43 Mich. 468.

¶ 715. Execution is not to be awarded in a decree for sale on foreclosure so long as it is not known that there will be a deficiency.—Howe v. Lemon, 37 Mich. 164.

¶ 716. Where a foreclosure decree provides for the sale of land, there is no personal liability to be enforced against defendant until after it is sold and a deficiency reported.—Mickle v. Maxfield, 42 Mich. 304.

¶ 717. How. St., § 6702, authorizing a decree for a deficiency in a foreclosure proceeding and requiring a report of the sale, showing a deficiency, before the decree can be entered, contemplates a new proceeding with notice to the mortgagor.—Prentis v. Richardson's Estate, 118 Mich. 259.

¶ 718. An attempt to take a personal decree for a deficiency in a foreclosure proceeding is substantially a new proceeding requiring personal service upon the defendant if he can be found.—Prentis v. Richardson's Estate, 118 Mich. 259.

¶ 719. Before payment of a deficiency in a mortgage foreclosure proceeding can be decreed or execution issued, the amount of the deficiency must be adjudicated, after the report of sale has been made.—Field v. Saginaw Circuit Judge, 124 Mich. 68.

¶ 720. Where a foreclosure decree provides for the sale of land, there is no personal liability to be enforced against a defendant until after it is sold and a deficiency reported, and subsequent proceedings are taken to secure a deficiency decree.—Kelly v. Gaukler, 164 Mich. 519.

§ 171. ——Necessity of jurisdiction in personam.

Appearance of defendants not personally served, see ante § 89.

¶ 721. No personal decree can be made against parties not personally served within the jurisdiction where the land lies, or not submitting voluntarily by appearance.—Outhwite v. Porter, 13 Mich. 533; Booth v. Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co., 43 Mich. 299.

¶ 722. No personal decree can be rendered against a defendant brought in by publication but who was not served with process and has not appeared.—Innes v. Stewart, 36 Mich. 285.

¶ 723. If the bill is filed to foreclose a mortgage against a nonresident mortgagor, who does not appear, a personal decree cannot be made against him for any deficiency that may remain after sale.—Lawrence v. Fellows, W. 468.

§ 172. ——Sufficiency of averments in bill and notice.

Right to adjudicate liability of surety of mortgagor for deficiency on bill to foreclose trust mortgage, see also ante ¶ 705.

¶ 724. Where a bill to foreclose a mortgage contains the necessary facts and the requisite prayer, and personal service is had on the defendant, the question of personal liability for a deficiency may be determined in the original decree.—Field v. Saginaw Circuit Judge, 124 Mich. 68.

¶ 725. A bill for foreclosure of a mortgage given to secure a note signed by the defendants and set out in the bill, and praying that if the amount realized upon foreclosure is insufficient, execution be had for the balance, is sufficient to support a decree finding defendants personally liable for the debt.—Simons v. McDonnell, 120 Mich. 621.

¶ 726. A purchaser of mortgaged property, who is made a defendant in foreclosure proceedings as one having or claiming to have an interest in the premises as subsequent purchaser or incumbrancer or otherwise, as provided by First Ch. Rule No. 91, against whom a personal decree is sought, and who is notified of that fact as provided by First Ch. Rule No. 122, is sufficiently advised of an intent to hold him personally liable for a deficiency after sale; it not being required that the bill should in such cases specifically allege the facts from which the personal liability is sought to be established.—Jehle v. Brooks, 112 Mich. 131.

§ 173. ——Sufficiency and requisites of decree.

Decree of foreclosure in general, see ante, III, D.

¶ 727. A decree made in advance of sale, for payment of deficiency, is no more than declaratory and fixes no rights.—Shelden v. Erskine, 78 Mich. 627.

¶ 728. A decree in mortgage foreclosure proceedings finding defendants personally liable for the debt but not directing the payment of any deficiency after the sale, is not objectionable as decreeing payment of a deficiency before any is found to exist, since such is not its effect.—Simons v. McDonnell, 120 Mich. 621.

¶ 729. A decree for a deficiency on the foreclosure of a mortgage, against one not personally liable for the payment of the mortgage debt, is erroneous.—Welbon v. Welbon, 109 Mich. 356.

¶ 730. Under How. St., § 6704, authorizing joinder and such relief, a decree for deficiency may include the mortgagee and another person who indorsed the mortgage note by way of additional security when it and the mortgage were taken by complainant's assignor in part payment for the purchase of goods.—Michigan State Bank v. Trowbridge, 92 Mich. 217.

¶ 731. Where a mortgage upon land owned by husband and wife as tenants in the entirety, was executed, as was the accompanying bond, by both, to secure a loan made to him, and therefore not binding her personally it is competent on foreclosure to enter a personal decree against him only without reforming the bond or the pleadings.—People's Building & Loan Ass'n v. Billing, 104 Mich. 186.

§ 174. Issuance and service of executions for deficiency.

Statutory provision for issuance of execution for deficiency in equity foreclosure, see Jud. Act, chap. XIX, § 24; Comp. L. 1915, § 12678.

¶ 732. Complainant has ten years after decree within which to take out an execution for deficiency.—Wallace v. Field, 56 Mich. 3.

¶ 733. An execution for deficiency cannot issue without special application to the court, in writing and verified, showing the right thereto.—Mickle v. Maxfield, 42 Mich. 304; Gies v. Green, 42 Mich. 107; Ransom v. Sutherland, 46 Mich. 489; Wallace v. Field, 56 Mich. 3.

¶ 734. Notice of a petition for an execution to enforce collection of a deficiency on foreclosure must be given to defendant.—Gies v. Green, 42 Mich. 107; Ransom v. Sutherland, 46 Mich. 489; McCrickett v. Wilson, 50 Mich. 513.

§ 175. ——Objections and defenses to issuance.

¶ 735. No objections can be made to the issue of execution for a deficiency unless they arose after confirmation of the foreclosure sale and recognize the decree and go to its discharge.—Haldane v. Sweet, 58 Mich. 429.

¶ 736. An application for execution can be resisted only on grounds that are consistent with the decree and such as usually operate in its discharge.—Ransom v. Sutherland, 46 Mich. 489; Wallace v. Field, 56 Mich. 3; Haldane v. Sweet, 58 Mich. 429.

¶ 737. In resisting the issue of execution for deficiency defendant cannot attack the validity or regularity of the foreclosure proceedings, nor treat the order confirming the sale as void, so long as it has not been set aside.—Wallace v. Field, 56 Mich. 3.

¶ 738. A petition for an execution for deficiency cannot be resisted on grounds inconsistent with the decree.—Corning v. Burton, 102 Mich. 96.

¶ 739. A defendant in foreclosure cannot, in proceedings for the issue of an execution for a deficiency properly prayed for against him, call in question the validity of the decree.—Jehle v. Brooks, 112 Mich. 131.

¶ 740. Proceedings for execution for the deficiency on foreclosure are new and supplementary and not merely in continuation of the foreclosure; and any dealing between the creditor and the principal debtor which substantially changes their contract relations would release a guarantor of collection, if entered into before their liability was finally settled, and would also be a defense to proceedings for execution.—Johnson v. Shepard, 35 Mich. 115.

¶ 741. A subsequent purchaser of mortgaged premises, who in his deed had assumed and agreed to pay the mortgage, claimed the right on the hearing of a petition for an execution for deficiency to question the return of service of the original subpoena, he having denied in his answer to the petition that the subpoena was served upon him. Held, that said defendant might have had the question of the validity of the decree determined by a proper motion before enrollment, or upon bill of review after enrollment, in which case all persons interested should be made parties; but that such question was not open for hearing in said ancillary proceeding.—Corning v. Burton, 102 Mich. 96.

¶ 741a. A defense of discharge in bankruptcy not made to the decree which found and charged the deficiency cannot be urged against the deficiency.—Field v. Howry, 132 Mich. 687.

¶ 742. Guarantors of collection who have not objected to being joined as defendants in foreclosure are not precluded from a hearing before execution issues on a contingent decree against them.—Johnson v. Shepard, 35 Mich. 115.

¶ 743. The answer to a petition for execution for deficiency must state the grounds of objection thereto, and must be verified and filed.—Ransom v. Sutherland, 46 Mich. 489; Wallace v. Field, 56 Mich. 3.

¶ 744. If an answer to an application for an execution for deficiency on foreclosure presents matter of discharge, complainant may take issue on it by replication if necessary, and in proper cases the court may order a reference to take proofs.—Ransom v. Sutherland, 46 Mich. 489; Wallace v. Field, 56 Mich. 3.

¶ 745. A married woman, who with her husband was a defendant in a suit to foreclose a mortgage given to secure a note signed by her together with her husband, and suffered a default, is bound by the foreclosure and deficiency decree and cannot, upon application for execution for the deficiency, raise the defense that she was a married woman when the note was given, and as it was not given with reference to her personal estate, she was not personally liable upon it.—Christian v. Soderberg, 124 Mich. 54.

§ 176. ——Taking proofs, presumptions and evidence on right to execution.

¶ 746. References to take proofs may be had in proceedings for execution for deficiency in foreclosure.—Ransom v. Sutherland, 46 Mich. 489; Wallace v. Field, 56 Mich. 3.

¶ 747. A decree of foreclosure and the commissioner's report of a deficiency on the sale establish a prima facie case for the issue of execution for such deficiency.—Wallace v. Field, 56 Mich. 3.

¶ 748. A decree in foreclosure adjudging defendant personally liable for a deficiency, taken together with the report of the deficiency, makes out a prima facie case against him, and on resisting an application for an execution against him he has the burden of showing matter in discharge of the decree. —Ransom v. Sutherland, 46 Mich. 489.

¶ 749. Where, in a proceeding to obtain a deficiency decree in a foreclosure suit in chancery, the calendar shows the report of sale of a court commissioner, the entry of an order confirming the report and following these the enrollment of the decree, all of the same date, in the absence of other proof it will not be presumed that the sale had been made and report filed before the decree and files were enrolled, and hence proceedings based upon the report of sale were void because in violation of Chancery Rule 24, subd. A., providing proceedings may not be had on final decree to enforce the same until the same is duly enrolled, as it will be presumed that an officer does his duty and that his proceedings are regular.—Olmstead v. Meyers, 172 Mich. 698.

§ 177. Assignment of deficiency decree.

Assignment of foreclosure decree, see ante § 105.

Assignment or transfer of mortgage or debt secured by it, see Mortgages, VI.

¶ 750. Where, after sale of mortgaged premises, the personal residue of the decree in foreclosure was sold and assigned as a decree for less than the amount adjudged due, and a note secured by the mortgage, but not yet due and not included in the decree, was sold also, the vendor was held not liable to refund the purchase price received by him as for a total failure of consideration, on the ground that the personal decree was invalid for failure of personal service; the assignment would transfer the note and the mortgage debt with authority to enforce it by all appropriate remedies, and if there was any failure of consideration it was only partial. —Lillibridge v. Tregent, 30 Mich. 105.

§ 178. Petitions or suits to set aside or relieve from deficiency decrees.

¶ 751. Proceedings to collect a deficiency on foreclosure are purely statutory, and a petition to set them aside for want of notice is permissible without filing a bill of review. —McCrickett v. Wilson, 50 Mich. 513.

¶ 752. The decree in a mortgage foreclosure proceeding determining the question of personal liability for a deficiency is final and can only be questioned upon rehearing or bill of review.—Field v. Saginaw Circuit Judge, 124 Mich. 68.

¶ 753. A bill to prevent the collection of deficiency on foreclosure was sustained where it appeared that the defendants had an agreement with third persons whereby the suit then pending for the foreclosure of the mortgages against this complainant and his property was to proceed, and if on the sale of the premises the price did not exceed a certain sum, these defendants were to purchase the property, and complainant was to have two and a half years to pay them certain sums upon the payment of which he was to receive a release. The premises were sold to others for an amount slightly less than the amount due, and almost enough to pay what the parties were entitled to under the agreement, and although not parties to the foreclosure suit the latter applied for and obtained an order on which there was an execution for deficiency. The attempt thus to collect the deficiency was a violation of the agreement referred to and a fraud on the complainant herein, he not having appeared in the foreclosure proceedings, and the decree being taken against him pro confesso.—Smith v. Smith, 46 Mich. 301.

¶ 754. Where an absolute personal decree for the deficiency on foreclosure has been granted in the first instance against guarantors of the collection of the mortgage debt, they are not in default in not asking a bill of review, so long as the proper proceedings to fix them finally are not yet begun.—Johnson v. Shepard, 35 Mich. 115.

§ 179. Actions at law pending or following foreclosure.

Propriety and grounds of leave to sue, see post § 180.
Petition and order of leave, see post § 181.
Statutory provisions governing actions at law pending or following equity foreclosure suits, see Jud. Act, chap. XIX, § 25; Comp. L. 1915, § 12679.

¶ 755. The pendency of a foreclosure suit in equity is not pleadable in abatement to a suit at law on the debt.—Joslin v. Millspaugh, 27 Mich. 517; Goodrich v. White, 39 Mich. 489.

¶ 756. The purpose of the statute (How. St., § 6703), in suspending the right, during the pendency of foreclosure proceedings, to bring an action at law, unless authorized by the court, to recover the debt secured by the mortgage, is not to limit the remedy of the creditor, but to avoid unnecessary litigation; and, when a suit is brought without leave in a court of law, the proceedings therein will not be restrained unless substantial rights are affected.—Steele v. Kent Circuit Judge, 109 Mich. 647.

¶ 757. Comp. L. 1871, § 5149, How. St., § 6703, declaring that legal proceedings to recover a mortgage debt for which a foreclosure suit is pending shall not be had unless authorized by the court, leaves the question of permitting such proceedings to be determined in equity by the court where the foreclosure is pending, and not at law. That court will compel an election of remedies, or permit the double action, in its discretion.—Joslin v. Millspaugh, 27 Mich. 517.

¶ 758. Proceedings at law to recover a deficiency on mortgage foreclosure can be taken only by leave of the court in which the foreclosure was decreed.—Innes v. Stewart, 36 Mich. 285.

¶ 759. It seems that where proceedings by foreclosure and for a deficiency thereon are ineffective, an action at law can be instituted for the debt without leave from the court in chancery.—Culver v. Detroit Superior Court Judge, 57 Mich. 25.

¶ 760. The rule that proceedings at law to enforce payment of a deficiency on foreclosure cannot be taken without leave of the court in which foreclosure was had (How. St., § 6703), does not apply to an action begun by leave of the probate court upon the bond of the mortgagor's residuary legatee: and the omission to obtain leave also from the court in chancery is a mere irregularity that can be waived by defendants.—Culver v. Detroit Superior Court Judge, 57 Mich. 25.

¶ 761. Land was mortgaged to one person to secure three notes payable at different times. He foreclosed to obtain payment of the first two notes, and sold and bid in the land subject to the third note not yet due. There was no redemption. Held, that the mortgagee could not sue the mortgagor on the remaining note, as the latter would then be entitled to reimbursement from the land, thus causing a multiplicity of suits.—Shermer v. Merrill, 33 Mich. 284.

§ 180. ——Propriety and grounds of leave to sue.

¶ 762. Although under How. St., §§ 6702, 6703, the right to have an action at law on a mortgage debt "after * * * bill shall be filed," and pending for foreclosure, and after decree, is subject to leave of the court of chancery, yet in view of the power to grant execution after sale of mortgaged premises on foreclosure in equity, the court cannot authorize an action at law for the deficiency until an execution has been issued therefor under order of the court and returned unsatisfied in whole or in part.—Shields v. Riopelle, 63 Mich. 458.

¶ 763. Leave is properly granted to a creditor to bring an action at law against one of two indorsers upon a note secured by a mortgage, for a deficiency remaining after the foreclosure of the same, although no execution has issued for such deficiency where the maker of the note and the other indorser, who were alone made parties to the foreclosure proceedings, are shown to be insolvent.—Steele v. Kent Circuit Judge, 109 Mich. 647.

¶ 764. In assumpsit on the debt, to which it is pleaded that foreclosure pends and has been carried to decree and sale and leave to sue has not issued, whether a complainant in foreclosure should be permitted to proceed at the same time at law is not a question for a jury.—Goodrich v. White, 39 Mich. 489.

§ 181. ——Petition and order of leave.

Necessity for leave to maintain action at law pending or following foreclosure in equity, see Jud. Act, chap. XIX, § 25; Comp. L. 1915, § 12679.

¶ 765. Upon the foreclosure of a mortgage given to secure notes of a corporation, there was a deficiency, and the proceeds were applied to satisfy certain of the unindorsed notes. The defendant and the other directors had indorsed the other notes. Complainant, in a petition for leave to bring an action at law against the defendant to recover the deficiency, alleged that all the directors consented to the application of the proceeds of the foreclosure sale to the unindorsed notes. Held, upon demurrer, that this allegation was sufficiently definite to point out the defendant as consenting to said application.—Kalkaska County State & Savings Bank v. Kalkaska Canning Co., 154 Mich. 703.

¶ 766. Leave to proceed at law while foreclosure is pending in chancery ought not to be granted ex parte where defendant is within reach.—Goodrich v. White, 39 Mich. 489.

¶ 767. An order granting permission to sue at law for the deficiency arising upon the foreclosure of a mortgage has not expended its force, so as to preclude an action in another county, when suit is brought in one county and is afterwards discontinued, if there is in the order itself no limitation upon the right granted.—Steele v. Kent Circuit Judge, 109 Mich. 647.

¶ 768. An order granting leave to sue indorsers for deficiency, entered nunc pro tunc, is not objectionable, in that it deprives defendant of the right to plead the statute of limitations, when it appears that the suit was in fact commenced in time.—Steele v. Kent Circuit Judge, 109 Mich. 647.

§ 182. Equity suits to enforce personal liability.

¶ 769. There is no statutory authority for a chancery suit independent of foreclosure proceedings to recover against either the maker of a mortgage or against those who have assumed to pay it.—Kollen v. Sooy, 172 Mich. 214.

VII. REDEMPTION FROM SALE.

§ 183. In general.

Manner of redemption from statutory foreclosure, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14959.
Provision against sale on execution of equity of redemption where judgment was for mortgage debt, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, §§ 124-126; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12939-12941.

¶ 770. A bill in equity is not needed to enable a mortgagor to redeem from a foreclosure sale within the period allowed for redemption.—McHugh v. Wells, 39 Mich. 175.

¶ 771. Redemption from a statutory foreclosure cannot be conditioned on the payment of any allowances in the nature of fees beyond what are authorized by statute, and an attorney fee paid under protest on redeeming was allowed to be recovered back.—Vosburgh v. Lay, 45 Mich. 455.

¶ 772. An owner of the equity of redemption omitted from a foreclosure to which the first, second and third mortgagees were made defendants, but made a defendant on a foreclosure bill by a trustee who took title for the second mortgagee, cannot complain that he is not bound by the foreclosure and at the same time insist that it extinguished all the mortgages and left him bound to pay only the first and second in order to redeem.—Walsh v. Robinson, 135 Mich. 16.

§ 184. Persons entitled to redeem.

Subsequent mortgagees, see post § 185.
Grantees of mortgagor, see post § 186.
Right of dowress to equity of redemption, see Dower § 12.
Payment of mortgage by execution purchaser or redemption purchaser under execution on the equity of redemption, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, § 122; Comp. L. 1915, § 12937.

¶ 773. Any one who has any interest in mortgaged premises, or in any part of them, is entitled to redeem them from foreclosure, and he must redeem completely if at all.—Powers v. Golden Lumber Co., 43 Mich. 468.

¶ 774. Where a mortgage executed prior to the statute abolishing ejectment by mortgagees was assigned for the purpose of securing the assignor's debt, the right of the assignor to redeem stands upon the same footing as that of the mortgagor of real estate; it is not a mere chose in action.—Graydon v. Church, 7 Mich. 36.

¶ 775. Where the whereabouts of a mortgagor, who had been absent for two years from his home, was unknown, and where he had been reported as dead, his brother was held entitled, under the circumstances of the case, to redeem in his own name his land from a statutory foreclosure.—Squire v. Wright, 85 Mich. 76.

¶ 776. Where the assignee of two mortgage instalments has purchased the equity of redemption, he has the right to redeem from the mortgage lien of his assignor who still holds one instalment.—Jennings v. Moore, 83 Mich. 231.

¶ 777. A tenant in common of mortgaged land from whom the foreclosure has been purposely concealed may redeem; but he must not have been guilty of laches, nor have acquiesced by accepting his share of the surplus, and to make such redemption effectual he must pay to the purchaser the whole amount bid at the sale, with the interest (How. St., § 8507).—Norton v. Tharp, 53 Mich. 146.

¶ 778. A guardian has a right to redeem the lands of his ward from mortgage sale.—Marvin v. Schilling, 12 Mich. 356.

¶ 779. Where a debtor executed a bona fide mortgage on property of the value of $3,500, used as a homestead, to a sister, for $2,500, making the principal payable to his children and the interest to the sister for life, and conveyed the equity to a son, and where the mortgage was foreclosed, the creditors of the mortgagor had no right in redeeming from the foreclosure, to disregard the titles of the children, and acquire the property by paying the amount secured to the sister; and such creditors had no right to redeem at all as the deed to the son was valid as to such creditors.—Palmer v. Bray, 136 Mich. 85.

§ 185. ——Subsequent mortgagees.

¶ 780. A subsequent mortgagee may redeem a prior mortgage which has been foreclosed by advertisement.—Carter v. Lewis, 27 Mich. 241.

¶ 781. A subsequent mortgagee could, under R. S. 1838, redeem premises sold on the statutory foreclosure of a prior mortgage.—Kimmell v. Willard's Adm'rs, 1 D. 217.

¶ 782. Where there is an existing mortgage a subsequent mortgagee can be made to redeem against it or be barred of all rights under his mortgage.—Tower v. Divine, 37 Mich. 443.

§ 186. ——Grantees of mortgagor.

¶ 783. Pending the year allowed for redemption a mortgagor quitclaimed the land by deed which was not delivered because of the grantee's failure to perform, and then he quitclaimed to another. Held, that the latter had a right to redeem.—Dodge v. Kennedy, 93 Mich. 547.

¶ 784. A subsequent purchaser from the mortgagor whose deed, by reason of his having had notice of the mortgage, is subject to the lien, is entitled to redeem, and the question of the bona fides of his purchase cannot be raised by the mortgagee.—Stone v. Welling, 14 Mich. 514.

§ 187. Time for redemption; extensions.

Extension of time for redemption by delay in filing sheriff's deed, see ante ¶ 186.
Validity of decree limiting time allowed for redemption, see ante ¶ 377.
Effect on time for redemption of erroneous indorsement on deed as to redemption period, see ante ¶¶ 174, 175.
Extension of time for redemption until foreclosure by lapse of time or in equity where statutory foreclosure notice insufficient, see ante ¶ 619.
Shortening time for redemption as impairing contract, see Constitutional Law § 182.

Application to pending foreclosures for statute changing time for redemption, see Statutes, VI.
Time for redemption from statutory foreclosure, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14959.
Statutory provision for period of redemption from equity foreclosure, see Jud. Act, chap. XIX, § 23; Comp. L. 1915, § 12677.

¶ 785. Pub. Acts, 1899, No. 200, requiring that lands should not be sold within six months after filing a bill in foreclosure and giving the mortgagor that time to redeem abrogates the earlier court decisions as to what was a reasonable time within which to redeem.—Redfield v. Reid, 148 Mich. 545.

¶ 786. The time within which to redeem a mortgage from a foreclosure sale fixed by Pub. Acts 1899, §§ 111, 118, is "six months from the time of such sale" and the time of sale does not mean "time when the sale is confirmed."—Trombley v. Klersy, 147 Mich. 370.

¶ 787. An offer to a mortgagor to give him time within which to redeem the whole or a part of the premises from statutory foreclosure cannot avail to correct illegalities or to preclude the mortgagor from taking advantage of them and demanding redemption, and a limit of ten days proposed for redemption is inequitable.—Grover v. Fox, 36 Mich. 461.

¶ 788. Where, at the time of the filing of a bill attacking a mortgage foreclosure sale by advertisement, the period of redemption has not expired, and, when later it is about to expire, it is extended by stipulation until 30 days after the decree in the trial court, the right to redeem will expire at the end of the 30-day period unless the mortgage sale is set aside as void.—Flax v. Mutual Bldg. & Loan Ass'n of Bay County, 198 Mich. 676.

§ 188. Procedure and method of payment.

Tendering or depositing amount due to redeem on applying to court to set aside foreclosure, see ante § 153.
Notice to purchaser of payment on redemption from foreclosure by advertisement, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14967.
Procedure and method of payment on redemption from statutory foreclosure and release from mortgage, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 14959, 14960.
Method of payment on redemption from equity redemption, see Jud. Act, chap. XIX, § 23; Comp. L. 1915, § 12677.

¶ 789. Payment of principal with interest at the rate recited in the sheriff's deed as that borne by the mortgage is sufficient to effect redemption.—Dodge v. Kennedy, 93 Mich. 547.

¶ 790. The statute of 1840 for the foreclosure of mortgages (Laws of 1840, p. 145) required redemption moneys to be paid to the register of deeds, and to no other person; and it was his duty, upon such payment, to destroy the deed, and pay over the money to the purchaser, his heirs or assigns.—Woodbury v. Lewis, W. 256.

¶ 791. The register of deeds has no right to receive anything but money in redemption of property sold. His powers are limited to receiving the money and destroying the deed. He is a special agent for these purposes only, and his acts are not binding on the purchaser when he exceeds or departs from his authority without the assent of the purchaser.—Woodbury v. Lewis, W. 256.

¶ 792. Although the register of deeds is allowed to receive nothing but money, yet it is a sufficient payment, in redemption of a foreclosed mortgage, to give him, at his request and in good faith, a check for the amount required, keeping the money to meet it in the bank until called for.—Carter v. Lewis, 27 Mich. 241.

§ 189. Rights of redemptioner and effect of redemption.

Right to redeem each parcel separately, see also ante ¶ 660.
Right of redemptioner to receive certificate of payment on payment or tender with damages for refusal, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14961.
Discharge of mortgage by certificate of mortgagee or by certificate of register in chancery that foreclosure decree satisfied, see Comp. L. 1915, § 11743.

¶ 793. A sale on statutory foreclosure satisfies the mortgage debt and releases the personal obligation to the extent of its proceeds; but a subsequent incumbrancer who redeems from it thereby obtains such an interest in the land as will protect him, and later incumbrancers who are also benefited must not only repay the redemption money, but must pay his mortgage; and as the two claims are distinct, the liens therefor are not merged, and the payment of one cannot release the other.—Powers v. Golden Lumber Co., 43 Mich. 468.

¶ 794. One who holds a mortgage under a fraudulent assignment is entitled, if he has redeemed upon the foreclosure of a prior mortgage, to receive from the owner of the land the amount of the redemption, but he cannot have interest thereon where his concealment of the fact of such assignment to himself and his refusal to give it up have delayed settlement and prevented the owner from redeeming.—Wallace v. McBride, 70 Mich. 596.

¶ 795. Under Comp. L. 1871, § 6922, providing that in case of redemption after foreclosure sale the deed given on the sale shall be void and of no effect, a holder of another mortgage, who redeems, during the period of redemption, for his own protection, after a sale had been had upon foreclosure proceedings, instituted by advertisement, is in the position of an assignee.—Dodge v. Fuller, 48 Fed. 847.

¶ 795a. Redemption by a guardian from foreclosure of the lands of the infant with money volunteered by a stranger for the purpose is presumably in the interest of the owner, who may insist on the rights derived therefrom.—Tong v. Marvin, 26 Mich. 35.

¶ 796. When a mortgagor redeems, it should always be construed as payment, he being personally liable for the debt. But when his vendee redeems, who is not personally liable, and there is an intervening mortgage between the one redeemed by him and his equity of redemption, the same rule should prevail as in case of redemption by a subsequent mortgagee.—Johnson v. Johnson, W. 331; Webb v. Williams, W. 544.

§ 190. Reimbursement for expenditures on redeemed premises.

Right of purchaser to reimbursement for taxes and insurance paid during period of redemption, see also ante ¶ 564.

¶ 797. A mortgagor in redeeming from foreclosure must reimburse the mortgagee for money paid out by the latter for taxes, repairs, and insurance, where the mortgage contract so provides.—Prybeski v. Piechoviak, 170 Mich. 572.

¶ 798. The purchaser of property sold on foreclosure of mortgage will be allowed a reasonable expenditure upon redemption thereof for such repairs made by him as were in good faith and necessary.—Cusick v. Spencer, 149 Mich. 434.

§ 191. Subrogation and lien for redemption money.

¶ 799. A lien of a junior mortgagee for redemption money paid on foreclosure of the first mortgage is an independent equity, and not merely appurtenant to the mortgage held by the mortgagee who has redeemed; so that proceedings to enforce the lien may be taken before such mortgage matures, and the discharge of the junior mortgage does not cut off the lien.—Powers v. Golden Lumber Co., 43 Mich. 468.

¶ 800. Before the period of redemption from a statutory foreclosure expired, A., the mortgagor, died. His widow sold the land to B. by warranty deed, in consideration of B.'s paying her $25 and what was due on the mortgage. B. redeemed, and A.'s heirs afterwards brought ejectment against him. Held, that B. had a lien on the land for the redemption money paid by him, with interest, less the use and occupation of the premises over and above improvements.—Webb v. Williams, W. 544.

§ 192. Properties salable without redemption.

¶ 801. Where a public electric lighting plant is being operated at a loss by a receiver appointed in a foreclosure proceeding, the court may order a sale of the entire property and franchise without the right to make redemption.—Webber v. Genesee Circuit Judge, 184 Mich. 112.

¶ 1. A foreign corporation is not a citizen of a state creating it except in a qualified sense; and it can do no business in any other state except on such conditions as the latter sees fit to impose.—Home Ins. Co. v. Davis, 29 Mich. 238.

¶ 2. Foreign corporations organized to do business not open to citizens generally cannot carry on business in Michigan unless express or implied permission is given them to do so.—People v. Howard, 50 Mich. 239.

¶ 3. A corporation is a creature of the sovereign will, and when created by one sovereignty it can operate within another's limits only by the latter's express permission, or by permission implied from principles of comity, but such permission does not make it any the less a foreign corporation.—State Treasurer v. Auditor General, 46 Mich. 224.

¶ 4. A foreign corporation doing business in Michigan in conformity to the laws of the state is not an organization of this state, within the meaning of How. St., § 8960d3, forbidding corporations organized in this state from taking any name so closely resembling the name used by "any other organization of this state" as to mislead the public as to its identity.—People ex rel. Home Life Ins. Co. v. Home Life Assur. Co., 111 Mich. 405.

¶ 5. Corporations of one state have no right to exercise their franchises in another state except upon the assent of such other state given on such terms as the legislature thereof may impose.—People ex rel. Glens Falls Ins. Co. v. Jackson Circuit Judge, 21 Mich. 577; Thompson v. Waters, 25 Mich. 214; Home Ins. Co. v. Davis, 29 Mich. 238; American Ins. Co. of Chicago v. Stoy, 41 Mich. 385; People v. Howard, 50 Mich. 239; Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Raymond, 70 Mich. 485.

¶ 6. Corporations of one state have no right to exercise their franchises in another state except upon the assent of such other state, and upon such terms as may be imposed by its legislature.—Rensenhouse v. Seeley, 72 Mich. 603; First Nat. Bank v. Burch, 80 Mich. 242; Shafer Iron Co. v. Iron Circuit Judge, 88 Mich. 464.

¶ 7. Corporations can be admitted to do business in states other than those where created, only upon such terms as such other states may see fit to impose.—Pollock v. German Fire Ins. Co., 132 Mich. 225.

¶ 8. States may impose conditions upon the right of foreign corporations to do business within their limits, so long as their effect is not to obstruct or restrain commerce among the states.—Coit & Co. v. Sutton, 102 Mich. 324.

¶ 9. It is competent for a state to prescribe the terms upon which a foreign corporation may enter and transact business within the state.—Oakland Sugar Mill Co. v. Fred W. Wolf Co., 118 Fed. 239.

¶ 10. A state may prohibit foreign insurance companies from doing business within its limits, or, in allowing them to do so, may impose such conditions as it pleases.—Swing v. Weston Lumber Co., 205 U. S. 275, 51 L. ed. 799, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 497.

§ 3. ——Public service corporations.

¶ 11. A Wisconsin corporation furnishing heat, light, etc., which has secured permission from the Railroad Commission of Wisconsin to issue stock, is not entitled to receive from the Secretary of State of Michigan a certificate of authority to carry on business at Michigan until it has obtained from the Michigan Railroad Commission an order authorizing the issue of stock as required by Act No. 144, Public Acts of 1911, § 1, as amended by Act No. 177, Public Acts of 1911.—Peninsular Power Co. v. Secretary of State, 169 Mich. 595.

§ 4. ——Permissive or enabling acts.

¶ 12. How. St., § 4161d6, being section 37 of the act relating to the incorporation of domestic manufacturing and mercantile corporations, which provides that foreign corporations organized for any of the purposes contemplated by said act, upon recording copies of their articles of association and appointing a resident agent for service of process, may carry on business in this state, and shall enjoy all the rights and privileges, and be subject to all the restrictions and liabilities, of corporations existing under said act, does not exclude foreign corporations from doing business within this state until they have complied with such conditions, or invalidate contracts made by them, but, rather, prescribes the terms upon which such corporations, if they so desire, may become entitled to the benefits conferred by the act upon domestic corporations of similar character.—People v. Hawkins, 106 Mich. 479.

§ 5. ——Conditions obnoxious to Federal Constitution and laws.

Equal protection of the laws, see Constitutional Law § 224.

Privileges and immunities of citizens, effect of laws to abridge, see Constitutional Law § 230.

¶ 13. A condition that a foreign corporation doing business in the state shall submit itself to the jurisdiction of the state courts is lawful, and precludes the right of transferring causes from a state to a federal court. People ex rel. Glens Falls Ins. Co. v. Jackson Circuit Judge, 21 Mich. 577; Home Ins. Co. v. Davis, 29 Mich. 238; Contra, Home Ins. Co. of New York v. Morse, 20 Wall. (87 U. S.) 445, 22 L. ed. 365.

Comity as to holding realty, see post § 21.
Comity as to contracts, see post § 22.
General doctrine of comity, see Conflict of Laws, I.
Law governing foreign corporations, see Conflict of Laws § 35.

¶ 14. The recognition of the existence of a corporation by states other than the state creating it, and enforcement of its contract made therein, depend upon the comity of those states, which comity is never extended where the existence of the corporation, or the exercise of its powers, is prejudicial to their interests or repugnant to their policy. —First Nat. Bank v. Burch, 80 Mich. 242.

§ 7. Submission and subjection to laws of state.

Submission to jurisdiction by voluntary appearance, see post § 25.

¶ 15. An insurance corporation which voluntarily does business in a foreign state voluntarily submits itself to become amenable to the laws of such state, although it neglects or refuses to domesticate there with authority to openly do business on a par with home insurance companies.—Cox v. Railway Conductors' Co-operative Protective Ass'n, 194 Mich. 213.

¶ 16. Where a foreign corporation is doing business in a state with the consent of the state, it is subject to such changes as may from time to time be made in the law of the state touching the service of process upon it.—Daniels v. Detroit, G. H. & M. Ry. Co., 163 Mich. 468.

¶ 17. If a state permits a foreign corporation to do business within her limits, and at the same time provides that in suits against it for business there done, process shall be served upon its agents, the provision is to be deemed a condition of the permission; and corporations that subsequently do business in the state are to be deemed to assent to such condition as fully as though they had specially authorized their agents to receive service of process.—St. Clair v. Cox, 106 U. S. 350, 27 L. ed. 222, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 354.

§ 8. Designation of agents for service.

Effect of requirement on jurisdiction of the courts, see post § 25.
Requirements of the statute as to designation, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 9063, 9072.

¶ 18. Act No. 321, Pub. Acts 1907, relates only to liquor dealers' bonds, and does not repeal section 5198, 2 Comp. Laws 1897, which requires foreign corporations to appoint an attorney in Michigan for the service of process.—People ex rel. Wipfler v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland, 163 Mich. 94.

§ 9. License and franchise fees.

Taxation of foreign corporations and stocks or shares in them, see Taxes.
Right to question constitutionality of licensing law after paying license, see Constitutional Law § 29.
Franchise fee for admission, see Comp. L. 1915, § 9065.
Fee on increase of capital stock or increase in proportion of capital employed in Michigan, see Comp. L. 1915, § 9067.

¶ 19. Where a foreign corporation not only sells its products here through itinerant agents, but comes within the state and asks to have its articles filed here and to be put on the same footing with home corporations, it must pay the franchise fee that a domestic corporation must pay.—Moline Plow Co. v. Wilkinson, 105 Mich. 57.

¶ 20. Pub. Acts 1893, No. 79, subjecting foreign corporations theretofore authorized to do business in this state that had not filed or recorded their articles under the laws of this state prior to the passage of the act of 1893, to the payment of a specified franchise fee upon every increase of their capital stock, does not apply to an increase of stock made prior to the passage of the act, although the certificate thereof was not filed with the secretary of state until after the act took effect; and although in case of a domestic corporation the increase would not take effect until the certificate thereof was received by the secretary of state (How. St., § 4161a1, subd. 4).—Warren-Scharf Co. v. Secretary of State, 115 Mich. 234.

ration which is required by law to file articles of association with the secretary of state and every foreign corporation which shall be permitted to transact business in the state which shall not, prior to the passage of the act, have filed or recorded its articles of association under the laws of the state, and been thereby authorized to do business therein, shall pay to the secretary of state a certain franchise fee, and that all contracts made in the state after a certain date by any corporation which has not first complied with the act, shall be wholly void, applies not only to such foreign corporations as actually file and record their charters but to all foreign corporations carrying on or transacting business in the state, whether they choose to avail themselves of the right of registration or not.—Oakland Sugar Mill Co. v. Fred W. Wolf Co., 118 Fed. 239.

Statutory disability to contract until compliance and without certificate unrevoked, see Comp. L. 1915, § 9068.

¶ 22. The failure of a foreign corporation to comply with Comp. Laws 1915, § 9068, providing that no foreign corporation, subject to the provisions of the act, shall be capable of making a valid contract in the state until it shall have fully complied with the requirements of the act and at the same time holds an unrevoked certificate to that effect from the secretary of state, invalidates all contracts.—Flint v. Le Heup, 199 Mich. 41.

¶ 23. Where a foreign corporation does business in Michigan of a purely local nature, without complying with Act No. 206, Pub. Acts 1901, as amended by Act No. 34, Pub. Acts 1903, it cannot recover on a contract relating to that business.—Imperial Curtain Co. v. Jacob, 163 Mich. 72.

¶ 24. The contracts of a foreign corporation failing to comply with the Michigan statute governing its admission to do business cannot be enforced by it until it has satisfied the statute; but such contracts are not void.—Kuennan v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co., 159 Mich. 122.

¶ 25. A contract made in this state by a foreign corporation doing business here which corporation has not paid a franchise fee as required by Pub. Acts 1893, No. 79, is void.—Rough v. Breitung, 117 Mich. 48.

§ 11. ——On collateral and related contracts.

¶ 26. A foreign corporation not admitted to do business in Michigan contracted to build a public work with a Michigan municipality. Defendant surety company went on its statutory bond given to protect material men. Held, the defendant was liable to a material man despite the failure of the contracting corporation to be admitted.—Kuennan v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co., 159 Mich. 122.

§ 12. ——On foreign contracts.

What contracts are foreign, see post § 18.

¶ 27. Act No. 34, Pub. Acts 1903, providing that no foreign corporation shall, without compliance with its provisions, maintain an action in Michigan upon any contract made in Michigan does not prevent such corporation from enforcing in the Michigan courts a contract made in Pennsylvania.—Pittsburgh Coal Co. v. Northy, 158 Mich. 530.

¶ 28. A contract made by a foreign corporation elsewhere than in the state of Michigan is valid although it is to be performed in the state, within the provisions of Pub. Acts 1891, chap. 182, § 1, as amended by Pub. Acts 1893, chap. 79, § 1, How. St., 2nd ed., § 9617, requiring every foreign corporation, permitted to transact business within the state, and not having filed articles of association under its laws, to pay a certain franchise fee on its capital stock and providing that all contracts made in the state after Jan. 1, 1894, by any corporation that has not first complied with the provisions of the act, shall be wholly void.—Holder v. Aultman, Miller & Co., 169 U. S. 81, 42 L. ed. 669, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 269, aff'g 68 Fed. 467.

§ 13. ——Contracts of de facto or defective corporation.

¶ 29. There can be no recovery on a contract of sale of property by individuals on the theory that a nominal corporate party was not legally organized, where it was duly incorporated in another state and had its officers and carried on its business as a corporation, but had not paid the franchise fee to entitle it to enforce its contracts or do business within the state; such an omission makes the contract void but does not affect the validity of the incorporation.—Rough v. Breitung, 117 Mich. 48.

§ 14. ——Validation of contracts by subsequent repeal or compliance.

¶ 30. An Illinois corporation sold goods in Michigan without complying with Act No. 34, Pub. Acts 1903, which provided that a foreign corporation should have no remedy to enforce contracts made without compliance with its provision requiring the filing of articles in Michigan. The goods were sold before this statute was repealed. Held, that after its repeal said corporation could not recover for the sale of said goods.—Despres, Bridges & Noel v. Zierleyn, 163 Mich. 399. (Bird, C. J., and Hooker and Brooks, JJ., dissenting.)

¶ 30a. A contract made by a foreign corporation which has not been authorized to do business in this state is not void under Pub. Acts 1901, No. 206 and such a contract may be enforced by suit after the corporation has filed or recorded a certified copy of its charter or articles of association.—Hastings Industrial Co. v. Moran, 143 Mich. 679.

What constitutes interstate commerce within statutory exceptions, see Commerce §§ 4, 12.

Interstate sale as barring defense of want of admission and license, see Commerce § 4.

¶ 31. As long as the business of a foreign corporation is limited to acts of interstate commerce and it does not establish a local agency within the state to represent it in the sale of its goods, wares, and merchandise, it is not amenable to the laws of this state requiring foreign corporations, as a condition of transacting business in the state, to file a copy of its charter or articles of incorporation within the state.—Standard Fashion Co. v. Cummings, 187 Mich. 196.

¶ 32. In an action by a foreign corporation not licensed to do business within the state to recover for the purchase price of a ventilating system, which, according to the contract, was to be installed by the seller, evidence held insufficient to show that the apparatus had such intrinsic or peculiar quality or inherent complexity as made it necessary for the manufacturer to agree to install it in order to effect sales generally, so that the contract was not within the exception in § 8 of Act 310, Pub. Acts, 1907, as amended, How. 2nd Ed., § 9654, that the provisions of the act providing as to licensing of foreign corporations as a prerequisite to doing business within the state should not be construed as prohibiting any sale of goods or merchandise which would be protected by interstate commerce.—B. F. Sturtevant Co. v. Adolph Leitelt Ironworks, 196 Mich. 552.

¶ 33. An order not subject to countermand or cancellation, sent from this state to another state for books to be delivered in this state, which was subsequently done, payment to be made in this state, is within section 6, Act No. 206, Pub. Acts 1901, providing that section 1 of the same Act, requiring foreign corporations to file their charter, appoint an agent, etc., shall not be applicable to contracts protected by the rights of interstate commerce.—Fifth Ave. Library Society v. Hastie, 155 Mich. 56.

¶ 34. Because of the operation of the interstate commerce law, Laws 1893, Act No. 79, requiring payment of a franchise fee, must be held not to apply to a foreign corporation the business of which in Michigan consists merely of selling through itinerant agents and delivering commodities manufactured outside of the state.—Coit & Co. v. Sutton, 102 Mich. 324; Moline Plow Co. v. Wilkinson, 105 Mich. 57; M. I. Wilcox Cordage & Supply Co. v. Mosher, 114 Mich. 64.

¶ 35. Although a foreign corporation may not have complied with Act No. 34, Pub. Acts 1903, or Act No. 310, Pub. Acts 1907, requiring it to file articles before doing business in Michigan, it may recover for goods ordered by mail and shipped from Chicago into Michigan.—Despres, Bridges & Noel v. Zierleyn, 163 Mich. 399.

¶ 36. Comp. L. 1897, § 8754; How. St., 2nd Ed., § 9617, requiring the payment of a franchise tax by all corporations, including foreign corporations, as a condition to the lawful transaction of business in the state, and making contracts void if the statute is not complied with, does not apply to foreign corporations engaged in purely interstate commerce.—Oakland Sugar Mill Co. v. Fred W. Wolf Co., 118 Fed. 239.

¶ 37. A contract made in the state between a Michigan corporation and a foreign corporation for the sale of automobile wheels throughout the United States on commission, upon the making of which the foreign corporation establishes an office in the state, from which it carries on its business of securing orders from the entire country for the sale of wheels, without procuring a certificate of authority to do business in the state, constitutes interstate commerce and hence is not within the prohibition of Comp. L. 1915, § 9063, providing that it shall be unlawful for any corporation organized under the laws of another state to carry on its business in the state until it shall have procured from the secretary of state a certificate of authority, and requiring certain prerequisites to the issuance of such certificate and Comp. L. 1915, § 9068, providing that no foreign corporation, subject to the provisions of the Act, shall be capable of making a valid contract in the state until it shall have complied with the requirements of the Act and Comp. L. 1915, § 9070, providing that the Act shall not be construed "to prohibit any sale of goods or merchandise which would be protected by the rights of interstate commerce."—American Distributing Co. v. Hayes Wheel Co., 250 Fed. 109.

¶ 38. A foreign corporation organized for the purpose of establishing and maintaining a summer resort in a foreign country is engaged in business in the state where it has established an office and agency in a city in the state, with its fiscal agent and secretary transacting its business in such city, where its executive officers and nearly all of its resident directors reside and meetings of its stockholders and directors are held, and its stock book is kept and certificates are issued by its secretary.—Flint v. Le Heup, 199 Mich. 41.

¶ 39. Where a foreign corporation which had not filed its articles of association with the secretary of state until after the contract was made, had entered into a contract to construct and equip a canning factory in this state according to certain plans, specifications, terms, and conditions set out and began the construction thereof immediately thereafter, and all of the machinery and equipment was shipped into this state from other states, and no part of the contract values were furnished within the state, except the construction of the foundation and building and the placing of machinery amounting to about 30 per cent of the contract price, and at no time prior to the completion of the building did the corporation have an office, warehouse or general agent in this state, such contract is not one relating to matters of interstate commerce and is not therefore exempt from the operation of the various statutes in this state relating to the requirements of a franchise tax from foreign corporations, and the statute providing terms upon which a foreign corporation may maintain suits in our courts.—Hastings Industrial Co. v. Moran, 143 Mich. 679.

¶ 40. Where a foreign corporation agrees to install a new elevator within the state, and to repair an existing elevator for a lump price, such agreement constitutes doing business within the state within the provisions of Pub. Acts 1903, Act No. 34, forbidding any foreign corporation to do business in the state unless it shall first have filed and recorded with the secretary of state a certified copy of its charter.—Haughton Elevator & Machine Co. v. Detroit Candy Co., 156 Mich. 25.

¶ 41. An Illinois corporation sent its salesmen into Michigan, who carried goods with them and sold them to buyers. Held, such sales were in violation of Act No. 34, Pub. Acts 1903, requiring foreign corporations to file articles, and said corporation could not recover for them.—Despres, Bridges & Noel v. Zierleyn, 163 Mich. 399.

¶ 42. A contract by which a foreign corporation does business through a local agent, is not an agreement relative to interstate commerce where it does not amount to a sale of manufactured articles, nor does it constitute merely an agreement to sell.—Neyens v. Worthington, 150 Mich. 580.

¶ 43. A contract by a foreign corporation with a resident, by which the resident is given exclusive rights as to agency for the foreign corporation, and is given authority to make contracts for other agencies, the relation to continue over a term of fifteen years, constitutes a carrying on of business within the state.—Neyens v. Worthington, 150 Mich. 580.

¶ 44. Plaintiff, a foreign corporation, contracted to ship electric lamps from Pennsylvania to defendant in Michigan. The contract provided for the maintenance for an indefinite time in Michigan of an agency of the plaintiff, for the purpose of examining, repairing, and replacing the goods sold to defendant. Defendant further agreed to furnish certain solicitors to plaintiff to aid in introducing the lamps. Held, the business involved in the contract was not interstate commerce so as to relieve plaintiff from the necessity of complying with Act No. 310, Pub. Acts 1907, governing the admission of foreign corporations to do business, and having failed so to comply plaintiff could not recover on the contract for goods sold.—Nernst Lamp Co. v. Conrad, 165 Mich. 604.

¶ 45. A foreign corporation which ships goods to an agent within the state to be stored by him until sold, is engaged in doing business within the state within the meaning of Act No. 310, Pub. Acts 1907, § 9647 et seq., How. St., 2nd ed., requiring a certificate of authority from the state in order to permit a foreign corporation to do business therein.—E. A. Lange Medical Co. v. Brace, 186 Mich. 453.

¶ 46. A contract guarantying payment for goods shipped by a foreign corporation to an agent within the state to be stored by him until sold, is void under § 6 of Act No. 310,

Pub. Acts 1907, § 9652, How. St., 2nd ed., where the corporation failed to obtain a certificate of authority from the state to do business therein.—E. A. Lange Medical Co. v. Brace, 186 Mich. 453.

§ 17. ——Single and discontinuous acts and contracts.

Burden of proof as to character of the contract, see post ¶ 96.

¶ 47. A foreign corporation is not engaged in doing business within the state, so as to require the filing of the certificate of authority to do business in the state specified by Pub. Acts 1907, No. 310, How. St., 2nd ed., § 9647 et seq., where, as an act of interstate commerce, it leased a steam shovel to a person living within the state, and, upon his default, sold it to another person under a contract completed without the state by which the seller agreed to immediately ship the shovel to another point within the state, give it a working test for 10 days under supervision of the seller's representatives and repair any defects disclosed in the shovel by the test and furnish any necessary new parts to put the shovel in first class working order, which was done, especially as the transaction was a single one, and evidenced no intention of carrying on business within the state.—Vulcan Steam Shovel Co. v. Flanders, 205 Fed. 102.

¶ 48. A solitary act of business by a foreign corporation does not constitute doing business within the state within Comp. L. 1897, § 8754, How. St., 2nd ed., § 9617, requiring the payment of a franchise fee of all corporations doing business in the state and making all contracts void if the act is not complied with.—Oakland Sugar Mill Co. v. Fred W. Wolf Co., 18 Fed. 239.

¶ 49. Comp. L. 1897, § 8574, invalidating "all contracts made in this state" by any foreign corporation that has not filed articles and paid a franchise tax, does not avoid a contract which, though signed by a general agent in this state, where it is to be performed, stipulates that it is not to be valid until approved at a certain city in another state, where, later, it is approved.—Holder v. Aultman, Miller & Co., 169 U. S. 81, 42 L. ed. 669, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 269, aff'g 68 Fed. 467.

¶ 50. The selling agent of a New Jersey corporation signed in Michigan a contract to sell coal, but had no authority to make a binding contract of that kind. The contract was approved by the proper officer of the corporation in Pennsylvania. Held, the contract was made in Pennsylvania and not in Michigan.—Pittsburgh Coal Co. v. Northy, 158 Mich. 530.

¶ 51. A foreign insurance company which had not been authorized to do business in this state as provided for in Comp. L. 1897, § 5157, could not maintain an action in this state to recover an assessment levied under a policy issued by one of its agents in another state upon the request of an insurance broker in this state who was unable to place all the insurance applied for with the companies he represented. (Comp. L. 1897, § 10467.)—Swing v. Weston Lumber Co., 140 Mich. 344. Writ of error dismissed in 205 U. S. 275, 51 L. ed. 799, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 497.

¶ 52. A foreign insurance company cannot enforce the liability of an insured for assessments under the policy on property in the state, though the policy was issued in Ohio on application mailed to Illinois, where the insurer has never complied with the provisions of Comp. L. 1897, §§ 5157, 5162, on which it could be admitted to do insurance business within this state; since by section 10467, it is provided that "when by the laws of this state any act is forbidden to be done by any corporation * * * without express authority by law, and such act shall have been done by a foreign corporation, it shall not be authorized to maintain any action founded on such act, or upon any liability or obligation * * * in consideration of such act," and since sections 5157, 5162 apply alike to domestic and foreign insurers.—Swing v. Cameron, 145 Mich. 175.

¶ 53. A contract between a foreign corporation and a commission agent located in the state for the sale of machinery, which is signed at the place of residence of the agent by such agent and the local agent of the company and which is subsequently signed by the company's manager in the state and approved at the head office in another state pursuant to a stipulation in the contract requiring the countersignature of such manager and the approval of the contract at the head office, as a condition to its validity, is a foreign contract and is not within the provisions of Pub. Acts 1891, chap. 182, § 1, as amended by Pub. Acts 1893, chap. 79, § 1, How. St., 2nd ed., § 9617, making contracts, made within the state by a foreign corporation which has not complied with its provisions as to payment of a franchise fee on its capital stock, void.—Holder v. Aultman, Miller & Co., 169 U. S. 81, 42 L. ed. 69, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 269, aff'g 68 Fed. 467.

¶ 54. A foreign insurance company is estopped from defending against its contract on the ground of want of authority to do business here.—Clay Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Huron Salt & Lumber Mfg. Co., 31 Mich. 346.

¶ 55. A foreign corporation failing to comply with the Michigan statute governing its admission to do business in Michigan, may not set up the invalidity of its contracts on such ground.—Kuennan v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co., 159 Mich. 122.

¶ 56. A foreign corporation which does a local business in the State of Michigan without complying with Act No. 206, Pub. Acts 1901, as amended by Act No. 34, Pub. Acts 1903, Act No. 310, Pub. Acts 1907, and Act No. 3, Ex. Sess. 1907, is estopped to set up the unlawfulness of its transactions, and is held to assent to the legal remedies prescribed for service on its resident agents.—Showen v. J. L. Owens Co., 158 Mich. 321.

¶ 58. The principle that a court will never carry into effect a contract made in violation of a positive law applies to a contract made by a foreign corporation in violation of its charter.—Orr v. Lacey, 2 D. 230.

¶ 59. Comity to a foreign corporation cannot extend to the point of granting it privileges which its charter does not permit it to exercise; and in applying for privileges it must show that it has power to exercise them.—Diamond Match Co. v. Powers, 51 Mich. 145.

¶ 60. A railroad corporation owing its existence and authority only to the laws of an individual state has no power or capacities which are not, expressly or by implication, given by the laws of that state, and none which would not be recognized and sustained by its courts.—Thompson v. Waters, 25 Mich. 214.

¶ 61. A foreign private corporation cannot establish a liability upon any act done by it as a consideration for a benefit to it, if it is an act which domestic corporations cannot do without authority of law (Comp. L. 1871, § 6543, How. St., § 8136), such as its removal from place to place, or the establishment of branches, or the acquisition of real estate, or going into business outside of the scope of its granted powers.—Chapman v. Colby, 47 Mich. 46.

¶ 62. Section 8587, 3 Comp. Laws 1897; Pub. Acts 1895, No. 270, places foreign corporations complying with its provisions, and thereby acquiring authority to transact business within the state, upon the same footing as domestic corporations, with the same rights to prosecute and defend actions in the courts of the state, to enforce their contracts, and to use the remedies authorized by law, as are possessed by domestic corporations.—Stack v. Detour Lumber & Cedar Co., 151 Mich. 21.

§ 21. Acquiring, holding and selling realty.

Powers of corporations in general, see Corporations, XIII.

¶ 63. The strictly legal existence by force of obligatory law of a corporation is confined to the state which created it and endowed it with its powers, capacities and rights, which it can only exercise in another state by the permission, express or implied, of the legislative power thereof; but the mere right of the corporation to purchase and sell property, not being in its nature strictly a franchise, will be recognized and protected in another state, subject only to the qualification that the enjoyment and exercise of such right shall not be contrary to the laws or settled policy of the latter state, or prejudicial to its interests or those of its citizens.—Thompson v. Waters, 25 Mich. 214.

¶ 64. The courts of any state are bound, unless the constitution or the legislature has, either expressly or by implication, declared a contrary rule, to recognize the right of corporations of another state to realize and collect debts due to them, by receiving a conveyance of lands in the former state.—Thompson v. Waters, 25 Mich. 214.

¶ 65. In regard to the taking, holding or conveying of lands in this state by a corporation created in another state, the legislature has adopted no policy and enacted no statute modifying the generally received doctrines of comity. The several separate acts of incorporation in Michigan are too various and dissimilar in this regard to throw any light upon the question of the state or legislative policy.—Thompson v. Waters, 25 Mich. 214.

¶ 66. Where a corporation is created in one state with powers, so far as that state can give them, of taking, holding and conveying lands in another state where the legislature have not expressly or by implication forbidden it, an affirmative enabling act is not necessary to give them the capacity to take, hold and convey lands in the latter state; this capacity rests upon the same principles of comity as their capacity to make or enforce contracts, or to acquire, hold and convey personal property.—Thompson v. Waters, 25 Mich. 214.

¶ 67. Comp. L. 1857, § 4834 (How. St., § 8136), applies only to acts forbidden to any corporation, and puts foreign corporations upon the footing on which domestic corporations are put by those state laws only which apply generally to all the corporations in the state; and section 2149 (How. St., § 4866) only confirms such powers as any corporation then had or might thereafter have "by law"; it is merely declaratory of the corporation's common-law right to hold and convey lands wherever that right was not restrained by the legislature.—Thompson v. Waters, 25 Mich. 214.

¶ 68. The question whether a railroad company, organized under the laws of Indiana, is competent to take title to lands in Michigan, depends (1) upon the laws of Indiana, and (2) upon the laws of Michigan and the public policy indicated by its legislation. The statutes and judicial decisions of Indiana considered, and the conclusions reached that, so far as depends upon the laws of Indiana, such lands may be taken in payment of, or security for, debts due the corporation in Michigan.—Thompson v. Waters, 25 Mich. 214.

¶ 69. So far as state policy or comity is concerned there is no difference between the recognition of the equitable interest of a foreign corporation as cestui que trust, the legal title being vested in a trustee, and the recognition of its right to the legal estate, since it would ordinarily control the property in both cases. There is no distinction in this matter between railroad and other corporations, as those for insurance, banking, etc.—Thompson v. Waters, 25 Mich. 214.

¶ 71. A corporation organized under the laws of another state can make no contracts forbidden by the laws of that state to such corporations.—Supreme Lodge Knights of Honor v. Nairn, 60 Mich. 44.

¶ 72. A foreign corporation will not have the aid of our courts in enforcing a contract entered into in violation of its charter.—Orr v. Lacey, 2 D. 230.

¶ 73. Foreign corporations may sue each other in Michigan if both are doing business within the state and the cause of action accrued there. (Comp. L. 1881, Act. No. 256.)—Emerson, Talcott & Co. v. McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co., 51 Mich. 5.

¶ 74. The limitations upon the right of a foreign corporation to sue in the courts of this state are found in the limitations of the doctrine of comity and in the statutes regulative of the matter.—Seamans v. Temple Co., 105 Mich. 400.

¶ 75. A foreign corporation which sells goods here only through itinerant salesmen, and which, therefore, has not been compelled to file articles or to pay a franchise fee, is entitled to enforce against directors of a domestic corporation to which it has sold goods, the statutory liability for their wilful neglect to file an annual report.—Wilcox Cordage & Supply Co. v. Mosher, 114 Mich. 64.

¶ 76. The effect of the statutes regulating the transaction of local business in this state by foreign corporations is to make such corporations, as to such business, domestic corporations, organized under the act specified in the certificate of the secretary of state, and entitled to and subject to the same remedies as such corporations in the courts of this state.—Showen v. J. L. Owens Co., 158 Mich. 321.

¶ 77. An Illinois corporation admitted to do business in Michigan, is not deprived of the right to plead usury on foreclosure of a mortgage executed in Michigan, payable here, and covering lands here, because the interest statute of Illinois contains a provision that "No corporation shall hereafter interpose the defense of usury in any action."—Stack v. Detour Lumber & Cedar Co., 151 Mich. 21.

¶¶ 78, 79. Officers of a local branch, situated in Detroit, of a mutual benefit order the supreme "sitting" of which was an insolvent Indiana corporation, for which a receiver had been appointed in Indiana with an ancillary receiver appointed by the court here, held funds in their hands belonging to the supreme body, and were garnished in respect to such funds in a suit against the corporation. Upon an application for a mandamus to compel the circuit judge to punish such officers as for contempt in refusing to turn the funds over to such ancillary receiver, it was held that proceedings for contempt were not appropriate for the trial of the issues involving the title to the fund, or to determine the validity of the lien claimed by the garnishee.—Baldwin v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 101 Mich. 119.

¶ 80. Under 2 Comp. Laws 1897, § 5198, requiring foreign corporations to appoint an attorney in Michigan for the service of process, the jurisdiction of the courts is not affected.—People ex rel. Wipfler v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland, 163 Mich. 94.

¶ 81. The words "agent of such corporation within this State" in Comp. Laws 1871, §§ 6544, 6550, providing that in "suits commenced by attachment in favor of a resident of this State against any corporation created by or under the laws of any other State, government, or country, if a copy of such attachment, and of the inventory of the property attached, shall have been personally served on any officer, member, clerk or agent of such corporation within this State, the same proceedings shall be thereupon had, and with like effect, as in case of an attachment against a natural person, which shall have been returned served in like manner upon the defendant," do not authorize the service of a copy of the writ, as a summons, upon an agent of a foreign corporation unless the corporation be engaged in business in the State, and the agent be appointed to act there.—St. Clair v. Cox, 106 U. S. 350, 27 L. ed. 222, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 354.

¶ 82. Where a plaintiff is injured in Canada by a foreign corporation having an office in Michigan, he may secure service upon such corporation and bring his case in Michigan, under Act No. 3, Pub. Acts 1909.—Daniels v. Detroit, G. H. & M. Ry. Co., 163 Mich. 468.

¶ 83. The record must show that the corporation is doing business in the state and that the agent served was appointed to act there, or service of summons on an agent of a foreign corporation is insufficient to give a state court jurisdiction of the corporation.—Marshall v. R. M. Owen & Co., 171 Mich. 232.

¶ 84. Where a nonresident corporation appears voluntarily and consents to a stipulation extending the time within which it may plead, such extension is consistent only with a general appearance.—National Coal Co. v. Cincinnati Gas Coke, Coal & Mining Co., 168 Mich. 195.

¶ 85. In a suit in assumpsit by one nonresident corporation against another, defendant, by making a voluntary appearance and consenting to a stipulation extending the time within which it may plead, submits itself to the jurisdiction of the court, and this, although there has been and could be no valid service upon defendant compelling it to submit to such jurisdiction.—National Coal Co. v. Cincinnati Gas Coke, Coal & Mining Co., 168 Mich. 195.

§ 26. ——Attachment and garnishment process.

General law of attachment, including grounds for attachment against corporations, see Attachment.

General law of garnishment, see Garnishment.

Liability of corporations to be garnisheed, see Garnishment § 12.

Form of affidavit for garnishment of corporation, see Garnishment § 42.

Service of garnishment on corporation, see Garnishment § 51.

Examination of foreign corporate garnishee, see Garnishment § 70.

Attachment statutes, see Jud. Act, chap. XXVI, §§ 2, 43, chap. LXXV, § 1; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 13029, 13070, 14337.

Garnishment statutes, see Jud. Act, chap. XXVIII, §§ 4, 29, 30, 46, chap. LXXV, § 19, chap. LXXVI, §§ 30-35; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 13125, 13150, 13151, 13167, 14355, 14390-14395.

¶ 86. The language used in Milwaukee Bridge & Iron Works v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 73 Mich. 155, "our statutes nowhere provide for any service of a writ of garnishment upon a foreign corporation," is not applicable to a particular class of foreign corporations—e. g., foreign insurance companies—respecting which ample provisions for service are made.—German-American Ins. Co. v. Chippewa Circuit Judge, 105 Mich. 568.

¶ 87. Under the attachment statutes, 3 Comp. Laws 1897, § 10474 et seq., service of a writ upon the local agent of a foreign corporation doing business in Michigan gives jurisdiction in personam.—Showen v. J. L. Owens Co., 158 Mich. 321.

§ 27. Pleading and proof of corporate existence.

Of existence of domestic corporations, see Corporations §§ 15, 193.

Statutory requisites of proof of corporate existence, see Jud. Act, chap. XVII, § 47; Comp. L. 1915, § 12535.

¶ 88. A plaintiff foreign corporation need not allege its incorporation under any particular statute.—Imperial Curtain Co. v. Jacob, 163 Mich. 72.

¶ 89. The defense that the plaintiff is not authorized to prosecute in the courts of the state because of its noncompliance with the laws of the state may be made under a plea of the general issue and without special notice, in an action brought by the trustee of a foreign insurance company to recover an assessment on a policy of insurance covering property situate in the state.—Swing v. Cameron, 145 Mich. 175.

¶ 90. Testimony from information derived by the witness from plaintiffs in doing business for them, and from an examination of what purported to be their articles of association, that they are an incorporated company under the laws of another state, warrants a finding of corporate existence.—Locke v. Leonard Silk Co., 37 Mich. 479.

¶ 91. Proof of the law under which a foreign corporation exists is dispensed with by proof of dealings of the other party recognizing it as a corporation, unless the power of the corporation under its charter is involved in which case the charter or the statutes of the foreign state under which incorporation was had are essential.—Chapman v. Colby Brothers & Co., 47 Mich. 46.

¶ 92. Under section 10194, 3 Comp. Laws 1897, the fact that a plaintiff is doing business under a certain corporate name is prima facie evidence of its due incorporation.—Imperial Curtain Co. v. Jacob, 163 Mich. 72.

¶ 93. Section 10194, 3 Comp. Laws 1897, relating to mode of proof of incorporation by proof of doing business under certain name applies equally to foreign and domestic corporations.—Imperial Curtain Co. v. Jacob, 163 Mich. 72.

§ 28. ——Of compliance with statutes or exception therefrom.

Necessity of proof of charter, inability to take judicial notice, see also Evidence ¶ 171.

Necessity of notice of invalidity of contract with plea to action by foreign corporation, see Pleading, IX.

¶ 94. A foreign corporation suing in Michigan is not required to allege that it has complied with Act No. 34, Pub. Acts 1903, relating to admission of foreign corporation, but such compliance is presumed.—Pittsburgh Coal Co. v. Northy, 158 Mich. 530.

¶ 95. A foreign corporation which is not licensed to do business within the state and which contracts to sell and install superheaters need not allege in its declaration in an action for breach of a written contract of sale that the machinery was of such a complex character that the installation thereof by the seller is a necessary part of the contract.—Power Specialty Co. v. Michigan Power Co., 190 Mich. 699.

¶ 96. The burden of proof is upon a foreign corporation not licensed to do business in the state, which claims in an action for damages for breach of a written contract of sale that superheaters are of such a complex character that the installation thereof by the seller is a necessary part of the contract of sale, to establish such fact. —Power Specialty Co. v. Michigan Power Co., 190 Mich. 699.

¶ 97. Whether a corporation, which is suing on a contract, is a foreign corporation engaged in carrying on business in the state without complying with Comp. L. 1897, § 8754; How. St., 2nd ed., § 9617, requiring the payment of a franchise tax by all corporations, including foreign corporations, as a condition to the lawful transaction of business in the state, is a question of fact for the jury, under proper directions by the court, unless the facts bearing on the question are undisputed, and the inference from them so obvious as to leave no issue for the submission of the jury.—Oakland Sugar Mill Co. v. Fred W. Wolf Co., 118 Fed. 239.

IV. STOCK AND STOCKHOLDERS, AGENTS AND OFFICERS.

§ 29. In general.

Duty to designate agent for service, see ante § 8.

[Note. The internal rights and liabilities of corporate officers, agents, stockholders and members are usually not dependent on any foreign corporation law. The matter is therefore mainly found in Corporations, XVII, XXIV. For similar reasons the cases on agency for the corporation towards third persons are treated in Corporations, XVII.]

Statutory duty to keep stockholders list and transfer books within state, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 11345, 11346.

Liability for acting as agent of corporation not admitted to do business, see Comp. L. 1915, § 9069.

¶ 98. Act No. 310, Pub. Acts 1907, provides that with reference to foreign corporations the "secretary of state shall, in the certificate which he issues, state under what act such corporation is to carry on business in this state and such corporations shall * * * be subject to all the restrictions, requirements, and duties * * * imposed upon corporations organized under such act." Held, that where the secretary of state designates that a foreign corporation is organized under Act No. 232, Pub. Acts 1903, imposing personal liability on directors for failure to file the annual report, the statute must be construed strictly, being penal in nature, and impose liability on the corporation only and not the officers; hence the directors of such foreign corporation are not liable to such penalty.—Young v. Moore, 162 Mich. 60.

¶ 1. A record from the registry of deeds of a county in this state containing a certified copy of a will executed and probated in another state is admissible in evidence where it recites that a copy of the will and of the probate thereof duly authenticated were presented to the probate court here; that due notice of hearing was given by publication, and that said copy was duly admitted to record upon full proof.—Culbertson v. H. Witbeck Co., 127 U. S. 326, 32 L. ed. 134, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1136.

¶ 2. The transcript of a foreign action, in which the verified petition on file states that "plaintiff is a minor, nineteen years of age December 5, 1901," was not admissible in evidence in a suit in this state, in which the plaintiff is described as a minor, and filed January 30, 1904, at which the plaintiff named in the foreign suit would be over twenty-one years of age, even though the name of the plaintiff is the same in both suits; since there is a failure to identify the plaintiff described in the transcript as the plaintiff in the present suit.—Spiker v. American Relief Soc., 140 Mich. 225.

II. FAITH AND CREDIT; EFFECT AND CONCLUSIVENESS.

§ 3. Full faith and credit clause.

Effect and conclusiveness of the judgment, see post §§ 4-10.

Conflict of foreign and domestic judgments, see post § 11.

Terms of the constitutional provision, see U. S. Const. art. IV, § 1, in Comp. L. 1915, page 43.

¶ 3. But for the Federal Constitution, judgments of sister states would stand on the footing of foreign judgments.—Bonesteel v. Todd, 9 Mich. 371.

¶ 4. Taxation of stock in foreign corporations owned by residents of Michigan, under Comp. Laws 1897, § 3831, is not in violation of U. S. Const. art. 4, § 1, providing for full faith and credit, etc., though such stock is nontaxable in the corporate domicile.—Bacon v. Board of State Tax Commissioners, 126 Mich. 22.

§ 4. Effect and conclusiveness of sister state judgments.

Conflict with domestic judgment, see post § 11.

Necessity and burden of establishing the judgment in action thereon, see post § 15.

Pleading want of jurisdiction, see post ¶ 63.

¶ 5. The Act of Congress of May 26, 1790 (1st Stat. 122), requires that general faith, validity and credit shall be given to judgments of courts of a foreign jurisdiction as evidence.—Marshall v. R. M. Owen & Co., 171 Mich. 232.

¶ 6. In an action in one state upon a judgment of a court of general jurisdiction of another state, no plea or proof can be received in contradiction of any material fact appearing by the record, unless such plea or proof would be received in an action on the judgment in the state in which it was rendered.—Wilcox v. Kassick, 2 Mich. 165.

¶ 7. If the state court has jurisdiction of a corporation and process is served in accordance with state laws, the judgment is generally held to be binding on the courts of foreign states.—Marshall v. R. M. Owen & Co., 171 Mich. 232.

¶ 8. A judgment of a court of one state, having jurisdiction of the parties and of the subject-matter, is conclusive in the courts of a sister state, the only remedy being by direct proceedings in the original cause.—Mutual Fire Ins. Co. v. Phœnix Furniture Co., 108 Mich. 170.

¶ 9. A judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction in one state is conclusive upon the parties to the action and their privies, in the courts of another state, and cannot be attacked, even upon the ground of fraud, except by a direct proceeding in the court in which it was rendered.—Dunlap v. Byers, 110 Mich. 109.

¶ 10. The supreme court cannot sit in review upon the decrees of the courts of a sister state having exclusive jurisdiction over the person and the subject-matter of a suit.—Stevens v. Ottawa Probate Judge, 156 Mich. 526.

¶ 11. While the constitution and laws of the United States require that the judgment of one state shall have the same credit in another state as it has by law or usage in the courts of the state where it was rendered, such judgment is not to be given in another state more than its domestic force.—Bonesteel v. Todd, 9 Mich. 371.

§ 5. ——Jurisdictional facts and procedure.

Effect of jurisdictional recitals in foreign divorce, see also Divorce § 191.

Collateral attack for falsity of affidavit where foreign jurisdiction is based on the affidavit rather than on the truth of the facts deposed to, see also Divorce ¶ 692.

General appearance in foreign action as precluding party to question jurisdiction, see also Courts ¶ 216.

¶ 12. U. S. Const. art. 4, § 1, providing that full faith and credit shall be given in each state to the records and judicial proceedings of every other state, does not preclude an inquiry into the jurisdiction of courts; and if, in fact, the subject-matter of a suit was not within the jurisdiction of the state from which the court derives its authority, its judgment is a nullity, and may be so treated everywhere.—People v. Dawell, 25 Mich. 247.

¶ 13. The judicial proceedings to which full faith and credit must be given in every state besides that in which they are taken are those only in which the court was competent to act; and a prima facie showing of their regularity does not save them from impeachment by proper evidence.—Reed v. Reed, 52 Mich. 117.

¶ 14. The provision of the Federal Constitution requiring that full faith and credit shall be given in each state to the Public Acts, records and judicial proceedings of every other state, does not prevent inquiry into the jurisdiction of the court in which the original judgment was rendered to pronounce the judgment.—Farrow v. Railway

Conductors' Co-operative Ass'n, 178 Mich. 639.

¶ 15. The jurisdiction of a foreign court to render a judgment can be impeached when the judgment is sued on in this state, and the recital of jurisdiction in the record of the judgment is immaterial.—Marshall v. R. M. Owen & Co., 171 Mich. 232.

¶ 16. A certificate of service by a proper officer, or an agent in the state of a foreign corporation doing business in the state, is prima facie evidence that such agent represented the corporation in the business, but when the record is offered in evidence in a suit on the judgment in a foreign state, the corporation may show that the agent could not represent it by accepting service.—Marshall v. R. M. Owen & Co., 171 Mich. 232.

¶ 17. In an action in this state on a default judgment entered in Illinois against a corporation, it appearing from the record of the judgment that proper service was had, it was error for the trial court to refuse to admit evidence of defendant that the person served in Illinois as an agent of the defendant never was such agent, unless these facts were conclusively determined against the defendant by the Illinois court on the motion to vacate the judgment.—Marshall v. R. M. Owen & Co., 171 Mich. 232.

¶ 18. Record recitals of jurisdictional facts do not preclude oral testimony as to the existence of such facts.—Farrow v. Railway Conductors' Co-operative Ass'n, 178 Mich. 639.

¶ 19. The finding of a court of a foreign state, in granting letters of administration, that an intestate was domiciled in that state, is not conclusive so as to bind the courts of Michigan, and they have an equal right to determine the question of domicile for a similar purpose.—Colvin v. Jones, 194 Mich. 670.

¶ 20. The foreign record cannot be impeached when sued upon here by showing, in opposition to its recitals, that process was not served upon defendant.—Wilcox v. Kassick, 2 Mich. 165.

¶ 21. Where a court in a foreign state having jurisdiction of the parties and subject-matter, on appeal by the plaintiff from justice court, entered an order on plaintiff for security for costs and a more definite petition, and subsequently without notice to the defendant dismissed the suit without prejudice, and thereafter set aside the dismissal, and where at a later date a motion was made to dismiss for failure to comply with the order first entered and after argument a like finding in favor of the defendants was entered as had been entered before the justice; such finding, whether right or wrong, was res adjudicata and a court of this state could not inquire as to whether or not the foreign court had jurisdiction to enter the judgment, the decision of that court upon a question of law being just as conclusive as upon a question of fact.—Stearns v. Wiborg, 123 Mich. 584.

¶ 22. A foreign judgment can be attacked for want of jurisdiction unless the transcript affirmatively shows that the court rendering such judgment had jurisdiction.—Spiker v. American Relief Soc., 140 Mich. 225.

§ 6. ——Sufficiency of record and presumptions thereon.

Requisites of judgment entry and record in general, see Judgments, III.

Effect of appearances to confer jurisdiction or waive objections, see Appearance § 10 et seq.; Courts, V.

General presumptions as to regularity, normality and legality, see Evidence, II.

Presumption as to authority to appear, see Appearance § 4.

Presumption as to jurisdiction in foreign divorce suit, see Divorce § 191.

The judgment of a court of general jurisdiction of another state is a nullity if the record shows a want of jurisdiction.—Wilcox v. Kassick, 2 Mich. 165.

¶ 22a. The judgment of a court of general jurisdiction of another state does not show either that the court had, or that it had not, jurisdiction, jurisdiction will be presumed.—Wilcox v. Kassick, 2 Mich. 165.

¶ 24. When the record shows that the process was not personally served, and that the defendant did not appear personally in the suit, but that an attorney appeared for him and made defense, the authority of such attorney to appear for him will be presumed. But whether the authority may be disproved, quære.—Wilcox v. Kassick, 2 Mich. 165.

¶ 25. In purely collateral civil proceedings depending upon a divorce procured in another state, the court granting divorce must be presumed to have had jurisdiction, and to have proceeded on the merits in accordance with the local laws, and the divorce cannot be impeached by showing that complainant's residence was not such as to give that court jurisdiction.—Waldo v. Waldo, 52 Mich. 94.

¶ 26. In construing a judgment of a foreign state the court may indulge in certain presumptions in favor of its regularity.—Marshall v. R. M. Owen & Co., 171 Mich. 232.

¶ 27. The court should indulge in no presumptions of fact on the unproved allegations in the plaintiff's declaration which were not admitted to be true at the trial, either to aid or rebut the record of the foreign judgment which is sued on in this state.—Marshall v. R. M. Owen & Co., 171 Mich. 232.

¶ 28. If the face of the record of a foreign judgment recites that the defendant corporation was lawfully served, and there is a strong inference that the defendant was a domestic corporation, and it appears that a proper agent was served, it was not error for the trial court to admit the record of the judgment in evidence.—Marshall v. R. M. Owen & Co., 171 Mich. 232.

¶ 29. A., who had agreed to indemnify B. for signing C.'s replevin bond, was sued by B., who introduced in evidence an Indiana record which showed a copy of the bond set out at length in the complaint as the only cause of action relied on. Held, that it would be presumed in support of the judgment that it was rendered after due proof of the execution of the bond declared upon. —Knickerbocker v. Wilcox, 83 Mich. 200.

¶ 30. The courts of a sister state, in a cause within and between parties subject to their jurisdiction, are entitled to so much respect, at least, that they should not, without proof, be presumed guilty of wrong and oppression.—Graydon v. Church, 7 Mich. 36.

§ 7. ——Sufficiency of warrant and confession.

Extraterritorial force and sufficiency of warrant to confess judgment, see Conflict of Laws § 43.

¶ 31. A warrant of attorney, purporting to authorize "any attorney at law" to confess judgment on a note in "any court of record," is sufficient to sustain a judgment entered in a court of the state in which the warrant was executed, on confession of an attorney of such court, even though the warrant could be given no extraterritorial effect. —First Nat. Bank v. Garland, 109 Mich. 515.

¶ 32. A judgment of Ohio entered on a warrant of attorney which expressly permits it without process is not within the provisions of the Ohio statute requiring the issue of summons as a condition precedent to the taking of judgment.—First Nat. Bank v. Garland, 109 Mich. 515.

¶ 32a. Under Comp. Laws 1897, § 10299, providing that the authority for confessing judgment shall be in some instrument distinct from that containing the evidence of indebtedness, a judgment without service rendered in Illinois on a note made in Michigan, containing a power of attorney to confess, is void as being founded on a void warrant of attorney.—Acme Food Co. v. Kirsch, 166 Mich. 433.

¶ 33a. In an action in one state upon a judgment of a court of general jurisdiction of another state, no plea or proof can be received in contradiction of any material fact appearing by the record, unless such plea or proof would be received in an action on the judgment in the state in which it was rendered.—Wilcox v. Kassick, 2 Mich. 165.

Jurisdiction to annul or revise foreign judicial sale, see also Courts § 45.
Foreign judgment as evidence of account stated, see Account Stated ¶ 41.

¶ 33. The consequences of a judgment in respect to its effect as a merger or extinguishment of the original demand are a part of the law under which the judgment itself is rendered, and are to be regarded when the judgment is used in another state.—Bonesteel v. Todd, 9 Mich. 371.

¶ 34. Where a court of one state has acquired jurisdiction of a proceeding for the dissolution of a partnership and for a settlement of its affairs, it has authority to determine all of the equities of the case, and may, therefore, adjudicate the rights of the parties as to real estate located in another state.—Dunlap v. Byers, 110 Mich. 109.

¶ 35. The fact that a member of an insolvent mutual benefit society incorporated in another state was allowed to prosecute to judgment in such state his claim upon his certificate does not render res adjudicata the question of his right to satisfy his judgment out of the society's local assets in this state. —Wheeler v. Dime Sav. Bank, 116 Mich. 271.

¶ 36. Complainant filed a bill in South Dakota alleging that defendant and himself were partners and that defendant procured from him by fraud an assignment of his interest in certain property, and asked that he be restored to his rights therein. Defendant denied said allegations. The court found that there was no partnership; that no fraudulent representations were made; and that the conveyance was a good faith transfer of complainant's interest. Complainant failed to appeal, and afterwards filed a bill in Michigan repeating the allegations of fraud and asking for a reconveyance, but not alleging a partnership. Held, a plea of former adjudication setting out said facts was a valid bar to complainant's second suit.—Niles v. Lee, 169 Mich. 474.

¶ 37. A judgment of another state on a claim covered by a guaranty when offered in a suit on the guaranty is conclusive upon the matters covered by the foreign action.—Clark v. Clune, 172 Mich. 323.

¶ 37a. The decision of an Oklahoma court as to the validity of a note for the price of land is conclusive of that matter in another controversy on the same matter.—Bishop v. Dodge, 196 Mich. 231.

¶ 38. Upon the appointment of a receiver for an Illinois mutual fire insurance company in a court of that state, there were turned over to him certain notes given by Michigan policy holders, payable at such times as the directors of the company might order and assess for the losses and expenses of the company. A decree was entered, upon evidence placed before the court, determining the amount of assets and debts of the company, and the assessment necessary to liquidate said indebtedness, which, as shown upon the face of the decree, included certain unearned or return premiums, for the payment of which said policy holders had by a decision of the supreme court of Michigan been held not liable. Held, that said decree was conclusive upon the policy holders in a suit brought in this state to enforce assessments made by the receiver against them upon said notes.—Mutual Fire Ins. Co. v. Phoenix Furniture Co., 108 Mich. 170.

¶ 39. Query, to what extent a judgment of a court of one state, providing for an assessment against the stockholders of an insolvent corporation, is conclusive upon the courts of another state, in view of the limitations of doctrine found in Great Western Tel. Co. v. Purdy, 162 U. S. 329, 40 L. ed. 986, 16 Sup. Ct. 810; Warner v. Delbridge & Cameron Co., 110 Mich. 590.

¶ 40. Where suit was brought in the state of New York against two joint debtors, one of whom was not served with process, and did not appear in the action, and judgment in form was rendered against both under the joint debtor act, it was held that this judgment was not an extinguishment of the demand sued upon, and that an action brought subsequently in this state against the two was properly brought on the original demand instead of upon the judgment.—Bonesteel v. Todd, 9 Mich. 371.

§ 9. ——Matters beyond jurisdiction of place or subject.

Nature of administration proceedings as entitling foreign probate of will to recognition, see Estates of Decedents ¶ 32.

Foreclosure of mortgage on chattels brought into state and sold, see also Chattel Mortgages ¶ 362.

¶ 41. Where a decree entered in one state enjoins a party from interfering with the other party's rights to certain property located in another state, said injunction is valid as a decree in personam and should be respected by the courts of other states.—Niles v. Lee, 169 Mich. 474.

¶ 42. A circuit court in chancery of one county cannot decide what the probate court of another county shall do about requiring executors or administrators who are administrating estates before that court to give new bonds or more ample bonds.—Eames v. Manley, 121 Mich. 300.

¶ 43. The probate court of the domicile of a testator has exclusive jurisdiction to determine the validity of a will and a decree of a court not having jurisdiction is not conclusive upon courts of other jurisdictions either under the rule of state comity or under the United States Constitution.—Scripps v. Wayne Probate Judge, 131 Mich. 265.

¶ 44. Proceedings under the boat and vessel law of another state, which allows nonresident creditors no opportunity of appearing and asserting their claims, can have no extraterritorial force, and will not displace a prior lien existing upon a vessel under the laws of this state.—Wight v. Maxwell, 4 Mich. 45. Writ of error dismissed, Maxwell v. Newbold, 18 How. (59 U. S.) 511, 15 L. ed. 506.

§ 10. ——Persons affected or bound.

Corporation and members or stockholders, see also ante ¶¶ 38, 39.

General law as to persons bound by judgments, see Former Adjudication, V.

¶ 45. Where a Michigan resident died here pending a suit against him in Massachusetts in which an administrator was appointed for his estate to represent him in the suit and a decree rendered against the administrator, this decree had no force or effect to bind any one except the administrator there and was satisfied when the estate in Massachusetts had been applied thereon.—Brown v. Fletcher's Estate, 146 Mich. 401, aff'd in 210 U. S. 82, 52 L. ed. 964, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 702.

¶ 46. Where a resident of Michigan dies here testate and there was pending a suit against him in Massachusetts and he had stipulated to arbitrate the issues, the result of the suit and the award of the arbitrators being a judgment against an administrator of the deceased duly appointed over his Massachusetts property, even though the stipulation purported to bind his heirs, administrators, and executors, only the administrator in Massachusetts was bound thereby and the property coming into his hands; and the courts there could not legally bind the Michigan executors, because jurisdiction of the person of the defendant ceased when he died, and there was no person within the territorial jurisdiction of the court upon whom the determination of the court could be made binding.—Brown v. Fletcher's Estate, 146 Mich. 401, aff'd in 210 U. S. 82, 52 L. ed. 964, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 702.

¶ 47. Where a Michigan resident died here leaving property both here and in Massachusetts, and against whom a suit was pending in Massachusetts, which suit was revived by the appointment of an administrator over his property there and a decree against his administrator, there is no privity of the foreign administrator with the domiciliary executors, and the latter are not bound by any judgment rendered against the former.—Brown v. Fletcher's Estate, 146 Mich. 401, aff'd in 210 U. S. 82, 52 L. ed. 964, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 702.

¶ 48. Under Comp. Laws 1857, ch. 133, p. 1219, an exemplification of the record of a judgment on a partnership note against all the members of a partnership note in the state of Michigan, only one of which partners was served with process, is inadmissible in evidence in an action on the note in a foreign state, to bar and to defeat a recovery against a partner not served with process in the first action.—Mason v. Eldred, 6 Wall. (73 U. S.) 231, 18 L. ed. 783.

¶ 49. In an action upon a foreign judgment on an insurance policy against defendant's predecessor, a voluntary association, defendant not having been sued as the successor of, or as having assumed the liabilities of the association, and not having appeared in the action on which the judgment was rendered, it was held that the judgment was entered without jurisdiction.—Farrow v. Railway Conductors' Co-operative Ass'n, 178 Mich. 639.

¶ 50. Where a creditor of a partnership commenced proceedings in a foreign state against firm property prior to the appointment of a receiver on a bill to dissolve the partnership, the judgment of the foreign court in the proceeding instituted by the creditor is conclusive as against the receiver.—Rickman v. Rickman, 180 Mich. 224.

§ 11. Conflicting foreign and domestic judgments.

¶ 51. In assumpsit upon a promissory note, the bar of a judgment in another state upon the same note is not avoided by the record of an action upon that judgment to which the defendant pleaded nul tiel record, and in which action plaintiff took a nonsuit. The plea of the judgment is good, there is no estoppel, and the second record is not admissible in evidence.—Michigan Ins. Bank v. Eldred, 6 Biss. 370, Fed. Cas. No. 9528.

§ 12. Judgments of foreign nations.

Judgment of foreign court on service made in Michigan, see also Courts ¶ 205.

¶ 52. A foreign judgment may be collaterally attacked in an action on such judgment for want of jurisdiction in the foreign court due to the failure to obtain proper service of process.—Cox v. Railway Conductors' Co-operative Protective Ass'n, 194 Mich. 213.

¶ 53. The judgment of a foreign court having jurisdiction of the matter in issue is not subject to collateral attack.—Coveney v. Phiscator, 132 Mich. 258.

¶ 54. It seems that wherever it is held that a judgment of a foreign country may be impeached for fraud, it refers to fraud practiced in obtaining the judgment.—Coveney v. Phiscator, 132 Mich. 258.

¶ 55. Criminal proceedings in the courts of a foreign country are presumed to have been regular and within the jurisdiction of the court.—Coveney v. Phiscator, 132 Mich. 258.

¶ 56. A recitation in judgment of a Canadian court of an order by the master in chambers that the statement of defense to the action filed by defendant should be stricken out, and that plaintiff should be at liberty to proceed in the action as in case of default of a statement of defense, will not deprive the court of jurisdiction, it not appearing but that the action taken was consistent with the rules of practice obtaining in that court, and based wholly upon the insufficiency of the pleading itself.—Ferguson v. Oliver, 99 Mich. 161.

¶ 57. The judgment of a Canadian or any foreign court upon service of its process made in Michigan is not binding on a defendant who refused to recognize its jurisdiction; and it will not support an action in our courts.—McEwan v. Zimmer, 38 Mich. 765.

§ 13. ——Merger, bar and conclusiveness.

By sister state judgments, see ante §§ 8, 9.

¶ 58. The common holding is that a foreign judgment unsatisfied does not merge the original cause of action.—Canadian Typograph Co. v. Macgurn, 119 Mich. 533.

¶ 59. The decree of a Canadian court in a proceeding involving lands in Michigan and Canada, in which Michigan parties submitted to the jurisdiction of such foreign court, would appear to have been conclusive upon the same parties who again litigated the matter in Michigan.—Sheehan v. Farwell, 135 Mich. 196.

¶ 59a. One who, in a foreign country, pleads guilty to a charge of obtaining money by threats and menaces and returns the money upon the obtaining of which the prosecution was based, cannot, in an action to recover the money as paid under duress, in the absence of fraud, set up that he was not in fact guilty.—Coveney v. Phiscator, 132 Mich. 258.

¶ 60. The judgment of a court of Canada in favor of a corporation sued for rescission of a contract for sale of land on the ground that it was procured by fraud of the corporate agents and officers, and, if rescission could not be granted, for damages for the fraud, is a bar to a subsequent suit in Michigan against the corporate officers for the same fraud; where the Canadian court under its practice had full jurisdiction to adjudicate all the issues.—Krolik v. Curry, 148 Mich. 214.

Foreign judgment as garnishable debt, see Garnishment ¶ 113.

¶ 61. While a decree in a partnership accounting in another state and determining equities in the land will not directly effect the transfer of title, it will bind the consciences of the parties, and can be enforced in the courts of the state where the property is located.—Dunlap v. Byers, 110 Mich. 109.

¶ 62. A finding of a court of another state, in a proceeding for an accounting between partners, that certain lands in this state were partnership lands, which had been sold with the consent of the parties, and the proceeds credited to the partnership, is sufficient to authorize a decree as to such lands in an action to enforce in this state the decree of the foreign court.—Dunlap v. Byers, 110 Mich. 109.

¶ 63. If the judgment does not show either that the court had, or that it had not, jurisdiction, the jurisdiction will be presumed; but in such case facts showing a want of jurisdiction may be alleged by plea, and if established a recovery may be defeated.—Wilcox v. Kassick, 2 Mich. 165.

¶ 63a. In an action to recover the balance due upon a foreign judgment, the declaration averred the recovery of judgment for a certain sum "and also the sum of $42.60 adjudged to said plaintiff," etc. The judgment record introduced in evidence showed a judgment for the sum named, "besides his costs and charges herein expended," and elsewhere showed that they had been fixed at the sum stated in the declaration. Held, that there was no fatal variance, and, though it was not shown how the costs were taxed, the proceedings fixing their amount could not be presumed illegal.—Hunt v. Middlesworth, 44 Mich. 448.

¶ 63b. In a suit against a single defendant upon a judgment rendered in a foreign state against three defendants, and where the exemplification of the foreign judgment did not show any return of service upon the other two defendants, and contained recitals that they were proceeded against by publication, while the entry of judgment recited due service of summons upon all, and the judgment appeared to have been collected in part by seizure and sale of the property of one of the other defendants, and the plaintiff declared upon the judgments as one valid against all the defendants, giving no reason for proceeding against one alone, it was held that the judgment was not void on its face as against any of the defendants therein named, and that the plaintiff's declaration contained no allegations to warrant his going into evidence to show that the judgment bound the defendant alone. The foreign judgment, therefore, did not support a judgment against the single defendant.—Dart v. Goss, 24 Mich. 266.

¶ 64. A foreign judgment may have great force or even be conclusive as evidence, but it cannot be enforced as a judgment outside of the jurisdiction in which it is given without being established in new legal proceedings.—Dickinson v. Seaver, 44 Mich. 624.

¶ 65. In an action to recover the amount secured by a mortgage on lands in Canada, under which in case of default the mortgagee was authorized to sell the land at private sale without notice, a summons issued by the solicitors for the plaintiff in the former suit in Canada and served upon the defendant with a statement of the particulars of plaintiff's claim showing that the action was brought to recover the same indebtedness, less a specified sum received on a sale of land, is admissible to show such former sale and that defendant is entitled to credit for the sum released thereon.—Hamilton Provident & Loan Soc. v. Northwood, 86 Mich. 315.

¶ 66. In the absence of Canadian cases condemning the practice of making service of process by minors, testimony tending to show a course of practice in Canadian courts recognizing the validity of such service was competent in an action upon a judgment rendered in Canada.—Patterson v. Kennedy, 122 Mich. 343.

¶ 67. On a suit in this state by an assignee of a default judgment entered in Illinois against the defendant corporation, it sufficiently appears from the record that the defendant was lawfully served with process, for the purpose of admitting the record in evidence, if it appears that the defendant was sued as a domestic corporation, and there is nothing in the record to the contrary, and return was made on the summons as executed on a proper agent of the corporation.—Marshall v. R. M. Owen & Co., 171 Mich. 232.

¶ 68. On a suit in this state on a judgment secured in Illinois, the court will not take judicial notice of the Illinois statutes, and so cannot determine from the record whether a foreign corporation may do business in Illinois, or if so on what conditions, or whether the defendant corporation in the Illinois suit was properly served by its statutes.—Marshall v. R. M. Owen & Co., 171 Mich. 232.

¶ 69. In a suit in this state on an interlocutory default judgment in Illinois against the defendant, where the Illinois court had refused to vacate the judgment on motion of defendant on the ground that the person served was not the defendant's agent, the defendant not having made a general appearance in the case, from which ruling the defendant had not appealed, the trial court erred in refusing to consider testimony of the defendant that the Illinois judgment was secured by fraud, that no service was had on any agent or officer of the defendant, and that the person served was not the defendant's agent, for that judgment being interlocutory, the court could consider new or further motions to vacate the judgment.—Marshall v. R. M. Owen & Co., 171 Mich. 232.

§ 16. Relief and judgment.

Judgment of nonsuit on the judgment as affecting the estoppel, see ante ¶ 51.

In actions on domestic judgments, see Judgments, XII.

¶ 70. In an action on a foreign judgment the fact that the judgment does not state the amount of the costs to be recovered, will not prevent recovery for the full amount of the judgment and the costs shown by the evidence to be due.—Schroeder v. Boyce, 127 Mich. 33.

¶ 71. In an action on a foreign judgment, it is error to allow 5 per cent interest on the judgment in the absence of any evidence showing that the judgment bears interest in the state in which it was obtained, as at common law a judgment did not bear interest.—Schroeder v. Boyce, 127 Mich. 33, but see note by reporter p. 36.

II. LOGS AND FLOATAGE.

§ 3. Log marks and brands.

¶ 1. The failure of the owner of logs to record his log mark, as required by 2 Comp. Laws, § 5083, deprives him simply of the presumption that logs so marked are his property, but does not prevent his proof of ownership by other competent evidence.—Whitman v. Muskegon Log Lifting & Operating Co., 152 Mich. 645.

§ 4. Rights and title in lodged and sunken logs.

Abandonment of logs, see Abandonment ¶¶ 1-3.

¶ 2. Comp. L. 1897, § 5098, providing for the disposition of logs floating and lodging upon lands adjoining the streams, and for forfeiture of all right thereto by the owners, does not mean that the title to the property is forfeited by allowing it to remain for 18 months upon the land; and an instruction in replevin of lumber cut from logs claimed to have been abandoned upon a rollway on a river, evidently based upon such section and so stating the law, was erroneous.—Log Owners Booming Co. v. Hubbell, 135 Mich. 65.

¶ 3. Sunken logs, marked or unmarked, when not lost or abandoned by the owners, are not the property of the riparian proprietor adjoining the place where found.—Whitman v. Muskegon Log Lifting & Operating Co., 152 Mich. 645.

¶ 4. Where the owners of sunken logs, in reclaiming them, place them on the bank of the riparian proprietor to dry, they are guilty of trespass, but the riparian proprietor gains no title to the logs thereby.—Whitman v. Muskegon Log Lifting & Operating Co., 152 Mich. 645.

¶ 5. The recovery from a stream by the owner of marked or unmarked sunken logs, not abandoned or lost, is no infraction of the riparian owner's rights.—Whitman v. Muskegon Log Lifting & Operating Co., 152 Mich. 645.

¶ 6. The fact that the owners of sunken logs from which the marks have been erased, cannot tell what specific logs belong to them, does not deprive them of property in the logs.—Whitman v. Muskegon Log Lifting & Operating Co., 152 Mich. 645.

¶ 7. Where no owner's marks on sunken logs are distinguishable, the presumption is that the logs were originally marked as required by the statute, and that the marks have been worn off, and, as in the case of logs where the marks are discernible, there exists no presumption of abandonment by the owners from the mere fact that the logs have rested for a time on the river bottom.—Whitman v. Muskegon Log Lifting & Operating Co., 152 Mich. 645.

¶ 8. The mere fact that logs with the owner's mark on them, becoming watersoaked, sank to the bottom of the transporting river, and rested there for a time, is not sufficient evidence that the owner abandoned them.—Whitman v. Muskegon Log Lifting & Operating Co., 152 Mich. 645.

¶ 9. Where the owners of marked logs sunken to the bottom of the transporting river have taken steps each year to recover the same, the inference that they intended to abandon the logs is negatived.—Whitman v. Muskegon Log Lifting & Operating Co., 152 Mich. 645.

¶ 10. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 2494 permitting the board of supervisors to provide for the removal of obstructions arising from the erection of booms, or collecting of logs or rafts in navigable streams by any individual it is not meant that the board of supervisors should engage in removing obstacles to free navigation which had existed for half a century, but only those obstructions concurrently created. Therefore a contract entered into by the board with individuals employing them to remove such obstructions and to retain as pay for their services whatever they should "be able to collect or obtain as salvage from said logs or obstructions so removed" conveys no title to such old obstructions.—Gainer v. Nelson, 147 Mich. 113.

¶ 11. A log-driving company is not liable as a common carrier for a failure to deliver logs received by it for driving to their destination.—Mann v. White River Log & Booming Co., 46 Mich. 38.

¶ 12. The question of whether logs were attempted to be moved at an improper time of year, imposing liability for negligence, is one of fact for the jury.—Croze v. St. Mary's Canal Mineral Land Co., 153 Mich. 363.

¶ 13. There can be no recovery in assumpsit at common law for the expense of moving aside the defendant's logs in a stream so as to permit a drive of the plaintiff's logs.—Doyle v. Pelton, 134 Mich. 398.

Negligence in towing logs and rafts, see Shipping, VI.
Floatage of logs as part of interstate commerce, see Commerce § 6.

¶ 14. Plaintiff sued defendant to recover payment for towing logs under a contract which provided that the plaintiff should be held responsible for the safe delivery of the logs. Defendant claimed recoupment for the loss of logs sustained by the breaking of plaintiff's boom. Held, the court erred in not instructing, as requested by defendant, that it was plaintiff's duty to use all diligence to recover the logs.—McLean v. Sandusky Lumber & Box Co., 160 Mich. 324.

¶ 15. If responsibility for the loss of the logs in towing is on the plaintiff, the owner, he could not shift it to the towing contractor by merely telling the captain of the tug-boat that he left the logs in his charge, and a requested instruction to that effect should have been given in an action on a contract of towage.—Karwick v. Pickands, 171 Mich. 463.

¶ 16. In an action on a contract for the towage of logs, the court's instruction that if the plaintiff's boom-man was to pick out the booms to be used, that the verdict should be for the defendant for any loss caused by defects in the quality of the booms used, was prejudicial error, where the plaintiff claimed to recover because, under the alleged contract, the boom sticks were insufficient in number and defective in quality, and under the defendant's version of the contract and his testimony given to support it, the plaintiff's agent was to select the number of boom sticks as well as the quality.—Karwick v. Pickands, 171 Mich. 463.

¶ 17. Contract for cutting, running and the delivery of logs by the first party, and the advancement of money therefor, the sawing and manufacturing of them into lumber, and their shipping and sale by the second party, providing, furthermore, for the distribution of the proceeds, and for deductions on account of advances made, charges, freight, insurance, etc., construed to intend that the deductions should be from the gross undivided proceeds of sales, and not from the share of the second party alone.—Hersey v. Huron Salt & Lumber Mfg. Co., 27 Mich. 490.

¶ 18. In a contract by which one party was to furnish saw-logs to the other, the latter agreed that the former should not pay more than a fixed amount of stumpage on certain lands. Held, that this implied that the parties contemplated that the logs were to be obtained from those lands, and that the party who assumed to fix the price of the stumpage claimed the right to dispose of it, and thereby assured to the other party the right to cut on those lands.—Wetmore v. Pattison, 45 Mich. 439.

¶ 19. A contract for cutting and running logs to be delivered at the mouth of a certain river during the logging season provided that the cutting should be done "under the direction of a scaler" to be furnished by one of the parties. Held, that the scaler's authority related only to the manner of cutting, and that he had not the right to stop the cutting when he should be of the opinion that claimant could not get to the river during the contract time any more logs than were already cut.—McGregor v. Estate of Ross, 96 Mich. 103.

¶ 20. A contract for the cutting of timber is not ambiguous, which provides that the promisor shall cut "all the pine and hemlock timber" on a tract, again that he shall "cut clean," that he will take from the tree "everything that is suitable" for shingles or lumber, that he will cut such "for lumber as he shall be directed" to cut and the balance into shingle logs, and that he will deliver all of said lumber so cut afloat in a lake, the payment to be according to the scaled quantity of lumber logs including mill culls but not "dead culls." It means that all timber was to be cut and put afloat regardless of what it would produce or of the number of dead culls.—Brigham v. Martin, 103 Mich. 150.

¶ 21. A contract between M. and W. provided that W. should cut and should deliver in a certain lake "all" the timber on certain land, cutting from the trees everything suitable to work up into shingles or lumber; that he should furnish a scaler to be agreed upon by the parties, to scale the logs, such scaler to furnish the scale-sheets to M. each week; that M. should pay $2 per thousand for the lumber logs, according to such log-scale; that such scale should include mill culls but not dead culls; that W. was to be paid for mill culls the same as for other lumber; that upon the final settlement the shipping tally of a certain lumber firm which was to saw the logs should be final as to the number of thousand feet of said lumber, and that said settlement should be made acccording to said shipping tally. Held, that the contract was not ambiguous, and that W. was to have advancements upon his own scale, with final settlement and payment according to the shipping tally, which was to be final; that he was not to be paid for dead culls, even though some of the lumber called dead culls in the shipping tally included what, according to the grading of other dealers would be classed as mill culls, and although M. realized something from the sale of such dead culls.—Brigham v. Martin, 103 Mich. 150.

¶ 22. A lumbering contract, whereby the plaintiffs agree to manufacture lumber and shingles for the defendant and to saw for no other parties and the defendant agrees to furnish two million feet of timber for the lumber mill and timber enough to keep two hand machines running in the shingle mill, which is subsequently modified by a statement that the plaintiffs are no longer bound by the clause prohibiting them to use the lumber mill for others, "shingle mill excepted for the manufacture of their own stock only," is construed to permit plaintiffs to use the shingle mill personally to the exclusion of the defendants, and excuses the defendants from liability for failure to furnish the agreed stock.—Little v. Barry, 125 Mich. 211.

III. LIENS AND LABOR.

§ 8. Liens in general; statutes.

Necessity of strict compliance with statutes, see also post ¶ 94.

For breaking jams or driving logs, see post ¶ 9.

Common law lien for labor or services, see post § 13.

Statement and procedure to enforce lien, see post §§ 19-28.

Labor liens on forest products, see Liens.

Attachment under Log Lien Law, see generally Attachment.

Right to lien by possession as affected by custom, see Customs ¶ 24.

Log lien law as class legislation, see Constitutional Law § 222.

Statutory provisions for liens for labor and services, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14843 et seq.

¶ 23. Laws 1873, Act No. 185, providing for a lien for labor on lumber and logs, criticized as crude and incomplete.—Clark v. Adams, 33 Mich. 159; Shaw v. Bradley, 59 Mich. 199.

¶ 24. Sess. L. 1881, Act No. 145 (How. St., §§ 8412-8427), establishing a lien for labor and services on logs, etc., is remedial, and was enacted to provide additional security for the laborer; and it should be liberally construed to effectuate that object.—Shaw v. Bradley, 59 Mich. 199.

¶ 25. It is competent for the legislature to provide for security by way of a lien in behalf of a laborer, and also to provide a remedy for the enforcement of such lien by attachment, in cases where the possession of the property upon which the labor is performed is not retained by the person performing such labor.—Shaw v. Bradley, 59 Mich. 199.

¶ 26. The right of lien for work done upon forest products is in derogation of the common law and the requisites of the statute must be strictly observed.—Reynolds v. Marquette Circuit Judge, 125 Mich. 445.

¶ 27. How. St., §§ 8427a-8427p, providing that any person performing labor or services in manufacturing lumber or shingles shall have a lien thereon for the amount due for such labor or services, and the same shall take precedence of all other claims or liens thereon, and that any such debt, demand or claim shall not remain a lien on any of the mentioned products unless a statement thereof in writing, made under oath by the claimant or some one in his behalf, shall be filed in the office of the clerk of the county in which such labor or service is performed, which statement of lien shall be filed within 30 days after the completion or last day of such labor or service, and that any sale or transfer of the products upon which the lien is claimed during the time limited for the enforcement of the same shall not affect the lien, but the lien shall remain and be enforced against the products, in whosesoever possession the same shall be found, and that the lien may be enforced by attachment against any of the products, and that such lien claims shall cease to be liens upon the property named in the statement, unless suit be commenced within three months after filing of the statement for lien, gives a laborer a lien for his services which results from the performance of, and exists from the commencement of, the work, and is not created by the proceedings to enforce the lien, but only continued or secured thereby.—In re Kerby-Dennis Co., 95 Fed. 116.

¶ 28. Under the Log Lien Law (Comp. L., §§ 10756-10799), the statute imposes upon the owner of the logs the duty of knowing that his contract price with the contractor who hires all labor represents a sum at least sufficient to pay all labor, and the further duty of knowing that no more than the value of such labor is paid from time to time.—Becherl v. Pluchak, 171 Mich. 299.

§ 9. ——For moving obstructions or driving logs.

Statutory right to compensation for driving or breaking, see post § 10.

¶ 29. How. St., § 2035, prior to its amendment by Laws 1887, Act No. 66, did not give a lien for removing obstructions upon a stream that required the aid of artificial means in running the logs by means of dams, etc.—Kroll v. Nester, 52 Mich. 70; Shaw v. Bradley, 59 Mich. 199.

¶ 30. Boom companies have a lien for their services in breaking jams and driving logs whose owners have not put on a sufficient force to do it, not only under the statute relating to such companies (Comp. L., § 2793, How. St., § 3922), but under the general act relating to log-driving (Pub. L., 1879, p. 83).—Hall v. Tittabawassee Boom Co., 51 Mich. 377.

¶ 31. A boom company's statutory lien for running logs is acquired if the work is done by one who has contracted with the company to do it as the company's agent, and who is to be paid a gross sum for the job.—Hall v. Tittabawassee Boom Co., 51 Mich. 377.

§ 10. Statutory or implied liability for driving logs.

Lien for breaking or driving under statute, see ante § 9.

Right to compensation for driving mass comprising individual's logs, see post ¶ 39.

Assumpsit for value of services, see post § 21 et seq.

Pleading in assumpsit, see post § 23.

Evidence as to labor necessary and as to value of same, see post § 24.

Express contracts for labor or driving, see Contracts.

Statutory right of action for breaking jams, due process of law, see Constitutional Law § 147.

¶ 32. Under statute, one who breaks a log jam acquires a distinct right of action in assumpsit against the owners of the logs for the expense incurred.—Chapman v. Keystone Lumber & Salt Mfg. Co., 20 Mich. 358; and see Woods v. Ayres, 39 Mich. 345.

¶ 33. The statutory right of compensation for breaking a jam caused by another's logs is not based on implied contract, though it supports an assumpsit.—Woods v. Ayres, 39 Mich. 345.

¶ 34. When parties in banking logs on the same grounds mix them indiscriminately, it is held that, in the absence of a special agreement, or of some general usage, or other controlling circumstances, each ought at the proper time to put on a force of men proportioned to his share of the logs to break the rollway and put the logs afloat, and if either fails in that duty he is liable to the other on an implied assumpsit for the reasonable value of the extra work done by the latter in consequence. In defense to such an action, however, he can show that from the manner in which the work was done it was of no benefit to him, or was a positive injury. And when the other has put his own logs afloat he is not bound to continue putting in the remainder, and if he does so without the owner's knowledge or authority he cannot recover for his services, and will not be liable for any damages resulting from his not putting them all in.—Peters v. Gallagher, 37 Mich. 407.

¶ 35. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 5075, making it the duty of lumbering companies to put on men enough to prevent obstruction of navigation and giving injured parties the right of compensation, a defendant is liable if he attempts a drive below the plaintiff's, which drive consists of hardwood timber not in condition to drive, notwithstanding that afterward he used all diligence and employed all the men that could be used on the work.—Bellows v. Crane Lumber Co., 126 Mich. 476.

¶ 36. Assumpsit will not lie to recover expenses of moving aside the defendant's logs so as to complete the plaintiff's drive, as this is not included in Comp. L. 1897, § 5075, which provide recovering for service in driving the defendant's logs or breaking a jam.—Doyle v. Pelton, 134 Mich. 398.

§ 11. Right to lien and waiver.

Necessity of strict compliance with statutes, see also ante § 8, post ¶ 126.
Inception and derivation of the lien, see ante ¶ 27.
Effect of parting with possession, see post § 12.
Common law lien, see post § 13.
Discharge of lien, see post § 14.
Persons entitled and subject to lien, see post §§ 15, 16.
Materials and haulage as proper items, see post § 17.
Right to lien for saw bill under terms of contract, see post § 17.
Property subject to lien and extent of lien, see post § 18.
Necessity and sufficiency of statement, see post §§ 19, 20.
Time for filing lien statement, see post § 19.
Burden of proof and evidence as to waiver, see post § 24.

¶ 37. A saw-mill was leased without rent, but the lessees were to saw all logs furnished by the lessor and ship and season lumber as ordered. This agreement was to be in force through the whole period of the lease. Held, that this contract evidently did not contemplate a lien, since (a) the amount of work agreed for was indefinite and consisted of various items, and the rental value could not well be apportioned on it; (b) work was to continue until the end of the lease, when the lessee would be bound to quit and could not remain on the premises to enforce his lien; and (c) the obligation to ship was unlimited and might exhaust the whole of the lumber.—McMaster v. Merrick, 41 Mich. 505.

¶ 38. Where a log-owner demands all his logs from a boom company which claims a lien for its services in driving them, the latter does not lose its lien by detaining more of the logs than is necessary to preserve it, though such a detention may possibly give ground for an action.—Hall v. Tittabawassee Boom Co., 51 Mich. 377.

¶ 39. Where the logs of an individual owner have become intermingled with those in the charge of a boom company without his consent, but without the fault of the company, the latter acquires a lien for its services in driving them which it does not waive by refusing to deliver them to the owner on demand, unless he tenders not only a reasonable compensation for the services, but enough to cover the cost of separating his logs from the rest.—Hall v. Tittabawassee Boom Co., 51 Mich. 377.

¶ 40. A lienholder cannot be said to refuse to state the amount he claims when he merely refuses to vary from schedule rates of which both parties have knowledge.—Hall v. Tittabawassee Boom Co., 51 Mich. 377.

¶ 41. How. St., § 8427a, giving to "persons who perform any labor or service in manufacturing lumber a lien thereon for the amount due for such labor or services," gives a lien to an owner of a saw-mill who saws lumber under a contract, notwithstanding the fact that he has a lien at common law; and he does not waive his statutory lien by reserving in his statement the lien which he has by virtue of his possession of the lumber.—Phillips v. Freyer, 80 Mich. 254.

¶ 42. Acceptance of time-drafts for a bill for sawing logs does not discharge the lien on the lumber unless received as payment, and then only pro tanto.—Hughes v. Tanner, 96 Mich. 113.

¶ 43. The mere fact that one who is sawing lumber for another at his own mill does not assert a lien thereon when a third person is examining it does not estop him from claiming such lien as against such person when the latter claims title under a sale no knowledge of which at the time is brought home to the sawyer.—Hughes v. Tanner, 96 Mich. 113.

¶ 44. Where a boom company has taken time-acceptances for its claim for services upon rafts of logs delivered to the owners thereof, such owners have a right to demand and receive the residue of their logs, released from any lien for services upon the rafts delivered. There being no agreement or understanding that the logs on hand might be retained as security for a future payment of a demand not then payable, such an agreement cannot rest in implication. And the lien being thus once lost could not be revived by the maturing of the acceptances.—Au Sable River Boom Co. v. Sanborn, 86 Mich. 358.

¶ 45. Whether, as between a boom company and the original owners of logs rafted by it, there could be any question that the taking of time-acceptances for its claim for services would be a waiver of any lien therefor on logs remaining in their custody, there could be none as between the company and a third person to whom the property has been sold without notice of any claim for services in respect to logs previously delivered. If one by his purchase acquires an immediate right to remove his property he cannot lose it by any subsequent default of his vendor.—Au Sable River Boom Co. v. Sanford, 86 Mich. 358.

¶ 46. The indorsement and discount of notes, and later securing them by a chattel mortgage, for the amount of a saw bill is consistent with a subsequent claim of a lien for the sawing.—McEwan Bros. & Co. v. Carpenter, 111 Mich. 522.

¶ 47. A lien on lumber for sawing is released by taking a note for the sum due only when such note is shown to have been taken in payment.—Germain v. Central Lumber Co., 116 Mich. 245.

¶ 48. That by the contract between the parties the owner of logs was to take up, on or before a certain date, the notes of one who sawed them "from proceeds of sales of lumber," that the time for paying for the sawing was extended beyond such date, and that lumber was in fact shipped by the sawyer to the owner from time to time, held, not to deprive the sawyer of his lien upon lumber remaining in his possession.—Germain v. Central Lumber Co., 116 Mich. 245.

¶ 49. A sawyer's lien on logs is relinquished where notes are accepted in payment of the bill and afterwards renewed and the sawyer also points out the timber to a purchaser without indicating in any way that he claims a lien thereon.—Germain v. Central Lumber Co., 120 Mich. 61.

¶ 50. An instruction by the lienor to pay his wages to the principal defendant does not operate as a waiver of the lien, only so far as such instruction has been acted upon and the amount paid.—Dowd v. Dowd, 126 Mich. 649.

¶ 51. In attachment proceedings under the log lien law Comp. L. 1897, § 10756 et seq. giving a right of lien under both express and implied contracts for labor performed, evidence that the owner treated the contract as fully performed and the fact that on the trial he raised no question as to its not having been completed, will prevent intervening subsequent purchasers from defeating the lien on that ground.—Kangas v. Boulton, 127 Mich. 539.

§ 12. ——Loss of possession.

Right to lien on logs kept in possession after taking notes for labor, see ante ¶ 48.

¶ 52. By allowing sale and delivery of lumber upon which he has a lien, to purchasers ignorant of his rights, a sawyer waives his lien to the extent of such sales.—Chadwick v. Broadwell, 27 Mich. 6.

¶ 53. A lien upon lumber for the saw-bill was not lost by the removal of the lumber from the mill-yard to a distant place of shipment, where, under the agreement, the possession remains in the sawyer until inspection at such place.—Chadwick v. Broadwell, 27 Mich. 6.

¶ 54. The owner of a saw mill who sawed lumber under a contract and retained possession of such lumber to secure the payment of the value of his services under his common law lien thereon, waived such lien when he commenced his suit by attachment of such lumber; since by so doing he voluntarily gave up his possession and placed such property in the hands of the sheriff.—Phillips v. Freyer, 80 Mich. 254.

¶ 55. An agreement that all lumber sawed from logs is to remain on the sawyer's docks and in his possession until he is paid is not inconsistent with his right to claim a lien.—Hughes v. Tanner, 96 Mich. 113.

¶ 56. Where a mill-owner, knowing that lumber sawed and remaining to be sawed from logs had been sold, sawed the remaining logs as directed by an agent of the vendee, piled the lumber by itself, marking it with vendee's initials, and took vendor's note for the saw-bill, he waived his right to a lien on the lumber.—Tyler v. Blodgett & Davis Lumber Co., 78 Mich. 81.

¶ 57. That lumber sawed from logs is marked with initials of vendees thereof does not take it out of the sawyer's possession where he still has a duty to perform in regard thereto and where neither party regards the marking as having any significance as a delivery or transfer of possession.—Hughes v. Tanner, 96 Mich. 113.

¶ 58. Where one has sawed logs into lumber, the fact that part of the lumber was shipped by the owner thereof and by his vendees, without paying the sawing-bill and without protest from the sawyer, does not preclude the latter from claiming a lien on the rest, where the right to ship before payment was not expressly reserved.—Hughes v. Tanner, 96 Mich. 113.

§ 13. ——Common law lien.

Statutory lien as additional to common law lien of sawyer, see ante ¶ 41.

Waiver or loss of lien by parting with possession, see ante § 12.

¶ 59. One who performs labor in cutting, hauling, and driving logs for another, under a contract which gives him the right to retain possession of the logs until he is paid for his services, has a common-law lien on the logs for such services.—Haughton v. Busch, 101 Mich. 267.

¶ 60. The doctrine that one who has failed to comply with the terms of his contract may nevertheless recover, upon a quantum meruit, the value of his services, less such damages as the other party may show have been occasioned by his breach, cannot be extended so as to entitle a contractor to maintain a common-law lien upon logs in his possession under a contract for the cutting, hauling, and driving of the same, when he has failed to comply substantially with the terms of his contract.—Haughton v. Busch, 101 Mich. 267.

¶ 61. Where, through a vendee's failure to remove within the time stipulated logs cut under contract, they revert to the vendor, the vendee, in replevin for the logs by the vendor's assignee, cannot assert a special property in them by way of lien for his labor.—Gamble v. Gates, 97 Mich. 465.

§ 14. Discharge of lien.

Waiver of lien, see ante § 11.

Waiver of lien by parting with possession, see ante § 12.

Burden of proof of discharge, see post § 24.

¶ 62. Payment by owner to contractor of amount agreed for work does not discharge liens of contractor's laborers, which liens hold to the amount of the contract price. The log-owner must guard against loss by informing himself whether or not the laborers have been paid.—Federspiel v. Johnstone, 87 Mich. 303.

§ 15. Persons entitled.

¶ 63. Whether the Sess. L. 1881, Act No. 145, in declaring that the word "person" or "persons" in the first section thereof (How. St., § 8412) shall be interpreted to include cooks, blacksmiths, artisans and all others usually employed in performing such labor and services, would operate to give a lien to cooks, blacksmiths, etc., between whom and the owner there exist no contract relations, quære.—Shaw v. Bradley, 59 Mich. 199.

¶ 64. An independent contractor, that is, one who enters into a contract with the owner of logs to drive and deliver them, is entitled to a lien under Sess. L. 1881, Act No. 145.—Shaw v. Bradley, 59 Mich. 199.

¶ 65. Laws 1887, Act No. 229, giving a lien for labor or services in manufacturing lumber, is not confined to persons who perform personal labor under the contract.—Phillips v. Freyer, 80 Mich. 254.

¶ 66. The Log Lien Law (Laws 1887, Act No. 229) does not apply to the case of a contractor for hauling logs, who has not performed personally any of the labor for which payment is claimed.—Kieldsen v. Wilson, 77 Mich. 45, overruled in Phillips v. Freyer, 80 Mich. 254.

¶ 67. An employee of one operating a sawmill and a farm, whose time is kept but not apportioned, is entitled to a lien upon the products of the mill for the labor performed thereon, and to that end may estimate the time devoted to that branch of the work.—Menery v. Backus, 107 Mich. 329.

§ 16. Persons subject to lien.

Liens for labor on logs of several owners in mass, see also post ¶ 79.

Necessity of debt and judgment against employer to sustain lien against purchaser of the logs, see post ¶ 99.

Buyer from log owner of logs at mill for sawing, see ante ¶¶ 43, 45.

Issues open to intervening purchaser, see post § 23.

Propriety of judgment in personam, see post § 27.

Estoppel to hold purchaser from lienor in trover, see also Estoppel ¶ 141.

¶ 68. Where a contract for the sale of stumpage permits the vendee to have the logs manufactured, and consequently to create a lien upon them for the labor, the vendor, in subsequently dealing with the vendee's assignee with regard to the sawed lumber, is bound at his peril to ascertain whether the lien has been satisfied or waived, or whether the assignee has such possession of the lumber as to warrant the inference that no lien then exists; and he cannot claim the rights of a bona fide purchaser under the assignee's mere formal oral transfer to him of the lumber in consideration of a pre-existing debt for the purchase price of the logs.—Chadwick v. Broadwell, 27 Mich. 6.

¶ 69. The lien for cutting logs provided by Laws 1873, Act No. 185, could not be enforced as against those who had purchased from the debtor without notice of the claimant's lien as shown by his petition on file or by his actual possession.—Haifley v. Haynes, 37 Mich. 535.

¶ 70. Where a contract for sawing logs provided that the quantity sawed was to be determined by the sales or inspection bills at the place of shipment, it was held that any possession that might be taken by purchasers of the sawed lumber, as the inspection proceeded, must be regarded as only inchoate and conditional until payment should be made for the sawing, and that purchasers participating in the transaction and necessarily apprised of the lien were not wronged by its being insisted upon.—Chadwick v. Broadwell, 27 Mich. 6.

¶ 70a. It must be presumed that a contract for the purchase of posts, poles and ties is entered into with full knowledge of the rights of a laborer to a lien on forest products for labor thereon, upon the employers' default, under the Log Lien Law and to enforce the same where such contract provides for advances or payment in instalments as the work progresses up to 50 per cent of the contract price for ties and poles piled at the bank of the landing, to be estimated by the purchaser's inspector, and the remaining 50 per cent at delivery on board the vessel, all advances to be secured by a "bill of sale on cedar standing or cut on lands from which timber is to be cut."—Hughes v. Hughes, 197 Mich. 690.

§ 17. Charges covered by lien.

¶ 71. A contract for manufacturing lumber from logs was held to give a lien for the saw-bill, notwithstanding a provision for the payment of the bill for sawing "as often as once a month after the lumber is delivered out of said mill."—Chadwick v. Broadwell, 27 Mich. 6.

¶ 72. Laws 1887, Act No. 229 (How. St., §§ 8427a-8427p), which gives a lien for labor and services upon logs, lumber, etc., covers a claim for shingle bands furnished a contractor for the manufacture of shingles.—Bourgette v. Williams, 73 Mich. 208.

¶ 73. How. St., § 8427a, gives a lien for hauling logs and timber but not for hauling from the mills manufactured lumber.—Villenuve v. Sines, 92 Mich. 556.

¶ 74. Under How. St., § 8427a, which gives one who performs "any labor or service" a lien therefor, the owner of a team let for a stated time at a stipulated price to a laborer or contractor is not entitled to a lien for such price.—Mable v. Sines, 92 Mich. 545.

¶ 75. Under the statute (How. St., § 8427a) giving a lien for "cutting, skidding, falling, hauling, scaling, banking, driving, running, rafting or booming any logs," etc., recovery may be had for labor in "cutting, skidding, hauling, chopping, sawing, swamping, loading and falling."—Grand Rapids Chair Co. v. Runnels, 77 Mich. 104.

§ 18. Extent of lien; property subject.

Inception and source of the lien, see also ante ¶ 27.

Retention of too many logs as affecting right to lien, see ante ¶ 38.

Persons entitled and subject to lien, see ante §§ 15, 16.

Charges and items for which lien may be had, see ante § 17.

Cost of separating logs as item covered by lien, see also ante ¶ 39.

Verdict for proper portion of claim, see post § 26.

¶ 76. One who saws a quantity of logs for another has a lien on any part of the lumber for the whole bill, where the contract was entire.—Hughes v. Tanner, 96 Mich. 113.

¶ 77. Where shingles manufactured by plaintiff out of defendants' lumber under a continuous contract at so much per 1,000 were mingled and sold by defendants without regard to the time of their manufacture, plaintiff's lien for labor done after the time up to which he had received pay was held to apply to shingles manufactured before that time.—Craddock v. Dwight, 85 Mich. 587.

¶ 78. A laborer who has performed work on a drive of logs belonging to different owners cannot enforce his whole lien upon the logs belonging to one or more of such owners, and he can have his lien enforced against a particular owner's logs only so far as he shows the amount of labor expended upon the logs of that owner.—Appleman v. Myre, 74 Mich. 359.

¶ 79. Where the owners of adjoining timber lands enter into several agreements with a logging contractor, and the agreements do not indicate that any confusion of the work of the several owners is contemplated, a workman who is employed under the various contracts, no separate account being kept of the labor performed by him upon the logs of each owner, will not be permitted to assert a lien for labor against the entire quantity of logs produced; the labor not being such as must have been bestowed on mingled logs in a mass.—McGuire v. McCallum, 110 Mich. 91.

¶ 80. In an action of attachment under Comp. Laws, 1897, §§ 10756-10799, to enforce a claim for labor performed on lumber, the statement of the lien, as well as the affidavit and writ, recites that the lien is claimed "for work and labor performed by Chas. Becherl in wheeling and shoving the following described property." Plaintiff's wife was to cook for the men and the services of both was to be $2.25 per day. The earnings of both were $174.94, of which plaintiff received $87.16, which he gave his wife as her share. Held, that plaintiff had a lien for $87.78.—Becherl v. Plutchak, 171 Mich. 299.

§ 19. Statement of lien and affidavit.

Descriptions in the petition, see post § 23.

Evidence to supply omitted date of filing, see post ¶ 118.

Effect of omission of affidavit to state by whom labor was done, see also post ¶ 129.

Filing statement of lien as prerequisite to attachment, see Attachment § 4, ¶ 12.
Averments in affidavits for attachment, see Attachment § 30.
Needlessness of inventory in log lien attachment, see Attachment § 54.
Provisions requiring statement, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14844.
Form and requisites of the statement, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14845.
Time for filing lien statement, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14846.
Recording, filing and copies of statements and fees for same, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14858.

¶ 81. Statements of lien are as much a part of the proceeding and as essential as the affidavit for attachment; and if the two, taken together, show that the claims of several claimants who have joined in the proceeding are each less than $100, it is sufficient to give the court jurisdiction, though it is better practice to show the fact in the affidavit also.—Wiggins v. Houghton, 89 Mich. 468.

¶ 82. The filing of the statement is sufficiently shown by an averment in the affidavit for attachment that a statement of lien required by law was on a specified date filed with the clerk of the county where the labor was performed.—Wiggins v. Houghton, 89 Mich. 468.

¶ 83. Where, under a continuous contract for the manufacture of shingles, periodical statements of amounts due were made and time acceptances received thereon, the thirty days within which, under Laws 1887, Act No. 229, a statement of lien was to be filed did not begin to run from the date when each statement of the amount due was rendered.—Craddock v. Dwight, 85 Mich. 587.

¶ 84. A statement of lien sworn to before a notary public is not invalid because it has no caption.—Sullivan v. Hall, 86 Mich. 7.

¶ 85. A statement of lien sworn to before a notary public is not invalid because it does not show in its jurat or otherwise the county where the oath was administered.—Sullivan v. Hall, 86 Mich. 7.

¶ 86. A statement of lien sworn to before a notary public is not invalid because the notary subsequently appears as claimant's attorney to enforce the lien.—Sullivan v. Hall, 86 Mich. 7.

¶ 87. A log lien is filed within 30 days after the last day's labor was performed where the testimony shows that the plaintiff lienor worked on the logs continuously for six months, except for a short lay-off at the employer's request, that lienor was paid in full for the last three months, but no final settlement made for the balance due for the previous work.—Hammond v. Pullman, 129 Mich. 567.

¶ 88. Plaintiff brought an action of attachment under Comp. Laws 1897, §§ 10756-10799, to enforce a claim for labor performed on some lumber belonging to certain defendants under a contract made with the principal defendant. Held, that property described in the lien filed as "about 700,000 feet of maple, beech, elm, and basswood lumber (the same being lumber that was sawed by Gustave Plutchak for S. Crawford & Sons and now piled near said Pluchak mill in Cedarville township) in the county of Menominee," is sufficient to continue the lien beyond the thirty days from the date of the last day's labor.—Becherl v. Plutchak, 171 Mich. 299.

§ 20. ——Combining lien claims.

Lien of one of several claimants, see also ante ¶ 80.

¶ 89. Under Laws 1887, Act No. 229 (How. St., § 8427a et seq.), any number of persons each having claims under $100 may appoint as their agent one of the claimants against the same products, though his claim exceeds $100.—Wiggins v. Houghton, 89 Mich. 468; Villenuve v. Sines, 92 Mich. 556.

¶ 90. Claims for log liens aggregating $200 are properly united in a suit by one of the claimants whose claim is $133.20.—Villenuve v. Sines, 92 Mich. 556.

¶ 91. Comp. L. 1897, § 10762, relating to the consolidating of labor claims in one log-lien, was evidently designed for the benefit of those whose claims were individually less than $100, and not for the benefit of those who might have claims exceeding that sum.—Van Slyck v. Arseneau, 140 Mich. 154.

¶ 92. A statement of a labor claim for over $100 filed under the Log-Lien Law (Comp. L. 1897, § 10757), is not invalid, even though an attempt was made to include other claims in the same statement.—Van Slyck v. Arseneau, 140 Mich. 154.

¶ 93. Under Comp. Laws 1897, § 10762, providing that two or more persons claiming a lien for labor on forest products may unite their claims and designate one of their number as agent to bring suit, which claim shall be considered as one lien, such authority to sue is not in reality an assignment and can be conferred orally.—Craig v. Brown, 171 Mich. 256.

¶ 94. Compliance with statutory provisions in all respects is required in proceedings to enforce a lien upon logs, etc.—Appleman v. Myre, 74 Mich. 359.

¶ 95. In an action to recover for running defendant's logs which were obstructing the stream, it is not necessary to make B. a party plaintiff, though plaintiff had agreed to drive B.'s logs as well as his own, the actual cost thereof to be divided pro rata between them, since B. was not a partner and the only result to him would be that his share would be reduced if recovery was had in the present action.—Bellows v. Crane Lumber Co., 131 Mich. 630.

¶ 96. The statutory action of assumpsit for breaking a log jam lies, if at all, against the owner of the logs and not against those whom he has hired to run them; it is the owner's duty to see that they do not obstruct the watercourse.—Butterfield v. Gilchrist, 53 Mich. 22.

¶ 97. In proceedings to enforce a lien on logs the appearance and plea of a claimant does not waive previous jurisdictional defects in the proceedings, where the judgment is in form against the logs and there is no judicial determination that the claimant is the sole owner of them.—Two Hundred Thousand Feet of Logs v. Sias, 43 Mich. 356.

¶ 98. In proceedings under the Log Lien Law against one claiming under a tax title, the real owner of the premises may intervene and attack the validity of such title, where the possession of the holder thereof was such only as was incident to cutting and removing the timber from the lands. Such a case is not within the rule precluding the litigation of title to realty in a personal action.—Cook v. Cook, 106 Mich. 164.

¶ 99. Before the plaintiff in proceedings by attachment under the Log Lien Law, Comp. Laws 1897, § 10756 et seq., as amended, How. 2nd Ed., § 13843 et seq., can subject the property of the purchaser of logs, with whom he has no contractual relations, to a lien under the statute for labor, it is incumbent upon him to show himself entitled to, and obtain a judgment against, his employer.—Hughes v. Hughes, 197 Mich. 690.

¶ 100. Where a lumbering contract is breached by a failure to pay for work done the contractor may, upon filing a proper statement of lien under the Log Lien Law, Comp. Laws 1897, § 10756 et seq., How. 2nd Ed., § 13843 et seq., either sue upon a quantum meruit under the statute or for a breach of contract irrespective of the statute.—La Vasser v. Chesbrough Lumber Co., 190 Mich. 403.

§ 22. ——Notice and service.

Allegations as to giving and manner of notice, see post § 23.
Sufficiency of service and return in attachment proceedings, see Attachment §§ 71, 80, 83, 86.
General law of process, see Process.

¶ 101. Under Laws 1881, Act No. 145, an owner's logs cannot be seized to pay the debt of his contractor or other person without reasonable notice and an opportunity of contesting the suit.—Reilly v. Stephenson, 62 Mich. 509.

¶¶ 102, 103. Where a purchaser of standing timber, the title to which was retained by the land-owner until the purchase-price was paid, sold the logs to a corporation, which acquired all of his interest in the same before the logs were attached at the suit of his workmen under the Log Lien Law, and notice was served on the corporation, but not upon the land-owner, who had not then been paid for the timber, and, after making such payment, the corporation replevied the logs from the sheriff, the failure to serve notice upon the land-owner will not defeat such lien proceedings in the replevin suit.—Grand Rapids Chair Co. v. Runnels, 77 Mich. 104.

§ 23. ——Pleading and issues.

Sufficiency of the statement and affidavit, see ante § 19.
Questions triable on petition to dissolve attachment, see Attachment § 121.
General law of pleading, see Pleading.
Form and requisites of declaration, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14853.

¶ 104. A petition under Comp. L. 1871, §§ 1662-3 (How. St., § 2038), to enforce a lien on logs is fatally defective if it does not allege the jurisdictional fact that they are within the county where the suit is begun.—Two Hundred Thousand Feet of Logs v. Sias, 43 Mich. 356.

¶ 105. Where a petition to enforce a lien on logs alleged that the petitioner had run the logs to a certain boom, held, that the court could not take judicial notice that the boom was within the county where the suit was begun so as to cure the omission of the averment that the logs were within the county and therefore subject to the jurisdiction.—Two Hundred Thousand Feet of Logs v. Sias, 43 Mich. 356.

¶ 106. A lien cannot be enforced upon logs not described in the writ or declaration.—Appleman v. Myre, 74 Mich. 359.

¶ 107. An allegation in a declaration under Laws 1873, Act No. 185, that the plaintiffs, on a day named, "caused to be mailed to each of said defendants a notice of the filing of said petition or statement, as required by the act aforesaid," is not an explicit statement of the service of such notice, "by depositing the same in the postoffice directed to the owner of the logs or timber, his agent or attorney, at his or their place of residence, and paying the full postage thereon," which is the mode of service by mail expressly specified by the statute.—Clark v. Adams, 33 Mich. 159.

¶ 108. In assumpsit to recover for expenses in clearing the way for driving logs through the defendant's drive under Comp. L. 1897, § 5075, the declaration should state the facts which constituted the cause of action.—Doyle v. Pelton, 134 Mich. 398.

¶ 109. In an action of attachment under the Log Lien Law for services performed by plaintiff in driving defendant's logs, an unliquidated claim made by a third person who had logs in the river above plaintiff's drive, and who, in consequence of plaintiff's not putting on a sufficient force to keep the river unobstructed, put men upon plaintiff's drive, cannot be shown defensively under the general issue without notice.—Shaw v. Bradley, 59 Mich. 199.

¶ 110. The intervening owner by purchase of property attached under the Log Lien Law, Comp. Laws 1897, § 10756 et seq., as amended, How. 2nd Ed., § 13843 et seq., who appears to contest the validity of a claimed lien for labor has the right, in connection therewith, to contest the amount claimed to be due from the employer, so far as it may have any bearing upon the amount of any lien claimed against his property.—Hughes v. Hughes, 197 Mich. 690.

§ 24. ——Evidence and presumptions.

Presumption that purchaser takes with notice of liability to lien, see also ante ¶ 70a.
General law of evidence, see Evidence.
Cross-examination as to wrongful jamming of stream, see Examination of Witnesses ¶ 300.
Order of proof and proper matter in chief, see Trial, V, B.

¶ 111. One who buys from the owner lumber in a sawyer's possession has the burden in replevin against the sawyer of showing that the lien for sawing was extinguished.—Germain v. Central Lumber Co., 116 Mich. 245.

¶ 112. Where the issue is whether or not a lien on lumber for sawing was waived by receiving notes in payment or by surrendering possession of the lumber, the sawyer's testimony that he did not intend a waiver is not admissible.—Germain v. Central Lumber Co., 116 Mich. 245.

¶ 113. It was error to permit plaintiff in an action to enforce a lien on logs to introduce in evidence the affidavit, writ of attachment, and return of service, the same having no bearing upon any question to be submitted to the jury.—Dillon v. Howe, 98 Mich. 168.

¶ 114. In an action involving the existence of a lien for services, a full showing should be had as to the items that go to make up the claim, and full cross-examination should be permitted.—Hall v. Tittabawassee Boom Co., 51 Mich. 377.

¶ 115. In an action to recover for running defendant's logs which were obstructing the stream, it is competent for plaintiff to show what part of defendant's logs plaintiff had to run and drive in order to bring their own logs down.—Bellows v. Crane Lumber Co., 131 Mich. 630.

¶ 116. In an action to recover for running defendant's logs which were an obstruction to the stream, plaintiff may show that hardwood logs, such as defendant's, put in the river early in the spring will not float readily and that because of this a custom has grown up of not putting them in the river until the softwood logs have gone down, the purpose of such testimony being to account for the large amount of work required to run the logs in question.—Bellows v. Crane Lumber Co., 131 Mich. 630.

¶ 117. A log lien under Comp. L. 1897, § 10756 is unaffected by a subsequent sale; and testimony by an intervening purchaser that he has paid the full purchase price is properly included.—Kangas v. Boulton, 127 Mich. 539.

¶ 118. Where, in an action to enforce a log lien, a certified copy of the lien was introduced in evidence which failed to show the date of filing, oral proof of the date of delivery to the clerk for filing is admissible.—Harris v. Doyle, 130 Mich. 470.

¶ 119. In proceedings by attachment under the Log Lien Law, Comp. Laws 1897, § 10756 et seq., as amended, How. 2nd Ed., § 13843 et seq., against the employer and purchaser of posts, poles and ties for the enforcement of a lien for labor, evidence held to present an inference from which the jury might conclude that the poles, ties and posts attached were what plaintiff had worked upon.—Hughes v. Hughes, 197 Mich. 690.

¶ 120. In proceedings by attachment under the Log Lien Law, Comp. Laws 1897, § 10756 et seq., as amended, How. 2nd Ed., § 13843 et seq., against employer and purchaser of posts, poles and ties for enforcement of a lien for labor, where plaintiff, a camp foreman, furnished no definite data by which the jury could determine and differentiate between the time spent on the purchaser's timber and at other things, held that a verdict for $893, or $10 less than plaintiff's entire claim, was based upon mere conjecture.—Hughes v. Hughes, 197 Mich. 690.

¶ 121. Where one who is allowed by way of accommodation to bank logs on another's ground has to put afloat the latter's logs in order to get his own out, he is not necessarily entitled to charge for the service unless it is so agreed. And to fix the relative rights and obligations of the parties a jury may consider the agreement or circumstances under which the permission was given, the extra labor and expense in managing the logs occasioned by the additional quantity, and such other facts as would fairly tend to aid them in arriving at a proper understanding of the entire case.—Peters v. Gallagher, 37 Mich. 407.

§ 25. ——Jury questions and instructions.

Court and jury questions in actions on contracts generally, see Contracts, X, C.

Instruction in replevin as to right to logs, see Replevin, IV.

¶ 122. The reasonableness of the lien claim for driving logs is for the jury, and they cannot be instructed as to their conclusions thereon.—Hall v. Tittabawassee Boom Co., 51 Mich. 377.

§ 26. ——Verdicts and findings.

Conjectural verdict as to amount, see post ¶ 120.

Sufficiency of verdict to support lien judgment as distinguished from personal judgment, see also post ¶ 128.

General law of verdicts and findings, see Verdicts and Findings.

Statutory requisites of the findings, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14854.

¶ 123. A finding that certain old logs and some new ones that defendant admitted contracting for were cut more than 30 days before claim made with no finding as to other logs in controversy, is equivalent to a finding of no lien under instructions that there could be no lien on logs cut without authority or more than 30 days before claim; where there was a dispute as to certain of the logs whether they were cut under a contract or not or subject to any lien.—Demars v. Conrad, 73 Mich. 151.

¶ 124. Where a contractor takes proceedings under the Log Lien Law of 1887 (Act No. 229 against the log-owner, with whom he claims to have made a contract for their hauling, and recovers a verdict for the amount claimed to be due on said contract, the fact that his nonperformance of the labor in person deprives him of a lien under said statute will not affect said verdict.—Kieldsen v. Wilson, 77 Mich. 45.

¶ 125. A contractor's bookkeeper, who had drawn for plaintiff a time order for his work, testified that he included therein a portion of another laborer's time, but did not state how much, and gave no reason for including such time. Time orders were given each man separately. Held, that the jury might find plaintiff entitled to the amount of the order less what had been paid thereon.—Federspiel v. Johnstone, 87 Mich. 303.

§ 27. ——Judgment and relief.

Execution on the judgment, see post § 28.

General law of judgments, see Judgments.

Costs on appeal where judgment is sustained as personal judgment but does not support lien, see Costs ¶ 401.

Irregularities in proceedings to establish a lien as affecting the operation of the decree as res adjudicata, see Former Adjudication ¶ 40.

Judgment for quantum meruit in lien proceeding as bar to action for breach of contract, see Former Adjudication ¶ 220.

¶ 126. Laws 1873, Act No. 185, authorized no personal judgment as for damages, but simply a proceeding in rem to enforce a lien, and those who avail themselves of it must show that they have strictly followed its provisions.—Clark v. Adams, 33 Mich. 159.

¶ 127. Sess. L. 1881, Act No. 145 (How. St. §§ 8412-8427), authorizes a personal judgment as well where a lien is found to exist as where the amount found due is not a lien upon the property.—Shaw v. Bradley, 59 Mich. 199.

¶ 128. A judgment declaring a lien upon defendant's logs cannot be sustained as a lien where the jury failed to find that the sum found due was for labor and services performed upon the logs described in the declaration, or was a lien thereon and where the verdict did not discriminate between charges, and there was some testimony opposed to a lien.—Demars v. Conrad, 73 Mich. 151.

¶ 129. The failure of one of several plaintiffs in several respective log-lien suits against the same debtor, where the attachments were levied upon the same logs and made returnable at the same hour, at which time the debtor appeared and joined issue in each suit, to state in his affidavit by whom the labor was performed for which recovery was sought, did not invalidate a judgment in a suit in replevin subsequently brought, for the return of the property. It lessened, however, the lien upon such logs in the amount of the judgment in such plaintiff's favor.—Grand Rapids Chair Co. v. Runnels, 77 Mich. 104.

¶ 130. The illegal taxation of an attorney fee in a log-lien suit, under Laws 1887, Act No. 147, will not invalidate the judgment, nor interfere with the lien, except in so far as the illegal excess of costs may reduce it in amount.—Grand Rapids Chair Co. v. Runnels, 77 Mich. 104.

§ 28. ——Executions.

General law of executions, see Executions.
Executions based on attachments in general, see Executions § 8.
Estoppel to urge defects in execution sale, see Executions § 95.

¶ 131. A writ of execution levied upon logs after judgment in a log-lien suit is valid where the logs were described therein as those mentioned in plaintiff's declaration, since such logs were sufficiently pointed out to the officer who held them under his attachment.—Grand Rapids Chair Co. v. Runnels, 77 Mich. 104.

¶ 132. After the levy of an execution issued upon a judgment in a log-lien suit brought under Laws 1887, Act No. 229, upon the logs, and the posting of notices of sale, the officer holds the property under such levy, and not under the prior attachment.—Grand Rapids Chair Co. v. Runnels, 77 Mich. 104.

FORMER ADJUDICATION.

TREATS of the general law of res adjudicata as distinguished from collateral attack (see Judgments, VII) and law of the case (see Appeal, XII, G, XV; Courts, IV). Not only the effect of a judgment as a bar of the cause of action or defenses to it, but also its effect as an estoppel of particular facts is treated here. The general law of Judgments is treated in that topic, and the merger of crimes in judgment and bar of second prosecutions is treated in Crimes, I, D. The effect to be given to foreign judgments and to those of sister states under the "full faith and credit clause" is treated in Foreign Judgments.

Verity ascribed to records as such, see Records; and see also Judgments, VII.
Abatement of second action brought pending first, see Abatement § 10 et seq.
Full faith and credit clause applied to judgments of other states, see Foreign Judgments, II.
Estoppel or conclusion by papers in the case or by proceedings therein of an admissive or representative character, see Estoppel, III; and see also Stipulations.

¶ 1. The judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction directly upon the point is, as a plea, a bar, and as evidence conclusive between the same parties and their privies upon the same matter directly in question in another court.—Wales v. Lyon, 2 Mich. 276; Prentiss v. Holbrook, 2 Mich. 372.

¶ 2. A judgment is res adjudicata upon the points directly involved and determined therein in a subsequent suit between the same parties.—Harris v. Clark, 74 Mich. 334.

¶ 3. A matter once fully adjudicated is conclusively adjudicated as between parties and privies.—Hazen v. Reed, 30 Mich. 331.

¶ 4. An adjudication is conclusive in respect to (1) the subject-matter of the litigation, and (2) the point of fact or law, or both, necessarily settled in determining the issue on the subject-matter.—Jacobson v. Miller, 41 Mich. 90.

¶ 5. Judgments are admissible in evidence when the same subject-matter again comes in controversy between the same parties.—Phillips v. Jamieson, 51 Mich. 153.

¶ 6. Parties to a controversy cannot, after judgment, revive it in another court and cause, in order to raise again the questions already in issue and adjudicated.—Hudson v. Detroit Superior Court Judge, 42 Mich. 239.

§ 2. Basis of the doctrine.

¶ 7. The reason why judgments of courts having jurisdiction are conclusive on parties and privies is because such parties have had an opportunity to assert or defend their rights in the court giving judgment.—Axford v. Graham, 57 Mich. 422.

¶ 8. Estoppel by a previous judgment does not depend on its justice, but on the fact that the merits have been passed upon.—Fifield v. Edwards, 39 Mich. 264.

§ 3. Judgment as evidence without estoppel.

¶ 9. A judgment in ejectment in favor of A. against B. is not prima facie evidence, as a defense in an action for the purchase price of land by C., that B., who had been in possession under a deed from C., obtained no title by that deed, unless it is shown that C.'s title was in fact litigated in the ejectment suit.—Reeves v. Kelly, 30 Mich. 132.

¶ 10. In trover by the sheriff against persons who have converted to their own use a growing crop on which he had levied an attachment, the judgment in attachment, though rendered after the conversion, is admissible to show the amount of plaintiff's lien.—Grover v. Buck, 34 Mich. 519.

¶ 11. A defendant sued for work done in repairing her house, for which plaintiff had previously sued her husband, may put in evidence the judgment obtained against her husband. Whether it would operate as an estoppel or not, it was relevant.—McCausland v. King, 60 Mich. 70.

¶ 12. Although an indemnitor is not notified of the former suit, a judgment against the indemnitee is prima facie evidence of the amount of the damages for which the indemnitor is liable.—Clark v. Clune, 172 Mich. 323.

¶ 13. While in an action to reform a lease upon the ground of mistake a decree and the proceedings leading to it are not conclusive as against a surety not made a party thereto; they are prima facie evidence against the surety of the mistake for which reformation was decreed, and cast the burden upon him of showing that the minds of the parties met as to time of payment as specified in the lease.—Stevens v. Pendleton, 83 Mich. 342, modified on reconsideration of record in 85 Mich. 137, holding it was for the jury.

¶ 14. A judgment for return in favor of defendant in replevin is not evidence of title to the property in question as against one not a party to the proceeding and who has possession of the property, but is not shown to have acquired such possession or to claim title under either party.—Rathbun v. Ranney, 14 Mich. 382.

¶ 15. A replevin judgment does not show general ownership as against any one.—Rathbun v. Ranney, 14 Mich. 382.

¶ 16. Records of other suits between the same parties involving the same subject-matter and having some bearing upon the question whether or not a settlement was made, and of defendant's understanding thereon, are admissible.—Baumier v. Antiau, 79 Mich. 509.

¶ 17. The record of a suit upon a decree in which a vessel was sold for repairs is not evidence against the insurers to prove an acceptance of abandonment of the vessel, where they were not made parties to such suit.—Richelieu & O. Nav. Co. v. Boston Marine Ins. Co., 136 U. S. 408, 34 L. ed. 398, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 934.

¶ 18. A judgment for the United States on an official bond is admissible as prima facie evidence of liability on a collateral bond of indemnity given to the surety.—Lee v. Wisner, 38 Mich. 82.

¶ 19. In an action by a depositor against a bank for moneys paid out on checks signed in his name by another person, direct evidence of the incidents of another suit brought by the plaintiff against that person, but to which the bank had not been a party, was inadmissible to affect this litigation.—American Nat. Bank v. Bushey, 45 Mich. 135.

II. ADJUDICATIONS OPERATIVE AS BAR OR ESTOPPEL.

A. IN GENERAL.

§ 4. Judicial nature of decision.

Award by arbitrators as bar or estoppel, see Arbitration § 19.

Finding of referee in bankruptcy, see also Bankruptcy § 19.

Decision and order of claims commissioners, see Estates of Decedents § 187.

Conclusiveness upon courts of rulings of fraternal benefit association, see Fraternal Association, VIII.

¶ 20. An order of a city council vacating a street is an adjudication in rem and is res adjudicata of the matter decided.—Detroit Real Estate Co. v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 137 Mich. 108.

§ 5. Regularity and validity of the adjudication.

Conclusiveness of unjust judgment, see ante ¶ 8.

Effect of mere irregularities, see post § 7.

Effect of voluntary submission to irregular or excessive proceeding, see post § 6.

Finality of the decision and decisiveness of the merits, see post II, B.

Effect of judgments not appealed from, see post § 26.

Federal court decisions affecting probate matters, see post ¶ 297.

Pleading jurisdiction in plea of bar or estoppel, see post § 94.

Requisites of jurisdiction to bring party under judgment, see Courts § 39 et seq.

Estoppel to object to jurisdiction, see Courts § 83.

Collateral attacks on judgments, see Judgments, VII.

Non-estoppel by unlawful collusive divorce decree, see Divorce ¶ 376.

¶ 21. Previous proceedings that are void for want of jurisdiction do not bar like ones before a proper court.—In re Buddington, 29 Mich. 472; Basom v. Taylor, 39 Mich. 682.

¶ 22. A debt is not merged in a judgment until a valid judgment has been obtained upon it.—Wixom v. Stephens, 17 Mich. 518.

¶ 23. A judgment rendered in a court that by statute could have no jurisdiction over defendant's person is no bar to a suit in a competent court.—Basom v. Taylor, 39 Mich. 682.

¶ 24. As an executor cannot be sued in justice's court upon his liability for a creditor's distributive share (Comp. L. 1871, § 5250 (How. St. § 6815), a justice's judgment thereon against him is void, and is no bar to an action in the circuit court. The cases in which an executor, etc., may be sued enumerated.—Basom v. Taylor, 39 Mich. 682.

¶ 25. A child under fourteen years residing with her guardian in Livingston County was summoned to appear as a witness in Wayne County. At the trial she committed perjury, and was committed to the custody of a probation officer by the Probate Court of Wayne County. The Circuit Court of Wayne County upon habeas corpus refused to release the child. Held that since, under Act No. 6, Pub. Acts 1907, the Wayne County Probate Court had no jurisdiction to commit the child, the ruling of the circuit court did not render the case res adjudicata so as to preclude habeas corpus proceedings before the supreme court.—In re Mould, 162 Mich. 1.

¶ 26. Land was reserved by a treaty, by the force of which the title itself passed, and required no patent. Subsequently congress passed an act for the issue of a patent for the land reserved, to a person claiming to be assignee of the reservee, on proof being taken of the assignment. Proofs were taken, and patent issued. Held, that as the title was beyond the control of legislation, the act and proceedings under it could not be given in evidence for the purpose of showing that the assignor of the patentee bore the name of the reservee named in the treaty. They were res inter alios, and the proofs extrajudicial.—Campau v. Dewey, 9 Mich. 381.

¶ 27. A judgment in form against all of two or more joint debtors of whom only one was served with process does not extinguish the debt so as to bar a subsequent action thereon.—Hitchcock v. Frackelton, 116 Mich. 487.

¶ 28. Where suit was brought in the State of New York against two joint debtors, one of whom was not served with process, and did not appear in the action, and judgment in form was rendered against both under the joint debtor act, it was held that this judgment was not an extinguishment of the demand sued upon, and that an action brought subsequently in this state against the two was properly brought on the original demand instead of upon the judgment.—Bonesteel v. Todd, 9 Mich. 371.

¶ 29. Proceedings in rem bind every one, but they must have been commenced by the proper person.—Besançon v. Brownson, 39 Mich. 388.

¶ 30. A defendant in divorce is not estopped as to the main issue by a decree of divorce entered by his own procurement, since collusive divorces are unlawful.—Friend v. Friend, 53 Mich. 543.

¶¶ 31, 32. Judgment which is ineffectual by reason of a mistake in the name of one of the plaintiffs will not prevent them from bringing a new suit upon it.—Wixom v. Stephens, 17 Mich. 518.

§ 6. ——Voluntary submission to irregular or excessive jurisdiction.

Judgment as conclusive upon persons appearing specially to object to jurisdiction, see post § 56.

Collusive judgment against principal as affecting surety, see post § 72.

¶ 33. Although under How. St. § 8749, giving chancery a supervisory jurisdiction over assignments for creditors and authorizing it to make orders as to management and disposition of property of the assignor, and for the recovery of property from third persons on application of the assignee, there is no conclusion of a third person to claim his property from the assignee in a court of law; yet if such third person voluntarily submits his claim to the jurisdiction of chancery under the assignment proceedings, the decision there is binding.—Sawyer v. McAdie, 70 Mich. 386.

§ 7. ——Mere irregularities and errors.

Effect of wrong reasons for a correct decision, see post ¶ 132.

Errors and irregularities as ground for collateral attack, see Judgments, VII.

¶ 34. If one sues in assumpsit for the value of chattels, where by strict rules only an action of tort would lie, and obtains judgment, the judgment will determine the matters in issue as conclusively as though the proper action had been brought.—Jennings v. Sheldon, 44 Mich. 92.

¶ 35. The record of a judgment in attachment against a firm, where partnership property was attached and one partner served, ought not to be rejected as evidence on the ground that the first name of the partner not served was different from that given to him in the writ.—Hubbardston Lumber Co. v. Covert, 35 Mich. 254.

¶ 36. In replevin against an officer having an attachment, the proceedings in the attachment suit are admissible even though one of the plaintiffs was misnamed therein and in the judgment, if it is also shown that an amendment to correct this error has been allowed.—Barmon v. Clippert, 58 Mich. 377.

¶ 37. Where, in ejectment by one of the heirs of the remainder-man against the purchaser of the estate of the life tenant and of her interest in the land as another of the heirs of the remainder-man, no objection is made by defendant on account of the non-joinder of his wife as a codefendant, and he is allowed compensation for improvements by him made after the termination of the life-estate, which he accepts and retains, and is denied compensation for improvements made prior to that event, such non-joinder does not void the proceedings in the ejectment suit, and the same are res judicata as to a claim by defendant for compensation for such prior improvements, made in a partition suit brought by the plaintiff, in which the wife of defendant in ejectment is joined as a defendant.—Curtis v. Fowler, 99 Mich. 240.

¶ 38. Where an agricultural society which had sold its land without applying to the circuit court for authority as required by How. St. § 2308, filed a bill in chancery, before it became aware of the necessity of such application, to quiet, subject to the contract of sale, the title to certain of the lots sold, held, that a decree quieting the title and confirming the sale, was binding, not having been appealed from, against the vendee who had been made a party.—Going v. Oakland County Agricultural Soc., 117 Mich. 230.

¶ 39. Although a bill of interpleader is filed where there is no ground for it, the defendants are bound by a decree on the merits if they do not appeal.—Atkinson v. Flannigan, 70 Mich. 639.

¶ 40. While a mere trespasser is not entitled to a lien upon logs for labor and expenses as against the owner, the latter cannot, in replevin for the logs, deny upon that ground the validity of a lien established in proceedings under How. St. § 8427e et seq., wherein he was served, appeared, and defended the action.—Carr v. Brick, 113 Mich. 664.

¶ 41. Where by mistake a judgment entered on confession on a note is for less than the amount due, the note is nevertheless merged in the judgment, and the plaintiff cannot maintain a suit for the balance.—Town v. Smith, 14 Mich. 348.

§ 8. Equity decisions res adjudicata at law.

Voluntary submission to chancery jurisdiction, see also ante ¶ 33.
Law judgments as res adjudicata in equity, see post § 9.
Decree pro confesso as conclusive at law, see post § 21.
Identities of legal and equitable causes, see post III.
Decree as conclusive upon a law court of defenses and set-offs which might have been interposed, see post §§ 50, 51.
Equity decree as estoppel to question that decided matter was within equity jurisdiction, see also post ¶ 446.
Decrees in equity as res adjudicata of particular facts, see post § 87.
Necessity of pleading the former decree, see post § 94.
Right to sue for costs after denial in equity of set-off of costs, see also post ¶ 211.

¶ 42. A decree from which an appeal is not taken, against the complainant in a chancery action to enjoin the alteration by a municipality of the grade of a street, is res adjudicata in a subsequent action at law brought by him on the same grounds for the recovery of damages.—Labadie v. Village of Ford, 185 Mich. 402.

¶ 43. A decree in equity sustaining the validity of drain proceedings is conclusive upon that point in an action at law involving the same question.—Clark v. Wiles, 54 Mich. 323.

¶ 44. A decree for the complainant in a chancery proceeding in which the validity of a tax deed was directly involved, is a bar to a subsequent mandamus proceeding against the auditor general to cancel the same tax deed.—Hanchett v. Auditor General, 124 Mich. 424.

¶ 45. Where the supreme court in chancery has set aside a deed as forged, the grantee's administrator cannot bring an action at law against the grantor's attorney for the mutilation of such deed.—Bates v. Alpena Circuit Judge, 82 Mich. 91.

¶ 46. The files in a chancery suit, resulting in a decree declaring a deed executed by the complainant to one of the defendants to have been a mortgage, and decreeing a reconveyance by the other defendant, who had purchased the land with notice of the complainant's rights, are admissible as evidence, in a suit brought by the complainant against such purchaser to recover the value of wood cut by him from timber on said land, to establish plaintiff's title to the timber.—Clink v. Gunn, 90 Mich. 135.

¶ 47. Where a purchaser of land under a contract providing that payment should be forfeited in the event of his default, seeks to obtain relief in equity from the penalty of his default by bill for specific performance, and suffers his bill to be dismissed because of his refusal to pay the balance due upon the contract, he is thereafter estopped from maintaining an action at law to recover the forfeited payments and the prospective profits.—Lowrie v. Gourlay, 112 Mich. 641.

¶ 48. The dismissal of a bill to enjoin a suit in ejectment on the ground that the complainant has an equitable title, is res adjudicata as to the defense of the same equitable title in the trial of the ejectment suit. —Rausch v. Briefer, 138 Mich. 284.

§ 9. Judgments at law conclusive in equity.

Decrees of equity as res adjudicata at law, see ante § 8.

Finality of decision in mandamus to be conclusive in equity, see also post § 15.

Right to relitigate in equity defenses not asserted in prior mandamus proceeding, see post § 50.

Right to use as an equitable set-off a claim which might have been interposed in a prior action at law, see post § 51.

Necessity of pleading the former judgment, see post § 94.

Suits in equity for relief from judgments or to set them aside, see Judgments, VI.

Immunity of law judgments from collateral attack in equity, see Judgments, VII.

¶ 49. An insurance company which, upon the ground of misrepresentation as to the ownership of a mortgage, has unsuccessfully defended an action upon a policy, payable to the mortgagee as his interest may appear, cannot have the question retried in equity upon a bill to enjoin the collection of the judgment.—Farmers' Fire Ins. Co. v. Johnston, 113 Mich. 426.

¶ 50. Parties basing their defense in an ejectment suit upon alleged valid deeds found by the jury to have been forged will not be permitted to sue in equity upon the ground that they are void because of the forgery.—Cline v. Wixson, 128 Mich. 255.

¶ 51. A bill in equity does not lie to review alleged unlawful act of the officers of a city in revoking a license granted an itinerant trader, and to prevent his repeated arrest for selling without a license, where all questions involved were determined against the complainant in the circuit court on certiorari to review a conviction in justices' court for selling without a license, since the remedy at law by way of appeal from such conviction, of which he failed to avail himself, furnished a complete and adequate remedy.—Vernakes v. City of South Haven, 181 Mich. 274.

¶ 52. In a suit at law judgment was entered against garnishee defendants and a motion made by them to set aside the same, which motion was denied. Later said defendants filed a complaint to vacate said judgment and restrain the execution of same, and alleged that they were not indebted on the judgment obtained against them; that they omitted to file the disclosure in garnishment because of misrepresentations to them by the counsel of plaintiff in the suit at law; that they were prevented from having their default set aside solely by reasons of Circuit Court Rule 12; and that it was inequitable and unconscionable for plaintiff in the suit at law to collect said judgment. A demurrer was filed to said complaint. Held, said demurrer could not operate to admit said allegations where the findings of the law court were contrary to said allegations, the facts in said allegations being so passed upon by motions to vacate the law court judgment as to render the matters involved in the suit in equity res adjudicata.—Steele v. Bliss, 170 Mich. 175.

¶ 53. In cases where claims or defenses are of a purely equitable character, and therefore not properly cognizable at law, a judgment at law cannot be pleaded as res adjudicata in a suit in equity instituted to establish equitable rights.—Nash v. Morrell, 171 Mich. 658.

¶ 54. Complainant filed a bill to reform a note and mortgage on account of mistakes in omitting the amount of the indebtedness and in names of the parties. In a prior suit in a justice's court by complainant to replevin the mortgaged property, judgment was rendered for defendant. Held, the former judgment of the justice did not render the matter res adjudicata so as to preclude complainant's suit in equity, since the matter in issue in equity could not have been litigated in a court of law.—Nash v. Morrell, 171 Mich. 658.

¶ 55. A., who had already conveyed part of a lot to B., executed a warranty deed of the whole to C., relying on the scrivener's representations made in C.'s presence that C. would only take what was left, inasmuch as both A. and C. fully understood the matter; A., being sued by C. for breach of warranty, pleaded mistake and fraud, and the court charged that if the defense were made out C. would be entitled to nominal damages only; but substantial damages were recovered. Held, that the judgment would not bar suit in equity to reform the deed and enjoin collection of the judgment, as the relief sought was not available in the action at law, and that, if the facts stated were true, no damages should have been recovered in that action.—Bush v. Merriman, 87 Mich. 260.

¶ 56. A bill by the administratrix of a deceased husband against the widow to enforce specific performance of an ante-nuptial contract, to assert equitable estoppel, and for injunction against a suit for dower and proceedings for widow's allowances is not barred by proceedings in the probate court, decision against her and an appeal; since the relief sought in chancery is much more than could be decided by the probate court. —Carr v. Lyle, 126 Mich. 655.

¶ 57. A judgment in favor of the covenantee in an action for breach of warranty, wherein the defense was fraud and mistake in the drawing of the deed, is not res judicata so as to bar a proceeding in equity to have the deed reformed.—Bush v. Merriman, 87 Mich. 260.

¶ 58. A judgment on a note against a cestui que trust, who made it, obtained in an action begun by one to whom the trustee transferred the note after purchasing it and by garnishment of the trustee, is not res adjudicata on the right of the trustee to make such a purchase for his own interest when pleaded in a suit for an accounting; since the trustee's conduct was a matter for equitable cognizance and the rectitude of his conduct could not have been determined in the action on the note.—Petrie v. Badenoch, 102 Mich. 45.

¶ 59. The election of a plaintiff in ejectment to abandon the land and take judgment for its value without improvements does not operate to oust a court of equity of jurisdiction on a pending bill to declare defendant in ejectment entitled to a lien on the land by subrogation to a mortgage which has been paid by him, and to restrain sale under the judgment in ejectment. The court having jurisdiction of the parties and of the subject-matter of the suit under a general prayer for relief can make such a decree as equity demanded.—Taylor v. Roniger, 147 Mich. 99.

¶ 60. Decision in a mandamus proceeding precludes defeated party from suing in equity upon the ground of a defense that he omitted to make in the mandamus case.—State v. Sparrow, 89 Mich. 263.

¶ 61. A judgment in a law court was taken against the principal defendant and the garnishee defendants. The latter moved to vacate the judgment against them upon the ground that the plaintiff had fraudulently obtained same by representing to the garnishee defendants that he would not take judgment against them, thereby inducing them to refrain from appearing and defending and to allow the case to go by default. The circuit court denied said motion. Later defendant garnishees filed a bill in equity to set aside the judgment and restrain the execution upon the identical grounds urged in their said motion before the law court. Held, the bill should be denied, the matter being res adjudicata.—Steele v. Bliss, 170 Mich. 175.

§ 10. Criminal decisions in criminal cases.

Judgment as evidence without estoppel, see ante § 3.

Former conviction or acquittal of crime as bar to further prosecution, see Crimes, I, D.

Admissibility in a prosecution for perjury of the judgment in the case wherein the perjury was committed, see Indictment, VIII, B.

¶ 62. In criminal cases as well as in civil the rule applies that a fact determined is conclusive between the parties in subsequent prosecutions though the subject-matter and issues are not the same in all respects.—People v. Albers, 137 Mich. 678.

§ 11. Criminal decisions in civil proceedings.

Judgment as evidence without estoppel, see also ante § 3.

Proper scope and terms of judgments in criminal cases, see Indictment, XI.

¶ 63. A conviction in criminal proceedings is conclusive proof of probable cause unless procured by false or fraudulent testimony or other unlawful means, although the judgment of conviction was subsequently reversed by a higher court and plaintiff acquitted and discharged.—Thick v. Washer, 137 Mich. 155.

¶ 64. Plaintiff was arrested for violation of an ordinance and convicted. Upon appeal, the ordinance was held void and the conviction reversed. In an action for malicious prosecution based on the prosecution, held, that the conviction was conclusive proof of probable cause.—Thick v. Washer, 137 Mich. 155.

¶ 65. In an action for malicious prosecution the defendant may show the plaintiff's guilt of the offense notwithstanding an acquittal in the criminal prosecution.—Mack v. Sharp, 138 Mich. 448.

¶ 66. The acquittal in a justice's court, on the charge of violating a city ordinance in the constructing of a building within the fire limits of the city, is not res adjudicata of the question of the right of the municipality in issue in an injunction suit based on its threat to abate as a nuisance under such ordinance such building; since a greater degree of proof is required to convict in the criminal proceeding than is required to obtain relief in the civil action.—Micks v. Mason, 145 Mich. 212.

¶ 67. In an action for malicious prosecution for obstructing a highway, evidence of the former adjudication of the validity of the proceedings to lay out the highway is competent to show the good faith of the defendant in instituting the prosecution where he had knowledge of such adjudication.—Fowles v. Hayden, 129 Mich. 586.

¶ 68. Record of husband's conviction for drunkenness is admissible on the question of damages but not to prove the drunkenness in wife's action for wrongful sale of liquor to him by defendant.—Lucker v. Liske, 111 Mich. 683.

¶ 69. In a wife's action to recover for the wrongful sale of intoxicating liquor to her husband, the record of his conviction for drunkenness resulting proximately from such sale is admissible not to prove the fact of drunkenness, but to show the extent and nature of the injury suffered by plaintiff.—Lucker v. Liske, 111 Mich. 683.

¶ 70. In replevin the record of a criminal prosecution of the defendant upon complaint of the plaintiff, together with an entry in the minutes of the justice of the peace before whom it was prosecuted, that such prosecution was wilful, malicious and causeless was held inadmissible, being res inter alios. Evidence of a compromise of defendant's claim for damages for false imprisonment in said prosecution was also held irrelevant.—English v. Caldwell, 30 Mich. 362.

¶ 71. In an action on a promissory note the defense was that it was given by defendants to plaintiff to procure the release of a third person who was in jail upon a criminal charge on plaintiff's complaint. Held, that a discontinuance filed by the prosecuting attorney after the making of the note in suit, giving as a reason for not filing an information the absence of sufficient evidence to secure a conviction, was inadmissible as evidence for plaintiff.—Fosdick v. Van Arsdale, 74 Mich. 302.

¶ 72. The fact that a person engaged in an affray with another pleads guilty in a self-induced criminal proceeding is not conclusive in an action against him for assault and battery by his opponent, as such plea constitutes mere evidence of guilt, the weight of which is for the jury.—Anders v. Clover, 198 Mich. 763.

§ 12. Civil adjudications in criminal cases.

Criminal adjudications in civil cases, see ante § 11.

Civil adjudications in criminal cases, see post § 12.

Effect of civil recovery to bar prosecution for crime, see also Crimes § 18.

¶ 73. That plaintiff in a civil suit for assault and battery has recovered damages does not bar a criminal prosecution against him.—People v. Kenyon, 93 Mich. 19.

¶ 74. Prosecution for assault and battery is not barred by the victim's having recovered damages in a civil suit for the assault, etc.—People v. Kenyon, 93 Mich. 19.

¶ 75. Where a civil contempt proceeding has resulted in acquittal on the merits the same act will not be again punished as a criminal contempt; and that is true though the acquittal was in the circuit court having jurisdiction of the proceeding and the subsequent cause is in the supreme court.—City of Eaton Rapids v. Horner, 126 Mich. 52.

[Note. The conclusiveness and effect of probate court decisions is treated in Probate Courts, III, and in the various portions of Estates of Decedents; Guardianship; Insane Persons; and Wills, which deal with procedure. The conclusiveness of such orders and decrees is so intimately connected with the nature of the order itself that it has been thought unwise to attempt a separation of the cases to admit of classification in Former Adjudication. The effect of each of the various orders is therefore treated in its own specific place and the general conclusiveness of probate orders is treated in Probate Courts, III.]

¶ 76. Under a proceeding to determine the right of a parent or guardian to the care and custody of a child, the determination of the right by a court of competent jurisdiction will not be reviewed or set aside by another court exercising the same jurisdiction upon the same facts.—In re Mould, 162 Mich. 1.

¶ 77. A proper final adjudication on writ of habeas corpus, brought to determine the right of a parent or guardian to the care and custody of a child, conclusively determines all questions necessarily involved as between the same parties and upon the same state of facts.—Martin v. Benzie Circuit Judge, 200 Mich. 549.

¶ 78. A decision on habeas corpus, though not ordinarily res adjudicata, is so upon the question of the validity of the judgment involved, where the prisoner was held under a capias satisfaciendum and brought the writ, and by virtue of Comp. L. 1897, § 9885, the judgment plaintiff on notice given came in and defended with the result that the prisoner was discharged on the ground that the judgment was void; accordingly it is an estoppel on that fact in a later action by the prisoner against the judgment plaintiff for false imprisonment under the capias.—Castor v. Bates, 127 Mich. 285.

¶ 79. A lessor before the expiration of the three-year term of a lease brought summary proceedings to recover possession on the ground that the lessee had violated the conditions of the lease by subletting the same without the lessor's consent. The jury found that plaintiff had consented to the sublease made. Later the lessee gave notice that he would avail himself of the additional two-year term provided for in the lease in addition to the three-year term and to be enjoyed at the option of the lessee whereupon plaintiff started new summary proceedings. Held, the matter was res adjudicata.—Flynn v. Bachner, 168 Mich. 424.

¶ 80. Defendant, in May, 1907, gave a lease for twenty years to one Blessed. Plaintiff was at the time in possession of the premises, his lease expiring September 1, 1907. Plaintiff claimed that by parol agreement defendant extended his lease for one year, and refused to vacate. Blessed in summary proceedings obtained a judgment for possession. Plaintiff in this suit sues defendant for damages for breach of the oral agreement. Held, the judgment obtained by Blessed did not render plaintiff's suit res adjudicata.—Rooks v. Booth, 160 Mich. 62.

Effect of conflicting or neutralizing judgments, see post § 31.

Parol evidence to show that judgment was not on the merits, see post § 97.

Sufficiency of evidence to show that judgment was not on the merits, see post § 98.

Necessity and sufficiency of rendition, entry and record of judgments, see Judgments, III.

¶ 81. A judgment, to be a bar to a subsequent action, must have been rendered upon the merits of the subject-matter, and between the same parties.—Tucker v. Rohrback, 13 Mich. 73; Buck v. Lockwood, 193 Mich. 242.

¶ 82. In order to be a bar both the issue and judgment must be taken and rendered upon the merits.—Greenlee v. Lowing, 35 Mich. 63.

¶ 83. A disallowance of a claim presented to commissioners on an estate is not a bar to a subsequent suit where the claim was not adjudicated upon the merits and where there was no opportunity for such adjudication.—McKinney v. Curtiss, 60 Mich. 611.

¶ 84. A judgment of a circuit court, on appeal from a probate court, confirming the disallowance of a claim by a trustee for the benefit of creditors against the estate on a note signed by decedent as additional security for the liabilities of the debtor, on the ground that there could be no recovery until the amount of deficiency remaining after determination of the value of land which had been illegally sold by the trustee was determined, is not a bar to a subsequent suit in chancery in another county by creditors to reach such property and to determine the amount of such deficiency.—Buck v. Lockwood, 193 Mich. 242.

¶ 85. Where in a suit in replevin the justice of the peace renders judgment in favor of the plaintiffs and against the defendant for the right of possession of the goods in question, such order is not a final judgment under Comp. Laws 1897, §§ 10660, 10676 and 10677, and results in a mistrial, and plaintiff is not precluded thereby on the ground of res adjudicata from prosecuting a later suit in replevin in the circuit court.—Friedberg v. Bennett, 166 Mich. 558.

¶ 86. An undetermined suit to establish an equitable set-off cannot affect the statutory right to set off an execution (How. St., § 7709).—Lyon v. Smith, 66 Mich. 676.

¶ 87. The sufficiency of a plea is admitted by replication, and a hearing on the issue thus raised usually ends the case. But a defendant in a partition suit pleaded adverse possession in bar on a stipulation that if the plea was overruled he might answer. Held an anomalous stipulation; but where in following it the court below treated the hearing as on the sufficiency of the plea merely, it left the question of adverse possession undecided; until this was passed on, however, no other court could interfere with the right arising under such action and plea.—Dubois v. Campau, 37 Mich. 248.

§ 15. Denial or grant of process or extraordinary writs.

¶ 88. The award of mandamus proves nothing and cannot be pleaded in bar.—Burland v. Northwestern Mut. Ben. Ass'n, 47 Mich. 424.

¶ 89. A decision denying mandamus is res judicata only if made upon the merits, and not if denied because it was not the proper remedy, or because relator had a manifest legal remedy, or because no case was made which appealed to the discretionary power of the court.—Hoffman v. Silverthorn, 137 Mich. 60.

¶ 90. A decision refusing an application for mandamus to compel the vacation of a certain order on the ground of irregularities disclosed by the record, because of laches, is final as against petitioner's right to raise these irregularities by filing a bill of review.—Daniel v. Citizens' Mut. Fire Ins. Co. of Jackson, 149 Mich. 626.

¶ 91. The supreme court reversed a judgment in favor of one who had appealed to the circuit court from the disallowance by commissioners of his claim against a decedent's estate, for error in permitting a recovery upon an alleged oral contract, when, as was found, claimant's own evidence showed a contract in writing. Thereafter, permission to amend the pleadings so as to set up a breach of trust under the written contract was refused by the circuit judge, and mandamus to compel the allowance of the amendment was denied in the supreme court, without discussion of the merits. The claim sought to be so interposed was subsequently disallowed in the probate court, and an appeal was taken to the circuit. Held, that the effect of the previous decision was not to render the controversy res adjudicata, but merely to determine what should be the basis of the judgment, and that the denial of mandamus did not affect the issue.—Sullivan v. Ross's Estate, 113 Mich. 311.

¶ 92. Where, in granting a mandamus against the state land office commissioner to compel the reservation from sale of certain lands selected on contract, relator's right to the lands is affirmed, the state cannot sue in equity, upon the ground of a defense omitted in the mandamus case, to set aside patents issued to relator on the strength of the decision in such case.—State v. Sparrow, 89 Mich. 263.

§ 16. Interlocutory orders and rulings during trial.

Objection to jurisdiction and decision thereon as bar to objection by collateral attack, see also Courts § 83, ¶ 302.

Nature and effect of orders generally, see Motions and Orders.

Order of court granting leave to sue on bond over objection of sureties as res adjudicata on right of recovery against sureties, see Estates of Decedents ¶ 1232.

Conclusiveness and effect of probate order under statute for leave to sue on bond of representative or guardian, see Probate Courts, III.

¶ 93. An interlocutory decree is no evidence of anything on the merits.—Grand Rapids, L. & D. R. Co. v. Chesebro, 74 Mich. 466.

¶ 94. The denial of a motion for a new trial, unless proceedings by mandamus are taken to review the decision as an abuse of discretion, is res adjudicata upon the ground urged in support of the motion.—Gray v. Barton, 62 Mich. 186.

¶ 95. The refusal of a motion to compel a sheriff to set off an execution would not bar relief in equity.—Lyon v. Smith, 66 Mich. 676.

¶ 96. The order of the circuit court denying a motion to set aside a judgment against a garnishee by default is conclusive on the facts decided against a subsequent bill setting up the same grounds for vacation.—Valley City Desk Co. v. Travelers' Ins. Co. of Hartford, 143 Mich. 468.

¶ 97. The doctrine of former adjudication does not apply in a suit under the Bulk Sales Act, Pub. Acts 1905, No. 223, How. 2nd Ed., § 2612 et seq., by reason of the action taken against the defendants as defendants in garnishment proceedings where there was no adjudication on the merits in such proceedings owing to the fact that no issue was formed or tried as to their liability and no summons to show cause was taken out against them within the time provided by law, but the case was continued without day against them, after disclosure by another defendant, and judgment against him and the principal defendant.—Humiston, Keeling & Co. v. Bridgman, 195 Mich. 82.

¶ 98. A petition in chancery to set aside a decree for tax sale on the grounds that the treasurer failed to resort to personal property in payment of the tax and that the warrant for collection was prematurely returned, which was granted by the circuit but dismissed by the supreme court, was in effect an application for a rehearing and could only be based upon errors in the proceedings of the chancery court; and therefore such dismissal was not res judicata as to a subsequent sale of a state bid by the auditor general which was void because of the nonpayment of subsequent taxes.—Conley v. Auditor General, 123 Mich. 83.

§ 17. Dismissal, discontinuance and nonsuit.

Dismissal of bill in equity as res adjudicata at law, see also ante § 8; effect of voluntary dismissal of bill, see also Equity § 198.

Dismissal of application for rehearing in chancery, see ante ¶ 98.

Discontinuance of prosecution as evidence in civil cases, see ante § 11.

Effect of dismissal of appeal or quashal of writ of error or of discontinuance of error or appeal, see post § 29.

Dismissal of suit for divorce as barring later suit for divorce, see post ¶ 172.

Dismissal of bill for injunction as barring other legal remedies, see post ¶ 173.

Conclusiveness of decree dismissing a bill to restrain expenditures by trustee under a will, see post ¶ 196.

Effect of discontinuance as obstacle to new action, see also Discontinuance § 6.

¶ 99. To operate as a bar to a subsequent suit, the dismissal must be upon the merits, or, if voluntary, after proofs taken, and the cause in readiness for hearing.—In re Ward's Estate, 152 Mich. 218.

¶ 100. The unqualified dismissal of a bill on the merits generally estops the complainant from introducing matters involved thereby in any other litigation on the same subject-matter.—Adams v. Cameron, 40 Mich. 506.

¶ 101. A decree dismissing a bill after a hearing is an adjudication sufficient to establish res adjudicata.—Schulmeister v. Township of Blendon, 126 Mich. 488; Dalton v. Mertz, 197 Mich. 390.

¶ 102. A decree dismissing a bill in equity, if made upon the merits, or a voluntary dismissal, after proofs taken, and when the cause was in readiness for hearing, is a bar to a new bill for the same matter, unless words of qualification prevent such bar.—Edgar v. Buck, 65 Mich. 356.

¶ 103. A discontinuance is not a bar to another suit, and is not made so by a justice's unofficial and unauthorized coupling therewith a statement that the case is settled.—Shank v. Woodworth, 111 Mich. 642.

¶ 104. A judgment of nonsuit is not a final disposition of the subject-matter in litigation, and ordinarily is not a bar to a subsequent suit for the same cause of action.—Bowne v. Johnson, 1 D. 185.

¶ 105. Where an employee, after a judgment in his favor against his employer for a negligent injury has been reversed and a new trial granted by the state supreme court, takes a nonsuit, he is not precluded from maintaining in the federal court a new action upon evidence tending to prove a state of facts like that which the evidence in the state courts tended to prove.—Gardner v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 150 U. S. 349, 37 L. ed. 1107, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 140.

¶ 106. Where, upon the trial of an action based upon negligence, defendant moved at the close of the evidence for a directed verdict, and the court, having intimated that he thought plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence, began to address the jury to such effect, and plaintiff thereupon submitted to a nonsuit, the judgment upon such nonsuit is not a bar to a subsequent action upon the same cause of action.—Deneen v. Houghton County St.-Ry. Co., 150 Mich. 235.

§ 18. ——When deemed to be on merits.

Necessity that pleading aver the dismissal to have been on the merits, see post ¶ 475.

Presumption as to being on merits, see post § 95.

¶ 107. The force of a final decree upon the merits, and upon pleadings and proofs in a suit in equity, is not avoided by the appearance on the record of the cause, prior to the decree, of a voluntary dismissal of the bill by the complainant, entered without notice and without leave of the court.—Newark v. Newark, 22 Mich. 292.

¶ 108. When in a foreclosure suit a defendant files a cross-bill, setting up an equitable mortgage as entitled to priority to the one in suit, and his cross-bill is dismissed at the hearing on pleadings and proofs, the decree of dismissal must be regarded as a final adjudication on the merits, whether the case was a proper one for a cross-bill or not.—Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank v. Bronson, 14 Mich. 361.

¶ 109. Where a bill filed to have certain mortgages executed by complainant declared invalid has been dismissed because complainant's title was not such as enabled him to ask for the relief sought, the decree of dismissal cannot be said to have been on the merits and res adjudicata as to the question of the validity of the mortgages.—Sessions v. Sherwood, 78 Mich. 234.

¶ 110. The dismissal of a bill because there is a remedy at law does not prejudice complainant as to any rights that have not been put at issue and adjudicated.—Peters v. Hansen, 55 Mich. 276.

¶ 111. A decree dismissing petitions questioning the validity of tax deeds is a bar to a subsequent mandamus proceeding to cancel the same tax deeds and involving the same issues.—Cook v. Auditor General, 124 Mich. 430.

¶ 112. A decree dismissing a bill against the auditor general to cancel a tax deed is a bar to a mandamus proceeding against the auditor general to cancel the same deed upon grounds not stated in the bill.—Sayers v. Auditor General, 124 Mich. 259.

¶ 113. A decree dismissing a bill alleging that an agreement to allow an attorney a certain interest in real estate as compensation, was obtained by fraud, is conclusive of the validity of the agreement when subsequently attacked in another proceeding, brought by the attorney under the agreement to enforce his interest in the real estate.—Moran v. L'Etourneau, 118 Mich. 159.

¶ 114. A question was tried in an action at law, and adjudicated. A bill was then brought, which was dismissed below, and the decision affirmed in the supreme court on the ground that the matters it covered were res adjudicata by the suit at law. A motion in the lower court was then made to have the bill dismissed without prejudice, and a petition filed for a bill of review. Held, both the motion and petition were properly denied.—Public Schools of Wyandotte v. Harding, 160 Mich. 185.

¶ 115. In a suit against a township, a highway commissioner and adjacent land owners to enjoin the opening of a highway, the legality of the proceedings to lay out the highway was held res adjudicata by previous suit against the same parties (and some adjacent land owners), in which answer under oath was not waived and the defendants answered alleging the legality of the proceedings but the replication was filed too late and the decree records that the cause came on to be heard on bill and answer, and decreed that the bill be dismissed without costs. It is a decree upon hearing.—Schulmeister v. Township of Blendon, 126 Mich. 488.

(3 Mich. Dig. 60)

¶ 116. A claim against an estate for board and attendance is not barred by a decree dismissing a bill for specific performance of a contract to convey property in return for the same service where the bill was dismissed in part on the ground that the filing of the claim for allowance before the commissioners and the retention of that case in court was inconsistent with the suit in equity.—Laird v. Laird's Estate, 127 Mich. 24.

¶ 117. The predecessor in title of a defendant in an ejectment suit had brought a bill to have corrected a mistake made by said predecessor's grantor in the description of the premises in question in the ejectment suit. The bill was dismissed and no relief was asked by or given to the defendants to the bill. Held, the files and records in such chancery suit were not admissible in evidence and the decree in such suit was not conclusive against the defendant in the ejectment suit.—Tuthill v. Katz, 163 Mich. 618.

§ 19. Judgment that action was premature.

¶ 118. A judgment in a proceeding begun before any cause of action has accrued can have no bearing on another proceeding begun by the same party; there can be no presumption of identity, and there is no occasion to inquire whether the judgment is pleadable in bar or in abatement.—Hart v. Lindley, 50 Mich. 20.

¶ 119. The plea of former judgment cannot be sustained if it does not appear that plaintiff in the former suit had a right to bring his suit at the time he brought it, and that it was decided on its merits. And the contrary may be shown in meeting such a plea.—Wood v. Faut, 55 Mich. 185.

¶ 120. Judgment for defendant for costs, on the ground that the claim sued was not yet due, is no bar to a new suit.—Franks v. Fechelmer, 44 Mich. 177.

¶ 121. Special findings of a jury on the first trial are not res judicatae as to the facts found where judgment was entered in favor of the defendants in the first suit on the ground that, as shown by said findings, the suit was prematurely brought.—Whitney v. Bayer, 101 Mich. 151.

§ 20. Judgments on confession or by stipulation.

Judgment erroneous as to amount, see ante ¶ 41.

Collusive judgment on confession against principal as unconclusive upon principal, see post § 72.

Nature and requisites of judgment on stipulation or by agreement, see Judgments, I-III.

Effect of collusive divorce decree, see Divorce § 101.

Assent to drafting and form of order as estoppel, see also Estoppel ¶ 159.

¶ 122. A judgment rendered upon confession has the same effect as one rendered upon a trial.—Town v. Smith, 14 Mich. 348.

¶ 123. A decree of divorce entered by defendant's consent, given by his solicitor, is binding unless impeached for fraud or mistake.—Brick v. Brick, 65 Mich. 230, aff'd on the merits on rehearing.

¶ 124. Where a consent order appointing a receiver for a firm states that the firm is composed of certain persons, the question as to who compose the firm is not open to dispute.—Russell v. White, 63 Mich. 409.

¶ 125. Where, in order to close probate proceedings, it was agreed that an account rendered in that court might be formally balanced, and the parties settled on terms which they announced to be private, the decree of settlement based on such agreement raises no estoppel against the establishment of the claim actually existing between them on the private settlement.—Hooper v. Hooper, 26 Mich. 435.

¶ 126. A decree entered by consent in a foreclosure suit, adjudging that the mortgagee "has been and is in possession, and is entitled to the possession and control, of the premises, * * * and empowered to collect all rents," is a concession by the mortgagor that the mortgagee is entitled to the rents, which is binding upon the mortgagor's administrator.—Kelly v. Bowerman, 113 Mich. 446.

§ 21. Default or pro confesso decrees.

Conclusiveness as to all matters which might have been litigated, see post § 49 et seq.

Facts admitted or waived by suffering default and conclusiveness thereof, see Defaults, IV; Justices of Peace, IV.

Right to appear and put in answer after default judgment on published service, see Defaults § 29.

Conclusiveness of default judgments in ejectment, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIX, §§ 29-32; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 13196-13199.

¶ 127. A judgment in a breach of covenant case taken by default against a party for failure of title to a portion of timber included in a bill of sale, and satisfied by such party, was not such an adjudication as estopped such party, subsequently made defendant in a replevin suit in which his former vendee was plaintiff, from claiming that an instrument, produced and relied upon by plaintiff, purporting to be a bill of sale of timber in which such portion was included, was a forgery.—Metropolitan Lumber Co. v. McColeman, 140 Mich. 333.

¶ 128. A joint defendant in equity who has allowed the bill to be taken as confessed as to himself is not thereby precluded from bringing an action at law involving the same subject-matter, if the bill itself made out no case for relief.—Wheeler v. Hatheway, 58 Mich. 77.

¶ 129. Where one allowed judgment to go by default for the full amount of the debt on which he had made some payments, he could not set off such payments in a subsequent action by the assignee of the judgment.—Huntoon v. Russell, 41 Mich. 316.

§ 22. Verdict alone as estoppel.

Admissibility of the verdict alone upon the question of former adjudication, see also post § 96.

Effect of verdict generally, see Verdicts and Findings, VI.

Conclusiveness of verdicts and findings of fact against review on appeal or error, see Appeal, XII, E.

¶ 130. The mere verdict of the jury rendered in one case cannot be shown in another case involving the same transaction, for the purpose of fixing the quality of the transaction.—Wheeler v. Wallace, 53 Mich. 364; Murray v. Inner Shoe Tire Co., 163 Mich. 676.

¶ 131. The only exceptions to the general rule that a verdict cannot operate as an estoppel until it has received the sanction of the court are where the parties have agreed to abide by a verdict, or where the statute makes the verdict conclusive, leaving with the court no control over the action of a jury.—Whitney v. Bayer, 101 Mich. 151.

§ 23. Opinions or reasons in decision.

Distinction between decision and reasons for decision as a precedent, see Courts §§ 19-24.

Incorrect reason for correct decision as harmless error, see Harmless Error, II.

¶ 132. A complainant cannot be estopped by wrong reasons given for a correct decree in his favor in a former suit brought by himself.—Zabel v. Harshman, 68 Mich. 273.

§ 24. Recitals in order or judgment.

¶ 133. An order's superfluous recital concerning a matter not necessarily involved in the main issue is not conclusive as an adjudication.—Rice v. Rice, 53 Mich. 432.

¶ 134. The certificate of the trial judge in a judgment in an action of trespass, made as authorized by the statute for the purpose of settling the question of costs, that the question of title to land did not come in issue, being a finding which the court was empowered to make, must be taken as conclusive in the absence of any showing upon the record to the contrary.—Keyser v. Sutherland, 59 Mich. 455.

§ 25. Judgments susceptible of new trial or rehearing.

Possibility that appeal, error or other review may be had, see post § 26.

¶ 135. In ejectment any person in actual occupancy of the premises, and claiming adversely to plaintiff, must be made defendant; and the fact that plaintiff has previously recovered against such person makes no difference so long as it does not appear but that the latter is entitled to a new trial since unless that appears the judgment is not conclusive.—Hoyt v. Southard, 58 Mich. 432.

¶ 136. Until four days after rendition of verdict, a judgment against an attachment plaintiff is not admissible to show in trover against a sheriff for the attached goods that there was nothing due from the attachment defendant when the writ was issued; since it is not conclusive sooner.—Treat v. Dunham, 74 Mich. 114.

§ 26. Judgments open to appeal or review.

See also ante ¶ 42.

Availability of appeal at law as making legal judgment bar in equity, see also ante ¶ 51.

Possibility of new trial or rehearing by order of trial court, see ante § 25.

Pendency of appeal or error and possibility of change in the judgment, see post § 27.

Judgments open to review and times or conditions when review is possible, see Appeal; Certiorari.

¶ 137. A decree not appealed from stands as a judgment.—German American Seminary v. Saenger, 66 Mich. 249.

¶ 138. A decree not appealed from binds all the parties to the suit and all claiming under them.—Walsh v. Varney, 38 Mich. 73; Atkinson v. Flannigan, 70 Mich. 639.

¶ 139. One who does not appeal from a decree that he did not take under a will, cannot raise the same question in a subsequent action.—Hatt v. Green, 180 Mich. 383.

¶ 140. One who did not appeal from a decree cannot, when it is reversed on his codefendant's appeal as to such codefendant, and the cause remitted to the court below with instructions to enter a new decree, reopen matters affecting himself only which the first decree settled.—Sheldon v. Holmes, 63 Mich. 704.

¶ 141. The force of a judgment as a bar to subsequent actions does not depend upon the right to appeal, which is a statutory right; and a plaintiff who brings an action for negligent injury, based on different counts, where it is held that the breach of duty set up in one count does not entitle the plaintiff to a verdict, and where the recovery on the other count is reversed on error, cannot contend that another action can be brought on the count which is stricken, on the ground that the plaintiff could not appeal from the rule of the trial court.—Jungnitsch v. Michigan Malleable Iron Co., 121 Mich. 460.

¶ 142. An unappealed judgment in a replevin suit, rendered on appeal to the circuit, finding that defendant to the writ, a chattel mortgagee in possession, was entitled to a sum certain and costs, is conclusive in an action on the replevin bond that the property was taken under the writ and the defendant thereby damaged.—Stafford v. Baker, 141 Mich. 44.

¶ 143. A decree, from which no appeal was taken, determining the right of the Village of Highland Park to empty sewage into the sewers of the City of Detroit, and reserving to the court power to take further action on the application of either party on subsequent changes of existing conditions, held res adjudicata fifteen years later on such an application, as to all questions disposed of by such decree.—City of Detroit v. Village of Highland Park, 186 Mich. 166. (Equally divided court.)

¶ 143a. Plaintiff sued a defendant on a note given in payment of a running account. That action was begun before a justice and was appealed to the circuit court. He later sued in another court on the running account, and the verdict in that court found plaintiff indebted to defendant on its set-off. Judgment had not been entered, and the time for appeal in the second suit had not expired when the first suit on the note was being heard. Held, that the judgment in the second suit on the running account was not conclusive in the first suit on the note.—Murray v. Inner Shoe Tire Co., 163 Mich. 676.

§ 27. Pendency of appeal, error or certiorari.

Effect of appeal or review and supersedeas and stay of proceedings, see Appeal, IX; Stay, II.

¶ 144. Pending an appeal the decree appealed from is suspended, and cannot be used as evidence in another suit.—Day v. De Jonge, 66 Mich. 550.

¶ 145. In a suit for malpractice, plaintiff is not barred from recovery by the fact that defendant has recovered judgment in a justice's court for services rendered in the case in question, where an appeal from said judgment is pending in the circuit court.—Adams v. Henry, 165 Mich. 554.

§ 28. Appellate judgment or disposal of case.

Effect of dismissal of appeal or quashal of writ, see post § 29.

Nature and requisites of decision and judgment on review, see Appeal, XIII.

Effect and operation of appellate decree or judgment, see Appeal § 499.

Appellate judgment as binding rule of law on retrial after remand or on second appeal or error, see Appeal, XII, G, XV.

¶ 146. Questions of whether work under a logging contract had been terminated, and, if so, by whose act or default, presented upon a second trial after reversal in supreme court were not res judicata so as to authorize verdict to be directed; where at the former trial it was claimed that by the terms of such logging contract, the plaintiff, a lumberman, could upon performance of the work contracted for, purchase the teams furnished him by the other contracting party, applying upon the purchase price thereof, any balance due him under such contract, and it was claimed by plaintiff that when work ceased, there was due him for work performed sufficient to pay for such teams, and that therefore, title to the teams passed to him; and where the trial court rendered judgment for such plaintiff; but where on appeal therefrom, the supreme court held that the state of the account between the parties to the contract, during the continuance of the work provided for therein, had no effect upon the title to such teams:—Hood v. Olin, 80 Mich. 296.

¶ 147. In proceeding by a street railroad company to condemn private property to build an embankment, with openings therein for intersecting streets, to carry its track over a railroad, the supreme court denied the right, holding that Act No. 101, Public Laws, 1905, amendatory of Comp. Laws 1897, § 6446, limited their right to the construction of trestles for overhead crossings. Subsequently on a new proceeding between the same parties to condemn the same land, the supreme court overruled the former decision and held that Act No. 133, Public Laws, 1905, amendatory of the same statute and section as Act No. 101, containing no such limitation and conferring the same right of eminent domain as possessed by railroad companies, repealed Act No. 101. Held, the former decision was not res adjudicata of the rights of either party.—Detroit United Ry. v. Barnes Paper Co., 172 Mich. 586.

¶¶ 148, 149. While as to the facts as found and returned in answer to a writ of certiorari issued to review proceedings leading to the conviction of the defendants in this case by the recorder's court of the city of Detroit, for creating and maintaining a nuisance, the return is conclusive and binding, and call for the affirmation of such conviction and the consequent judgment, the result thus reached will not be considered as binding upon the supreme court in another proceeding in which the evidence and facts may be directly fully presented.—People v. Detroit White Lead Works, 82 Mich. 471.

§ 29. ——Discontinuance and dismissal of appeal or writ of error.

Dismissal of a bill to establish an easement in an alley as res adjudicata, see post ¶ 445.

Effect of dismissal of writ of error on conclusiveness of judgment, see Appeal § 169, ¶¶ 727, 728.

Effect of dismissal of certiorari on judgment below, see Certiorari § 63.

¶ 150. When plaintiff discontinues in the circuit court an action appealed by him from a justice's judgment of no cause of action, such judgment does not bar a new suit in the circuit; though dismissal of the appeal would revive the judgment appealed and it would be a bar.—French v. Weise, 112 Mich. 586.

¶ 151. Dismissal of a writ of error leaves the judgment upon which it was sued out operative and conclusive.—Hitchcock v. Pratt, 51 Mich. 263.

§ 30. Judgments vacated or set aside.

Conclusiveness upon legatees of finding set aside on the appeal of one of them, see post ¶ 396.

Defenses available to defendant on opening default, see Defaults § 40.

¶ 152. If, when sued on his bond, a surety in certiorari shows as a defense a former judgment against himself, it is proper to rebut this by testimony that it was vacated because he had notified the plaintiff's attorney that no judgment could be given against him without a direct suit on the bond. —Porter v. Leache, 56 Mich. 40.

¶ 153. An order vacating a judgment as to one of two defendants cannot, in a subsequent suit against them both for the same cause of action, be treated as merging the whole claim in a judgment against the other defendant, if court, counsel and parties have meanwhile dealt with the judgment as wholly set aside.—McArthur v. Oliver, 53 Mich. 299.

§ 31. Conflicting or neutralizing adjudications.

Priority in decisions, see also ante ¶ 143a.

Contrary later decision by appellate court, see also ante ¶ 147.

Conflict between decree and order based thereon, see also ante ¶ 156.

Overruling precedents, see Courts, § 33 et seq.

¶ 154. In an action of replevin in the circuit court brought by the mortgagee of chattels under a mortgage given to secure payment to plaintiff of a collateral note, it was found that the debt had been paid, and judgment went for defendant and was affirmed on appeal. Pending the replevin plaintiff sued the note in justice's court and recovered judgment, which became final and was not pleaded in the replevin case. Held, that the judgment in the replevin suit being rendered in the suit first brought, being based upon the primary obligation, being the judgment of the superior court, and having been rendered last, would control.—Bateman v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co., 96 Mich. 441.

¶ 155. Where the husband and wife each file suit for divorce in different counties and each obtained a decree awarding the custody of their children, hers being prior in time but being vacated at his motion, the wife having submitted to the jurisdiction of the court in the husband's suit by suffering judgment against her on a plea in abatement, is estopped by it to claim the custody of the children in a collateral proceeding of habeas corpus.—In re Wrisley, 126 Mich. 109.

§ 32. Conclusiveness of orders after judgment or decree.

Conclusiveness and effect of orders generally, see Motions and Orders.

¶ 156. Matters set up in defense to a writ of assistance cannot be received to affect the decree for the enforcement of which the application of the writ was made.—Howe v. Lemon, 47 Mich. 544.

¶ 158. The doctrine of pleading a former suit in bar has no application where the actions are for entirely different and distinct causes.—Black v. Miller, 75 Mich. 323.

¶ 158a. A divorce decree to the husband in 1909 for extreme cruelty on the ground of separation and refusal to cohabit from and after 1906 is not a bar to an action for alienation of affections accomplished in 1908, since the two causes of action are not inconsistent with each other.—Philpott v. Kirkpatrick, 171 Mich. 495.

¶ 159. A judgment for defendant on a general demurrer to the declaration is not a bar to a new action where a different state of facts is declared upon.—Rodman v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 59 Mich. 395.

¶ 160. A note holder who sues on the instrument in assumpsit and is successfully met with the statute of limitations may begin an action against the same defendant for false representations in inducing him to take the note.—Black v. Miller, 75 Mich. 323.

¶ 161. A judgment in a replevin suit for the value of only such goods described in the writ as were found and were in the possession of the defendant, is no bar to a subsequent assumpsit for goods which were described in the writ but not found and not in his possession and which therefore the replevin action in no event could pass on.—Reid, Murdoch & Co. v. Parks, 122 Mich. 363.

¶ 162. A decree cannot be set up in bar of a proceeding to set it aside for fraud.—Adair v. Cummin, 48 Mich. 375.

¶ 163. A trustee to whom land had been conveyed to secure creditors, sold the lands under a chancery decree, applied the proceeds to the debts, reported a deficiency but made no effort to collect it. A creditor who had not been paid in full brought an action at law against the debtor for the balance due him. Held that the chancery proceeding was not a bar to such action.—National City Bank v. Torrent, 130 Mich. 259.

¶ 164. Where a township treasurer defaults in paying over money due the county, the township is liable to the county, but such liability is to be enforced by mandamus to have the amount of taxes reassessed against the township; and this remedy is not barred by an adverse judgment in a suit on such treasurer's bond.—Hart Township v. Oceana County, 44 Mich. 417.

¶¶ 165, 166. A decree granting an application for a writ of assistance and determining that the court had jurisdiction in the auditor's proceeding for tax sale, was res adjudicata in subsequent ejectment by the former owner, in which other and different reasons for want of jurisdiction than those assigned by him in the application for a writ of assistance, were set forth.—Peters v. Youngs, 122 Mich. 484.

¶ 167. A party being sued on a note secured by mortgage set up as a defense that a foreclosure had been commenced and carried to a decree. Held, that this was no bar to the action, but was matter of abatement or cause for a stay; and hence could not be made defensively.—Goodrich v. White, 39 Mich. 489.

¶ 168. A recovery by a minor son, in an action for negligent injury prosecuted by his father as his next friend, for the value of the loss of his services during minority, which is insisted upon by the father as an element of the son's damages, is a bar to a recovery by the father for the loss of such services in a suit thereafter brought in his own name.—Baker v. Flint & P. M. R. Co., 91 Mich. 298.

¶ 169. A tenant who had been evicted by another tenant claiming under a prior lease brought suit upon his landlord's alleged agreement to indemnify him for the costs and expenses of appealing from the eviction proceedings; judgment went for defendant. Held, that this barred a later action for outlays in litigating liability on the appeal bond, alleged to have been made under the same agreement but subsequent to the former suit.—Cummerford v. Paulus, 66 Mich. 648.

¶ 170. Judgment recovered in Michigan by a foreign executor suing in his own name on a note belonging to the estate and payable to bearer bars any subsequent proceeding against defendant.—Knapp v. Lee, 42 Mich. 41.

¶ 171. The fact that a judgment has been recovered on a note secured by mortgage is no answer to a suit by the mortgagors to have the mortgage set aside on showing that the note has actually been paid.—Rickle v. Dow, 39 Mich. 91.

¶ 172. The dismissal, on the ground of the illegality of the marriage, of a bill for divorce does not bar another suit based upon a later and valid marriage.—Filer v. Filer, 77 Mich. 469.

¶ 173. An order dismissing a bill seeking to enjoin an act already performed merely settles the question of injunction, but does not prevent the complainant in the bill from pursuing his other legal remedies against a mortgagee making an unauthorized sale of the mortgaged property.—Hicks v. J. B. Pearce Co., 158 Mich. 502.

¶ 174. A decree dismissing a bill in chancery after a hearing upon the merits is a bar to a subsequent suit having the same object, and based upon the same state of facts, although the transaction is set forth in amplified form, and the prayer for relief is not identical with that of the former bill.—Detroit, L. & N. R. Co. v. McCammon, 108 Mich. 368.

§ 35. Identities of issues.

Second bill like former but more specific, see also ante ¶ 174.

Construction and effect of pleadings as to issues presented and joined, see Pleading, IX.

¶ 175. The first essential of the rule of res adjudicata is the identity of the matter in issue, and the "matter in issue" is that matter upon which the plaintiff proceeds by his action, and which the defendant controverts by his pleadings.—Le Roy v. Collins, 165 Mich. 380.

¶ 176. A judgment is not res adjudicata unless the identical matter in issue in the subsequent proceeding was determined by the former adjudication.—Murphy Chair Co. v. American Radiator Co., 172 Mich. 14.

¶ 177. In a second suit for rent for subsequent months where the defendant's plea and notice are the same as in a former suit, the questions raised are res adjudicata.—Jenkinson v. Wysner, 125 Mich. 89.

¶ 178. A decree in chancery is no bar to a suit that does not involve the same questions, even though they might have been brought into the first case by a cross-bill, but were not.—Nims v. Vaughn, 40 Mich. 356.

¶ 179. The rulings of the supreme court in a dispute in equity are not binding in an action at law between the same parties in regard to the same subject-matter so long as the issues are distinct.—Blake v. Hubbard, 45 Mich. 1.

¶ 180. A defendant cannot interpose a special notice of defense setting forth the opinion of the supreme court upon the reversal of a judgment recovered by plaintiff on a former trial as a defense to a declaration on a new state of facts upon questions decided in the former trial.—Alpena Nat. Bank v. Greenbaum, 80 Mich. 1.

¶ 181. D. and M. held chattel mortgages from P. upon the same property, M.'s mortgage being older but filed later than D.'s; and after M. had replevied the chattels from P., D. replevied from M. Held, that a judgment subsequently recovered by M. against P. was not res adjudicata of the questions involved in D.'s replevin.—Damm v. Mason, 102 Mich. 545.

¶ 182. A judgment for the buyer in assumpsit for purchase price and the care of a horse on rescission of the purchase is not res adjudicata of a further claim for care covering a period between the commencement of the original suit and the date of trial, where the bill of particulars in such suit limited the claim to the period ending with the date of commencement of suit, even though the case was submitted under instructions permitting a recovery to the later date. —Rosema v. Porter, 112 Mich. 13.

§ 36. ——Specific suits and actions and issues therein.

Causes, claims and defenses merged in former trover, trespass or replevin judgment, see post § 43.

¶ 183. Proceedings under the bastardy act do not bar the mother's right to sue the father for the injury done her.—Sutfin v. People, 43 Mich. 37.

¶ 184. Judgment for mesne profits in ejectment does not bar trover against the defendant for cutting and removing timber while in possession since the questions involved are different.—Wilson v. Hoffman, 93 Mich. 72.

¶ 185. A judgment in a suit for trespass to lands does not bar a subsequent action of ejectment for the same premises between the same parties.—Keyser v. Sutherland, 59 Mich. 455; and see Fahey v. Crotty, 63 Mich. 383.

¶ 186. Judgment in ejectment for plaintiff does not estop a defendant in ejectment from subsequently purchasing a title derived from plaintiff, or from holding it as any one else would hold it.—Snyder v. Hemmingway, 47 Mich. 549.

¶ 187. Separate actions were brought against an administrator on his general bond and on his bond given on sale of real estate. Suit on the general bond was tried first and recovery therein was not confined to moneys other than those received on sale of real estate, nor was there any special accounting for the fund realized from such sale. The penalty of the general bond not being large enough to recover the amount due the estate, held, that judgment thereon did not bar action on the special bond.—Durfee v. Joslyn, 92 Mich. 211.

¶ 188. In a suit by one son against another to recover securities claimed by the former to have been given to him by the father in his lifetime, the suit is not rendered res adjudicata by a former decision in the contest of the father's will involving the questions of mental competency and undue influence.—Shepard v. Shepard, 164 Mich. 183.

¶ 189. Where, after the commencement of an action in which judgment for damages for detention was subsequently rendered and paid, there was a new and independent taking, such judgment was held no bar to another suit.—Blaisdell v. Scally, 84 Mich. 149.

¶ 190. By recovering in replevin such goods, fraudulently purchased, as were in the vendee's possession when the writ issued one is not barred from bringing trover for the rest of the goods so purchased.—Reid Murdoch & Co. v. Ferris, 112 Mich. 693.

¶ 191. In an action upon a note by a bank against husband and wife, in which action the husband defaulted, a judgment upon a directed verdict in favor of the wife upon the ground that the debt was a joint obligation and that the proof did not trace the proceeds to her separate estate, was not res adjudicata as to a replevin suit by the bank for property described in a chattel mortgage which was given as security for such note. —First Nat. Bank of Reed City v. Sweet, 136 Mich. 615.

¶ 192. An adjudication that a claim filed under a general assignment could not be based on a contract of purchase of goods which the claimant vendors had rescinded for fraud does not bar a claim for the conversion of the goods.—Farwell v. Myers, 64 Mich. 234.

¶ 193. Under an original habeas corpus proceeding to determine the right of a parent or guardian to the care and custody of a child, the supreme court will not be concluded by the finding of facts made by the court which committed the child as a delinquent. —In re Mould, 162 Mich. 1.

¶ 194. The decision of the supreme court that the Smoke Nuisance Ordinance of the city of Detroit, §§ 1, 6, prohibiting ferryboats from emitting dense black or gray smoke is unreasonable and impossible of observance due to the fact that there is no known device utilizable in marine practice to prevent such emission, will not be a bar to a future action under such ordinance if, in the advance of art, appliances are invented which in marine practice are efficient and practical.—People v. Detroit, Belle Isle & Windsor Ferry Co., 187 Mich. 177.

¶ 195. A prior decision of the recorder's court to the effect that there are no known devices for the prevention of smoke from ferryboats possible of installation in marine practice is not res judicata of the question, since in the progress of the art of smoke prevention new devices are discovered and applied.—People v. Detroit, Belle Isle & Windsor Ferry Co., 187 Mich. 177.

¶ 196. Where a bill to restrain certain expenditures by trustees under a will, and an appeal from the order of the probate court approving the account of the trustees, are both pending, and involve the same issues, and by consent of the parties the bill is dismissed, the decree of dismissal does not adjudicate all the issues involved in the pleadings in the injunction suit where there is evidence that such was not the intent of the parties.—In re Ward's Estate, 152 Mich. 218.

¶ 197. A consent decree in a suit to enforce a mechanic's lien, dismissing it as to the wife who owned the land, and against her husband for the amount involved, is not a bar to a creditor's bill and a bill in aid of execution levied against the property upon which the improvements had been made.—Brand v. Connery, 132 Mich. 88.

¶ 198. An intervening petition seeking to obtain a decree declaring an execution sale to be illegal and void because without leave of court while the property was in the hands of a receiver, is not barred by the dismissal of a former petition asking the removal of the receiver and for an accounting and a personal judgment against the receiver.—Campau v. Detroit Driving Club, 130 Mich. 417.

§ 37. Identity of subject-matter.

¶ 199. The subject-matter of a litigation is the right which one party claims as against the other, and on which he demands the judgment of the court.—Jacobson v. Miller, 41 Mich. 90.

¶ 200. One who is sued in respect to one subject-matter is not precluded in any after litigation involving the same questions, though relating to a different subject-matter, from introducing defenses not used in the former suit.—Jacobson v. Miller, 41 Mich. 90.

¶ 201. A judgment in replevin for the value of goods against a vendor who replevied them from one in whose possession they were, does not bar trover by the vendor for their value, since the subject-matter of the latter suit was not involved in the former.—Robinson v. Kunkleman, 117 Mich. 193.

¶ 202. The decision of the court of a foreign state as to the validity of a note given for the purchase price of land is conclusive in another controversy involving the same subject-matter.—Bishop v. Dodge, 196 Mich. 231.

¶ 203. A judgment in a replevin suit for the value of only such goods described in the writ as were found in the possession of the defendant, is no bar to a subsequent suit for goods described in the writ but not found.—Reid, Murdoch & Co. v. Parks, 122 Mich. 363.

¶ 204. A suit for an instalment due on a contract which is not a mere contract for services is not barred by a judgment in a prior suit for an earlier instalment.—Raymond v. White, 120 Mich. 165.

§ 38. Identity of parties.

[Note. Frequently a party complaining or impleaded in the former action in one right or capacity is made party or sues in the later action in a different right or capacity, and it then becomes a question whether he is concluded in one capacity or right by the adjudication had in the other. Generally this depends on whether in the one he was representative of the rights or status asserted in the other. See post §§ 57, 58.]

§ 39. Identities requisite to support estoppel.

See also post ¶¶ 298, 462.

Parties regarded as identical because represented in earlier action, representative relationships, see post §§ 64-76.

¶ 205. Where the record in a former suit between the same parties tends to show that any fact involved in the issue in the second suit was litigated and set at rest in the former suit, it is competent evidence of that fact, although it may not be conclusive upon all of the questions involved in the second suit.—Bond v. Markstrum, 102 Mich. 11.

IV. CAUSES, CLAIMS AND DEFENSES BARRED OR MERGED IN JUDGMENT.

[Note. The bar of causes as dependent on the identity of the former with the later action is treated ante, III; while the question of bar as dependent on the range and scope of the matters litigated or which were open to litigation in the former action is treated in this division, IV. The present division deals with technical "bar" by judgment, while division VI, post, deals with "estoppel" by judgment in the technical sense. The diverse rules as to pleading and proof applicable to pleas in bar or objections of estoppel are treated post, VII.]

¶ 206. A decree dismissing a bill brought to have a mortgage declared void for fraud, and to have a foreclosure under the power of sale set aside, does not estop complainant from attacking the regularity of the foreclosure proceedings, where such regularity was not put in issue or contested.—Bonker v. Charlesworth, 33 Mich. 81.

¶ 207. Dismissal of a bill to clear a title clouded by tax-sales does not prevent a defense at law against the tax-titles.—Gamble v. City of East Saginaw, 43 Mich. 367.

¶ 208. The adjudication of the rights of secured creditors of an insolvent under their several securities, postponing them to a certain mortgage, will not preclude them from asserting as against unsecured creditors, their superior claim to a fund appropriated by the trustee under the prior mortgage to the payment of an invalid claim.—Burrows v. Leech, 116 Mich. 32.

¶ 209. An injunction decree granted to mortgagee restraining a chattel mortgagor from cutting timber and also directing that the chattel mortgage (given to mortgagor's comaker) be assigned to the payee of the note and the payee sell enough of the mortgaged chattels to pay the note and exonerate the comaker, is conclusive in a replevin action brought by the payee against the comaker, injunction defendant and replevin defendant, to recover possession of the mortgaged chattels as directed by the decree, which was allowed to become final for want of appeal.—Vincent v. Sherwood, 118 Mich. 64.

¶ 210. A creditor filed a bill against the devisee of the deceased debtor, joining as codefendants the executor and the devisee's mortgagee, and alleging that there were no assets but the land devised and mortgaged, as described in the bill, and that the mortgagee took with notice of the debt due to complainant. Defendants answered and set up that the mortgage was made to raise money to discharge claims due from the debtor's estate and that the money had been applied; and the mortgagee asked to be subrogated. Complainant claimed no priority over other general creditors, among whom was the devisee himself. In the decree it was found what and how much were these other debts due from decedent "which would stand on an equal footing with complainant's claim and pro rate with it." The right to subrogation had been previously found. The decree then adjudged that complainant should "stand prior in her rights under this decree, and the lien declared by it, to all other sums represented in the said mortgage" * * * for the full amount hereby declared to be her due. It then provided that on paying complainant the mortgagee should be subrogated to her rights. Held, in view of the purpose of the bill, not to have made any adjudication of priority as between the claim of complainant and the rights of the mortgagee; and accordingly an enumeration and description in the decree of the claims paid out of the mortgage proceeds was not to establish the order and extent of the mortgagee's rights but was merely to state which the complainant was to pro rate with, and which were to be inferior to complainant's claim, but all those rights were left open for a distribution of the proceeds resulting from a sale under complainant's decree.—Van Vleck v. Conklin, 123 Mich. 442.

¶ 211. One denied set-off in equity of costs of one suit against costs in others involving the same subject-matter but different parties is still entitled to proceed at law to recover costs in such suits, if not barred by delay.—Carpenter v. Hood, 172 Mich. 533.

¶ 212. A demand is merged in the judgment obtained thereon, and it no longer subsists for any purpose.—Huntoon v. Russell, 41 Mich. 316.

¶ 213. A decree in foreclosure merges the obligation and security and determines conclusively the amount of the debt.—Wallace v. Field, 56 Mich. 3; Haldane v. Sweet, 58 Mich. 429.

¶ 214. A party sued on a note secured by mortgage set up as a defense that a foreclosure had been commenced and carried to a decree. Held, that this was no bar to the action, but that defendant should have moved the court pending the foreclosure to restrain the unauthorized action.—Goodrich v. White, 39 Mich. 489.

¶ 215. Where no sale has been made under a decree granting a lien upon land for past-due instalments of interest, there is no such merger as prevents a recovery for instalments subsequently accruing.—Near v. Donnelly, 93 Mich. 460.

¶ 215a. A note is not so merged in a judgment in attachment as to bar a personal action on it, or its assignment to a third person, if there has been no personal service appearance in the attachment suit, and no part of the judgment satisfied.—Smith v. Curtiss, 38 Mich. 393.

¶ 216. Under Comp. Laws 1857, chap. 133, p. 1219, providing that "in actions against two or more persons jointly indebted upon any joint obligation, contract, or liability, if the process against all of the defendants shall have been served upon either of them the defendant so served shall answer to the plaintiff, and in such case the judgment, if rendered in favor of the plaintiff, shall be against all the defendants in the same manner as if all had been served with process," and that, "such judgment shall be conclusive evidence of the liabilities of the defendant who was served with process in the suit, or who appeared therein; but against every other defendant it shall be evidence only of the extent of the plaintiff's demand, after the liability of such defendant shall have been established by other evidence," a partnership note is not merged in a judgment against all of the members of the partnership, where only one member thereof was served with process.—Mason v. Eldred, 6 Wall. (73 U. S.) 231, 18 L. ed. 783.

¶ 217. A judgment recovered for breach of contract against an assignor, after an assignment because of insolvency, does not operate as a merger of the claim in the judgment recovered, so that such claim cannot be introduced as a set-off or recoupment of damages, there being evidence that the course taken in procuring a judgment for the breach of contract was due to concealment of the assignor, of the fact of assignment, or at least, of the mistake of the defendant in supposing that the claim belonged to the assignor, in which event the hardship and injustice of a strict application of the rule of merger is so apparent that the court is justified in holding that, although the plaintiff assignee was not strictly in privity as to the judgment, he was as to the cause of action upon which it was based, wherefore the defense is proper.—Bacon v. Reich, 121 Mich. 480.

¶ 218. Claimant took a deed of land as security for services as attorney rendered the deceased during his lifetime. A certain mortgagee of the deceased brought a bill to reform his mortgage so as to include the land held as security by claimant. The decree of the court allowing the bill fixed the amount of claimant's lien. Held, that in a claim against the estate of deceased, claimant could not recover interest on the account prior to the decree establishing the lien, since that decree liquidated all accounts up to its date.—Warren v. Sheehan, 156 Mich. 432.

¶ 219. Where seduction has been proved in aggravation of damages in a breach of promise case the recovery will bar any future action for the seduction.—Sheahan v. Barry, 27 Mich. 217.

¶ 220. Where, upon breach of a lumbering contract by failure to make payments, the contractor proceeds under Comp. Laws 1897, § 10756 et seq., How. 2nd Ed., § 13843 et seq., and files a statement of lien, a judgment upon quantum meruit in such proceeding is a bar to a subsequent action for breach of contract based upon the same facts.—La Vasser v. Chesbrough Lumber Co., 190 Mich. 403.

¶ 221. Where plaintiff agreed to purchase an automobile of defendant and turn in as part payment a secondhand automobile, and the contract was canceled by mutual agreement and a deposit returned, and plaintiff maintained an action of assumpsit for the value of the secondhand car against defendant upon the theory that defendant became the owner of the car and was liable for the purchase price, and the case was tried on the merits and the judgment in defendant's favor was not appealed from, plaintiff could not repudiate his contention and bring an action of tort based upon the inconsistent theory that defendant was not the owner, but was in tortious possession.—McDonald v. Young, 198 Mich. 620.

¶ 222. A suit between the state and a railroad, brought for the purpose of destroying the immunity of the railroad from liability for general taxes by a judicial decision compelling it to reorganize under the general railroad law, which was decided against the state, is conclusive of the validity of the railroad special charter under which it claimed such immunity, in subsequent quo warranto proceedings and suits by the state to recover taxes from the railroad.—People ex rel. Attorney General v. Detroit, G. H & M. Ry. Co., 157 Mich. 144.

¶ 223. The refusal of the court to issue execution to enforce payment of a deficiency arising on a foreclosure sale concludes the proceedings in the case, and a subsequent order for leave to bring a suit at law upon the note is unauthorized.—Shields v. Riopelle, 63 Mich. 458.

¶ 224. Where one party to a contract claims that it has been rescinded and recovers judgment against the other party upon the quantum meruit, he is estopped, in a later litigation with the same party, from claiming the right to carry out the contract.—Martin v. Boyce, 49 Mich. 122.

[Note. The rule that a judgment for damages for conversion or trespass to goods and the satisfaction of such judgment passes the title of the goods from plaintiff to defendant is not technically a rule of res adjudicata alone. It also depends on the discharge of liability by the satisfaction and the nature of the action. For this reason such decisions are treated in the specific topics Conversion § 44; Trespass, II; Replevin, IV.]

¶ 225. Whether trespass can be brought to recover the damages which one has sustained by the unlawful detention of his property after he has recovered the property in replevin, quære.—Delevan v. Bates, 1 Mich. 97.

¶ 226. A judgment in trespass is a bar to a subsequent action for defendant's forcibly entering the premises and destroying trees, etc.—Lemerand v. Flint & P. M. R. Co., 117 Mich. 309.

¶ 227. Although a judgment in replevin does not in itself decide anything more than the right of possession, yet it may be rendered conclusive by showing that the right of property was in fact tried and determined.—Lansing v. Sherman, 30 Mich. 49.

¶ 228. A judgment in replevin, where there is no assessment of damages, does not necessarily determine title, but merely determines the right of possession at the time, and is not inconsistent with the right of the defeated party to recover it back under a change of circumstances.—Deyoe v. Jamison, 33 Mich. 94; Pearl v. Garlock, 61 Mich. 419.

¶ 229. Judgment for the return of goods replevied from a buyer by the seller restores to the buyer the possession of the goods without impairing the seller's rights under their contract of sale.—Adams v. Wood, 51 Mich. 411.

¶ 230. A judgment in replevin for the defendant adjudging a return to him of the property taken on the writ, ordering assessment of damages which was done, does not conclude the adverse party that defendant was entitled to the property and prevent the showing in a subsequent suit on the replevin bond that plaintiff, obligor in the bond, delivered the property to an administrator to whom defendant also would have had to deliver it. The rule that where return is waived the value of the goods and all questions of damages must be litigated and are concluded does not apply where return is not waived but judgment is taken for it and damages for detention are assessed.—Simmons v. Robinson, 101 Mich. 240.

¶ 231. Where the defendant at the commencement of a replevin suit is not in possession of the goods in question a subsequent action for assumpsit will lie for the value.—Friedberg v. Bennett, 166 Mich. 558.

¶ 232. A replevin suit in which the property is not taken on the writ and the plaintiff proceeds for damages determines the title to the property.—Parmalee v. Loomis, 24 Mich. 242.

¶ 233. Trover was brought against an execution purchaser by one who claimed through a prior purchase from the execution debtor. The record of a replevin suit between the same plaintiff and the constable who levied the execution being offered in evidence, it was objected that replevin does not determine the title, but only the right of possession at the beginning of the suit; held, that as said judgment was not rendered till after the execution sale, though the suit was begun before and was pending when the sale took place, it was not admissible as evidence against the plaintiff in trover.—Lansing v. Sherman, 30 Mich. 49.

¶ 234. A judgment for defendant in replevin, for exempt property taken by him on execution, bars trover against him for its conversion, unless after the return of the property and before its sale the claim of exemption is plainly made.—McGuire v. Galligan, 57 Mich. 38.

¶ 235. It seems that a judgment in replevin cannot settle the title to land.—Busch v. Nester, 62 Mich. 381; Busch v. Nester, 70 Mich. 525.

§ 44. Alternative causes and defenses.

Same cause suable in different forms, see ante § 42.

Action for partial breach or performance as bar to recovery on entire contract or sale, see also post § 45.

Defenses not made and rights not asserted which might have been presented, see post §§ 49-52.

Right to recover entire damages, including prospective damages as proper element of recovery in one action, see Damages, I.

¶ 236. Where, in an action for the price of goods sold, defendant recovers judgment of no cause of action because the goods do not meet plaintiff's warranty, such judgment is not a bar to an action by plaintiff to recover the value of the goods on defendant's refusal to surrender them.—Aldine Mfg. Co. v. Barnard, 84 Mich. 632.

¶ 237. A judgment in assumpsit, upon a contract for the sale of an article under which title to such article was reserved in plaintiff until paid for, did not constitute an election of remedies so as to bar subsequent replevin.—Canadian Typograph Co. v. Macgurn, 119 Mich. 533.

§ 45. Several causes and split causes.

[Note. What constitutes a splitting of an entire cause depends on the nature of such cause, the scope of the action resorted to for redress, and the measure of damages or compensation allowable in the action. For cases on those questions, see specific topics treating of the specific causes and actions, e. g., Assumpsit; Conversion; Ejectment; Replevin; Trespass; Nuisances; Negligence; Assault, II; Damages.]

Satisfaction of judgment for part of cause of action as release of whole cause, see Releases, III.

¶ 238. Where a party has recovered on a contract the purchase price of staves that were to be delivered by him thereunder to defendant, his failure, by reason of the absence or drunkenness of a witness, to prove the delivery of a certain lot, and the withdrawal of that item in his claim, will not authorize him to bring another suit for it; this item was not a distinct cause of action, and the former judgment was a final determination of the damages he was entitled to recover under the contract.—Dutton v. Shaw, 35 Mich. 431.

¶ 239. Plaintiff sued in attachment against the defendant and declared for two payments on a building contract only one of which was shown by the proofs to be due at the time of the attachment. Plaintiff by leave of court then withdrew the second claim and took judgment for the first payment due. Held, that such a judgment did not bar a subsequent action to recover the second payment. —Love v. Flitcraft, 149 Mich. 149.

¶ 240. All damages arising from one cause of action must be assessed and recovered once for all, and do not renew the cause of action as they mature.—Thompson v. Ellsworth, 39 Mich. 719.

¶ 241. Judgment in an action for slander is a bar to any future action for any repetition thereof open to proof on the trial.—Leonard v. Pope, 27 Mich. 145.

¶ 242. A prior judgment is a bar to all matters that might have been tried under the issues made, and in an action for negligent injury, based on different counts, where a verdict recovered on one count is reversed without a new trial, a subsequent action cannot be maintained on the negligence averred in the other count, the cause of action not being divisible.—Jungnitsch v. Michigan Malleable Iron Co., 121 Mich. 460.

¶ 243. A judgment in trover against a sheriff for conversion by levy precludes trespass for entry to make the levy.—Finn v. Peck, 47 Mich. 208.

¶ 244. A defendant in replevin who takes judgment for the return of the property, but refuses to assess his damages for the seizure and detention, cannot afterwards maintain a separate action therefor.—Drewyour v. Merrell, 112 Mich. 681.

¶ 245. It seems that bringing suit against only one of several persons to recover an entire sum received by him under a constructive trust, but divided with the others, should preclude separate suits against the rest if the complainant had full knowledge of their interests when he elected to sue a particular defendant on the principle that courts of equity will not encourage the needless splitting up of causes of action.—German American Seminary v. Kiefer, 43 Mich. 105.

¶ 246. Where judgment was rendered against the defendant in an action on an appeal bond, given in summary proceedings by a vendor to obtain possession of the premises after default of a contract purchaser, which bond was conditioned upon the payment to complainant of all rent due or to become due up to the time complainant obtained possession, and at the time of the trial of the action on the appeal bond there was due as rent a sum exceeding the amount of the appeal bond, and no claim was made for rent of the farm for the year that the purchaser was wrongfully occupying the farm, held, that in permitting recovery on a bond conditioned for the accounting to the clerk of court of the proceeds of crops for such year, and authorized in lieu of a provision for the appointment of a receiver for such crops, there was not an allowance of a double recovery.—Brown v. Brown, 196 Mich. 677.

§ 46. ——Splitting set-offs.

Set-offs and recoupments withheld, see post § 52.

¶ 247. Comp. L. 1897, § 4721, limiting justice's jurisdiction to claims for not over $100.00 does not give the defendant the right to split an inseparable cause of action; and, having recovered for a part of it by way of set-off in the action in justice court, he cannot recover the balance in a subsequent suit. —Andreas v. Leavitt T'p School District No. 4 Fractional, 138 Mich. 54.

¶ 248. Comp. L. 1897, § 776, precluding set-offs in suits for unliquidated damages will not operate to allow the defendant having obtained judgment for such set-off to the amount of $100.00 in a justice court, to bring suit and recover for the balance of an inseparable cause of action.—Andreas v. Leavitt T'p School Dist. No. 4 Fractional, 138 Mich. 54.

§ 47. Matters passed on as defenses.

Dismissal of cross-bill as final adjudication on merits, see ante ¶ 108.

Presumption as to matters passed on, see post § 95.

¶ 249. When issue is taken upon a plea either in the first instance or after it has been allowed upon argument, if the truth of the matters pleaded is established, the suit is barred so far as the plea extends.—Niles v. Lee, 169 Mich. 474.

§ 48. Defenses and rights not available in former suit.

Defenses and rights not asserted which might have been asserted or partly asserted which might have been more fully asserted, see post §§ 49-52.

¶ 250. A judgment in ejectment does not estop the defendant from setting up in a subsequent action a title obtained by him pending the former suit through foreclosure of a mortgage executed by plaintiff therein after suit begun.—Snyder v. Hemmingway, 47 Mich. 549.

¶ 251. A defendant in ejectment who after issue joined acquired tax-titles from a third party, but did not set them up in defense, was not estopped by the judgment against him from afterwards asserting them; in such a case they do not relate back.—Hemmingway v. Drew, 47 Mich. 554.

¶ 252. A judgment in ejectment does not estop defendant's grantee from setting up a quitclaim acquired pending suit from one who held a valid tax-title on the premises that had matured before suit brought.—Hemmingway v. Drew, 47 Mich. 554.

¶ 253. Where one is made defendant in a foreclosure suit, who is holder of both a second mortgage on the lands and a chattel mortgage of fixtures, the decree in the usual form will bar his rights under the mortgage of the lands, but will leave his chattel mortgage unaffected.—Crippen v. Morrison, 13 Mich. 23.

§ 49. Matters which might have been litigated before.

Defenses actually passed on, see ante § 47.

Defenses not available in former suit, see ante § 48.

Matters available by cross-bill, see also ante ¶ 178.

Defenses withheld, see post § 50.

Deductions, counterclaims and payments withheld, see post § 51.

Set-off and recoupment withheld, see post § 52.

Omission to assert claim on former occasion as depriving party of costs, see Costs § 21.

Prior claim or nonassertion of claim as an admission against interest, see Evidence §§ 388-391.

Failure to assert claim in final account as raising estoppel to question full title passing by administrator's deed, see Estoppel ¶ 16.

¶ 254. A judgment by default is conclusive upon the questions that might have been raised.—Jacobson v. Miller, 41 Mich. 90.

¶ 255. An outstanding claimant under a mortgage proved his claim, but did not show whether it arose before or after a levy that was given priority to the mortgage. Held, that he was bound by the decree.—McKee v. Grand R. & R. L. St. R. Co., 41 Mich. 274.

¶ 256. A wife who is made a party under foreclosure, and fails to assert rights available to her thereunder, will not be heard to assert them upon a bill to set aside a foreclosure sale.—Butters v. Butters, 153 Mich. 153.

§ 50. ——Defenses not made or incompletely made before.

Set-offs and recoupment withheld, see post § 52.

¶ 257. A defense cannot be withheld to be used in the retrial of a dispute respecting the same subject-matter when a single suit could end the whole controversy.—Jacobson v. Miller, 41 Mich. 90.

¶ 258. Matter that was properly a defense in a suit which has gone to final judgment cannot, in a subsequent suit involving the same subject-matter, be used by a privy of one party against the other party.—Hoppin v. Avery, 87 Mich. 551.

¶ 259. In an action for rent due under a lease, it is the duty of defendant to interpose all the defenses upon which it relies; it cannot, therefore, in a later action for subsequent rent due under the same lease, interpose a defense upon which it did not rely in the first action; the judgment in the former suit rendered defendant's liability res adjudicata.—Harrington v. Huff & Mitchell Co., 155 Mich. 139.

¶ 260. Where it does not appear that a defendant in foreclosure had attended the reference for the computation or the amount due on the mortgage, he is nevertheless barred by the decree in foreclosure from suing the complainant to recover back money alleged to have been paid the complainant to apply on the mortgage, but which he claims had not been so applied. It is presumable that he had notice, where the subsequent proceedings imply that the reference had gone on regularly; and the determination of the exact amount due on the mortgage involves the determination of the precise amount of any payments, and these questions are finally adjudicated by a decree in foreclosure.—Hazen v. Reed, 30 Mich. 331.

¶ 261. Where a defendant in foreclosure does not avail himself of defenses that are open to him, he cannot, when sued in ejectment, use them against the absolute foreclosure decree.—Adams v. Cameron, 40 Mich. 506.

¶ 262. A foreclosure decree under a mortgage of the property of a summer resort association estops it as a party to claim that the mortgage was not authorized by the requisite vote of the stockholders, and that it was only authorized by the directors, such defense having been open and not made in the suit.—West Michigan Park Ass'n v. Pere Marquette R. Co., 172 Mich. 179.

¶ 263. Judgment in ejectment and decree in partition in a widow's favor for her dower interest preclude one who was a party to both suits from raising in her subsequent action for possession the defense that he had a homestead right in the land, and that his wife was not made a party to the former suit in ejectment.—Bemis v. Conley, 95 Mich. 617.

¶ 264. After mandamus to compel the State Land Commissioner to reserve from sale certain lands selected on contract the state cannot sue in equity to cancel patents issued to relator on the strength of the mandamus decision, basing its suit on defenses omitted in the mandamus.—State v. Sparrow, 89 Mich. 263.

¶ 265. A claim against an estate upon a note cannot be defended by the executor on the ground that the claimant is chargeable with a breach of a guaranty that a specified sum should be realized from accounts transferred to decedent before he should become liable upon the note, where such defense was the subject-matter of a suit between the claimant and the decedent in his lifetime, and was determined adversely to the latter on the ground of lack of diligence, although the pleadings therein were not so framed as to admit of the showing, which the executor desires to make, that the claimant had waived the right to insist upon such diligence.—Kellogg v. Thompson's Estate, 115 Mich. 618.

¶ 266. In summary proceedings defendant exhibited a written agreement showing his right of possession until August 8, 1909, and thereupon complainant dismissed his suit. After said date complainant instituted new proceedings. Held, defendant was not estopped from introducing another agreement showing his right to possession until 1912 by reason of the fact that he failed to show such agreement upon the hearing of the first proceedings.—Baldwin v. Baldwin, 166 Mich. 157.

¶ 267. Each party to an arbitration deposited his note with the arbitrators, the arrangement being that they should indorse down the note of the one they found to be debtor to the amount of their award against him and deliver it to the other party. This having been done, and suit brought on such note, the debtor filed a bill to have the award corrected by giving him credit for an item which by accident or mistake was not brought to the arbitrators' attention. He obtained a decree, suit on the note being stayed. Held that when suit on the note was again moved, the debtor could not set up the defense that the award was not valid. A party who has got relief on one basis will not be permitted to litigate the matter over again on another basis, on the suggestion that he has a defense which he did not see fit to rely on before.—Beam v. Macomber, 35 Mich. 455.

¶ 268. A decree of divorce granted to a wife on the ground of extreme cruelty is not so conclusive of that question of fact as to prevent the husband from contesting it when he is sued by a third person for necessaries furnished the wife during the divorce proceedings.—Corry v. Lackey, 105 Mich. 363.

¶ 269. In an action for alienating a wife's affections, the fact that the husband failed to set up the charge of adultery in defense of a wife's prior suit for divorce on the ground of cruelty will not preclude his declaring on the ground of criminal conversation and introducing evidence upon that subject.—Knickerbocker v. Worthing, 138 Mich. 224, distinguishing Gleason v. Knapp, 56 Mich. 291, on the ground that the divorce decree was not conclusive on a third person.

¶ 270. A husband divorced for cruelty cannot base an action crim. con. upon intercourse by defendant with his wife, of which he had knowledge before the divorce suit; since it was a complete defense which was barred by the divorce decree.—Gleason v. Knapp, 56 Mich. 291. [Note. The fact that there was no identity between the plaintiff in divorce and defendant in the criminal conversation suit, seems to have passed unnoticed in the foregoing case. Editor.]

¶ 271. A defendant in ejectment cannot go behind or call in question an absolute decree of foreclosure against him to introduce defenses that were open to him, if at all, in the proceedings in equity, but which he did not then rely on.—Adams v. Cameron, 40 Mich. 506.

§ 51. ——Deductions, counterclaims and payments not claimed before.

¶ 272. A claim which was a proper matter of defense in an action at law cannot afterwards be made the subject of an equitable set-off.—Kinney v. Tabor, 62 Mich. 517.

¶ 273. A decree in foreclosure necessarily covers the question of what payments had been made upon the mortgage, and bars a suit in assumpsit by the mortgagor to recover back the amount of a payment not allowed by the mortgagee in taking the decree.—Hazen v. Reed, 30 Mich. 331.

¶ 274. Where, after the death of a partner, a bill for an accounting and for a sale of the partnership assets is filed, the wife of such partner being made a defendant, it is her duty if she claims a dower interest in the firm's realty to assert it in such suit, and failing to do so she is estopped from setting up such claim against an innocent purchaser who relies upon the decree rendered in such suit.—Free v. Beatley, 95 Mich. 426.

¶ 275. Where a tenant in common had neglected to seek compensation for improvements when a partition suit to which he was made a party defendant was brought, he was not allowed to raise the claim in subsequent partition proceedings brought by him. —Pierson v. Conley, 95 Mich. 619.

¶ 276. If one allows judgment to go against him by default on a claim which he has paid in part, he cannot set off such payment when sued on the judgment.—Ringelberg v. Peterson, 76 Mich. 107.

§ 52. ——Set-off and recoupment withheld.

Splitting set-offs, see ante § 46.
Defenses wholly or partly withheld, see ante § 50.
Deductions not amounting to set-off or recoupment, and payments not claimed in partial defense, see ante § 51.
Judgment for breach of contract against assignor after assignment as merging the claim so as to prevent its being set off in subsequent suit, see ante ¶ 217.

¶ 277. Where a defendant's set-off consists of an independent claim against the plaintiff outside of the contracts sued on by plaintiff, it is optional with defendant whether he will litigate his set-off in that action or bring a subsequent suit, but when his credit grows out of the contracts sued upon by plaintiff, and the issue is to determine what is due under those contracts, and the subject-matter of the set-off must be used in determining the amount, the defendant must present his whole claim by set-off; if he fails so to do he will be estopped from afterwards asserting it in a counter-action.—Paccalona v. Peninsula Bank & Lumber Co., 171 Mich. 605.

¶ 278. If a counterclaim is not based on payments made, but constitutes proper set-off, the only effect of failing to appear and plead and prove it would be that, in any subsequent action to recover it, costs could not also be recovered.—Huntoon v. Russell, 41 Mich. 316.

¶ 279. A defendant can withhold his claim of set-off to be litigated in another suit.—McEwen v. Bigelow, 40 Mich. 215.

¶ 280. A claim available in recoupment may be withheld and used separately.—Ward v. Fellers, 3 Mich. 281; Morehouse v. Baker, 48 Mich. 335; Mimnaugh v. Partlin, 67 Mich. 391.

¶ 281. B. had a contract with M., but sued him on the common counts before a justice to recover back an overpayment. He did not put the contract in issue, though he gave M. credits under it. M. filed no set-off, but immediately sued B. before another justice for the whole amount of his bill. Held, that the judgment in the first suit did not bar the second.—McEwen v. Bigelow, 40 Mich. 215.

¶ 282. Plaintiff contracted with defendants to sell them all the shingles he should cut at a certain price. Defendants claimed that by the true construction of the contract he was bound to cut shingles for them, while he claimed he was only bound to sell them what he should cut. He cut and delivered a few and refused to cut more, and they sued him for the refusal. Held, that he was not bound to use by way of recoupment in the suit any sum the defendants owed him for the shingles they had received.—Morehouse v. Baker, 48 Mich. 335.

¶ 283. A defendant who, when sued upon a contract, does not recoup his damages for plaintiff's negligent performance, but sues separately for such damages and gets judgment, cannot plead such judgment in bar of the action against him; nor is the plaintiff in the former action estopped from prosecuting it by the judgment in the latter.—Mimnaugh v. Partlin, 67 Mich. 391.

§ 53. Conclusiveness of judgments or decrees in ancillary, supplementary or executive proceedings.

See also ante ¶¶ 162, 387.
See also other cases in Foreclosure § 175.
Dismissal as bar to bill of review or motion for relief, see also ante ¶ 114.
Conclusiveness of order after judgment, see ante § 32.
Conclusiveness on suggestion of damages for withholding dower of the judgment awarding dower, see Dower ¶ 153.

Invalidity of original judgment as defense in creditors' suits, see Creditors' Suits § 16.

¶ 284. Where a deed was declared a mortgage for a designated amount and an accounting by the grantee in possession for rents and profits ordered, all questions pertaining to the liability of the grantor are res adjudicata.—Miller v. Peter, 184 Mich. 142.

¶ 285. A foreclosure decree determines the amount of defendant's debt, and a petition for execution for deficiency cannot be resisted on grounds inconsistent with the decree.—Ransom v. Sutherland, 46 Mich. 489; Wallace v. Field, 56 Mich. 3; Haldane v. Sweet, 58 Mich. 429.

¶ 286. Where a decree found the amount due upon certain notes and mortgages and that defendants were personally liable therefor, and that the premises should be sold and the deficiency reported, leaving open the question of the effect of a discharge of defendants in bankruptcy, defendant cannot set up as a defense to a deficiency that his liability was not determined by the proceedings.—Field v. Howry, 132 Mich. 687.

¶ 287. A decree for foreclosure of a land contract adjudging a deficiency against the wife of the vendor, who had joined with him in assigning it with an undertaking that the unpaid balance would be paid thereon, she having disclaimed any interest on the bill and having denied any personal liability, is conclusive of her liability when petition is made for execution on the deficiency judgment.—Ward v. Obenauer, 119 Mich. 17.

V. PERSONS CONCLUDED OR ENTITLED TO ASSERT CONCLUSIVENESS.

Effect and conclusiveness of foreign judgments, see Foreign Judgments, II.

§ 54. In general.

Nature of doctrine and basis of conclusiveness, see ante §§ 1, 2.
Judgment as prima facie evidence against or for third person, see ante § 3.
Conclusiveness upon persons who, without good grounds, interplead in the former suit, see ante ¶ 39.
Who regarded as parties, see post § 55.
Persons appearing specially, see post § 56.
Persons in special or representative capacities, see post §§ 57, 58.
Persons notified to appear and defend, see post § 60.
Proper parties not notified or impleaded, see post § 61.
Third persons participating in the proceedings, see post § 62.
Persons bound because in privity to parties, see post §§ 63-76.
The public and parties in public interest, see post § 59.
Estoppel of party to claim res adjudicata, see post § 78.
Sufficiency of evidence to show that a certain person was a party to the former suit, see post § 98.
Persons bound by foreign judgments and decrees and probate orders, see Foreign Judgments § 10.
Immunity of judgment from collateral attack, see Judgments, VII.
Right of defendant in action for wrongful death to show that plaintiff was not widow of decedent as found in granting letters of administration, see also Death by Wrongful Act ¶ 64.
Inconclusiveness of judgment in garnishment on persons not parties or privies, see Garnishment, VI.

¶ 288. Legal proceedings, other than those in rem, bind only parties and their privies.—Besançon v. Brownson, 39 Mich. 388.

¶ 289. A decree is conclusive upon the parties and their privies.—Kent County Agric. Soc. v. Houseman, 81 Mich. 609; Walsh v. Varney, 38 Mich. 73; Atkinson v. Flannigan, 70 Mich. 639.

¶ 290. As a general rule judgments bind only parties and their privies, and no one is bound by a proceeding to which he is not a party.—Hale v. Chandler, 3 Mich. 531; Hodson v. Van Fossen, 26 Mich. 68; Huntoon v. Russell, 41 Mich. 316; Bachelder v. Brown, 47 Mich. 366; Damm v. Mason, 102 Mich. 545.

¶ 291. A judgment between strangers cannot be allowed to prove anything more, whether presumptively or absolutely, than what was alleged and determined as between them, since it would shift the burden of proof in one case according to something done in another, in which the party had no power to intervene.—Hines v. Jenkins, 64 Mich. 469.

¶ 292. A decree in equity is not binding on any one who is not a party or who is not in any way represented by, or in privity with, a party.—Greiner v. Klein, 28 Mich. 12; Jones v. Pashby, 62 Mich. 614.

¶ 293. One cannot be bound by a decree rendered in a cause wherein she is not a party, and against one whose interest she had acquired long before the suit.—Smith v. Williams, 44 Mich. 240.

¶ 294. One cannot be bound by the court's action who is not regularly before the court; nor can a decree be rendered against any party before the court settling any right which can only be lawfully settled by reaching an absent party.—Reed v. Baker, 42 Mich. 272.

¶ 295. A decision of the circuit court upon a question of law is not conclusive in an action by one not a party to the former suit. —Willsie v. Common Council of Ionia, 137 Mich. 445.

¶ 296. A judgment or decree binds those only who are parties to it, and those parties who have never had their day in court are free to have it when contingencies arise on which they desire to act.—West Michigan Park Ass'n v. Pere Marquette R. Co., 172 Mich. 179.

¶ 297. A decree by a federal court cannot affect strangers to the record, or interfere with the regular probate of an estate in a state court which has jurisdiction.—Dickinson v. Seaver, 44 Mich. 624.

¶ 298. To constitute a judgment an estoppel there must be an identity of parties as well as subject-matter, or else the parties in the second action must be in privity with the parties in the former action.—Fowler v. Blount, 191 Mich. 575.

¶ 299. A recorded mortgage is not cut off by foreclosure sale under a prior mortgage so long as no party to the foreclosure suit had, or seemed or was supposed to have, any right or interest in the other mortgage or any power or control over it. It still remains an incumbrance and a foundation for redemption.—Avery v. Ryerson, 34 Mich. 362.

¶ 300. The assignee of a junior mortgage is not bound by foreclosure of the first mortgage where he had no notice of the proceedings.—Sherman v. Fisher, 138 Mich. 391.

§ 55. What constitutes one a party.

Rules for parties and who are proper or necessary parties, see Parties.

¶ 301. To be a party bound by judgment one must be directly interested in the subject-matter, and have the right to make defense or control the proceedings, and appeal from the judgment.—Hale v. Chandler, 3 Mich. 531.

§ 56. ——Persons who appeared specially to object to jurisdiction.

Necessity of jurisdiction to render judgment res adjudicata, see ante § 5.

Effect of special appearance and matters admitted thereby, see Appearance § 9.

¶ 302. The fact that a receiver had been appointed for a limited partnership association prior to the issue of a mandamus to compel the circuit judge to order the production of the books of the association for the purpose of ascertaining the amount of capital stock remaining unpaid, and to cause execution to issue therefor, does not, where there was nothing in the record in the mandamus proceedings to indicate that a receiver had been appointed, render the defense that the receiver is entitled to all the assets unavailable, upon the trial, to stockholders who were not made parties to the mandamus proceedings, and who had appeared before the court below only to protest against its entertaining jurisdiction over them.—Rouse, Hazard & Co. v. Detroit Cycle Co., 111 Mich. 251.

§ 57. Litigants under successive distinct titles.

¶ 303. Certain persons who had levied an execution on mortgaged land and had sold it were impleaded as subsequent incumbrancers and joined in an answer demanding an accounting for rents and profits, but they were thrown out of the case by a foreclosure decree that set aside their levies. They afterwards bought out the interest of an adjacent proprietor. Held, that they were not estopped by the foreclosure from bringing ejectment against the complainant in foreclosure, if their grantor could have done so, for land involved in the foreclosure suit.—Jones v. Pashby, 62 Mich. 614.

§ 58. Litigants in special or representative capacity.

Judgment against officer in representative capacity as concluding him in his personal capacity, see also post § 59.

Privity between representatives and beneficiaries, or persons represented, binding effect on one of judgment against other, see post §§ 65-76.

Estoppel to recover as administrator under Survival Act by recovery as husband for loss of decedent's services, see also post ¶ 411.

¶ 304. A trustee filing a bill to foreclose a mortgage would be bound by the decree, in his individual capacity as the holder of intervening mortgages.—Walsh v. Robinson, 135 Mich. 16.

¶ 305. A father, who as next friend, prosecutes to judgment a claim for the value of the loss of the services of his infant child, cannot maintain a subsequent suit in his personal capacity for the same injury.—Baker v. Flint & P. M. R. Co., 91 Mich. 298.

¶ 306. A judgment upon a note belonging to the estate, recovered by the personal representative in his own name, will bar an action by him upon the same note in his representative capacity.—Knapp v. Lee, 42 Mich. 41.

§ 59. The public, public officers and individual parties.

Judgment in replevin for goods held by an officer as estopping a subsequent levy by another officer upon the same goods, see post ¶ 370.

Conclusiveness on undisputed facts, see post ¶ 458.

¶ 307. The federal circuit court has jurisdiction to try a suit in ejectment by riparian owner against a government agent in charge of a pier constructed in navigable waters in front of plaintiff's premises, and the court may inquire into the title and determine the superior rights and to, render such judgment as may appear proper; the judgment cannot, however, conclude or estop the United States inasmuch as it is not a party and cannot be made so without its consent.—Scranton v. Wheeler, 57 Fed. 803.

¶ 308. Pub. Acts 1901, No. 172, § 13, makes taxes due from railroads a debt to the state, and authorizes their collection by suit by the auditor general in the name of the people. 1 Comp. Laws 1897, § 105, requires the attorney general, at the request of the auditor general, to prosecute and defend all suits relating to matters connected with his department. A suit was brought by a special charter railroad to enjoin the auditor general from collecting taxes under Pub. Acts 1901, No. 173, placing all railroads upon the same basis of taxation. The attorney general appeared in such suit and defended it on the merits, and a decision was rendered against the state. Held, that such suit was in effect one against the state, and the decision rendered was binding upon it in subsequent proceedings against the same road, involving the same questions.—People ex rel. Attorney General v. Detroit, G. H. & M. Ry. Co., 157 Mich. 144.

¶ 309. A new township is not bound by a judgment upon bonds issued by the old township of which it formed a part, where such judgment was rendered in an action brought after the division and without making the new township a party.—Hale v. Baldwin Tp. Board, 49 Mich. 270.

¶ 310. As to the right of a new township set-off from an old one to its day in court where action had been brought and judgment rendered against the old township upon bonds issued by it, and where a suit for contribution to such judgment was brought by the old township against the new, see Township of Grant v. Township of Reno, 107 Mich. 409; Township of Grant v. Township of Reno, 114 Mich. 41.

¶ 311. A judgment sustaining an answer, signed by the chairman of a board of supervisors in his representative capacity, does not raise an estoppel by judgment against his taking a contrary position in a case brought by him in his personal capacity.—Yeomans v. Board Sup'rs Ionia Co., 174 Mich. 451.

¶ 312. A decision in a suit by a tax-payer for an injunction against a city laying concrete under a street railway on the ground that the contract is ultra vires is not res adjudicata in an action by a street railway company against the city for such services rendered.—City of Detroit v. Detroit Ry., 134 Mich. 11.

Effect of judgment against garnishee to bind principal defendant, see Garnishment, VI.

Notice to covenantor to defend title to land, sufficiency, see Covenants for Title § 21.

¶ 313. Where a vendor of timber notified in writing to appear and defend his title in an action brought against the vendee by a third person for the value of the timber, fails to appear and defend, he must be held to have had his day in court and the judgment concludes him.—Fitzpatrick v. Hoffman, 104 Mich. 228.

¶ 314. A valid judgment rendered by a federal court against a township upon plank road bonds issued by it is conclusive as to the validity of the bonds upon a township set off from defendant if obtained without collusion or fraud, and if the new township had an opportunity to participate in the defense.—Township of Grant v. Township of Reno, 107 Mich. 409.

¶ 315. Plaintiffs in garnishment are bound by the judgment in a subsequent suit brought against the garnishee by his creditor's assignee which they have been notified to defend.—Butler v. Wendell, 57 Mich. 62.

¶ 316. Where B. has notified A. of a suit by an attorney for services rendered B. in an action on a bond which B. signed upon A.'s agreeing to indemnify him, and where B. has asked A. to defend such suit, A. is bound by the judgment unless collusively fraudulent.—Knickerbocker v. Wilcox, 83 Mich. 200.

¶ 317. After dissolution of a firm which had unintentionally infringed a patent, the partners were sued for the infringement. One partner, being out of the jurisdiction, was not served with process, but was notified of the action by the other partners and refused to join in the defense. Judgment was recovered against and paid by the other partners. Held, in an action by the other partners against the nonappearing partner for contribution, that such judgment was conclusive evidence against him, both as to damages and costs.—Smith v. Ayrault, 71 Mich. 475.

¶ 318. In an action by a city against an abutting owner to recover the amount of a judgment paid by the city for a sidewalk injury, evidence that the city attorney sent notice of the pendency of the personal injury suit to each of the local agents of the defendant is sufficient to charge them with notice of the suit.—City of Lansing v. Detroit, L. & N. R. Co., 129 Mich. 403.

¶ 319. The fact that the attorney for an abutting owner in sitting in the trial of an action against the city for a sidewalk injury stipulated that his appearance should not bind his client, in no way relieves against a possible liability by the abutting owner who has had notice to defend in an action by the city to recover the amount of the judgment paid in a personal injury action.—City of Lansing v. Detroit, L. & N. R. Co., 129 Mich. 403.

§ 61. ——Persons proper as parties but not made such or notified.

See also post ¶ 373.

¶ 320. Judgment of ejectment against a grantee does not bind a covenantor who was not notified to defend the ejectment suit.—Mason v. Kellogg, 38 Mich. 132.

¶ 321. A finding and report by commissioners on claims of an amount due the estate cannot be regarded as res adjudicata against one who has had no notice of their proposed action, and who never appeared in any way before the commissioners.—Kimball v. Cannon, 59 Mich. 290.

¶ 322. Where, on A.'s agreeing to indemnify him, B. has signed a replevin bond for C., a judgment entered on the bond by consent against B., without notice to A., is prima facie but not conclusive evidence of A.'s liability.—Knickerbocker v. Wilcox, 83 Mich. 200.

¶ 323. A judgment against a township upon plank road aid bonds, void save in the hands of a bona fide holder, is not conclusive of the township's right to recover in a suit to compel contribution to the payment of the judgment from another township organized from the territory of the former after the bonds were issued, where the township sought to be held was given no opportunity of participating in the defense in the action upon the bonds; complainant must establish the good faith of the judgment-plaintiff's holding.—Township of Grant v. Township of Reno, 114 Mich. 41.

¶ 324. A judgment for damages for personal injuries against a corporate party to a pooling agreement among several boat line owners, by which they were operated as one line but with the properties of each left intact and distinct and with a division of earnings according to a scale of percentages and the ordinary running expenses paid out of the gross earnings before division, is not binding on the other parties; where the only notice of the claim and pendency of the suit was a letter from the claimant addressed to one of the other parties and by it delivered to the traffic manager after the close of the operations under the contract, such traffic manager being also the secretary and traffic manager of the judgment defendant, whose vessel was the one in attendance on which the plaintiff suffered the injury while at a defective dock which all of them used, and in addition to that notice, which was rejected on the ground of no liability against any of the vessel companies, a notice by defendant after suit begun of its pendency and of the time for trial with a request to defend it.—White Star Line v. Star Line of Steamers, 141 Mich. 604.

§ 62. Third persons participating in proceedings.

¶ 325. One who sells chattels with warranty of title, and who, when his vendee is sued for their value by the real owner, takes upon himself the defense of the suit is bound by the result, whatever may have been the form of action.—Jennings v. Sheldon, 44 Mich. 92.

¶ 326. Where a third party in a suit upon negotiable paper claims such paper and takes upon himself the defense of the suit on that ground, the judgment binds him.—Bachelder v. Brown, 47 Mich. 366.

¶ 327. Where the claimant of personalty sold by another assumes the defense of an action for the purchase price, brought by the vendor against the vendee, on the understanding that if the defense prevails the vendee will pay the claimant instead of the vendor, the judgment concludes the claimant's rights as between vendor and vendee.—Estelle v. Peacock, 48 Mich. 469.

¶ 328. A vendor of personalty notified by his vendee to defend title will be bound by the judgment but cannot hold his own vendor bound by it unless he has given the latter notice to defend; and this is so though the latter was a witness in the case.—Axford v. Graham, 57 Mich. 422.

¶ 329. A judgment in ejectment against a husband and the tenant of certain premises, was res adjudicata as against ejectment by the wife for the same premises; where it appeared that the wife had knowledge of and participated in the former proceeding and testified that the tenant defendant in such case had been her tenant, and where no appeal was prosecuted.—Carpenter v. Carpenter, 136 Mich. 362.

¶ 330. A judgment for the amount of a lien does not prove breach of warranty unless rendered in a proceeding which the warrantors undertook to be concerned in or had proper notice to defend.—De Witt v. Prescott, 51 Mich. 298.

¶ 331. A party defendant to a bill to foreclose an alleged lien against real estate for the payment of alimony given in a divorce action, who was not a party to such former action, is not estopped by such judgment to assert title to the property, although she was called as a witness in such former action, where both she and her husband testified and strenuously insisted that they were owners of the land.—Fowler v. Blount, 191 Mich. 575.

¶ 332. On a bill to foreclose an alleged lien against real estate for the payment of alimony given in a divorce action the decree allowing such lien is not res judicata as to one claiming such land as a tenant by the entirety, where such party was not a party to the divorce action, and it is immaterial that she was a witness in such case.—Fowler v. Blount, 191 Mich. 575.

§ 63. Persons represented by parties; privity.

[Note. The general rule that a judgment is binding on the privies of the party (see ante § 54) is illustrated by the cases in the following sections (§§ 64-76), which describe the various relations. For additional cases in which the rule that one is bound by privity by that which binds his representative, see Evidence, VII, C, 3 (admissions by persons in privity to a party). For cases on the necessity or propriety of making one a party, when claimed to be represented by a trustee, see Estates of Decedents, XI, A; Trusts, IX.]

Effect of judgment against garnishee, see Garnishment, VI.

§ 64. ——Purchasers or successors pendente lite.

[Note. The effect of a filed notice of lis pendens to charge takers pendente lite and the relative rights of the takers under such a notice and of other parties is more strictly a doctrine of notice affecting title than a part of the law of former adjudication. See Lis Pendens.]

Injured minor and parent losing services of the minor, see also ante ¶ 168.

Assignees and successors before or after suit, see post § 75.

¶ 332a. An assignee pendente lite, who permits the suit to go on in the name of the assignor and acquiesces in the proceeding, is bound thereby, and any judgment that may be recovered will be a bar to any subsequent proceedings that the assignee might bring for the same cause of action.—Peters v. Gallagher, 37 Mich. 407.

¶ 332b. One, who bought replevied chattels pending a retrial of the replevin action, is bound by the result of the retrial though he was not a party and though the adversary in the present action was also not a party of record, being, however, the real party in interest, and both parties to the present suit being privies to those in the former suit.—Hoppin v. Avery, 87 Mich. 551.

§ 65. ——Principal and agent.

Judgment of cause of action waived as concluding attorney claiming lien on original cause, see also post ¶ 427.

¶ 333. A judgment in replevin against an agent does not conclude his principal, even though the principal acted as the agent's attorney at the trial.—Warner v. Comstock, 55 Mich. 615.

¶ 334. A constable seized a horse under a chattel mortgage, but the mortgagor recovered it in replevin and then sold it. The mortgagee then brought trover against the purchaser. Held, that he was not concluded by the judgment against the constable, even though the latter was his agent since agents and principals are not in privity in respect to property rights and the fact that the principal acted as attorney for the agent in the replevin suit does not alter the rule.—Warner v. Comstock, 55 Mich. 615.

¶ 335. J.'s agent moved a division fence that stood between J.'s premises and P.'s. P. moved it back again in the night. J. tried to tear it down, and as P.'s wife resisted he assaulted her. In an action therefor by Mrs. P. she could not show, as res adjudicata, that in a former suit between the agent and a third person concerning other premises, but in which the principal matter in issue was the true location of a section line that P. claimed as the boundary to the premises in suit, the result was adverse to the agent.—Phillips v. Jamieson, 51 Mich. 153.

Conclusiveness of judgment in ejectment where wife not joined, see ante ¶ 37.

Judgment in ejectment conclusive upon wife who participated in the proceedings, see ante § 62.

Conclusiveness as between husband and wife of conflicting divorce decrees, see ante ¶ 155.

Conclusion by judgment as to matters which might have been litigated, see also ante ¶ 256.

Decree in favor of surviving husband not conclusive upon the executor of wife not made a party, see post ¶ 393.

Question as to emancipation of wife made res adjudicata by judgment in favor of husband for loss of wife's services, see post ¶ 411.

¶ 336. A foreclosure decree on a mortgage not signed by the mortgagor's wife and covering their homestead does not affect her homestead rights where she was not a party to the decree.—Shoemaker v. Collins, 49 Mich. 595.

¶ 337. The right of a wife and children to question a deed of the homestead will not be affected by the result of a suit in ejectment in which the wife is not made a party nor the children represented.—First Nat. Bank v. Jacobs, 50 Mich. 340.

¶ 338. A proceeding to obtain widow's allowances is not binding upon a woman who had in good faith married decedent after the claimant had left him, and was living with him as his wife at the time of his death, but was not made a party to the proceeding brought by her predecessor.—Young's Appeal, 52 Mich. 592.

¶ 339. A decree of divorce granted to a wife on the ground of extreme cruelty is not res judicata of that question of fact so as to prevent the husband from contesting its truth in a suit by a third person against him to recover for necessaries furnished the wife pending the divorce proceedings.—Corry v. Lackey, 105 Mich. 363.

§ 67. ——Trustees, assignees for creditors, or receivers and their beneficiaries.

Judgment for breach of contract against assignor after assignment as merging the claim, see ante ¶ 217.

Judgment against trustee as binding on him individually, see ante § 58.

Assignee for creditors as representative of estate and creditors in actions, see Assignments for Creditors § 36.

Decree pro confesso against assignor as proof of fraud against assignee, see Assignments for Creditors ¶ 120.

¶ 340. In a proceeding between a creditor and an insolvent company's assignees, the former secured a decree giving him a lien on the assets against creditors generally. Held, that a general creditor who failed to give notice to the assignees that he had a special claim on the assets could not litigate over again the question settled in the former proceeding.—Farrell Foundry & Machine Co. v. Preston Nat. Bank, 93 Mich. 582.

¶ 341. Where the order for the appointment of a receiver of goods claimed under a chattel mortgage antedating the assignment, after reciting that it has been represented to the court by defendants' solicitor that the property, the sale of which under the mortgage has been enjoined, is depreciating in value, and should be sold forthwith under the order and direction of the court, and the proceeds thereof held to abide the further order of the court—authorizes the sale of the property by the receiver, and no objection is made by the assignor to such sale's being made pursuant to said order, and the final decree in effect affirms the sale, and treats the proceeds thereof as a trust fund in the hands of the receiver, the assignor cannot avail himself of the irregularity in making such order.—Burnham v. Dillon, 100 Mich. 359.

¶ 342. Whether a decree affirming the validity of a chattel mortgage, in a suit wherein the general assignee of the mortgagor is a party, is conclusive upon an unsecured creditor of the latter, who had instituted proceedings to test the validity of the mortgage prior to the assignment, quære.—Krementz v. Howard, 109 Mich. 466.

¶ 343. A judgment in an action between a mortgagor and the mortgagee passing on the question whether there had been an assignment by the mortgagee does not bind the assignee who was not party thereto or in privity to the judgment.—Aultman, Miller & Co. v. Sloan, 115 Mich. 151.

¶ 344. An assignee of a corporation who brings suit for the price of articles furnished under a contract of the assignor, the assignment having been made before the institution of an action for damages for breach of contract, is not a privy to the judgment recovered by the defendant for the breach of contract, as his rights were acquired before the defendant began his action, but he is a privy to the injury upon which the defendant's judgment rests. While the claim of the defendant for breach of contract is merged in the judgment recovered against the assignor, so that the judgment is a bar to another action, or an attempt to recoup damages against the assignor, such judgment can be set off in an action brought by the assignor, or an action may be brought upon it.—Bacon v. Reich, 121 Mich. 480.

§ 68. ——Corporation or association and stockholders or members.

Stockholders who appear specially to object to jurisdiction not concluded, see ante § 57.

Judgment on commercial paper for goods bought as judgment for goods sold under statute, see also Corporations ¶ 1173.

Disability of creditor estopped in fact to assert that stock is underpaid to claim that decree for corporation established that fact against other holders, see Corporations ¶ 1213.

Evidentiary and prima facie force of judgment against corporation when offered in suit against stockholders to enforce liability, see also Corporations § 329.

Foreign judgment against corporation as binding stockholders or officers, see Foreign Judgments §§ 10, 13.

¶ 345. Each stockholder or member of a corporation is so far an integral part thereof that, in a suit brought to determine the amount of the indebtedness of the corporation preparatory to an assessment upon the stockholders to pay the same, he is represented through the corporation itself, and bound and concluded by the determination therein and such judgment is binding in a court of another state as to those facts.—Mutual Fire Ins. Co. v. Phoenix Furniture Co., 108 Mich. 170.

¶ 346. In a proper case it seems that a judgment against a corporation, if obtained without fraud or collusion, is conclusive and binding upon one of its stockholders as to the nature and extent of the company's liability; but the questions whether the cause of action adjudicated was of a nature to render the stockholders liable under the statute, and whether the conditions as to ownership of stock, and the fact of such ownership at the time specified, existed, should be considered open.—Bohn v. Brown, 33 Mich. 257.

¶ 347. Under Laws 1877, Act No. 113 (How. St., § 4110), an action for a labor debt may be brought against a corporation alone, or against the company and stockholders jointly, but not against the stockholders alone, and a judgment against the company is a bar to a subsequent action against the stockholders for the same debt.—Milroy v. Spurr Mountain Iron Min. Co., 43 Mich. 231.

¶ 348. A judicial assessment on the members of an insolvent mutual fire insurance company for which a receiver had been appointed pursuant to Comp. L. 1897, § 7331, is binding on the members as privies to it and they cannot when sued for such assessment thereafter question the assessment as being excessive.—Collins v. Welch, 141 Mich. 676.

¶ 349. A judgment not only fixes the extent of liability, but the party or parties liable, and if such party is a corporation it is not merely individual members thereof that are held.—Brewer v. Michigan Salt Ass'n, 58 Mich. 351.

¶ 350. Where a bond is given to the United States by the individual members of a partnership association limited, which had entered into a contract for the construction of a federal building, conditioned upon the performance of the work by the company according to the contract and prompt payment to all persons supplying labor and materials, and signed by such individual members, who are named as principals, and binding them, their heirs, executors, administrators, successors and assigns, jointly and severally, and, after the filing of demurrers by all such individual members and a plea by the corporate surety setting up the defense that the bond was not the obligation of the individual defendants but of the association, in an action by the United States against them for the benefit of persons furnishing labor and material who had not been paid in favor of plaintiff and the judgment paid by the surety, the individual members are estopped by such judgment in an action by the surety against them in the State of Michigan to compel them to reimburse it to object that the bond was the obligation of the association and not their individual obligation.—Maryland Casualty Co. v. Scheurman, 199 Mich. 1.

¶ 351. A decree in a foreclosure suit brought by a trust company binds the bondholders of the company while it stands unreversed; if the decree or the sale under it is in fraud of their rights their remedy is by a direct proceeding to set aside the sale or the decree, and to proceed anew with another foreclosure, and not to reforeclose what has been already fully foreclosed.—Richter v. Jerome, 123 U. S. 233, 31 L. ed. 132, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 106.

§ 69. ——Partners.

Merger of partnership note in judgment against the partners where only one partner served, see ante ¶ 216.

Decree in partnership accounting as concluding claim for dower which a widow of a partner might have asserted in the proceeding, see ante ¶ 274.

Judgment against partners as conclusive upon absent partner who was notified to appear and defend, see ante ¶ 317.

Administrator of deceased partner not concluded by judgment establishing the existence of the partnership, see post ¶ 394.

¶ 352. A judgment on a firm debt against one of two partners, who has agreed to pay the debts of the firm, is not evidence against the other of the amount of the debt.—Thompson v. Richards, 14 Mich. 172.

§ 70. ——Persons liable over or in succession.

Judgment by third person as evidence of primary liability, see ante § 3.

Judgment on replevin bond as conclusive on indemnitor who was not made party, see ante ¶ 322.

Judgment against covenantee as evidence against covenantor in action for breach, see Covenants for Title § 26.

Contract liability of one person to indemnify another, see Indemnity.

¶ 353. A judgment between the subcontractor and the principal contractor for street work that the balance due the subcontractor was not yet earned because of a pending suit for injuries due to the subcontractor's negligent failure to place lights at excavations in the street, will bar his recovery of the amount from the city, which holds the principal's check for the amount, where the suit has resulted in a judgment against the city and an action over by the city against the principal contractor is pending and undetermined.—Anderson v. City of Detroit, 124 Mich. 471.

¶ 354. A judgment in a former action against a person primarily liable is prima facie evidence of the amount of damages in an action against the person liable over, though the latter had no notice of the former suit.—Grant v. Maslen, 151 Mich. 466.

¶ 355. A judgment against the city in an action for a sidewalk injury is not conclusive in a subsequent action by the city against the abutting owner that the latter is liable. —City of Lansing v. Detroit, L. & N. R. Co., 129 Mich. 403.

¶ 356. The decision rendered in an action against a railroad company for the death of a passenger by being thrown through the door of a vestibule between Pullman cars, would not be res adjudicata in a suit by the railroad company against the Pullman Company involving the liability of the latter to indemnify the former.—Robinson v. Chicago & A. R. Co., 135 Mich. 254.

§ 71. ——Persons jointly liable.

Judgment against two joint debtors, one only of whom was served, see ante ¶ 27.
Conclusiveness of judgment vacated as to one defendant, see ante ¶ 153.
Effect of judgment against one of two joint debtors as bar, see ante § 41.
Release of one as release of all parties jointly liable, see Releases, III.

¶ 357. A judgment for defendants in a joint action does not bar another proceeding against a portion of them on the same cause of action.—City of Detroit v. Houghton, 42 Mich. 459.

¶ 358. At common law a judgment against one joint debtor operates as a merger, and puts an end to any action on the original contract against either.—Candee v. Clark, 2 Mich. 255; Bonesteel v. Todd, 9 Mich. 371.

¶ 359. A judgment rendered under the Joint Debtor Act, in form against two joint debtors, only one of whom was served with process, is not an extinguishment of the demand sued upon.—Bonesteel v. Todd, 9 Mich. 371; Mason v. Eldred, 6 Wall. (73 U. S.) 231, 18 L. ed. 783.

¶ 360. The payee of a note may sue the maker for the amount notwithstanding that he has recovered judgment against the indorsers; provided the judgment has not been paid.—J. A. Fay & Co. v. James Jenks & Co., 78 Mich. 304.

§ 72. ——Principal and surety.

See also ante ¶ 13.
Operation as res adjudicata of former judgment against surety which has been vacated, see ante ¶ 152.
Conclusion of sureties on appeal bond as to costs allowed, see Appeal ¶¶ 2420, 2421.

¶ 361. Sureties are concluded by a judgment against their principal obtained in the customary manner and in the course of regular proceedings, but not by a secret confession of judgment fraudulently and collusively made between him and the obligee.—Wright v. Hake, 38 Mich. 525; People for use of Clinton v. Laning, 73 Mich. 284.

¶ 362. Sureties in a bond to pay any judgment recovered against their principal cannot, when sued for the amount of such judgment, retry the merits of the original suit on the claim that they have had no day in court.—People for use of Clinton v. Laning, 73 Mich. 284.

¶ 363. A decree in a suit to reform a lease on the ground of a mistake in the matter of time of payment of rent is conclusive as to the parties, but not as against a surety on the lease who was not made a party to the suit.—Stevens v. Pendleton, 83 Mich. 342.

¶ 364. A mortgage was foreclosed, and the mortgagee was credited with certain taxes which he had paid on the land. Held, that a surety who was made a party, and who stood in the shoes of the mortgagor, was bound by such decree, and could not question the validity of the tax paid in a proceeding by bill to redeem.—Miller v. Peter, 158 Mich. 336.

§ 73. ——Persons having related interests, liens or claims on same property.

Effect of foreclosure on assignee of junior mortgage not joined as party, see also ante ¶ 300.

¶ 365. Where outstanding creditors are not made parties to a foreclosure against property by which their own claims are secured, they are not concluded by the decree and have their proper remedy.—Detroit Savings Bank v. Truesdail, 38 Mich. 430.

¶ 366. Where an accounting is had in a suit in equity, persons incidentally interested therein, but who are not parties to the suit, are not concluded thereby.—Ryerson v. Eldred, 18 Mich. 12, 490.

¶ 367. Fraud in a sale by a debtor is a matter as to which only attaching creditors have any legal interest in the trial of it in a replevin suit by the purchaser against an officer holding under the attachment, even though the latter had collusively suffered judgment; and no other creditors could have their rights conclusively determined by the result of such a suit.—McKay v. Kilburn, 42 Mich. 614.

¶ 368. On a bill to quiet titles held in severalty the owners, if not represented, will not be bound by an adverse decree.—Jenness v. Smith, 58 Mich. 280.

¶ 369. Where a bill is brought to enjoin the use of a strip of land as a passageway, and a decree is entered holding defendant has title by adverse possession, such decree cannot affect a landowner not a party to the suit.—Bean v. Bean, 163 Mich. 379.

¶ 370. A judgment in replevin against an officer holding goods under an attachment does not estop the same or prevent any other officer from levying execution on the same goods in a different suit brought by another creditor of the party against whom the attachment was issued, where such creditor had no interest in the replevin suit nor the right to intervene therein. Nor would it be conclusive of the title as against a purchaser at the execution sale.—McKay v. Kilburn, 42 Mich. 614.

¶ 371. A judgment in an action for wages under Comp. Laws 1897, §§ 9550-9552, providing for preferences of wage claims is not conclusive against a prior chattel mortgagee who is not made a party thereto.—Fisher v. Wineman, 125 Mich. 642.

§ 74. ——Landlord and tenant.

Judgment in summary proceedings to regain possession, see ante § 13; post ¶ 429.

Judgment in suit for rent as bar to subsequent suit, see ante ¶ 177.

Judgment in action for rent as concluding defenses which might have been interposed, see ante § 50.

Judgment in suit upon agreement by landlord to pay costs as bar to suit to recover costs of action on appeal bond, see ante ¶ 169.

¶ 372. In trover against a landlord for seizing a crop which the tenant had previously sold in good faith to the plaintiff, the landlord cannot justify himself by producing the record of certain summary proceedings taken by himself to recover possession of the premises from the tenant, if there is nothing in them to show that the landlord had ever claimed a forfeiture of the lease, or that the premises recovered were the same as those leased, or that the lease was in force at the time the proceedings were taken, or that the tenant had failed in any of his obligations, or that plaintiff was in any way concerned in or had any notice of the proceedings.—Miller v. Havens, 51 Mich. 482.

¶ 373. A judgment in ejectment against a tenant whose landlord is not notified of the suit, and does not appear, does not bind the landlord's subsequent grantee.—Powers v. Scholtens, 79 Mich. 299.

§ 75. ——Successors in interest and title.

Decree of foreclosure as concluding an assignee of a junior mortgage, see ante ¶ 300.

Judgment in ejectment against grantee, conclusiveness upon a covenantor who had no notice of the suit, see ante ¶ 320.

Judgment as concluding vendor who was notified to appear and defend, see ante § 60.

Judgment as conclusive upon persons who participate in the proceedings, see ante § 62.

Assignees and successors pendente lite, see ante § 64.

Judgment against covenantee as evidence against covenantor for breach, see Covenants for Title § 26.

¶ 374. A judgment recovered by one who had assigned his claim to a third party after suit begun would be a bar to any future proceedings which the assignee might commence for the same cause of action.—Peters v. Gallagher, 37 Mich. 407.

¶ 375. No one is estopped by the acts or doings of his subsequent grantees; hence litigation with assignees in which property was treated as personalty does not bind the assignors that it was so.—Bigelow v. Reynolds, 68 Mich. 344.

¶ 376. Defendants in an attachment proceeding in the federal court assigned a debt due them, and the debtor was afterward garnished and the assignee notified to appear in the federal court and maintain the rights conferred by the assignment. The assignee did not appear, and judgment was rendered against the garnishee upon the statutory issue provided for by How. St., § 8085. The assignee meanwhile sued the garnishee in the state courts and recovered judgment. Held, on error, that the assignee was bound by the proceedings in the federal court, which had possession of the principal controversy and could take cognizance of collateral issues.—Rothschild v. Burton, 57 Mich. 540.

¶ 377. Where, in a suit against a corporation, defendant's title was held valid and complainant's title was held to constitute a cloud thereupon, and to be invalid, the decree in such suit is conclusive of the rights of the parties in ejectment by the corporation against such complainant's grantee.—People's Savings Bank v. Eberts, 96 Mich. 396.

¶ 378. Plaintiff brought an action against a sheriff for taking certain personal property, which, on final hearing, was determined against the plaintiff. After the sheriff had sold the property, plaintiff brought his action to recover the same against the purchaser at the sheriff's sale, but it was held that judgment in the suit against the sheriff was a bar to the action against the purchaser.—Prentiss v. Holbrook, 2 Mich. 372.

¶ 379. Ejectment was brought against the executors of an estate, and they prevailed. The executor of one of the heirs, to whom the rest had conveyed their interests, afterwards brought ejectment for the same land against a grantee of the plaintiff in the first action. Held, that the former judgment operated as an estoppel against such grantee. And if all the heirs united in defending the first suit the estoppel would not be affected by a question whether, as between one of the heirs and the ancestor, the title was in one or the other.—Whitford v. Crooks, 54 Mich. 261.

¶ 380. The complainant's predecessor in title brought a bill to set aside certain taxes. The record showed that the case was decided in open court and, after proof and argument by counsel, the tax liens were upheld, and a decree of sale entered. Held, in a bill against the tax deed purchaser to set aside the tax deeds made in pursuance of the sale, that complainant was bound by the decree against his predecessor.—Anker v. Schreib, 158 Mich. 105.

¶ 381. In a suit by an assignee of a mortgagor to enforce a secret agreement between mortgagor and mortgagee, providing for a sale of the land and an extension of the time of payment, the decree granting the relief sought is not res judicata that the assignee's title is good against creditors of the mortgagor not made parties to the suit. —Bigelow v. Sheehan, 150 Mich. 507.

¶ 382. In an action on an insurance policy where plaintiff has assigned his claim to his attorneys to secure them for their fees they are bound by the judgment.—Dahrooge v. Sovereign Fire Ins. Co., 175 Mich. 248.

¶ 383. As a final judgment binds not only parties but their privies, one who buys from a replevin defendant to whom the property has been returned by virtue of a judgment in his favor for such return is bound by a final judgment in plaintiff's favor.—Hoppin v. Avery, 87 Mich. 551.

¶ 384. A judgment in replevin by a third person against a vendee for the amount of a lien does not prove breach of warranty of title unless the vendors undertook to defend the suit or had proper notice to do so.—De Witt v. Prescott, 51 Mich. 298; and see Axford v. Graham, 57 Mich. 422.

¶ 385. A judgment in replevin against a vendee cannot be evidence of a breach of his vendor's warranty of title in the absence of any evidence that such judgment depended upon the state of the title at the time of the sale.—Moore v. Bostwick, 23 Mich. 507.

¶ 386. A judgment in replevin in favor of a vendor against one who bought the goods from him under fraudulent representations, is not conclusive against one to whom the goods were mortgaged before the claim of fraud was made.—Vincent v. Hansen, 113 Mich. 173.

¶ 387. In a proceeding by a purchaser on foreclosure for a writ of assistance against a contract purchaser, the latter cannot avoid the effect of the foreclosure by setting up equities between himself and other defendants before the sale, and by connecting the petitioner with them.—Ketchum v. Robinson, 48 Mich. 618.

§ 76. ——Decedent and representatives, heirs and legatees.

See also ante ¶ 126.

Effect of recovery by foreign executor, see also ante ¶ 170.

Judgment on personal representative's general bond as bar to suit on his special bond, see ante ¶ 187.

Judgment on note for representative in his own name as barring an action by him in his representative capacity, see ante ¶ 306.

Authority and right of personal representative to sue or defend for estate, see Estates of Decedents, XI, A.

¶ 388. A chancery record in a suit brought by plaintiff's ancestor, through whom he claimed title, against third persons, would be relevant to show plaintiff's title, as it established the title of such ancestor as against the defendants thereto; and the plaintiff as one of the heirs-at-law was entitled to its benefit.—Weeks v. Downing, 30 Mich. 4.

¶ 389. A determination in a chancery proceeding instituted by the heirs of one child against the heirs of another, that a conveyance from their common ancestor had not been made, is conclusive in an action by the administrator of one of such children against the estate of the other child, to establish a claim for services based upon the promise of such a conveyance.—In re Colburn's Estate, 153 Mich. 206; More v. Luther, Id.

¶ 390. A judgment for defendants in ejectment brought against executors of an estate who under the statute had a right to the possession as representing the heirs, all of whom united in the defense, is an estoppel against plaintiff and all claiming in privity with him from contesting the title afterwards.—Whitford v. Crooks, 54 Mich. 261.

¶ 391. Heirs at law of a defendant in a chancery partition that has not been revived against them after the death of their ancestor are not precluded by the decree in such partition suit from bringing ejectment for their undivided interest; proceedings which ignore them and their interests cannot affect their legal rights.—De Mill v. Port Huron Dry Dock Co., 30 Mich. 38.

¶ 392. The estate of a deceased judgment debtor has no better defense to an action on the judgment, or proceedings to collect it, than he would have had if living.—Arnold v. Thompson, 19 Mich. 333.

¶ 393. A decree that the surviving husband is entitled to the entire proceeds of a mortgage payable to the husband and wife, in a proceeding in chancery to which the latter's executor was not made a party, is not conclusive against his right to recover from the husband the half of the proceeds belonging to the wife.—Luttermoser v. Zeuner, 110 Mich. 186.

¶ 394. Where in a suit involving the question of the existence of a partnership between defendants one dies and the suit is revived against the survivor, a judgment establishing the existence of the partnership does not bind the administrators of the deceased defendant in a subsequent action brought by them.—Van Kleeck v. McCabe, 87 Mich. 599.

¶ 395. An ejectment record in a suit brought by coheirs of the plaintiff against third parties, and to which the plaintiff was not a party, has no relevancy to prove title in the plaintiff.—Weeks v. Downing, 30 Mich. 4.

¶ 396. No one legatee is estopped by a finding that has been set aside on the appeal of only one in a proceeding to determine the rights of all of them upon the distribution under the will.—McClintock's Appeal, 58 Mich. 152.

¶ 397. Mere rendition of a judgment for the plaintiff in trover against the administrator of a sheriff who had seized plaintiff's property as the property of another in attachment, did not operate to transfer the title to the property in question, so as to preclude a subsequent action of trover against the deceased sheriff's successor for conversion of the property through an execution sale pursuant to judgment in the attachment suit.—John A. Tolman Co. v. Waite, 119 Mich. 341.

§ 77. Judgments in rem.

What proceedings are in rem, see specific topics treating of the various special proceedings, e. g., Attachment § 135; Garnishment; Wills, V, and see also references ante § 13.

Basis of the doctrine of res adjudicata, see ante § 2.

Ordinance vacating a street as res adjudicata, see ante ¶ 20.

Necessity that proceedings be commenced by proper person, see ante ¶ 29.

Collusion as affecting conclusiveness of divorce decree, see ante ¶ 30.

Will contest as conclusive on capacity of testator, see also ante ¶ 188.

Proceedings in bankruptcy, see Bankruptcy §§ 13, 19.

Bankruptcy discharge as quasi in rem, see also Courts ¶ 131.

Effect of decree in proceedings for sale of lands for delinquent taxes, see Taxes, XI.

¶ 398. The theory upon which a judgment in rem is regarded as binding upon all the world is that all the world have constructive notice of the seizure, with the cause and purpose of the taking, and the time and place at which any person may appear before a competent tribunal, and have a trial before the condemnation of his property.—Hibbard v. People, 4 Mich. 125; Wight v. Maxwell, 4 Mich. 45. Writ of error dismissed, 18 How. 511, 15 L. ed. 506.

¶ 399. A determination of the city council of Detroit not to vacate a street as petitioned for is an adjudication in rem, barring an application to the circuit court for a vacation of the same street unless it is shown that the circumstances have so changed as to justify it.—Detroit Real Estate Inv. Co. v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 137 Mich. 108.

§ 78. Estoppel to assert res adjudicata.

Grounds and basis for estoppels other than by judgment, see Estoppel.

¶ 400. Although a judgment could be treated as one for the whole amount confessed to be due, yet if plaintiff has taken execution and collected the lesser amount he must be regarded as having elected to treat it as a judgment for the lesser amount, and is as much bound by that election as if he had originally consented to have judgment taken for such amount.—Town v. Smith, 14 Mich. 348.

¶ 401. Where, in an action for fraudulent representations inducing the execution of a logging contract, plaintiff recovers judgment under a ruling of the court that certain overpayments claimed to have been made on the contract by defendant should not be considered in reduction of damages, for the reason that they are the subject of another suit between the parties, plaintiff, in a subsequent action upon the supersedeas bond given on appeal from such judgment, in which defendant claims a set-off to the amount of said overpayments, is estopped from asserting that defendant's claim is barred by the judgment in the former action.—Busch v. Wilcox, 106 Mich. 514.

¶ 402. Where a lessor interposes by way of set-off, in an action by the widow of one of two joint lessees, a claim upon a promissory note executed by the lessees jointly, and thereafter allows judgment to be entered against him in such case upon the express agreement with the attorney for the surviving lessee that the settlement shall not preclude the interposition of the claim in a pending suit by such lessee, the latter is estopped from asserting that such judgment is res judicata as to the lessor's claim upon the note.—McCarthy v. Sleight, 114 Mich. 182.

¶ 403. Plaintiff, who in replevin for mortgaged chattels had an opportunity to assert a former judgment upon the note secured and fails to do so, cannot urge the estoppel in a subsequent garnishment on the judgment for the note.—Bateman v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co., 96 Mich. 441.

VI. PARTICULAR FACTS CONCLUDED OR ESTOPPED.

§ 79. In general.

Effect and conclusiveness of foreign judgments and judgments of sister states, see Foreign Judgments, II.
Conclusiveness of jurisdictional findings and recitals in foreign judgments, see Foreign Judgments § 5.
Facts open for collateral impeachment of judgment, see Judgments, VII.
Former decision as law of the case in subsequent trials, see Courts § 35; Appeal, XIV, G, XV.
Right to have modification of decree as to custody of children notwithstanding estoppel by decree, see Divorce § 118.
Right in opposing application for execution to raise objections concluded by foreclosure and deficiency decree, see Foreclosure ¶¶ 741a, 745.
Facts concluded or estopped by discharge in habeas corpus proceedings, see Habeas Corpus.
Validity and effect of tax titles and conclusiveness of tax deeds, see Taxes, XII, B.

¶ 404. That the judgment may be deemed res adjudicata of particular facts or questions, it must appear that such facts or questions were actually litigated; that they were submitted to and decided by the jury or court, and that they were not collateral issues, but were crucial questions in the former controversy.—Bond v. Markstrum, 102 Mich. 11.

¶ 405. Adjudications upon the subject-matter of a suit are conclusive wherever any question respecting it arises afterwards in a collateral suit, and in any new suit in which the pleadings put any part of it in issue; and this is so whether the adjudication was obtained on default, or whether all possible questions were raised on the trial, or whether it was correct in fact or law.—Jacobson v. Miller, 41 Mich. 90.

§ 80. Matters actually litigated and determined.

Matters in issue but not decided, see post § 89.
Matters not expressly decided but necessarily involved, see post § 93.
Construction of bill against pleader in determining facts confessed by default, see also Equity ¶ 594.

¶ 406. Where the execution and delivery of a lease are disputed in a suit for rent, the determination of the issue concludes the parties in any subsequent litigation involving the right to rent under the same lease.—Jacobson v. Miller, 41 Mich. 90.

¶ 407. A judgment upon a subscription to the capital stock of a corporation, so long as it remains in force, would be a conclusive adjudication upon any defense to the validity of the subscription.—Gould v. Vaughan, 30 Mich. 376.

¶ 408. Defendant made advances to plaintiff for wood and tan bark delivered to it during the course of the season. At the close of the season defendant sued to recover of plaintiff for overpayment. In that suit the number of cords delivered by plaintiff during the season was in issue and in evidence. Defendant recovered a judgment. Thereafter plaintiff sued to recover for 225 cords which he claimed he was not credited with in the former suit. Held, the account under the contract was res adjudicata under the former suit and plaintiff could not recover.—Paccalona v. Peninsula Bank & Lumber Co., 171 Mich. 605.

¶ 409. Where an administrator brings suit to set aside a deed conveying decedent's estate to his widow and daughters which was delivered as ordered after his death, the question as to whether a claim by the widow against the estate was proved by a fraud is foreclosed where the claim was allowed by the commissioners and on appeal by the other grantees the claim was reduced and allowed and no appeal from such allowance has been taken.—Barris v. Emmons, 173 Mich. 590.

¶ 410. A judgment for plaintiff in an action for breach of warranty in a sale of chattels affirms the validity of the contract.—Barker v. Cleveland, 19 Mich. 230.

¶ 411. Plaintiff in a previous suit against the defendant for the negligent killing of his wife recovered for his loss of her permanent services. In the present suit he sought to recover as administrator for the loss to her estate by her death. The survival statute permitted no recovery for the pain and suffering of the deceased. Held, the plaintiff's previous suit proved conclusively that his wife was not emancipated, and the court properly directed a verdict on the ground that her estate would not have received the benefit of her services.—Walker v. Lansing & S. Traction Co., 156 Mich. 514.

¶ 412. Where the validity and good faith of a chattel mortgage have been decided in mandamus proceedings, such decision is res judicata.—Weed v. Mirick, 62 Mich. 414.

¶ 413. Where in proceedings to appoint a guardian over an incompetent woman the validity of her marriage and her competency to contract the marriage were litigated, a judgment rendered in those proceedings is res adjudicata in subsequent proceedings between the same parties for the appointment of an administrator of her estate, and to determine who are her heirs, involving like issues.—Burgess v. Stribling, 144 Mich. 532.

¶ 414. The surety of a mortgagor consented that the mortgagee should release to the mortgagor certain parts of the land mortgaged. The consideration was that the mortgagee should credit a certain sum on the mortgage debt. Later, foreclosure was had, and the surety made a party. Held, that the surety could not thereafter in a bill to redeem, in the absence of fraud, reopen the question and demand that the said release given should be treated as a payment on the debt, since that question was adjudicated in the foreclosure proceeding.—Miller v. Peter, 158 Mich. 336.

¶ 415. On a petition to the circuit court for release, on writ of habeas corpus, from arrest on a writ of capias ad respondendum issued in the superior court, petitioner's claim for release based on the alleged insufficiency in the affidavit for the writ of capias in the superior court will not be considered where the superior court, which held the petitioner to bail and overruled a motion to admit him to common bail passed on the identical question.—Ex parte George, How. N. P. 271.

¶ 416. A partition decree silent on the relative values of the parcels with the commissioners' report, also silent as to the appraisal, presumably found the parcels to be equal in value; and accordingly in assumpsit based on an agreement to allot the parcels and to pay a sum certain as owelty for inequality it cannot be shown that the decree was made pursuant to such agreement and that the parcels were unequal in value.—Burger v. Beste, 98 Mich. 156.

§ 81. Matters not in issue.

See also post ¶ 428.
Matters withdrawn from issues, see post § 91.
Matters omitted from issues, see also post ¶ 464.

¶ 417. A party is not estopped by a former litigation from vindicating, in another suit, rights that were not involved and that could not properly be litigated in the former one.—Nichols, Shepard & Co. v. Marsh, 61 Mich. 509. Writ of error dismissed in 140 U. S. 244, 35 L. ed. 413, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 798.

¶ 418. Estoppel from asserting a claim excluded from a former suit cannot apply where it was not within the issue in that suit, and there was therefore no opportunity to establish it.—Fifield v. Edwards, 39 Mich. 264.

¶ 419. The judgment of the court on appeal from probate that a will of a testator made on the 2nd day of May, 1898, is void on account of undue influence exerted by the principal legatee was not res judicata of the question as to whether certain property of such decedent handed over to such legatee on the 8th day of May, 1898, was a valid gift causa mortis.—Reed v. Whipple, 140 Mich. 7.

¶ 420. A judgment of the circuit court of one county confirming the appointment of a grandfather of an infant as his guardian is not res adjudicata on the question of the domicile of the father of said infant in proceedings to probate his will in another county.—Hering v. Mosher, 144 Mich. 152.

¶ 421. A testator devised certain land to his son upon the express condition that he make certain annual payments to his mother, and imposed a lien on the land for such payments. Upon the death of the mother and son, the administrator of the former recovered judgment at law against the administrator of the latter for a portion of the amount due and unpaid at her death, the court holding that the statute of limitations barred recovery for most of the demand. Held, that this decision was not res judicata of the extent of the condition unperformed and of the sum actually secured by the lien; and that the lien was not waived by taking the judgment at law.—Stringer v. Gamble, 155 Mich. 295.

¶ 422. After an attorney had received an assignment of one-half of a claim, according to his own admission, as trustee for the assignor's father, a decree rendered in an intervention by the assignor against his claim to be the owner of one-half of the judgment does not amount to an adjudication that the attorney is the absolute owner thereof.—Meyers v. Radford, 167 Mich. 135, aff'd in 231 U. S. 725, 58 L. ed. 454, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 249.

¶ 423. A recital in a guardianship order that the person is insane is not evidence that he lacks testamentary capacity.—Rice v. Rice, 50 Mich. 448; Rice v. Rice, 53 Mich. 432.

¶ 424. An adjudication by a bankruptcy court in a certain case, that an attachment was a valid lien on such property as was actually levied upon more than four months before the bankruptcy proceedings were begun, does not fix the identity of the property attached, and in itself is therefore incompetent as evidence to determine the validity of specific attachments.—Rowley v. Grover, 37 Mich. 588.

¶ 425. The result of a suit for the taxes of particular years is not res judicata in subsequent suits between the same parties for taxes of other years, and the decisions upon legal questions arising in the first case are important only as precedents.—Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. People, 46 Mich. 193.

¶ 426. A judgment for plaintiff in an action for breach of warranty in a sale of chattels concludes nothing concerning payment on such contract, and does not bar an action for the purchase price.—Barker v. Cleveland, 19 Mich. 230.

¶ 427. The unreversed judgment of a federal court, in dismissing, on motion, an action under the federal act to recover for death of an employee engaged in interstate commerce, that plaintiff had no right of action because she had elected to make application for compensation under the state Workmen's Compensation Act, while conclusive as to the issues decided, is not res adjudicata as to the claim of plaintiff's attorneys that she originally had a cause of action in which they were retained by a valid contract with her specifying their contingent compensation which defendants, with notice of their claim of lien, were bound to recognize.—Nichols v. Waters, 201 Mich. 27.

§ 82. Scope of particular issues, actions or judgments.

Decision as to custody of child, see also ante ¶¶ 76-78.
In suit on joint note by husband and wife, see ante ¶ 191.
Claim in assignment proceedings, see also ante ¶ 192.
Proceedings for commitment of child, see also ante ¶ 193.
Identities of former and later actions and issues therein, see ante §§ 35, 36.
Materiality of the fact to the issues, see post § 88.

Adjudication in bankruptcy as conclusive of insolvency, see Bankruptcy ¶ 118.
Scope and effect of habeas corpus judgments, see Habeas Corpus.
Conclusiveness of decree sustaining validity of tax deed upon persons participating in the proceedings, see Taxes, XII.

¶ 428. A judgment in an action in tort to recover damages is not res adjudicata as to items of account introduced in evidence on the trial of such action in support of a defense based on the breach of a contract by plaintiff, where the question of plaintiff's indebtedness to defendant was not involved in the tort action in any way.—Perkins v. Oliver, 110 Mich. 402.

¶ 429. A judgment for the tenant in possession of a farm in proceedings by the landlord before a commissioner to recover possession thereof, rendered on other grounds than that there was no rent due at the time such suit was instituted, is not res judicata of the landlord's claim for rent due prior to the entry of such judgment, in summary proceedings subsequently instituted against such landlord by such tenant.—Cockerline v. Fisher, 140 Mich. 95.

¶ 430. An unsuccessful action by C. against P., in which action C., injured by a shot from an air-gun fired by T., a nine-year-old boy, claimed that T.'s immaturity prevented his realizing the gun's dangerous nature, and that the gun had been negligently furnished to T. under such circumstances, but in the disposition of which action the question of T.'s negligence was not involved, does not bar an action against T. himself for negligence.—Chaddock v. Tabor, 115 Mich. 27.

§ 83. ——Trover, trespass to goods and replevin.

See also ante ¶ 54, post ¶ 465.
Trover, trespass and replevin as identical causes of action, see ante § 36; and see also generally ante, III.
Effect of prior recovery to bar other causes or defenses, see ante § 43.
Judgment in replevin against agent conclusive upon principal, see ante § 65.
Judgment in replevin for goods held under attachment as estopping a subsequent levy upon the same goods, see ante ¶ 370.
Conclusiveness of judgment upon successors in interest and title, see ante § 75.
Effect of trover to pass title, see Conversion § 44.
Effect of former verdict in replevin on question of fact in later action of trover, see also Conversion ¶ 210.

¶ 431. A judgment in trespass or in trespass on the case does not determine the title to land.—Keyser v. Sutherland, 59 Mich. 455; Busch v. Nester, 62 Mich. 381; Fahey v. Crotty, 63 Mich. 383.

¶ 432. The record of an action for trespass in tearing down a line fence, where judgment went for defendant, is inadmissible in an action for assault and battery committed by such defendant to show that the work being done for him at the time of the assault was upon his own land.—Fahey v. Crotty, 63 Mich. 383.

¶ 433. In trespass for tearing down a line fence defendant pleaded title and judgment was rendered in his favor. Held, that such judgment is not conclusive evidence that defendant had title to the fence or to the line which it had inclosed, and settled nothing but defendant's nonliability to plaintiff for having torn it down.—Fahey v. Crotty, 63 Mich. 383.

¶ 434. A mortgagee of chattels brought replevin against an attaching creditor, and sought to show that the demand in one of the attachment cases, which had passed into judgment, had been paid before judgment. Held that, if there was no showing of collusion between the attachment creditor and the debtor, this would be an attempt to retry the question involved in the attachment suit.—Wallen v. Rossman, 45 Mich. 333.

¶ 435. A replevin bond against a chattel mortgagee in possession is not shown to have been released by a discharge of the lien, and the consequent discharge of a judgment in the replevin action in favor of the defendant based on such lien, where it appears that the foreclosure, which was claimed to have discharged the lien took place on January 5th, while the judgment in the replevin action was rendered afterwards on February 20th. The judgment precludes the question.—Stafford v. Baker, 141 Mich. 44.

§ 84. ——Ejectment.

Former ejectment as identical cause of action, see ante § 36.
Judgment as estoppel to set up in a subsequent suit title acquired during the former suit, see ante § 48.
Effect of judgment in ejectment, see Ejectment § 57.
Particular facts determined by judgment in ejectment, see also Ejectment ¶ 232.

¶ 436. A judgment of recovery in ejectment for dower establishes the right of dower as res adjudicata in a proceeding under a suggestion for mesne profits.—Bemis v. Conley, 49 Mich. 392.

¶ 437. A plaintiff in an ejectment suit was given a judgment for an undivided half interest in land. At the time of said suit the defendant therein held a tax deed for said land, the redemption period having not yet expired. Said tax deed was offered in evidence by defendant in the ejectment suit. Held, that in a partition suit brought by the plaintiff in the ejectment suit against one holding title under the defendant in said suit, the judgment in said ejectment suit was res adjudicata of the legal effect of said tax title upon the title of the plaintiff.—Loranger v. Carpenter, 167 Mich. 370.

Conclusive of divorce decree as to defenses not interposed, see ante § 50.
Effect of divorce decrees, see Divorce § 100.
Right of parties to divorce to litigate property rights left unadjudicated by divorce, see Divorce § 144.

¶ 438. A final decree in a divorce suit establishing that the defendant was an habitual drunkard is not res adjudicata on the question whether the defendant is an habitual drunkard in a suit begun four years later.—Paynton v. Paynton, 194 Mich. 504.

¶ 439. In a will contest, in which one of the issues is the mental incompetency of the testator, the opinion in a divorce case in which a decree was entered in favor of testator's wife on the ground of extreme cruelty is inadmissible, it not being an adjudication of a question involved in the case.—In re Walsh's Estate, 196 Mich. 42.

§ 86. ——Mandamus.

Finality of adjudication in Mandamus to operate as res adjudicata, see ante § 15.
Defenses barred because not made, see also ante ¶ 264.
Validity of chattel mortgage adjudicated in mandamus, res adjudicata, see ante ¶ 412.

¶ 440. It seems that the discretionary act of denying a writ of mandamus to compel a sheriff to execute a criminal warrant does not necessarily determine the invalidity of the warrant.—Wheaton v. Whittemore, 49 Mich. 348.

¶ 441. A mandamus directing that a capias ad resp. be vacated, and the proceeding quashed, is not an adjudication that the proceeding was absolutely void.—Johnson v. Morton, 94 Mich. 1.

§ 87. ——Suits in equity.

Conclusiveness of law judgments in equity or equity decrees in law as depending on scope of the action or suit, see also ante §§ 8, 9.
Matters conclusively proved by decree quieting title against covenantee, see also Covenants for Title ¶ 86.
Partition decree as bar to subsequent suit for contribution to cost of improvements, see Former Adjudication ¶ 275.

¶ 442. Defendant had previously filed a bill to restrain the completion of a drain on the ground that he had not been served with notice of the proceedings as required by statute. The case was heard through, and defendant's bill dismissed. Held, in a subsequent proceeding to sell defendant's lands for delinquency in paying the drain tax, the defendant could not set up said lack of legal notice as a defense, the matter being res adjudicata.—Auditor General v. McCall, 159 Mich. 318.

¶ 442a. Where in an appeal from an order of distribution by the probate court, the appellant contends that the administrator of the estate has no right to take part in the determination of the appeal, the appellant is concluded by a decree against him in a previous suit, in which he attempted to accomplish the same result by a bill for an injunction.—In re Parr's Estate, 161 Mich. 244.

¶ 443. The sufficiency of the alimony allowed in chancery cannot be reviewed in a proceeding at law against the husband's estate to recover for the wife's support.—Crittenden v. Schermerhorn, 39 Mich. 661.

¶ 444. A decision adverse to a city, in a suit begun by it in a state court but removed to the federal court, which suit was brought against a street railway company to enjoin it from operating after a certain date in certain streets on the ground of the invalidity of an ordinance extending to a certain company, to the franchise of which defendant had succeeded, the right so to operate is res adjudicata of the question in issue in said suit, upon an application by the city and certain of its citizens for a mandamus to compel the attorney general to file an information in the nature of a quo warranto to inquire into defendant's right to operate in said streets after the date named.—City of Detroit v. Attorney-General, 103 Mich. 612.

¶ 445. Where in a former chancery suit complainants claimed an easement in an alley on the ground that it was a public alley and they had acquired the right of ingress and egress by adverse user, and the defendant merely denied the easement but asked no affirmative relief, a dismissal of the bill does not render the matter res adjudicata as respects a subsequent ejectment suit between the same parties, in which plaintiffs claim title on other grounds.—Le Roy v. Collins, 165 Mich. 380.

¶ 446. While the defendant was in the hands of a receiver, the plaintiff filed a claim for goods sold and delivered to defendant under a contract of sale. The equity court found against the plaintiff in that suit on the ground that the goods were not delivered, but ruled that on the pleadings the question of breach of contract in refusing to accept the goods was before it, and held against the plaintiff in that proposition. Held, in a later suit for damages for breach of contract, the matter was res adjudicata, and the court could not say that in the previous equity suit the court had no jurisdiction of the question of the breach.—Forest City Steel & Iron Co. v. Detroit & T. S. L. R. Co., 154 Mich. 182.

¶ 447. A decree restraining the collection of a special assessment because of the invalidity of "the several proceedings to assess the same," relates only to the proceedings taken by the assessor and the board of review, and is not res adjudicata as to the preliminary resolution adopted by the common council to initiate the proceeding.—City of Sault Ste. Marie v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. S. M. Ry. Co., 184 Mich. 681.

¶ 448. Under Pub. Acts 1909, No. 300, § 26, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 6549, relating to review by the courts of an order of the railroad commission fixing railroad rates, the right of a railroad company to a review by the courts becomes fixed when the order of the railroad commission is promulgated, and proceedings for review having been instituted in a circuit court of chancery and judgment having been rendered against the railroad company by such court and by the supreme court on appeal, such judgment becomes res adjudicata as to the questions involved in the case.—Detroit & M. R. Co. v. Michigan Railroad Commission, 203 Fed. 864, aff'd in 239 U. S. 356, 60 L. ed. 327, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 114.

¶ 449. A foreclosure for nonpayment of interest only of a mortgage given to secure a note payable four years after the mortgagee's death to his "heirs," interest payable to the mortgagee during his lifetime only, held not to be res adjudicata of the title to the note as against the heirs in a contest between them and the mortgagee's administrator for the proceeds of the note, the interest only being payable to the mortgagee for his life time.—Love v. Francis, 63 Mich. 181.

¶ 450. One, who sues to have a mortgage declared void for fraud and infancy of the mortgagor and to set aside a foreclosure by advertisement is not barred by dismissal of the bill from disputing in ejectment that the foreclosure was irregular and void because of the irregularities; where that was not involved in the chancery suit, it being directed only to the invalidity resulting from infancy and fraud.—Bonker v. Charlesworth, 33 Mich. 81.

¶ 451. On a bill by a holder of a tax deed to quiet title to land purchased at a tax sale held that a decree establishing the validity of the particular tax, rendered in a proceeding brought for that purpose, was res adjudicata as to the sufficiency of the description of the land in the tax roll and in the tax deed issued to complainant.—Heethuis v. Kerr, 194 Mich. 689.

§ 88. Materiality to issues.

¶ 452. The first essential of the rule of res adjudicata is the identity of the matter in issue. The matter in issue is defined to be that matter upon which the plaintiff proceeds by his action and which the defendant controverts by his pleadings.—Le Roy v. Collins, 165 Mich. 380.

¶ 453. When an action is sought to be maintained or defended by showing a former adjudication of questions upon which it depends, it must appear that such questions were litigated as a matter of fact; that they were submitted to and decided by the court or jury; and that they were not collateral inquiries, but crucial questions in the other controversy.—Bond v. Markstrum, 102 Mich. 11.

§ 89. Matters in issue but not determined.

¶ 454. A husband signed his own name and that of his wife to a contract for the purchase of fruit trees, and in a suit upon the contract, brought against him and his wife after he had given his notes in payment for the trees, they had judgment on the ground of his want of authority to sign her name to the contract, which was the sole question passed upon by the jury. In suit afterwards brought against the husband on the notes, held, that the former judgment did not bar the second suit, though the defense relied on in both actions was that the trees were worthless.—Kingsbury v. Kettle, 90 Mich. 476.

¶ 455. Bill to remove a cloud from complainant's title by setting aside a deed from a father to the son alleged to be fraudulent. Decree as prayed by the bill. Held, that this decree was conclusive only as against the title of the son under the conveyance from the father, and did not estop the defendants in suit from denying complainant's title.—Beeson v. Comly, 19 Mich. 103.

¶ 455a. The denial on other specific grounds by the trial court of a motion by a defendant garnishee in a law suit to set aside the judgment against the defendant and without passing on the alleged ground that it was obtained by the fraudulent representation of the plaintiff that he would not prosecute the suit, and the affirmance of such ruling by the supreme court on appeal, do not make the matter of fraud res adjudicata so as to prevent the defendant garnishee from filing a bill in chancery to enjoin such judgment.—Steele v. Bliss, 170 Mich. 175.

§ 90. Facts undisputed or admitted.

Consent order for receiver reciting memberships in insolvent firm as conclusive on that fact, see also ante ¶ 124.

¶ 456. In a prior chancery suit against the purchaser of tax lands from the state, in which suit relator was complainant, he admitted that he was bound to pay to said purchaser the taxes of the year 1891. Held, relator could not in the present suit against the auditor general in mandamus ask for the cancellation of said tax of 1891, since he was concluded by the decree in the chancery suit.—Haney v. Auditor General, 165 Mich. 681.

¶ 457. In a previous suit at law by plaintiff against defendant, a description in a contract of the location of a railroad was recognized as an error by both parties, and the opinion recognized that error. Held, that in a subsequent suit in equity for specific performance of the same contract, the question of the error could not be raised.—Gates v. Detroit & M. Ry. Co., 158 Mich. 477.

¶ 458. Where counsel for the state fail to produce an argument or raise a point which they might have raised in a proceeding, the state cannot raise such question in a subsequent proceeding involving the same question between the same parties.—People ex rel. Attorney General v. Detroit, G. H. & M. Ry. Co., 157 Mich. 144.

¶ 459. Where the execution of a paper is admitted by failure to deny it on oath, it is expressly left outside the issue, and, not being part of the subject-matter of the suit, can be put in issue in other litigation on the same paper.—Jacobson v. Miller, 41 Mich. 90.

§ 91. Matters withdrawn from issues.

Matters omitted from issues, see post ¶ 464.
Matters which might have been but were not litigated, see post § 92.

¶ 460. Items withdrawn by a plaintiff on trial are not res judicata, but may be set off by him in a suit brought by defendant.—Busch v. Jones, 94 Mich. 223.

§ 92. Matters which might have been litigated.

Defenses and rights barred because not litigated in former suit, see ante §§ 49-52.

¶ 461. A former judgment does not operate as an estoppel upon matters of fact which might have been litigated in the former proceeding but were not.—Bond v. Markstrum, 102 Mich. 11.

§ 93. Facts necessarily involved in the decision.

¶ 462. To make a judgment in one case a bar to another action it is not essential that the object of the two suits should be the same; nor that the parties should stand in the same relative position to each other; nor that the point in controversy should have been actually litigated in the first suit; it is sufficient if its determination was necessarily involved in the judgment.—Barker v. Cleveland, 19 Mich. 230.

¶ 463. The estoppel extends to all steps involved in the judgment as necessary steps or the ground work upon which it must have been founded. It is allowable to reason back from a judgment to the basis upon which it stands, upon the obvious principle that where a conclusion is indisputable, and could have been drawn only from certain premises, the premises are equally indisputable with the conclusion.—Bond v. Markstrum, 102 Mich. 11.

¶ 464. In a lawsuit involving the title to land, the plaintiff is not estopped from contesting the regularity of a statutory foreclosure under which the title has been obtained, by having omitted to raise that question in a former suit brought by him in chancery to set aside the mortgage as invalid.—Bonker v. Charlesworth, 33 Mich. 81.

¶ 465. In replevin, where the defense is sale to defendant in consideration of making certain payments, if defendant is permitted with the aid of a bill of particulars used in a former suit to testify to certain items he claims to have paid, plaintiff may, on rebuttal, show by the record in the former suit that said items were adjudicated against defendant; provided it further appears that such adjudication necessarily determined the claim of defendant that said items were payments upon the claim sought to be enforced by plaintiff in that suit.—Avery v. Knight, 99 Mich. 311.

¶ 466. The decision of the supreme court in an action against a railroad company for damages for personal injuries sustained in a crossing accident due to plaintiff's horse becoming frightened at the blowing of the whistle of defendant's train, and stopping on the track and refusing to go ahead until too late, that the blowing of the whistle was not a negligent act is res adjudicata in a subsequent action between the same parties, although the blowing of the whistle was not specifically charged as negligence in the first action, but the negligence relied upon was the excessive speed of the train operating concurrently with the sounding of the whistle which frightened the horse, and a determination that the blowing of the whistle was an innocent act was essential to sustain the legal conclusion arrived at and was consequently necessarily involved in the case, whether pleaded or not.—Cavanaugh v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 195 Mich. 391.

VII. HOW URGED OR PLEADED; AND HOW PROVED OR SHOWN.

Estoppel to plead or urge judgment as bar or estoppel, see ante § 78.

§ 94. Necessity, manner and sufficiency of pleading.

Impropriety of trying issue of res adjudicata on motion to dismiss, see Discontinuance § 19.
Necessity and sufficiency of pleading of estoppels in pais, see Estoppel § 57.
Former adjudication as matter proper for plea in bar, see Pleading, III, B.
Mode of pleading judgments, see 1916 C. C. Rule 21, § 4.
Necessity of notice of defense of estoppel with plea, see 1916 C. C. Rule 23, § 2.

¶ 467. Where, in an action for damages for breach of contract, the breach relied on consisted in suing out an injunction, the decree in the injunction suit would not be admissible in bar of the action if it had not been set up or relied on in the pleadings.—Sullings v. Goodyear Dental Vulcanite Co., 36 Mich. 313.

¶ 468. Chancery proceedings resulting in a decree for specific performance are admissible in an action at law to show the performance of a contract set up by plaintiff as a part of his case; and this though they are not pleaded puis darrein.—Haven v. Beidler Mfg. Co., 40 Mich. 287.

¶ 469. A previous suit which indirectly affords support to the allegation of a tender may be given in evidence in a chancery suit though not set up or mentioned in the pleadings.—Daugherty v. Byles, 41 Mich. 61.

¶ 470. A judgment in replevin of recovery and for damages for detention cannot, it seems, bar an action for unlawful trespass and personal wrongs distinct from the detention of the property; and certainly, to be used for any such purpose, it must be pleaded in bar.—Briggs v. Milburn, 40 Mich. 512.

¶ 471. Under 1897 Circuit Rule No. 7, a defendant is required with the general issue to give notice of his intention to claim that a certain chancery proceeding, in no way connected with the plaintiff's affirmative case, was res adjudicata.—Bryant v. Kenyon, 123 Mich. 151.

¶ 472. A plea of estoppel must be properly framed as such, especially in opening and closing, and it must set forth a claim that the plaintiff should not be admitted to make use of what the estoppel would exclude. The matter of estoppel alleged must be material and traversable, and if a judicial decision is relied on therefor, it must be so averred; and the decision must have been a matter coram judice.—Whittemore v. Stephens, 48 Mich. 573.

¶ 473. A plea of estoppel by judicial action or record (discharge in bankruptcy) must aver it as such and that it was before a court with jurisdiction.—Whittemore v. Stephens, 48 Mich. 573.

¶ 474. A plea of estoppel based on a judicial act which it does not aver as matter of estoppel in itself, but merely introduces as evidence and by way of argument and as a basis for a deduction, presents an issue which is a matter of legal inference only, and is bad because not traversable.—Whittemore v. Stephens, 48 Mich. 573.

¶ 475. A plea to a bill in chancery, setting up the dismissal of a former bill asking for the same relief, is insufficient if it fails to aver that the former decree was on the merits. An omission in this respect, however, may be supplied by amendment.—Detroit, L. & N. R. Co. v. McCammon, 108 Mich. 368.

¶ 476. The question of res judicata cannot be raised by a motion to quash an information in quo warranto filed by the attorney-general, but only by a plea in bar.—People ex. rel. Attorney General v. Detroit, G. H. & M. Ry. Co., 149 Mich. 122.

¶ 477. Former judgment cannot be shown under the general issue alone.—Briggs v. Milburn, 40 Mich. 512; Porter v. Leache, 56 Mich. 40.

¶ 478. A defense in the nature of a former recovery cannot be set up under the general issue alone.—Tabor v. Van Vranken, 39 Mich. 793.

¶ 479. In a suit to enforce a lien for building materials, defendant pleaded a former adjudication. After the filing of this plea the decree in the former adjudication was vacated. Complainant in the present suit filed pleas in the nature of pleas puis darrein continuance. Defendants raised no question as to the form of said latter pleas or as to their sufficiency in pleading the fact that since the last continuance the former decree relied upon by defendant had been vacated. The fact of their being set aside was not disputed. Held, the pleas puis darrein continuance filed by complainant were to be treated the same as if nul tiel record had been the complainant's reply, upon which the pleas must be determined as a matter of law.—Lowrie & Robinson Lumber Co. v. Campbell Ave. M. E. Church, 170 Mich. 341.

§ 95. Burden of proof and presumptions.

Presumption of identity with former proceeding on immature cause of action, see ante ¶ 118.

General law of presumptions and burden, see Evidence, II.

Presumptions indulged on collateral attack, see Judgments, VII.

¶ 480. Where, in a suit upon a guaranty of rent, defendant seeks to avoid liability by showing his release by the lessor, and plaintiff introduces in evidence the record in a former suit brought by him against defendant upon the same guaranty, in which he recovered a judgment for prior instalments of rent, and it appears that the pleadings in said former suit were broad enough to cover said proposed defense, the burden of proof is upon plaintiff to show that said defense was actually made and passed upon in the first suit.—Bond v. Markstrum, 102 Mich. 11.

¶ 481. A decree in a former partition suit precludes a party defendant thereto from claiming title by adverse possession in a subsequent suit for the land awarded complainant; such defense should have been made in the former suit, and will be presumed to have been made if the pleadings and proofs in such suit are not before the court.—Pierson v. Conley, 95 Mich. 619.

¶ 482. Mandamus proceedings are not res judicata in the absence of evidence tending to show upon what ground such proceedings were decided.—Hoffman v. Silverthorn, 137 Mich. 60.

¶ 483. The decree in a suit to have an assignment of a land contract by complainant to defendant declared to be a mortgage, or a trust for complainant's benefit, or void, absolutely dismissing the bill and not dismissing it "without prejudice" or with any words of qualification, must be conclusively presumed to be a dismissal upon the merits so as to operate as a bar to a subsequent suit.—Dalton v. Mertz, 197 Mich. 390.

¶ 484. Where a bill to restrain certain expenditures by trustees under a will, and an appeal from the order of the probate court approving the account of the trustees, are both pending, and involve the same issues, and by consent of the parties the bill is dismissed, the presumption in the absence of evidence to the contrary, is that the decree of dismissal adjudicates all of the issues involved in the pleadings.—In re Ward's Estate, 152 Mich. 218.

¶ 485. The mere fact that certain items, which a defendant testifies he paid to plaintiff on the claim therein sought to be enforced, were included in defendant's bill of particulars in a former suit brought by him against plaintiff, will not warrant the assumption that the items were adjudicated in said suit; and hence an objection to the use by defendant of the bill of particulars to refresh his memory as to said items while testifying in another suit, on the ground that the items had been adjudicated in the first suit, is untenable.—Avery v. Knight, 99 Mich. 311.

¶ 486. Where a petition to set aside a foreclosure sale was dismissed on the ground that an original bill should have been filed, and the counsel for the petitioner stated that they were advised that they were mistaken in their remedy, and supposed that an order would be entered so stating, it will be presumed, on a bill to set aside the foreclosure sale, that the matter of the petition to set aside the sale was not determined on the merits, and a plea of former adjudication is properly overruled.—Butters v. Butters, 153 Mich. 153.

§ 96. Admissibility of evidence.

Admissibility of record of illegal land office proceedings for land patent, see ante ¶ 26.

Record of conviction or acquittal as evidence in civil suits, see ante § 11.

To show that former proceeding was on immature cause of action, see also ante ¶ 119.

Sufficiency of objections to records in evidence, see Trial, V; Saving Questions.

¶ 487. The record in the former action is admissible to establish the estoppel.—Martin v. Boyce, 49 Mich. 122.

¶ 488. Where in a suit upon a bond executed by the principals and sureties in a prior bond, in the place of which the second bond was given, and to which the principals' names were signed by one of the sureties as their agent, the principals deny the authority of the surety so to execute it, it is competent for the plaintiff to show that, upon the trial of a suit brought on the first bond, the principals defended upon the theory that the second bond was given in satisfaction of the first one; and to that end the records and proceedings in the suit on the first bond are admissible in evidence.—Busch v. Fisher, 89 Mich. 192.

¶ 489. Where the same transaction is involved in two cases the mere verdict of the jury in one of them cannot be shown in the other for the purpose of fixing the quality of the transaction. But the record in the former may operate as a bar in the latter.—Wheeler v. Wallace, 53 Mich. 364.

§ 97. ——Parol and extrinsic evidence.

Record of judgment as unimpeachable verity, see Judgments, VII.

Best evidence of scope of judgment, see Evidence § 122.

Resort to stipulation filed in the case to construe decree, see also Equity ¶ 896.

¶ 490. One who has introduced in evidence the proceedings in another suit before a justice is not at liberty to stop the inquiry with the written proceedings alone and thus prevent their true significance from being explained.—Lyman v. Becannon, 29 Mich. 466.

¶ 491. Where the written proceedings in another suit, when introduced in evidence, appear to have been so framed that they might have involved the same issue as the suit at bar, but fail to show on their face whether such issue was in fact tried and decided, it is proper to show by parol what the facts were in that regard.—Lyman v. Becannon, 29 Mich. 466.

¶ 492. Oral evidence is admissible not to contradict the record, but to show what was litigated and adjudicated in the former suit, and to identify the parties in the cause of action.—Black v. Miller, 75 Mich. 323.

¶ 493. That the merits were not decided in a former suit pleaded in bar may be shown by parol, to wit, minutes of the stenographer showing a directed verdict for want of parties.—Munro v. Meech, 94 Mich. 596.

¶ 494. Where the record does not contain the conclusive evidence as to such former adjudication, parol evidence is admissible to ascertain whether a given question was in issue, litigated, submitted, and decided, and possibly, in some cases, whether it was material, and in such event, under our system of pleading, the issue would not ordinarily be limited to the single question of such former adjudication, but the party would be at liberty to support his claim or defense by other evidence, which would be received subject to the effect that should be given to the evidence upon the question of such former adjudication.—Bond v. Markstrum, 102 Mich. 11.

¶ 495. The ground for the discharge of a prisoner in habeas corpus proceedings may be shown by parol where no order of discharge is found.—Friesenhan v. Maines, 137 Mich. 10.

¶ 496. Where the judgment of a justice is pleaded in bar it may be shown not to have been upon the merits.—Franks v. Fecheimer, 44 Mich. 177.

¶ 497. In trover for the value of wood cut from trees purchased from defendants and paid for in work performed for them by plaintiff, where defendants set up a judgment in assumpsit recovered against them by plaintiff for such work, plaintiff may prove that defendants in the assumpsit case gave evidence tending to show and recognizing plaintiff's title to the trees and wood.—Hewett v. Chapman, 49 Mich. 4.

¶ 498. In an action by a building contractor on an insurance policy indemnifying insured against loss on account of injuries to employees by accident, where it appeared that a certain person, who was engaged in cleaning the walls of the building which plaintiff was erecting, was injured by falling from the scaffold, and recovered a judgment against defendant, the declaration and charge in such former case considered and held not to establish conclusively that the injured person was the employee of the contractor so as to bind the insurer, and that the insurer should have been permitted to show that in fact the verdict and judgment rendered in favor of such person was or might have been based upon such relation other than those of master and servant within the policy.—Burke v. Maryland Casualty Co., 192 Mich. 173. (Bird, J., dissenting.)

¶ 499. Briefs of counsel are not admissible to prove the basis on which judgment was rendered in the case and that it did not settle the merits.—Greenlee v. Lowing, 35 Mich. 63.

§ 98. Sufficiency of evidence.

See also ante ¶ 196.

¶ 500. Where the subject-matter of a suit has confessedly been in litigation before, the evidence that the merits were not passed on ought to exclude all other hypotheses.—Baxter v. Aubrey, 41 Mich. 13.

¶ 501. To bar a set-off introduced in a suit between A. and B., the plaintiff put in evidence a former suit brought by B. and his wife against A., in which a recovery was sought upon the same claim now sought to be set off. It was shown that judgment was rendered in that case, but it did not appear whether it was upon the merits or not. Held no bar.—Tucker v. Rohrback, 13 Mich. 73.

¶ 502. The record of a judicial order of partition showing that a certain person was allowed a certain portion of the land sufficiently shows that he was a party to the partition proceeding.—Willetts v. Mandlebaum, 28 Mich. 521.

¶ 503. From the report of commissioners on claims against an estate showing presentation and disallowance of a mortgage note, no appeal was taken, and in foreclosure proceedings subsequently instituted complainant's solicitor testified that the claim never was passed upon by the commissioners, but was withdrawn by him from their consideration. The commissioners testified that the claim was presented and was for reasons given by them disallowed, and this was corroborated by other witnesses. Held, that the defense of res adjudicata was fairly established.—Finley v. Dubay, 112 Mich. 334.

§ 99. Law and fact questions and instructions.

¶ 504. Whether a former adjudication interposed by plaintiff to an affirmative defense tendered under a special notice was res judicata and operated as an estoppel by judgment against such defense, held a question of law for the court.—Bishop v. Dodge, 196 Mich. 231.

VIII. COLLATERAL ATTACK.

§ 100. In general.

The general doctrine that a judgment is not assailable by the parties thereto or their privies collaterally for error or irregularity, but only for jurisdictional fraud, mistake or defects in process or procedure, is treated in Judgments, VII, which see.

The rule that a judgment is not binding on strangers sometimes finds expression in a statement that strangers may attack it collaterally, but such is merely an expression of the rule that parties and privies only are bound. See ante, V.

Collateral attack on probate decrees, see Probate Courts, III; and see also Estates of Decedents, and like topics dealing with subjects of the probate jurisdiction.

Inhibition of grant by special act, see Const. art. XII, § 1.

¶ 1. Section 28 of art. VIII of the Constitution of 1909, conferring local power to grant franchises, abrogates Act No. 264, Public Acts 1905, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 2041, conferring rights on persons, firms or corporations to the use of the streets and alleys of cities and villages for the distribution of electricity, power and heat.—City of Lansing v. Michigan Power Co., 183 Mich. 400.

¶ 2. A legislative grant to municipalities of power to permit the use of streets and public places by public utility companies, does not impair or lessen the sovereign power of the state to subsequently grant similar rights to persons, firms or corporations regardless of any action on the part of municipalities.—City of Lansing v. Michigan Power Co., 183 Mich. 400.

¶ 3. A franchise to maintain and operate a street railway in a street is an interest in land.—Detroit Citizens' St. Ry. Co. v. City of Detroit, 124 Mich. 449.

¶ 4. The power of a municipality to grant exclusive rights in its streets will not be implied from general language in the statutes but must be clearly and explicitly expressed.—Detroit Citizens' St. Ry. Co. v. City of Detroit, 110 Mich. 384.

¶ 5. A city council has the power to pass an ordinance granting a franchise to lay gas pipes in any and all the streets and alleys of the city without reserving the right to say what streets, and although the ordinance may not have been a wise one to make, the city is bound by its terms.—City of Kalamazoo v. Kalamazoo Heat, Light & Power Co., 124 Mich. 74.

¶ 6. A city charter (Local Acts 1899, No. 437, chap. 24, § 11), giving the council the right to contract for not exceeding 10 years for the supplying of light and water to the city and its inhabitants and to grant the use of streets, etc., to enable the performance thereof limits the power of granting a franchise for the use of the streets to the period of ten years.—Sullivan v. Bailey, 125 Mich. 104.

¶ 7. A proviso limiting the period for a franchise to thirty years in a section of a city charter (Local Acts 1899, No. 437, chap. 9, § 5), authorizing the council to grant a franchise to a street railway does not authorize the granting of a thirty-year franchise for water or light where other sections limit the right to contract for these services for a period of ten years.—Sullivan v. Bailey, 125 Mich. 104.

¶ 8. A charter (Local Acts 1881, No. 347, §§ 12, 16), giving a common council power to provide for the public lighting of the city and to control placing of posts gives the power to contract for such lighting but not to grant a perpetual easement for the maintenance of poles and wires.—Horner v. City of Eaton Rapids, 122 Mich. 117.

¶ 9. Individuals, like corporations, can manage street railways, ferries, turnpikes or bridges, the franchises of which may nevertheless be perpetuated.—McKee v. Grand Rapids & R. L. St. R. Co., 41 Mich. 274.

§ 2. Grant; construction, duration and termination.

Term of franchise to individual, see also ante ¶ 9.
Toll road franchises, see also Toll Roads.
Power of corporation to take franchise for longer than its charter term, see Corporations § 84.

¶ 12. The fact that the corporate life of a street railway corporation is for a certain term as fixed by statute is no bar to the acceptance by the company from the city of franchises, supported by a good consideration, the title to which would not expire with the corporation itself.—City of Detroit v. Detroit Citizens' Street R. Co., 184 U. S. 368, 46 L. ed. 592, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 410.

¶ 13. A city which confers upon a street railway company the right to construct a "Y" switch upon a street may attach conditions to its grant, as there is no obligation upon the city to confer such a right.—Rapid Ry. Co. v. City of Mt. Clemens, 118 Mich. 133.

¶ 14. A condition imposed upon a street railway by its franchise from a township granted under Comp. L. 1897, § 6446, is as binding as though it were imposed by statute.—Township of Grosse Pointe v. Detroit & L. St. C. Ry., 130 Mich. 363.

¶ 15. A city has the right to insist upon the proper performance of the work of laying gas pipes in the streets and to exact bond in a reasonable amount before the work is entered upon, under an ordinance granting the right to lay such pipes in all the streets and alleys under the supervision and direction of the city engineer.—City of Kalamazoo v. Kalamazoo Light & Power Co., 124 Mich. 74.

¶ 16. Wilful disregard by a railroad company of a condition requiring completion of its railway within a fixed period, will cause a forfeiture of the franchise.—Township of Hamtramck v. Rapid R. Co., 122 Mich. 472.

¶ 17. The fact that a village as such suffers no damage by failure of a street railway company to exercise its franchise will not prevent the retention of a certified check as liquidated damages to its inhabitants.—Whiting v. Village of New Baltimore, 127 Mich. 66.

§ 5. Transfer and devolution to successors.
